There is irony in the fact that within a few days of Mr. Clynes's reception of the B.N.O.C., at which the Minister made such sympathetic references to the possibility of the State doing something for music, the League of Arts should have been compelled to abandon its successful and popular Hyde Park performances, owing to the hampering regulations of the Office of Works. The League was announced to give Purcell's 'Dido and Æneas' three times in July at a cost of between £200 and £300. Under the old regulations the League was able to sell tickets for seats, and so pay its way. (In 1921 the tickets brought in £687.) Last year the Office of Works refused permission for the sale of tickets, and the League therefore tried a scheme of admission by programme (2s. and 6d.). The result, however, was a deficit, and as the League cannot face the prospect of further loss there is nothing to be done but to give up the project. The committee points out that

The difficulties cannot be removed without special legislation, and the present state of the law imposes so many restrictions that even a society which exists for public service cannot find a practicable scheme under them.

It adds that in other countries, where no such restrictions exist, open-air performances are highly successful. Meanwhile the League proposes to hold over the Purcell opera till November, when it will be given in a theatre. The Labour party has always professed so much sympathy with any efforts in the direction of democratising art, that one would have expected it to make the most of an opportunity for furthering such work as that which the League has been doing so well and so inexpensively for some years past.

The Guild of Singers and Players announces for next season a series of concerts at which the formal conditions of the ordinary concert-room will give place to more social and intimate conditions. Says the prospectus:

There will be comfortable chairs for all, smoking will be permitted (except during the vocal items), and light refreshments will be provided at the close of each concert.

The prospect of 'a comfortable chair' is particularly alluring to those of us who are neither stunted nor willowy; too long have we suffered from cramped knees and compressed ribs. It is to be hoped, however, that those chairs will not be disposed in stiff rows. For chamber music concerts such as these we should welcome something more suggestive of a large drawing-room. Perhaps the committee has thought of this, for it says it will endeavour 'to give to the title of chamber music its proper significance and intimate character.' We are glad to see that smoking will be permitted, though we doubt the wisdom or necessity of the ban during singing. A singer coming on after smoking has been in full blast for, say, half-an-hour, will not be helped by an immediate extinguishing of pipes, &c. Nor will smokers—especially of cigars—be willing to damp down for ten minutes; a relighted cigar is a thing of naught. Is tobacco smoke such a bugbear to singers? We once asked Mr. Plunket Greene if he found the smoke at his recitals a nuisance. 'Not a bit,' he replied. 'I am never so happy as when I see the audience through a thick haze of it.' We add that these Guild concerts will take place on Friday evenings at the Court House, Marylebone Lane, W.; and that, as there will be only a hundred and seventy seats (at a uniform price of 5s. including refreshments) it will be well to make early application to the Organizing Secretary of the Guild, 74, Grosvenor Street, W.1. The programmes are of first-rate interest.

The Promenade Concerts start on August 9. A change of policy is announced in regard to the classical symphony side of the programme. The directors say that patrons from the country who always take their holidays in August complain that owing to the long-standing custom of playing the 'Nine' in chronological order they always hear the same Symphonies, and, of course, the early ones at that. This year the works will be played out of the usual order, and Tuesday nights, instead of being 'popular,' will be 'Classical'—which will no doubt make that evening more popular than when it was so labelled. At these Tuesday concerts Symphonies by Haydn and Mozart will be played. This is good news, for it has long been a grievance and a mystery that so little of the symphonic music of these two—especially Haydn—has been heard. Evidently the directorate has not forgotten the pleasure shown by the public, and even by the most hardened critics, when a Haydn Symphony was included in one of the Queen's Hall Symphony Concerts last season. The detailed programmes have not yet arrived, but the list of soloists is before us. It shows the usual imposing array of famous singers and players, with a good proportion of Britons. We are sorry to see no organ soloist; Mr. Kiddle's is the only name given in connection with the instrument. Now that the Queen's Hall organ has been reconstructed it seems a pity that Promenaders should have no opportunity for hearing one or two of our leading British recitalists. The best of them are as fine artists as their brothers and sisters who play the pianoforte or violin. The policy of using a concert organ for no more worthy purpose than helping out an occasional climax, or providing a religioso background for the 'Largo' or 'Solemn Melody' or Gounod's 'Hymn to St. Cecilia' is hopelessly out of date. We have lately heard of several British organists who are being approached with regard to concert tours in America. We are confident that a solo by any one of them would be hailed with delight at the 'Proms.'; but neither of them has ever been heard at Queen's Hall. Can anybody doubt that an audience so ready to enjoy Bach's Suites and Concertos would be other than delighted to hear some of his best organ music?

The July issue of The Federation of British Music Industries Journal prints the following letter, which was received by a pianoforte making firm in London:

DEAR SIRS,—Could you undertake the repairs of certain parts of a piano if same was sent up to you? The owner of the piano, so I am told, got the worse for drink, and so took the piano to pieces. He has considerably damaged it. There are several keys missing and half a dozen or so broken. Then it would want making a new keyboard frame as he has completely destroyed this: all I have of this are the little steel pegs which the keys fit in to. Then it would want several new hammers. The lid in centre would require touching up. Now would you like the writer to send you the keys, lid, back portion holding the hammers, &c., and you do the necessary work and return to us when done. The whole piano would have been entirely done for had I not turned up in time.—Yours, &c.

June 14, 1924.

It seems to be not so much a case for repairs as for a new pianoforte and Prohibition.

Poor old London! No doubt she has her points in some respects, but where music is concerned she is the general butt. The latest brick was thrown by Mr. C. A. Lewis, via the Daily Telegraph of July 19. Mr. Lewis says:

Has it ever struck you that, so far as music is concerned, hardly any important event ever takes place in London—the great capital of a vast Empire—the centre point, one might have thought, of all artistic effort? We find musical events in Wales, in Gloucester, Manchester, Sheffield, Norwich, but never, or hardly ever, in London.

Well, well! Why do all the distinguished musicians from abroad make for London as soon as they land, instead of dashing off to Sheffield or Norwich? We have seen announcements of quite a number of important events during the past season—but perhaps they didn't come off, after all. Mr. Lewis's article was written to advocate the erection of a great 'Temple of Music' in London. But why in London, where nothing happens? Why not at Norwich?

In regard to the Leeds Choral Union's recent visit to Paris, we hear from a reader who was present at the performances that the most applauded item was 'Cujus Animam,' from Rossini's 'Stabat Mater' (sung by a French tenor). Further, if warmth of reception be a guide as to the merits of a work, it was clear that 'Where corals lie' is a far, far better thing than Elgar's second Symphony. The French still seem to be a very long way off from appreciating the greater Elgar. By the way, we take this opportunity for correcting a slip our Paris correspondent made in reporting the concerts. He said that 'the profits were given to French hospitals.' Obviously, there could be no profits attached to so costly an undertaking as the transport of a big choir from Leeds to Paris: the word should have been 'proceeds.' Mr. Henry C. Embleton, whose lavish generosity enabled the concerts to be given, did nothing by halves, and the choir and all concerned enjoyed themselves hugely. Given a few more of such open-handed patrons, music would be in no need of State subsidies.

Let us be fair, even (or above all) to the Daily Mail. We have frequently complained of that journal's giving undue space to the things that don't matter, at the expense of really important musical news. During the past few weeks it has pleased musicians by including several excellent leading articles on the opera question, with special reference to the need of public support for the B.N.O.C. Similar articles have appeared also in its associated journals, the Evening News and

Weekly Dispatch. Those responsible may be assured that articles of the kind are appreciated not only by the inner ring of the musical profession, but by thousands of rank and file readers.

The voluntary swelled, it rose, it rushed to its climax.

The organist tossed back his head with a noble gesture, exalted; he rocked on his bench; his feet shuffled faster and faster, pedalling passionately. The young girl who stood beside him drew in a deep, rushing breath; her heart swelled—her whole body listened, with hurried senses desiring the climax, the climax, the crash of sound. Her nerves shook as the organist rocked towards her; when he tossed back his head her chin lifted; she loved his playing hands, his rocking body, his superb, excited gesture. . . . The climax had come. The voluntary fell from its height and died in a long cadence, thinned out, a trickling, trembling diminuendo. It was all over. The young girl released her breath in a long, trembling sigh.

No; this is not a burlesque. It is the opening of one of May Sinclair's 'Uncanny Stories.' The volume is illustrated with crude drawings in which all the human beings appear to be ugly or diseased—sometimes both. One of the pictures accompanying this particular story illustrates the words 'her whole body listened,' and shows us the young girl apparently walking in her sleep; the organist is a cadaverous youth, with no collar, a contemptuous face, and a mop of straight, black hair. His attitude is not favourable to the brilliant execution spoken of in the text. There is a long bellows handle projecting across the foreground, but no blower. This exciting performance, we are surprised to read, was merely a practice:

Three times a week Wilfrid Hollyer went down to Lower Wyck to give Effie Carroll a music lesson; three times a week Effie Carroll came up to Wyck on the Hill to listen to Hollyer's organ practice.

Which makes six meetings a week—a good total, even with music as the food of love.

'Wilfrid,' she said, 'you're too good for Wyck. You ought to be playing in Gloucester Cathedral.'

'I'm not good enough. Perhaps—if I'd been trained—'

Here Wilfrid modestly broke off, and left Effie to imagine what might have happened if he had been trained. We can tell her. He would have been broken of those picturesque habits of tossing back his head with a noble gesture (exalted), and rocking on his bench, when nearing 'the climax, the climax, the crash of sound.' He would then be able to pedal accurately as well as passionately. We are not told what he was playing, but we find later that he did what few young organists of to-day do—he played Mendelssohn's 'Songs without Words' on his pianoforte at home. It seems to have been a rich emotional experience:

The book on the pianoforte ledge before him was Mendelssohn's 'Lieder ohne Worte,' open, as Effie had left it, at No. 9. His fingers felt of their own accord into the prelude, into the melody, pressing out its thick, sweet, deliberate sadness. It wounded him, each note a separate stab, yet he went on, half-voluptuously enjoying the self-inflicted pain, trying to work it up and up, and into a supreme poignancy of sorrow, of regret.

And six pages later, when the story ends, we find him at Mendelssohn's No. 9 again. But not for long: 'At the first bars of the melody he stopped, overwhelmed by an agony of regret.' Oh, Wilfrid, what a life!

From the report of a Sunday School anniversary in a provincial paper:

The singing of 'Onward, Christian Soldiers,' by such a large crowd was most thrilling.

That broadcast nightingale must look to its laurels.

New Music

NEW VIOLIN MUSIC

A dozen violin pieces (with pianoforte accompaniment) of mediocre difficulty and mediocre attainment, obviously intended to cheer the violinist during a trying period of study—these are the novelties which have reached me this month. Two composers only are the fathers of this budget. M. Fr. Godebski (director of the Conservatoire of Music at Perpignan) is the author of a 'Danse' and a 'Bagatelle,' while M. J. Palaschko has to his credit the rest of the set, published by Bosworth. On the whole M. Palaschko gets a little nearer to the ideal easy piece 'pour la jeunesse' than M. Godebski. But unless I am much mistaken both labour under a misunderstanding. Their music is in keeping with the tradition of Dancla and Singelé; an excellent thing in its way which has only the fault of assuming that the world stands still. Surely in these days of educational experiment and newly awakened interest it is foolish to presume that the younger generation will put up with what was never good for its predecessors. In the old days these things were tolerated because we knew no better. To-day we study the needs of musical education more seriously and more intelligently than our parents did, and no thoughtful teacher will prescribe for his students music which however easy technically is not of the best quality. For the truth of the matter is that there is no period in the course of study when mediocre music can be practised without waste of time, of intelligence, and of energy. The great classics have given us all the music we need for training and amusement. To put the student deliberately in touch with mediocrity or the commonplace is tantamount to a negation of the very foundations of a sound education.

When this has been said, however, it is still necessary to add that if we accept the limitations which restrict the aim and purpose of the compositions under review we shall find that both composers have done their work ably enough, and have remained most faithful to their fallacious principle. In M. Palaschko's pieces there are even glimpses of originality—not, to be sure, very startling, but ingenious enough.

B. V.

EASY PIANOFORTE MUSIC

Of a group of pianoforte albums for young players one of the best is Felix Swinstead's 'Five Pastels' (Bosworth). As we expect from this writer they are both admirable for educational purposes and musically interesting and effective. They would suit pupils preparing for the Elementary Division of the Associated Board Examinations.

Edward Poldini's 'Petite Suite' (Bosworth, Books 1 and 2) consists of nine attractively-written pieces ranging in difficulty from Elementary to Lower Division standard. They are well varied, and will be found particularly useful for developing staccato playing and independence between the hands.

Of 'Three Fancy Dances for Children,' by Harry Farjeon (Bosworth), two are solo dances and the third is a mime, or action-dance, for two. All can be played as pianoforte pieces without dancing. They are charming works which should appeal strongly to young people of elementary standard.

Five little river pieces with the title 'Rills and Ripples,' by Edgar Moy (Paxton), are pleasantly written, and provide useful recreative work for elementary pupils. Still simpler is Betty Colson's collection of short pieces, 'The Golden Age' (Forsyth). These are fourteen in number, ranging in difficulty between the primary and elementary stages. They are well written and attractively produced.

From Joseph Williams comes a collection of tunes with preparatory exercises under the title 'Spring-time.' This is apparently the first book of a series, and is labelled 'Primary.' Suitable little exercises precede each piece, and a foot-note gives brief information on 'Rudiments.' The book (which, by the way, makes no mention as to who is responsible for the collection) is of course intended for beginners.

Ernest Read's 'Nursery Rhyme Pieces' (Joseph Williams) are a set of solos for elementary pupils applying the first principles of aural training to the pianoforte. They are arrangements of the author's little songs in 'Aural Culture,' and are, he tells us, an attempt to provide the beginner with musical material in which the notes of a major scale are introduced in the order commonly taught in an aural training class. On one page appears the tune in both notations with a little modulator at the side, showing the notes of the scale the tune is intended to illustrate: on the opposite page is the pianoforte arrangement. Several of these arrangements, by the way, contain technical difficulties considerably beyond the scope of beginners, for whom the book is apparently intended. G. G.

NEW CHAMBER MUSIC

John Ireland's Sonata for violoncello and pianoforte (Augener) is the most remarkable British work of the kind which has appeared for some time. Most composers of to-day feel the reaction which was bound to come after the great era of sentiment culminating in Wagner, and turn to music which is either popular in its essentials—like the folk-song—or else to a type which, like Debussy's and Ravel's, is beautiful and even tender but essentially unemotional. Some achieve this naturally and easily; others have to keep their emotion and sincerity under control. Ireland alone seems to us to have the courage to break through this convention and proclaim boldly his delight in a frankly dramatic style. This is more or less what Pizzetti is doing in his chamber work, very successfully and perhaps more lucidly than Ireland. But that may be part of the national characteristics of the two. A famous French contemporary of Dryden noted that while the English 'dug too deep,' the French 'would not follow an argument home, and were too easily contented with the sound of their own voices.' That holds good to some extent of the characteristics of the English work of Ireland and the Italian work of Pizzetti. A lighter touch in one case and a little more depth in the other might lead to perfection. But it is always dangerous to advise composers, for it may well be that that which to-day may appear a weakness will become to-morrow a source of strength. And, moreover, certain defects are the inevitable complement of certain qualities. The future of a talented composer is in the hands of the gods. The critic can no more influence it than the historian can influence the course of human affairs. Some composers did their best work early; others had to wait for many years before showing their mettle. But whichever path Ireland may choose to follow, his Sonatas, of which the one under review is not the least striking, are substantial and considerable achievements.

Adam Carse's Concertino for violin and pianoforte (Augener) falls short of the level which the composer has attained many times before. To be at all effective this Concertino must be played really well, and any violinist who could do so will find better entertainment in and derive more profit from the easier of the Rode Concerti. In his way Carse is an expert, but we cannot help feeling that in this instance the expert has underrated the abilities of his 'patient.' The student or the amateur of comparatively limited experience can digest good music as well as abler and more gifted players. In the writers' opinion, it is a mistake to believe that they can only grow healthy and wise on peptonised fare. And this Concertino shows the presence of pepsin at every test—in its melodies, in its harmonies, and in its form.

Three String Trios by Bach, arranged 'after instrumental sonatas' by Arnold Trowell (Augener) will undoubtedly appeal to a large public, for Bach is more popular now than he has ever been. The first (in A) and the second (in B minor) are for two violins and violoncello; the third (in G minor) for violin, viola, and violoncello. But, oddly enough, only the 'cello part has been elaborately 'fingered.' Why this invidious distinction? We do not much admire the fingering fashion which makes zealous editors add the fingering to perfectly obvious passages, but surely what is sauce for the big fiddle is sauce for the little fiddle. The fingering of the violin parts is very scanty, and what there is is not always helpful or even necessary.

The second and third sets of Frank Bridge's 'Miniatures' for violin, violoncello, and pianoforte (Goodwin & Tabb) strike the happy medium between difficulty and genuine musical interest, being attractive and original, yet easy enough for players of moderate ability. The violin part does not go beyond the third position, and the easy swing of each tune must act as an inducement to practice—which is an important consideration in music of this kind. The second set consists of a Romance, an Intermezzo, and a Saltarello; the third has a Valse Russe, a Hornpipe, and a Marche Militaire. On the whole there is little to choose between them, for equal care and ingenuity have been bestowed on all. But somehow the Military March is bound to be a great favourite. It is just the kind of music which would add pomp and jollity to a children's entertainment.

B. V.

ORGAN MUSIC

Parry was always interested in the organ and its music, so it is fitting that a collection of pieces in his memory should be written for that instrument. The volume just issued by the Year-Book Press, under the title 'A Little Organ Book,' has an origin so personal and appropriate that it should be recorded. At Parry's funeral, in St. Paul's Cathedral, the organ music included a piece made up of a few melodies specially written by some of his friends as a kind of musical wreath. The melodies were developed into short pieces, and the collection was increased by other friends, the result being twelve works of the 'album leaf' type, with one by Parry himself as an opening number. The title was taken from Parry's heading to his own piece—'For the Little Organ Book.' The remaining dozen composers are Stanford, Herbert Brewer, Alan Gray, Charles Macpherson, Ivor Atkins, Frank Bridge, Harold Darke, Charles Wood, Walter Alcock, Thalben Ball, Henry Ley, and Walford Davies, and the pieces are, without exception, worthy of the distinguished group. As a collection of music suitable for in-voluntary purposes, the book is one of the best published in recent years. How is it that we have so little organ music from some of these composers? It should be added that any profits that may arise from the sale of 'A Little Organ Book' will be given to the funds of the Parry Room at the R.C.M.

The ability to write good and moderately difficult short pieces is not common, hence the dreadful efforts we hear in the way of voluntaries from players of limited technique. Alan Gray's 'Twelve Short Preludes' (Augener) are examples of the kind of organ music that is far more needed than sonatas and preludes and fugues. Dr. Gray lays his music out on two staves, presumably to save space and cost, for the pedal part is generally obbligato. A note tells us that the pieces are intended primarily for players who cannot extemporise. The misfortune is that such players too often think they can! The best of these Preludes sound like improvisations, and so they set up a standard of what an impromptu voluntary ought to be. Until players can get at least near to that standard they should not trust themselves away from the printed page. This is Dr. Gray's second collection of the kind, and it is to be hoped that there are others on the way.

'A Canon and Fugue' by C. H. Kitson (Augener) shows the kind of skill that we expect from such a source. The Canon is by inversion, between treble and bass, with a rapid, free middle part; at its close there is a brief passage '3 in 1.' The fugue subject is derived from the Canon, and is neatly and effectively worked. Both pieces are on the short side, the texture being light and the manner spontaneous. The work would make a capital study for the fairly advanced student.

George Oldroyd's 'Phantasy-Prelude and Chorale' (Augener) is somewhat conventional in its material. For example, the Quasi Recitativo passages, the cadenza, and the working up of the climaxes are all too much on lines long since familiar in organ music. Dr. Oldroyd is over-fond of writing octaves high up on the manual ff. With all the 2-ft. and 4-ft. stops at work such octaves are usually unnecessary and generally ineffective. They belong to the pianoforte rather than to the organ. The Chorale is 'Nun danket,' a tune which might well receive a rest in this connection, especially as the composer does no more than give it out in plain chords with a florid pedal part of the most threadbare type. The cadence owes something to Karg-Elert. The piece contains a good deal that is effective, but the music is essentially conventional, despite the liberal use of expression marks and high-sounding directions.

Cyril Jenkins's Sonata in D minor (Augener) is a well-made piece of work which takes us back to Merkel in its first and last movements, where the music is busy without achieving very much. The composition of a sonata of any kind is a daring step. The call to-day is for shorter works, and a composer must be very full of his message and of marked musical personality in order to produce a sonata that can capture a place among the repertory of works in that form. In this essay Mr. Jenkins has done little more than cleverly imitate a dryish German model.

Real simplicity is difficult to achieve, but the thing is well managed by Geoffrey Shaw in his 'Variations on an old English Melody' (Novello). The tune is as pleasant as its name—'Heartsease.' Mr. Shaw plays with it for eight pages without losing touch of the style of the theme. In fact, there are very few bars that might not have been written by one of our old keyboard composers. This is not mere imitation. Mr. Shaw has so thorough a grasp of the characteristics—melodic, rhythmic, and modal—of old English music that he can express himself sincerely and naturally in its idiom. There is nothing of the sham antique about it. By the way, I wish he had given the time-signature as  $\frac{3}{2}$  instead of  $\frac{4}{4}$ . There is a danger of players regarding the crotchet as the unit, whereas the gait of the piece surely suggests a fairly quick two in a bar. The 'Variations' are not difficult, but they call for neatness and continuity, and so are less easy than they look.

Book 2 of Paxton's series of 'Easy Pieces by British Composers' contains short works, suitable for recital or voluntary use, by John E. Campbell, Ernest Halsey, Stuart Archer, Charlton Palmer, William Faulkes, and Henry Rogers. Except for Stuart Archer's example—a melodious Berceuse—the pieces are reprints.

From Laudy & Co. come three pieces by F. Laloux, issued separately—a Canzonetta, Allegretto, and Finale. The first two start well, with attractive themes, but end by wearing rather thin. The Finale has a touch of blatancy in its main theme. All are in the manner of the (nowadays) less esteemed French composers, such as Lemaigre or MacMaster.

H. G.

CHURCH MUSIC

From the Oxford University Press come further numbers of the Tudor Church Music series. A Motet by Thomas Tallis, 'Salvator Mundi' ('Most Loving Saviour'), is edited from 'Cantiones Sacrae,' 1575, by Dr. Percy C. Buck. It contains both Latin and English text, and is for five voices (soprano, alto, tenor, 2nd tenor or 1st bass, and bass). It is in contrapuntal style throughout, is intended for unaccompanied singing, and needs a good choir. Three short anthems for S.A.T.B. (unaccompanied) are edited by Dr. E. H. Fellowes. Quite simple is Thomas Weelkes's 'Let Thy merciful ears, O Lord.' William Mundy's 'O Lord, the Maker of all thing' (words from the 'King's Primer,' 1545) and 'Almighty and Everlasting God,' by Orlando Gibbons, although more contrapuntal in style, are of only moderate difficulty. Also by Gibbons is the anthem 'Almighty God, Who by Thy Son,' for St. Peter's Day and Ember Days. It is provided with an organ part, and is written for verse and five-part chorus (S.A.T.T.B. and S.A.A.T.B.). It opens with an alto solo which might, however, more suitably be sung by a bass an octave lower. There is a fairly lengthy section for three solo voices (S.A.A.), followed by an effective passage for two basses.

Richard Farrant's setting of the Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis for four voices appears in the key of A minor. Dr. Fellowes points out that all the early texts of this Service are at this pitch, and not a tone lower as in Boyce's 'Cathedral Music.' Written mainly in harmonic style, the work should present few difficulties to the average parish church choir.

An interesting setting of 'Abide with me' comes from the Year-Book Press. The music is by Michael Wise (1646-87), with descant and added harmonies by William H. Harris. Verses 1 and 6 are sung unaccompanied; verses 2 and 4 for boys only, and verse 5 for all the voices in unison, are provided with a free organ accompaniment; verse 3 has the melody in the tenor, while the other parts add a humming accompaniment. The tune itself is a good one, and as arranged by Dr. Harris makes an effective anthem.

R. F. Martin Akerman's 'Rest thee, rest thee, my little Child,' from the same publishers, is a setting of some words by G. Hayward which should find favour. It is for S.A.T.B. unaccompanied, and is quite easy.

Many church musicians will be glad to hear that R. Vaughan Williams's Mass in G minor, which made such a deep impression when first performed a year or so ago, has now been adapted for use in the English Church by Maurice Jacobson, and revised by the composer (Curwen). The work is for soli (S.A.T.B.) and double chorus, and is intended to be sung unaccompanied. An ad libitum organ part has, however, been added, which may be used if it is not found practicable to sing the Service a cappella. It is scarcely necessary to say that for an adequate performance of such a work as this a highly-trained and carefully-balanced choir is absolutely essential.

From the same publishers come settings of the hymn 'How bright these glorious spirits shine,' by C. Hylton Stewart, and of 'The Lord's Prayer' in Welsh, with music by George Dodds. Mr. Stewart has written a capital tune and has also provided an effective faux-bourdon for certain verses. Of Mr. Dodds's music the less said the better; from start to finish is commonplace.

'A Hymn for Whitsuntide' (Edward Arnold) is an expressive little work by Jane M. Joseph which deserves to be widely known. It is a setting of the poem, 'Whit Sunday,' by Joseph Beaumont, and is for four voices (S.A.T.B.) unaccompanied. A flat is missing in the tenor lead on the second and fourth pages.

An anthem for festal and general use, 'Praise the Lord upon the harp,' by Robert Caird (Bayley & Ferguson), contains some fluent writing for the voices. Some of the progressions are, however, rather well worn, and there is more than one instance of bad accentuation.

G. G.

Gramophone Notes

By 'DISCUS'

ÆOLIAN VOCALION

More Strauss. A 12-in. d.-s. gives us the 'Rosenkavalier' Waltz, and another a Suite from the same work, consisting of the Entrance of the Rosenkavalier and the Duet from Act I, and the Finale of the opera. They are played by the Æolian Orchestra, conducted by H. Greenbaum. I don't like to be dogmatic in placing the blame, so I merely say that on my machine the music comes off badly. There is a lack of unanimity and life, and occasionally the intonation is doubtful, especially in passages where the muted trumpet is busy—which is pretty often. The opera was so successful in London that I expected a great deal more from the music than is given by these samples. There is a streak of commonplace about it. We expect this in a selection of 'Les Cloches de Corneville,' and so there is no disappointment in the 12-in. d.-s. containing such a selection, capitably played by the Life Guards Band, under Lieut. Eldridge. Plenty of light opera music written to-day is less vital than these old tunes of Planquette's.

A 10-in. d.-s. of Paul Kochanski is not in the first flight. He plays the G minor Brahms Hungarian Dance and Kreisler's 'La Gitana.' In the former, the rhythm lacks grip, and the rapid passages are less slick and dead in tune than such things ought to be in order to give pleasure.

There are three vocal records (10-in. d.-s.): Hardy Williamson in 'A Sprig of Rosemarie,' from 'A Princess of Kensington,' and 'The English Rose,' from 'Merrie England' (the tone very much pressed in the former); Ethel Hook in 'The Auld Nest,' by Longstaffe, and 'In the gloaming, O my darling' (who would have thought that this old song would ever be disinterred? Why wasn't it left in peace?); and Watcyn Watcyns in Keel's 'Trade Winds' and 'Port of many ships.' (Here is one of the finest voices of to-day, judging from this record—I have never heard Mr. Watcyns at first hand. His words are clear, too. He is a bit hurried in 'Port of many ships,' and just misses the wistful touch. But there is more real musical effect, and better vocalism, in this record, than in stacks of those in which much-boomed foreign 'stars' shout, sob, scream, and roar their way through faded operatic extracts.)

COLUMBIA

Here is a further record of extracts from Strauss's 'Le Bourgeois Gentilhomme'—the 'Dinner Music' and 'Dance of the Young Cooks,' and the 'Lully Minuet'—played by the Hallé Orchestra under Hamilton Harty (12-in. d.-s.). I wish I could get up some enthusiasm for the music or the playing of these Strauss records, but I can't. It is a pleasure to turn on instead Haydn's D major Quartet, Op. 76, No. 5, played by the Léner Quartet. This is complete on three 12-in. d.-s., and is a feather in the cap of all concerned, from old Papa downwards. A selection from 'The Gondoliers,' played by the Court Symphony Orchestra (12-in. d.-s.), is very well for such as can take their Sullivan apart from their Gilbert (I can't). This same Orchestra is heard also in the Air on the G string and a couple of short pieces—the 'Flight of the Bumble Bee,' by Rimsky-Korsakov' and 'The Musical Box,' by Liadov. The Bach is not quite successful. We don't get the pizzicato bass, and the playing seems casual in expression. Curiously the actual sonority seems less than that of a solo violin or a string quartet. This is so often the case that I fancy recorders will soon see the wisdom of doing all such works with a small force—say a double quartet. The 'Bumble Bee' and 'Musical Box' are capital descriptive music, well played and recorded. I don't remember seeing these pieces down in a London orchestral programme. Sir Henry Wood should give them to his Promenaders.

The best of the vocal records is a 12-in. d.-s. of a couple of duets from 'Othello'—'Stilled by the gathering darkness' and 'Could I but die now,' sung by Miriam Licette and Frank Mullings. Charles Hackett disappoints me again in 'Songs my mother taught me,' and a terrible ballad by Teresa del Riego, 'Thank God for a garden' (10-in. d.-s.). There is a lot too much portamento and sentimentalising generally. We have plenty of tenth-rate singers who can meet the public demand for this sloppy style; we do not expect a tenor of Mr. Hackett's reputation to come down to such a level. Nor do I like Mullings so well in 'My lovely Celia' and 'Have you seen but a whyte lillie grow?' as in the operatic record above. His style is laboured, and he gives in the second song little of the delicacy it calls for (10-in. d.-s.).

H.M.V.

The best of this month's parcel is the Tchaikovsky Quartet in D, played by the Virtuoso String Quartet, and recorded on four 12-in. d.-s., the eighth side being filled by a Glazounov Valse (Op. 15, No. 5). Two of the movements—the Scherzo and the Andante cantabile—have already been recorded several times; it is good to have the whole work, for, although Tchaikovsky was not at the top of his form away from the orchestra, this Quartet contains a lot of attractive music. The 'Virtuoso' players go very near to justifying their much-criticised title. A good deal of the playing is extremely brilliant, but (on my machine, at all events) the tone inclines to hardness in some of the loud passages. The Andante is beautifully played, and the recording is clear.

Heifetz is heard in two pieces off the beaten track—a 'Hebrew Lullaby,' by Achron, and a 'Grand Adagio' from the 'Ballet Raymonda,' by Glazounov. In the latter he is especially good—broad, brilliant, and delicate by turn, and always with splendid tone (12-in. d.-s.).

Only two pianoforte records have turned up—a 10-in. d.-s. of Rachmaninov, playing Chopin's B minor Waltz and Tchaikovsky's Waltz in A flat, and a 12-in. d.-s. of Harold Samuel in a pair of Bach works—the C minor Fantasia and the Prelude and Fugue in B flat from the first book of the '48.' These are excellent, with very little cause for complaint in the matter of reproduction of pianoforte tone. Good as the Fantasia is, the brilliant little Prelude and the singularly engaging Fugue are even better.

Vocal records are, as usual, a very mixed lot. A 12-in. d.-s. of Madame dal Monte singing the 'Mad Scene' from 'Lucia' leaves me with a feeling that such enjoyment as the record gave me has been mainly due to the delightful wood-wind playing in the accompaniment, particularly the flute. The singer is brilliant at times (especially in the higher reaches), but not very clean in florid passages that lie in the middle of the voice (where her tone is over-nasal for my liking), and, on the whole, hard and unappealing. I have groused so much about operatic tenors that it is pleasant to be able to do the other thing. Fernand Anseau is fine in 'Pourquoi me réveiller?' from Massenet's 'Werther,' and 'O Paradis,' from 'L'Africaine' (10-in. d.-s.). But you will find his high notes a bit too penetrating with a loud needle. Battistini disappoints me somewhat in a Gluck air and Denza's 'Si vous l'aviez compris.' Perhaps I expected too much after hearing him sing so wonderfully at Queen's Hall last year (12-in. d.-s.). Good contralto records are comparatively rare. Here are two—a 12-in. d.-s. of Kirkby Lunn in Brahms's a 'Sapphische Ode' and Lassen's 'All Souls' Day'; and Edna Thornton in 'O my harp immortal,' from 'Sapho,' and 'Ye powers that dwell below,' from Gluck's 'Alceste.' In the last pair the orchestral accompaniment is specially good. The De Reszke Singers are wasted on Koschatt's 'Forsaken' and McLellan's 'Lend your ear, pretty maid.' The latter is described as a Madrigal, whereas it is a part-song of unusual debility (10-in. d.-s.). A 12-in. d.-s. of Sir Harry Lauder pleases me chiefly by reason of the sonority of the voice, the clearness of the words, and the personality that shows itself throughout. The songs are 'I'm the boss of the hoose' and 'I like my old home town.' They are not unfunny.

Wireless Notes

BY 'CALIBAN'

The Radio Times of June 27 and July 4 contained articles by Mr. Robert Keable on the problems and achievements of broadcasting. In this journal they can be discussed only in regard to the musical side. Despite the grumbles of musicians, I think Mr. Keable is right when he says that 'the B.B.C. has shouldered the musical education of the country wonderfully.' Bearing in mind how easily they might have cold-shouldered it, we may well raise our hats to the Company. As Mr. Keable says, 'It is amazing to think of the houses into which good music is going night by night. Let it go on from strength to strength!' I myself have been astonished at the appreciation of chamber music by people who had never heard it (or even of it) until it reached them by wireless. Whether these folk will, as a result, swell the audiences at concert-halls remains to be seen. Personally, I doubt it. As transmission improves, most of them will be well content to take their music comfortably and cheaply at home. There is not much in the contention that in order to enjoy music to the full we must see the performer. A lot of nonsense is talked about 'personality.' Of course a performance is of little account unless the performer has personality. The common mistake is in regarding this priceless quality as something that can be seen. Of course it shows itself to some extent in deportment, facial expression, and the like; its real exposition, however, in a musical performance is in the things that are heard and felt, but not seen. Indeed, many of us are beginning to hold the view that a fine bit of playing or singing is enjoyed more via gramophone or wireless because of the entire absence of the distractions that are inevitable when we see the performer. There is nothing to come between us and the music, and, so far as our judgment of it is concerned, we are not biased by the appearance of the performer (we know what a pretty face and a beautiful dress will do towards upsetting our critical faculties!), nor swayed by the demonstrations of those around us. As for personality depending on our sight of the person: anybody who has heard a great deal of music or speaking by wireless has long since been aware that personality shows itself unmistakably. Even such routine work as 'announcing' gives scope for it. Thus, the 'Uncles' vary considerably, and not only from one another. Don't we feel sometimes that Uncle So-and-So is suffering from that tired feeling?

What Mr. Keable says of the comedian is true of singers and players :

For a comedian to speak in the B.B.C. studio he has got to be a comedian. For the B.B.C. studio presents an audience unlike any other audience. In the theatre one usually laughs because the rest laugh, and because the comedian looks comical. We listeners have no such aids to mirth. We laugh at humour and wit, not at tomfoolery.

Similarly, at concerts we applaud because the rest applaud, or because the performer is pretty or handsome or has a pleasing manner. When we listen we have no such red-herrings. The singer has got to be a singer. A few years ago I heard (or rather saw) a fascinating soprano at Queen's Hall. She had a big name (thanks to her success in musical comedy, a sphere to which she has since returned, I am glad to say), a charming face, a dressmaker beyond rubies, a poorish voice, with an effort for every top-note (there were lots), and she sang nominally in English, but actually in an unknown tongue. The audience came, saw, and was conquered. But if this young woman ever sings from the B.B.C. studio, I am sure that the majority of subscribers will soon say, 'Can't hear a word! Don't think much of her voice! Switch off, and save the juice!' And switched off she will be, with no pretty face and beguiling manner to help her out.

This drastic method of appraisal will come into force with others—acrobatic pianists, swaying violinists, attitudinising conductors, &c. Thus Pachmann on the wireless, with no 'business' or patter will prove to be (nowadays at all events) not nearly so good a pianist as many who would draw a mere handful to Queen's Hall. In a word, we shall get into more direct touch with composers, and with music itself, than we have ever done at the concert-hall. The only other (and even better) way of doing this is to play or sing ourselves, preferably in chamber or choral music.

Here I must break off, with no space to say anything in detail about some excellent things heard during the past month. (Among the things that were not excellent was the announcers' insistence on the word 'soli.' So far as I have observed, nobody but a B.B.C. 'Uncle' says 'soli' nowadays, though I admit the form is customary with writers. In speech, the plural, like the singular, has long since been Anglicised. 'Solos,' s.v.p., mon Oncle!)

Church and Organ Music

ROYAL COLLEGE OF ORGANISTS

Full particulars and the Syllabus of the Certificate Choir-Training Examination for those who do not hold the diploma of F.R.C.O. or A.R.C.O., to be held on November 5 and 6, 1924, may be obtained on application to the Registrar of the College.

Free lectures on Choir-Training will be given at the College on November 3 and 4, previously to the Examination.

H. A. HARDING,
Hon. Secretary.

DISTRIBUTION OF DIPLOMAS

On Saturday, July 19, diplomas were presented by the President, Dr. Alan Gray, to the recently elected Fellows and Associates. The proceedings began by the following announcements made by the hon. secretary: There were sixty-one candidates for the Fellowship Examination, and four passed; for the Associateship Examination there were a hundred and sixty-three candidates, and forty passed. The Fellowship Lafontaine Prize was awarded to Mr. A. E. Whitehead, of Montreal; the Fellowship Turpin Prize to Mr. W. O. Minay, of London; the Associateship Lafontaine Prize to Mr. B. N. Mayer, of Lancaster; and the Associateship Sawyer Prize to Mr. H. B. E. Cooter, of Windsor.

THE PRESIDENT'S ADDRESS

DR. ALAN GRAY: The two years of my expiring term of office have, I think, been unusually eventful in the history of the College. The old examinations have been thoroughly revised, new examinations have been introduced, and, unfortunately, the later months have been marked by the deaths, within a fortnight, of no less than three prominent English musicians, all of them more or less connected with the R.C.O. Perhaps I may make a few remarks on these events in the order in which I have mentioned them. With respect to the examinations, the paper-work Syllabus has been completely revised. This is of course an event of the greatest importance. The general line taken in the alterations has been to direct the candidates' attention to composers' music rather than to text-book music. Thus the most remarkable feature in the changes is the abolition of strict—or scholastic, or academic, or whatever you like to call it—counterpoint. For some time past this item of counterpoint as the 'people knew and loved it,' has been a voluntary subject for Fellowship, but it has now gone entirely, along with figured basses and answers to fugue subjects. With the growth of the study of the 16th-century masters (Italian and English) it has become impossible to justify many of the old text-book rules, which were invented by theorists—not composers. We have always been aware that there were many things—even in Palestrina—that did not square with the rules we had learned. Of course Byrd and the other Englishmen, as far as we know them, were outside the pale altogether. We were told to account for Palestrina's sins by a highly questionable system of what were called 'licenses.' The late W. S. Rockstro was very fond of this term, and it has been reserved for Mr. Morris in his extremely interesting—and, I may add, entertaining—work on 'Sixteenth Century Contrapuntal Technique,' to show that in one of Palestrina's Masses no less than fifty-seven licences are required to break only one of the rules in Rockstro's book. There is this much to be said for Rockstro, that he wrote the best work on the subject published up to that time. Moreover, in his day, he was one of the very few who had studied modal music, and his influence in this direction on more than one later composer is undeniable. In these days it has been gradually realised that the time has come for an alteration in our methods with regard to counterpoint. There was something to be said for the old method. In the mist and uncertainty that has always attended all harmonic theories, mist which seems now to have developed into a thick fog, it was a great advantage for teacher and pupil to have a cut-and-dried set of rules. You could definitely say—subject to the rules of your text-book—"that is wrong and this is right," and, moreover, the restrictions did tend to produce smooth and good vocal writing. But it was horribly dull and really unmusical. This result is largely due to the apparent absolute absence of any rhythm, and the depressing influence of a Canto Fermo consisting of a row of 'little fat semibreves,' as they have been called. However, for good or ill, this system is largely disappearing, and I have been much struck with the fact that though we have on the Council many eminent men of varying opinions, these new regulations were passed without any serious disagreement being expressed. I think that as a result our regulations are unsurpassed by those of any other musical institution in the matter of being up-to-date. The new examinations we have introduced are those relating to choir-training. These are in a sense not new, for there used to be a similar scheme, but the war brought it to an end. We have been much criticised for not including this subject in the ordinary F.R.C.O. syllabus, but really the people who write these criticisms do not know the conditions. To start with, it is not every F.R.C.O. who wants to be a choirmaster, and another fatal objection is that to any candidate not living in London the expense would be enormously increased, for the whole examination would last for several weeks. The

(Continued on page 728.)

FOUR-PART SONG

Words by FIONA MACLEOD*
(WILLIAM SHARP)

Music by PERCY E. FLETCHER

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED; NEW YORK: THE H. W. GRAY CO., SOLE AGENTS FOR THE U.S.A.

With a light, rhythmic buoyancy
(Yet with warmth, and a sense of rapture)

SOPRANO

ALTO

TENOR

BASS

Song of Ap-ple-trees, hon-ey-sweet and mur - mur-ous,

Song of Ap-ple-trees, hon-ey-sweet and mur - mur-ous,

Song of Ap-ple-trees, hon-ey-sweet and mur - mur-ous,

Song of Ap-ple-trees, hon-ey-sweet and mur - mur-ous,

With a light, rhythmic buoyancy. ♩ = about 116

(For practice only)

Where the swal - lows flash and shimmer as they thrid the foam-white maze,

Where the swal - lows flash and shimmer as they thrid the foam-white maze,

Where the swal - lows flash and shimmer as they thrid the foam-white maze,

Where the swal - lows flash and shimmer as they thrid the foam-white maze,

Where the swal - lows flash and shimmer as they thrid the foam-white maze,

* By permission of Mrs William Sharp.

Copyright, 1924, by Novello and Company, Limited

cres.
Breaths of far - off Av - a - lon are blown to us, come down to us,
cres.
Breaths of far - off Av - a - lon are blown to us, come down to us,
cres.
Breaths of far - off Av - a - lon are blown to us, come down to us,
cres.
Breaths of far - off Av - a - lon are blown to us, come down to us,

mf Av - a - lon of the Heart's De - sire, - . . f Av - a - lon . . mf
mf Av - a - lon . . of the Heart's De - sire, - . . f Av - a - lon . . mf
mf Av - a - lon . . of the Heart's De - sire, - . . f Av - a - lon . . mf
mf Av - a - lon . . of the Heart's De - sire, - . . f Av - a - lon . . mf

mp of the Hid - den Ways!
mp of the Hid - den Ways!
mp of the Hid - den Ways!
mp Av - a - lon of the Hid - den Ways!
mp of the Hid - den Ways!

mp

Original time

mf

Song of Ap-ple-blos - som, when the my - riad leaves . . are gleam - -

mf

Song of Ap-ple-blos - som, when the my - riad leaves . . are gleam - -

mf

Song of Ap-ple-blos - som, when the my - riad leaves . . are gleam - -

mf

Song of Ap-ple-blos - som, when the my - riad leaves are gleam - ing . .

Original time

mf

mp

- ing Like . . un - der-sides of small . . green waves in

mp

- ing Like un - dersides of small green waves . . in . . foam of

mp

- ing Like un - dersides of small green waves . . in . . foam of

mp

. . Like un - dersides of small green waves . . in . . foam of

mp

foam of shal-low seas, . . . One may dream of A - va - lon, lie shal - - low.. seas, . . . One may dream of A - va - lon, lie shal - - low.. seas, . . . One may dream of A - va - lon, lie shal - - low seas, One may dream, lie smoothly

expressively mp

smoothly p

mp

p

expressively mp

cres.

p cres.

cres.

mp

p cres.

dream - ing, dream - ing, One may dream of A - va - lon, lie dream - ing,

dream - ing, dream - ing, One may dream of A - va - lon, lie dream - ing,

dream - ing, dream - ing, One may dream of A - va - lon, lie dream - ing,

dream - ing, dream - ing, One may dream of A - va - lon, lie dream - ing,

dream - ing, dream - ing, One may dream of A - va - lon, lie dream - ing, dream - ing, dream - ing, One may dream of A - va - lon, lie dream - ing,

becoming slower

dream - ing, Till ... wan - d'ring through dim vales of dream - ing, Till wan - d'ring through dim vales . . . of dream - ing, Wan - d'ring through dim vales . . . of dream - ing, Till wan - d'ring through dim vales . . . of becoming slower

peacefully

dusk, . . . The stars hang . . in the trees. . . . .

dusk, . . . The stars hang, . . . hang in the trees.

dusk, . . . The stars hang, . . . hang in the trees.

dusk, . . . The stars hang, . . . hang in the trees.

peacefully

Original time

f mp

Song of Ap-ple-trees, hon-ey-sweet and mur-mur-ous, When the night-wind

f mp

Song of Ap-ple-trees, hon-ey-sweet and mur-mur-ous, When the night-wind

f mp

Song of Ap-ple-trees, hon-ey-sweet and mur-mur-ous, When the night-wind

f mp

Song of Ap-ple-trees, hon-ey-sweet and mur-mur-ous, When the night-wind

f mp

Song of Ap-ple-trees, hon-ey-sweet and mur-mur-ous, When the night-wind

Original time

f mp cres.

fills the branches with a sound of muf-fled oars, Breaths of far-off A - va - lon are

f mp cres.

fills the branches with a sound of muf-fled oars, Breaths of far-off A - va - lon are

f mp cres.

fills the branches with a sound of muf-fled oars, Breaths of far-off A - va - lon are

f mp cres.

fills the branches with a sound of muf-fled oars, Breaths of far-off A - va - lon are

f mp cres.

fills the branches with a sound of muf-fled oars, Breaths of far-off A - va - lon are

mf f

blown to us, come down to us, A - va - lon of the Heart's De -

mf f

blown to us, come down to us, A - va - lon . . . of the Heart's De -

mf f

blown to us, come down to us, A - va - lon . . . of the Heart's De -

mf f

blown to us, come down to us, A - va - lon . . . of the Heart's De -

mf f

blown to us, come down to us, A - va - lon . . . of the Heart's De - sire, . . . A - va - lon . . . of the

The first system of the musical score consists of five staves. The first four staves are vocal parts, each with the lyrics "sire, . . . A - va - lon . . . of the". The first three vocal staves are in treble clef, and the fourth is in bass clef. The fifth staff is a piano accompaniment in grand staff (treble and bass clefs). Dynamics include f (forte) and mf (mezzo-forte). The key signature has one flat (B-flat), and the time signature is 4/4.

The second system of the musical score consists of five staves. The first four staves are vocal parts, each with the lyrics "of the Hid - - den Shores. . .". The first three vocal staves are in treble clef, and the fourth is in bass clef. The fifth staff is a piano accompaniment in grand staff. Dynamics include p (piano) and f (forte). The tempo marking "slowing down" is present above the first staff. The key signature has one flat, and the time signature is 4/4.

of the Hid - - den Shores. . .

Hid - den Shores, . . the Hid - - den Shores. . .

The third system of the musical score consists of two staves. The top staff is a vocal part in treble clef with the lyrics "of the Hid - - den Shores. . .". The bottom staff is a piano accompaniment in grand staff. Dynamics include p (piano) and f (forte). The tempo marking "slowing down" is present above the top staff. The key signature has one flat, and the time signature is 4/4.

of the Hid - - den Shores. . .

(Continued from page 720.)

choirmasters' examination has taken place, and I hope it will do good work. We have had some trouble with the title of the diploma—with the selection of the letters a successful candidate is entitled to append to his name. The supply of letters that can be used for such purposes would really seem to be running short—so many have been annexed by earlier researchers. That Ch.M. was the designation applicable to the degree of Master of Surgery was the particular rock we ran up against, and at first sight there hardly seems to be much in common between it and choirmastering. However, we hope that we have evaded the obstacle and that our 'diplomates' may sleep in their beds. I have now a few words to say on the subject of the losses that death has lately inflicted on us. The first to pass was Sir Frederick Bridge. As he said from this platform six months ago, he was then probably the oldest member of the College. He passed for his Fellowship (then the only degree given) no less than fifty-seven years ago, the examination being the second held by the College. Since that time his services had been in constant requisition as member of the Council and as examiner, and he acted as President from 1901 to 1905. To show his prominence in the musical world I need only enumerate the positions he held: Organist of Westminster Abbey for more than forty years, and musical director of many of the great national functions that took place there; conductor of the Royal Choral Society for more than twenty years; and Gresham and King Edward Professor in the University of London for more than forty years. He attended nearly all our general meetings, and his breezy personality was especially familiar and welcome to us. His witty speeches enlivened the dullest gathering. Sir Walter Parratt was also, of course, very well known to us. His connection with the College began later than did that of Sir Frederick Bridge, but he too for many years acted as examiner and member of the Council, besides being President from 1905 to 1909. Of Sir Walter's many and varied gifts much might be said. After Best's death he was undoubtedly the most eminent organist in England for many years. But he never aimed at display—his playing might almost be described as austere, so little regard had he for what was merely effective, and so much stress did he lay on accuracy and purity of style. As a teacher it is impossible to over-estimate the influence he had on English organ-playing through the long line of his pupils. Sir Walter's accomplishments included a remarkable power of doing more than one thing at a time. I suppose that most organists have this power to a certain extent, seeing that in addition to playing the right notes they have to think of and manage their registration; but there was a story that Sir Walter did three things at once. He is reported to have played chess with a Royal Prince, *béziq*ue with Sir John Stainer, and a Fugue on the pianoforte with himself. The mention of that obsolete game (*béziq*ue) shows that this tale is ancient, but I believe it to be true. Sir Charles Stanford did not have much to do with this College, though he was a Vice-President. But I question if he ever touched the instrument within the last thirty years. When I first knew him he was a remarkable performer, excelling especially in the rendering of orchestral works, using the full score or the pianoforte arrangement. Organists who played things like the third 'Leonora' Overture were rare in those days. Remember also that the organs of that time—though not so barbarous as modern writers make out—were by no means so manageable as those of to-day. But it is as a propagandist of music in England and as a composer that one would think of Stanford. As a friend of fifty years' standing, I may perhaps be allowed to say a few words on these points, though any elaborate appreciation of his position as a composer would be out of place. In his early days the adoration of Mendelssohn was still in full swing. Stanford's position at Cambridge as conductor, and later in London, gave him the opportunity of breaking with this incubus, for an incubus it had been for a generation. During his first four years he produced two works by Schumann ('Paradise and the Peri' and the third part of 'Faust'), Brahms's 'Requiem' and first Symphony (played for the first time in England and conducted by Joachim). His first choices, naturally at that date, were all from Germany; but in somewhat later days he turned his attention to modal music, with as much of the Elizabethan composers as was known at that time, and also to Verdi. This versatile taste had of course some effect on his compositions, which at different dates show the influence of his predecessors as he became acquainted with them. Nowadays an earnest student knows something of them all to begin with, but it used not to be so. Nevertheless it would be a great mistake to regard Stanford as a mere reflection of other composers. He had a very marked style of his own, which, when the influences of his native Ireland were not present, one must call English. There are two compositions of his which were absolutely new when they appeared, though they have since been extensively copied—I refer to Stanford in B flat and 'The Revenge.' He took all fields of music for his province, and there was hardly any type of composition that he did not essay. Everything that he wrote displayed wonderful facility, but his versatility was as remarkable. Nobody ever had a lighter touch for small things, or endured them with more grace. There is never a note too many. The delicate word-painting of songs like 'The Fairy Lough,' the deep feeling, so simply expressed, of a part-song like 'Heraclitus,' and the fanciful lightness of 'Corydon, arise,' are surely inimitable. His perfectly beautiful setting of the 23rd Psalm was wisely chosen to be sung at his funeral when he was laid in the great Abbey beside Henry Purcell. There are other changes in our lists, happily not caused by death. Mr. Thomas Shindler, after many years of whole-hearted and invaluable service, has resigned the office of Registrar, but I am glad to think that we shall not lose the light of his countenance altogether, for the Council has unhesitatingly appointed his son, Mr. Alan Shindler, in his father's place, and we may surely hope that Mr. Thomas will sometimes come and see how Mr. Alan is getting on. We shall certainly be very glad to see him. I have now to express my thanks to the Council for the kindness with which they have treated me and for the general goodwill that has prevailed among our body. I cannot recall one disagreeable speech at any meeting in these two years. Then there is Dr. Harding, who has given the Council and myself the full benefit of his great experience. There are many traps awaiting any step that the Council may take, and Dr. Harding knows more about these than anybody. Lastly, I thank the members for listening so patiently to me on four occasions. It is a great pleasure to me that I am to be followed by such an eminent musician as my old friend Dr. Richards.

The distribution of diplomas then took place.

PASSED ASSOCIATESHIP, JULY, 1924

Ashley, S. D. M., Sutton	Hayden, R. G., London
Baggerley, L. H., London	Hunt, J. E., London
Bate, H. A., London	Jenkins, F. H., London
Boardman, F., Cheshire	Kilgour, R., Dundee
Boddie, W., Aberdeen	Lark, F. A., London
Brazier, G., London	Leaver, W. R., Skegness
Byron, H. E., Sutton-in-Ashfield	Mason, S., London
Center, A., Aberdeen	Mayer, B. N., Lancaster (Lafontaine Prize)
Coles, F. R. M., Ilminster, Somerset	McClelland, H. D., Lisburn, Ireland
Cooter, H. B. E., Windsor (Sawyer Prize)	Roberts, H. A., London
Cottam, E. J., Leicester	Rudling, H. A., Prittlewell
Danzelman, F. W., London	Sadler, I. R., London
Demuth, N. F., Bognor	Sayers, N. A., London
Edge, H., Whitechurch	Stevens, W. A., Peterborough
Edwards, R. F. C., Stourbridge	Stubbs, K. A., Rugby
Fisher, Miss R. E., Edinburgh	Taylor, H. D. F., Wellington, Somerset
Fletcher, W. H., Sheffield	Wardale, J. G., London
Floyd, E. C., Birmingham	Williams, M. W., London
Game, A. E., London	Wilson, G. A., Brooklyn, New York, U.S.A.
Gore, Miss D. M., Herne Bay	Womwell, Miss D. M., Amptill
	Woodhead, Miss E., Burnley

No. 1395.

NOVELLO'S PART-SONG BOOK
(SECOND SERIES)

Price (4d.).

To ALFRED B. CHOAT, A.R.C.O., and the Members of the Penge and District Choral Society

LADY, LAY THOSE FROWNS ASIDE

MADRIGAL FOR MIXED VOICES

WORDS ANON. (1843)

MUSIC BY

ERNEST HALSEY

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED; NEW YORK: THE H. W. GRAY CO., SOLE AGENTS FOR THE U.S.A.

Allegretto.

SOPRANO. p La - dy, lay those frowns a - side; Win - ter reigns not all the year. The mf

ALTO. p La - dy, lay those frowns a - side; Win - ter reigns not all the year. The mf

TENOR. p La - dy, lay those frowns a - side; Win - ter reigns not all the year. The mf

BASS. p La - dy, lay those frowns a - side; Win - ter reigns not all the year. The mf

ACCOMP. (For practice only.) p mf

Allegretto. ♩ = 104 (about).

laugh - ing spring, a flow'r-deck'd bride, Has chased a - way the ty - rant drear. Then f p laugh - ing spring, a flow'r-deck'd bride, Has chased a - way the ty - rant drear. Then f p laugh - ing spring, a . . flow'r-deck'd bride, Has chased a - way the ty - rant drear. Then f p laugh - ing spring, a flow'r-deck'd bride, Has chased a - way the ty - rant drear. Then f p

LADY, LAY THOSE FROWNS ASIDE

lis - ten, la - dy, to .. my lay; Why in your heart should win - ter stay, lis - ten, la - dy, to my lay; .. Why in your heart should win - ter stay, lis - ten, la - dy, to .. my lay; Why in your heart should win - ter stay, lis - ten . . . to my lay; .. Why in your heart should win - ter stay, ..

cres. f f cres. f cres. f cres. f cres. f

why in your heart should win - ter stay? Fa la, fa la la, fa la why in your heart should win - ter stay? Fa la, . . . fa la la, . . .

why . . . should win - ter stay? Fa la, fa la why in your heart should win - ter stay? Fa la, . . .

pp pp pp pp pp

la, fa la la la la la, . . .

fa la la, fa la la la la, fa la, . . .

la, fa la la la la la, fa la, fa la fa la la, fa la la la la, fa

mf mf mf mf mf

LADY, LAY THOSE FROWNS ASIDE

fa la la, fa la la, fa la la la la la! Then fa la la, fa la la, fa la! Then la, fa la la, fa la la la la la! Then la, fa la la, fa la la la la la! Then lis - ten, la - dy, to my lay, Fa la la la la la! .

lis - ten, la - dy, to my lay, Fa la la la la la la la! .

lis - ten to my lay, Fa la la la la la la, fa la la la la! .

lis - ten, la - dy, to my lay, Fa la la la la la la! .

Time's wing will crush the flow'r - et's bloom, And love has wings as well as darts; The

Time's wing will crush the flow'r - et's bloom, And love has wings as well as darts; The

Time's wing will crush the flow'r - et's bloom, And love has wings as well as darts; The

Time's wing will crush the flow'r - et's bloom, And love has wings as well as darts; The Tempo primo.

LADY, LAY THOSE FROWNS ASIDE

flow'rs must yield them to their doom, And love rests on - ly in young hearts; Then flow'rs must yield them to their doom, And love rests on - ly in young hearts; Then flow'rs must yield them to their doom, And love rests on - ly in young hearts; Then flow'rs must yield them to their doom, And love rests on - ly in young hearts; Then lis - ten, la - dy, to my lay; What - e'er has wings will fly a - way, what - lis - ten, la - dy, to my lay; .. What - e'er has wings will fly a - way, what - lis - ten, la - dy, .. to my lay; What - e'er has wings will fly a - way, . . .

lis - ten . . . . . to my lay; .. What - e'er has wings will fly a - way, what -

- e'er has wings will fly a - way, Fa la, fa la la, fa la

- e'er has wings will fly a - way, Fa la, . . . fa la la, . . .

will fly a - way, Fa la, fa la

- e'er has wings will fly a - way, Fa la, . . .

LADY, LAY THOSE FROWNS ASIDE

la, fa la la la la la la,

... fa la la, fa la la la la, mf fa la, . . . . .

la, fa la la la la la la, mf fa la, fa la

... fa la la, fa la la la la, mf fa

mf fa la, . . . . . f fa la la, p Then

... fa la la, . . . . . f fa la la la la! . . . . . p Then la, fa la la, f la la la la! p Then la, fa la la, f la la la la! p Then lis - ten, la - dy, to . . my lay, f Fa la la la la la! . . . . . poco rall. p

lis - ten, la - dy, to my lay, f Fa la la la la la! . . . . . poco rall. p

lis - ten to my lay, f Fa la la la la la, fa la la la la! . . . . . poco rall. p

lis - ten, la - dy, to my lay, f Fa la la la la la! . . . . . poco rall. p

LADY, LAY THOSE FROWNS ASIDE

Poco meno mosso.

cres.

But time and love are both your own, Your charms now blossom in their prime; En -

But time and love are both your own, Your charms now blossom in their prime; En -

But time and love are both your own, Your charms now blossom in their prime; En -

But time and love are both your own, Your charms now blossom in their prime; En -

Poco meno mosso. ♩ = 92.

p

cres.

f

p

- joy them ere the hours be flown, And leave to Fate the win - try time, to

- joy them ere the hours be flown, And leave to . . . Fate . . . the win - try time, to

- joy them ere the hours be flown, And leave to Fate the win - try time, to

- joy them ere the hours be flown, And leave to Fate the win - try time, to

Tempo primo. mf

Fate the win - try time. . . . Then lis - ten, la - dy, to my lay;

Fate the win - try time. . . . Lis - - ten, la - dy, to my lay; . .

Fate the win - try time. Then lis - ten, lis - ten, la - dy, to my lay;

Fate the win - try time. Lis - - ten, lis - ten, la - dy, to my lay; . .

Tempo primo. mf

mf

LADY, LAY THOSE FROWNS ASIDE

cres. f pp

Gath-er the rose-buds while you may, gath-er the rose-buds while you may! Fa

cres. f

Gath-er the rose-buds while you may, gath-er the rose-buds while you may!

cres. f

Gath-er the rose-buds while you may, gath-er the rose-buds while you may!

cres. f

Gath-er the rose-buds while you may, gath-er the rose-buds while you may!

pp mf

la, fa la la, fa la la, fa la la la la la la,

pp

Fa la, . . . fa la la, . . . fa la la, fa la la la la la,

pp

Fa la, fa la la, fa la la la la la la, fa

pp

Fa la, . . . fa la la, fa la la la la,

mf

LADY, LAY THOSE FROWNS ASIDE

fa la, . . . fa la la, fa la la la la! Then fa la, . . . . fa la la, . . . . fa la la, fa la! . . . . Then la, fa la la, fa la la, fa la la la la! Then fa la, fa la la, fa la la la la! Then lis - ten, la - dy, to my lay, Fa la la la la la! . . .

lis - ten, la - dy, to my lay, Fa la la la la la! . . .

lis - ten to my lay, Fa la la la la la la, fa la la la la! . . .

lis - ten, la - dy, to my lay, Fa la la la la la! . . .

PASSED FELLOWSHIP, JULY, 1924

Minay, W. O., London	Smith, R. H. C., London
(Turpin Prize)	Whitehead, A. E., Montreal,
Sayers, G. W.,	Canada (Lafontaine
Great Yarmouth	Prize)

PASSED CHM. EXAMINATION, MAY, 1924

Baker, S. H., Hove	Sykes, H. H., Huddersfield
ALAN W. SHINDLER ( Registrar ).

Dr. Harold E. Darke played the following organ pieces selected for the January Examination, 1925:

Fantasia from 'Fantasia and Fugue' C. Hubert Parry
(Fellowship.)

Adagio Espressivo from the Symphony in C Schumann
(Fellowship.)

Choral Improvisation 'Wie Schön leucht uns der Morgenstern' (Op. 65) ... Karg-Elert
(Associateship.)

Prelude and Fugue in C ... J. S. Bach
(Fellowship.)

The Reports of the Examining Boards are appended:

FELLOWSHIP PAPER-WORK

In view of the fact that this examination is the first under the new syllabus, the examiners would like to call attention to two or three broad aspects of the work submitted.

Firstly, they feel certain that the new tests have brought to the top those candidates with the most mature musical sense and discrimination. Those who have failed have been deficient in musicianship rather than in mere technical skill.

Secondly, candidates should remember that, though originality is cordially welcomed by the examiners, nevertheless when a certain demand is made it should be adhered to. In the free counterpoint, for instance, an opening was given with a very obvious figure of accompaniment. Too many candidates ignored this opening, and wrote continuations of an entirely different character. Again, a melody with pianoforte accompaniment was asked for, but few candidates showed any knowledge of the distinctive nature of pianoforte-writing.

Thirdly, as a general statement, the fugal question was done rather badly on the whole, but the orchestration was done extremely well, with a real sense of orchestral effect.

Many candidates do not yet seem to realise that the 'Questions' are intended to be taken seriously and answered fully.

P. C. BUCK (Chairman).
R. W. RICHARDS.
F. G. SHINN.

FELLOWSHIP ORGAN-WORK

Whether it is due to the fact that the pieces chosen for this examination showed up mistakes in tempo more than usual, or not, we cannot say; but the fact remains that sixteen consecutive candidates failed to secure pass-marks under the heading 'time and pace.' There was too much sudden adjustment of pace to the technical difficulties, thus destroying the sense of continuity. This happened particularly in Bach's Prelude and Fugue in E minor and Schumann's Canon in B minor. In the latter piece—which was in many cases played too fast—there was frequently a great increase of pace on the return to the principal subject; and a few candidates seemed to rely too much on a somewhat bizarre selection of stops to carry them through. There was a great deal of playing with nothing but soft 16-ft. tone on the pedal, the bass of the harmony being vague in consequence.

There is little to be said about the purely mechanical score-reading test, except that success or failure was in proportion to the amount of time candidates had spent in preparing the subject.

The chief fault in harmonizing the unfigured bass was that most candidates took the first opportunity for leaving the key, returning only just in time for the final cadence. In such tests as this, and the kindred one of harmonizing a melody, it is always better to adopt the obvious and simple rather than the clever but unsuccessful method.

There were full directions for registration given at the beginning of the sight-reading test, but very few candidates heeded them. This, however, was a minor fault compared with the numerous mistakes made in note-values. Some such errors, however, were obviously attributable only to examination nerves.

Quite a large percentage passed in extemporization, in which subject there is continued improvement. Many of those who failed seemed to rely on the principle of 'when in doubt use the Swell pedal,' or 'play anything you like on a solo-stop in any time—or no time—according to the number of notes you happen to play.' These latter weaknesses appeared mostly in the middle section, a portion too often devoted to aimless wandering. There were also one or two cases where fluency was more than neutralised by bad and undignified style.

Many of the old failings were present in harmonizing the melody—e.g., harmonizing each note; not looking ahead; fear of the obvious; one or all of which faults caused such lapses as, for instance, the use of dominant in place of tonic harmony, and vice versa.

In spite of the unusual number of unsuccessful candidates, the examiners were agreed that they never remembered an occasion on which there were so many who only just failed to secure pass marks, and in fairness it must be added that the number of bad failures was remarkably small.

CHARLES MACPHERSON (Chairman).
A. HERBERT BREWER.
HENRY G. LEY.

ASSOCIATESHIP PAPER-WORK

The work was on the whole above the average, there being fewer distinct failures than usual. The counterpoint was well done. The pianoforte accompaniment to the viola melody was less satisfactory, and was generally not in the pianoforte style. This point is so important that candidates would do well to study good examples of pianoforte accompaniments. The harmonization of the unfigured bass was a weak feature, a surprising number of candidates being guilty of poor and inaccurate part-writing, especially in the first two bars. On the other hand, the addition of a violin part above a bass, and the addition of a violoncello part below a violin melody were fairly well done on the whole.

The unusually large number of passes seems to confirm the impression of the examiners that the new regulations tend to bring out the musicianship of the candidates.

G. J. BENNETT (Chairman).
C. H. KITSON.
IVOR ATKINS.

ASSOCIATESHIP ORGAN-WORK

We are glad to be able to report a distinct improvement in the solo playing generally. There were, however, still too many faults of the type that indicate a lack of thought. Thus, a surprisingly large number of players spoil the effect of the quieter passages by using only soft 16-ft. tone on the pedals, the low notes being a mere apologetic murmur, with the pitch scarcely defined. Very little organ music can be played effectively without 8-ft. tone on the pedal, and if a pedal stop of that pitch is not available, the effect should be got through a coupled manual.

Although the phrasing was better than usual, it was still a weak point. Jongen's 'Cantabile' suffered especially, the melody often being delivered as an unmeaning series of notes. Registration was frequently overdone and fussy, the Bach Fugue (F major) and Chorale Prelude ('In Thee is joy') often having their continuity broken by changes that seemed to be made for mere change's sake. In Wood's Prelude on a Genevan Psalm Tune there was usually too little contrast between the solo stop and accompaniment. In the 'Solemn Festival' of Rheinberger the pedal shake was often not treated as a shake, but as a series of semiquavers in strict time, the effect being clumsy—even ludicrous, when the piece was played too slowly (as was generally the case). This piece was rarely well played, being generally made dull and rhythmless. A point in phrasing that was frequently overlooked was the clean separation of repeated notes. Thus, in West's Prelude on 'St. Michael' the pairs of dotted crotchets in the tune sometimes came out as a dotted minim.

The tests, like the solo playing, showed improvement, but too many players still fail to grasp such not unimportant details as time and key before starting. Several candidates began the accompaniment test in C major instead of minor, and one player stuck to the major key throughout, despite accidentals; another, in this test, played the voice part as well, giving it to a prominent solo stop, and re-arranging the accompaniment!

E. T. COOK (Chairman).
HARVEY GRACE.
H. A. HARDING.

ANNUAL GENERAL MEETING

The sixtieth Annual General Meeting was held at the College, Kensington Gore, on Saturday, July 19, 1924. The chair was taken by Dr. Alan Gray, the President. There was a good attendance of members.

The hon. secretary read the Minutes of the last Annual General Meeting, which were confirmed.

Mr. Herbert Hodge and Mr. Munro Davison were appointed scrutineers of the voting papers for the election of members to the Council.

The hon. secretary (Dr. H. A. Harding) read the Annual Report.

SIXTIETH ANNUAL REPORT

Your Council have the honour to report that the work of the College has been successfully carried on during the past year. The efforts of your Council to reform the Examination Regulations have met with sufficient general approval to justify the new departure. It is hoped that now the new regulations have come into force they will afford substantial evidence that the College is doing its best to keep in step with the progress of musical thought, in relaxing somewhat its academic severity in favour of an appeal to the wider culture of our art demanded by modern taste.

The first Choir-Training Diploma Examination was held in May last, and considering the inevitable uncertainty incident to novel conditions, your Council have good reason to be satisfied with the result. In the two days preceding the examination free lectures were given at the College on 'Practical Choir-Training,' by Dr. Ernest Bullock; on 'Plainsong,' by Mr. E. T. Cook; and on 'The Voice,' by Dr. W. A. Aiken. The Certificate Choir-Training Examination—which will be held for the first time in November next—is open to all aspirants who do not hold the diploma of the College, and is unrestricted by any sectarian limitations.

Your Council would urge members to make it as widely known as possible that free lectures will be given at the College before the Certificate Examination in November next by experts in choir-training.

Your Council feel that it now rests with Church musicians, both clerical and lay, to show whether there was any substance in the demand which was urged upon them to provide a field in which choir trainers might receive the hall mark of efficiency which the College is glad to award.

The past year has taken severe toll from some of the Council. The late Sir Frederick Bridge was the oldest member of the College. He acted as Examiner almost continuously for a period of forty-eight years, and was connected with it in many other capacities. He passed the Fellowship examination in 1867. Indeed, he was one of the few men left whom the College could regard as one of its earliest and staunchest supporters—we might almost say founders—and those of us who knew him intimately have also to deplore the loss of a charming personality and a loyal friend.

The late Sir Walter Parratt's connection with us, though not so long, was long enough for us to appreciate his wonderful gifts and his generosity in placing his mastery of the organ and consummate musicianship at the service of the College. His ungrudging devotion to the interests of organists generally will never be forgotten.

The late Sir Charles Stanford was for many years one of our Vice-Presidents. The College can reflect with gratification on its connection with one whose achievement in British music is destined to shed an abiding lustre on the history of musical art.

Again, we shall not easily forget the loss of our old friend the late O. D. Belsham, whose many years of unobtrusive and valuable service as auditor will ever merit our cordial recognition.

The candidates for examination during the past year numbered 470, of whom 76 passed, and 140 new members were elected.

The Examiners appointed for 1923-24 were:

Dr. W. G. Alcock.	Mr. E. T. Cook.
Sir Frederick Bridge.	Mr. Harvey Grace
Sir Walter Parratt.	Prof. C. H. Kitson.
Dr. G. J. Bennett.	Dr. Henry G. Ley.
Dr. A. H. Brewer.	Dr. Charles Macpherson.
Dr. P. C. Buck.	Dr. H. W. Richards.

Sir Ivor Atkins and Dr. F. G. Shinn were elected in place of Sir Frederick Bridge and Sir Walter Parratt, deceased.

Special thanks are due to Dr. C. W. Pearce, our hon. treasurer, who under trying conditions of ill-health has carried on his labours in connection with the financial interests of the College with his accustomed vigour and ability. Your Council have elected Dr. C. W. Pearce an honorary member of the College.

Your Council find it increasingly difficult to thank Dr. Harding in any way adequately for his exacting labours, and for the distinction with which he fills the office of hon. secretary. His long experience, his ripe judgment and sound sense, coupled with a complete sympathy and much self-denial, make him invaluable to the College. Your Council would like to express their sincere gratitude to him for his continued services, and for his unwearying devotion to the R.C.O.

Our thanks are also accorded to the hon. auditor, Mr. G. R. Ceiley, and the professional auditors, Messrs. Pannell & Co., for their valuable services.

Your Council acknowledge their indebtedness to the registrar, Mr. Alan Shindler, who during the short time in which he has held his responsible office has won the respect and esteem of the College generally by the able and genial way in which he has carried out his duties.

The Annual Report was adopted on the proposal of Mr. Gilberthorpe, seconded by Mr. Whitehead.

Mr. E. Douglas Smith proposed the adoption of the Annual Financial Statement. This was seconded by Mr. Herbert Hodge, and carried.

Dr. H. W. Richards proposed the re-election of the Hon. Treasurer (Dr. C. W. Pearce). This was seconded by Dr. Harold E. Darke, and carried.

The Hon. Secretary was re-elected, on the proposal of the President, seconded by Dr. H. W. Richards.

Dr. Harding proposed, and Mr. E. Douglas Smith seconded, the election of the Hon. Auditors, Mr. G. R. Ceiley and Mr. W. G. Hopkins, and the professional Auditors, Messrs. Pannell & Co. This was carried.

The voting for the London and Country members to fill the vacancies on the Council was as follows:

LONDON		COUNTRY
Harvey Grace ...	516	E. C. Bairstow ...	548
E. d'Evry ...	346	G. D. Cunningham ...	346
G. Thalben Ball ...	194	C. C. Palmer ...	226
J. A. Meale ...	148	T. W. Hanforth ...	92
F. N. Abernethy ...	134

The President declared that:

Mr. Harvey Grace	} London	Dr. Bairstow	} Country
Mr. E. d'Evry		Mr. G. D. Cunningham

were elected members of the Council.

With a vote of thanks to the President the proceedings terminated.

A full report of the Annual General Meeting will appear in the College Calendar.

CONSECRATION OF LIVERPOOL CATHEDRAL

An event of unique national importance on July 19, which was attended by their Majesties The King and Queen, and a vast concourse of people, was the Consecration of the completed portion of the new Liverpool Cathedral, the foundation-stone of which was laid twenty years ago to the day, by King Edward VII. The first Anglican Cathedral to be erected in the Northern Province, and the third in the whole of England, since the Reformation, the building when completed will be the largest church in the country, and inferior in point of size only to St. Peter's, Rome, and Seville, amongst the Cathedrals of the world. Set upon a hill, it will be a landmark for many miles. When finished, its total length will be 611-ft., a little more than a yard short of St. Peter's, nearly 100-ft. longer than the Cathedrals of Winchester, York, and Canterbury, 40-ft. wider than any of them, and the tower will be 50-ft. higher than the bell-tower of Canterbury. From the floor to the highest point of the roof is 116-ft., which compares with an interior height of 102-ft. in the case of Westminster Abbey and 90-ft. in the case of York Minster, the two loftiest of existing English Cathedrals. The East window is the largest in England, although the area of the glass is slightly less than in the great East window of Gloucester Cathedral. At Liverpool the subject of the great window above the Reredos is the Te Deum. In the large circle at the top of the window is a seated figure of Christ in Majesty. At the top of each of the four lights is an Archangel, and below them come representatives of the four sections named in the Te Deum—the Glorious Company of the Apostles, the Goodly Fellowship of the Prophets, the Noble Army of Martyrs, and the Holy Church throughout all the World. It is interesting to note that in the latter 'light' Bach finds a place. His portrait figure is at the right of that of Sir Francis Drake. The style of the building is Gothic, which the architect, Sir Giles Gilbert Scott (grandson of Sir Gilbert Scott), has adopted not as an archaeological expression of past styles but as a definite modification of English Gothic architecture to suit the circumstances of the age we live in. It is, therefore, not merely an achievement in record dimensions, but a building which, while conforming to English liturgical requirements, will accommodate within hearing distance of the preacher much larger congregations than any of the old Cathedrals. And it is certain that while the exterior of the great building has a repose, solidity, and strength unknown before in Gothic work, the inside possesses similar qualities, so that no one can behold the immense interior without a thrill of awe and reverence. The total cost of the completed portion has been £722,318, including the Chapter House, Lady Chapel, windows, organ, ornaments, and contents. This portion constitutes about a third of the work. There remain to be completed the Great Central Space, the two Western Transepts, with the Nave and Tower. Probably this work will entail the expenditure of a million pounds, but it is pointed out that, in the altered terms of money, this huge sum is only equal to the cost of erecting Salisbury Cathedral in the years 1220-66.

In a necessarily brief survey of the main features of the great building—that House which is to be 'exceeding magnificent, and of glory throughout all countries'—space is not available to describe the richness of all its adornments, whether of sculpture, marble floors, stained-glass, wood-carving and embroidery, or in the art of metal-workers in iron, bronze, and silver. They will deeply impress even the most casual beholder of this noble monument to a living Faith, which is to serve as an inspiration and visible symbol throughout the ages.

The organ—built on both sides of the Choir—will be famous as being the largest Cathedral organ in the world, consisting of five manuals, CC to C, and a pedal-board, CCC to G, with 168 speaking-stops, 48 couplers, &c., together with 6 spares, making a total of 222 draw-stop knobs. The largest instrument in this country up till now has been that in the Royal Albert Hall, erected in 1871, and containing 114 speaking-stops, whilst the largest Cathedral organ is that in St. Paul's Cathedral, as rebuilt in 1901, with 76 speaking-stops. As in the case of these superb organs, the builders of the stupendous instrument at Liverpool are Messrs. Henry Willis & Sons. It is considered that the new organ will be none too large, taking into account the vast size of the building and the immense congregations that will assemble there.

The original specification was drawn up by an amateur organ-expert, the late W. J. Ridley, the nephew of the donor, but subsequently the plan was modified by Mr. H. Goss Custard, the Cathedral organist, acting as adviser and consultant to the Cathedral authorities. Mr. Goss Custard has effected various economies, notably by extending certain of the pedal stops, and by the simplification of the coupler mechanism. Even with these economies the cost of the organ will exceed £35,000. A novel feature of the stop-control consists of the crescendo and decrescendo pedals. By their action the Great and Pedal organs can be built up, or reduced, stop by stop, thus bridging the gaps between the combinations set on the pistons. The mechanism operates the draw-stops themselves, and it has been dubbed the organist's third hand. The idea was originated by Mr. Goss Custard and the mechanism invented by Mr. Henry Willis, jun., upon whom it would appear that his renowned grandfather's mantle has descended, as also is the case of the architect of the Cathedral. To some extent this principle of heredity applies also to the founders of the Cathedral bells, Messrs. Mears & Stainbank (the founders of 'Big Ben'). The Pedal organ has 35 stops, including a resultant 64-ft., 5 stops of 32-ft., 13 of 16-ft., and 5 of 8-ft., with a Double Quint 21½, and 8 ranks of Mixtures. The reed-work is divided into four groups, mainly on 20-in. wind, with an extended rank of bombardes of 68 pipes on 30-in. wind. A most important innovation is the provision of a separate Pedal Swell-box in which are pipes to provide appropriate basses for the Swell organ and other enclosed departments, and the crescendo-pedal for this box can be coupled to the crescendo-pedals of the Swell, Solo, and Choir organs. The Great organ of 29 stops contains a Contra Violone of 32-ft., 3 stops of 16-ft., 5 Open Diapasons of 8-ft., 10 ranks of Mixtures, and 4 reeds. The Choir organ has 23 stops, partially enclosed, which include two 'families' of dulcianas and violas. Families are also a novel tone-feature of the Swell organ of 31 stops, represented by salcionals, geigens, and lieblichs, and the five-rank Mixture is supplemented by an independent twelfth and seventeenth—a device considered to be of the utmost value, as it enables these stops to be used separately to induce new shades of tone. The reed-work is divided into three groups, including a family of free-toned trumpets on 15-in. On the Solo organ there are 22 stops, including a family of Hohl-flutes on an open sound-board, and families of violes, and trombas on 20-in. wind (enclosed). The Bombarde organ of 5 stops (unenclosed) contains a family of tubas on 30-in. wind, and a 'tuba magna' on 50-in. wind-pressure—a stop on 'Willis' lines which will probably say the last word in regard to unparalleled tone and power.

The Echo organ of 4 pedal and 19 manual stops (enclosed) is designed to give the effect of distance, apart from its position in the triforium. It will contain a carillon of four octaves. At present the Echo organ is prepared for only. The blowing installation comprises three rotary blower-sets, with three electric motors, the total horse-power being thirty-two. The action throughout is electro-pneumatic (except the mechanical manual to pedal couplers), and the pitch of the organ is C 517. With its formidable array of pistons, adjustable at switchboard, combination pedals, and other accessories, the instrument is indeed an embodiment of all that human brains can devise and skilled hands accomplish in the organ-builder's art, and while it may be thought that the limit of possibilities to a single player has been reached, if not passed, it is a matter for congratulation that the Cathedral possesses in Mr. H. Goss Custard an executant of the highest rank as well as a fine musician. At Liverpool it is felt that Sir John Goss's grand-nephew is the right man in the right place. What he will achieve with the resources at his command, and the refreshment which the Cathedral services and projected recitals will provide, is already thankfully anticipated.

The Bishop of Liverpool (Dr. David) intends to back up his organist, for in his recent speech to the British Music Society, he said:

'We shall have nothing but the best music in the Cathedral, for bad music has a deleterious and degrading effect on the human spirit. There are anthems, services, and hymn-tunes which do definite and positive harm. We are going to institute congregational practices, and have reasonable hope that in course of time the Cathedral will become a school of music for those who care to take the many opportunities which we shall offer them.'

From what the Bishop said it is safe to assume that the ancient plainsong melodies of the Church appeal to him, and it is noticeable that the hymns sung at the Consecration were taken from the 'English Hymnal.'

The proceedings on the appointed day, July 19, began with a solemn 'Preparation' based on ancient ritual. This was held both outside as well as inside the building. Meanwhile the various ecclesiastical and civic processions entered the Cathedral, presenting a scene of unrivalled church pageantry, in which were eight Archbishops, forty Bishops, twenty-five Deans, the Lord Mayors of London and Liverpool, the Greek Archimandrite, four hundred clergy, representatives from the Free Churches, and dignitaries from all classes at home and abroad. When their Majesties entered, the scene presented an extraordinary and thrilling spectacle. The Service commenced with the National Anthem, sung by a choir of ninety-six men and boys drawn from the Cathedral choirs of the northern province, including the Liverpool choir of thirty-six. This had been wisely done, for only with a choir of highly-trained voices is it possible to obtain such blending, beauty of tone, and perfection of finish. Our English Cathedral traditions were well maintained by these singers. Their quality was first shown in Sir Hubert Parry's Edward VII. Coronation Anthem, 'I was glad,' a broadly effective pièce d'occasion, very finely sung. One would have thought it impossible for so comparatively small a choir to produce such a climax of sound. The acoustics of the building seemed very satisfactory, not only in the excellent fortissimos but also in the lovely piano moments of the verse. The middle section of the anthem, with its 'Vivats,' was omitted, and it was unfortunate that the Great organ diapasons and tubas of the Solo organ could not be used in the accompaniments, owing to the non-completion of the blowing arrangements to the organ departments on the south side of the choir. But as it was, Mr. Goss Custard had seventy-six stops available at the northern side, and this material he used with fine effect. The incidental music included the ancient hymn, 'Veni, Creator'; the haunting Rouen Church melody, 'Iste Confessor'; an 'Alleluia' of six bars, thrice repeated, by Martin Shaw; the 'Old Hundredth' tune for 'Praise God'; the hymn, 'Christ is made the sure foundation,' sung to a 7th-century plainsong from the Sursum Antiphoner; and the Old English tune 'Richmond' (Haweis and Webbe) for 'City of God,' a melody quite delightful in its sweet singableness. For verses 2 & 4 a tuneful faux-bourdon, by Martin Shaw, was effectively used. This hymn offers a good example of congregational hymnody of the best type, although it must be confessed that on this occasion the congregational singing was absolutely nil. For Croft's 'Hanover,' a bold 'descant' had been written by Alan Gray—it kept the trebles effectively busy. This was followed by Parry's 'Jerusalem,' sung in procession.

The Genevan Psalter (1551) tune, 'Donne Secours,' was used in the hymn, 'The King, O God, his heart to Thee upraiseth,' with a faux-bourdon in verse 2 by Martin Shaw, and finally came Goss's well-known 'Praise, my soul, the King of Heaven,' a melody which somewhat failed of its usual impressiveness on this occasion. It is quite certain that music at the Consecration fulfilled its high purpose as the handmaid of religion, and the singing of the choir was extremely fine in its well-ordered and devotional excellence. The position of the organ-console, in its height and distance from the choir, makes it difficult for the player always to be sure of unanimity between organ and singers. Mr. Goss Custard, however, discharged his responsible duties with conspicuous tact and skill, and during the service played as voluntaries Elgar's 'Sursum Corda,' Best's Romanza in B minor, and Walford Davies's 'Solemn Melody'—English music, fitly chosen for a Service of Consecration which the Church of England has not known for at least seven hundred years, and which, to those present, will remain an undying memory. W. A. R.

WESTMINSTER ABBEY

The Festival Service of Cathedral and Collegiate Choirs at Westminster Abbey on the evening of July 7 was of singular magnificence. Nineteen choirs from cathedrals and collegiate churches within about a hundred miles of London assembled, and were conducted by Mr. Sydney H. Nicholson. There were eleven anthems representing the course of English Church music from Byrd and Orlando Gibbons to Parry and Stanford. In ceremonial dignity, as in musical beauty, the service left unsurpassed impressions. The choirs were the following: Westminster Abbey; the Chapel Royal, St. James's; St. George's, Windsor; St. Paul's, Canterbury, Chelmsford, Chichester, and Ely Cathedrals; Eton College; Magdalen College, Oxford; New College, Oxford; Oxford, Peterborough, and Rochester Cathedrals; St. Alban's Abbey; St. John's College, Cambridge; and Salisbury, Southwark, and Winchester Cathedrals. Mr. Arnold Goldsborough played organ pieces of Parry, Vaughan Williams, Maurice Green, Stanford, and Basil Harwood before the Service, and the 'St. Anne' Prelude and Fugue afterwards. The beauty of the singing, in particular the suave and unforced quality of the tone, should have made all hearers proud of the English ecclesiastical vocal tradition, to which acquaintance with Continental notions of appropriate and beautiful Church singing only endears us the more. Byrd's thrilling anthem, 'Sing joyfully unto God,' and the elder Wesley's 'In Exitu Israel,' were incontestable masterpieces among the anthems, while of the modern music (which included works by the trio of famous English musicians lately deceased—Parratt, Stanford, and Bridge), Parry's coronation anthem, 'I was glad,' was strongly effective. Since plainsong has in modern times not been much cultivated at Westminster, it was all the more noteworthy that the singing of the 68th Psalm to Tone 8, at the Procession, struck every one as the musical climax of the majestic service. The even verses, sung in faburden, answered from varying quarters of the Church the plainsong of the stationary portion of the choir, and there were organ interludes founded on the Antiphon. Nothing could have been more noble. The collection was for King Edward's Hospital Fund for London. C. R.

RHYTHM IN ORGAN PLAYING

For the benefit of readers who do not see The Times concert reports, we reprint the following from that paper's report of Dupré's playing at Queen's Hall recently (our italics):

'Of almost equal interest with the work of the choir was M. Marcel Dupré's organ playing, though one could have wished him a better instrument or, at any rate, a Great and Pedal of better scale and quality. Still, a good workman does not need to have his tools apologized for. Those things being as they may be, there remains the real secret of organ playing—the rhythm; rhythm in all its forms of attack and release, of phrasing, tempo, and rubato. When these are right the organ speaks an intelligent language; when they are wrong it only burbles. In comparison with this the choice that is offered, and the choice that is made of stops, is a minor matter, and it was this that M. Dupré so finely exhibited in Handel's Concerto and Bach's Fugue, and even more in some Couperin (was it?) that he added as an encore.'

SCOTSON-CLARK AT WESTMINSTER CATHEDRAL

In reference to our paragraph on this subject in the July Musical Times several pained correspondents tell us that we have not been misinformed: a Scotson-Clark march has been heard at Westminster Cathedral. The occasion was the 'Red' Mass last autumn, when the judges attended. The chosen march was that entitled 'Grand Processional'; it was played as an out-voluntary.

Photo by]

[Stewart Bale, Liverpool

LIVERPOOL CATHEDRAL ORGAN: NORTH SIDE OF CHANCEL FRONT AND CONSOLE.

'Tell me what you like, and I will tell you what you are,' holds good with the crowd as with the individual. Hence the significance of the plebiscite programme. Here is one chosen out of fifty-nine pieces played at a series of recitals at St. Fin Barre's Cathedral, Cork, by Mr. J. T. Horne. The order is that of the voting: Fantasia and Fugue in G minor, Bach; Andante from String Quartet, Debussy; Funeral March and Hymn of Seraphs, Guilmant; Andante from Organ Sonata, Elgar; 'Question' and 'Answer,' Wolstenholme; 'Le Cygne,' Saint-Saëns; 'A Song of Sunshine,' Hollins; Lament, Harvey Grace; Vesperale, d'Ervy. It is good to see John Sebastian at the top of the poll, with one of his biggest and best works. We have no list of the fifty pieces that were not 'placed.'

At Send (a small village in Surrey), on July 6, a recital was given at Evensong, the music consisting of Bach's Prelude on 'Jesu, Priceless Treasure,' Parry's Prelude on 'Eventide,' Alan Gray's 'Elegy,' and Franck's Choral No. 3; with vocal music by Elgar, and by Parry ('There is an Old Belief'), sung with one voice to each part. The programme modestly gives no names of players or singers; the correspondent who sends it testifies to the excellence of the performance. As he truly says, such good work in small places fills one with hope for the musical future of the country.

The organ at Wallasey Parish Church has been reconstructed by Messrs. Rushworth & Dreaper. It is now a three-manual, with thirty-seven speaking stops and twelve couplers. A convenient feature is the putting of the Great reeds, Tromba 8-ft., and Clarion 4-ft., into a separate division, labelled 'Bombarde,' with couplers to both Great and Choir. The dedication took place on June 23, when recitals were given by Mr. Frank J. Livesey. Other performances in connection with the occasion were by Mr. H. Goss Custard and Mr. George Harvey.

At St. John's, Barmouth, on July 2, the Barmouth String Quartet joined Mr. H. Cyril Robinson in an excellent programme of organ and chamber music. The organ items were two Schumann Sketches, three Choral Preludes by Parry, and Mendelssohn's first Sonata. The Quartet (Dr. and Mrs. J. R. Heath, Mrs. Wade Roberts, and Mr. W. H. Williams) played a movement from Dr. Heath's 'Serbian' Quartet and the Scherzo from Beethoven's Op. 18, No. 4.

The quarterly musical service was held at High Pavement Chapel, Nottingham, on June 29, when Mendelssohn's 'Psalm 13' was given by the choir under the direction of Mr. C. E. Blyton Dobson. Madame Ethel Parkin was the soloist.

The organ at St. James's, Belfast, has recently been reconstructed by Messrs. Rushworth & Dreaper, and now stands as a three-manual of thirty-five speaking stops and twenty-two pistons.

'The Hymn of Praise' was performed at St. Mark's, Reigate, on June 29, with orchestral and organ accompaniment, the choir being augmented. Mr. J. E. Gomershall conducted.

From a Church notice:

'11.30. De Teum. Turle, A., "My heart is sorely pained" (Mendelssohn).—Daily Paper.

Nothing is said about poor Turle's feelings.—Punch.

ORGAN RECITALS

Mr. Eric W. E. Booth, Harecourt Congregational Church, Canonbury—Sonata in D minor (first movement), Mendelssohn; Sonata No. 4 (first movement), Rheinberger; Prelude and Fugue in E flat, Bach.

Mr. Harry Wall, St. Andrew-by-the-Wardrobe—Toccata for double organ, John Blow; Prelude and Fugue in F minor, Bach; Minuetto Antico, Yon; Phantasy Prelude and Chorale, Oldroyd.

Mr. Herbert Hodge, St. Nicholas Cole Abbey—Tragic Overture, Brahms; Air with Variations, Noble; Sonata in G minor, Tinel; Fugue in C minor, Reubke; Fantasia in E flat, Saint-Saëns.

Dr. M. P. Conway, St. Stephen's Walbrook—Introduction, Passacaglia, and Fugue in E flat minor, Willan; Carillon, E. Delamarter; Fantasia on 'Babylon's Streams,' W. H. Harris; Improvisation, L. de Guiridi; Toccata in F, Bach.

Mr. Cecil J. Belcher, St. Matthew's, Ealing Common—Fantasia in G, Bach; Sonata in A minor, Rheinberger; Prelude and Fugue on the name B A C H, Liszt.

Mr. C. H. Trevor, St. Michael-at-the-North Gate, Oxford—Prelude and Fugue in E flat, Bach; Scherzetto in F sharp minor, Vierne; Scherzo in B minor, Willan; Solemn Festival, Rheinberger; Allegro in B flat, John Stanley; Prelude on 'Rhosymedre,' Vaughan Williams.

Mr. Henry Riding, St. Mary-the-Virgin, Aldermanbury—Imperial March, Elgar; Scherzo, Edgar Ford; Phantasy Prelude and Chorale, Oldroyd.

Mr. J. S. Robson, Parish Church, Grimsby—Fugue in E flat, Bach; Sonata No. 20 (first movement), Rheinberger; Preludes on 'Old 104th' and 'Rockingham,' Parry.

Mr. W. Wallace Thompson, St. James's, Garlick Hill—Homage Hymn, Alec Rowley; Poem, Julius Harrison; Finale (Sonata No. 7), Rheinberger.

Miss T. V. Denman, St. Peter's, Selsey—Allegretto in B minor, Guilmant; Con moto maestoso and Allegro (from Organ Concerto No. 3), Handel; Festal Commemoration, West.

Dr. Henry G. Ley, Christ Church Cathedral, Oxford—Fantasia and Toccata in D minor, Stanford; Rhapsody No. 1, Howells; Improvisation on 'Old 124th,' W. H. Harris; Réverie on 'University,' Harvey Grace.

Mr. A. E. H. Nickson, St. Paul's Cathedral, Melbourne—Prelude and Fugue in D minor ('Fiddle' Fugue), Bach; Seven Pastels from the Lake of Constance, Karg-Elert.

Mr. Wilfrid Greenhouse Allt, St. Giles's Cathedral—A Brahms programme: Intermezzo, Op. 117, No. 1; Song, 'Cradle Song of the Virgin'; Choral Prelude, 'A Rose breaks into Bloom'; Violin, Adagio (from Sonata, Op. 108); Intermezzo, Op. 116, No. 6.

Mr. Stanley Lucas, Bishopsgate Chapel—Prelude in C sharp minor, Trio in D minor, 'Little' Fugue in B minor, and two Choral Preludes, Bach; Scherzo and In-Voluntary, Harvey Grace; Menuet, Borowski.

Mr. Philip Dore, Queens' College Chapel, Cambridge—Prelude and Fugue in B minor, Trio-Sonatas Nos. 1 and 4, Bach; Chaconne in B flat minor, Karg-Elert; Fugue in A flat minor, Brahms; Pièce Héroïque, Franck.

Mr. W. R. Simmons, St. James's, Garlick Hill—Alla Marcia, Ireland; 'I give to thee farewell,' Bach.

Mr. Eric Brough, St. Lawrence Jewry—A Bach programme: Prelude in C minor; three Choral Preludes; Fantasia on 'Come, Holy Ghost'; Trio-Sonata in minor; Prelude and Fugue in A minor.

Dr. Gordon A. Slater, Boston Parish Church—Toccata—Prelude on 'Pange Lingua,' Baird; Introduction and Fugue, Reubke; Toccata in F, Bach.

Mr. Lynnwood Farnam, Christ Church Cathedral, Oxford—Fantasia on Choral 'Hallelujah! God be praised,' Reger; Choral Prelude on 'Rhosymedre,' Vaughan Williams; Un poco allegro (Trio-Sonata No. 4), Bach; Prelude and Fugue in C minor, Seth Bingham; Meditation in A, Baird; Scherzo (Symphony No. 8), Widor.

Mr. G. W. Harris Sellick, St. Mary Magdalene, Ashton-upon-Mersey—Intermezzo (Symphony No. 6), Widor; Rhapsody, Harvey Grace; Sonata in F minor, W. H. Speer; Rhapsody and Psalm-Prelude No. 2, Howells; Finale in B flat, Franck.

Mr. A. M. Hawkins, St. Clement Danes, Strand—Monologue No. 7, Rheinberger; Sketches Nos. 1 and 4, Schumann; Elegie, Ferry; Alla Marcia, Ireland.

APPOINTMENTS

Mr. Cecil J. Belcher, choirmaster and organist, Oaklands Congregational Church, Shepherd's Bush.

Mr. George S. Pelmeear, choirmaster and organist, Guisborough Parish Church.

Letters to the Editor

LAH- AND DOH-MINOR

SIR,—I am writing to you, not as a champion of any particular system, but as a teacher who requires a definite lead on this difficult subject.

I may say at the outset that I can lay claim to an open mind as to the relative advantages of Lah- and Doh-minor. As an organist who was unfortunately never brought up on the Tonic Sol-fa system I may be said to be prejudiced in favour of the Staff Notation and Doh-minor, but as a choirmaster I have nothing but praise for the Curwen system and its effect on sight-singing.

My remarks may be summarised under three headings:

(1) Disadvantages of the Curwen System (as picked up by the average choir-boy):

(a.) I have two chants (say in G minor and major respectively) the notes of which are apparently identical. If I ask a boy for Doh in the first case, he looks at the signature and replies 'B flat.' In the second case also he looks at the signature and gives Doh as G. I then play the second chant (it ends on G), and he is satisfied that Doh is really G. Next I play the first chant fairly slowly, asking him to notice the resemblance of the two chants and to pay particular attention to the last chord. He then gives Doh as G. He has therefore returned contradictory answers in a perfectly intelligent manner.

(b.) An old friend of mine who is a tenor has been brought up entirely on the Curwen system (or more probably an incomplete version of it). Although he is quite a reliable reader in major music, he always appears to me to be bewildered by the minor scale. For instance, except in a very ordinary cadence, he has great difficulty in taking in A minor. He always wants to sing G $\sharp$ , and seems to be obsessed by the fact that Doh is C, and is therefore the most important note in a piece of music without sharps or flats. The minor key does not seem to have an independent existence for him. He also does not appear to notice that the other voices are forming chords which suggest a minor tonality. 'No sharps and flats, therefore Doh is C,' is his motto for that particular piece of music.

This seems to me a bad habit, as the relative major chord is very disturbing in a minor key. I may add that my friend understands how accidentals change the key, provided the major only is involved. A logical system ought to be equally useful, melodically and harmonically. In teaching elementary harmony in the Doh-minor system, we can speak of the fundamental tonic, dominant, and subdominant chords as the chords of Doh, Soh, and Fah, in both major and minor. In the other system, it seems to me, we must speak of the chords of Doh, Soh, and Fah for the major, and of Lah, Ray, and Me for the minor.

Turning to the chromatic chords—e.g., the Neapolitan sixth:

Doh-Minor System.—The explanation in both major and minor would be that it is a major triad based on Ra.

Lah-Minor System.—We should have to say that it is based on Ra in the major key and on Ta in the minor, thus giving the superficial impression that we are dealing with two different chords, whereas we know that the effect of the chord is almost identical in both cases. The Picardy third is another instance. Even in melody it seems absurd to speak of La Soh Doh, Lah So Doh and Fa Me Lah, instead of simply La So Doh and Lah So Doh.

(2.) Advantages of the Curwen System.—We all could fill pages with the obvious advantages of the system and the wonderful work it has done.

I should like to stress the following as illustrating my own difficulties:

(a.) There is certainly an advantage in having the diatonic notes impressed on the memory by a fixed sequence of syllables. For instance, Me-Fa and Te-Doh always suggest semitones to me, and although I am not an expert, I think I should be able to start a 'modal' scale on any syllable without any hesitation.

(b.) It simplifies the reading of the polyphonic school and any music in which the modes are extensively employed or in which the feeling for 'key' is not predominant.

(c.) The Lah-minor has the advantage in transitory modulations to the relative minor.

(3.) My third section has reference to a very able little letter in the June issue of the Musical Times in which your correspondent suggested that the syllables were intended to represent relationship between notes and had no reference to key, which latter could be established by making any syllable the most important note or 'host' for the time being. Up till the time of reading this letter I had considered myself as having settled permanently on the Doh-minor side of the fence. Now my peace of mind is again disturbed, as this new way of looking at the Curwen system seems to dispose of some of my difficulties.

To sum up, what we poor music-teachers want is a meeting between the greatest authorities on both sides, who, if they cannot agree upon a system, shall at least issue reports which shall be taken to be the last word in defence of their respective cases. Then, if it is possible, an impartial review can be issued by a tribunal enjoying the respect of both parties, or else we can decide for ourselves which system we shall adopt.

Further, the letter referred to under (3) is satisfactory only if we are assured that Doh is not to be given undue prominence in the teaching of the Curwen system. The design of the Curwen modulators and the answers given by our choir-boys seem to indicate the contrary. Also in many quarters Doh is spoken of as the home-note, Me as the quiet note, Soh as the powerful note (or bugle note or hunting horn note), &c. This surely gives a permanent character to each syllable quite apart from their mutual relationships. Taken in conjunction with the Curwen system, this method leads to confusion in that the powerful note Soh should apparently disappear from the minor scale and give place to Se, Me becoming the new powerful note. I am rather in favour of investing the syllables with certain characteristics (especially from a harmonic point of view), and the above line of argument inclines me to favour Doh-minor as being more consistent, for the 'characteristics' idea seems to clash with that of mere 'relationships' in the Lah-minor system. With reference to (c) of my second section (viz., modulations to the relative minor), there appears to me no reason why the Lah-minor should not be used in these cases, as the modulation is only relative and implies the predominance of the old Doh. This would not be inconsistent with the use of the Doh-minor if the modulation is of a firm and decided nature.

If, however, we are to accept the Lah-minor, we want to know that Lah at least is to be given equal standing with Doh and the minor scale taught as regularly as the major. In view of modern tendencies, of course, all the syllables should be taught as being of equal importance, and all the modal scales should be learnt.

If we knew that the ordinary major and minor scales were to be the permanent backbone of future tonality, I for one would stick to the Doh-minor, unless we could invent a series of syllables which would stand for the terms we use in harmony (Tonic, Supertonic, &c.). These would represent the numerical order of the notes, and would be the same for major and minor scales.

If they were more singable we could actually employ the numerals, and they could be used for any definite sequence of notes that could be entitled to call itself a scale.

The main point that seems to emerge is this: Is tonality (no matter of what kind) to play any important part in the music of the future? If it is, and the Curwen system is to be taught, Doh must not be presented to school children as the all-important 'Home-note.'—Yours, &c.,

A. P. STEWARD.

18, Nelson Square, S.E.1.

SIR,—I should like to add my testimony in favour of calling the key-note Doh, whether major or minor. I have done so for forty years, and have never had reason to regret it.

Dr. Comley's argument that Bach is on the side of Lah-minor (horrible spelling!) does not appeal to me. I think the title of the 'Forty-eight,' like the flowers that bloom in the spring, has nothing to do with the case. 'Das wohltemperirte Clavier' was not intended to teach sight-singing, neither was it intended to train the ear for just intonation. Bach's indication of the minor third by Re Mi Fa is accounted for by the fact that it is the first minor third in the natural scale of equal temperament, and by the fact that the Dorian was the most used, and therefore the most important of the ecclesiastical modes. Besides, how can Re Mi Fa be employed as an argument for the use of Lah Te Doh?

Dr. Comley says 'the Doh-minor . . . is illogical and artificial.' To my mind, it is logical and natural. The second sound of the major scale and the fourth of its relative minor are not identical in true intonation: it is, therefore, 'illogical and artificial' to call them by the same name.—Yours, &c.,

ARTHUR T. FROGGATT.

5, Richmond Mansions,
Denton Road, Twickenham.
July, 1924.

SIR,—Might I be allowed space for yet another attack—on the Lah-minor position advocated by Mr. J. Gilbert Wiblin in his letter in your June issue. There are two distinct questions, although I would answer both by reference to the same principle:

- (1.) Should we connect A minor with C major or A major?
- (2.) Is the purpose of Sol-fa to standardise intervals or key-relationship (i.e., the relation of notes to the key-note)?

(1.) I can see no case whatever for connecting A minor with C, as opposed to A major. Intimacy between two keys depends on the coincidence, not of the greatest number of notes, but of the most important notes. (So, Mr. Wiblin, with intimacy between uncles and nephews.) In A major and A minor the key-note, dominant and subdominant, is identical, and the common chords on these notes, with any melodic phrases based upon them, are nearly identical since the roots and fifths are the same. And the Staff Notation, in suggesting C major by its key-signature, is at first sight confusing. It will only cease to be so when the reader has learnt to look for the alternative possibility of A minor as the key—roughly by the presence of the accidental G sharp—and having ascertained that the key is A minor, to establish A in his mind as the fundamental note. Thus the only way to find Doh on the Staff in any key is to discover the normal or major Doh, deduce the possible minor Doh (a minor third below), and search for the signs of minority, in the absence of which the key will be the ordinary major. It is a business, but it has got to be done.

The reasons for the Staff Notation using the Lah-minor method are historical, and, we shall see, illogical. The notes of A minor were arrived at, first, not from A major or C major, but from the A-mode (or the D-mode transposed up a fifth)—i.e., by writing in general in the mode but introducing musica ficta (the sharpened sixth and seventh) at the cadences. Later, I fancy, 'they' saw that it was good also to sharpen the third, sixth, and seventh notes invariably, thus obtaining A major, and then they put all three sharps into the key-signature. By that time it was too late to change the method of writing A minor. But (1) it would have been more logical, once the A major was established as the normal, to deduce A minor from it—by preserving the key-signature and flattening the third and, where necessary, the sixth and seventh notes; (2) undoubtedly these early writers kept A in their mind as the final, and never thought of C.

(2.) The charter of the Tonic Sol-fa Association would, I presume, tell us whether it wants readers to identify, first and foremost, like intervals (A to E in C major, A minor), or like key-relationships (C to G in C major, A to E in A minor). If to identify intervals, I hold this is of very limited value, and I cannot see that the Sol-fa shows intervals any clearer than the Staff. But if, as I hope, the key-note is the thing, then the Association will want to show that A is to E in A minor, not as A is to E in C major (the Lah-minor method), but as A is to E in A major (the Doh-minor). If Lah is to be the final and Me the dominant, we have then to eradicate all associations, such as between Doh and finality or between Doh and Soh, which the major mode has, quite properly, engendered in the mind—and this is a most painful process. In short, it is neither a logical fallacy nor 'psychologically unsound,' but the reverse, to regard Doh and key-note as synonymous terms, and I honestly believe that when Mr. Wiblin sings a part in B minor with D as Doh he is standing on his head, and that only constant assumption of that posture has accustomed him to its perpetual embarrassments, of which he is now unaware.

The Staff Notation for the minor key must be condemned on logical grounds. It has come to stay, and we can do nothing about it except write to The Times. (I do not refer, Sir, to your publication.) But the Sol-fa is surely not so past praying for. Need it embrace the present heresy for all time?—Yours, &c.,

Malvern College.

A. E. F. DICKINSON.

June, 1924.

[This discussion must now close.—EDITOR.]

THE ACT OF TOUCH

SIR,—It seems to me that Dr. Percy Rideout is writing to the wrong journal. His knowledge of practical mechanics is evidently very considerable, but, as Mr. Matthay says, 'The laws of nature never apologise.' If a principle be wrong, these same laws avenge the wrong by producing fatally wrong results; if right, then brilliantly right practical results obtain. Now, in music, outside a knowledge of instrumental construction, a discussion on mechanics is quite needless. Dr. Rideout asks: 'Where is the fulcrum of the leverage system employed in pianoforte touch according to his directions [Mr. Matthay's] for performing the "act of leverage"?' Quid tot verba? That 'fulcrum' (ugly word), the final and stationary one, is (a) practically the pianoforte itself; (b) the mentality and the psychological power of Mr. Matthay himself. His results are his answer to the pedagogic mechanics! His method produces the utmost power, beauty, and variety of tone from the pianoforte. Whether the laws of mechanics are outraged or not is beside the question to Mr. Matthay, I have no doubt, and to York Bowen, Swinstead, Myra Hess, Irene Scharrer, Frederick Moore, and a host of others. The end justifies the means, and Mr. Matthay's 'end' was to make musicians and not mechanics of the brilliant pupils I mention above—now all carrying on their master's wonderful work, and giving artistic pleasure to thousands. I was one of Mr. Matthay's pupils, so I speak from a personal affection and appreciation of the man and his methods. Che ha fatto colui—questo maestrino chi censura il mio professore?—Yours, &c.,

HUBERT PENGELLY.

5, Cumberland Road,
Preston Park, Brighton, Sussex.
July, 1924.

SIR,—I have followed with interest the remarks made by Dr. Percy Rideout on 'The Act of Touch' as analysed by Mr. Matthay to the help and salvation of many pianists.

If Dr. Rideout would explain how it is that levers with their fulcrums, which need to be stationary, can exist at all on this rolling sphere which only gives relative rest, it might be reasonable to discuss whether to consider the arm as a system of leverage be 'hypothetical' or not.

H. H. C. Candy, in his manual on physics, uses the arm as an illustration of leverage. It is easily demonstrable that the elbow is a fulcrum of sufficient stability to enable the biceps muscle to raise the forearm's weight. This is considered in a chapter on Statics, an illuminating word in this connection. It is evident that Candy's views coincide with Mr. Matthay's.

Surely the question of stability must always be a relative one, so far as all power on this earth is concerned.

Mr. Rideout says the final fulcrum of Mr. Matthey's motor-car is the resistance of the stationary ground. There may be wonderful people who can play the pianoforte without the support of a chair under them, which chair in its turn derives stability from the resistance of the stationary ground. I should feel rather nervous to attempt to dispense with the chair, though I remember seeing Peter Pan play his pipe on the stage while his body floated in the air. It gave me a queer sensation to watch and an unstable feeling. Is not the earth a final fulcrum for all physical movements? It is true that 'no force can act against nothing,' but we are not nothing. My body can, so long as it has breath, oppose gravity. We are a little world in ourselves. Our fulcrums are interdependent, each forming a link in our relation to the earth and its power of gravity.

As to hammer stroke, it is surely unnecessary to hammer the handle of a hammer. It is not economical to use energy with such waste as this friction involves. If we released weight on the pianoforte key without any controlling, discriminating power I cannot think the result would be one we should care to listen to for long. 'Enough and not too much' implies a power to lift off what is not needed. Through opposites we work. A ball cannot be bounced from the ground unless its weight be first lifted and released, and will weight-release alone bounce it far? One is reminded of the quarrel in 'Gulliver's Travels' between the 'Big-endians' and the 'Little-endians' in the matter of the egg. I should say the result in musical performance is the best vindication or condemnation of a method, and when I find that hammer stroke gives artistic results equal to those obtained by regarding the act of touch as one of leverage, I shall gladly follow that principle. At the same time I shall feel that science should have explained its laws better.

All life finally hangs upon a breath. Without that 'puff of vapour' there is no power. Where is that fulcrum? It is a mystery, yet we feel the power of breath. 'The wind bloweth where it listeth,' &c. One may be pardoned for uttering a desire that musicians who build their creations from the intangible world of sound would not so often place the physical before the spiritual. Where is the profit of understanding a mechanism if the spirit is not there to direct and move it? May it not be that discussions of the purely physical aspect of instrumental technique, unless considered as a means to a greater end than the attainment of technique, tend rather to deplete than increase our artistic power? Neuro-muscular—not muscular alone—is the aim in developing the means to express an artistic conception. We do not see the conception, and are apt to be impressed by the outward rather than the inward.—Yours, &c.,

Edinburgh.

ISABEL M. DODDS.

July, 1924.

RECOVERY OF THE VOICE

SIR,—Will you allow me to give Mr. MacKinlay two reasons why the laryngoscope used in connection with singing has done so much harm?

(1.) Any conclusions based upon observation of the action of the larynx with the laryngoscope in the throat must be false, from the point of view of right singing, as, with this instrument in the throat, the larynx and soft palate are both in an absolutely wrong position, and the whole throat is stretched. It is the cultivation of this stretched condition of the throat in singing which is the cause of all the relaxed throats and inflamed larynxes so prevalent amongst singers.

(2.) The use of the laryngoscope has caused the increase of numberless unnecessary operations on throats which are suffering from faulty vocal methods whether in speaking or singing, and which only the right method can and would cure. The teacher who understands the right use of the larynx is the real throat specialist, and one who knows the rudiments of the training of a throat ought to be able to guarantee to cure practically any form of throat trouble a singer or speaker may be subject to.

E

Mr. MacKinlay asks: 'How can the discovery of truth cause incalculable harm?' Well, I question the word 'truth.' One may discover facts and come to utterly wrong conclusions from those same facts. That is not truth. As to 3 per cent. of the human race having benefited from this invention, that depends on what one considers benefiting. The only people I know who have benefited are the 'throat specialists.'

I should like to add that the larynx in the highest position it can assume is capable of expressing any emotion imaginable. I need hardly say that this can only be learned under a skilled teacher.—Yours, &c.,

7, Clifton Gardens, W.9.

(Mrs.) ETHEL AUBREY.

July, 1924.

IT WAS THE POWDER

SIR,—In the hope that it may be of some use to fellow-readers, I relate below a personal experience.

Each week after the visit of a particular lady singing-pupil I found myself husky and suffering from something approaching a sore throat. Casting about for some explanation, I recalled Santley's invariable loss of voice in a room containing flowers, and it occurred to me that the quite pleasant scent habitually affected by the lady might be the cause. With some trepidation I suggested this to her, and she was good enough to discontinue its use (at any rate on her lesson days). After that my throat was markedly easier, but still somewhat abnormal. I consulted my wife, who suggested that powder and not scent was the cause.

To ask the lady to discontinue this required much courage, but I risked it, and this request too was complied with, and the result was no more sore throats. (No, not the loss of the pupil!)

It should be added, however, that so far as I was able to judge, neither the presence nor absence of the scent affected the pupil's voice in any way. Possibly, therefore, there are other quite ordinary things which put some voices out of condition, whilst leaving the majority unaffected.—Yours, &c.,

F. ALLISON JONES.

59, Belgrave Avenue, Watford.

June, 1924.

THE FINGERING OF SCALES ON THE PIANOFORTE

SIR,—Having read with much interest the criticism of my article on the above subject, supplied by three correspondents in the June issue, I feel that mere civility indicates some sort of acknowledgment, even if it should assume the form of a counter-attack at most points.

Both Mr. Swaby and Mr. Parker (writing respectively for and against my proposed scheme) agree, I think, in demanding a greater simplification for teaching purposes, which I can now supply. We need only remember that the thumb comes as follows:

- |                  |             |                               |
|------------------|-------------|-------------------------------|
| 1. Sharp Scales. | Right Hand. | 1st and 4th notes.            |
|                  | Left Hand.  | B and E.                      |
| 2. Flat Scales.  | Right Hand. | C and F.                      |
|                  | Left Hand.  | 3rd and 7th notes             |
|                  |             | (3rd finger on the key-note). |

I have not encountered much difficulty in teaching this in four slow stages. I confess I find the scheme quoted by Mr. Parker rather indigestible, but realise that these things can be shown so much easier than described in writing. Mr. Vine Westbrook's scheme, depending as it does on a certain knowledge of the order of the keys, would be of limited value to most of those whom I have to teach, whose acquaintance with the flat keys beyond F is (for obvious reasons) very thin.

So much for memorising. But Mr. Parker objects further to some of the fingering embodied in my scheme, namely, that for the left hand in G, D, and A—on the ground that 'it leaves much to be desired when the "both hands together" stage is reached.' What is desired, of course, is that the key-note should be played by the thumb in both hands. Admittedly any fingering where this does not occur is so far undesirable. But (1) it is not so very undesirable. Scales are not an end in themselves, and in existing music for every scale—passage for both hands moving in octaves there are a hundred which are not. Further, the mental difficulty of playing in octaves without either thumb on the key-note has got to be tackled when we come to the flat keys; why not, then, a little earlier—in three of the sharp keys? (2) There remains the objection to the old fingering in the scales named, which I explained in my article. Mr. Parker has not dealt with this objection. He asks me to bow to superior judgment. 'I think it is agreed that the old method is far and away the best.' I can only reply by asking him to bow to another superior judgment. I think it is as much agreed that Mr. Tobias Matthay is far and away the best pianoforte teacher in England, and if Mr. Parker cares to turn up 'Muscular Relaxation Studies' (Set 8, page 84, in my edition), he will read, 'We shall find that the following divergences from the traditional fingering are desirable... Left hand... D... G... A... Ring finger on F sharp.' I was extremely pleased, by the way, to find support for my heresy in so distinguished a quarter.

If Mr. Swinburne, my third critic, is still wondering whether I remember an article on this subject in 1883 or 1906, he need not worry any more (I was not a precocious child). But he might worry a little further on organ pedalling. He implies an analogy between the heel coming under and the thumb doing the same. Surely it is important to realise the inefficiency of the heel in controlling the length of a note on which so much of rhythm and musical character depend, i.e., never use the heel unless you are driven to it by the speed of the music.—Yours, &c., A. E. F. DICKINSON.

Malvern College.

June, 1924.

THE GERVASE ELWES FUND FOR MUSICIANS

SIR,—May we bring to the notice of your readers the important work that is being carried out by the Gervase Elwes Fund for Musicians? Since the inauguration of the Fund over three years ago, a large number of musicians in necessitous circumstances, musical societies, and students have been helped by the Fund. In several instances students have been given a year's tuition at either the Royal College or Royal Academy of Music, and, in at least one case, this opportunity has led to the candidate receiving a scholarship at the Royal College of Music. Many hundreds of cases have come under the notice of the committee, and it is only those of exceptional merit that receive grants. Particular attention has been given to applications of ex-service men suffering from after-effects of the war. Many cases of shell-shock have been advised to take up singing, and these, after having been given assistance by the Fund, have been enabled to earn their living in a congenial occupation.

It is recognised by the committee, however, that the musical profession is already overcrowded, and the majority of the cases are, therefore, dealt with under the Samaritan Fund, which gives assistance to well-known professional musicians who, through no fault of their own, find themselves in distressed circumstances.

During the last year a thousand pounds has been expended in this manner, but the number of applications for assistance is at all times far greater than the money at the disposal of the committee. We should, therefore, be grateful if any of your readers would generously send some small donation to help to swell our Fund, which is quite inadequate to deal with the number of necessitous cases always before the Committee.

Donations should be sent to the Hon. Treasurer, Major J. Leslie, D.S.O., M.C., 5, Fenchurch Street, E.C.3.

We have the honour to remain, Sir, Yours, &c.,

(Signed) EDWARD ELGAR, President.
COSMO EBOR (Archbishop of York),
Vice-President.
DENBIGH, Vice-President.
GRENFELL, F.M., Vice-President.
ULLSWATER, Vice-President.
MAUD WARRENDER.

5, John Street, Bedford Row, W.C.1.

July, 1924.

CONSTITUTION OF THE MILITARY BAND

SIR,—With reference to a thoughtful and appreciative article in your July issue, entitled 'Music at the Wembley Exhibition,' the writer asks the questions: 'Is it anywhere laid down strictly what a military band consists of, and what it can do?'

To both of these the reply is in the affirmative; in proof whereof I have the pleasure to enclose an instrumentation table for bands of from twenty to fifty performers, determined at a conference of directors of music, bandmasters, and publishers held here in December, 1921. Also a pamphlet on 'The Military Band,' written about the same time at my request by 'A Service Bandsman' (now a director of music), which gives the compass, tonal characteristics, &c., of all the instruments in use, and some hints on scoring. I shall be glad to send copies of both to anyone interested. The table is subjoined:

INSTRUMENTATION OF MILITARY BANDS FOR TWENTY TO FIFTY PLAYERS

Number of performers	20	25	30	35	40	45	50
*Piccolo ... ..	I ... I ... I ... I ...	I ... I ... I ... I ...	I ... I ... I ... I ...	I ... I ... I ... I ...	I ... I ... I ... I ...	I ... I ... I ... I ...	I ... I ... I ... I ...
*Flute ... ..	I ... I ... I ... I ...	I ... I ... I ... I ...	I ... I ... I ... I ...	I ... I ... I ... I ...	I ... I ... I ... I ...	I ... I ... I ... I ...	I ... I ... I ... I ...
E♭ Clarinet ... ..	I ... I ... I ... I ...	I ... I ... I ... I ...	I ... I ... I ... I ...	I ... I ... I ... I ...	I ... I ... I ... I ...	I ... I ... I ... I ...	I ... I ... I ... I ...
Oboe ... ..	I ... I ... I ... I ...	I ... I ... I ... I ...	I ... I ... I ... I ...	I ... I ... I ... I ...	I ... I ... I ... I ...	I ... I ... I ... I ...	I ... I ... I ... I ...
Solo B♭ Clarinet ...	2 ... 3 ... 3 ... 4 ...	2 ... 3 ... 3 ... 4 ...	2 ... 3 ... 3 ... 4 ...	2 ... 3 ... 3 ... 4 ...	2 ... 3 ... 3 ... 4 ...	2 ... 3 ... 3 ... 4 ...	2 ... 3 ... 3 ... 4 ...
1st " " ... ..	I ... I ... 2 ... 2 ...	I ... I ... 2 ... 2 ...	I ... I ... 2 ... 2 ...	I ... I ... 2 ... 2 ...	I ... I ... 2 ... 2 ...	I ... I ... 2 ... 2 ...	I ... I ... 2 ... 2 ...
2nd " " ... ..	I ... 2 ... 2 ... 2 ...	I ... 2 ... 2 ... 2 ...	I ... 2 ... 2 ... 2 ...	I ... 2 ... 2 ... 2 ...	I ... 2 ... 2 ... 2 ...	I ... 2 ... 2 ... 2 ...	I ... 2 ... 2 ... 2 ...
3rd " " ... ..	I ... I ... I ... 2 ...	I ... I ... I ... 2 ...	I ... I ... I ... 2 ...	I ... I ... I ... 2 ...	I ... I ... I ... 2 ...	I ... I ... I ... 2 ...	I ... I ... I ... 2 ...
Alto Saxophone ...	I ... I ... I ... I ...	I ... I ... I ... I ...	I ... I ... I ... I ...	I ... I ... I ... I ...	I ... I ... I ... I ...	I ... I ... I ... I ...	I ... I ... I ... I ...
Tenor " " ... ..	I ... I ... I ... I ...	I ... I ... I ... I ...	I ... I ... I ... I ...	I ... I ... I ... I ...	I ... I ... I ... I ...	I ... I ... I ... I ...	I ... I ... I ... I ...
Bassoon " " ... ..	I ... I ... 2 ... 2 ...	I ... I ... 2 ... 2 ...	I ... I ... 2 ... 2 ...	I ... I ... 2 ... 2 ...	I ... I ... 2 ... 2 ...	I ... I ... 2 ... 2 ...	I ... I ... 2 ... 2 ...
Horn (1st and 2nd)	2 ... 2 ... 2 ... 2 ...	2 ... 2 ... 2 ... 2 ...	2 ... 2 ... 2 ... 2 ...	2 ... 2 ... 2 ... 2 ...	2 ... 2 ... 2 ... 2 ...	2 ... 2 ... 2 ... 2 ...	2 ... 2 ... 2 ... 2 ...
" (3rd and 4th)	... ..	... ..	... ..	... ..	... ..	... ..	... ..
1st B♭ Cornet ... ..	2 ... 2 ... 3 ... 3 ...	2 ... 2 ... 3 ... 3 ...	2 ... 2 ... 3 ... 3 ...	2 ... 2 ... 3 ... 3 ...	2 ... 2 ... 3 ... 3 ...	2 ... 2 ... 3 ... 3 ...	2 ... 2 ... 3 ... 3 ...
2nd " " ... ..	I ... I ... I ... 2 ...	I ... I ... I ... 2 ...	I ... I ... I ... 2 ...	I ... I ... I ... 2 ...	I ... I ... I ... 2 ...	I ... I ... I ... 2 ...	I ... I ... I ... 2 ...
B♭ Trumpet ... ..	... ..	... ..	... ..	... ..	... ..	... ..	... ..
1st Tenor Trombone	I ... I ... I ... I ...	I ... I ... I ... I ...	I ... I ... I ... I ...	I ... I ... I ... I ...	I ... I ... I ... I ...	I ... I ... I ... I ...	I ... I ... I ... I ...
2nd " " ... ..	I ... I ... I ... I ...	I ... I ... I ... I ...	I ... I ... I ... I ...	I ... I ... I ... I ...	I ... I ... I ... I ...	I ... I ... I ... I ...	I ... I ... I ... I ...
Bass Trombone ...	I ... I ... I ... I ...	I ... I ... I ... I ...	I ... I ... I ... I ...	I ... I ... I ... I ...	I ... I ... I ... I ...	I ... I ... I ... I ...	I ... I ... I ... I ...
Euphonium ... ..	I ... I ... I ... I ...	I ... I ... I ... I ...	I ... I ... I ... I ...	I ... I ... I ... I ...	I ... I ... I ... I ...	I ... I ... I ... I ...	I ... I ... I ... I ...
E♭ Bombardon ...	I ... I ... 2 ... 2 ...	I ... I ... 2 ... 2 ...	I ... I ... 2 ... 2 ...	I ... I ... 2 ... 2 ...	I ... I ... 2 ... 2 ...	I ... I ... 2 ... 2 ...	I ... I ... 2 ... 2 ...
B♭ " " ... ..	I ... I ... I ... I ...	I ... I ... I ... I ...	I ... I ... I ... I ...	I ... I ... I ... I ...	I ... I ... I ... I ...	I ... I ... I ... I ...	I ... I ... I ... I ...
Side Drum ... ..	... ..	I ... I ... I ... I ...	I ... I ... I ... I ...	I ... I ... I ... I ...	I ... I ... I ... I ...	I ... I ... I ... I ...	I ... I ... I ... I ...
Bass Drum and Cymbals	I ... I ... I ... I ...	I ... I ... I ... I ...	I ... I ... I ... I ...	I ... I ... I ... I ...	I ... I ... I ... I ...	I ... I ... I ... I ...	I ... I ... I ... I ...
Bass Clarinet ... ..	... ..	... ..	... ..	... ..	... ..	... ..	... ..

JOHN C. SOMERVILLE
(Colonel-Commandant, Royal Military School of Music).

Kneller Hall.

July, 1924.

CLASSICAL AND 'OTHER' MUSIC

SIR,—Apropos of the recently revived controversy regarding classical and 'other' music, in your columns, may I relate an experience of my own? It concerns the 'Island Spell,' by John Ireland. I thought that this piece, which I performed at a select gathering, would appeal to most people of an average intelligence, whether musical or not, if only from its aspects of brevity and brilliance. But no: one person strongly resented this little classic, and expressed the opinion that there was absolutely no music in it. I am not prepared to discuss the merits or demerits of the piece, but the criticism (if the phrase can be so called) is interesting inasmuch as it comes from a disciple of the 'other' music. Such an abrupt and unqualified condemnation constitutes, in my estimation, the nucleus of the controversy, i.e., that the majority of those who denounce classical music do so out of sheer prejudice, without having first investigated and viewed its claims from an impartial aspect. I am sure that if any of those who are antagonistic towards 'classical' music were to delve behind the mystery of the much abused term, their efforts would be well repaid.—Yours, &c.,

122, Hewitt Road, N.8.

W. STRONG.

July, 1924.

* In bands of twenty, twenty-five, thirty, and thirty-five, the same performer plays either flute or piccolo according to the requirements of the music, which is scored so that they shall not be played simultaneously.

'A COMMENTARY UPON MENDELSSOHN'

SIR,—With reference to Mr. Foss's personal notions regarding Mendelssohn's works, as set out at length in your journal, I feel I must let you know how some of us regard such criticism of this great master's works.

The summation of Mr. Foss's opinions appears to be that Mendelssohn's music is not quite great—an attack which is pathetic in view of the present wretched condition of music in this country.

The constant attacks from various sources on the master are about as impressive as would be an attack on Newton or Kelvin by the inventor of toy balloons.

It is not surprising that the deep and sacred appeal which underlies the superficial beauty of the majority of Mendelssohn's works should be lost in these days of night clubs, jazz, and (what is worse) 'modern-experimental-music.'

I cannot agree with Mr. Foss's remarks concerning the slow movement from the Violin Concerto; on the contrary, I regard it as one of the most priceless assurances to mankind ever given through the medium of music.

In conclusion, my own opinion is that in spite of Mr. Foss and others Mendelssohn remains one of the 'Big Six.'—Yours, &c., J. WEARHAM.

28, Mount Ephraim Lane, S.W.16.

July, 1924.

BRITISH ORGAN MUSIC

SIR,—Might I suggest to recitalists that as this is the Imperial Exhibition year programmes consisting entirely of British compositions would be highly appropriate?

As a nation we have always run after foreign composers, thus fostering the idea abroad that we have nothing to boast of at home.

Allowing that each nationality has its own characteristics (as displayed, for instance, in folk-song), an impartial view of British organ music in its various styles will, I think, reveal that we have nothing to be ashamed of.

We may not have the theatricality of the French school, nor the downright logic of the Teuton, but there is no doubt that for recital purposes we can hold our own in most styles, if not in all of them. Let effectiveness be the test and we have nothing to fear. The great thing is not to look for Rheinberger in our serious works, nor Guilmant in the lighter ones, but to look for our own characteristics, and to enjoy them. English organists and organs are unequalled, and though English organ music is practically unknown abroad—except in America—there is no reason why we should not demonstrate that we can hold our own in organ composition, and incidentally help the foreigner to realise it. Mr. Arthur Meale recently gave a very successful all-British recital to the London Society of Organists, and I should like to see his example widely followed at this time when there are so many of our kinsmen here from all parts of the Empire.—Yours, &c., HERBERT WESTERBY.

PRIEST-ORGANISTS

SIR,—Your correspondent, Mr. L. M. Gordon, dissents from the resolution of the Bournemouth Organists' Association, probably because he has not looked at the question from the correct angle. When a man presents himself for Holy Orders he devotes his life, or ought to do so, to a work which has no concern with the highly-specialised and exacting duties of a Cathedral organist. No sane person would wish to debar him from exercising his musical gifts, but when he does so to the exclusion of men who have made music their calling, and therefore have a reasonable claim to preferment for which they may be fitted, and draws the emoluments which rightly belong to the professional musician, organists are justified in voicing their protest. A parson may have a taste for making and repairing his boots, and so long as he confines his operations to his own outfit no objection is likely to be raised: but let him extend his hobby to the footgear of his friends, and there will be a lusty outcry against unfair competition. The practice of appointing priest-organists is to be deprecated, and at best it is open to suspicion that the elected ones are securing their berths by backstairs methods. I am in entire agreement with the protest. We hear much about the increasing scarcity of candidates for Ordination. Organists are plentiful, 'in point of fact too many,' and we encourage the best of them by giving the plums to men whose vocation is not the organ-loft. In case I am accused of pique, let me say that I am happy where I am, and have no axe to grind.—Yours, &c.,

Ripon.

CHARLES H. MOODY.

THE LATE ALFRED GIBSON (VIOLINIST)

SIR,—A committee is being formed by professional friends and pupils in the hope of raising a fund to perpetuate the memory of Alfred Gibson. May I beg the favour of your columns to invite any friends or pupils interested in the scheme kindly to communicate with me?—Yours, &c.,

41, Cavendish Road, N.W.8.

A. J. SLOCOMBE.

Sharps and Flats

There is an audience for the living composer? Yes; an audience composed of the other composers, who never pay; the executive musicians, who never pay; and the friends of the composers and musicians, and of course they never pay. So there is a large audience—but it never pays. The public which pays for its tickets has not evolved beyond Wagner.—Arthur Honegger.

The Albert Hall authorities should present their music in a more modern setting, with scenic and lighting effects. The old-fashioned method of offering music in 'naked' form no longer attracts the crowd.—Major M. I. Gluckstein (of Messrs. Lyons & Co.).

The Grand Opera Festival week at Cardiff by the British National Opera Company opened last night under suspicious circumstances.—Welsh Paper.

In the last analysis we must all fall back on the most primeval thrill, the thrill down the spinal column. . . . When I get such a thrill I know that what I am listening to or playing is all right. If I don't get it, I know there is something wrong.—Fritz Kreisler.

Not every one, unfortunately, has an educated backbone. . . . On the other hand (and if it means death at dawn, let it stand), the fiftieth performance of Beethoven's fifth Symphony no longer speaks to my spine. We are too intimate, that Symphony and I.—'Mephisto' in Musical America.

I have never been able to understand the analytical programmes or the comments of critics on modern music.—Lord Olivier.

Once the critic begins to listen to the promptings of his better nature, he is lost.—Ernest Newman.

Jumpier Symphony . . . Mozart.—Concert Programme.

Sixty Years Ago

From the Musical Times of August, 1864:

HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE

The new opera of M. Gounod—'Mireille' in French, and 'Mirella' in Italian—was produced at this establishment on July 5, and achieved a success which we cannot but believe was owing partly to its composer having written another opera, called 'Faust,' portions of which are now on every pianoforte and on every barrel-organ in London. Much should always be expected of a man who creates a universal fame; but experience has proved that to whatever height this expectation may have been raised, the public is very apt to rest contented with a considerable abatement in a second transaction, on account of the extremely satisfactory nature of the first. That 'Mirella' is the production of a thoughtful and intelligent composer, and moreover of one who has in him the true dramatic faculty, is beyond a doubt; but we confidently affirm that although it will not detract from his previous reputation, it will not advance it. To say that the first two Acts are full of charming music, and that the other three are dreary and colourless, is only to declare that, as an entire opera, it fails to produce its effect.

A Government grant of £500 to the Royal Academy of Music was voted the other evening, after an animated debate, in which the Chancellor of the Exchequer warmly advocated the necessity of aiding the efforts of those who desire to establish a national school of music in this country.

The Amateurs' Exchange

Under this heading we insert, free of charge, announcements by amateur musicians who wish to co-operate with others.

Violinist wants practice with pianist in sonatas, or also with 'cellist in chamber or orchestral trios.—J. A. T., 91, Tachbrook Street, Pimlico, S.W.1.

Amateur ladies, gentlemen, and instrumentalists required to take part in a costume-choral-song recital of 18th-century music this autumn. The production will be on the lines of the Russian 'Chauve-Souris' Theatre. Small subscription.—ALEC BROOKSBANK, 97, Belgrave Road, S.W.1.

Violinist (gentleman) wishes to meet young gentleman pianist for mutual practice.—R. S. J., c/o Musical Times.

Conductor, experienced in choral, orchestral, and light opera work, wishes to find an enthusiastic amateur London Society that has a vacancy for a keen man.—J. S. R., c/o Musical Times.

Lady vocalist wishes to meet tenor for mutual practice of duets. Crouch End.—A. G., c/o Musical Times.

Young lady vocalist (trained) wishes to meet pianist for mutual practice. Crouch End district.—L. G., c/o Musical Times.

Dorian Symphony Orchestra, Westminster, invites applications for membership for the season 1924-25.—Prospectus post free on application, and stating instrument, to the SECRETARY, 30, The Green, Twickenham.

Lady instrumentalists required for large, established orchestra. Weekly rehearsals, Friday nights. Small subscription. Large library.—SECRETARY, Butterworth Rembrandt Orchestra, Hughes' Memorial Hall, St. John's Hill, S.W.11.

Violinist (lady) wishes to join other instrumentalists for practice of trios or quartets.—I. B., 18, Normanton Road, Clifton, Bristol.

There are vacancies in both chorus and orchestra of the West Middlesex Musical Society. Rehearsals recommence in September next. Good amateur instrumentalists required.—Hon. secretary, JOHN H. CUDDINGTON, c/o 20, Fordhook Avenue, Ealing, W.5.

Honorary accompanist required for rehearsals of the West Middlesex Musical Society, recommencing in September next.—Hon. secretary, JOHN H. CUDDINGTON, c/o 20, Fordhook Avenue, Ealing, W.5.

Amateur operatic and dramatic society now being formed in S.W. district wishes to hear from ladies and gentlemen interested.—SECRETARY, 2, Pentland Street, The Grove, S.W.18.

Young tenor wishes to meet accompanist for mutual practice. Evenings.—J. F. W., c/o Musical Times.

Gentleman vocalist wishes to meet good pianist for mutual practice. N. or N.W. London.—T. M., c/o Musical Times.

A new amateur orchestral society, commencing in the autumn, invites applications from all instruments. Rehearsals, Thursdays, 7.30 to 9.30, at the Paddington and Maida Vale High School, Elgin Avenue, W.9.—Principal, E. C. WHITE.

Light baritone, pianist, and experienced chairman would give services in exchange for organ practice (automatic power). City or West End preferred.—H., c/o Musical Times.

Owing to the success of the Festival Week at Shirehampton in 1921, it has been decided to give a series of operas in Victoria Rooms, Clifton, during the week commencing October 13. The scheme will include the first performance in England of Manuel de Falla's 'The Puppet Show of Messe Pedro' (an adventure of Don Quixote); Vaughan Williams's 'The Shepherds of the Delectable Mountains'; two one-Act operas by Napier Miles—'Markheim' and 'Fire-Flies'—and Purcell's 'Dido and Æneas'. There will be a first-class orchestra, conducted by Mr. Adrian C. Boulton and Mr. Malcolm Sargent, and the cast will include Miss Astra Desmond, Messrs. Stuart Wilson and W. Johnstone-Douglas. The business manager is Mr. Wilfred J. Masters, Kingsweston, Bristol.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC

The chamber concert on July 9, at Duke's Hall, included five items—MS. compositions of present students. Some of these were songs, the others were a set of Dances for 'cello and pianoforte, a Suite for pianoforte solo, and two pieces for string quartet. While none of the works were on a large scale, they all displayed much imagination and no little technical resource. The other items included a movement of Vienne's first Organ Symphony, well played by Miss Edna Howard, the first movement of Beethoven's 'Appassionata Sonata' (Miss Doris Hibbert), two of Bach's Chorale Preludes, arranged for two pianofortes by Vivian Langrish, and a Quartet in one movement by Tobias Matthay.

At the orchestral concert given at Queen's Hall on July 11, the outstanding item was 'The Blessed Damsel,' by Debussy, for female voices, soli, chorus, and orchestra. The solo portions were taken by the Misses Barbara Pett Fraser and Ethel Barker, and the performance as a whole reached a high degree of excellence. An admirable performance of the first movement of Mendelssohn's Violin Concerto was given by Miss Enid Bailey, and some brilliant pianoforte playing was heard in the 'Scottish Concerto' of Mackenzie (Miss Rene Cook), and the 'Concert Piece' by Matthay (Miss Betty Humby). The concert opened with Berlioz's Overture, 'Carneval Romain,' and concluded with Bach's Concerto in C for two pianofortes and strings. Sir Henry Wood was the conductor.

Performances of Massenet's opera, 'Manon,' have been given under the direction of Mr. Cairns James and Mr. Henry Beauchamp, and the Dramatic Class has given selections from several plays of Shakespeare under the direction of Mr. Acton Bond.

The following awards have been made: Anne E. LLOYD Exhibition (singing) to Ethel Barber (a native of Huddersfield). The adjudicators were Messrs. Henry Beauchamp, Edward Iles, and Arthur Thompson. Macfarren Gold Medals (pianists) to Betty Humby (a native of London); to Clifford M. Curzon (a native of London). The adjudicators were Messrs. Herbert Lake, John Pauer, Egerton Tidmarsh, Vivian Langrish, Carlo Albanesi, and Thomas B. Knott. Cecil Martin Prize for Juniors (elocution) to Ethel Korn (a native of London). The adjudicator was Mrs. Eileen Gray. Gilbert R. Betjemann Gold Medal (singing) to Roy Henderson (a native of Edinburgh), Howard Fry being highly commended and Laura Turner commended. The adjudicator was Mr. Percy Pitt. Mario Prize (baritones) to Howard Fry (a native of London). The adjudicator was Mr. W. H. Brereton. The Parepa-Rosa Prize (baritones) to Howard Fry (a native of London). The adjudicator was Mr. Frederick Randalow.

The distribution of prizes, by the Duke of Connaught, took place at Queen's Hall, on Thursday afternoon, July 24.

PRESENTATIONS TO SIR ALEXANDER MACKENZIE AND MR. FREDERICK CORDER

The term just completed forms an important landmark in the history of the Royal Academy of Music, as it has brought to an end the Principalship of Sir Alexander Mackenzie, and with him retires his chief lieutenant—the Curator, Mr. Frederick Corder. It was but natural that both professors and students should wish to show in some tangible form the affection and esteem in which they hold the two distinguished musicians who for so long and so successfully have guided the destinies of this great institution, and who in retiring to a well-earned leisure can look back upon a record of earnest work and solid achievement in the cause of British music which is probably without parallel in this country.

On Thursday evening, June 19, the Professors gathered in Duke's Hall to make a presentation to Sir Alexander Mackenzie—the students having already made one on their own behalf last term.

The gift from the Professors was a water-colour drawing by Turner. Mr. John B. McEwen, in asking Sir Alexander to accept this, said that Sir Alexander, they all knew, was an admirer of beauty, and had himself achieved distinction by the many beautiful works which he had composed. It was therefore fitting that the gift from the Professors should be a work of beauty. But beautiful as this little water-colour drawing was, yet it stood for something much more beautiful, and that was the esteem, the loyalty, and the affection of those who had been intimately associated with Sir Alexander in the work of the Institution, and he felt sure that whenever he looked at this picture it would remind him of the place he held in the hearts of the Professors of the Royal Academy of Music.

A short selection from the compositions by Sir Alexander Mackenzie was then performed, after which Mr. Philip L. Agnew, the chairman of the Committee of Management, presented to the Academy the portrait of the retiring Principal, by M. René de l'Hôpital. Sir Alexander, in accepting the portrait on behalf of the Academy and the water-colour drawing as a personal gift to himself, said he had been in many difficult situations, but the present moment was the most difficult he had ever faced, and that he would have been grateful if 'the other fellow' in the portrait replied on his behalf. In the course of a speech which was naturally of a personal character, Sir Alexander referred to some of the incidents attending his appointment as Principal thirty-six years ago, and also to the important part which the Professors had played in enabling the Academy to build its present home.

On Saturday evening, June 21, the meeting of the R.A.M. Club took the form of a farewell concert by Mr. Corder. The programme, which was composed entirely of his compositions, included a Fantasy for string quartet, songs, duets for two pianofortes, and the music to a recitation, 'The Witch's Song,' and was performed by some of the most distinguished past and present pupils of the Academy, including Mrs. Tobias Matthey, Miss Irene Scharrer, Miss Myra Hess, and Mr. Spencer Dyke.

At the close of the concert Mr. Harry Farjeon read and handed to Mr. Corder an address signed by many of his pupils, past and present, and colleagues at the R.A.M. Mr. Jean Pougnet, on behalf of the present pupils, presented to him a pair of binocular glasses and a box of chocolates, and Miss Irene Scharrer, in a graceful speech, presented on behalf of his former pupils and the Professors a Bechstein pianoforte.

Miss Scharrer said she had been selected to make the presentation because, of Mr. Corder's many pupils in harmony and composition—amongst whom were to be found so many eminent young composers—she was the one great failure, as he had never been able to teach her either harmony or composition. But she remembered that whenever she had been up for an examination or for a medal, and had been unsuccessful, as she invariably was, he always had a box of chocolates with which to console her.

Mr. Corder, in reply, after thanking the donors for their valuable and most acceptable gifts, referred to some of the changes which had taken place in the life and work of the Academy since his early days as a student.

ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC

To say that the second half of the College term has been as full of interest as the first, is to do less than justice to the former, for in addition to concerts and recitals there has been the production of Dr. Vaughan Williams's new opera 'Hugh the Drover,' with all the thrills and surprises that go with every new stage production. For the purposes of record it may be stated that after two quite private dress rehearsals, the opera was 'produced,' that is, performed for the first time before an audience (and that a very large one) on Friday, July 4. In the following week no less than four performances, or dress rehearsals, as the Royal College prefers to call them, were given. One of these had a distinction of its own, Her Majesty The Queen attending a special performance on July 7, to the great delight of the students, who, by Her Majesty's own wish, comprised the bulk of the audience. After the performance the Queen went on the stage and personally congratulated the performers, whose joy was thus made complete. This fortnight of opera came to a boisterous close on Friday, July 11, when Sir Hugh Allen, the director, entertained all the performers and orchestra, some hundred and fifty in number, at supper, and also welcomed as guests Sir Alexander Mackenzie, Mr. J. B. McEwen, Sir Landon Ronald, Sir Ernest Palmer, and Mr. George Macmillan, besides, of course, the composer and author, Dr. Vaughan Williams and Mr. Harold Child.

At the last Patron's Fund Rehearsal of the term the compositions brought to a hearing were a Suite by Amherst Webber; a Suite Divertissement by Anthony Collins; and two shorter works, viz., 'Hubbub in Blidha,' by A. Davies-Adams, and an Overture, 'High Halden,' by Ralph Greaves.

The last week of the term was occupied with the annual examination and awards of numerous prizes. One of the most interesting competitions was that for the Chappell Gold Medal for pianoforte playing, instituted by Messrs. Chappell. The conditions under which the award is made are unique; students of the Royal College in the highest grade for pianoforte playing are allowed to choose for themselves the programme of a miniature pianoforte recital lasting half an hour. Then they play the programme of their choice to the examiners in the concert hall, more as recital-givers than as students under examination. This year some five-and-twenty students entered, and after a two-days' examination, held by the Director and Mr. Ernest Newman, the gold medal was awarded to Cornelius Fisher.

TRINITY COLLEGE OF MUSIC

The terminal concerts (two) took place as usual at Steinway Hall and Queen's Hall in the last week of term. The former displayed the students' ability in chamber music and choral work, and the latter in orchestral and concerted work, the two concerts providing the public with opportunities for noting the all-round excellence of the teaching offered by the Institution.

Owing to the continued indisposition of Dr. C. W. Pearce, and in the absence of Dr. J. Warriner (on an examination tour in New Zealand), Mr. Edward d'Evry has been appointed acting-director of studies for next term.

The College has recently despatched a large collection of musical literature (history and theory of music, &c.) and music (consisting of full scores of operas, symphonies, overtures, and other orchestral and choral works) as a gift to the library of the Sydney, N.S.W., Conservatorium of Music, in recognition of the generous manner in which the work of Trinity College has been received and furthered in Australia.

A successful distribution of certificates and prizes was held at Bournemouth recently, at which Mr. C. N. H. Rodwell represented the College.

THE ASSOCIATED BOARD

The thirty-fifth annual meeting of the Associated Board of the Royal Academy of Music and the Royal College of Music was held at the Royal Academy of Music, York Gate, Marylebone Road, N.W.1, on July 15. Mr. Ernest Mathews took the chair.

Among those present were: Sir Alexander C. Mackenzie, Principal of the R.A.M., Sir Hugh P. Allen, Director of the R.C.M., John B. McEwen, Brig.-General Sir Alfred G. Balfour, Sir Anthony A. Bowlby, Bart., Rear-Admiral M. S. Fitzmaurice, Dr. H. W. Richards, S. P. Waddington, J. A. Creighton, Secretary of the R.A.M., Claude Aveling, Registrar of the R.C.M., John Clarke (Aberdeen), Captain Arthur J. Ray (Bedford), Frank Hughes (Bognor), J. E. Hilder (Brighton), Rev. R. J. W. H. Potter (Canterbury), H. Brunel White (Carmarthen), Miss E. K. Mond (Dumfries), Mrs. R. G. Porter (Enfield), Miss Ethel M. Barlow (Gravesend), Miss Rose Horley (Harrow), C. H. E. Fletcher (Kingston), Ernest Marshall (Leicester), Walter Maynard Rushworth (Liverpool), Rev. Bruce Cornford (Portsmouth), Francis H. Day (Rochester), Charles J. Soltau (Slough), L. B. Barnaschone (Tunbridge Wells), Rev. A. M. Hale (British Guiana), Charles J. Ross (Exeter), and some forty Members of the Board's Examining Staff, Professors of the R.A.M., R.C.M., &c.

The minutes of the previous meeting having been read and confirmed, the Secretary read the Report for the year. The number of candidates in the United Kingdom was 8,268 in the Local Centre Examinations and 49,402 in the 'School' Examinations. The exhibitions offered by the Board in the United Kingdom during the year were gained by Doris E. Vevers, Weston-super-Mare Centre, violoncello; Grace Milner, London Centre, pianoforte; Nora K. Samways, Bournemouth Centre, violin; Freda V. Setter, Cardiff Centre, violoncello; Reginald G. Oakley, Colchester Centre, pianoforte, and Helen G. Stewart, Leeds Centre, violin. Exhibitions were also awarded in the Dominions and Colonies as follows—In Australia, Violet Marie Kenyon, Melbourne Centre, pianoforte; Phyllis Turner, Perth Centre, singing, and Gwendo Paul, Sydney Centre, pianoforte; in Canada—Jean Cotton, Calgary Centre, pianoforte; in Ceylon—Ithali Eemelia Mack, pianoforte, and in Malta—Antonietta Malignani, pianoforte. Sixteen exhibitions previously gained have been renewed, fifteen for a further period of one year and one for a further period of two terms.

The exhibitions offered annually, which entitle their holders to free tuition at the R.A.M. or the R.C.M. for two or three years, have been awarded to the following candidates: Valetta C. Jacopi, Darlington (singing); Dora E. Allen, York (pianoforte); Sydney Williams, Cardiff (violin), at the R.A.M.; and Olive C. Richards, Croydon (violoncello); Doris I. Mitchell, Middlesbrough (pianoforte); and Dora Hyde, Wakefield (violin), at the R.C.M.

The Chairman, in moving the adoption of the Report, said:

'I am sure you will agree with me that notwithstanding the successful year we have passed through there is a note of sadness which dominates everything. We have to deplore to-day the loss of two great musicians, Sir Walter Parratt and Sir Charles Villiers Stanford, who were old members of the Board, Sir Walter for thirty-two years and Sir Charles for over twenty-four years. It would not be fitting nor am I the person to speak of their great musical talents, so I shall content myself with merely referring to their services to the Board. Both of them, apart from their regular attendances at Board meetings, acted as examiners abroad and at home, and Sir Walter was responsible for the organ syllabus and list of music for that instrument for many years. They were ready at all times to help in various ways, and their kindness and forbearance to me as chairman will never pass out of my mind.'

Mr. Mathews went on to say that there were also other reasons for sadness. Four of the Board's examiners, Mr. Gibson, Mr. Mackern, Mr. Redman, and Mr. English had died, and in addition to the resignations of Mr. Corder and Mr. Wessely the Board was about to sustain a great loss through the retirement of Sir Alexander Mackenzie, to whom the Board's formation was largely due and whose work for it during thirty-five years of membership had been invaluable. Turning to the past year's work it was gratifying that the Board was still holding its own. In New Zealand the formation of a Council under the patronage of the Governor-General would be of great assistance to a work already so excellently served by the endeavours of honorary local representatives throughout the Empire, to whom sincere thanks were due, as also to those who had offered prizes and medals for competition.

Sir Alexander C. Mackenzie seconded the motion, and the Report and balance sheet were unanimously adopted.

A vote of thanks to Mr. Ernest Mathews for presiding, proposed by Sir Hugh P. Allen and seconded by Mr. John B. McEwen, terminated the proceedings.

The executors of the late Sir Carl Meyer have made a donation of £300, at the instance of Lady Meyer, to the Guildhall School of Music, to found a 'Carl Meyer Memorial Prize.' The interest on this sum is to be used by the Principal of the School for the benefit of a deserving scholar.

At the Tobias Matthay Pianoforte School the Chappell Gold Medal has been awarded to Anthea Bowring-Skimming, Eunice Norton being very highly commended.

BRITISH MUSIC SOCIETY: ANNUAL CONGRESS

The fifth annual Congress was held at Liverpool, June 24-28, and proved a highly interesting and successfully carried out event. In his speech at the banquet, Sir Hugh Allen said that this had been by a long way the most successful Conference they had ever held. It was the wisest thing the Society could have done to come out of London, and no better place could have been selected than Liverpool, a progressive city and a great seaport, open to the world and to the imagination. But the presence and participation of Mr. Bernard Shaw would alone have given distinction to the Congress. Tall, erect, white of hair, as audacious and satirical as ever, but with an added new touch of benignity of manner, his was the chief figure, as his speeches were the most notable. In his letter of apology for non-attendance, Mr. Edward German wrote, touching the debate on the 'Amateur in Opera,' 'Let us have melody.' It is quite certain that although divergent opinions were freely expressed, the utmost harmony prevailed at the meetings.

The opening debate was concerned with 'The Amateur in Opera: a Problem for the Modern Composer,' and in his paper Mr. John Tobin described from personal knowledge the foibles and limitations of operatic amateurs, and the class of operas they invariably performed. He advised composers to study their requirements, and seemingly to give them what they wanted. The taste for really good operas, serious or comic, rested with composers. Dr. Cyril Rootham very strongly supported amateurs and amateur efforts. There were far too many professional musicians. If the amateurs would only abandon imitations of professional tricks and mannerisms, and say, 'Let's do something fresh; let's make a few blunders,' they would make concerts and operas possible again in this country. He strongly objected to dictation to composers as to how and what they should write. Mr. Edwin Evans disagreed, and thought that composers should come down from their pedestals and write as they were asked or told, in the same way as Mozart had had to do. Mr. Arnold Jones, as an old pupil of Ivan Knorr, at Frankfurt, counselled composers to write easier choral music with easy leads and more unison choruses, with any difficulties put into the instrumental parts. Mr. Herbert Antcliffe's plan for improving the taste in opera was to begin with the children, and to banish a certain class of 'school opera'; also to provide operas inexpensive to produce.

The debate on 'Music in Education: the Necessity for a Musical Adviser to all Education Authorities,' was opened by a paper read by Dr. Arthur Somervell, who was followed by Mr. W. H. Leslie, Mr. T. Pennycuik, Dr. W. G. Whittaker, and Mr. Adrian C. Boulton.

Dr. A. W. Pollitt thought that any funds available for such a purpose might be spent to better advantage on a municipal orchestra. Mr. Bernard Shaw gave an amusing account of the 'very simple' process of musical education which, he said, ultimately led to the degree of 'Mus. Doc.' The first stage was that the child must learn the date of the birth of Beethoven's nephew, and gradually he was taught to write music in eight parts, according to certain rules, without having any idea of what it would sound like. He deprecated the idea of appointing only one musical adviser for a large area. The active musicians of the district should be entrusted with the work. The teaching itself must be done by a teacher. Teaching was one thing and music was another. If you wanted the child to learn sight-reading with some sort of interest, you must give him opportunities for hearing music in order that he might understand that music was a pleasant and desirable thing. Mr. Shaw suggested the grading of school children according to their sense of pitch for sight-reading lessons, and not to bother with children who were hopeless from the musical point of view.

The debate on 'The Value of Musical Criticism' was opened by Mr. M.-D. Calvocoressi, who said that its value depended entirely upon the value of the critic. Editors, and especially sub-editors, too often pursued the policy of regarding music solely from the 'news' standpoint. All musical criticisms should be signed. Dr. Eaglefield Hull, founder of the B.M.S., said that the most successful critics of the British daily Press were really very successful journalists. Mr. Bernard Shaw, Mr. Arnold Bennett, and Mr. Filson Young all started as music critics. But the B.M.S. was out to make every listener his or her own music critic. Prof. Patrick Abercromby said that Liverpool had the best topical musical criticism of any English provincial town. That meant that its musical criticism was the best in the country, because the provinces were always in advance of London. He suggested that editors should provide space for informative and constructive criticisms of musical works.

Mr. Edwin Evans, who presided, said the great body of musical opinion was steadily against innovations, and the best service the critic could render was to hold the ring while innovations were being tested, otherwise there was a danger of originality being stamped out as the beginning of a fire or a revolution.

Mr. Bernard Shaw said that when he saw the title of the debate he immediately asked the question, 'The value to whom?' He could tell them with great exactness what its value was to him on the World forty years ago. It was £5 a week precisely. Criticism was an art in itself, and if musical criticism were to be of any value it must be entirely good of itself. Even stockbrokers used to read his article every week, not because they were keen on music perhaps, but because it was interesting in itself. The good music-critic was the result of a very rare double event. You must have a man who had a considerable literary gift and, like himself, a literary genius, and who had been soaked in music from a child. The music-critic should be as personal as possible. He should constantly keep in his readers' minds the fact that they were reading one man's opinion only. The only editor who ever interfered with him was Mr. T. P. O'Connor, of the Star, who immediately jumped at the idea of a musical article, because he wanted to get him (Mr. Shaw) away from writing about politics. Mr. O'Connor added, 'But for heaven's sake don't write about Bach in B minor.' There was a good deal of commonsense in that. When he was a music critic he felt it his duty to expose a certain amount of musical humbug that went on. There were always certain cliques endeavouring to impose the works of certain composers beyond their value, and, on the other hand, trying to disparage other composers below their value.

In connection with 'Music in Education' as a practical proposition, a valuable object-lesson was Messrs. Rushworth's demonstration of a Lecture-Concert for Young Folk given in the Philharmonic Hall with a professional orchestra of forty-six, conducted by Mr. Gordon Stutely, with Miss E. Allen as lecturer, in brief and pithy explanations between the various musical items. The programme was on the lines of the concerts which Mr. William Rushworth has initiated and carried out so generously at Liverpool. Mr. Rushworth has kept his ideals steadily in view, and is a pioneer who is out to succeed in spite of obstacles. He is content with doing something practical while others do the talking. This Lecture-Concert illustrated Mr. Bernard Shaw's ideas of how best to give children a taste for good music in a convincing way. The examples of English music included Holst's 'Somerset Rhapsody,' Vaughan Williams's ballet, 'Old King Cole,' 'A Song before Sunrise' (Delius), and 'The Wand of Youth' Suite No. 2 (Elgar).

The social amenities of the Congress included a reception at the Walker Art Gallery, by the chairman of the local centre, Dr. J. D. Hayward and Mrs. Hayward; a luncheon to delegates and officials given by the Lord Mayor in the Town Hall; followed by a public reception, a river trip on a Cunard tender, and a visit to the great new Cathedral, where the Lord Bishop addressed the members in the Lady Chapel. The annual banquet was held in the Midland Adelphi Hotel, with Lord Howard de Walden as chairman. The speakers included the Lord Mayor, Mr. Arnold Rushton, himself a cultivated musical amateur, Sir Hugh Allen, Mr. Reith, of the British Broadcasting Co., and Mr. Bernard Shaw, who, in responding to the toast of the 'Sister Arts of Literature and Music' said that they were like real sisters in one respect that very often for a long period they were not on speaking terms. If we wanted to produce opera, one of the most popular and vital forms of art, these sisters must be brought together. Literary men must learn to write for the singing voice. Sullivan certainly did nothing new in music, and Gilbert wrote nothing that 'Ingoldsby' Barham and Tom Hood had not already done better. The secret lay neither in Gilbert nor Sullivan. The real secret was that in such a work as, say, 'Trial by Jury,' music was brought into contact with the real life of our own time instead of dwelling in the fantastic fairyland of the older operas. During the proceedings Miss Harriet Cohen gave a pianoforte recital of compositions by Arnold Bax.

The music at the various concerts included a performance of Arnold Bax's Quintet in G minor, admirably played by Dr. J. E. Wallace (pianoforte) and the McCullagh Quartet. Holbrooke's Two Impressions, 'Belgium' and 'Russia,' with Frank Bridge's arrangement of the 'Londonderry Air,' and 'Sir Roger de Coverley' also found favour. The Composers' Circle of the local centre was represented by the individual songs of Norman Peterkin and Frederick Nichols, the Sonata for violin and pianoforte by Ernest Lodge, a Pianoforte Concerto by Douglas Miller, and a Trio for pianoforte, violin, and 'cello by Frederick Morrison. The artists included Mr. John Goss, Mr. George Hill, Miss Annie Caley, and Miss Ethel Penhall (vocalists); Miss Constance le Mesurier and Mr. J. E. Matthews (violin); Mr. Walter Hatton ('cello); and Miss Edith Byrom, Miss Gladys Scollick, Mr. John Tobin, and Mr. Douglas Miller (pianoforte).

The closing function of the Congress was a delightful performance of the English Pastoral Ballet, 'Old King Cole,' the music by Dr. Vaughan Williams, in the David Lewis Theatre, given by the Junior Dramatic Society of Liverpool College (boys of fourteen and under), in conjunction with the Liverpool Amateur Orchestral Society.

W. A. R.

CARILLON AND CHOIR

During the Competition Festival at Bournville on June 28, Granville Bantock's setting of Tennyson's 'Ring out, wild bells,' for male-voice choir with carillon accompaniment, was performed by M. Antoon Brees, of Antwerp, and the Bournville Works Choir. The Choral is probably the first composition in this genre by an English composer. As the bells are employed in alternation with the voices rather than in combination with them, problems of intonation and blending are reduced to a minimum. At one point a striking effect is obtained by detaching the component chords of a harmonic progression and inserting them between the choral phrases of a stanza. Chime figures naturally play an important part in the music for carillon, and these also find their way into the choral writing.

A new technical problem always seems to appeal to Prof. Bantock, and he draws from the carillon an eloquence with which one would have hesitated to credit it. Rapid figuration characteristic of the carillon style has an effective counterpoise in the sustained tones of the writing for male voices.

The problem of balance at first gave some trouble, it being found that when the choir sang in the carillon chamber its tones were drowned. A removal to a lower story of the belfry effected an improvement, but unfortunately the ensemble and the choral intonation still left something to be desired. The best result of all was obtained when the choir sang in the open at the foot of the tower. G. W.

DISCOVERY OF PALESTRINA'S BIRTH-DATE

For well-nigh three hundred years a difference of opinion has existed as to the exact date when Palestrina was born. Even the year has been variously given as 1524, 1525, 1526, and 1527; but now, by a fortunate discovery, May 9, 1525, is proved to be the birth-date of the 'Prince of Music.' The discovery was due to an anonymous person who acquired an autograph book of Palestrina's at Florence. The manuscript (of forty pages) had lain for some time in a Monte di Pietà. The real value of the MS. was not appreciated by the owner. It was acquired by Monsignor Raffaele Casimiri, Maestro of the Lateran Basilica, who has published an interesting account of the 'find' in his new quarterly magazine, Nota d'Archivio (No. 1, Anno I, March, 1924).

The MS. is entitled 'Libro de ricordi scritto da me Giovanni Pierluigi de Palestrina commensato à di 19 de Settembre 1578 per memoria da Iginio mio figliola d'età de 53 anni, mesi 4, giorni 10, per conto de stampe de Messe con messer Dorico.'

In the course of his article Monsignor Casimiri says that from the data of '53 years, 4 months, and 10 days,' Palestrina's age on September 19, 1578, his birth-date works out mathematically as May 9, 1525. He adds: 'Thus the last mystery surrounding the life of Palestrina is solved'; and he suggests that the forthcoming May 9 should be observed as a quater-centenary celebration. W. H. G. F.

MUSIC IN PUBLIC SCHOOLS

The programme of the Midsummer concert at Oundle was of a miscellaneous character. The school orchestra, some fifty strong, played some Wagner—'The Dance of the Apprentices' and the 'March of the Mastersingers,' the second and third movements of Bach's D minor Concerto for two violins (with a different pair of soloists for each movement—H. D. Molesworth and K. B. Harris; and O. W. Roskill and C. A. H. Williams); the choir of over two hundred sang Gibbons's 'The Silver Swan,' Parry's 'My Soul, there is a country,' and Balfour Gardiner's 'Cargoes,' and folk-songs. Three of the violin soloists above mentioned played a couple of movements from Beethoven's Trio for two violins and viola, Op. 55; and solos for voice, pianoforte, and organ were also included. At one of the services in Commemoration Week all the trebles sang 'My heart ever faithful.' We have received a copy of the annual report, and note with interest that there are at present two hundred and four boys in the choral society, forty-two in the orchestra, and thirty-nine in the fife, drum, and bugle band. The programmes of the weekly recitals cover a wide range, from Bach to Berners. We have received also a specification of the new organ which Messrs. Harrison & Harrison are building for the School Chapel. It will be a four manual, with fifty-six speaking stops and twenty-one couplers.

At Haileybury the term wound up with a choral and orchestral concert—McCunn's 'Lord Ullin's Daughter,' Grainger's 'Mock Morris,' the 'Merry Wives of Windsor,' the Allegro con Grazia from the 'Pathetic' Symphony, Bizet's 'L'Arlésienne' Suite, and Quilter's 'Children's Overture.'

A capital programme was that at Bedford, on June 28: the 'Egmont' Overture; 'Song of Destiny'; Jarnefelt's 'Prælium'; 'Sailing at Dawn' and 'The Little Admiral,' from 'Songs of the Fleet' (soloist, Mr. G. H. Mawson); and the first movement of Brahms's Horn Trio in E flat (Mr. de Reyghere, Mr. Francis Bradley, and Dr. Harding). Part 2 of the programme consisted of an abbreviated version of 'Twelfth Night.'

The new organ in the School Hall at Eton was used for the first time at the Musical Society's Concert on July 5. An excellent programme included orchestral works by Haydn, Coleridge-Taylor, and Grainger, and choral items by Wagner, Parry, Grieg, Brahms, &c.

London Concerts

DUSOLINA GIANNINI

A young American mezzo-soprano of Italian extraction, Miss Dusolina Giannini, gave two concerts at Queen's Hall. The most characteristic items on both programmes were Spanish and Italian folk-songs, which she sang with a truly personal zest. The more 'serious' matter consisted of exacting operatic arias, such as 'Pace, mio Dio' ('Forza del Destino') and 'Ritorna, vincitor.' At the second concert, Miss Giannini showed that she is at present innocent of a cultivated musical taste by bracketing along with two beautiful English classics some shoddy by Laforgue and S. Homer, which her advisers should have seen that she kept for her private amusement.

Her voice was by far the most beautiful of any of the new voices lately heard on the London platform. Although she sang soprano arias it is unlikely that she will make her name as a soprano. Her superb technics enabled her to sing in the high ranges, but there were indications, particularly at the second concert, that nature meant her to keep lower. It was not that her soprano singing was not good, but her quasi-contralto singing was so much better. Her 'Divinités du Styx' was magnificent in style as in beauty. The sauciness of her folk-song singing seemed to point to her as a Carmen—for Miss Giannini is obviously bound for the operatic stage.

The pleasure we had in these concerts, and the immense success they scored, arose from the fact that the new-comer had learned to sing consummately before appearing in public. She is quite a young woman, but it is certain that she has devoted as much care to singing as people do to other serious careers. This is so unusual in this calling that Miss Giannini earned easy honours. She certainly has rare gifts, and she delighted our ears. But her success was enhanced by the amateurishness of so much of the singing which depresses the London concert-goer to the point of making him wonder sometimes if he is losing his interest in music and singing. The young woman who wants a doctor's degree works, but the average recitalist seeks to rely largely on a languorous eye, carmine on the lips, and an expensive dress. It does not do. The past concert season was strewn with wrecked hopes, and largely because the concert-givers had no justification for the giving of concerts. H. J. K.

VERDI'S 'REQUIEM'

The jubilee celebration of Verdi's 'Requiem' seems to have come in upon a wave of appreciation. We no longer call the 'Requiem' tawdry, and proceed to condemn it; we call it 'a little theatrical, perhaps,' and proceed to praise it. In its sobbings, frownings, blenchings, and kneelings there lies good music, and nowadays we keep our ears open to the good and sincere, whether it comes in a clamant Italian Requiem or in a Mass by Vaughan Williams, a Plantation song or a Tudor Madrigal. The religious sincerity expressed in the emotional moods of the 'Requiem' is, of course, beyond question. The musically effective things—'Dies Irae,' the octave song of soprano and contralto, and so forth—are well known. The Handel Festival Choir, under Sir Henry Wood, put up a very good performance of the 'Requiem' at the Crystal Palace on June 21. A responsive, warm-toned choir this, and it is an excellent scheme to give it thus an occasional airing between Handel Festivals. The solo singing was safe in the hands of the competent. Miss Florence Austral, Miss Margaret Balfour, and Mr. Norman Allin, soprano, contralto, and bass, were large in style as in voice. Yet, strange to say, it was the small-voiced Mr. Tudor Davies, tenor, who won the greatest admiration, for he touched some chords in the imagination that the others missed. X.

Opera in London

B. N. O. C. SEASON

'HUGH THE DROVER'

'Hugh the Drover' was in its way—quite a different way—as much of an event as last year's 'Perfect Fool,' and when, two years in succession, two such musical compositions take the operatic field, who can deny that English attempts at opera, though they may be the target of the wits, and ignored by the snobs, are doing good service to music?

By this time all readers will know the tale of 'Hugh'—of the brutal Butcher and the romantic Drover, of the prize-fight, the stocks, and the happy ending. Mr. Harold Child's libretto has not been passed unscathed by criticism. He set himself a hard task in making a new mixture of simplicity and naturalness, of lyricism and drama, of fresh personages, and old situations. Most of it was a very pretty job, and we were then all the sorrier when these Gloucestershire rustics accidentally dropped into operatims.

That is a detail. The essential is that Mr. Child gave to Dr. Vaughan Williams what the composer wanted; it must have been so, for the response was clearly made in a delighted frame of mind. The libretto asked for songs and choruses and concerted pages, none very long, but plenty of them; it asked for an animation that was not to be frenzied, and a tenderness not too gushing. It asked for country music, not pretentious or 'intense,' but not milk-and-watery either. It gave a chance for a village fair in Act I, and a

May-day dawn in the Cotswolds in Act 2. The composer wanted nothing more, and took all the proffered chances.

In the opening scene at the fair occur nearly all the actual folk-song quotations of the opera—which in some quarters appears to have been taken as a mere cento of folk-songs. In a gay scene we hear 'Young lambs to sell!' cried against 'Fine, fresh cockles—catch 'em alive.' A showman quickly obliges with a bold song, 'Cold blows the wind on Cotsall,' with a tune that we straightway make an old friend. No wonder the crowd joins in the chorus: we should like to, as well. Enter a ballad-seller with his sheaf of broadsheets, and he sings the traditional 'Tuesday morning'—a particularly lovely tune of a well-known type. It is this tune which, taken up from his quavering lips by her young voice, is our introduction to Mary, the village beauty. Her young man, a brawny butcher, together with the father, the maker of the distasteful match, comes in. There are tunes for everyone—a properly strong and angular one for the butcher—and all the while the whole score is eagerly alive, chirruping and busy.

A Morris tune is the climax, and to this strain the merry-makers troop out, to leave the music to simmer down into Aunt Jane's song of consolation to our poor unloving Mary. This song (like a certain amount else in the opera, for that matter) is not austere rural—it is early Vaughan Williams, and is a link with the Sullivan of the 'Yeomen of the Guard.'

Mary is not long unloving. For here is Hugh on the scene—a horse-dealer, but also a tenor and a troubadour, who within less than ten minutes has broken out with two fetching songs. Vaughan Williams has had a weak spot for his Drover, and has given him song after song, every one of them certain to be warbled by those who have found the early Vaughan Williams lyrics to their taste. Here is the beginning of the song with which the Drover fires Mary with a longing for the 'open road':

Ex. 1.

Allegro moderato.

Horse-hoofs, horse-hoofs thunder down the val - leys.

f

Foam-ing manes and toss-ing tails

&c.

At the end of the stanza F minor gives place to the sudden brightness of E major. This music is allied to the 'Songs of Travel' of some twenty years ago, and in general the Drover is not given quite such racy accents as the other men. He has another charming little romance to sing just before the fight—the bare-fist fight which is to decide who shall have Mary.

All the working towards this crisis of the opera is extraordinarily apt and vivacious. It moves and it builds, and the animated ensemble as the ring is being prepared could not be better. The fight (three rounds) is accompanied by a sort of jig, thus:

Ex. 2.

Allegro vivace.

p f

Before the Act is done Hugh has won his Mary, but has also been borne off to the stocks—a suspected spy. The acquiescence of the villagers in this act of spite on the part of the beaten suitor and Mary's father was a thought sudden. It did not matter. The Act had gone triumphantly. No one could complain of one dull moment.

If Act 2 was not carried along by quite such an impetus, there was, in compensation, music that was even dewier. Pure Vaughan Williams, the dawn music—with its chiming bells, its scraps of tavern song, and the brooding of the orchestral background—a little musical picture, sketched lightly enough, but consummate in effect. Mary, with stolen keys, comes and unlocks the prisoner thus:

Ex. 3. Allegro moderato.

pp

Turn, turn, sul - len

pp dolce.

key, And set my lov - er free, . . .

&c.

which goes on beautifully and warms into the 'grand' love duet.

The ending of the opera seemed to demand, without quite getting, some of the quick, breathless movement of Act 1. When the sergeant arrives to arrest the 'spy,' he recognises in him an old friend, and this is made a peg for the sergeant's song. It is the only song in the opera which seems dispensable, but at that moment we are not much interested in the sergeant's adventures, the tale of which, though quite short, delays the action.

At the British National Opera Company's performance an improvement was effected by excising Hugh's final harangue to the villagers, in which (as we heard it at the Royal College of Music) he flattered the wandering life, 'The road again, the blessed sun, and the rain,' at the expense of the custom of settled habitation. This had been unnecessary, and made us wish that authors who had gone on so well had been a little more certain when to stop.

But, however one may cavil, the thing had gone well—'toppingly.' It was sound and sweet. It proved fetching at the first try, and also left us sure that it would go on fetching us for a long time to come. There is body in this music. But it demands particularly nice performance. At the R.C.M. it was clearer, more finely drawn.

Mr. S. P. Waddington conducted. The orchestra sounded rather too substantial in relation to the students' voices. But again at the B.N.O.C. (with Dr. Malcolm Sargent conducting) there was a certain orchestral thickness.

The B.N.O.C. produced the opera towards the end of a prodigiously active season. They should in the future do much better with it—though we allow that on many points they made a capital beginning. Mr. Frederic Collier and Mr. William Anderson were the right men for the Butcher and the Constable. We were not quite so sure of Mr. Tudor Davies (Hugh). His 'serious' lyrical singing in his higher range was beautiful, but he seemed to be denied ease by recollections of established operatic proprieties. Yet you would have said that that fight was enough to take the starch out of any tenor. We could not approve of pretty Miss Mary Lewis's singing.

To judge the Company on that first performance, it would have been said that English singers found a straightforward, easy English piece the hardest to take to. But we are sure that many performances will be called for, and easefulness will come. C.

Sir Alexander Mackenzie's little piece, in one Act, the 'Eve of St. John,' which the B.N.O.C. had already sung in the provinces, was brought out at His Majesty's Theatre on the same evening as the revival of 'The Perfect Fool' of Holst. Sir Alexander's work had the friendly and respectful reception due to anything coming from a composer so venerable and so long esteemed. It was fully described in the Musical Times for May, 1924, on its first performance at Liverpool, so there is no need to discuss it here.

The performances of 'The Perfect Fool' had not been well rehearsed, and Mr. Julius Harrison, the conductor, was fighting against obvious difficulties. But once again this marvellous music—so extraordinarily vital, so full of brilliant fancy, so 'speaking'—captivated all who had ears to hear. Miss Sylvia Nelis was the Princess. She sang her delicate part with exactly the right purity and easy execution. But what a pity it is that she seems reluctant to give a spice of vivaciousness to her singing! She hardly troubles to shape her words, and this renders her singing sadly lackadaisical.

Precisely the same fault invalidated her performance in Rimsky-Korsakov's 'Golden Cockerel,' the revival of which, under Mr. Goossens, was one of the most popular events of the season. Mr. Radford and Mr. Norman Allin did capital in clownish parts, and the production had a gorgeous setting. Once again another week of preparation would have been all to the good.

The Wagner performances of the season included some of the B.N.O.C.'s best efforts, in particular 'The Mastersingers' and 'Parsifal.' The former was conducted both by Mr. Albert Coates and Sir Thomas Beecham. The orchestra seemed small, of course, to ears that had heard the rich band at another house in May, but there were a fineness, a measure, and a good judgment that showed up the English conductors favourably, compared with the much overpraised Bruno Walter. 'Parsifal' was sung by a magnificent cast—Messrs. Walter Hyde, Norman Allin, Frederic Collier, and Percy Heming, and Miss Gladys Ancrum—a band of which English music may be justly proud. Mr. Norman Allin's Gurnemanz is his best part, and from first to last he imparts to it rich artistic sense. Mr. Hyde in Act 3 gives a performance of ideal beauty—perfectly apt and satisfying in every gesture as in every tone. If as much cannot be said of his youthful Parsifal it is that no doubt there are insuperable difficulties in the way of a mature man representing a stripling. But still we do think that Mr. Hyde might improve in these two Acts on his unpleasant clothes (why white stockings?—surely Parsifal went about bare-kneed?), wig, and facial make-up.

'The Mastersingers' was thoroughly well done, although, of course, here as in 'Parsifal,' the just man was making allowances for the inconvenient smallness of the stage. A high authority has been telling us that 'allowances' are out of place in musical criticism; but this seems to me not only unpractical but also unfair in an imperfect world. Again a good cast. Mr. Walter Widdop, both here as Walther and again as Siegfried, excited the liveliest interest. He is young and attractively eager. He shows his inexperience at various points, but he is never wooden. His singing has a free and natural grace, and he captivates anyone who has a care for the English language, for his English is singularly true and unaffected. Why will not singers, instead of striving in and out of season for what they imagine to be 'tone,' realise that purity of language is three parts of good singing? Mr. Mummery (David) on this evening spoilt our pleasure in him, though he has distinguished vocal gifts, by his forced, unnatural diction and his rigid jaw. The first Sachs was Mr. Robert Parker, who gets his words 'over,' and acts sympathetically. But his tone sometimes hurts. On the other hand, Mr. Andrew Shanks who sang the part at the Beecham performance was truly vocal, but appears to have too reserved a temperament to do justice to the genial Sachs. Miss Constance Willis was the Magdalena, and, for my part, I have seen no one more sympathetic. Her voice is charming; it flows with suavity and unhampered impetus. Only now and then she hatches out a typically 'contraltoish' false vowel—oi for i, for instance. Miss Willis was also an unusually acceptable Carmen.

There were two further Mozart revivals—'The Magic Flute,' in which Miss Noel Eadie made her mark as the Queen of Night, and 'Seraglio,' in which the rich buffo playing and singing of Mr. Robert Radford (Ossin) triumphed all along the line. One of the Company's best all-round feats of team work was 'La Bohème,' which went pretty well faultlessly, and altogether better than the more pretentious Italian performance at the other house. Mr. Heming was the Marcel. The return of this accomplished artist to the Company is an enrichment. A newcomer, Miss Mary Lewis, was the Musetta, and on a later day the Mimi. She was far better suited by the former part. She has a sprightly personality and was an ideal Musetta. The more cantabile music of Mimi showed up her considerable vocal deficiencies. Mr. Mummery was in his element as Rodolphe. He understands the singing of Italian music.

COVENT GARDEN

Covent Garden did not earn for itself much glory by its Italian season. There were few first-rate singers, and a few who should never have been admitted to leading parts in a house of those pretensions. A series of performances of the most hackneyed Italian works imaginable was spiced only by Ravel's 'L'Heure Espagnole.' It was a pleasure to hear Mr. Morgan Kingston's suave, lyrical tenor voice, though there is music which suits it better probably than the gross Pagliacci. Mr. Harold Williams, too, had a success as Silvio, but rarely, either in grand opera or on the pier, have we heard so displeasing a vocal utterance as that of the Nedda. H. J. K.

Competition Festival Record

At EDINBURGH a very successful Festival lasted from June 9 to 17. The chief choral classes were held on the opening day, and the names of the winners appeared in our last issue. Several days were given up to solo singing and playing and the like—one of the classes being for trios of voice, violin, and pianoforte—and a feature was made of elocution, with Mr. John Masefield as adjudicator. On the final day forty school choirs came in, the chief prize being won by Grangemouth High School, conducted by Mr. Hugh McClement.—The TEESDALE Festival concluded at Barnard Castle on June 28 with a day of choral singing. Remark was made on the poor entry of village choirs—only two competing for a challenge shield that was offered only on condition that at least five choirs entered. The better of the two was the choir of Esk Winning, which also beat two Darlington choirs in the chief mixed-voice class. Shildon was the best male-voice choir.

The DEVON competitions, held at Tavistock, Barnstaple, and Exeter, on June 16, 17, and 18 respectively, drew music from village centres, and produced some singing that earned judicial praise in plenty. The choirs of 'senior girls' provided one of the features of the Festival with their singing of Holst's 'O England, my country' and Jones's 'Sweet Kate.' At Barnstaple, the winners were Edgehill College, Bideford; at Exeter, Crediton High School; in the final the two choirs were placed in this order. The best mark for sight-singing (ninety-nine out of a hundred) was given to Barnstaple Grammar School. Other choirs that did well were St. James, Exeter, Girls' Friendly Society; Budleigh Salterton Women's Institute; Uffculme Ladies' Choir; and Woodbury Village Choir.—A four days' Festival at CLEETHORPES (July 2-5) culminated in an excellent display of choral singing on the Saturday. The leading successes were those of the William Woolley Choral Society (Nottingham), Scunthorpe Male-Voice Choir, and Cleethorpes Ladies' Choir. In the mixed-voice contest, limited to Yorkshire and Lincolnshire, the best choir was Flottergate Choral Society, from Grimsby. Marshchapel swept the board in the village choral classes—male, female, and mixed.

In a number of classes of this year's Festival at LEAMINGTON, the test-pieces were the same as those set recently at other competitions in the district. This method certainly increases the number of entries, but it is questionable whether it is good for the musical health of the competition movement. It often means that one competitor carries off the prize at festival after festival, by the accident of excelling in the particular type of music set. This fault was almost entirely absent, however, in the children's section, and the standard attained in these classes is sufficient justification for the continuance of the Festival. The most beautiful choral singing came from the Malvern Wells Male-Voice Choir, conducted by Mr. J. H. L. Gauntlett. The singing of madrigals still causes the choirs some anxiety, but this branch of the choral art is improving every year, and that many of the choirs were fairly successful in Morley's difficult 'Ho, who comes here,' is greatly to their credit. G. W.

Choral conductors frequently ask us for advice as to the pronunciation of 'wind.' The following helpful answer, which appeared recently in a weekly paper, may be taken as authoritative, and should preserve us from further inquiries:

'PRONUNCIATION OF "WIND" IN MODERN POETRY.—Can you inform me if the pronunciation of "wind" as "wind" in poetry is now adhered to?—L. J. S., Bristol.

'A.—Modern poets have, for the most part, given up the old poetical pronunciation of "wind" as "wind."'

'At a musical festival:

'Dry tone and unsteady intonation told against the singing of the — Temperance Philharmonic.—Provincial Paper.

'We can understand the dry tone, but are a little surprised at the unsteady intonation.—Punch.'

Music in the Provinces

ABERYSTWYTH.—The fifth Festival was held on June 21, 22, and 23. A novelty was a Children's Concert, conducted by Mr. Adrian C. Boulton, this being the first full performance of the Welsh Symphony Orchestra. The programme included the 'Clock' Symphony, Beethoven's Rondino in E flat for wind instruments, Mozart's 'Serenade' for strings, and Quilter's 'Children's Overture.' In the evening the orchestra played Brahms's 'Festival' Overture (the 'Gaudeamus' being sung), Stanford's 'Irish Rhapsody,' Bach's Violin Concerto in A minor (with Mr. Hubert Davies as soloist), Holst's 'Fugal Concerto,' and Beethoven's eighth Symphony. A choir of twenty-three voices sang 'Heraclitus,' Motets by Byrd, and two Elizabethan Madrigals. Sir Henry Wood was the conductor on the second day, when Franck's Symphony was played. The evening programme included a Suite in G (Bach), arranged by Sir Henry Wood, and Brahms's Violin Concerto in D, with Miss Sybil Eaton as soloist. Sir Walford Davies conducted a performance of Verdi's 'Requiem.' Another experiment was a Hymn Festival with the help of the Welsh Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Sir Walford Davies. At the final concert Sir Edward Elgar conducted his 'Enigma' Variations and Violoncello Concerto, with Mr. Arthur Williams as soloist. Sir Walford Davies conducted the 'New World' Symphony, and the choral works, which included a Bach Chorale and Beethoven's 'Creation's Hymn.' A novelty was a song for baritone and orchestra, 'Admiral Death,' by Dr. J. R. Heath, sung by Mr. W. R. Allen.

BIRMINGHAM AND DISTRICT.—On July 8, Mr. Martin Harvey, jun., assisted by Miss Denne Parker, Miss Myrrha Bantock, and Miss Moureen Taylor, gave a recital, in which the dance as a means of musical expression was the principal feature. Miss Denne Parker sang songs by Prof. Bantock, and Mr. Martin Harvey and his colleagues interpreted them in movement. Mr. Martin Harvey possesses an easy technique, and a special feature of his performance was his excellent facial expression.—The scheme for the City Orchestra's eight Symphony Concerts next season includes the following Symphonies: Elgar No. 2, Brahms No. 1, Schumann No. 4, Bantock's 'Hebridean,' and Bliss's 'Colour.' The soloists so far engaged include Miss Beatrice Harrison and Miss Harriet Cohen.—Mr. Cunningham's weekly organ recitals at the Town Hall continue to draw large attendances. They are given at mid-day, and as the City Police Band, under Mr. Richard Wassell, has begun a series of mid-day concerts in the same building on Tuesdays, the resumption of Miss Marjorie Sotham's Thursday concerts in September will probably find Birmingham supplied with three mid-day concerts weekly.

BLACKPOOL.—The Blackpool Lyric Choir and the Amateur Symphony Orchestra gave a concert at the Winter Gardens on July 13 under Mr. Percy Dayman. MacDowell's 'Summer Winds' and Walford Davies's 'O England' were among the choral pieces performed, and the Orchestra played Mozart's Symphony in C (No. 36).—The list of vocalists to appear at the North Pier weekend concerts, under the direction of Mr. S. Speelman, includes many members of the B.N.O.C.

EDINBURGH.—At the annual meeting of guarantors of the Reid Orchestra, on June 16, it was decided that the members of the Orchestra should form themselves into a self-governing body on the lines of other symphony orchestras, and that they should give fortnightly concerts in Usher Hall during the winter.

HARLECH.—The chief event of the Festival held on June 26 was the performance of 'The Apostles,' conducted by Sir Edward Elgar. In the afternoon a local orchestra played a fantasy on Welsh airs, by Dr. Heath, who conducted this and the 'Figaro' Overture. The Welsh Symphony Orchestra played the 'Magic Flute' Overture, movements from Beethoven's eighth Symphony, and Elgar's arrangement of the Bach Fugue in C minor. The principal singers during the day were Miss Laura Evans-Williams, Miss Dilys Jones, Mr. Horace Stevens, Mr. T. Pickering, Mr. Allen, and Mr. Bryngwyn. Sir Walford Davies was conductor-in-chief.

HOLYHEAD.—At the Anglesey Musical Festival on July 2 massed choirs and mixed professional and amateur orchestras performed in a high wind during an afternoon concert. Mr. T. Hopkin Evans conducted, and the programme included Dr. Dan Prothero's 'Salm Gobaith' and the 'William Tell' Overture. In the evening it was decided to adjourn to the Hyfrydle Chapel, and Spohr's 'Last Judgment' was the chief work.

LIVERPOOL.—In the course of the British Music Society's Conference, an orchestral concert on June 26 was the largest public event. The first part was a demonstration of one of Messrs. Rushworth & Dreaper's lecture-concerts for children, with Miss E. Allen as lecturer. The second part included Vaughan Williams's 'Old King Cole' ballet, Elgar's 'Wand of Youth,' Herbert Howells's 'Puck's Minuet,' and works by Delius and Holst. Mr. Gordon Stutely conducted. A chamber concert given earlier in the same day consisted of works by the Liverpool Centre Composers'

Group, and included Douglas Miller's Pianoforte Concerto, Frederick Morrison's Pianoforte Trio, Ernest Lodge's Violin Sonata, and groups of songs by Norman Peterkin and Frederick Nicholls.—The closing event of the Conference was a concert given by amateurs on June 28 in the David Lewis Hostel. The Amateur Orchestra, conducted by Mr. Gordon E. Stutely, played 'The Master-singers' Overture, the Prelude to Act 3 of 'Lohengrin,' and the English ballet, 'Old King Cole,' by Vaughan Williams, the last-named in collaboration with the boys of Liverpool College.

MANCHESTER AND DISTRICT.—The annual meeting of the Hallé Society, presided over for the last time by Mr. Gustav Behrens, brought to light more interesting matters than are usual on such occasions. The increased number of string players had raised the strength of the Orchestra to eighty-six, and the past season had abundantly justified such an increase. The number of engagements secured by the Orchestra outside Manchester had grown to seventy. On October 28, and November 11 and 25, the Hallé band was to play in London at Queen's Hall, after an interval of many years. During the coming season at Manchester ten of the twenty Hallé concerts were to be broadcast, the Executive rightly judging that 'listeners-in' would soon want to hear the band at closer quarters, and so far from diminishing audiences it was highly probable that they would thereby be increased. The concert given by the Orchestra last December to thirty-two hundred school-children and their attendants had been such an outstanding success that arrangements for another were well in hand, the Orchestra again giving its services. Then six orchestral concerts—altogether outside the normal Manchester subscription series—were to be given next winter in Free Trade Hall under the ægis of the Manchester City Council, a proportion of seats being reserved for children. One of the large boxes in Free Trade Hall is to be reserved for blind musicians from the Manchester Blind Home at Old Trafford all through next season. The increased expenditure on the larger number of players and extra rehearsals had resulted in a net loss on the year of £258, reduced to a negligible sum by the amount brought forward from the season 1922-23. Long-service badges were now to be worn by players whose services with the band had exceeded twenty years' duration. No fewer than sixteen of the present band had services ranging from twenty to forty years to their credit. Not only are the artistic sides of this organization well thought out, but the humanitarian aspect is not lost sight of. Richter initiated the Orchestra Pension Fund. To-day it numbers seventy-two paying members, accumulated investments amount to £14,377, and twelve pensioners are drawing annually £300, or roughly 10s. per week each. In addition the Orchestra has a Sick Fund, contributed to and administered by its own members, and the Executive has voted this year £50 to the Fund. Beyond these, is the Hallé Sick and Benevolent Fund, formed by voluntary gifts, and administered by the Executive, intended to meet cases of emergency and distress on the part of players or their dependents; this Fund to-day stands at £463. The only public opportunity afforded to concert-goers for sharing in these schemes is in connection with the annual Pension Fund Concert, when all concerned in the performance give their services, the net proceeds going to swell the Pension Fund; the surplus on the concert in March last was £209. It is announced that Dr. Thomas Keighley will again lecture in advance of the concerts on any new music to be heard; and that the choral concerts will be Berlioz's 'Faust' (given 'according to the directions of the composer'), 'Gerontius,' 'The Messiah,' and Bach's B minor Mass, which is to become an annual performance. On this aspect of the Society's affairs, it may be remarked that the 'St. Matthew' Passion deserves at least as much attention as the Mass, which will be given next March for the fourth consecutive year. The main features of the orchestral scheme for next season are (a) four purely orchestral concerts; (b) the performance of all the Brahms Symphonies, of which Mr. Hamilton Harty has shown himself an uncommonly good interpreter. These come on October 16, December 4, January 29, and March 19. Elgar's A flat, César Franck's D minor, Tchaikovsky's No. 5, Schubert's C major, Dvorák's No. 4 in G, Beethoven's Nos. 5 and 8, along with Harty's 'Irish,' complete the symphonic aspect of the season. Strauss's 'Zarathustra' and d'Indy's 'Istar' are the two most notable works outside the Symphonies, so far as the season's work has been disclosed. Among visiting soloists are Cortôt, Casals, Joan Manen, Suggia, Moiseiwitsch, Jelly d'Aranyi, and Murdoch, and three leaders of the Orchestra in Catterall, Twelvetrees, and Mortimer also figure as soloists. It was Mr. Gustav Behrens, the retiring chairman, who, along with the late E. J. Broadfield, shouldered the burden on Hallé's death in 1895. They were determined that Hallé's high ideals should be maintained, and that the Hallé Orchestra should not just pass over to an impresario. Some measure of their accomplishment under Cowen, Richter, Balling, Beecham, and Harty, may be gained from the earlier part of these notes. Mr. Behrens, in retiring from the chairmanship (in which he succeeded to Mr. Broadfield), continues his services on the Executive, and is followed by another of Manchester's leading merchants, Mr. E. W. Gromme.—The Catterall Quartet early next year makes its first Continental trip, visiting, amongst other cities, Cracow, Warsaw, Lodz, and Berlin. At one of the London Hallé Orchestra's concerts, Catterall is to play the Brahms Violin Concerto.—The Tuesday Mid-day Concerts have at last won through to a definite and assured position, consolidated artistically and financially. Naturally there is much satisfaction to be derived from such a harvest, wrung from a field so rough, untilled, and unpromising. The only drawback to its increasing usefulness is the absence of any fixed concert-hall—its peregrinations last winter causing confusion. This difficulty awaits solution.

OXFORD.—On June 15, at the choral singing on the staircase at Christ Church, the polyphonic period was represented by Weelkes's 'Gloria in excelsis,' Gibbons's 'Hosanna to the Son of David,' Byrd's 'Agnus Dei,' and Henry VIIIth's 'O Lord, the Maker of all thing,' and the line was continued with the two Wesleys ('Exultate Deo' and 'Thou wilt keep him in perfect peace') and Stanford ('O living will'). In two hymns ('O Strength and Stay' and 'Round me falls the night') chorales of the Reformation period were used with harmonies and descants, these being taken from the sets which Drs. Harris and Ley are editing.—On June 22 the Elizabethan Singers sang in the Playhouse, additions to their repertoire being 'Lure, falconers' (Benet), 'Oh, can ye sew cushions' (Bantock), 'When Allen-a-dale' (Pearsall), Byrd's 'Lullaby' and 'Cradle Song,' and Dr. Walker's cycle of five songs from 'England's Helicon.'—Ifley Choral Society, having received a number of singers from the city, appeared for the first time on June 25 as the Oxford Harmonic Society, and sang Holst's 'I vow to thee, my country,' Parry's 'Pied Piper of Hamelin,' Bantock's 'Oh, can ye sew cushions,' and Besly's arrangement of 'Shenandoah.' The orchestral works included Haydn's Symphony in C, Mozart's 'Eine kleine nacht-musik,' and Grainger's 'Mock Morris.'

IRELAND

After a suspension of four years, the Limerick Choral Festival held a most successful meeting on June 29, when an appropriate sermon was preached by the Lord Bishop of Cashel. The choirs were conducted by the veteran organist of Limerick Cathedral, Mr. Frank Muspratt, who is now in his fortieth year of office.

On July 8, an Irish branch of the Gervase Elwes Fund for Musicians was formed to help cases of sickness or poverty, to assist individuals to equip themselves for a musical career, and in general to co-operate in any movement that will further the cause of music.

Dr. Annie W. Patterson has been appointed Lecturer in Irish Music in University College, Cork, an appointment that has given great satisfaction.

The first public performance of the Irish Army Band (No. 1), conducted by Col. Fritz Brase, at Phoenix Park, Dublin, on July 13, was much appreciated by an enormous concourse of people.

Musical Notes from Abroad

VIENNA

BITTNER'S 'DAS ROSENGÄRTLEIN'

An operatic première at the Staatsoper exactly three days prior to the closing of the house for the summer! Such was the unprecedented fate which fell to Julius Bittner's romantic opera 'Das Rosengärtlein.' Bittner's position is unique among the operatic composers of Austria and Germany. Public valuation of his work ranges from utter condemnation to the enthusiastic approval of those who see in him the coming re-creator of the romantic opera which has all but disappeared since the days of Weber, Marschner, and Lortzing. Indeed, Bittner seems to dream of a renaissance of 'popular opera,' or 'Volksoper,' in the best sense of the term, and his operas (in which he acts as his own very poetic and ingenious librettist) have much in the way of popular appeal. The book of 'Das Rosengärtlein' is based upon an old Austrian legend of the Aggstein, a hill near Vienna. Unhappily Bittner defeats his purpose of providing an example of 'Volksoper.' He weights his simple story with an unnecessary psychological ballast; and his music, convincing and beautiful as it is in the lyric and lighter passages, becomes in its dramatic situations only a reproduction of Wagnerian Musikdrama. Bittner's melodies are sincere and pleasing where he relies on his own resources, but too frequently they pay homage to heterogeneous Italian cantabile in the more passionate and exalted utterances. The orchestral and harmonic treatment is simple and direct, sometimes too much so when the instrumental background is provided solely by sequences and by rather obvious triplets in the wind instruments. A certain monotony prompted by the rather simple rhythmical structure of the score is relieved by the rich colouring of the music given to Fatime, the Arabian courtesan. The composer introduces some ancient Church hymns to suggest the purity of Hroswitha, the heroine. The performance, under Karl Alwin, was very creditable, though never brilliant.

SCHÖNBERG'S NEW WORK

The first performance of Arnold Schönberg's 'Serenade' took place in the house of Dr. Norbert Schwarzmann, a local Mæcenas, before an audience which, although numbering over two hundred people, included almost solely leaders of Vienna's intellectual life—musicians, artists, and scientists. Those who, like the writer, were privileged to attend this performance and a few of the rehearsals, gained an insight into the workings of Schönberg's very idealistic mind, whose creative faculties sought to explore new and, for the composer, unusual ends. The slogan of 'unsentimentalism' so long given out—not by Schönberg himself, perhaps, but by his authorized followers and disciples—is apparently a thing of the past. Indeed, the new 'Serenade,' in parts at least, contains some beautiful and melodic music. Some 'atonalism' remains, but it is 'tonality' applied in a free and masterly manner. The striking feature of this new work of Schönberg's is the return to 'form' which had been foreshadowed in his recent pianoforte compositions. The 'Serenade' is in seven movements—March, Minuet with Trio, Variations, Sonnet (after Petrarca) for a bass voice, Dance Scene, Song without Words, and Finale—and is scored for violin, viola, violoncello, clarinet, bass clarinet, mandolin, and guitar. The manner in which Schönberg treats the last two instruments, so unusual in a chamber music ensemble, is ingenious: they are frequently employed so as to replace the percussion, and lend a fascinating colour to the piece throughout. The 'Song without Words,' with its note of unrestrained and freely-flowing sentiment, is one of the great surprises of the work. Another unusual feature is a new element of humour which speaks from the Dance Scene with its charming Ländler rhythm—indeed, a spirit of humour and optimism permeates the entire 'Serenade.'

INTERESTING SOLOISTS

The unprecedented feat of filling Vienna's largest halls six times within three weeks in the midst of the hot season was achieved by Bronislaw Huberman, whose vogue at Vienna is supreme since the days when he, then a child prodigy, was 'discovered' here. (This season's output of musical child prodigies has again been unusually large.) The pianists of the season have included Alfred Cortôt, Frederic Lamond, Wilhelm Backhaus, and E. Robert Schmitz, a French-American. In the vocal field, Pasquale Amato, the famous Italian baritone, impressed more by his emotional intensity than by his already impaired vocal powers; Helen and Blanche Hodnett, American singers, displayed very good vocal balance in their duet singing; and Frieda Klink, a recitalist from overseas, showed a beautiful contralto voice.

Dr. Ernst Kunwald, a Viennese conductor for many years prominent in American musical affairs, returned to his native city for an authoritative performance of Schumann's E flat Symphony. Dirk Foch, a Dutch conductor, made an auspicious début, which resulted in his appointment as permanent conductor of the Konzertverein series (an honour never before bestowed upon a foreigner) in succession to Ferdinand Löwe. Hugo Knepler, Vienna's most prominent concert-manager, acquitted himself with great credit as conductor of Schubert's 'Unfinished' Symphony.

CZECH OPERA IN THE VERNACULAR

The summer season brought Vienna her first experience of Czech opera in the vernacular, through the performances of the Olmütz Opera Company. The high standard of these productions, musically, histrionically, and scenically, furnished evidence of the deserved esteem in which Czech opera is held in its native country, and was all the more surprising in view of the fact that Olmütz, where the Company has its permanent home, is a small Moravian city of less than thirty thousand inhabitants. Yet this little community maintains an operatic Company which held its own even before the critical metropolitan public of Vienna, and large audiences assembled to hear the performances. These comprised a complete cycle of Smetana's operas, Dvorák's romantic opera 'Rusalka' and 'The Devil and Kate,' besides 'The Dogheaders' ('Psohlavci'), a patriotic and distinctly anti-Austrian opera by Karel Kovarovic, which nevertheless was played before enthusiastic Viennese audiences.

THE MUNICIPAL MUSIC FESTIVAL

Great preparations are now being made for the four weeks' Municipal Music Festival which will open on September 20. The schedule of the Festival includes a large number of premières, such as the first production of Schönberg's music-drama 'Die glückliche Hand'; his new Quintet for wind instruments; chamber music; novelties by Anton Webern, Alban Berg, Paul A. Pisk, Egon Wellesz, and other young Viennese composers; Erich W. Korngold's new Pianoforte Concerto, composed for and to be played by Paul Wittgenstein, the one-armed pianist; the first performance of Gustav Mahler's posthumous Symphony No. 10, and other important works. The Staatsoper will contribute Bittner's 'Das Rosengärtlein,' a complete and newly-staged Mozart cycle; the first production anywhere of 'The Ruins of Athens,' a ballet based on Beethoven melodies, for which Richard Strauss has written the connecting music, after a book by Hofmannsthal; a performance of Molière's 'Le Bourgeois Gentilhomme' with Richard Strauss's music (the original version of 'Ariadne auf Naxos'), and Hugo Wolf's 'Der Corregidor.'

PAUL BECHERT.

Obituary

We regret to record the following deaths:

FREDERICK NIECKS, at Edinburgh, on June 24. He was born on February 3, 1845, at Düsseldorf, where his father was Kapellmeister. He began his career as a violinist, playing a concerto in public when thirteen years old. Ill-health, however, compelled him to abandon concert work a few years later. In 1868 he responded to an invitation from Mr. (now Sir) Alexander Mackenzie, and came to Scotland, where he held an organistship (Dumfries) and worked as a teacher and chamber music player. A strong literary bent, and a good command of English, soon led him to musical journalism, and he became a frequent and valued contributor to the Musical Times and Monthly Musical Record. In 1891 he was elected to the Reid Chair of Music at Edinburgh University. Here he organized a comprehensive scheme of musical education, obtained the admission of women students, and arranged for an elaborate scheme of chamber music concerts. His long and valuable occupancy of the Reid Chair ended in 1914, when he retired. His most recent literary work consisted of a series of articles in the Monthly Musical Record on Schumann, concerned mainly with the biographical side, and containing a great amount of information not hitherto accessible to the general reader. His 'Life of Chopin' has long been a standard work, and his 'Programme Music' was probably the first systematic and comprehensive treatment of the subject, and will always be valued for its matter, even by those who cannot accept the author's conclusions in general.

FRANÇOIS CLÉMENT THÉODORE DUBOIS, at Paris, on June 11. He was born at Rosney on August 24, 1837, and at the age of sixteen entered the Paris Conservatory, where he gained, among many awards, the Grand Prix de Rome. In 1866 he was appointed Maître de Chapelle at St. Clotilde. Later he held a similar post at the Madeleine, where he succeeded Saint-Saëns as organist in 1877. Dubois was professor of harmony and composition at the Conservatoire for many years, and followed Ambroise Thomas as director in 1896. Although he was a prolific composer in many departments, English familiarity with his work is almost confined to his organ music. Much of this had—and, indeed, still has—a wide vogue, thanks to its attractive character and sound musicianship.

JAMES DAVID WHEELER, at the age of sixty-eight. He was organist of St. Luke's, Old Street, E.C., for nearly forty years, and followed Dr. C. W. Pearce, the successor of Henry Smart; honorary organist for a considerable period of the Barnet and District Church Choral Union; and one of the founders of the Northwood Choral Society.

WEBSTER MILLAR, on June 22. He was born in 1874, at Manchester, and received his early training at the Royal Manchester College of Music. After further study with Maurel, he made his first important appearance under Richter in the B minor Mass. He took a prominent part in the Beecham Opera Company's performances, and was a popular figure on the concert platform, the stage, and at Festivals.

Answers to Correspondents

Questions must be of general musical interest. They must be stated simply and briefly, and if several are sent, each must be written on a separate slip. We cannot undertake to reply by post.

S. W. G. T. asks whether, in chanting the Psalms, the final 'ed' is usually sung as a separate syllable.

A.—There is no rule on the subject, but our own view is in favour of such a treatment, on the ground of fitness and dignity. On referring to the Preface of the 'New Cathedral Psalter' we find it stated that 'the Musical Editors share the feelings of the Literary Editors that, as far as possible, it should be treated as a separate syllable.' We do not know which practice is the more usual. Our impression is that the present-day feeling is more and more in favour of the N.C.P. method, though singers of the last generation took the opposite line.

R. W. D.—It is impossible to recommend songs on the slight guidance your letter contains. We know nothing of your voice and capabilities, beyond the fact that you are a young tenor and 'cannot sing sentimental songs' (which is almost a contradiction in terms). Consult our review columns and advertisement pages; go to a good music-seller and explain your needs; and when next in London call at the principal music publishers and browse around.

S. E.—Try Kappey's 'Tutor for Trombone.' Kappey is also, we believe, author of similar works for other brass instruments. Messrs. Boosey are the publishers.

A. W. W.—Play the E flat on the second beat of the bar, as printed.

GUIDA.—(1.) In the example from the Bach Gavotte, your interpretation of the trill is in accordance with the foot-note of the edition. (2.) It will be correct to raise the hands between the chords in the Schumann example.

ARGUMENT.—The letters 'G. P.' in the example you send are the initials of 'General Pause,' and signify a silence, or hold-up, of the whole orchestra at that point.

G. K. B.—(1.) Send the violin to Messrs. W. E. Hill & Sons, 140, New Bond Street, W.1. (2.) For strings for use on board ship in the East, where damp heat is a difficulty, try wire or silk for the E (preferably wire); for the other strings you cannot do better than use the best gut.

GRADUS.—(1.) We cannot spare space in which to tell you 'how to teach and explain breathing to a pupil who knows nothing about it.' Moreover, a little demonstration is worth a column of print. (2.) A comma does not necessarily signify a break. Its effect is to throw a slight emphasis on the accented syllable last met with. But a comma provides a convenient spot at which a breath may be taken if necessary. We do not know the pace of the example you quote, but if it is fairly fast (as it appears to be), we should stop at neither of the four commas.

F. D. M.—For study of the higher positions take Sevcik's 'Violin Method for Beginners,' Op. 6, parts 6 and 7; for more advanced, Op. 7, part 2; for advanced, Op. 1, parts 2 and 3.

X. Y. Z.—(1.) A 'mute' violin can be used with advantage, especially in regard to work for the left hand, but be sure that the 'mute' one is exactly the same size as your regular fiddle. If you want to have the advantages of a 'mute' instrument without going to the expense of one, stuff a handkerchief in the 'f' holes of your violin. It will be practically silent. (2.) For orchestral drumming take Kappey's 'Tutor' (Boosey, 4s.).

W. A. S.—Mozart's Pianoforte Concertos, Liszt's Hungarian Fantasia, and Chopin's Polish Fantasia can all be obtained from Novello.

W. J. G., 'Mesmer,' X. B., and others write, all asking pretty much the same questions. All have composed something—a waltz, song, or what-not; how do they copyright the bantling, and what will the operation cost? Can we tell them of a reliable publisher? (their italics); would it be safe to send the precious manuscript to a publisher before it is copyrighted? and so on.

A.—First, there is no mystery about the matter. You simply send your manuscript to the publisher who deals with that particular kind of work, and await the result. If he declines it, send it to another publisher, and so on, till you have gone through the list. If the work is still on your hands, you may reasonably begin to doubt whether it is as good as you thought it was. The copyright and other rights (mechanical reproduction, &c.) remain yours until you dispose of them. Prior to the Copyright Act of 1911 copyright was effected by the act of publication. To-day, the moment you have created a work it is at once copyrighted automatically, so to speak. You need not be afraid to send your manuscript to a publisher. He is more likely to be an honest man than a rogue, and if he were the latter, he would find something better worth stealing than the ideas of unknown composers. The only warning we think necessary is this: have nothing to do with a publisher who offers to bring out your work and give you a stock of copies, if you pay him to do so. The fairest system, and the one usually adopted, is that in which the composer receives a royalty, either on all copies, or on all copies after an agreed number have been sold. If the work fails, both parties share the loss: the composer loses his labour, the publisher his cost of production. If it is a success, both go on sharing the results.

Many correspondents kindly write to say that the title of the song opening 'Let thy gold be cast in the furnace' is 'Cleansing Fires.' The words are by Adelaide Anne Procter, the music by Virginia Gabriel. The song was published by Hutchings & Romer. A later setting has been made by Cowen, for female voice duet.

CONTENTS.

	PAGE
Cecil James Sharp ... ..	689
Conductors and Conducting.—II. Dramaturgics.
By William Wallace ... ..	690
More about the Larynx. By Granville Humphreys	693
The Critic and the Composer. By Jeffrey Mark ...	693
Ad Libitum. By 'Feste' ... ..	697
'Sonate Pathétique.' By H. Scott-Baker ... ..	701
New Light on late Tudor Composers.—I. William Selby. By W. H. Grattan Flood ... ..	703
The Musician's Bookshelf ... ..	704
The Performance of Elizabethan Church Music. By Heathcote D. Statham ... ..	710
Occasional Notes ... ..	712
New Music ... ..	715
Gramophone Notes. By 'Discus' ... ..	718
Wireless Notes. By 'Caliban' ... ..	719
Church and Organ Music ... ..	720
Royal College of Organists ... ..	720
Consecration of Liverpool Cathedral ... ..	731
Letters to the Editor ... ..	735
Sharps and Flats ... ..	739
Sixty Years Ago ... ..	739
The Amateurs' Exchange ... ..	740
Royal Academy of Music ... ..	740
Royal College of Music ... ..	741
Trinity College of Music ... ..	741
The Associated Board ... ..	741
The British Music Society: Annual Congress	742
Carillon and Choir ... ..	743
Discovery of Palestrina's Birth-date ... ..	743
Music in Public Schools ... ..	744
London Concerts ... ..	744
Opera in London ... ..	744
Competition Festival Record ... ..	746
Music in the Provinces ... ..	747
Music in Ireland ... ..	748
Musical Notes from Abroad ... ..	749
Obituary ... ..	749
Answers to Correspondents ... ..	750

MUSIC.

'Song of Apple Trees.' Four-part Song. By PERCY E. FLETCHER ... ..	721
--	-----

EXTRA SUPPLEMENT given with this Number:
'Lady, lay those frowns aside.' Madrigal for mixed voices.
 By Ernest Halsey.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

To ensure insertion in their proper positions, Advertisements for the next issue should reach the Office, 160, Wardour Street, London, W.1, not later than WEDNESDAY, AUGUST 20 (FIRST POST).

DURING THE LAST MONTH.

Published by NOVELLO & CO., LIMITED.

FLETCHER, PERCY E.—"Song of Apple Trees." Four-part Song. (No. 978, The Musical Times.) 2d.

GERMAN, EDWARD.—"My bonnie lass she smileth." Arranged as a Trio by the Composer. (No. 492, Novello's Octavo Edition of Trios.) 4d.

HULBERT, H. H.—"Breathing for Voice Production." Re-written and brought up to date. (No. 63, Novello's Music Primers.) 3s. Paper boards, 4s.

PALESTRINA.—"Adoramus Te." Motet. Edited with English Words by C. Hylton Stewart. (No. 249, Novello's Short Anthems.) 2d.

PARRY, C. H. H.—"Dear Lord and Father of Mankind." Hymn. (No. 1121, Novello's Parish Choir Book.) 1½d.

RANDOLPH, GRANVILLE.—"A Song of Autumn." Part-Song or Quartet for Male Voices. 3d.

RICHARDSON, A. D.—Baronial March. For Organ. 2s. 6d.

RICHARDSON, MARION.—"Near and Far." Song. For Contralto or Baritone. 2s.

RUSSELL, F. G.—"Roses in December." Sacred Song. For Contralto or Baritone. 2s.

SCHOOL MUSIC REVIEW, No. 386, contains the following music in both notations.—"Fisher-Maiden's Lullaby." Unison Song. Robert T. White. "Acorn Tea." Unison Song. Alec Rowley. Traditional Nursery Rhymes. 2d.

SCHOOL SONGS. Published in two forms. A. Voice Parts in Staff and Tonic Sol-fa Notations, with Piano-forte Accompaniment (8vo). B. Voice Parts only, in Tonic Sol-fa Notation. A. B.

No. 1379. "Gossamer Threads." Unison Song. ALEC ROWLEY 2d. —

No. 1381. "A Fairy Wing." Unison Song. ALEC ROWLEY 2d. —

SILAS, E.—"Song for Spring." Arranged as a Trio. (unaccompanied). (No. 491, Novello's Octavo Edition of Trios.) 3d.

TONIC SOL-FA SERIES:

No. 2451. "Zut! zut! zut." Part-Song for T.T.B.B. EDWARD ELGAR 3d.

No. 2452. "The Wanderer." Part-Song for T.T.B.B. EDWARD ELGAR 3d.

No. 2453. "How beauteous are their feet." Anthem. C. V. STANFORD 2d.

WEBER, C. M. VON.—"Softly sighing." Recitative and Air. From "Der Freischütz." 2s.

WHEELKES, THOMAS.—"O care, thou wilt dispatch me." Madrigal for Five Voices. Edited by H. ELLIOT BUTTON. (No. 104, "The Oriana.") 6d.

WILLIAMS, C. LEE.—"He is a Father of the fatherless." (No. 1133, Novello's Octavo Anthems.) 4d.

REDUCED PRICE.

NOVELLO'S School Songs, Book 188. Popular Christmas Carols. Arranged for Two-part singing by W. G. McNAUGHT. 8d.

Continued on page 752.

DURING THE LAST MONTH—continued.

PUBLISHED FOR

THE H. W. GRAY CO., NEW YORK.

CLOKEY, J. W.—“Mountain Sketches.” For the Organ: 1. “Jagged Peaks in the Starlight.” 2. “Wind in the Pine Trees.” 3. “Canyon Walls.”

FORSYTH, CECIL.—“The Lord’s Prayer.” 10 cents (4d.).

HARDY, EDWARD.—Prelude Elegy. For the Organ.

JAMES, PHILIP.—“Fête.” For the Organ.

STEERE, W. C.—Symphonic Prelude. For the Organ.

THE OFFICE OF THE HOLY COMMUNION.
Set to Music by FREDERICK CAMBRIDGE. Price 8d.
London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

ST. ANDREW’S, HOLBORN. It is desired to increase the size of the Choir. Vacancies exist for ALTOS, TENORS, BASSES (Communicants). Apply, stating experience, to Mr. F. G. M. Ogbourne, Organist and Director of the Choir, 18, Coram Street, Russell Square, W.C.1. A small honorarium of £10 a year will be paid to the new members.

TWO-MANUAL PEDAL ORGAN. 11 Stops.
Perfect condition.—Apply to Lady Haking. Mill Cottage, Bulford, near Salisbury.

FOR SALE.—Set of Norman & Beard PIANO PEDALS. Radiating and Concave. In good order. £5.
J. R. Watkinson, Burnt Yates, Harrogate, Yorks.

NIENDORF GRAND PIANO for SALE.—
Perfect tone and condition. £150, or near offer, for quick sale.
“J.” 39, Lee Park, Blackheath, S.E.3.

NEW PUBLICATIONS

By T. TERTIUS NOBLE.

816. NIGHT. S.A.T.B.
817. TO MY LOVE. T.T.B.B.
818. WHEN I AM DEAD, MY DEAREST. S.A.T.B.
819. SAVE, LORD, OR WE PERISH. S.A.T.B.
820. SAVE, LORD, OR WE PERISH. T.T.B.B.
821. BUT NOW, THUS SAITH THE LORD. S.A.T.B.

Price Fourpence each.

822. MAGNIFICAT AND NUNC DIMITTIS IN B FLAT.
Price Sixpence.

BANKS &amp; SON, MUSIC PUBLISHERS, YORK.

HARVEST ANTHEM.

ALL THY WORKS PRAISE THEE

By T. MEE PATTISON.

Tenor or Treble Solo and Two Choruses.

Price 3d.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

THE MUSICAL TIMES

CHARGES FOR ADVERTISEMENTS:—

	£	s.	d.
Two Lines ... ..	0	3	0
Three Lines ... ..	0	3	4
For every additional Line ... ..	0	0	10
One inch (displayed) ... ..	0	10	0
Half a Column ... ..	2	0	0
A Column ... ..	4	0	0
A Page ... ..	7	10	0

Special Pages (Cover, &amp;c.) by arrangement.

A remittance should be sent with every Advertisement.

JUST PUBLISHED.

EMPIRE SONG BOOK

A COLLECTION OF SUITABLE MUSIC FOR CHILDREN’S FESTIVALS WHICH IS SO ARRANGED THAT IT MAY BE PERFORMED WITH OR WITHOUT ACTIONS.

“SHE STANDS A THOUSAND-WINTERED TREE”

“AN EMPIRE SONG”

AND THE

MEDLEYS

COMPOSED BY

PERCY E. FLETCHER.

(PRICE ONE SHILLING.)

Vocal Parts (Staff and Tonic Sol-fa Notations combined), Sixpence.

Orchestral Parts may be obtained.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

ALBUMS FOR THE ORGAN

PRICE FIVE SHILLINGS AND SIXPENCE EACH. CLOTH, SEVEN SHILLINGS AND SIXPENCE EACH.

No.	No. 1.	No.	No. 5.
1. Interlude ... ..	Th. Dubois	1. Jour of Noces ... ..	J. Stuart Archer
2. Chanson de Matin ... ..	Edward Elgar	2. Festival Prelude on "Ein feste Burg" ... ..	W. Faulkes
3. Fantasia on the old melody "Urbs Beata" ... ..	W. Faulkes	3. Legend ... ..	Harvey Grace
4. There is a green hill far away ... ..	Ch. Gounod	4. Allegretto Pastorale ... ..	H. M. Higgs
5. Marche Triomphale ... ..	Alexandre Guilmant	5. Benediction Nuptiale ... ..	Alfred Hollins
6. Ave Maria ... ..	A. Henselt	6. Sursum Corda ... ..	John N. Ireland
7. Grand Chœur No. 2 ... ..	Alfred Hollins	7. Alla Marcia ... ..	John N. Ireland
8. Andantino in D flat ... ..	Edwin H. Lemare	8. Adagio Cantabile ... ..	Edwin H. Lemare
9. Chanson Triste ... ..	P. Tchaikowsky	9. Fanfare ... ..	J. Lemmens
10. Prelude to "Lohengrin," Act I ... ..	R. Wagner	10. Intermezzo ... ..	B. Luard-Selby
11. Romanza ... ..	W. Wolstenholme	11. Easter Morn ... ..	John E. West
12. Allegretto in E flat ... ..	W. Wolstenholme	12. Finale in B flat ... ..	W. Wolstenholme
No. 2.	No. 3.	No. 4.	No. 6.
1. Chanson de Nuit ... ..	Edward Elgar	1. Nocturne ... ..	Thomas F. Dunhill
2. Alla Marcia ... ..	Myles B. Foster	2. Postludium ... ..	William Faulkes
3. Minuetto ... ..	Alexandre Guilmant	3. Andante Tranquillo ... ..	H. M. Higgs
4. Lied ... ..	H. Hofmann	4. In Springtime ... ..	Alfred Hollins
5. Barcarolle ... ..	H. Hofmann	5. Madrigal ... ..	Edwin H. Lemare
6. Spring Song ... ..	Alfred Hollins	6. Triumphant March ... ..	J. Lemmens
7. The Curfew ... ..	Edward J. Horsman	7. Allegro in B flat ... ..	F. Mendelssohn-Bartholdy
8. Pastorale in E ... ..	Edwin H. Lemare	8. Choral Prelude on "Rockingham" ... ..	C. Hubert H. Parry
9. Ave Maria d'Arcadelt ... ..	Franz Liszt	9. Præludium Pastorale ... ..	J. Stainer
10. Cantique d'Amour ... ..	Theo. Wendt	10. Romance in F minor ... ..	Tschaikowsky
11. The Seraph's Strain ... ..	W. Wolstenholme	11. Romance in A flat ... ..	H. Sandiford Turner
12. Le Carillon ... ..	W. Wolstenholme	12. Festal Commemoration ... ..	John E. West
No. 3.	No. 4.	No. 5.	No. 6.
1. Scherzo in A flat ... ..	Edward C. Bairstow	1. Funeral March (Pianoforte Sonata, Op. 26) ... ..	Beethoven
2. Melody ... ..	S. Coleridge-Taylor	2. Blest are they that mourn (Requiem) ... ..	Brahms
3. Serenade ... ..	H. Hofmann	3. Funeral March (Pianoforte Sonata, Op. 35) ... ..	Chopin
4. Bridal March ... ..	Alfred Hollins	4. Funeral March ... ..	William Faulkes
5. Berceuse ... ..	Edwin H. Lemare	5. Funeral March ("Saul") ... ..	Handel
6. Melodie in E ... ..	S. Rachmaninoff	6. I know that my Redeemer liveth ("Messiah") ... ..	Handel
7. Aubade ... ..	A. Strelezki	7. Funeral March ("Lieder ohne Worte") ... ..	Mendelssohn
8. Nocturne in C sharp minor ... ..	P. Tchaikowsky	8. O rest in the Lord ("Elijah") ... ..	Mendelssohn
9. Procession to the Minister ("Lohengrin") ... ..	R. Wagner	9. Marche Solennelle ... ..	Schubert
10. Passacaglia ... ..	John E. West	10. Marche Funèbre ... ..	Tschaikowsky
11. Fantasia upon the Plain-song Melody "Ad cœnam Agni" ... ..	Healey Willan	11. Finale from "Symphonie Pathétique" ... ..	Tschaikowsky
12. Allegretto in A flat ... ..	W. Wolstenholme	12. Lament ... ..	John E. West
No. 3.	No. 4.	No. 5.	No. 6.
1. Arietta ... ..	S. Coleridge-Taylor	1. Chorale Prelude, "In dulci jubilo" ... ..	J. S. Bach
2. Souvenir de Printemps ... ..	Joseph Holbrooke	2. Pastoral Symphony ("Christmas Oratorio") ... ..	J. S. Bach
3. Andante in D ... ..	Alfred Hollins	3. Quem Vidistis, Pastores ... ..	W. T. Best
4. Pavane in A ... ..	Bernard Johnson	4. Venite in Bethlehem ... ..	W. T. Best
5. Harmonies du Soir ... ..	Sigfrid Karg-Elert	5. December—Christmas Morn ... ..	Frederic H. Cowen
6. An Eton Memorial March ... ..	C. H. Lloyd	6. Fantasia on Old Christmas Carols ... ..	William Faulkes
7. Allegro alla Marcia ... ..	A. L. Peace	7. For unto us a Child is born ("Messiah") ... ..	Handel
8. Visione ... ..	J. Rheinberger	8. Pastoral ... ..	Theodore Kullak
9. Chant sans Paroles ... ..	P. Tchaikowsky	9. Chorus of Shepherds ... ..	J. Lemmens
10. Prelude to Act III. ("Die Meistersinger") ... ..	R. Wagner	10. Christmas Pastorale ... ..	Gustav Merkel
11. Allegro Pomposo ... ..	John E. West	11. A Christmas Pastoral ... ..	B. Luard-Selby
12. Canzona ... ..	W. Wolstenholme	12. Fantasy on Two Christmas Carols ("The First Nowell" and "Good King Wenceslas") ... ..	John E. West

SHORT PRELUDES FOR THE ORGAN

PRICE ONE SHILLING AND SIXPENCE EACH BOOK.

These Short Preludes are intended for use chiefly as Introductory Voluntaries to Divine Service, more especially in those churches where the time allowed for such is, of necessity, somewhat limited.

No.	BOOK I.	No.	BOOK IV.
1. Andante Grazioso ... ..	Thomas Adams	1. "Elevation"—Andante e Legato ... ..	Thomas Adams
2. Andante ... ..	W. G. Alcock	2. Andante Religioso ... ..	Myles B. Foster
3. Largamente ... ..	George J. Bennett	3. "Simplicity"—Andante ... ..	Barry M. Gilholy
4. Andante Religioso ... ..	Myles B. Foster	4. Largamente ... ..	R. G. Hailing
5. Andantino ... ..	Alfred Hollins	5. "Dialogue"—Andante Grazioso ... ..	Charles H. Lloyd
6. Adagio Cantabile ... ..	Alfred Hollins	6. Andantino ... ..	Arthur W. Marchant
7. Larghetto ... ..	Charles J. May	7. Con Moto Moderato ... ..	William Sewell
8. Andante con Moto ... ..	John E. West	8. Andante Amabile ... ..	William Sewell
9. Andantino quasi Allegretto ... ..	John E. West	9. Andante ... ..	Clement M. Spurling
10. Andante ... ..	W. Wolstenholme	10. Andante Sostenuto ... ..	F. Cunningham Woods
No.	BOOK II.	No.	BOOK V.
1. Andante con Moto ... ..	Thomas Adams	1. "Invocation"—Andante Grazioso ... ..	Thomas Adams
2. Con Moto ... ..	W. G. Alcock	2. Andante con Moto ... ..	Percy E. Fletcher
3. Moderato ... ..	H. A. Chambers	3. Poco Adagio ... ..	Myles B. Foster
4. Marziale, poco Lento ... ..	Myles B. Foster	4. Andante Espressivo ... ..	Ignace Gibsons
5. Moderato ... ..	Alfred Hollins	5. Adagio ... ..	Alfred Hollins
6. Andantino ... ..	Alfred Hollins	6. Poco Lento ... ..	Charles H. Lloyd
7. Adagio ... ..	Charles J. May	7. Andante Dolente ... ..	Arthur W. Marchant
8. "Hymnus"—Andante e Sostenuto ... ..	John E. West	8. Andantino con Tenerezza ... ..	William Sewell
9. Andante Serioso ... ..	John E. West	9. Andante con Moto ... ..	Clement M. Spurling
10. Adagio ... ..	W. Wolstenholme	10. Adagio Molto ... ..	F. Cunningham Woods
No.	BOOK III.	No.	BOOK VI.
1. Moderato e Legato ... ..	Thomas Adams	1. Dolente ... ..	Edmund T. Chipp
2. Moderato ... ..	W. G. Alcock	2. Andante Sostenuto ... ..	Myles B. Foster
3. Andante con Moto ... ..	George J. Bennett	3. Andantino ... ..	R. G. Hailing
4. Andante ... ..	H. A. Chambers	4. Con Moto ... ..	Alfred Hollins
5. Grazioso molto Espressivo ... ..	Myles B. Foster	5. "Communion"—Cantabile ... ..	J. Lemmens
6. "Song without Words"—Con Moto ... ..	Alfred Hollins	6. Andante Religioso ... ..	Arthur W. Marchant
7. Anjante ... ..	Alfred Hollins	7. Lento ... ..	Charles J. May
8. Andante Dolente ... ..	John E. West	8. Larghetto ... ..	Albert Robins
9. Andante Pastorale ... ..	John E. West	9. Adagio e Mesto ... ..	William Sewell
10. Adagio ... ..	W. Wolstenholme	10. Andante Affetuoso ... ..	William Sewell

HARVEST FESTIVAL MUSIC.

CANTATAS.

A GOLDEN HARVEST

FOR TENOR AND BASS SOLI AND CHORUS
WITH HYMNS TO BE SUNG BY THE CONGREGATION

THE WORDS AND HYMNS SELECTED AND WRITTEN BY

H. KNIGHT

THE MUSIC BY

THOMAS ADAMS.

Price One Shilling and Sixpence.

Tonic Sol-fa, 1s.; Words only, 9s. 6d. per 100.

THE RAINBOW OF PEACE

FOR TENOR AND BASS SOLI, CHORUS, AND ORGAN

THE MUSIC BY

THOMAS ADAMS.

Price One Shilling and Sixpence.

Words only, 9s. 6d. per 100.

HARVEST-TIDE

FOR TENOR AND BASS SOLI, CHORUS, AND ORGAN
OR SMALL ORCHESTRA

THE MUSIC BY

HUGH BLAIR.

Price One Shilling and Sixpence; Tonic Sol-fa, One Shilling.

Words only, 6s. 6d. per 100.

Full Score and Orchestral Parts can be hired.

HARVEST CANTATA

FOR CHORUS, SEMI-CHORUS, AND ORGAN.

THE WORDS SELECTED AND WRITTEN BY

J. F. WALLER

THE MUSIC BY

G. M. GARRETT.

Price One Shilling and Sixpence.

Tonic Sol-fa, 8d. Words only, 6s. 6d. per 100; or 3d. each with Music to the Hymns. Full Score and Orchestral Parts can be hired.

RUTH

FOR SOPRANO, CONTRALTO, AND BASS SOLI
AND CHORUS

THE WORDS BY

E. OXENFORD

THE MUSIC BY

ALFRED R. GAUL.

Price Three Shillings; Paper boards, Four Shillings.

Tonic Sol-fa, 1s. Choruses only, 1s. 6d. Book of Words, 6s. 6d. per 100.

Full Score and Orchestral parts can be hired.

HARVEST CANTATA

FOR SOPRANO (OR TENOR) AND CONTRALTO (OR BARITONE) SOLI AND CHORUS

THE WORDS BY

R. D. BETJEMANN

THE MUSIC BY

JULIUS HARRISON.

Price One Shilling and Sixpence.

Tonic Sol-fa, 1s.; Words only, 6s. 6d. per 100.

SONG OF THANKSGIVING

FOR SOPRANO, TENOR, AND BASS (OR CONTRALTO)
SOLI AND CHORUS.

WITH HYMNS TO BE SUNG BY THE CONGREGATION

THE WORDS WRITTEN AND ARRANGED BY

S. WENSLEY

THE MUSIC BY

J. H. MAUNDER.

Price Two Shillings and Sixpence;

Paper boards, Three Shillings and Sixpence.

Tonic Sol-fa, 1s.; Words only, 12s. 6d. per 100;

String Parts, price 13s. 6d.; Wind Parts, 21s. 5d.; Full Score, MS.

THE JUBILEE CANTATA

FOR SOLO VOICES, CHORUS, AND ORCHESTRA

THE MUSIC BY

C. M. WEBER.

Price One Shilling and Sixpence.

Paper boards, Two Shillings and Sixpence.

Words only, 9s. 6d. per 100.

String Parts, 12s.; Wind Parts, 9s. 8d.; Full Score on hire.

SEED-TIME AND HARVEST

FOR SOPRANO AND TENOR SOLI AND CHORUS

THE MUSIC BY

JOHN E. WEST.

Price Three Shillings. Tonic Sol-fa, 1s. 6d.

Words only, 6s. 6d. per 100; or 3d. each with Music to the Hymns.

Orchestral Parts can be hired.

A HARVEST SONG

FOR SOPRANO SOLO AND CHORUS

THE WORDS BY

J. BENNETT.

THE MUSIC BY

C. LEE WILLIAMS.

Price Two Shillings and Sixpence.

Words only, 6s. 6d. per 100.

String Parts, 9s. 9d.; Full Score and Wind Parts, MS.

HYMNS AND CAROLS.

BARNBY, J.—Come, ye thankful people, come ... ..	1½d.
Harvest-tide thanksgiving, The. (Tonic Sol-fa, 1½d.) ...	2d.
Words only, per 100	2s.
Let all our brethren join in one ... ..	1½d.
Words only, per 100	3s.
Lord of the harvest, Thee we hail (Two Versions) each	3d.
O Lord of heaven and earth and sea ... ..	1½d.
Praise, O praise, our God and King ... ..	3d.
Sing to the Lord a joyful song ... ..	3d.
Sower went forth sowing, The. (Tonic Sol-fa, 1½d.) ...	2d.
BUNNETT, ED.—Sing to the Lord a joyful song ... ..	1½d.
CRAMENT, J. M.—Sowing and reaping (Carol) ... ..	2d.
Words only, per 100	2s.
GILBERT, B.—Come, ye thankful people, come ... ..	1½d.

HARVEY, W. C.—We thank Thee Lord for this fair earth (Children's voices) (Staff and Sol-fa Notations) ... ..	1½d.
HERVEY, F. A. J.—Make melody within your hearts (Carol)	2d.
LEE, T.—King and Ruler of Creation ... ..	4d.
LOWE, A.—Holy is the seed-time (Carol) ... ..	2d.
Words only, per 100	3s.
MAUNDER, J. H.—Harvest Hymn of praise, A. (Tonic Sol-fa, 1½d.) ... ..	3d.
Words only, per 100	3s.
Joy of Harvest, The. (Tonic Sol-fa, 1½d.) ... ..	3d.
Words only, per 100	3s.
STIRLING, E.—Now Autumn strews on every plain ... ..	2d.
TOZER, F.—Lord of the rich and golden grain ... ..	3d.
Words only, per 100	3s.
TWELVE HYMNS selected from The Hymnary ... ..	1½d.

NOVELLO'S HARVEST ANTHEMS

SELECTED LIST.

LET THE PEOPLE PRAISE THEE. By PERCY E. FLETCHER.

Price Twopence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

THOMAS ADAMS

ALL THY WORKS PRAISE THEE

Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Threepence.

IT IS A GOOD THING TO GIVE THANKS

Price Twopence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

W. G. ALCOCK

GIVE EAR, O YE HEAVENS

Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

E. C. BAIRSTOW

I WILL GREATLY REJOICE

Price Fourpence.

J. BARNBY

THE EYES OF ALL WAIT UPON THEE

Price Twopence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

HUGH BLAIR

OH, BRING TO THE LORD

Price Fourpence.

A. HERBERT BREWER

LET THE PEOPLE PRAISE THEE

Price Twopence.

EDWARD BUNNETT

BLESSED BE THOU, LORD GOD

Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

O CLAP YOUR HANDS

Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

PERCY C. BUCK

GOD BE MERCIFUL UNTO US

For Boys' Voices.
Price Fourpence.

H. A. CHAMBERS

IF YE WALK IN MY STATUTES

Price Twopence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

EDWARD ELGAR

FEAR NOT, O LAND

Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Threepence.

MYLES B. FOSTER

PRAISE WAITETH FOR THEE, O GOD

Price Twopence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

ALFRED R. GAUL

O BE JOYFUL IN THE LORD

Price Twopence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

A. M. GOODHART

LET US NOW FEAR THE LORD

Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Threepence.

CUTHBERT HARRIS

AND GOD SAID

Price Twopence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

SING A SONG OF PRAISE

Price Twopence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

ALFRED HOLLINS

GOD THE ALL-FATHERLY

Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Threepence.

ALBERT LOWE

THE EARTH IS THE LORD'S

Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Threepence.

ARTHUR W. MARCHANT

I WILL MAGNIFY THEE

Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

GEORGE C. MARTIN

THUS SAITH THE LORD GOD

Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Threepence.

E. W. NAYLOR

I WILL CAUSE THE SHOWER

Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

J. VARLEY ROBERTS

BLESS THE LORD THY GOD

Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

I WILL MAGNIFY THEE

Price Fourpence.

BRUCE STEANE

COME, YE THANKFUL PEOPLE, COME

Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

HERBERT W. WAREING

THE LORD GOD PLANTED A GARDEN

Price Twopence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

HAROLD E. WATTS

THE GOD OF ABRAHAM PRAISE

Price Twopence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

JOHN E. WEST

PRAISE TO GOD, IMMORTAL PRAISE

Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

FATHER OF MERCIES, GOD OF LOVE

Arranged for Boys' or Female Voices.

Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Threepence.

W. WOLSTENHOLME

O THAT MEN WOULD PRAISE THE LORD

Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

JUST PUBLISHED.

CHORALES

HARMONIZED BY

JOHANN SEBASTIAN BACH

COLLECTED AND ARRANGED IN MELODIC ORDER

BY

H. ELLIOT BUTTON.

This Collection of Chorales harmonized by Bach contains, it is believed, all those that he arranged for voices. It includes also an Index by means of which any Chorale can easily be found if the first few notes of the melody are known.

Price ... .. Cloth, Ten Shillings and Sixpence.

SOME PRESS OPINIONS.

DAILY TELEGRAPH.

"The task of making this noble collection has been undertaken by Mr. H. Elliot Button, who has made the volume particularly useful to organists and choirmasters by arranging the chorales in melodic order and providing an ingenious Melodic Index by means of which a particular Chorale may be found in a moment. Organists, indeed, may find themselves in clover by exploring the latest publications of this house."

BIRMINGHAM POST.

"The compiler of this volume is H. Elliot Button, who has made an ingenious musical index based on the first note of each melody. The system also allows of all the harmonizations of a melody being kept together, and the student of Bach will find this an extremely interesting volume."

DAILY MAIL.

"Mr. H. Elliot Button is a hard and conscientious worker on behalf of music. His research work is invaluable, and his latest work of compilation has resulted in the collection of 'Chorales Harmonized by Johann Sebastian Bach' which appears to be the first complete and comprehensive edition in one volume . . . . The Melodic Index which Mr. Button has introduced, in addition to the usual indices, shows remarkable ingenuity. By recourse to this unique invention no difficulty is experienced in immediately satisfying one's requirements . . . . There is evidence of great painstaking labour in this work, and apart from its value as a work of reference, the collection is redolent of melodic and harmonic wealth which will be found useful by pianists and organists for many and varied purposes."

YORKSHIRE POST.

"The chorales are most clearly printed on good paper, and the book is one that will commend itself to all church organists."

ABERDEEN PRESS AND JOURNAL.

"A complete and reliable collection of chorales harmonized by Bach has long been needed. It now appears in a handsome edition published by Novello. No longer need the student laboriously plough through the oratorios, the cantatas, and the motets in search of the various harmonizations of this or that chorale. He will find them all in Mr. Button's book, together with those chorales used by Bach in works no longer extant, but which have been accepted as authentic upon the evidence of Bach's greatest son . . . . The present volume is invaluable; to the student a real boon, and a source of endless pleasure."

SUNDAY MERCURY.

Messrs. Novello have given to the world a wonderful book. J. S. Bach was, is, and ever will remain the most wonderful of all the great masters. The book is collected and arranged in melodic order by H. Elliot Button, who has indeed done the work with competence and amazing thoroughness."

YORKSHIRE HERALD.

"The collection is admirably arranged; a chronological index of titles, an ingenious melodic index, invented by the author, combined with excellent type and binding make it a handsome volume."

TABLET.

"Mr. Elliot Button has become our benefactor in giving us a fine folio edition of the Bach chorales on a very convenient plan. The melodic index is so contrived that even when you have completely forgotten the words of a particular chorale it is soon hunted down. This well-printed volume is handsomely bound in cloth gilt."

CHURCH TIMES.

"The Bach lover will be delighted to add this fine compilation to his music library."

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

"Such settings as these cannot do otherwise than tend to popularise the Church Service."—Musical Standard, June 6th, 1891.
 "Good, effective, easy, and dignified."—Musical Times, April 1, 1891.
 "Admirably adapted to meet the requirements of the majority of choirs and congregations." "Deserve extensive recognition and use."
 —Musical News, September 4 and 25, 1891.
 Also recommended by the Guardian, Church Times, &c., &c.

POPULAR CHURCH MUSIC

BY

J. H. MAUNDER

HARVEST ANTHEMS.

Staff	Tonic
Notation.	Sol-fa.
4d.	3d.
4d.	3d.
4d.	3d.

Sing to the Lord of Harvest ... ..	4d.	3d.
While the earth remaineth ... ..	4d.	3d.
Blessed be the Name of the Lord ... ..	4d.	3d.

SERVICES.

SERVICE IN G ... ..	2s.	1s. 4d.
---------------------	-----	---------

Or, separately:—

Te Deum ... ..	4d.	3d.
Benedicite, omnia Opera ... ..	3d.	3d.
Benedictus ... ..	3d.	3d.
Jubilate ... ..	4d.	3d.
Office for the Holy Communion ... ..	10d.	8d.
Pater Noster from the above ... ..	3d.	3d.
Amen ditto ... ..	1½d.	1½d.
Magnificat and Nunc dimittis ... ..	4d.	3d.

SERVICE IN CHANT FORM (No. 1) ... ..	1s. 4d.	10d.
--------------------------------------	---------	------

Or, separately:—

Te Deum, &c., with Kyrie ... ..	4d.	3d.
Office for the Holy Communion ... ..	8d.	6d.
Magnificat and Nunc dimittis ... ..	4d.	3d.
Te Deum in B flat ... ..	4d.	3d.
Magnificat and Nunc dimittis in C (partly Unison) ... ..	4d.	2d.
Magnificat and Nunc dimittis in D ... ..	4d.	3d.

ORGAN.

Voix Seraphique (for Recitals) ... ..	2s. 5d.	—
---------------------------------------	---------	---

CHURCH CANTATA.

Penitence, Pardon, and Peace (for general use) ... ..	2s.	1s. 4d.
---	-----	---------

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

A VALUABLE BOOK FOR TEACHERS AND STUDENTS.

TECHNIQUE

AND

EXPRESSION

IN

PIANOFORTE PLAYING

BY

FRANKLIN TAYLOR.

EXTRACT FROM PREFACE.

In the course of my experience as a teacher of the pianoforte, an experience extending over many years, certain ideas have from time to time suggested themselves to me which have proved useful—to myself, as enabling me to express more clearly that which I desired my pupils to understand, and to my pupils, as tending to facilitate their comprehension of the various difficulties they have had to encounter, at the same time leading them to perceive the most practical means of overcoming them, and thus accelerating their general rate of progress.

These suggestions relate to both the mechanical and intellectual sides of the study of pianoforte-playing, or briefly, to Technique and Expression, the chief matters implied by the first of these terms being the production of various qualities of tone, the choice of suitable fingering, and the best methods of attacking certain difficulties; while the second, which may perhaps be more aptly designated the means of expression, includes rhythm, phrasing, variety and gradation of tone, the use of the pedals, et cetera.

WITH NUMEROUS MUSICAL EXAMPLES FROM THE WORKS OF THE GREAT MASTERS.

PRICE, CLOTH GILT, SEVEN SHILLINGS AND SIXPENCE NET.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

NATIONAL INSTITUTE EDITION

OF THE

WORKS OF British Blind Composers

PUBLISHED FOR THE

NATIONAL INSTITUTE FOR THE BLIND

(Registered under the Blind Persons Act, 1920)

BY

RYALLS &amp; JONES, LTD.,

107, GRANGE ROAD, BIRKENHEAD.

"Teachers all over the land should make them selves thoroughly acquainted with the Edition."

MR. ERNEST FOWLES, F.R.A.M., in The Music Teacher.

"Many of the greatest Organ Recitalists of the day, including Mr. Herbert Walton, Mr. H. L. Balfour, Mr. Clarence Eddy, Mr. Arthur Meale, Mr. H. F. Ellingford, and Dr. Prendergast, are including the Organ numbers very frequently in their programmes."—Musical Standard.

LONDON AGENTS:

EVANS &amp; Co. (Wells Castle), LTD.,

72, WELLS STREET, OXFORD STREET, W.1.

SEND FOR CATALOGUE.

The Composer, "Kilbirnie" Barnstaple, will send Organists a Specimen of each Anthem for 1s.

OVER SEVEN MILLION COPIES OF CALEB SIMPER'S Compositions in Church Music now sold.

NEW HARVEST ANTHEMS, Etc.

COMPOSED BY CALEB SIMPER.

*REJOICE WITH THANKSGIVING ... ..	New	4d.
Fine telling Solo and most attractive Choruses.
*RENDER THANKS AND PRAISE ... ..	10th Edit.	4d.
*REJOICE IN ALL THE GOOD THINGS ... ..	11th Edit.	4d.
Contains imitative parts and rich modulations.
*SING FORTH HIS PRAISE ... ..	10th Edit.	4d.
*BE THANKFUL UNTO HIM ... ..	9th Edit.	5d.
*A BOUNTIFUL HARVEST ... ..	5th 1000	4d.
*LET EVERY THING PRAISE THE LORD ... ..	6th Edit.	4d.
*THY BOUNTIFUL GIFTS ... ..	5th Edit.	8d.
Short Work. Solos and Choruses. Occupies about 18 minutes.
No. II VOLUNTARY BOOK ... ..	5th Edit.	2s.
NEW No. 12 VOLUNTARY BOOK ... ..	3rd Edit.	2s.
Seventeen pieces in each on Two Staves with Pedal part indicated.

Those marked * are also issued in Tonic Sol-fa.
 London: A. WEEKES & Co., 14, Hanover Street, Regent Street, W.1.
 Chicago, U.S.A.: CLAYTON F. SUMMY Co., 429, S. Wabash Ave.

These Compositions are exceptionally Melodious, Interesting, and effective. Have attained world-wide appreciation.

POPULAR HARVEST ANTHEMS.

COMPOSED BY EDWYN A. CLARE.

*Thou Crownest the Year ... ..	30th 1000	4d.
*Sing unto God with Thanksgiving ... ..	35th 1000	6d.
*How great is His Goodness ... ..	26th 1000	4d.
*The Fruit of Thy Works ... ..	23rd 1000	6d.
*He gives us Fruitful Seasons ... ..	12th 1000	6d.
*The Eyes of all wait upon Thee ... ..	71st 1000	4d.
Sung at a Festival of 1,500 voices at Newcastle-on-Tyne.
Fear not, O Land ... ..	10th 1000	4d.
*Sing Praises to His Name ... ..	15th 1000	4d.
*O Lord, how manifold are Thy Works ... ..	10th 1000	6d.
Praise the Lord, O Jerusalem ... ..	48th 1000	4d.
Sung at Choral Festivals. Wem and Downpatrick Cathedral.
*All Thy works shall praise Thee ... ..	5th 1000	4d.
*The blessings of Peace ... ..	5th 1000	4d.
Favourite MAGNIFICAT and NUNC DIMITTIS in D ... ..	31st 1000	6d.
Full of flowing melody and effect. Sung at a Choral Festival.

Those marked * may also be had in Tonic Sol-fa.
 London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.
 New York: THE H. W. GRAY Co., Sole Agents for the U.S.A.

COMPETITION FESTIVAL MUSIC

PUBLISHED BY NOVELLO & CO., LTD.

VIOLIN SOLOS WITH PIANOFORTE ACCOMPANIMENT.

	s. d.		s. d.
BREWER, A. H. Auf Wiedersehen ... ..	3 0	MACCUNN, H. Romance in G ... ..	3 0
CARSE, A. Suite in four movements ... ..	4 0	MACKENZIE, A. C. Benedictus ... ..	3 0
COLERIDGE-TAYLOR, S. Ballade in D minor ... ..	3 0	— Distant Chimes (Op. 89) ... ..	3 0
— Four Characteristic Waltzes (Op. 22) ... ..	4 6	— Saltarello ... ..	3 0
COWEN, F. H. Minuet d'Amour ... ..	3 0	— Zingaresca (Op. 37, No. 1) ... ..	3 0
DAVIES, H. WOLFORD. Solemn Melody ... ..	2 3	MARKS, J. C. Rêverie ... ..	3 0
ELGAR, E. Chanson de Matin (Op. 15, No. 1) ... ..	3 0	NESVERA, J. Berceuse Bohémienne ... ..	1 6
— Chanson de Nuit (Op. 15, No. 2) ... ..	2 3	NEWTON, E. Eight Easy Melodies ... ..	4 6
— Mazurka (Op. 10, No. 1) ... ..	3 0	PARRY, C. H. H. Bourrée (Suite in F, Lady Radnor's Suite) ... ..	2 3
GERMAN, E. Bourrée and Gigue (Much Ado About Nothing) ... ..	4 0	— Capriccioso (Suite in D) ... ..	2 3
— Pavane (Romeo and Juliet) ... ..	3 0	— Twelve Short Pieces, in 3 sets ... ..	each set 4 0
— Three Dances (Henry VIII.) ... ..	4 6	RAFF, Cavatina ... ..	1 6
GOUNOD. Julex from "Mors et Vita" ... ..	3 0	REED, W. H. A la Campagne ... ..	3 0
HAYNES, BATTISON. Idyll ... ..	3 0	SCHUMANN. Träumerei ... ..	1 6
HOLBROOKE, J. Souvenir de Printemps (Op. 23, No. 6) ... ..	3 0	SITT, H. Bunte Blätter (twelve easy pieces, in 4 books) ... ..	each book 3 0
IRELAND, J. Bagatelle ... ..	3 0	WARNER, H. W. Elegie ... ..	2 3
LEMARE, E. H. Andantino ... ..	3 0	WOLSTENHOLME, W. Allegretto ... ..	2 3
LLOYD, C. H. Six Easy Pieces ... ..	4 6

PIANOFORTE SOLOS.

	s. d.		s. d.
ARENSKY, A. Prelude in F minor (Op. 42, No. 1) ... ..	3 0	LANGE, G. Two Hungarian Dances (Op. 266):
— Romance in A flat (Op. 42, No. 2) ... ..	3 0	1. Isteni Czárdás ... ..	2 3
BACH. Bourrée in C ... ..	2 3	2. Rozsabakar Czárdás ... ..	2 3
— Gavotte in B minor from Violin Sonata (Saint-Saëns) ... ..	2 0	MENDELSSOHN. Perpetuum mobile (Op. 119) ... ..	3 0
BEETHOVEN. Andante in F (Klindworth) ... ..	3 0	— Prelude and Fugue in E minor (Klindworth) ... ..	3 0
— Two Rondos (Op. 51, No. 1 in C, No. 2 in G) (Klindworth)	3 0	— Scherzo in G minor from Octet (Op. 20) (Klindworth) ... ..	3 0
— No. 1, 2s. 3d.: No. 2 ... ..	3 0	RUBINSTEIN. Barcarolle (Op. 30) ... ..	2 3
COLERIDGE-TAYLOR, S. Valse de la Reine ... ..	2 3	— Melody in F ... ..	1 6
DALCROZE, JACQUES. Four Characteristic Dances ... ..	3 0	SAINT-SAËNS. Gavotte in C minor ... ..	2 3
ESIPOFF, S. Ballade. G minor ... ..	3 0	— Mazurka in G minor ... ..	3 0
— Cantique d'Amour ... ..	3 0	SCHUBERT. Impromptu in B flat (Klindworth) ... ..	3 0
FLETCHER, PERCY E. Valse Lyrique ("Smile of Spring") ... ..	2 3	SCHUMANN. Arabesque in C major (Op. 18) ... ..	1 6
HANDEL. Aria con Variazioni ("The Harmonious Blacksmith") (Klindworth) ... ..	2 3	— Three Romances (Op. 28) ... ..	1 6
— Fugue in E minor (Klindworth) ... ..	2 3	SCOTT-BAKER, H. Pantomime ... ..	3 0
HAYDN. Andante con Variations in F minor (Klindworth) ... ..	3 0	SPINDLER, F. Husarenritt (Op. 140) ... ..	3 0
HENSELT, A. Si oiseau j'étais, A toi je volerais! (Op. 2, No. 5) (Pachmann) ... ..	2 3	STRELEZKI. Miniature ... ..	2 3
— Wiegenlied (Op. 45) (Chanson de Berceau) (Pachmann) ... ..	2 3	— Valse Impromptu ... ..	2 3
HOFMANN, H. From Golden Days (Op. 34, No. 3) ... ..	1 6	TSCHAIKOWSKY. Marche Militaire ... ..	3 0
— Puck (Op. 37, No. 9) ... ..	2 3	— Valse Scherzo in A major ... ..	3 0
HUMMEL, J. N. Rondo in E flat (Op. 11) (Klindworth) ... ..	3 0	WEBER. Rondo brillant (E flat) (Op. 62) (Klindworth) ... ..	3 0
— Rondo in B minor (Op. 109) (Klindworth) ... ..	3 0	WEBSTER, ERIC. Vignettes (Three Pieces) ... ..	3 0
		WENDT, T. Cantique d'Amour ... ..	2 3
		WEST, A. H. Toccata ... ..	3 0

SONGS.

SOPRANO.	s. d.	TENOR.	s. d.
DVORÁK. Invocation ... ..	2 0	FARRAR, E. O Mistress Mine ... ..	2 0
ELGAR, E. Oh soft was the song ... ..	2 0	MACKENZIE, A. C. While my lady sleepeth ... ..	1 6
FARRAR, E. Brittany ... ..	1 6	PARRY, C. H. H. God breaketh the battle ... ..	2 0
MACKENZIE, A. C. Cross and Crown ... ..	2 0	SOMERVILLE, R. Invocation to the Dawn ... ..	2 0
PURCELL. Evening Hymn ... ..	2 0	WAGNER. Walter's Prize Song ... ..	2 0
CONTRALTO.		BASS.
COLERIDGE-TAYLOR, S. Soul's Expression ... ..	4 0	BENEDICT. Rage, thou angry storm ... ..	2 0
DVORÁK. Inflammatus ... ..	2 0	DALE, B. J. O mistress mine ... ..	2 0
ELGAR, E. A child asleep ... ..	2 0	GREENE, M. Like the young God of wine ... ..	2 0
GLUCK. Thou art gone, alas, for ever ... ..	2 0	HARTY, HAMILTON. Homeward ... ..	2 0
PARRY, C. H. H. Ballad of Meshullemeth ... ..	2 0	SMYTH, E. M. Chryssilla ... ..	2 0

Specimens of every kind of music will be forwarded on application. To ensure a satisfactory selection, the Syllabus of the last Festival should accompany the request.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

COMPETITION FESTIVAL MUSIC

PUBLISHED BY NOVELLO & CO., LTD.

MIXED VOICES.

BAIRSTOW, E. C. Dawn of Song, The ... .. 4d.	McEWEN, J. B. Let me the canakin clink ... .. 6d.
BANTOCK, GRANVILLE. Awake, awake ... .. 4d.	Links o' love, The... .. 2d.
Grass of Parnassus ... .. 4d.	PARRY, C. H. H. Music, when soft voices die ... .. 3d.
On Himalay... .. 4d.	My delight and thy delight ... .. 4d.
BRAHMS. Dirge of Darthula, The (Op. 42, No. 3) ... .. 6d.	Sweet day, so cool... .. 3d.
COLERIDGE-TAYLOR. Evening Star, The ... .. 2d.	There rolls the deep ... .. 3d.
Lee Shore, The ... .. 4d.	REED, W. H. My lady fell a-sighing ... .. 4d.
CORNELIUS, P. Hero's rest (Op. 19) ... .. 4d.	SHAW, GEOFFREY. Who would true valour see ... .. 4d.
O death! thou art the tranquil night (Op. 11, No. 1) ... .. 6d.	STANFORD, C. V. Corydon, arise ... .. 4d.
ELGAR, E. After many a dusty mile (arr.) ... .. 4d.	Phœbe ... .. 4d.
Death on the hills ... .. 8d.	SULLIVAN, A. When love and beauty ... .. 8d.
Feasting I watch (arr.) ... .. 4d.	WALTHER, R. H. Sleep... .. 2d.
Go, song of mine ... .. 8d.	WEST, JOHN E. How eloquent ... .. 4d.
Shower, The ... .. 6d.	Woodmen, shepherds, come away ... .. 4d.
FLETCHER, PERCY E. Folly's Song ... .. 4d.	WILLIAMS, C. LEE. Song of the Pedlar ... .. 4d.
GARDINER, H. BALFOUR. Cargoes ... .. 4d.	WILLIAMS, R. VAUGHAN. Fain would I change that
Old song resung, An ... .. 6d.	note ... .. 3d.
GERMAN, E. Chase, The ... .. 4d.	WOOD, CHARLES. Full fathom five ... .. 3d.
London Town ... .. 6d.
My bonnie lass, she smileth ... .. 4d.

ELIZABETHAN MADRIGALS.

BATESON. Hark! hear you not ... .. 4d.	MORLEY. Arise, awake, you silly shepherds ... .. 4d.
BENET. All creatures now are merry-minded ... .. 4d.	Shoot, false love, I care not ... .. 4d.
BYRD. I joy not in no earthly bliss ... .. 4d.	TOMKINS. Oyes! has any found a lad... .. 2d.
This sweet and merry month of May... .. 4d.	Weep no more ... .. 2d.
FARMER. I thought my love, that I should overtake you ... .. 4d.	WEEKES. As Vesta was from Latmos' Hill descending ... .. 4d.
GIBBONS, ORLANDO. Ah! dere heart ... .. 2d.	Lady, your eye ... .. 4d.
I tremble not at noise of war ... .. 4d.	WILBYE. Adieu, sweet Amarillis ... .. 3d.
MARSTON. Nymphs and shepherds ... .. 4d.	Alas! what hope of speeding ... .. 3d.
	Lady Oriana, The... .. 4d.

MALE VOICES (T.T.B.B.).

BANTOCK, GRANVILLE. Festival Song ... .. 6d.	FLETCHER, PERCY E. Sailor's Return, The ... .. 6d.
Give a rouse ... .. 4d.	Vision of Belshazzah, The ... .. 4d.
How sleep the brave ... .. 4d.	GARDINER, H. BALFOUR. Sir Eglamore ... .. 4d.
BOYCE, E. Dirge ... .. 3d.	GERMAN, E. O peaceful night ... .. 4d.
CARSE, A. The tide rises, the tide falls ... .. 3d.	Sleeping ... .. 4d.
CORNELIUS, P. Rider's Song, The ... .. 6d.	HEGAR, F. Phantom Host, The ... .. 8d.
DAVIES, H. WALFORD. Hymn before Action ... .. 4d.	LLOYD, C. H. Wet sheet and a flowing sea ... .. 4d.
DUNHILL, T. F. Full fathom five ... .. 4d.	SCHUMANN. Night March, The (Op. 62, No. 1) ... .. 4d.
It was a lover and his lass ... .. 4d.	Song of Freedom (Op. 62, No. 2) ... .. 4d.
Who is Sylvia? ... .. 3d.	SOMERVELL, A. Soldier, rest ... .. 4d.
Wind and the rain, The ... .. 4d.	WEST, JOHN E. John Peel (Old English Song) ... .. 4d.
ELGAR, E. Reveille, The ... .. 8d.	WILLIAMS, R. VAUGHAN. Bushes and briars (Folk-
Wanderer, The ... .. 4d.	Song) ... .. 3d.
Zut! zut! zut! ... .. 4d.	WOOD, CHARLES. Down in yon summer vale ... .. 3d.

FEMALE VOICES.

ATKINS, IVOR. Sea Song, A. (S.A.) ... .. 4d.	FLETCHER, PERCY E. *Dream, baby. (S.S.A.) ... .. 4d.
BERLIOZ. Ophelia. (S.A.)... .. 4d.	*Oh the merry May. (S.S.A.) ... .. 4d.
BOUGHTON, RUTLAND. Piper's Song. (S.S.A.)... .. 3d.	GERMAN, E. Beauteous morn. (S.S.A.) ... .. 4d.
BRAHMS. *Barcarolle (Op. 44, No. 3). (S.S.A.A.) ... .. 2d.	O lovely May. (S.S.A.) ... .. 4d.
Gardener, The (Op. 17, No. 3). (S.S.A.) ... .. 4d.	HOLST, G. *Now sleeps the crimson petal. (S.S.A.A.) ... .. 3d.
*Now all the roses (Op. 44, No. 7). (S.S.A.A.) ... .. 4d.	*O swallow, swallow. (S.S.A.) ... .. 3d.
COLERIDGE-TAYLOR. S. Encinctured with a twine of	*Splendour falls, The. (S.S.A.A.) ... .. 4d.
leaves. (S.S.A.) ... .. 4d.	*Sweet and low. (S.S.A.A.) ... .. 4d.
From the green heart of the waters. (S.S.A.) ... .. 4d.	*Tears, idle tears (S.S.A.A.) ... .. 3d.
DAVIES, H. WALFORD. Cradle Song, A. (S.S.A.) ... .. 4d.	SHAW, GEOFFREY. Three Hymns from Pan's
Lamb, The. (S.S.A.) ... .. 4d.	Anniversary:—
Shepherd, The. (S.S.A.) ... .. 4d.	Of Pan we sing. (S.S.A.)... .. 5d.
ELGAR, E. Christmas greeting, A. (S.A.) ... .. 8d.	Pan is our all. (S.S.A.A.) ... .. 4d.
My love dwelt in a northern land (arr.). (S.S.A.) ... .. 4d.	If yet Pan's orgies. (S.S.A.A.) ... .. 4d.
Stars of the summer night. (S.A.) ... .. 8d.	WILLIAMS, R. VAUGHAN. Sound sleep. (S.S.A.) ... .. 6d.
	WOOD, CHARLES. La Fileuse. (S.A.) ... .. 4d.

ELIZABETHAN MADRIGALS (ARRANGED).

*BATESON. Nightingale, The. (S.S.A.) ... .. 2d.	MORLEY. *My bonny lass she smileth. (S.S.A.A.) ... .. 4d.
*BYRDE. Looke downe, O Lord. (S.S.A.A.) ... .. 3d.	*Now is the month of maying. (S.S.A.A.) ... .. 3d.
*EDWARDS. In going to my lonely bed (S.S.A.A.)... .. 3d.	WEEKES. *Nightingale, The. (S.S.A.) ... .. 3d.
*GIBBONS, ORLANDO. The silver swan. (S.S.A.A.) ... .. 2d.	WILBYE. *Seek sweet content. (S.S.A.) Adapted from the madrigal—"Fly love, to heaven" ... .. 2d.

* Unaccompanied.

UNISON SONG FOR MASSED VOICES.

Words by WHITTIER.

WORSHIP.
PRICE TWOPENCE.

Music by GEOFFREY SHAW.

Specimens of every kind of music will be forwarded on application. To ensure a satisfactory selection, the Syllabus of the last Festival should accompany the request.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

ENGLISH LYRICS

SET TO MUSIC BY

C. HUBERT H. PARRY.

EACH SET, PRICE FOUR SHILLINGS

FIRST SET.

- |  |   |
|--|---|
| 1. *My true love hath my heart ... .. Sir Philip Sidney | 3. Where shall the lover rest ... .. Scott   |
| 2. Good-night ... .. Shelley                            | 4. Willow, Willow, Willow ... .. Shakespeare |

SECOND SET.

- |  |   |
|--|---|
| 1. O Mistress Mine ... .. Shakespeare               | 3. No longer mourn for me ... .. Shakespeare       |
| 2. Take, O take those lips away ... .. Shakespeare  | 4. Blow, blow, thou winter wind ... .. Shakespeare |
| 5. When icicles hang by the wall ... .. Shakespeare |   |

THIRD SET.

- |   |  |
|---|--|
| 1. *To Lucasta, on going to the wars ... .. Lovelace | 4. *Why so pale and wan ... .. Suckling         |
| 2. If thou would'st ease thine heart ... .. Beddoes  | 5. Through the ivory gate ... .. Julian Sturgis |
| 3. *To Althea, from prison ... .. Lovelace           | 6. Of all the torments ... .. William Walsh     |

FOURTH SET.

- |   |  |
|---|--|
| 1. *Thine eyes still shined for me ... .. Emerson        | 4. Weep you no more ... .. Anon.                    |
| 2. *When lovers meet again ... .. Langdon Elwyn Mitchell | 5. There be none of beauty's daughters ... .. Byron |
| 3. *When we two parted ... .. Byron                      | 6. Bright star ... .. Keats                         |

FIFTH SET.

- |  |   |
|--|---|
| 1. *A stray nymph of Dian ... .. Julian Sturgis | 4. Lay a garland on my hearse ... .. Beaumont &amp; Fletcher |
| 2. *Proud Maisie ... .. Scott                   | 5. Love and laughter ... .. Arthur Buller                    |
| 3. *Crabbed age and youth ... .. Shakespeare    | 6. A girl to her glass ... .. Julian Sturgis                 |
| 7. A Lullaby ... .. E. O. Jones                 |   |

SIXTH SET.

- |   |   |
|---|---|
| 1. *When comes my Gwen ... .. E. O. Jones      | 4. *A lover's garland ... .. Alfred P. Graves            |
| 2. *And yet I love her till I die ... .. Anon. | 5. At the hour the long day ends ... .. Alfred P. Graves |
| 3. *Love is a bable ... .. Anon.               | 6. Under the greenwood tree ... .. Shakespeare           |

SEVENTH SET.

- |   |  |
|---|--|
| 1. On a time the amorous Silvy ... .. Anon.                | 4. O never say that I was false of heart ... .. Shakespeare |
| 2. Follow a shadow ... .. Ben Jonson                       | 5. Julia ... .. Herrick                                     |
| 3. Ye little birds that sit and sing ... .. Thomas Heywood | 6. *Sleep ... .. Julian Sturgis                             |

EIGHTH SET.

- |   |  |
|---|--|
| 1. Whence ... .. Julian Sturgis                      | 4. Dirge in woods ... .. George Meredith  |
| 2. Nightfall in winter ... .. Langdon Elwyn Mitchell | 5. Looking backward ... .. Julian Sturgis |
| 3. Marian ... .. George Meredith                     | 6. Grapes ... .. Julian Sturgis           |

NINTH SET.

- |  |  |
|--|--|
| 1. Three aspects ... .. Mary E. Coleridge               | 4. Whether I live ... .. Mary E. Coleridge  |
| 2. A fairy town (St. Andrew's) ... .. Mary E. Coleridge | 5. Armida's garden ... .. Mary E. Coleridge |
| 3. The witches' wood ... .. Mary E. Coleridge           | 6. *The maiden ... .. Mary E. Coleridge     |
| 7. There ... .. Mary E. Coleridge                       |  |

TENTH SET.

- |   |  |
|---|--|
| 1. My heart is like a singing bird ... .. Christina Rossetti | 4. The child and the twilight ... .. Langdon Elwyn Mitchell |
| 2. Gone were but the winter cold ... .. Allan Cunningham     | 5. From a city window ... .. Langdon Elwyn Mitchell         |
| 3. A moment of farewell ... .. Julian Sturgis                | 6. One silent night of late ... .. Herrick                  |

ELEVENTH SET.

- |  |   |
|--|---|
| 1. One golden thread ... .. Julia Chatterton              | 5. The faithful lover ... .. Alfred Perceval Graves          |
| 2. The spirit of the Spring ... .. Alfred Perceval Graves | 6. If I might ride on puissant wing ... .. Julian Sturgis    |
| 3. What part of dread eternity ... .. Author unknown      | 7. Why art thou slow ... .. Massinger                        |
| 4. The blackbird ... .. Alfred Perceval Graves            | 8. She is my love beyond all thought ... .. Alfred P. Graves |

TWELFTH SET.

- |   |   |
|---|---|
| 1. When the dew is falling ... .. Julia Chatterton   | 4. When the sun's great orb ... .. H. Warner |
| 2. To Blossoms ... .. Herrick                        | 5. Dream pedlary ... .. Beddoes              |
| 3. Rosaline ... .. Lodge                             | 6. O World, O Life, O Time ... .. Shelley    |
| 7. The sound of hidden music ... .. Julia Chatterton |   |

* Published separately, price 1s. 6d.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

COMPOSITIONS BY EDWARD ELGAR.

VOCAL.

ORATORIOS

- THE APOSTLES. For Soprano, Contralto, Tenor, and Bass Soli, Chorus, and Orchestra. (Op. 49.) (Tonic Sol-fa, Chorus and Words of Solos only, 4s.) .. 7 6
(Vocal Parts, 2s. 6d. each.)
Full Score, £5 5s. Book of Words, with Analysis, 1s. 4d., or 75s. net per 100. Words only, 8d., or 41s. 8d. net per 100. An Interpretation of the Libretto by C. V. GORTON, M.A., 1s. 6d. Vocal Score, with German words (Deutsche Übersetzung von JULIUS BUTHS), 12s. Chorstimmen, 3s. each. Textbuch, 8d. Erläuterung von Max Hehemann, 1s. 4d. String Parts, 34s.; Wind Parts on hire only.
- THE DREAM OF GERONTIUS. For Mezzo-Soprano, Tenor, and Bass Soli, Chorus, and Orchestra. (Op. 38.) (Tonic Sol-fa, Chorus only, 2s. 6d.) .. 5 6
(Vocal Parts, 2s. 6d. each.)
Full Score, £3 3s. Miniature Full Score, paper, 11s. 6d.; cloth, 16s. Book of Words, with Analysis, 1s. 4d., or 66s. 8d. net per 100. Words only, 8d., or 33s. 4d. net per 100. Vocal Score, with German and English words (Deutsche Übersetzung von JULIUS BUTHS), 9s. Chorstimmen, each, 3s. Textbuch, 33s. 4d. per 100. Vocal score, with French words (Traduction française de J. d'Offoël), 9s. Parties de Chœur, 3s. each. Livret, 33s. 4d. per 100. String Parts, 29s. 6d.; Wind Parts on hire only.
Sanctus Fortis. Tenor Solo from above. Transposed to A flat, 6d. Full score, 5s. 6d. String Parts, 3s. 4d.; Wind Parts on hire only.
- THE KINGDOM. For Soprano, Contralto, Tenor, and Bass Soli, Chorus, and Orchestra. (Op. 51.) (Tonic Sol-fa, Chorus and Words of Solos only, 4s.) .. 7 6
(Vocal Parts, 2s. 6d. each.)
Full Score, £5 5s. Book of Words, with Analysis, 1s. 4d., or 75s. net per 100. Words only, 8d., or 41s. 8d. net per 100. An Interpretation of the Libretto by C. V. GORTON, M.A., 1s. 6d. Vocal Score, with German words (Deutsche Übersetzung von JULIUS BUTHS), 7s. 6d. Chorstimmen, 3s. each. Textbuch, 8d. each. String Parts, 37s. 6d.; Wind Parts on hire only.
- THE LIGHT OF LIFE ("Lux Christi"). A Short Oratorio. For Soprano, Contralto, Tenor, and Baritone Soli, Chorus, and Orchestra. (Op. 29) .. 4 0 Tonic Sol-fa, 1s. 6d. Full Score, £2 2s.; Words only, 12s. 6d. per 100. String Parts, 20s.; Wind Parts on hire only.

CANTATAS.

- BANNER OF ST. GEORGE, THE. For Chorus (Soprano Solo ad lib.) and Orchestra. (Op. 33) .. 2 6
Full Score, 25s. Tonic Sol-fa, 1s. 6d. Words only, 9s. 6d. per 100. String Parts, 12s. 6d.; Wind Parts, 28s. 11d.
- BLACK KNIGHT, THE. For Chorus and Orchestra. (Op. 25) .. 3 0
Full Score, 31s. 6d. Tonic Sol-fa, 1s. 6d. Words only, 6s. 6d. per 100. String Parts, 13s. 6d.; Wind Parts on hire only.
(Vocal Parts, 1s. 6d. each.)
- CARACTACUS. For Soprano, Tenor, Baritone, and Bass Soli, Chorus, and Orchestra. (Op. 35) .. 5 6
Full Score, £3 3s. Tonic Sol-fa (Chorus and Words of Solos only), 2s. 6d. Book of Words, with Analysis, 1s. 4d., or 66s. 8d. net per 100; Words only, 8d., or 33s. 4d. net per 100. String Parts, 36s. 6d.; Wind Parts on hire only.
(Vocal Parts, 2s. 6d. each.)
- KING OLAF. For Soprano, Tenor, and Bass Soli, Chorus, and Orchestra. (Op. 30) .. 4 6
Full Score, £3 3s.; Tonic Sol-fa (Chorus only), 2s. 6d. Book of Words, with Analysis, 1s. 4d. or 66s. 8d. net per 100. Words only, 8d., or 33s. 4d. net per 100. String Parts, 34s. 6d.; Wind Parts on hire only.
(Vocal Parts, 2s. 6d. each.)
- MUSIC-MAKERS, THE (Op. 69). Ode by Arthur O'Shaughnessy. For Contralto Solo, Chorus, and Orchestra .. 4 0
Tonic Sol-fa, 2s. 6d.; Vocal Parts, 1s. 6d. each; Words only, 9s. 6d. per 100. String Parts, 13s. 6d. Wind Parts on hire only.
- SPIRIT OF ENGLAND, THE (Op. 80). A poem by Laurence Binyon. Set for Tenor or Soprano Solo, Chorus, and Orchestra .. 4 0
Tonic Sol-fa, 2s. 6d. Full score, complete, 25s. Complete String Parts, 10s.; Wind Parts on hire only. Vocal Parts on hire only. Words only, 12s. 6d. per 100.
Or, Singly—
- 1. THE FOURTH OF AUGUST .. 1 6
Tonic Sol-fa, 1s.; Full Score, 13s.; String Parts, 3s. 4d.; Wind Parts on hire only.
  - 2. TO WOMEN .. 1 0
Tonic Sol-fa, 8d.; Full Score, 7s. 6d.; String Parts, 3s. 4d.; Wind Parts on hire only.
  - 3. FOR THE FALLEN .. 1 6
Tonic Sol-fa, 1s.; Full Score, 16s.; String Parts, 3s. 4d.; Wind Parts on hire only. Words only, 6s. 6d. per 100.

ANTHEMS, SERVICES, &c.

- §CORONATION OFFERTORIUM (Op. 64) .. 0 3
DOUBT NOT THY FATHER'S CARE ("The Light of Life") (Op. 29). Duet, s. and c. (Tonic Sol-fa, 1½d.) .. 0 3
FEAR NOT, O LAND (Harvest) .. 0 4
(Tonic Sol-fa, 3d.)
- §GIVE UNTO THE LORD (Psalm xxix.) (Op. 74) .. 1 0
§GREAT IS THE LORD (Psalm xlvi.) (Op. 67) .. 1 0
(Tonic Sol-fa, 8d.)
- JESU, LORD OF LIFE AND GLORY. Anthem. Adapted from Op. 2, No. 2 (Tonic Sol-fa, 2d.) .. 0 4
JESU, MEEK AND LOWLY. Anthem. Adapted from Op. 2, No. 3 (Tonic Sol-fa, 2d.) .. 0 4
JESU, WORD OF GOD INCARNATE (Ave Verum) (Op. 2, No. 1). Motet. English and Latin Words (Tonic Sol-fa, 1½d.) .. 0 3
DITTO. English Words only (Tonic Sol-fa, 1½d.) .. 0 3
§LIGHT OF THE WORLD ("The Light of Life") (Op. 29). S.A.T.B. (Tonic Sol-fa, 3d.) .. 0 4
LO! CHRIST THE LORD IS BORN. Carol .. 0 1½
O HEARKEN THOU (Arranged from the Coronation Offertorium) (Op. 64) .. 0 4
O MIGHTIEST OF THE MIGHTY (Coronation Hymn) .. 0 1½
SEEK HIM THAT MAKETH THE SEVEN STARS ("The Light of Life") (Op. 29). Tenor Solo and Chorus for T.T.B.B. .. 0 8
§TE DEUM AND BENEDICTUS IN F. For Chorus (S.A.T.B.), Orchestra, and Organ. (Op. 34) .. 1 6
THEY ARE AT REST. Elegy (Tonic Sol-fa, 2d.) .. 0 4

MOTETS (LATIN WORDS).

- AVE VERUM (Op. 2, No. 1) (Tonic Sol-fa, 1½d.) .. 0 3
AVE MARIA (Op. 2, No. 2) .. 0 4
AVE MARIS STELLA (Op. 2, No. 3) .. 0 4
§INTENDE VOCI ORATIONIS MEÆ (Coronation Offertorium) (Op. 64) .. 0 3

SONGS

- §ANGEL'S SONG, THE: "My work is done" ("Gerontius") (Op. 38). For Mezzo-Soprano .. 1 6
CHILD ASLEEP, A (Contralto) .. 2 0
§FOLLOW THE COLOURS (Marching Song) .. 2 0
IN MOONLIGHT (Arranged from the Canto popolare in the Concert-Overture "In the South," Op. 50). (In G, F, and E flat) .. 2 0
OH, SOFT WAS THE SONG (Op. 59, No. 3). In D and E (Orchestral Parts in E only) .. 2 0
PLEADING (Op. 48, No. 1). In A flat, G, and F (Orchestral Parts in G only) .. 2 0
RIVER, THE (Op. 60, No. 2). In G minor, A minor, and B minor (original). (Orchestral Parts in A minor only) .. 2 0
SWORD SONG, THE ("Caractacus," Op. 35). In E flat and F (Orchestral Parts in F only) .. 2 0
§THERE ARE SEVEN THAT PULL THE THREAD ("Grania and Diarmid") (Op. 42). Mezzo-Soprano or Baritone .. 2 0
TORCH, THE (Op. 60, No. 1). In F, G, and A (Orchestral Parts in G only) .. 2 0
§TWILIGHT (Op. 59, No. 6). Contralto .. 2 0
§WAS IT SOME GOLDEN STAR (Op. 59, No. 5). Contralto .. 2 0

§ Orchestral Parts may be had.

NOVELLO'S

POPULAR PIANOFORTE ALBUMS

FOR YOUNG PERFORMERS.

HUBERT BATH
DOLL'S-HOUSE SUITE

Price Three Shillings.

FRANCESCO BERGER
EIGHTEEN LITTLE PIECES

Price Two Shillings and Sixpence.

J. D. DAVIS.
FOUR LITTLE PIECES

Price Two Shillings and Threepence.

EDMONDSTOUNE DUNCAN
HAPPY THOUGHTS

Price Three Shillings.

ARNOLD KRUG
TEN LITTLE PIECES

Op. 109.

In two Books. Price Two Shillings and Threepence each.

ARNOLD KRUG
SCENES FROM FAIRY-LAND

In two Books. Price Three Shillings each.

TH. KULLAK
TWENTY-FOUR PIECES

Op. 62 AND 81.

In four Books. Price One Shilling and Sixpence each.

MAX MAYER
BAGATELLES

Price Four Shillings.

MENDELSSOHN
SIX CHRISTMAS PIECES

Price One Shilling and Sixpence.

ERNEST NEWTON
WOODLAND DANCES

Price Three Shillings.

ERNEST NEWTON
ROMANY LIFE

Price Three Shillings.

HUBERT G. OKE
THREE PIECES

Price Three Shillings.

SCHUMANN
PIECES FOR THE YOUNG

Part I., Price 1s. 6d. ; Part II., Price 1s. 6d.

SCHUMANN
THREE PIANOFORTE SONATAS

(Part III. of Pieces for the Young).

Price One Shilling and Sixpence.

CLEMENT M. SPURLING
SIX SHORT AND EASY PIECES

Price Three Shillings.

CLEMENT M. SPURLING
OUR VILLAGE IN SUMMER

Price Two Shillings and Threepence.

E. A. SYDENHAM
SIX SHORT AND EASY PIECES

Price Three Shillings.

TSCHAIKOWSKY
CHRISTMAS ALBUM

In three Books. Price One Shilling and Sixpence each.

FRANCESCO BERGER
FIRST STEPS AT THE PIANOFORTE

PRICE FOUR SHILLINGS.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

FOUR ENGLISH DANCES OLD ENGLISH DANCES

SET 1.

COMPOSED BY

FREDERIC H. COWEN.

	s.	d.
Full Score ... ..	16	0
String Parts ... ..	9	0
Wind Parts ... ..	17	8
Ditto (small orchestra) ... ..	13	2
Military Band ... ..	19	0
Pianoforte Solo ... ..	4	0
Violin and Pianoforte ... ..	4	6
Quintet (Pianoforte and Strings) ... .. each	4	0
Extra Strings, 8d. each.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

OLD

SET 2.

COMPOSED BY

FREDERIC H. COWEN.

	s.	d.
Full Score ... ..	25	0
String Parts ... ..	14	3
Wind Parts ... ..	30	3
Pianoforte Solo ... ..	4	0
From the above: "MINUET D'AMOUR."
Pianoforte Solo, 2s. 3d.; Violin and Pianoforte, 3s.;
Quintet for Pianoforte and Strings, 4s.
Extra Strings, 8d. each.
Full Score ... ..	5	6
String Parts ... ..	2	0
Wind Parts ... ..	3	8
Military Band ... ..	7	6

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

FOUR CHARACTERISTIC WALTZES

1. VALSE BOHEMIENNE.

3. VALSE DE LA REINE.

2. VALSE RUSTIQUE.

4. VALSE MAURESQUE.

COMPOSED BY

S. COLERIDGE-TAYLOR.

(Op. 22).

PIANOFORTE SOLO.

PRICE, COMPLETE, FOUR SHILLINGS; SEPARATELY, 2s. 3d. EACH.

	s.	d.		s.	d.
Violin and Pianoforte ... .. complete	4	6	Full Score (Full Orchestra) ... ..	11	6
Violin and Pianoforte ... .. separately, each	2	3	Full Score (Small Orchestra), MS.
String Parts for Full or Small Orchestra ... ..	9	0	Arrangements, as Quintets, for Pianoforte and
Wind Parts for Small Orchestra ... ..	10	5	Strings, each Number ... ..	3	0
Ditto, for Full Orchestra ... ..	17	5	Separate String Parts, 8d. each.
			Military Band Arrangement ... ..	19	0

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

JOHN SEBASTIAN BACH

48 PRELUDES AND FUGUES

(THE WELL-TEMPERED CLAVICHORD)

A NEW EDITION, EDITED BY HAROLD BROOKE.

IN TWO PARTS.

Price Four Shillings each.

Or, Complete, Cloth, Price Twelve Shillings and Sixpence.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

ORIGINAL COMPOSITIONS
FOR THE ORGAN.

(NEW SERIES.)

No.	RECENT NUMBERS	s. d.
76.	TOCCATA AND FUGUE ("The Wanderer") C. Hubert H. Parry	3 6
77.	ANDANTE RELIGIOSO ... .. Alec Rowley	1 6
78.	SCHERZO ... .. G. J. Bennett	2 3
79.	THREE PRELUDES ... .. G. J. Bennett	2 3
80.	DÉSÉSPAIR ... .. Ch. Quef	1 6
81.	CAPRICE IN D FLAT ... .. J. A. Sowerbutts	2 3
82.	THREE PSALM-PRELUDES, NO. 1 ... .. H. Howells	1 6
83.	" " " NO. 2 ... .. H. Howells	1 6
84.	" " " NO. 3 ... .. H. Howells	1 6
85.	THEMA OSTINATA ... .. C. C. Palmer	1 6
86.	COVENANTERS' MARCH... .. R. G. Halling	1 6
87.	CHORAL MELODY ... .. C. F. Waters	1 6
88.	CONCERT OVERTURE IN F MINOR ... .. Alfred Hollins	3 0
89.	HOMAGE TO HANDEL ... .. S. Karg-Elert	3 6
90.	THREE SHORT AND EASY POSTLUDES (2nd Set) F. W. Wadely	2 3
91.	INTERMEZZI (No. 1, Pastorale) ... .. C. V. Stanford	2 0
92.	" (No. 2, Marcia Eroica) ... .. C. V. Stanford	2 0
93.	" (No. 3, Hush Song) ... .. C. V. Stanford	2 0
94.	" (No. 4, Intermezzo Founded upon an Irish air) ... .. C. V. Stanford	2 0
95.	CHORAL IMPROVISATION ON "DER HÖLLE PORTEN SIND ZERSTÖRT" ... .. S. Karg-Elert	2 0
96.	CHORAL IMPROVISATION ON "GELOBT SEI GOTT IM HÖCHSTEN THRON" ... .. S. Karg-Elert	2 0
97.	SEVEN PASTELS FROM THE LAKE OF CONSTANCE S. Karg-Elert	5 6
98.	PRELUDE AND FUGUE IN C ... .. C. V. Stanford	2 0
99.	PRELUDE AND FUGUE IN C MINOR ... .. C. V. Stanford	2 0
100.	PRELUDE AND FUGUE IN B MINOR ... .. C. V. Stanford	2 0
101.	VARIATIONS ON AN OLD ENGLISH MELODY ("Heartsease") Geoffrey Shaw	2 0

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

OLD ENGLISH
VIOLIN MUSICEDITED BY
ALFRED MOFFAT.

PREFATORY NOTE.

Although considerable attention has been given to the resuscitation of Church Music, Glee and Madrigals, Organ and even Harpsichord Music by the older English composers, very little has been done to make known the large mass of music for the Violin written by English musicians from the time of Purcell to the close of the 18th century. These works for the most part consist of Suites or Sonatas written for a solo violin with a figured bass, or for two violins and violoncello with a figured bass for the harpsichord or organ; another favourite form was the Concerto grosso.

It is with the object of making known to the public a selection of the best of these compositions that the present series has been undertaken.

ALFRED MOFFAT.

		s. d.
No. 1.	SONATA in G major ... .. JAMES LATES	3 0
" 2.	SONATA in D minor ... .. RICHARD JONES	3 0
" 3.	SONATA in B flat major ... .. WILLIAM BABELL	3 0
" 4.	SONATA in G minor ... .. JOHN STANLEY	3 0
" 5.	SONATA in A major ... .. JOHN COLLETT	3 0
" 6.	TRIO-SONATA in E minor THOMAS AUGUSTINE ARNE	4 6
" 7.	SONATA in D major ... .. RICHARD JONES	3 0
" 8.	TRIO-SONATA in D minor ... .. WILLIAM BOYCE	4 6
" 9.	THREE PIECES ... .. WILLIAM BOYCE	3 0
" 10.	SONATA in E major ... .. CHARLES MACKLEAN	3 0
" 11.	SONATA in G minor ... .. WILLIAM CROFT	3 0
" 12.	SONATA in D minor ... .. JOSEPH GIBBS	3 0
" 13.	SONATA in D minor ... .. JOHN HUMPHRIES	3 0
" 14.	SONATA in A minor ... .. THOMAS VINCENT	3 0

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

Produced at Covent Garden, May 14, 1923

THE PERFECT FOOL

OPERA IN ONE ACT

WORDS AND MUSIC BY

GUSTAV HOLST

OP. 39

PRICE ... .. SIX SHILLINGS.

Libretto One Shilling

THE BALLET FROM "THE PERFECT FOOL."

Full Score, 15s.; Pianoforte Solo, 3s.; Pianoforte Duet, 4s.

SOME PRESS OPINIONS.

THE TIMES

The ballet music . . . is the most brilliant thing in a work glittering with brilliant moments. . . . There is one delicious musical moment, an almost Purcellian "round" for three voices. . . . and it is not an isolated moment.

THE DAILY TELEGRAPH

It is a safe and a proud thing to say that in the whole history of opera no composer has produced a more perfectly fitting score and libretto than Gustav Holst has produced in this opera. . . . In very truth this is a perfect little opera, a veritable masterpiece after its kind, of wit and humour. . . . Brilliantly clever and amusing.

THE MORNING POST

The Perfect Joke would be a better title for Mr. Holst's opera. . . . Mr. Holst shows the rare and precious ability to make a musical joke that everyone can see—or hear. . . . The whole thing is something entirely fresh, and follows a well-defined line of its own. . . . Actually there is not a weak page in the score, and though story and music differ from the expected, the way they are handled with originality and power constitute the opera a little masterpiece.

THE DAILY MAIL

The Perfect Fool . . . ought to have a sweeping success if musical people can command enough sense of humour and if people of humour have ears open to the splendour of the music. . . . Splendid music, and playfully mocking, allusive, fantastic libretto. . . . And there are numbers of first-rate tunes—for Holst is a prime melodist.

DAILY NEWS

It will appeal strongly to musicians all over the world who are familiar with operatic literature.

DAILY EXPRESS

His rhythmical capacity serves him extremely well in the ballet music, which is, indeed, some of the best that has been written in opera for a long time.

REFEREE

A ballet of such originality and interest, accompanied by such masterly music, that interest was excited and admiration aroused. . . . Musically this ballet is the finest portion of the work. . . . The instrumentation is a marvel of suggestion and humour.

PALL MALL GAZETTE

Holst has provided excellent entertainment in company with some remarkably good music. The latter is rich in the two essentials of tune and rhythm. . . . There are many tunes—the Wizard's "Wooing Song," for example—which are so simple and accessible that one is unconsciously whistling them after a single hearing. . . . There are many gems. The ballet-music, of course, is fairly well known by now, but the "Round" of the three girls fetching water was a charming moment, and the unaccompanied chorus towards the end a piece of real virtuosity.

DAILY CHRONICLE

A brilliant little fantasy. . . . The ballet music is most effective, particularly the exquisite Dance of the Spirit of Water.

BIRMINGHAM POST

Highly diverting in a vein entirely its own. . . . Plain, pure, unbending Holst from beginning to end, the writing masterly in its directness, and the scoring amazingly pointed and suggestive.

WESTERN DAILY PRESS

We may reasonably hope that Mr. Holst's all too short opera will take its place permanently in that small but brilliant constellation of comic-operas on the grand scale of which The Mastersingers and The Marriage of Figaro are the bright particular stars.

MUSICAL NEWS AND HERALD

The Perfect Fool is the finest piece of real musical humour that has appeared for a long time.

THE MUSICAL STANDARD

The Perfect Fool is the best thing Holst has given us. . . . Themes of quite extraordinary beauty, arresting to the ear, and haunting the memory even after a first hearing.

SUNDAY TIMES

Indeed, he has performed a notable feat of alchemy. He has taken of the common objects of opera, grown hoary and wearisome in service, and accomplished, with enharmonic subtlety, their transmutation and combination into something new and significant.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

TWENTY SHORT AND EASY PIECES FOR THE ORGAN

SET I.

No.			No.
1.	Andante ... ..	Alfred H. Allen	11.	Allegro. Op. 21...	Gustav Merkel
2.	Spring Song ... ..	W. H. Bell	12.	Andante. Op. 162 ...	Gustav Merkel
3.	Andante con Moto ... ..	G. J. Bennett	13.	Introductory Voluntary on the Russian Hymn	J. T. Pye
4.	Song of Thanksgiving ... ..	Josiah Booth	14.	Prelude No. 2 ... ..	A. Redhead
5.	Church Preludes No. 5 ... ..	R. E. Bryson	15.	Larghetto and Allegro ... ..	J. Varley Roberts
6.	Postlude ... ..	H. Elliot Button	16.	Allegretto Pastorale ... ..	C. Steggall
7.	Postlude ... ..	G. Calkin	17.	Contemplation ... ..	John E. West
8.	Prelude ... ..	Percy E. Fletcher	18.	Postlude ... ..	John E. West
9.	Andante ... ..	J. W. Gritton	19.	Moderato Maestoso ... ..	Kate Westrop
10.	Allegro Moderato ... ..	Kate Loder	20.	Andante Pastorale ... ..	W. G. Wood

SET II.

No.			No.
1.	Allegretto Grazioso ... ..	G. J. Bennett	11.	Andante quasi Allegretto ...	Gustav Merkel
2.	Church Prelude ... ..	R. E. Bryson	12.	Cavatina in G ... ..	Ernest Newton
3.	Andante Tranquillo ... ..	George Calkin	13.	Epilogue ... ..	J. Rheinberger
4.	For Holy Communion ... ..	J. Baptiste Calkin	14.	Andante in A ... ..	J. Varley Roberts
5.	Postlude ... ..	Percy E. Fletcher	15.	Andante in G ... ..	C. Steggall
6.	Largo ... ..	G. F. Handel	16.	March in G ... ..	Henry Smart
7.	Berceuse ... ..	Oliver King	17.	Andante Doloroso ("Marcia Funèbre")	John E. West
8.	Adagio, from Sonatina No. 2 ... ..	Kuhlau	18.	Pastoral Melody ... ..	John E. West
9.	Allegretto... ..	Kate Loder	19.	Andante ... ..	Kate Westrop
10.	Andante in G ... ..	G. F. Wesley Martin	20.	Allegretto Grazioso ... ..	W. G. Wood

SET III.

No.			No.
1.	Melody ... ..	A. Herbert Brewer	11.	Cavatina ... ..	Joachim Raff
2.	Maestoso ... ..	George Calkin	12.	Monologue No. 5 ... ..	J. Rheinberger
3.	Ave Maria ... ..	Edward T. Chipp	13.	Melody in F ... ..	Anton Rubinstein
4.	Interlude ... ..	Percy E. Fletcher	14.	Dreaming ... ..	R. Schumann
5.	Intermezzo ... ..	Alan Gray	15.	The Poet Speaks... ..	R. Schumann
6.	Postlude ... ..	Alex. Guilment	16.	Soft Voluntary ... ..	B. Luard-Selby
7.	Sursum Corda ... ..	John Ireland	17.	Menuetto ... ..	Berthold Tours
8.	Lieder Ohne Worte No. 22	F. Mendelssohn-Bartholdy	18.	Aspiration ... ..	John E. West
9.	Andante ... ..	Gustav Merkel	19.	Sketch in C minor ... ..	John E. West
10.	Duetto in G ... ..	Ernest Newton	20.	Andante con Moto ... ..	W. G. Wood

SET IV.

No.			No.
1.	Romance ... ..	W. H. Bell	11.	Lieder Ohne Worte No. 44	F. Mendelssohn-Bartholdy
2.	Minuet and Trio (Symphony in G minor) ... ..	W. Sterndale Bennett	12.	Trio ... ..	J. Rheinberger
3.	Canzonetta ... ..	César Cui	13.	Short Postlude ... ..	B. Luard-Selby
4.	Interlude ... ..	Th. Dubois	14.	Andante Maestoso ... ..	B. Luard-Selby
5.	Elegy ... ..	Edward Elgar	15.	Prelude ... ..	Henry Smart
6.	Allegretto ... ..	Niels W. Gade	16.	Fughetta ... ..	Henry Smart
7.	Judex ("Mors et Vita")... ..	Ch. Gounod	17.	Choral Song ... ..	S. S. Wesley
8.	Intermezzo No. 3... ..	Alan Gray	18.	Lamentation ... ..	John E. West
9.	Chanson de Joie ... ..	R. G. Hailing	19.	Allegretto Pastorale ... ..	John E. West
10.	Hymnus ... ..	A. C. Mackenzie	20.	Andante ... ..	W. G. Wood

SET V.

No.			No.
1.	Chorale Prelude—Erbarm' Dich mein, O Herre Gott ... ..	J. S. Bach	10.	Prelude ... ..	J. Rheinberger
2.	Allegro Maestoso e Vivace ... ..	W. T. Best	11.	Monologue No. 9 ... ..	J. Rheinberger
3.	Meditation ... ..	Hugh Blair	12.	Chanson Orientale ... ..	Schumann
4.	Canitène Religieuse ... ..	Th. Dubois	13.	Four Sketches, No. 1 ... ..	Schumann
5.	Intermezzo No. 1 ... ..	Alan Gray	14.	Larghetto from Sonata in D ... ..	B. Luard-Selby
6.	Then round about the Starry Throne ("Samson") ... ..	G. F. Handel	15.	Andante ... ..	E. Silas
7.	Lieder Ohne Worte, No. 4	F. Mendelssohn-Bartholdy	16.	Six Short and Easy Pieces, No. 6	Henry Smart
8.	Moderato ... ..	Gustav Merkel	17.	Intermezzo founded on an Irish Air	C. V. Stanford
9.	Ave Verum ... ..	Mozart	18.	Andante in G ... ..	S. S. Wesley
			19.	Lament ... ..	John E. West
			20.	Canzona ... ..	W. Wolstenholme

PRICE, PAPER COVER, FOUR SHILLINGS EACH SET. CLOTH, SIX SHILLINGS EACH SET

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

HIAWATHA'S WEDDING-FEAST

A SELECTION

FOR THE

ORGAN

COMPOSED BY

S. COLERIDGE-TAYLOR.

ARRANGED AND ADAPTED BY

HUGH BLAIR.

Price ... Four Shillings.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

SONGS

BY

ERNEST FARRAR.

BRITTANY

(Words by E. W. LUCAS).

THREE KEYS.

Price One Shilling and Sixpence each.

O MISTRESS MINE

(Words by SHAKESPEARE).

TWO KEYS.

Price Two Shillings each.

TWO PASTORALS

COME YOU, MARY.

WHO WOULD SHEPHERD PIPES
FORSAKE.

(Words by NORMAN GALE).

TWO KEYS.

Price Two Shillings each.

TWO SONGS

DIAPHENIA.

(Words by H. CONSTABLE).

THE LOVER'S APPEAL.

(Words by Sir F. WYATT).

TWO KEYS.

Price Two Shillings each.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

TWO SONGS

FROM

SHAKESPEARE.

1. O MISTRESS MINE.
2. COME AWAY, DEATH.

SET TO MUSIC BY

B. J. DALE.

Op. 9.

Price Two Shillings each.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

THE SHAFTS OF CUPID SONG.

THE WORDS BY

FRED G. BOWLES.

THE MUSIC BY

PERCY E. FLETCHER.

IN THREE KEYS.

Price Two Shillings each.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

NEW AND ENLARGED EDITION.

Cathedral Organists

PAST AND PRESENT.

A Record of the Succession of Organists

OF THE

CATHEDRALS, CHAPELS ROYAL, AND PRINCIPAL
COLLEGIATE CHURCHES OF THE UNITED KINGDOM.From about the period of the Reformation until the present day.With Biographical Notes, Extracts from the Chapter Books, Anecdotes, &c.

BY

JOHN E. WEST.

Price Seven Shillings net.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

HIAWATHA'S WEDDING-FEAST

AND

THE DEATH OF MINNEHAHA

COMPOSED BY

S. COLERIDGE-TAYLOR.

ARRANGED FOR PIANOFORTE SOLO

BY

JOHN POINTER.

Price, Five Shillings and Sixpence each.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

NEW ALBUM OF NINE SACRED SONGS

Contents :

GOD'S GARDEN
(FRANK LAMBERT)

LEAD, KINDLY LIGHT
(SAMUEL LIDDLE)

ALL THROUGH THE NIGHT.
(LORD HENRY SOMERSET)

GREAT LORD OF LIFE
(FLORENCE AYLWARD)

GOD'S LILY
(HOPE TEMPLE)

GOD AND GOD ALONE IS LOVE
(WARD-STEPHENS)

O LOVING FATHER
(TERESA DEL RIEGO)

NEARER TO THEE
(ARTHUR E. GODFREY)

HARK! MY SOUL, IT IS THE LORD.
(CHARLES GOUNOD)

THE COMPLETE ALBUM, PRICE 2s. 6d. NET.
(By Post, 2s. 8d.).

CHAPPELL & Co., Ltd., 50, New Bond Street, LONDON, W.1.

THE TUDOR EDITION OF OLD MUSIC

TRANSCRIBED AND EDITED BY

GERALD M. COOPER.

SERIES B.—No. 1.

THREE SONGS.

1. "MAN FIRST CREATED WAS" (1604) - THOMAS GREAVES
With accompaniment of String Quartet.
2. "IF FLOODS OF TEARS" (1618) - - - THOMAS BATESON
With accompaniment of Violin, Viola, and Violoncello.
3. "CUCKOO" (Early 17th Century) - - - RICHARD NICHOLSON
With accompaniment of String Quartet.

PRICE ... .. FOUR SHILLINGS NET.

The Tudor Edition will contain a miscellaneous collection of instrumental music by English and Continental composers of the 16th, 17th, and 18th centuries. This will be issued in two series, A and B. Series A will consist of complete works, such as Dowland's "Lachrimae" and Purcell's Fantasia's; Series B of short selections from the works contained in Series A and from other sources. In both cases the edition will adhere strictly to the original text, but Series B will be more in the nature of a "popular" edition with additional marks of expression, bowing-marks, &c., which are however to be looked on only as suggestions for the guidance of those who are unfamiliar with the music of this period, and may be altered at will. Series A will contain nothing but the original text transcribed into modern notation.

J. & W. CHESTER, LTD., 11, Great Marlborough Street, London, W.1.

THE MUSICAL TIMES

AND SINGING-CLASS CIRCULAR

FOUNDED IN 1844

PUBLISHED ON THE FIRST OF EVERY MONTH

No. 979.—Vol. 65

Registered at the General Post
Office for Canadian Postage

SEPTEMBER 1 1924

Price 6d.; Postage 2d.

Annual Subscription, post-free, 7s. 6d.

ROYAL CHORAL SOCIETY.

Patron: HIS MAJESTY THE KING.

General Conductor: MR. H. L. BALFOUR, Mus. Bac.

(Season 1924—1925.)

There are now VACANCIES in the CHOIR for SOPRANOS, CONTRALTOS, TENORS, and BASSES. Applicants should have STRONG VOICES OF GOOD QUALITY, and must be prepared to pass an examination in SIGHT-READING. Address, The Secretary, Royal Choral Society, Royal Albert Hall, S.W.7

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

YORK GATE, MARYLEBONE ROAD, LONDON, N.W.1.

Instituted 1822. Incorporated by Royal Charter, 1830.

Patron: HIS MAJESTY THE KING.

President: H.R.H. THE DUKE OF CONNAUGHT, K.G.

Principal: JOHN B. McEWEN, M.A., F.R.A.M.

MICHAELMAS TERM will begin on Monday, September 22.

ENTRANCE EXAMINATION on or about Thursday, September 18.

A SPECIAL COURSE FOR THE TRAINING OF CONDUCTORS has been instituted.

A SPECIAL TEACHERS' TRAINING COURSE has been arranged to meet the requirements of The Teachers' Registration Council.

J. A. CREIGHTON, Secretary.

THE ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

PRINCE CONSORT ROAD, SOUTH KENSINGTON, S.W.7.

(Incorporated by Royal Charter, 1883.)

Patron: HIS MAJESTY THE KING.

President: H.R.H. THE PRINCE OF WALES, K.G.

Director: SIR HUGH P. ALLEN, M.A., Mus. Doc.

Honorary Secretary: GEORGE A. MACMILLAN, Esq., D.Litt.

Registrar: CLAUDE AVELING, Esq., M.A.

The College offers a Complete Course of Musical Education to pupils of both sexes, both professional and amateur. Upwards of seventy Scholarships and Exhibitions are founded which provide free musical education.

SPECIAL CLASSES for CONDUCTING and TRAINING of TEACHERS have been instituted.

The OPERATIC and BALLET CLASSES have the use of the fully equipped College OPERA THEATRE with SUNKEN ORCHESTRA.

Examinations for the Associateship of the College (A.R.C.M.) in all subjects held three times a year in December, April, and September.

ROYAL

MANCHESTER COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

Founded 1893. Incorporated by Royal Charter, 1923.

Patron: HER MAJESTY QUEEN ALEXANDRA.

President: H.R.H. THE DUKE OF YORK, K.G.

Principal: Dr. ADOLPH BRODSKY.

Registrar: STANLEY WITHERS, M.A.

Students are required to enter upon a complete course of Musical instruction, and are not admitted for a shorter period than one year.

Fee for the year, £36. Special fee for Organ Course, £30, and for Wind Instrument Course, £18.

Systematic Course for the Training of Teachers included in the curriculum.

The Prospectus, with Scholarship information, Diploma Regulations, and Entry Forms, on application.

Guildhall School of Music.

(CORPORATION OF LONDON.)

VICTORIA EMBANKMENT, E.C.4.

PRINCIPAL: SIR LANDON RONALD, F.R.A.M., F.R.C.M., &c.

PRIVATE LESSONS in all Musical Subjects, and STAGE TRAINING in Elocution, Gesture, Dancing, Opera.

Complete Musical Education at inclusive fees, £9 9s. and £12 12s. Opera Class, Saturdays. Special Training Course for Teachers (approved by Teachers' Registration Council). AUTUMN TERM begins September 15.

Prospectus and Syllabus of Local Centres and Schools Examinations (open to general public) free.

Telephone: Cent. 4459. H. SAXE WYNDHAM, Secretary.

The Royal College of Organists.

THE SOLO-PLAYING TESTS for the next F.R.C.O. EXAMINATION are:

Prelude and Fugue in C, 9-8 time, J. S. Bach. (Novello, Book 9, p. 156; Augener, p. 69; Peters, Vol. 2, No. 7.)

Fantasia in G major (without Fugue), C. Hubert H. Parry, Original Compositions for the Organ (New Series), No. 22. (Novello.)

Adagio espressivo, from the Symphony in C, Schumann. Stainer's arrangements, No. 5., p. 54. (Novello.) This arrangement only.

The 10 selected pieces and the book set for the Essay for the January, 1925, A.R.C.O. Examination, are the same as those set for July, 1924.

The Choir-Training Certificate Examination will take place during the week beginning November 3rd. Entries must be received by the Registrar not later than Monday, October 6th. Application for Membership (or re-election) must be made on a proposal form to be obtained on application. This form must be duly filled up and returned to the Registrar, with the Membership Subscription, not later than Monday, October 6th.

Regulations, list of College Publications, Lectures, &c., may be had on application.

Examples indicating the character and approximate difficulty of the NEW TESTS, set for the first time at the July, 1924, Examinations, may be obtained at the College.

Associateship or Fellowship, 6d. each (post free).

The College is open daily from 10 to 4: Saturdays 10 to 1.

H. A. HARDING, Hon. Secretary.
Kensington Gore, S.W.7.

96 and 95, WIMPOLE STREET, W.1.

TOBIAS MATTHAY PIANOFORTE SCHOOL

Instruction under his teachers, and under his own supervision.

Open to Professionals and Amateurs, and also to Children.

The Staff consists of thirty-nine senior Professors of thorough experience and platform reputation, all trained by the founder.

Special Short Courses for Teachers during term and vacation.

LECTURE-LESSON Class by Mr. MATTHAY on the practical teaching of Technique and Interpretation, diagnosis and correction of faults, musical analysis and synthesis, &c., alternate Wednesday evenings.

Mr. FREDERICK MOORE takes alternate Wednesdays.

COMPLETE TRAINING COURSE FOR TEACHERS.
(Approved by the Teachers' Registration Council.)

This ONE-YEAR Course may be joined at the beginning of ANY TERM.
For further particulars please apply, Mrs. MARION COLE, Secretary.

MANCHESTER SCHOOL OF MUSIC.

Principal: ALBERT J. CROSS, A.R.A.M.

FOUNDED 1892.

The oldest Institution in Manchester devoted solely to the interests of Music.

All branches of Music taught. Day and Evening Private Lessons. Opera Class. Full Orchestral Class. Intermediate and Elementary String Orchestras, Classes for Ensemble Playing, Elocution, Choral Singing, Harmony, &c.
Single Subjects taught. Prospectus from 16, Albert Square.

GLASGOW*ATHENÆUM SCHOOL OF MUSIC.

SESSION 1923-24.

The Session consists of Three Terms: September 10 to December 1, December 3 to March 8, and March 10 to June 6.

Complete Musical Curriculum. Day and Evening Classes. Single Subjects taught.

Prospectus and further information may be obtained from:

STUART S. FORSYTH, Secretary,
ATHENÆUM BUILDINGS, GLASGOW.

BIRMINGHAM & MIDLAND INSTITUTE
SCHOOL OF MUSIC.

Visitor ... Sir EDWARD ELGAR, O.M., Mus.Doc., LL.D.

Director ... GRANVILLE BANTOCK, M.A., D.Mus. (Ed.).

SESSION 1923-1924.

The Session consists of AUTUMN TERM (September 20 to December 18); WINTER TERM (January 19 to April 9); SUMMER TERM (April 11 to July 9).

Instruction in all branches of Music, Students' Choir and Orchestra, Chamber Music, Students' Rehearsals, and Concerts.

Prospectus and further information may be obtained from—

H. M. FRANCIS, Secretary.
Paradise Street, Birmingham.

PAPER WORK BY MUS. B., F.R.C.O.*OVER 1100 SPECIMEN WORKINGS.

"Your lessons and ideas splendid."

"Your excellent models make my attempts look cold."

RECENT SUCCESSES.

2s. 6d. per lesson and postage.

"E. B.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

L.R.A.M. AND A.R.C.M.*TEACHING SINGING AND ELOCUTION EXAMINATIONS.

Numerous Successes both in Singing and Elocution Exams. at L.R.A.M. and A.R.C.M.

Special Correspondence Course and personal tuition.
Complete preparation.

Also Special Short Instructional Courses in Voice-Production and The Art of Teaching Singing, to meet particular requirements of the General Practitioner in Music.

MR. W. LEE WEBSTER, L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M.
INGLESIDE, PARK ROAD, NOTTINGHAM.

Battersea Polytechnic, London, S.W.11.

Principal: ROBERT H. PICKARD, D.Sc., F.R.S.

Head of Music Department: H. DAVAN WETTON, Mus. D., F.R.C.O.

CLASSES IN THEORY OF MUSIC, HARMONY, AND COUNTERPOINT.

UNIVERSITY COURSES FOR DEGREES AND HIGHER EXAMINATIONS IN MUSIC, L.R.A.M. and A.R.C.M.,

ASSOCIATED BOARD OF THE R.A.M. and R.C.M.,
CLASS AND PRIVATE LESSONS IN AURAL TRAINING,

SOLO SINGING, PIANOFORTE, VIOLIN, AND VIOLA.

CHORAL SOCIETY ORCHESTRA AND ORCHESTRAL CLASS.

LESSONS ON CONCERT ORGAN (Reconstructed and Modernized).

PREPARATION FOR R.C.O. EXAMINATIONS.

SPECIAL CLASSES FOR TEACHERS (Recognised by the L.C.C.).

Next Term begins Monday, September 22.

Evening Enrolments from Wednesday, September 17.

Particulars of all Classes on application to the Principal.

Over 2,000 Teachers and Pianists have adopted the Gillett Teaching—WHY?

It gets at the fundamentals in pianoforte playing.

It renders Stiffness and Fatigue impossible.

It inspires fresh endeavour.

It is rational, and raises pianoforte practice from useless Drudgery to intelligent and absorbing artistic enjoyment.

Above all, it gives you that complete control which enables you to give expression to your own individuality, and makes it possible to realise the temperamental suggestions of the music.

PRIVATE LESSONS DAY AND EVENING.

Beginners (Children and Adults), Advanced Players and Professionals.

Individual POSTAL CONSULTATION Lessons for home study, specially designed for those unable to take personal lessons. Prospectus post free.

CHARLES A. GILLETT,Pianoforte School,*

11, SOUTH MOLTON STREET, NEW BOND STREET,
LONDON, W.1.

THE TOBIAS MATTHAY
PIANOFORTE SCHOOL

96 and 95, WIMPOLE STREET, LONDON, W.1.

A VACATION
OF LECTURE-LESSONS
IN*Modern Methods of Music Teaching.

WILL BE HELD BETWEEN

SEPTEMBER 10TH and 13TH (inclusive)

(Under the direction of Mr. ERNEST READ)

LECTURERS:

DR. STANLEY MARCHANT, MR. ERNEST READ,
and MR. CUTHBERT WHITEMORE.

Further particulars later from

MRS. MARION COLE, Secretary.

THE LONDON COLLEGE FOR CHORISTERS.

6 and 7, BLOMFIELD CRESCENT, PADDINGTON, W.2.

Founder: Mr. JAMES BATES.

Solo Boys and Chorus Boys supplied at short notice for Church Services, &c. Telephone: Paddington 5990. Sec., ARTHUR G. BATES.

WIGMORE HALL STUDIOS.—These splendidly appointed Studios are the recognised centre of the best musical activities in London. Forty-five rooms. Grand Piano in every room. Lift, telephone and every comfort and convenience. Low inclusive rates. One morning or afternoon per week the minimum time arranged for. Apply, 38, Wigmore Street, W.1.

NORFOLK AND NORWICH
CENTENARY MUSICAL FESTIVAL,
OCTOBER 29th, 30th, and 31st, and
NOVEMBER 1st, 1924.
ST. ANDREW'S HALL, NORWICH.

PATRONS:
HIS MOST GRACIOUS MAJESTY THE KING.
HER MOST GRACIOUS MAJESTY THE QUEEN.

THE NEW QUEEN'S HALL ORCHESTRA AND A CHORUS
OF 270 VOICES.

Conductor ... SIR HENRY J. WOOD.

The Official Programme giving full particulars of the Concerts, prices of Tickets, &c., post free from the Hon. Sec., Norfolk and Norwich Musical Festival, Norwich.

SOUTHEND
MUSICAL FESTIVAL.
NOVEMBER 7th to 15th, 1924.

OPEN GOLD MEDAL CLASSES
(Amateurs and Professionals).

SINGING.
PIANOFORTE PLAYING.
VIOLIN PLAYING.
ELOCUTION.
MUSICAL COMPOSITION.

Send stamp for SYLLABUS to Hon. Secretary,
HORACE BAYLISS,
63, Alexandra Road, Southend-on-Sea, Essex.

THE LONDON CHOIR SCHOOL
(CHAMPION HILL SCHOOL).

GROVE LANE, DENMARK HILL, S.E.5.
(Twelve minutes from Victoria, L.B.S.C. Railway;
L.C.C. Trams 56, 58, 62, and 84 pass the door.)

Director: CARLTON BORROW, A.R.C.O.

Solo and Chorus Boys for Services, Oratorios, Madrigal Societies, Concerts, &c. Solo and Chorus Altos (male), Tenors, and Basses for Temporary Engagements.

Telephone: Brixton 2124. Apply, Secretary.

JOHN B. WOOD, MUS. BAC.
C. G. WOOD, MUS. BAC., L.R.A.M.

THE IDEAL CORRESPONDENCE
SCHOOL OF MUSIC.

EXPERT TUTORS.

THEORY OF MUSIC, HARMONY,
COMPOSITION, ART OF TEACHING,
INTERPRETATION,
FORM AND MEMORY TRAINING
FOR MUSICIANS.

Correspondents from all parts of the world and ex-students of the Principal Musical Institutions have been enrolled as pupils.

Write,
6, BOLTON ROAD, FARNWORTH, BOLTON.

MR. CHARLES TREE

BERLIOZ'S "FAUST."—"A triumph as Mephisto."—Sheffield Independent.

Mr. Tree lectures next season on the "Art of Bel Canto" in many of the leading cities, including London, Glasgow, Leeds, Bradford.

"HOW TO ACQUIRE EASE OF VOICE-PRODUCTION" AND ITS
COMPANION, "BEL CANTO" EXERCISES, 5/2 and 3/7 post free.
(If difficult to obtain, write direct.)

Mr. Tree will give a few Special Lessons to any keenly interested who will be up for the Exhibition. Accommodation may be had at

Bolton Mansions Hotel, Bolton Gardens, S.W.5.
Courtfield Gardens Hotel, Courtfield Gardens, S.W.5.

Concert Dates. Bolton Mansions Hotel, S.W.5. (Kensington 816.)

CHARLES
KNOWLES

BARITONE.

BOOKINGS INCLUDE:

HEREFORD MUSICAL FESTIVAL.
ROYAL CHORAL SOCIETY.—"Gerontius."
LEEDS CHORAL UNION.—"Faust," Berlioz.
ABERDEEN CHORAL SOCIETY.—"Faust," Berlioz.
NORTH STAFFORDSHIRE CHORAL SOCIETY.—
"Apostles," "Judas."
LEICESTER MUSICAL SOCIETY.—"Elijah."
JERSEY EISTEDDFOD.—(Adjudicator and Vocalist.)

For terms and Press notices, address,
87, ALEXANDRA ROAD, ST. JOHN'S WOOD, N.W.8.

THE LONDON SCHOOL OF SINGING.

20A, HENRIETTA STREET, CAVENDISH SQUARE, W.1.

President: A. NETTLEFOLD.

Principal ... WARD COWDERY.
Acting Principal ... DAVID GODELL.

The School provides complete instruction and training in all branches of Vocal Art for both professional and Amateur voices.
Latent talent successfully developed. Public appearances arranged.
Students' Concerts monthly. Auditions free.
Particulars from Secretary. Mayfair 3819.

Windsor Castle Royal Harmonists.

F. G. SMITH (Alto), MALCOLM BOYLE (Tenor),
EATON COOTER (Baritone), L. STANTON (Bass).

Of St. George's Chapel and H.M. Private Chapel, Windsor Castle.
London, Provincial, and B.B.C. (2 LO) Concerts.

Specimen Programmes of Old English, Period, or Popular Music.

Bookings and Terms on request to

MR. MALCOLM BOYLE.

'Phone: Windsor 166. 22, The Cloisters, Windsor Castle.

MR. ALBERT GARCIA

LESSONS IN VOICE PRODUCTION AND SINGING

Special Coaching in Opera, Oratorio, and for Recitals.

Pupils prepared for A.R.C.M. and L.R.A.M. Exams.

"A number of Mr. Albert Garcia's pupils sang excellently at the concert which they gave on Wednesday evening. It was particularly pleasant to hear voices so well placed and well poised, smooth and even in tone from the lowest to the highest notes, showing a control which too few learn to exercise."—Daily Telegraph.

"One takes it that a concert by pupils fulfils its object if it demonstrates—as the one given at Wigmore Hall by singers studying with Mr. Albert Garcia certainly did—the excellence of that master's method."—Era.

"Mr. Garcia—himself a fine artist and the inheritor of a great tradition and a great name—has some most promising pupils, and such singers as Miss Rosa Burn and Mr. Frederick Lippold show in what an excellent school they have been trained."—Daily Telegraph.

For Auditions, Appointments, &c., write,
59, Queen's Road, St. John's Wood, N.W.8.
(Hampstead 4597.)

A. MUS. T.C.L. JULY, 1924.

A Student of the Modern Correspondence College, writes :

"I am glad to inform you that I have been successful in passing the A. Mus. T.C.L. at the recent examination held in July. The marks I obtained are as follows :

ART OF TEACHING	...	70 %	} AVERAGE
MUSICAL RUDIMENTS	...	83 %
HARMONY	... ..	76 %
COUNTERPOINT	... ..	88 %
MUSICAL HISTORY	...	93 %
			82 %

"I should like to take this opportunity of expressing my appreciation of your system of coaching. I am particularly pleased with the result of my history paper, as that was certainly my weakest subject before taking up your correspondence course."

MODERN CORRESPONDENCE COLLEGE

A.R.C.M. A.R.C.O. L.R.A.M.

Candidates for the above cannot afford to neglect the enormous advantage of a Postal Course in my "From Brain to Keyboard System," to which many pupils attribute their success.

OPINIONS OF PUPILS.

"One of the greatest assets a pianist can have."

"Worth twenty times the fee charged."

"I have passed my examination with honours."

"The technical rules are alone worth the fee."

"I have acquired easy trills, at sixty."

"The exercises are a veritable treasure trove."

"The effect sometimes seems supernatural."

"To me it has been a veritable godsend."

"From Brain to Keyboard"

Macdonald Smith's System of Pianoforte Playing.

My illustrated book, "LIGHT ON PIANOFORTE PLAYING," will be gladly sent to any pianist. It fully explains the principles and advantages of the methods used in the System. When applying, please do not omit to state whether comparative beginner, average, or advanced pianist. The book will be sent free of charge, and post free.

M. MACDONALD SMITH, 19, BLOOMSBURY SQ., LONDON, W.C.1.

ILLUSTRATED LANTERN LECTURE

"FROM BRAIN TO KEYBOARD."

Come to Æolian Hall on October 2nd for my Winter Season Lecture. I shall be glad to answer inquiries there personally. Seats 2/4 from the Hall, usual ticket agencies, or from my own address.

ÆOLIAN HALL,
October 2nd, 8.0 p.m.

MODERN CORRESPONDENCE COLLEGE

PRINCIPAL:

ARTHUR MCALISTER, B.A. (CANTAB.).

M.C.C.

INDIVIDUAL TUITION -

MATRIC.:

113

JULY, 1924 - - 9

Recent Successes.

1st M.B. - - 8

A.R.C.O., F.R.C.O. - 24

L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M. - 16

* A. Mus. T.C.L. - 9

* Counterpoint ... 94 %

History ... 93 %

Art of Teaching ... 85 %

FREE

GUIDE TO

DEGREES and DIPLOMAS.

MODERN

CORR. COLLEGE.

"ST. MORITZ," 201, ILKESTON ROAD, NOTTINGHAM.

INDIVIDUAL COACHING BY CORRESPONDENCE.

DR. NORMAN SPRANKLING

Mus. Doc. (Lond.).

Individual Preparation for Mus. Doc., Mus. Bac., A.R.C.M., L.R.A.M., and all Diplomas of T.C.L. and R.C.O.

THIS MONTH.

1. London Mus. Doc. and Mus. Bac., Inter. and Final, Dec., 1924.
2. R.C.O. and T.C.L. Diplomas, Jan., 1925. Full Preparation.
3. L.R.A.M. and A.R.C.M. Full Preparation for Dec., 1924, and next April. Rud. and Harmony, Form and Teaching, "Special Paper Work," Touch, Fingering, &c.

Full preparation may now be commenced for 1st Mus. Bac. Durham, March, 1925.

PRACTICAL WORK—PERSONAL LESSONS IN BRISTOL AND LONDON.

NUMEROUS SUCCESSES.

These Correspondence lessons enable you to STUDY AT HOME, in your own time, and at your own convenience,

Each lesson is sent with a view to the special needs of the INDIVIDUAL student, who thus obtains a complete grip of everything essential to success, in the shortest possible time.

Candidates who are entering for the first time, and also those who have previously failed to pass any examination, should communicate with

DR. NORMAN SPRANKLING,
46, CLARENDON ROAD,
REDLAND, BRISTOL.

Note change of address—

Telephone: Bristol 3033.

HARMONIC AND ORNAMENTAL ANALYSIS

is one of the SUPREME needs of the MUSIC TEACHER.

Text-book harmony is only concerned with Figured Basses and the accompaniment of simple melodies. The more generally needed use of Harmony for purposes of analysis and interpretation will be found set forth in simple and easily understood language in

HARMONY FOR PIANISTS

or Harmony in Pianoforte Idiom without written exercises

BY DR. PERCY RIDEOUT,

D.Mus. Lond., A.R.C.M.

A course of instruction by CORRESPONDENCE in Chords and Ornamental devices, together with their Temperamental value as bearing on MUSICAL APPRECIATION and INTERPRETATION, the whole being based on and ILLUSTRATED by music written for the Pianoforte.

---

A COURSE OF TEN CORRESPONDENCE LESSONS AND EXAMINATION PAPERS

FEE - - - - £3 : 13 : 6

(Not available in book form).

---

For further particulars call or write,

THE CHARLES A. GILLETT
PIANOFORTE SCHOOL,

11, SOUTH MOLTON STREET, NEW BOND STREET, LONDON, W.1.

CAN YOU PLAY FROM MEMORY?

Many pianists and organists imagine that musical memory is a natural gift for which the only substitute is hours of hard, uninspired practice.

This is not the case. Musical memory can be acquired through correct training.

The MACKINNON MUSICAL MEMORY COURSE, written by a well-known concert pianist and teacher, brings the training of musical memory to such perfection, that any pianist or organist who has fifteen minutes a day to spare, can acquire a sound and reliable musical memory. Previous failure to memorise is of no importance.

After taking the COURSE players who were unable to memorise the easiest piece, play difficult music from memory without nervousness.

The COURSE is complete in SIX CORRESPONDENCE LESSONS. No drudgery is required. Every lesson is novel and fascinating. From the outset a repertoire of beautiful music is formed. Fill up the Coupon below, and send for free booklet to-day.

MACKINNON'S MUSICAL MEMORY COURSE.

EMPIRE HOUSE, 175 PICCADILLY, W.1.

IN SIX POSTAL LESSONS - FEE, £3:3:0

GUARANTEE

If, within four weeks from the receipt of the first lesson and before the receipt of the second, any Student feels that he or she has not already made definite progress as a result of taking the Course, Miss Mackinnon will unconditionally refund such Student's fees in full.

USE THIS COUPON
TO-DAY.

Extracts from a few of hundreds of testimonials received:

From a Church Organist:

Of the greatest assistance. Cannot fail to play from memory where your instructions are followed.

From a Cathedral Organist:

To all who find difficulty [in memorising Chants], I recommend this Memory Course.

From a Pianist:

Quite wonderful — could not memorise a single note before I started the Course. Can now play Scriabin from memory.

COUPON

MISS LILIAS MACKINNON, Empire House, 175, Piccadilly, W.1.

Please send me, without obligation, your free booklet on "MEMORY TRAINING."

Name.....

Address.....

80% FAILURES—WHY?

A recent examination resulted in this percentage of failures. The figures are as follows:

Candidates entered	...	224
Passed	...	44
Failed	...	180

Why so many failures? A writer in the Musical Times answers this question when he says "It is a regrettable thing that so many students do not realise that they must acquire what I will describe as the ability to hear with the mind. Without this, composition is impossible."

Examiners are now looking for a really musical working of the exercises. However good your ideas may be they will avail you nothing unless you are sure you are writing down what you are mentally hearing, that is, unless the written notes mean something to you as actual sounds. Could you write good English if you did not understand the meaning of the written word?

MENTAL HEARING.

My Course of Mental Hearing and Mental Study will enable unsuccessful candidates to turn their failure into success. I can help you as I am helping others, both in your practical and theoretical work—in Mental Hearing, Sight Reading, Transposition, Memorising, and the solo tests. I invite you to write to me.

Full particulars of Correspondence Course from

WALTER H. WATSON, F.R.C.O.,
GORDON COTTAGE, ELGIN.

MUS. BAC. AND MUS. DOC.

Full Postal Preparation
by DR. SPRANKLING'S
"Individual" System of Coaching.

LATEST SUCCESSES.

Mus. Doc.	-	-	4
Mus. Bac.	-	-	6
Mus. Bac. "Exercise"	-	-	4
(after preliminary Course in Modern Composition).
1st Mus. Bac.	-	-	8

For terms, &c.,

DR. NORMAN SPRANKLING,
Mus. Doc. (London),
46, CLARENDON ROAD, REDLAND, BRISTOL.

UNIVERSITY OF MANCHESTER. FACULTY OF MUSIC.

The Prospectus containing information as to the courses of study for the Mus. B. and Mus. D. degrees will be forwarded on application to the Internal Registrar. The Hargreaves Scholarship, of the value of £30 per annum and tenable for two years, is awarded on the results of the first Mus. B. Examination. The Session commences on October 2.

"The Tudor Galleries" (Sir Herbert Marshall & Sons, Ltd.), 69 and 71, Deansgate, Manchester.
Thursdays, October 16, 1924, to March 19, 1925.
Time: 5.40 to 7 p.m.

DR. KEIGHLEY'S CLASS

FOR

MUSIC TEACHERS

- (a) LECTURES.
- (b) DISCUSSIONS.
- (c) CRITICISM LESSONS.

LECTURERS:

Dr. BRODSKY, Mr. ARTHUR CATTERALL,
Mr. RICHARD EVANS, Mr. R. J. FORBES,
Mr. FRANK MERRICK, Mr. MAX MAYER,
Mr. PAUL LE VALLON, Dr. A. W. WILCOCK,
Dr. A. W. WILSON, and

DR. KEIGHLEY.

Fee for the Course of Twenty Meetings:
ONE GUINEA.

Syllabus from Secretary,
GEO. PARKER, F.R.C.O.,
35, Orchard Lane,
Leigh, Lancs.

DEGREES IN MUSIC.

EXPERT AND INDIVIDUAL TUITION
BY CORRESPONDENCE

FOR

Oxford Preliminary Arts, Durham Matriculation,
A.R.C.O., F.R.C.O., Mus. Bac., Mus. Doc.

Also for B.A. and B.Sc.

The Staff includes highly qualified Graduates in Music, Arts, and Science.

For Terms address:

MR. J. CHARLESTON, B.A. (Hons. Oxon. and Lond.),
14, Elsham Road, Kensington, W. 14.

CALISTHENICS

FOR THE MUSCLES USED IN SINGING

As taught and perfected for 20 years.

Astonishing increase of POWER, QUALITY, RANGE, and EASE of SINGING assured by five minutes' practice twice (better three times) daily.

By Correspondence, Fee £2 2s., for Three Lessons.

No more sore or relaxed throat, or strained voice.

THOS. CHURCH SAXBY, L.Mus.T.C.L.

3A, SEVEIRG BUILDINGS, LEWES.

PROFESSIONAL NOTICES.

MISS LYDIA JOHN

(A.R.A.M., L.R.A.M.), CONTRALTO.

Concerts, Oratorios, Organ Recitals, &c.
 Recital-Lectures of Folk-Songs, Elizabethan Songs, &c.
 Pupils received for Voice-Production and Singing.
 Prepared for L.R.A.M., Associated Board, &c.

15, Albion Road, London, N.W.6. Tel.: Hampstead, N.W.6.

HAROLD KNOWLTON

TENOR.

St. Paul's Cathedral, E.C.4.
 1, Hatherley Gardens, Crouch End, N. 8.

WILLIAM COLEMAN

(THE MANCHESTER BASS.)

Oratorio. Concerts. Lessons.
 Address: 18, Plymouth Avenue, Manchester, S.E.

VERNON HARRISS,

L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., Gold Medallist. BASS.
 Oratorio, Concerts. Vocal Coach and Adjudicator.
 Senior Music Master, Downside School, near Bath.

ARTHUR LEES

BASS.

Concerts, Recitals, Masonics, Oratorios, &c.
 "Ravenscroft," 120, Waldegrave Road, Brighton.

MR. HERBERT TRACEY

BASS.

8, Cavendish Mansions, E.5.

London Wall 4033.

MISS THELMA DANDRIDGE (A.R.C.M.),

'CELLIST.

Concerts, Pupils, &c., apply to "Inversnaid," Chinbrook Road,
 Grove Park, S.E.12. ('Phone: Lee Green 1707.)

ARTHUR MANGELSDORFF

SOLO PIANIST.

For terms, vacant dates, &c., apply to ARTHUR ELLARSHAW, 497, Coventry Road, Birmingham.

DR. F. H. WOOD

(Organist of Blackpool Parish Church),

COACHES FOR UNIVERSITY DEGREES.

Students' recent Successes include—

Durham Mus. D. (1923), Ex. and Final, both in the same year and at the first attempt. Mus. B. Ex. (1924). Also other Universities, Mus. D. (1922); Mus. B. (1923) and 1924 (2).

252, HORNEY ROAD, BLACKPOOL.

THE TRAINING OF TEACHERS.

CORRESPONDENCE COURSES IN

VOICE-PRODUCTION, covering the whole subject.
 FORM AND TEACHING, TOUCH, ACCOMPANIMENT,
 MUSICAL APPRECIATION, AND AURAL TRAINING.

Nearly 1000 Successes at L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., &amp;c.

MR. R. J. PITCHER, Mus. Bac., F.R.C.O., A.R.C.M.
 (Double Dip. Singing and Piano), L.R.A.M., Class A, Performer
 and Teacher.

Prof. Singing G.S.M., 1905-1915. Special Lect. on Mus. Appreciation to L.C.C.

"Recit. and its Rendering," 1s. 6d. "Vade Mecum for Singers," 6d.
 Send for prospectus, 21, Boundary Road, N.W.8.

'Phone: 1715 Maida Vale.

MUSICAL REVISER TO MESSRS. NOVELLO FOR THIRTY-NINE YEARS.

COMPOSERS' MSS.

REVISED AND PREPARED FOR PRINTING

H. ELLIOT BUTTON, "Harewood," Ardwick Road, N.W.2.

* * * The late Sir HUBERT PARRY and Sir FREDERICK BRIDGE permitted their names to appear, along with those of the following composers to whom reference is kindly permitted:—Sir EDWARD ELGAR, O.M.; Sir HENRY WALFORD DAVIES, Mus. Doc.

CAPTAIN PERCY BAKER, M.C., F.R.C.O.,

L. Mus. T.C.L. (Author of "Compend of Musical Knowledge,"
 "Studies in History and Form," &c.). Specialist in Tuition by post for T.C.L. and R.C.O. Essay Models, Sight Reading Courses, Study Aids, &c. Studies in Modulation, 3s.

Send for interesting Pamphlets on Methods.

HAZELDENE, TEWKESBURY.

DR. ALLISON instructed by Post Candidates who
 OBTAINED DEGREES OF MUS. B. and Mus. D. at Oxford,
 Cambridge, Dublin, London, and Durham Universities, Diplomas of
 L.L.C.M. (April, 1924), L.R.A.M., F.R.C.O., L. Mus. L.C.M.,
 A.R.C.M., Gold Medals, Silver Medals, Scholarships, Prizes, Certificates, and valuable professional appointments. Dr. Allison is willing to teach those who neither require nor desire to pass examinations.
 Harmony, Counterpoint, Orchestration and Analysis of Compositions
 by Post, to correspondents anywhere. Personal instruction in Theory, Singing, and Piano. 24, Park Range, Victoria Park, Manchester.

REVISION OF MUSICAL COMPOSITIONS.

Dr. Horton Allison, 24, Park Range, Victoria Park, Manchester.

MR. J. PERCY BAKER, Mus. B., Dunelm.,

F.R.A.M., gives Postal Tuition and prepares for Examinations.
 Personal Lessons (Pianoforte and Theory), at 14, Hanover Square, W.1
 Address, 12, Longley Road, Tooting Graveney, S.W.17.

SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE COURSES:—

- (1.) L.R.A.M. Paper Work.
- (2.) A.R.C.M. Paper Work.
- (3.) Interesting Courses of Study in Rudiments, Harmony, Form, &c.

L.R.A.M. Exams. 1910-24 ... 244 Correspondence Pupils successful.

A.R.C.M. Exams. 1914-24 ... 64 " " "

MR. E. H. BIBBY, Mus. Bac., L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M.,

Waterloo Buildings, Piccadilly, Manchester.

In response to many requests, Mr. BIBBY begs to announce that he has prepared the following additional CORRESPONDENCE COURSES:

- (1.) The "Mus. Bac." Degree.
- (2.) A.R.C.O. and F.R.C.O. Paper Work.
- (3.) A.T.C.L. and L.T.C.L. Paper Work.
- (4.) The Associated Board Examinations in Rudiments, Harmony, and Counterpoint.

(Address as above.)

MISS J. BLAKE, A.R.A.M., A.R.C.M. (Regd.)

Teacher of Singing), prepares pupils L.R.A.M. and A.R.C.M.
 Exams., as Teacher or Performer. Highest recommendations.—
 Studio, 139, New Bond Street, W.1.

L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M. SPECIAL COACHING by

ARTHUR ELLARSHAW, L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M. Pianist.
 Paper-work Postal. Address, 497, Coventry Road, Birmingham.

DR. A. C. PHILLIPS EMBLING, Mus. Doc.,

Dunelm. (1921), Mus. Bac., Oxon., F.R.C.O. Lessons by post
 for Diplomas and Degrees. 64, Wokingham Road, Reading.

MISS FREDA EVANS, L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M.,

L.T.C.L. (Late Pupil of Felix Swinstead), visits or receives Private Pupils for Pianoforte, Harmony, &c. Prospectus on application to 26, Granard Road, Wandsworth Common, S.W.12.

FREDERICK GREEN, L.R.A.M., ETC. Voice

Specialist, Vocal Coach, and Adjudicator. Preparation for
 L.R.A.M. c/o Rushworth & Dreaper, 11, Islington, Liverpool.

DR. CUTHBERT HARRIS, Mus. Doc., Dunelm.,

F.R.C.O. SPECIALIST IN CORRESPONDENCE
 TUITION. 405 Successes in Mus. D., Mus. B., F.R.C.O., and
 A.R.C.O., &c. 58, Avondale Road, Gorleston-on-Sea.

DR. HARRIS REVISES and PREPARES MSS.

FOR PUBLICATION. Accompaniments to Songs written.

MISS H. HEALE COACHES for all EXAM-

INATIONS IN MUSIC (at private residence or at West-End Studio), in Pianoforte, Harmony, Counterpoint, Fugue, Form,
 Orchestration, "Teaching," Modulation, Transposition, &c. For
 Terms, &c., apply Dunraven House, 41, Albert Bridge Road, S.W.11.

HERBERT HODGE, F.R.C.O., A.R.C.M.,

Organist and Choirmaster, St. Nicholas Cole Abbey, Queen
 Victoria Street, London, has, since 1908, made a speciality of coaching Candidates for the Organ Playing Examinations of the Royal College of Organists, and can arrange a private course of instruction
 (or single lessons) to organists visiting London, at St. Nicholas
 Cole Abbey. Many recent F.R.C.O. and A.R.C.O. successes.
 5, Streatham Place, S.W.2. Telephone: Streatham 2195.

DR. A. G. IGGULDEN, Mus. Doc. Dunelm., F.R.C.O.,

SPECIALIST IN CORRESPONDENCE COACHING.

Latest Successes: Durham, March, 1924—2 in 1st Mus. Bac. Sept., 1923
 —2 out of the 3 Mus. Doc. passes, and 4 out of the 6 Final Mus. Bac.
 passes. Also 6 Exercises, after prelim. course in composition. Over 150 Successes at Durham alone. The Durdans, Reigate.

DR. F. J. KARN (Mus. Bac. Cantab.; Mus. Doc. Toronto) continues to give lessons in Harmony and other Theoretical subjects, and prepares for all Musical Examinations. Compositions revised and Analyses written. Candidates prepared by Dr. Karn have gained the Mus. Bac. and Mus. Doc. degrees at the Universities and diplomas from the Musical Colleges.
Address: 106, Haverstock Hill, London, N.W.3.

DR. KNOWLES (Manchester 1919, Durham 1920) specialises in preparing candidates by post for the Paper-work of all examinations in music. Solutions, with methods of working. Address, 45, Churchgate, Bolton, Lancs.

MADAME LARKCOM, F.R.A.M., Prof. Singing, R. A. Music, has resumed her lessons in Singing at the Wigmore Hall Studios, 40, Wigmore Street, W.1.

J. H. MAKINSON, F.R.C.O., A.R.C.M., A.T.C.L. Correspondence Tuition in Paper Work (T.C.L. and other Diplomas). Terms moderate. Latest success, A.T.C.L., July, 1924. Kent House, Lake Road, Ambleside.

DR. ORLANDO A. MANSFIELD, Mus. Doc., University of Toronto; Mus. Doc., Trinity University, Toronto; F.R.C.O.; F.A.G.O., &c. 15, Sydenham Villas Road, Cheltenham. Correspondence Lessons. Revision of MSS. Scoring, editing, and arranging. Examination pieces analysed and annotated.

MISS F. HELENA MARKS, Author of "The Sonata: Its Form and Meaning," prepares for L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., and all other examinations, Pianoforte, Harmony, "Form and Teaching," &c. Personal or Correspondence, Lessons in all Paper-Work subjects, including those for L.R.A.M. "Aural Training and Sight-Singing," and A.R.C.M. in "The Teaching of Musical Appreciation," &c. Pupils received and visited for the Pianoforte. Many recent successes L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., &c.
10, Matheson Road, London, W.14.

DR. H. H. L. MIDDLETON, Mus. Doc., F.R.C.O., L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M. Twenty-five years' experience in Private Tuition and Coaching for Degrees. More than 800 of Dr. Middleton's Pupils have obtained Degrees at the Universities, R.A.M., R.C.M., and R.C.O. Address, 60, Berners Street, W.1.

W. J. FREDERICK PUGH, L.R.A.M., Prepares for L.R.A.M. (Aural Culture and Voice Culture Diplomas), A.R.C.M. (Appreciation Diploma). Recent Successes, 34, Wilmingdon Avenue, Chiswick, W.4.

JOHN ROBERTS has VACANCIES for a few PUPILS in VOICE PRODUCTION. "R. J., c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

DR. TAYLOR'S POSTAL PUPILS HAVE passed Mus. Bac. 1st and final. A.R.C.O.; L.R.A.M.; A.T.C.L. Pupil gained the Stillie Bursary at Glasgow for Counterpoint. Latest success, A.R.C.O. for 1924. Portland Place, Lancaster.

DR. PERCY WOOD, Mus. Doc. Oxon., F.R.C.O. SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE COURSES:
(1) Elementary Harmony and Counterpoint.
(2) F.R.C.O. and A.R.C.O.
(3) L.R.A.M. and A.R.C.M.
(4) Mus. Bac. Degree.
Several recent Mus. B. successes at Durham.

R.C.O. EXAMINER says: "Your system is undoubtedly an excellent one."

SUCCESS GUARANTEED—given any pupils with the requisite musical ability for the examination in view.

R.C.O. SUCCESSSES IN PAPER WORK:

6 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1914.	11 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1914.
6 F.R.C.O., July, 1914.	12 A.R.C.O., July, 1914.
4 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1915.	5 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1915.
5 F.R.C.O., July, 1915.	9 A.R.C.O., July, 1915.
2 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1916.	3 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1916.
3 F.R.C.O., July, 1916.	5 A.R.C.O., July, 1916.
2 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1917.	2 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1917.
3 F.R.C.O., July, 1917.	4 A.R.C.O., July, 1917.
2 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1918.	2 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1918.
4 F.R.C.O., July, 1918.	2 A.R.C.O., July, 1918.
1 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1919.	3 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1919.
3 F.R.C.O., July, 1919.	3 A.R.C.O., July, 1919.
4 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1920.	10 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1920.
3 F.R.C.O., July, 1920.	6 A.R.C.O., July, 1920.
3 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1921.	7 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1921.
6 F.R.C.O., July, 1921.	8 A.R.C.O., July, 1921.
5 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1922.	5 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1922.
4 F.R.C.O., July, 1922.	5 A.R.C.O., July, 1922.
8 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1923.	6 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1923.
7 F.R.C.O., July, 1923.	10 A.R.C.O., July, 1923.
7 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1924.	9 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1924.
3 F.R.C.O., July, 1924.	10 A.R.C.O., July, 1924.

"Tralee," Warwick Road, Cliftonville, Margate.

MISS MARGARET YOUNG, L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M. (Pianoforte); A.T.C.L. (Vocal and Pianoforte). Registered Teacher, T.R.C. Postal Tuition for Theoretical, above Diplomas; also General Musical Knowledge and Advice. Bawburgh, Norwich.

GENTLEMAN, an Associate of the Royal Academy of Music, is desirous of an appointment as pianoforte teacher in a Ladies' College or Conservatoire. Ten years' experience as director and head of pianoforte department in American and Canadian Colleges. Has also had several years' experience as Conductor of Orchestral and Choral Classes. Address, "F. R., c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

CONCERT PIANIST desires Post as Teacher in School, College, or Conservatorium. London or Suburbs. Brilliant English and Continental Press Opinions. "E. P., c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

W. G. WEBBER, F.R.C.O. Recitalist, &c. Preparation for Exams. Organ lessons given on new four-manual Willis. Address, Christ Church, Westminster Bridge Road, London, S.E.1.

MODERN CORR. COLLEGE.

ASSISTANT TUTOR REQUIRED.

Hours, 10-12. Must attend at the College daily. State age, qualifications, and salary required. Mark envelopes, "Tutorship." Good opening for a keen man.

"St. Moritz," 201, Ilkeston Road, Nottingham.

CORRESPONDENCE LESSONS given in Pianoforte Tuning by expert Tuner, equal to personal instruction, little cost. Write, W. Cawson, Bankfield House, 117, Armley Road, Leeds.

EASTBOURNE.

DOWNSMEADE BOARDING SCHOOL FOR BOYS. Modern education with special musical education if desired. Prospectus on application to the Headmaster, F. E. Wilson, F.R.C.O., L.R.A.M.

SOLO and CHORUS BOYS supplied (CITY OF LONDON CHOIR COLLEGE). Apply to Francis Sutton, F.R.C.O., St. Stephen's Walbrook, E.C.4.

ALTO and TENOR (SOLO) WANTED for St. Michael's, Cornhill, E.C. Good readers essential. Salary, £20. Apply, Dr. Darke, St. Michael's, Cornhill, E.C.

SOPRANO (Lady) WANTED at once for St. John's Presbyterian Church, Kensington. Must read well. Two Sunday Services, weekly rehearsal, and occasional Services as required. Salary, £18 per annum. Apply, stating experience, to Charles R. Willis, 9, Milman Road, N.W.6.

ALTOS, TENORS, BASSES WANTED.—Small honorarium (min. £10) given. Write, stating experience, Choirmaster, St. Paul's Church, Vicarage Gate, Kensington, W.8.

TENOR REQUIRED, ST. STEPHEN'S, East Putney. £12. Apply, A. R. Saunders, 14, Geraldine Road, Wandsworth, S.W.18.

VOLUNTARY TENOR WANTED for good East-End Choir. Bach's "Christmas Oratorio" and "St. John" Passion in practice. Choirmaster, 32, Marlborough Road, E.18.

BASSES (Voluntary) WANTED for the Choir of St. John's, Waterloo Road, S.E.1. Expenses paid up to £5 per annum. Apply, Arthur M. Stacey, F.R.C.O., 18, Eton Villas, Hampstead, N.W.3.

MR. HERBERT HODGE will give an Organ Recital (1,824th), at St. Nicholas Cole Abbey, on September 2, and every Tuesday at 1 p.m.

ORGANIST AND CHOIRMASTER WANTED for Ferme Park Baptist Church, Hornsey. Organ reconstructed. Salary, £80 per annum. Applications, giving full particulars, to "S., 18, Albany Road, Stroud Green, N.4.

ORGANIST and CHOIRMASTER REQUIRED for Bayswater Presbyterian Church. Apply, with copies of testimonials, to Mr. W. Morison, 23/2, Gledhow Gardens, S.W.5.

ORGANIST-CHOIRMASTER WANTED for Lee, S.E. Fine four-manual organ. Churchman. Disciplinary. Apply, Vicar, 39, Lee Park, S.E.3.

ORGANIST and CHOIRMASTER WANTED for St. George's Parish Church, Belfast. Must be a good Churchman, and experienced in training Boys. Services Choral. Fine Organ. Good opening for teaching. Salary, £120. Apply (copies of testimonials only), Rev. Canon H. D. Murphy, D.D., 39, Wellington Park, Belfast (Northern Ireland).

ORGANIST requires post at Nonconformist (preferred) Church in London district. "A. E. P., c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

ORGANIST-CHOIRMASTER.—Experienced, Catholic, seeks appointment. S.W. London preferred. "D. F.," 7, Station Approach, Clapham Junction, S.W.11.

DEPUTY-ORGANIST, free in September, recently at West-End Church, would like to hear of London Organist requiring assistance. Late pupil of Cathedral Organist. Experienced. Excellent testimonials. Miss Mattinson, St. Michael's Vicarage, Stockwell, S.W.9.

R.C.O. DIPLOMAS—Up-to-date advice, lessons and practice on similar R.C.O. organ in West of England Town. July successes, Two A.R.C.O., and One F.R.C.O.: Paper Work. "F.R.C.O.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

ORGANIST-CHOIRMASTER requires appointment, Country Town, Midlands preferred. Anglican Music. Recitalist, Diplomas. Good testimonials and references. Organist, 71, Doxey, Stafford.

LADIES, GENTLEMEN (A.T.B.), Voluntary, Wanted for Festival in September. Solo or chorus. Choir Secretary, All Saints', Sumner Road, S.E.15.

£100 SINGING and PIANOFORTE COMPETITION. Souvenir Cup, Medals and Cash Prizes. Oct. 25th and Nov. 1st. Prospectus from Secretary, the "Clifton Cooke Competition," 26M, Guilford Street, W.C.1.

PIANIST wishes to form Pianoforte Quintet in London. Those willing to assist please communicate. "A. E. F.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

TO RETIRING ORGANISTS.

WANTED TO PURCHASE, a good TEACHING CONNECTION with Organ Appointment. Write, "M.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, London, W.1.

ORGANS (New and Second-hand) for SALE.—Electric and pneumatic action up-to-date. Built or reconstructed. Bedwell & Son, The Cambridge Organ Works, Cambridge.

CHURCH ORGANS STANDARDISED.—Two Manuals, Pneumatic Pedals, various sizes; specially built. Five to fifteen stops. Introduced to meet the requirements of the times at minimum of cost. W. E. Richardson & Sons, Central Organ Works, Manchester, S.W.

PIPE ORGANS 'Enlarged, Re-voiced, Repaired, and Tuned. Attractive Terms. Henry Morgan & Son, Church Organ Builders, 19, Cowdrey Road, Wimbledon, London. Est. 1896.

BARGAIN.—Apollo Reed Organ, nearly new. 10 full rows reeds, Two manuals and pedals (R.C.O.). Seen London. "W. H.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

MUSIC COMPOSERS and LYRIC WRITERS.—The Cosmos Publishing Co. are open to consider Songs, &c., with a view to publication. Send MSS. with stamp for reply, to Glenholme, The Common, Hesse.

MUSIC COPIED neatly and accurately. Transposition, Band-Parts, &c. Gordon Jacob, A.R.C.M., 1, Homefield Road, S.W.19.

MUSIC COPIED, neat work, Transposition and Duplicating. E.W. Cartwright, 17, Belvedere Rd., Bournemouth.

MUSIC COPIED, Orchestral Parts, Transposition. N. Langley, 16, Shrewsbury Road, West Kirby, Cheshire.

MUSIC COPIED.—12-stave page, 6d. (transposition extra). Neat and accurate. Andrew V. Wilson, 51, Connaught Avenue, Mutley, Plymouth, Devon.

FOR SALE.—VIOLIN by Matthew Hardie, fine tone. £45. Miss Treweek, 4, Woodlane, Falmouth.

SINGING.—A long-felt want. Very many lessons saved by SPECIAL NEW PAPER. Students taught how to obtain the full Singing Voice. Enclose P.O. 5s. to "Singing," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

THE UNKNOWN TRUTH ABOUT THE VOICE AND ITS DEVELOPMENT. By E. DAVIDSON PALMER, Mus. Bac., Oxon. Showing the prevailing Error in the Training of Men's Voices, and the primary cause of Voice-Failure in Singers and Public Speakers. Post free, 1s. (Postal Order). Address: 11, Grazebrook Road, Stoke Newington, N.16.

RUDYARD KIPLING'S RECESSIONAL HYMN, Set to Music by ROWLAND H. WILLIAMS, Price 2d., post free. Special Prices for quantities. ESCOTT & CO., Ltd., 67, Newman Street, London, W.1.

BASSES and BARITONES should buy "SONGS OF THE NIGHT" (Oakley). Two sets: Nos. 1 to 4 and Nos. 5 to 7. Price 2s. each set. Weekes & Co., 14, Hanover St., W.1.

TENOR VOCALISTS should buy song "WHO IS SYLVIA" (Oakley). Compass E to G. Price 2s. Weekes & Co., 14, Hanover Street, W.1., and all music-sellers.

L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., AURAL TESTS. Special important paper. Success assured. This paper gives details how to work. Send 4s. 6d. to "Aural Tests," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

VIOLONCELLO STUDIES—Scales in Variations.

Pro. 'Cellist, R.A.M. and R.C.M. states:—"I think your studies very ingenious and certainly calculated to improve Tone and Tonality and strengthen Fingers and Thumb, and Excellent as exercises in Time varieties." Copies, 2s. 6d., post free.

J. LOXSTON, 2, Somerset Street, Kingsdown, Bristol.

ESSAY.—A.R.C.O. (Jan., 1925) on "ENGLISH FOLK-SONG AND DANCE." Excellent Series of Six Model Essays. Valuable hints on writing. Success assured. Send 4s. 6d. to "Essays," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour St., W.1.

MUSICAL COMPOSITIONS REVISED.

LYRICS SET TO MUSIC, MELODIES HARMONIZED, MUSIC TRANPOSED AND COPIED, BAND PARTS WRITTEN, MSS. PREPARED FOR PUBLICATION BY A MASTER HAND, ACCOMPANIMENTS OF DISTINCTION WRITTEN TO SONGS.

For terms, write, A. CARRINGTON BRIGGS, Glennholme, The Common, Hesse, E. Yorks.

PIANO PEDALS, with Octave Coupler

This wonderful invention supersedes all Piano Pedals, and is a Master Patent.

St. George's Hall, Liverpool, 9th April, 1921.

"The simplicity of the attachment, and the clever sixteen-feet, eight-feet, or both combined, 'OPTIONAL OCTAVE' contrivance, astonished me.

"I was delighted with the Pedal touch and with the variety in that touch, which your Attachment makes possible. It is very responsive to the movements of the feet, and is reliable."

HERBERT F. ELLINGFORD, Mus. Bac., Oxon., F.R.C.O.

Owing to increased output, we have reduced the price of our Popular Model to 14 guineas cash. Deferred payments if desired.

Write for Lists, Prices, and Clients' Opinions, and References to

THE MALKIN PATENT PEDAL CO., LTD.,
NEWCASTLE-UNDER-LYME.

London address: 11, Ashlake Road, Streatham, S.W.16.

THE TECHNIQUER

FOR STRETCH, STRENGTH, AND SUPPLENESS.

We have . . . investigated . . . 'THE TECHNIQUER' . . . and it seems to us it entirely meets the needs of an instrumentalist in a scientific and reliable manner. The inventor . . . backs his claims by . . . convincing testimonials from such well-known men as Lamond, Pouishoff, Dyke, Walenn, and many others. To those who have small stretch or but little time for practice, we advise they should look into the matter for themselves. Mr. Pitcher . . . an L.R.A.M. as a public performer, approaches the matter from a highly scientific and experienced point of view."—Extract from The Strad, March, 1924.

"Hand Development," with numerous photos, 1s. 6d.

Send for full particulars, &c.—

Miss F. J. FITCH, A.R.C.M., A.R.C.O. (Sec.),
21, Boundary Road, N.W.8. 'Phone: Maida Vale 1715.

TO PIANISTS, ORGANISTS, VIOLINISTS, ETC.

"SIMPLEXA" Pocket Finger Trainer

(Registered).

A MOST EFFICIENT APPLIANCE FOR INCREASING STRETCH, INDEPENDENCE, FLEXIBILITY, and STRENGTH OF FINGERS.
Post free 1s. 9d., with full instructions.

"SIMPLEXA," 7, YEW VILLAS, THAMES ST., WEYBRIDGE, SURREY.

NEW PUBLICATIONS

By T. TERTIUS NOBLE.

816. NIGHT. S.A.T.B.

817. TO MY LOVE. T.T.B.B.

818. WHEN I AM DEAD, MY DEAREST. S.A.T.B.

819. SAVE, LORD, OR WE PERISH. S.A.T.B.

820. SAVE, LORD, OR WE PERISH. T.T.B.B.

821. BUT NOW, THUS SAITH THE LORD. S.A.T.B.

Price Fourpence each.

822. MAGNIFICAT AND NUNC DIMITTIS IN B FLAT.

Price Sixpence.

BANKS & SON, MUSIC PUBLISHERS, YORK.

BECHSTEIN PIANOS

THE BECHSTEIN PIANO needs little recommendation to cultured tastes. Its beautiful tone and incomparable touch—qualities which have gained for it the esteem of every music-lover, and have set a standard to the world—are as exquisite and as characteristic as ever.

Write or call for Catalogue.

126, NEW BOND STREET
LONDON, W. I.
TELEPHONE: MAYFAIR 2653

PIANOS

GRAND and UPRIGHT

By High Grade Makers.

NEW AND SECOND-HAND FOR SALE OR HIRE PURCHASE.

CHAS. STILES & CO.
74-76, SOUTHAMPTON ROW
LONDON, W.C. I.
Phone: MUSEUM 439.

STEINWAY

MUSIC LOVERS
CAN OBTAIN
PERFECT RESULTS
ONLY FROM THE PERFECT INSTRUMENT
THE STEINWAY.

115-117, WIGMORE STREET,
LONDON, W. I.

MOLLENHAUER FLUTES AND PICCOLOS

MESSRS. J. MOLLENHAUER & SONS possess a hundred years' world-wide reputation as makers of first-class Wood-Wind Instruments. Their Flutes and Piccolos are unrivalled in purity of tone, pleasing intonation, and solidity of mechanism, and are consequently used by the leading artists in every land.

Catalogue from—

FAUPEL BROTHERS,
4 & 5, OLD CHANGE, CHEAPSIDE, LONDON, E.C. 4.
Telephone: City 5693.
Far Eastern inquiries to be addressed to our Hong-Kong office,
P.O. Box 631, Hong-Kong.

MUSIC FOR STRING ORCHESTRA.

JUST PUBLISHED.

J. S. BACH. PRELUDE AND FUGUE IN G MINOR.
Part II., No. 16, of "The Forty-Eight."
Arranged for String Orchestra (or Quartet) by
JULIUS HARRISON.
Score, 2s. 6d. Parts, 3s. 4d.

ERNEST AUSTIN. THE VICAR OF BRAY. Variations.
Score, 9s. Parts, 9s.
ADAM CARSE. BARBARA ALLEN. Variations.
Piano Conductor, 2s. 3d. String Parts, 6s.
J. D. DAVIS. SONG OF EVENING.
Score, 4s. Parts, 3s. 4d.

T. F. DUNHILL. THE CHIDDINGFOLD SUITE.
Score, 7s. 6d. Parts, 9s. 9d.

EDWARD ELGAR. ELEGY.
Score, 2s. 6d. Parts, 1s. 8d.
INTRODUCTION AND ALLEGRO (Op. 47). Quartet
and Orchestra.
Score, 16s.; Quartet Parts, 6s.; Orchestral Parts, 10s. 6d.

PERCY FLETCHER. TWO BAGATELLES.
Parts, 3s. 6d.

C. H. H. PARRY. SUITE IN F. (Lady Radnor's Suite.)
Score, 7s. Parts, 7s. 6d.

PERCY PITT. AIR DE BALLET.
Score, 3s. Parts, 3s. 4d.

HENRY PURCELL. SUITE FROM DRAMATIC MUSIC.
Edited by ALBERT COATES.
Score, 1s. 6d. Parts, 2s. 8d.

TWO SUITES FROM "THE GORDIAN KNOT UNTIED."

Edited by GUSTAV HOLST.
(With additional wind and drum parts ad lib.
MS. on hire.)

No. 1. Score, 4s. Parts, 2s. 8d.
No. 2. Score, 4s. Parts, 2s. 8d.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

THE "DISCUS" REGD. ORGAN BLOWER

THE QUIET EFFICIENCY OF THE "DISCUS"—

Blower is largely responsible for its widespread adoption in Cathedrals and Churches at home and abroad. Nearly a thousand are now in use. Apart from its quietness of working the "Discus" is a very attractive financial proposition. It saves the wages of a blower, and gives the organist the opportunity for rehearsal at all times. Any organ, large or small, can be fitted with the "Discus," and the motive power may be either electric motor, gas, or oil engine. Constructed of metal throughout, well designed and of the best workmanship. Its reliability and efficiency are guaranteed.

AS SUPPLIED TO WESTMINSTER ABBEY, YORK MINSTER, ETC., ETC.

WRITE FOR NEW BOOKLET.

MADE BY

B. WATKINS AND WATSON

ORGAN BLOWING SPECIALISTS FOR THE PAST THIRTY YEARS.

Designers and Manufacturers of all types of Hydraulic Engines, Gears, and Fittings for Organ blowing.

WHITE LION STREET, LONDON, N.1.

ESTIMATES SUBMITTED FREE.

Telegrams: "HYDISBLOW, ISLING, LONDON."

Telephone: NORTH 2039.

JUST PUBLISHED.

EMPIRE SONG BOOK

A COLLECTION OF SUITABLE MUSIC FOR CHILDREN'S FESTIVALS WHICH IS SO ARRANGED THAT IT MAY BE PERFORMED WITH OR WITHOUT ACTIONS.

"SHE STANDS A THOUSAND-WINTERED TREE"

"AN EMPIRE SONG"

AND THE

MEDLEYS

COMPOSED BY

PERCY E. FLETCHER.

(PRICE ONE SHILLING.)

Vocal Parts (Staff and Tonic Sol-fa Notations combined), Sixpence.

Orchestral Parts may be obtained.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

VOICE TRAINING.

A Special Course of TEN CORRESPONDENCE LESSONS (named the "Simplex" Course), covering the whole range of Voice Production. Interesting, concise, and easy to follow. Invaluable to Teachers and Students alike.

Dame Clara Butt writes: "I advise all would-be Singers and all interested in the Teaching of Singing to take the 'Simplex' Course. They will find it most helpful."

Mr. Ben Davies writes: "The ideas which comprise the 'Simplex' System of Voice Training are most excellent, and I certainly think that all who apply themselves diligently to these Lessons will greatly benefit thereby."

For Full Particulars address: MR. E. H. BIBBY, Mus. Bac.,
Waterloo Buildings, Piccadilly, Manchester.

JUST PUBLISHED.

No. 99.—NOVELLO'S MUSIC PRIMERS.

PIANOFORTE ACCOMPANIMENT

BY

WELTON HICKIN

Fellow and Professor, Royal Academy of Music.

CONTENTS.

Technical Proficiency—Artistic Imagination—Ensemble—
Balance of Tone—Phrasing—Vital Notes—Pedalling—
Recitations with Music—Reading at Sight—Transposition—Harmonization—Recitative—Modulation—Accompaniment studied in detail, &c.

PRICE ... FOUR SHILLINGS.

Paper Boards, 5s.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

No. 63.—NOVELLO'S MUSIC PRIMERS.

BREATHING

FOR

VOICE-PRODUCTION

(Re-written and brought up to date).

PART I.]

OF

EURHYTHM: THOUGHT IN ACTION

BY

H. H. HULBERT,

Capt. R.A.M.C., M.A. Oxford, M.R.C.S., L.R.C.P., &amp;c.

Price ... Three Shillings.

Paper Boards, 4s.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

SHORTLY TO BE PUBLISHED.

FINAL BOOK

OF THE

BREARE VOCAL SERIES,

No. 5.

ENTITLED:

"VOCAL ANALYSES:

SENSITISING BREATH,
EMOTIONAL EVOLUTION."

Price Five Shillings.

PUBLISHERS:

London: SIMPKIN, MARSHALL, HAMILTON,
KENT & CO.

Harrogate: R. ACKRILL.

TRINITY COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

President:

THE RT. HON. THE EARL OF SHAFTESBURY, K.P., G.C.V.O.

Director of Studies: C. W. PEARCE, M.A., Mus. D.

Director of Examinations: E. F. HORNER, Mus. D.

The following CANDIDATES were SUCCESSFUL at the HIGHER EXAMINATIONS held at the College and at certain Centres in April and July last.

FELLOWSHIP (F.T.C.L.).—Ena Kathleen Browne, Frank E. I. Bilbe.

LICENTIATES IN MUSIC (L.Mus. T.C.L.).—Ena K. Browne, Agnes A. Forth, Alfred Morris, Edwin W. Wilders.

LICENTIATES (L.T.C.L.).

PIANOFORTE.—Gladys J. Agarwala, Sybil E. Adams, Arthur Berry, Vera K. Butlin, Gweneth E. Bean, Lily Butler, James M. Bailey, Elsie B. Bell, Elsie E. Clarke, Frederick V. Curtis, Dorothy M. Cone, Zena F. Cuff, Doris E. Cook, Louise M. Dodd, Wilfrid G. Dean, Horace C. Deacon, Grace A. Dorban, Edith B. Flowers, Agnes A. Forth, Fred C. Fletcher, Vera C. Guyver, Muriel E. Howard, Gilbert Hart, Polly Hillaby, Doris I. Harrison, Douglas C. Hart Margaret E. Judd, Gladys M. Jacks, Henry A. Kerby, Emily D. Katz, Winifred E. M. Lloyd, Edith C. Lusby, Beatrice M. Leech, Mavis H. Light, Constance N. Newton, Jennie O'Connor, Kitty Owen, Arthur W. Place, Winifred E. Porter, Eileen S. H. Palmer, Lucie L. Philpott, Theodora-B. Rawson, Agnes G. M. Shearstone, Jean M. Saunders, Dorothea R. Sharman, Laurance G. Shrive, Constance M. Suffling, Donald G. Saunders, John Smith, Minnie Shaw, Kathleen H. Thompson, Florence A. D. Tucker, Constance L. Taylor, Gwendolin D. M. Wright, Gwendolin Wragg, Eric Whiteside, Thomas E. Willacy.

VIOLIN.—Geraldine M. Nolan.

SINGING.—Violet M. Beach, Rica B. Hinton-Stewart, Francis R. Mitchell, Dorothy Peers.

ORGAN.—Samuel E. Hall, Montague T. Matthews, Charles G. Pickard, Henry W. Stubbington, F.R.C.O.

VIOLONCELLO.—Miriam F. Anglin.

ELOCUTION.—Marion Allan, Gladys Barnes, Joyce E. Bennett.

ASSOCIATES IN MUSIC (A. Mus. T.C.L.).

Eleanor W. Baillie, Phyllis E. Baker, Florence N. Daniels, Walter S. Forrest, Daisy M. Gore, James G. C. Graves, Allan Greenhalgh, William Humphrey, Albert E. Vaughan, Frank Whatmough.

ASSOCIATES (A.T.C.L.).

PIANOFORTE.—Eliza S. Arthur, Percy G. Arnold, Arthur J. Aston, Elizabeth Atkinson, Olive M. Abbott, Thomas F. Blay, Dorothy Beck, Annie Barber, Winifred V. Baskcomb, Kathleen E. Bennion, Mabel Broadhurst, Joan M. Barton, Mary H. Beaumont, Frank E. I. Bilbe, Walter Bansall, Eva Bennion, Kathleen A. I. Blair, Josiah Brailsford, Rupert Baldwin, Sidney A. Blake, Annie Barber, Christine Bell, Alice Blackledge, James Butler, Dorothy Clare, Dorothy H. Cole, Lena H. Crossley, Cyril R. Criddle, Julia E. F. Cave, Adeline Chiles, Blanche Clarkson, Verula M. E. Culpin, Kathleen Clarke, Richard H. Collihole, Olive H. Coombs, Robert W. C. Custance, Florence M. Davidson, Davey Davies, Margaret Davis, Marjorie C. Donaldson, Theresa E. Davies, Evelyn M. Diver, Jessie I. McC. Douglas, Joan Duke, Barbara O. Davidson, Evelyn M. Dodge, Mabel S. Dally, Nellie Edwards, Constance Edinborough, Dona M. M. Egerton, Marjorie M. Essam, Eunice Evans, Marjorie K. Ebsworth, Winifred L. Fletcher, Vera A. Farmer, Nora Fletcher, Christine Gibb, Josef A. Gazey, Esther Gibbard, Alice H. Graves, Beatrice Gilbert, Phyllis M. Glossop, Iris Gough, Joseph E. Harper, Kathleen F. Harvey, Marjorie E. Harrison, Ethel W. Hart, Marie Hartley, Alice C. Haynes, Kathleen C. Hayward, Eric N. Hodges, Elizabeth E. Holloway, Margaret M. Howard, Louisa A. Hull, Percy Haigh, Ethel E. Hilditch, John T. Hodgkinson, Wilfred Irving, Amy F. Jackson, Evan Jenkinson, Hilda Jones, John A. Jones, Audrey H. Kidd, Catherine E. B. Kimberley, Eva Kiss, Kathleen D. Leonard, Arthur D. Logan, Madge Medley, Annie McNeill, Edith M. Malins, Nellie M. McLeod, Phyllis D. H. Montgomery, Helen E. MacIntosh, Isabella W. W. MacQueen, Dorothy W. Mansfield, Rose A. Minard, Jessica Neale, Gwendoline A. Osborn, Isabella Pounder, Ethel G. Priotor, Wilfred H. Parry, Kathleen Phipps, Margaret Plumridge, Jane L. Pawson, Frances E. M. Parker, William A. Rogers, Corinna A. Rolfe, Dorothy Randell, Eva M. Ramsey, Beatrice Ralphs, Beryl Reynolds, Winifred E. Richards, Minnie M. Riddle, Muriel Seago, Marjorie D. Simpson, Henry L. Springett, Constance M. Shaw, Winifred N. Smith, Leslie E. Southgate, Maurice Senior, Lily W. Shrubsall, Lieba P. Smollan, Eleanor N. Sprague, Winifred M. Stubbington, Florence E. Taylor, Robert Tweddle, Mabel D. Thurston, John A. H. Taylor, John H. Thomas, Florence M. Thomas, Norman C. T. Turner, Madeline E. M. Thetford, Beatrice H. Vickers, Lillian Varley, Phyllis K. Vawser, Ghislaine M. Ward, Ethel B. Weary, Edith A. Westbrook, Wilfred R. Wood, Elsie A. C. Wall Ruby Williams, Amy B. White, Dorothy H. Watts, Gladys M. M. Wilding, Jane Yates.

ORGAN.—George E. Ansell, Alfred E. Etchells, James S. Faulds, Henry Hough, Muriel E. Harris, Fred Morley, Benjamin Powell, Stanley V. S. Pearce, Robert C. Warden.

VIOLIN.—Gladys B. Noon, Marian E. Pulley, Francis B. Stone, Gladys N. Tynger.

VIOLONCELLO.—Dorothy C. Bishenden.

SINGING.—Mrs. Ailsa M. Bradley, Elsie R. Billings, Arthur Grange, Dorothy L. Gaylard, Florence H. Leach, Peter Macdonald, Sibella L. Merriman.

(Continued on page 784.)

TRINITY COLLEGE OF MUSIC (contd.).ASSOCIATES (A.T.C.L.) (contd.).

ELOCUTION.—Constance A. R. Howarth, Winifred Hyde, Mina C. Key, Mabel G. Lawrence, Doris E. Parry, Gladwyn Stephenson, Freda Stanforth, Eva V. Vernon, Doris W. Ward.

CERTIFICATES.

THEORY AND PRACTICE OF COMPOSITION.—Robert S. Clarke, Dorothea E. N. Flawn (Hons.), Leslie H. Goldsmith, Norah Head, Margaret M. Howard, Marion E. Jarney, David R. Jones, William F. Lunn, Francis C. R. Sealey, John T. Watson, Andrew V. Wilson.

PIANOFORTE.—Irene M. Bowell, Ada A. F. Bruton, Winifred G. Bearman, Edith Broadbent, Florence M. Cole, Horace C. Deacon (Hons.), Harold Dickinson, Daphne B. Deller, Jessie I. McC. Douglas, Nellie Edwards, Hilda L. Foster, Doreen W. Farrow, Esther A. Gibbard, Percy S. Glead, Freda M. Good, Muriel E. Green, Florence I. Galley, William Holden, Martha Henderson, Grace M. Hillier, Gladys Howe, Bessie Hunking, Cissie Jewell, Hilda Jones, Alice Jarman, Marjorie S. Jones, Marjorie McMurray, Annie McNeill, Madeleine Perret, Nellie M. Rose, Madge Ridler, Corinna A. Rolfe, Clarice G. Smith, Gwladys E. Thomas, Horace Townsend (Hons.).

ORGAN.—James S. Faulds, William H. B. Harrison, Robert C. Warden.

VIOLIN.—Doris Williams.

SINGING.—Margaret Usher.

EXAMINERS.—H. L. Balfour, Mus. B., W. H. Brereton, Prof. J. C. Bridge, M.A., Mus. D., Avalon Collard, Sir Frederic Cowen, Mus. D., W. Creser, Mus. D., Harry Duxbury, Edward d'Evry, Paul Edmonds, Dawson Freer, F. J. Gostelow, H. A. Harding, Mus. D., D. E. F. Horner, Mus. D., Cairns James, Charlton Keith, Albert W. Ketelbey, L. Lebell, J. Charles Long, Mus. B., E. Medd-Hall, Albert Mallinson, A. Mistowski, Mus. D., G. O'Connor-Morris, G. Oldroyd, Mus. D., C. W. Pearce, M.A., Mus. D., Louis Pecsai, G. W. Punter, E. Stanley Roper, B.A., Mus. B., Alec Rowley, Wilfrid Sanderson, Mus. B., J. Speaight, A. J. Slocombe, Sir Richard Terry, Mus. D., Anderson Tyrer, Charles Vincent, Mus. D., G. F. Vincent, Maud A. Winter, J. Warriner, Mus. D.

The next Diploma Examinations will take place in January, 1925, at the College in London and certain Centres: last day of entry December 6th.

Particulars of the Teaching Department, with list of Professors, Fees, Scholarships regulations, &c., Admission Cards to Concerts, and the Syllabuses of the Higher and Local Examinations, on application to the undersigned.

C. N. H. RODWELL, Secretary.

Mandeville Place, Manchester Square, London, W.1.

BROADWOOD PIANOS

BOSWORTH & CO., LTD.

MIND-POWER IN MUSIC.

FOR STUDENTS,
TEACHERS, AND PERFORMERS.

BY

E. DOUGLAS TAYLER.

Price 1s. 3d. net.

This Text-Book covers a wide range of psychology as applied to music, and will prove of great help in overcoming any difficulties which may occur in the study of music.

BOSWORTH & CO., LTD.,

8, HEDDON STREET, REGENT STREET, LONDON, W.1.

JUST PUBLISHED.

SCHOOL MARCHES BOOK III.

Price One Shilling and Sixpence.

CONTENTS.

Arrival of the Visitors ...	... H. Hofmann
Bright and Buxom Lasses ("Martha")	F. von Flotow
Instrumental Band, The ...	Percy E. Fletcher
Little March, A ...	J. D. Davis
March ("Egmont") ...	L. van Beethoven
March ("St. Polycarp") ...	Rev. Sir F. A. G. Onseley
March ...	P. Tchaikowsky
March ("Tannhäuser") ...	R. Wagner
Marching off to Bed ...	Myles B. Foster
March of Priests ("The Magic Flute")	W. A. Mozart
Soldiers' Chorus ("Il Trovatore") ...	G. Verdi
Toy Soldiers' March ...	Th. Kullak

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

NEW TRANSCRIPTIONS

FROM THE WORKS OF

EDWARD MACDOWELL

TRIOS.

(Piano, Violin, 'Cello.)

1. TO THE SEA. 2. NAUTILUS.
3. A.D. 1620. 4. SONG.

(From "Sea Pieces.")

Price 2s. 6d. each.

STRING QUINTET.

(Two Violins, Viola, 'Cello, Bass.)

1. AT AN OLD TRYSTING PLACE.

2s. 6d. net.

2. FROM UNCLE REMUS.

3s. net.

(From "Woodland Sketches.")

Complete catalogue of MACDOWELL'S celebrated compositions will gladly be sent free on request.

ELKIN & CO., LTD.,

8 & 10, BEAK STREET, REGENT STREET,
LONDON, W.1.

The Musical Times

AND SINGING-CLASS CIRCULAR

SEPTEMBER I 1924

(FOR LIST OF CONTENTS SEE PAGE 848.)

CONDUCTORS AND CONDUCTING

BY WILLIAM WALLACE

(Continued from August number, page 692)

III.—THE CONDUCTOR IN THE MAKING

The conductor is not born: he is not made: he makes himself. He does not spring suddenly to the platform without having undergone a long process of training by the assimilation of all the orchestral music that ever he heard, and by watching with vigilant eye the movements of different conductors and the methods by which they obtain their effects. It is necessary that he should be endowed with that mysterious quality, an inherent predisposition for music, but we need not quarrel with the biologists who ask us to explain the expression. Let it suffice that we admit the existence of the predisposition.

It is not every musician who devotes himself purely to conducting from the outset; the opportunities are too few: but from the very nature of his musical disposition he is sensitive to rhythm, and in memorising in silence some familiar movement, he may find himself mentally performing the actions of the conductor.

There is no difficulty nowadays in the way of a student acquiring almost automatically a knowledge of the orchestral répertoire. He is present when concertos are rehearsed at the orchestral practices of his music school, and whether the performances are good or indifferent, he at least hears the development of theme and sequence of motives, and these take root in his mind. His opportunities for listening to orchestral music are unlimited. The publication of miniature scores, which has been of immense educational value to the amateur as well, enables the student to refresh his mind before a performance, if he has not already marked his own readings, and to insert fresh points that have struck him in the interpretations of different conductors.

Even though some orchestral scores and pianoforte arrangements may be out of reach or beyond his purse, he will be surprised to find how much 'comes back' to him on a second performance. This, too, can happen in the case of works which have not attracted him, but which he has been compelled to listen to in a programme while waiting for the composition that he has specially wished to hear.

Often indeed it is the banal theme that intrudes itself when he is trying to remember the ampler, nobler moments. This unconscious memory is an important part of the musician's equipment, but it is of paramount importance to the performer, whether he be instrumentalist, singer, or conductor. Education in music never comes to a standstill so long as sound is audible, and an alert memory is to the conductor as indispensable as an acute ear.

In a case in which the student has never actually conducted a work in the orchestral répertoire, and may be quite a stranger to the score, his recollection of the orchestral 'points,' tempi, and working out, will give him confidence, and his interpretation may reflect new lights.

On its psychological side the character of music is such that it will enter and fix itself in the mind whether we wish it or not, and the musician who finds himself called upon to conduct works in the répertoire will possess the advantage of having already learnt them by heart, and thus have all the more time for studying their interpretation, if, indeed, he has not already decided upon his own individual readings.

The instrumentalist who ultimately arrives at the conductor's desk has one great advantage in that during his routine work in the orchestra he has come directly under the beat of a number of conductors, all widely diverse in their aims and methods, but it is singular how very little an orchestral player retains of the general effect of the music which he performs. He is so much occupied with his part that the concentration demanded does not permit his attention to wander, or to arrive at a critical estimate of the work as a whole. What he does gain, however, is some insight into the principles which guide different conductors as interpreters, and he becomes tempered to the discipline observed at rehearsals.

These are conditions which affect every musician, whether he aims at wielding the baton or following a less conspicuous department in his art.

The only way to learn conducting is through practical experience, and this branch of musical education is being developed on lines which show great breadth of mind in those who have originated it. It has come about that the conductor's seat is far from being the sacred preserve of a few, as it had been in the past, and that the student who aspires to it is no longer to be judged guilty of trespass. To put it plainly, conducting is accepted as part of the musician's training. Whether he will ever have a chance of using the stick outside his school is another matter: if the opportunity arrives, he will be able to point to his apprenticeship.

But there is one part of the training which is by no means the least essential, though it does not appear to have been taken into account; it has slipped unobtrusively into the general scheme. It is this: the student is enabled to hear what the orchestra sounds like at the conductor's desk—a very different affair from the sound that reaches him as one of the audience. In the days of the old St. James's Hall, a seat on the orchestra was an invaluable 'observation post' for studying orchestration, taking into account the difference in the dynamics of sound between that which was heard behind the orchestra and that which reached the listener facing the orchestra. In this connection it may be pointed out that in one hall in England the forte of the trombones appears to be less than a mezzo-forte at the conductor's desk, and in another hall the oboe is all but inaudible. In these cases the conductor will rely upon the orchestra to explain local idiosyncrasies of acoustics.

But the novice has to know something more than the score which he is studying: he will learn his first lesson from pain, as we shall see when we come to consider the Physical Aspect of the Beat. He will have to gain control of his arms: they must move in obedience to the rhythm of his mind. The gesture can be cultivated by practice, or it may be present as a natural endowment. In any event it is the outward sign of the consciousness of rhythm.

Rhythm to the musician is so vital, so elemental a content of his work that he can never escape it. He cannot think in terms of music without feeling its power. It may not be his 'strongest sense,' but its absence is inconceivable.

Let us examine this. The mental equipment of the musician consists of a series of endowments or gifts, one of which, memory, has been mentioned. But striking individual differences are to be found. It is singular that the feeling for and appreciation of rhythm are almost as variable as the sense of pitch or the perception of tonality. The presence of these qualities is not to be found in all musicians in equal strength, but they are of primary importance in conducting. Unless he masters such weaknesses—scarcely grave enough to be called defects—the conductor in the making starts at a disadvantage. And the disadvantage is so great that unless he overcomes it, and that speedily, he will find himself a conductor in the unmaking, in the undoing.

It will not be disputed that rhythm in music is passing through a phase due to some extent to the non-rhythmic sounds which are less a protest against, than a denial of, an article of musical faith. Anything so orthodox as four-in-the-bar, is consigned to outer darkness. A score of to-day, or even of to-morrow, looks as if built up on some adaptation of the Morse code, the S.O.S. of which appears in the Scherzo of the C minor. (At the beginning, the four bars after the second pause, the second group of three crotchets for the horn being changed into a dotted minim—and these bars repeated until help arrives!)

No doubt in time we shall become inured to vagaries of rhythm just as we have not succumbed to the hurricanes of orchestration. No! Rhythm is now restless, whimsical, but no more eccentric than that adopted by Rossi in his broken tempi mentioned earlier (see Musical Times, p. 20 of this year).

It may be a question how far a novice should be entrusted with a score chiefly remarkable for its disregard of steadiness of rhythm before he has 'played himself in' with less hazardous experiments —leaping out at syntax before he has had some elementary practice. If he is wise he will save himself much mortification in presence of the orchestra by confining himself at first to the répertoire, not courting disaster with little-known and complex works.

In music in which the rhythm and time-signature change frequently, it is well for the conductor in the making so to steep himself in it that while he is directing each moment of sound, his mind is anticipating the bars that are about to be played, and the arm, trained by silent practice, responds automatically. This is somewhat analogous to the work of an instrumentalist, who, when reading at sight, is mentally recording the technique required for two or three bars ahead of that which he is playing.

As has already been pointed out, the restlessness in modern music is no new thing. Three examples of frequent time alterations of time-signatures have been given, one of the 17th century, and two of the middle period of the 19th. There is piquancy in a scene in 'Les Fêtes de Thalie', the first performance of which was given on August 14, 1714, in Paris. Thalia intrudes upon what Melpomene considers her domain, and characteristically the quarrel has sixteen changes of time-signature in forty-four bars. In the sequel, given on October 9 in the same year, Thalia asks her rival, 'Du moderne Amphion qui régna dans ces lieux, Vous donnoisiez les lyriques merveilles? Consultez-les à vos concerts nouveaux, Elles reprochent cent défauts, Capables d'allarmer les sçavantes oreilles.' Polymnia retorts, 'Les enfants d'Appollon ont, méprisé vos Vers.' Thalia answers back, 'Les Elèves d'Orphée ont déchiré vos Aïrs.' So they were already at it in 1714, and two hundred and ten years later there are pupils of Apollo who also 'rend melodies.'

It is true that Beethoven, in his ritmo de due, tre, and quattro battute did not dispense with the bars, but this is not quite the same as changing the time-signature. In Op. 127 the introduction of six bars in  $\frac{2}{4}$  is repeated twice in the course of the extended movement in  $\frac{3}{4}$ , and the same work contains a similar example. Again, in Op. 130 there are momentary episodes which, however, do not interrupt the continuity to any extent. Is there any conclusion to be derived from the fact that these works have high opus numbers?

Changes of time-signature in our own day have, so to speak, become legitimized, and call for more 'action' on the part of the conductor than 'the placid measures of a bygone day.' Berlioz, in the Incantation Music in 'The Childhood of Christ,' has the movement in  $\frac{7}{4}$ , but barred  $\frac{3}{4}$  plus  $\text{C}$  throughout. In 'Tristan,' in the last Act, Wagner has one bar of  $\frac{3}{2}$ , then three of  $\frac{2}{2}$ , one of  $\frac{3}{2}$ , two of  $\frac{2}{2}$ , then three of  $\frac{3}{2}$ . Later on he has one bar of  $\frac{3}{4}$ , one of  $\frac{4}{4}$ , two of  $\frac{3}{4}$ , one of  $\frac{4}{4}$ , one of  $\frac{3}{4}$ , with five further changes in the next eight bars, when the  $\frac{3}{4}$  is established. When he uses the time-signature of  $\frac{5}{4}$ , he seems to have apprehensions about its safety, for he dissects it into  $\frac{3}{4}$  and  $\frac{2}{4}$  with a dotted bar-line. Vincent d'Indy does the same in his second Symphony, the rhythm remaining constant for the most part, with rare interruptions by  $\frac{4}{4}$ ,  $\frac{3}{4}$ , and  $\frac{2}{4}$ .

One other example is worth quoting. In a certain work a short movement is barred thus—four bars of  $\frac{12}{8}$ , two of  $\frac{9}{8}$ , four of  $\frac{12}{8}$ , one of  $\frac{9}{8}$ , seven of  $\frac{12}{8}$ , two of  $\frac{9}{8}$ , two of  $\frac{12}{8}$ , two of  $\frac{9}{8}$ , four of  $\frac{12}{8}$ , one of  $\frac{9}{8}$ , and six of  $\frac{12}{8}$ . Then the composer has a glorious splash among sharps and flats. In one fairly short movement he has the signatures C flat, D, C flat, D, B, C flat, E, B flat, C flat, E, D flat, E, D flat, C flat, the logical sequence of which is not quite so obscure as the changes would suggest. The work was a Sonata, and the casehardened composer was the modest and retiring Sterndale-Bennett!!! Talk of exempla priorum!

As regards works in the modern repertoire and in the libraries of orchestral societies, the aspirant has the opportunity for hearing over and over again performances which, on every repetition, disclose new things to him. What looked at first a piece of barefaced padding may possess an unsuspected but important 'inwardness,' and justify its existence. There is always something to be learnt, even at the dullest and most pedestrian rehearsal. K + to then B

The routine of a school orchestra should never be set down as uninteresting. A student may give a reading of a concerto too remote for serious consideration. But the listener, from his very disapproval of the reading, is storing up in his mind the continuity of the composer's thought, so that when he attempts to reconstruct the work in silence he makes a note of points which, had he the baton, he would make prominent. The conductor who shapes himself towards his great goal, even though he never may reach it, is absorbing and assimilating thoughts, and these, if fortune smiles upon him, will lead him forward.

(To be continued.)

THE TENOR AND HIS SONGS:

A COMPLAINT

BY ERIK BREWERTON

The tenor is regarded as having a rather enviable lot, for he is one of a small number and it is the fortune of minorities to be respected—when they are not ignored. As an opera singer the tenor receives the respect due to one who is in great demand: off the stage, unless he is content to adopt the flutings of a drawing-room style, he feels that he is in danger of exchanging honour for obscurity—for the tenor, the 'spoilt darling' of opera, is often the scorn of the devotees of the 'art song.' He is supposed to care for nothing but high notes and sickly sentiment, and when we think of him, we think instinctively of Tosti and Balfe, of Frederic Clay and Stephen Adams. The French even have a phrase bête comme un ténor.

However, a little consideration will show that if we leave aside opera and confine our attention to songs, the tenor is to be compassionated rather than condemned, being 'more sinned against than sinning.' The normal male voice is the baritone; the tenor voice is comparatively rare. The baritone, therefore, receives consideration where the tenor is neglected. In other words, he has most of the best songs written for him, while to the tenor have been dedicated most of the worst. The great song-writers of the last century—Schubert, Loewe, Schumann, Franz, Brahms, Grieg—have all written principally for the medium voice. Of these composers Schubert has been the most indulgent to the tenor, perhaps because Vogl, a tenor singer, was one of his intimate friends. That the baritone is the favoured voice of the two is shown not only by the example of these composers, but by the fact that when their songs are transposed they are almost invariably transposed down. We buy Schumann and Schubert in the original or in the transposed edition, and with few exceptions the new keys are a tone or a minor third lower than the original. Many of their best-known songs have never been published in keys to suit a pure tenor. 'Whither' ('Wohin') of Schubert was written in G, which will suit the soprano, and is often sung in F to suit a lower voice, but it has never been published in A flat, which is the one key in which a tenor can sing it satisfactorily. The baritone, as against the tenor, has it both ways. He can sing nearly all the high songs in other keys, transposed a tone or a minor third down, and in addition he has dozens of songs written expressly for him. He can sing the 'Erl King' of Schubert in F or in E. The tenor has to sing it in G, its original key, which even so, especially with the lower pitch of recent years, is not perfectly suitable to his voice; there are too many low D's in it to make him feel happy.

Loewe is an excellent example of a kindness to baritones which they do not fully appreciate. He had a high baritone voice, and wrote for it. The tenor sees plenty of top F's and G's in the score, and his heart rejoices, but when he sees important phrases finishing on low B flats and declamatory passages round the E flat a fourth above, his heart is doubly depressed. Out of the two volumes published by Peters, containing a selection of twenty-six songs, there are only two, 'The Fisherman' and 'The Goldsmith's Daughter,' which a tenor could sing, and even then he would have to face several low B's. Further, to drag these songs up into a tenor compass would mean such a violent transposition—a major third or even a fourth—that the whole colour of them would be lost. Lowering them a tone, however, does not damage them nearly to the same extent, and thus the obliging publishers accommodate the bass and the baritone with editions in lower keys. Once more the tenor is left out in the cold.

So meticulous a musician as Franz objected to his songs being transposed, and he favours a compass from low B flat to F or G flat. Now the 'line' of his song, so to speak, will run through middle B flat. The line of a tenor song should run through C or C sharp, and sometimes even D. B flat is not a tenor's master-note; below C his voice gradually and inevitably weakens. A song need not go high to suit a tenor voice: it is a question of the average note, or of the 'line.'

Mendelssohn's 'On wings of song' can be sung quite well by a tenor in its original key of A flat. Its compass is E flat to F, but the curve of the melody lies between C and the upper F, where a tenor's middle notes lie, and he should be able to obtain such a good tone within that fourth as to obviate the necessity for singing the song in B flat, which is the key in which it is to be found in the 'Tenor Album' published by Boosey.

The later song-writers such as Wolf, Strauss, and Rachmaninov have not favoured the high voice so much as extended the compass of the song at both ends. As a rule the modern song-writer cannot express himself within a tenth, ninth, or even within an octave as Schubert or Schumann could. 'Cecily,' of Strauss, for example, soars up to top B, but it also touches the B two octaves lower. Many of Rachmaninov's songs reach B flat: the comforting words 'for tenor' may appear on the copy, but what is the use of this temporary burst of fine weather if we sink afterwards into a depressing atmosphere of low C's and D's? It is the phrase that counts. A single note here and there may be excused; it may be circumvented or even changed, but a whole phrase is irreconcilable. It stares at us defiantly and is crass. Some modern songs, it is no exaggeration to say, need two singers, one for the phrases at the top, the other for the phrases nearly two octaves below. Too often there are these extremes; there is no middle. To inscribe 'for high voice' over a song simply because there is a high A flat or B flat in it, is a misnomer. An occasional high note does not make a song, though it may spoil it. To write for a voice, it is not enough to know its extreme limits; the composer should know its norm, its average. To train the tenor voice needs perseverance; to write for it needs sympathy. Mozart and Handel had this sympathy, and so also had Beethoven, when he wrote 'Adelaide.'

The tenor will be disappointed with Wolf for two reasons; first, the subjects of his songs are more suited to a woman than to a man, and second, that the musical phrase is too often on low notes. The tenor anxiously looks for notes between low B flat and the E flat above. When he sees several, a dozen top A's will not charm him, and he throws the song aside. This may be considered rather a crude method of procedure, but the tenor voice, like the pianoforte, is an instrument of a certain compass—although not quite like the pianoforte, because its extreme notes at the top and the bottom can only occasionally be used. A modern composer might write excellent music for the pianoforte in a compass of nine octaves, but as the compass of the instrument is at present only seven octaves and three notes, nobody would be sorry for him if pianists neglected his compositions. The tenor's working compass is from F to A, the tenth above; only very occasionally should he be called upon to sing above the A or below the F.

In short, the tenor has a real grievance, inasmuch as he has little or no share in the great amount of songs that have been written in recent years. His voice, the envy of the public, is neglected or misunderstood by musicians. Song after song he sees appropriated by the soprano or the baritone, but his repertoire dwindles, and he is considered unenterprising—but through no fault of his own. He may raise the pitch of his pianoforte the fraction of a tone and transpose a few songs into higher keys, but in far too many cases he has to leave beautiful songs alone or sing them admitting that they do not quite suit his voice. No wonder he falls back on operatic airs and royalty ballads, the composers of which at any rate know their craft; and if Roger Quilter is a favourite of his it is partly because he has written in several cases expressly and sympathetically for the tenor voice.

What is needed is a greater discrimination. A good song-writer should know whether his song is to be written for the female or for the male voice, and then decide which of the different varieties of each voice it is to suit. The idea that the soprano voice is identical with the tenor except for an unimportant difference of an octave in pitch is crude. Handel wrote the florid 'Every valley shall be exalted' specifically for tenor, and the florid 'Rejoice greatly' specifically for soprano. To interchange the parts would be essentially wrong. Similarly a serenade should be sung by a man, and if that of Strauss sounds better sung by a soprano than by a tenor, then there is a serious fault in style which mars the music, however delightful it may be in detail. Beethoven's 'Adelaide' is eminently for a tenor, and should be left in its original key of B flat and not tampered with by ladies and transposed into A flat or G.

At present the tenor who is a tenor and not a misguided and discontented baritone, is, as regards serious songs, doomed to a comparatively disappointing time. He will querulously complain that the soprano and the baritone have all the best tunes. Modern composers are urgently required by him, for though they would be writing for a minority it would be for such a neglected and famished minority that they might acquire a popularity such as they would never obtain from the hundreds of baritones who do not know how well off they already are. But as things stand at present, one is inclined to prophesy that with the decline of oratorio the tenor of the concert platform, who is not bête, who takes his music seriously, will soon find himself confronted with only two possible courses: either to go into opera or into liquidation.

GEORGE III., HANDEL, AND MAINWARING

By WILLIAM C. SMITH

(Assistant in charge of Printed Music, British Museum)

Research in connection with Newman Flower's recent biography of Handel has brought to light an extremely interesting copy of Mainwaring's 'Memoirs of the life of the late George Frederic Handel,' published anonymously in 1760.

This copy, one of five possessed by the British Museum, belongs to the royal collection of books formerly owned by George III. and acquired by the British nation from George IV., in 1823. The volume is worth special notice on account of the many manuscript notes that it contains. Apparently, these notes were all written by the same hand, and there is some reason for thinking that George III. may have written them himself. If not, they must have been added by someone in close touch with the king and Court, and who for some reason recorded the expressed opinions of George III. as the latter read, discussed, and criticized the first published life of the Master musician of the time.

Although the writer of the present article, who discovered the notes, is unable to come to a definite conclusion on the question of authorship, he is inclined to the opinion that George III. was personally interested. There are some obvious objections to the theory that they were written by the king himself, although the handwriting has in places a remarkable similarity to that of a contemporary concert bill written by George III.

Before examining the notes and presenting internal evidence, it may be as well to point out the keen interest that the king took in Handel and performances of his works.

The great Handel Commemorations of 1784 and later years were warmly supported by the monarch, and amongst the royal autographs in the British Museum there exists the original of the following letter from George III. to the Marquis of Carmarthen, Chamberlain of the Queen's Household:

Queen's House, Feby. 27th, 1790.

I have just received the Duke of Leed's note enclosing the Letter addressed to Him by his brother Director of the Ancient Concert on the Subject of resuming the Festival at Westminster Abbey; its having subsided for the two last Year's was not at my instigation but from the trial of W<sup>m</sup>. Hastings in Westminster Hall. If the Duke of Leeds can find means of securing certain Days for the Musical Performances in Westminster Abbey I shall most willingly attend them, and considering how thoroughly the Public as well as the House of Peers seem tired of the Attendance in Westminster Hall I should not think this difficult to be effected.

G. R.

Samuel Arnold dedicated his famous edition of Handel's works to George III., and in the dedication pays the following tribute to the king:

Capital as the works of this great Master have ever been considered, they must however, according to the fluctuations of taste, have been in great measure confined to the Closets and Studies of the curious had not your Majesty's Judgement and Munificence kept them alive, and by your support and approbation taught the world to feel their force and energy.

In the diary of Fanny Burney (Madame d'Arbly) is recorded an unexpected meeting which that writer had with King George III. in Kew Gardens in 1789, and the appended extract is further evidence of the high opinion which the king had of Handel:

He [the King] next talked to me a great deal of my dear father [Dr. Burney], and made a thousand inquiries concerning his History of Music. This brought him to his favourite theme, Handel; and he told me innumerable anecdotes of him, and particularly that celebrated tale of Handel's saying of himself, when a boy, 'While that boy lives, my music will never want a protector.' And this he said I might relate to my father.

Then he ran over most of his oratorios, attempting to sing the subjects of several airs and choruses, but so dreadfully hoarse that the sound was terrible.

In view of these facts, it would not be surprising to find comments on the composer and his contemporaries written by the king in a work formerly in the royal possession.

CONCERT BILL IN THE HANDWRITING OF GEORGE III.

Reference has been made to a concert bill. A reproduction of this taken from The Quarterly Musical Magazine and Review, vol. i., 1818, is given here, and the reader can compare it with the handwriting of the selected extracts reproduced from the Mainwaring volume.

The following transcriptions of the notes are not quite complete. It has been impossible to decipher some portions, and the German script used at times has presented special difficulties. Some of the less interesting passages are omitted. The notes occur as a rule at the bottom of the page, with indication marks in the printed text showing the connection. In this article the page of the Mainwaring volume is given, and sufficient of the text or subject-matter to make the manuscript additions intelligible. Illegible passages omitted are indicated by . . . and uncertain words are queried. Passages underlined in the original notes are similarly underlined in the transcriptions.

First title-page, preceding portrait, following the words 'George Frederic Handel,' is the addition:

By Mainwaring, Fellow of St. John's College, Cambridge.

Page 53.—In the printed foot-note referring to the use of 'French Horns' and other wind instruments in the production of 'Agrippina' at Venice, the French horns are identified with forest or hunting horns (in a manuscript addition), and a note has been added:

N.B. Forest Horns is the true Appellation of that excellent Instrument; the French call them Hunting Horns; and only the Land of Fools calls them French Horns. There is not a player on that or any other Wind Instrument but Bohemians, Saxons, or Hannoverians. The English are too fond of vice and discord to have any turn for musick.

Page 59 contains considerable manuscript matter, some of which is indecipherable, and subject to several alterations. The references are of particular interest, and a complete understanding of them would probably answer the question of authorship. At the end of the printed foot-note which speaks of the very high esteem in which Alessandro Scarlatti's Cantatas were held by 'judges of music,' there is a reference mark followed by:

N.B. Mr Kelway by far the finest player both on the Organ or Harpsichord I ever heard and Master of the very worthy Dr Aylward Organist of St. George's Chappel Windsor, who owes his Election there entirely to his good Morals and being in my opinion the best musician in the Kingdom, and . . . very straight in his Honour and manner.

The first portion of this manuscript note, from 'N.B.' to 'very worthy,' has been deleted. The note continues on the left-hand margin of the page:

none of the Cannons dared vote against Him. My Friend Fisher voted from opinion, this Dean from gratitude to his only Patron. Majendie because he found He must as also Wilson, Pastor Fido kept away because He could not carry this agt [against?] G's [?] wish, a private good character and His Sovereign's desire of having this . . . man as well as a good Christian for organist. Dean of Bristol [?] by Eliza's [?] orders supports His King . . . and never shall find favour [?] at least to His, and it is below . . . to anyone, while [?] she is true to Her George. When the Election was over the King received the account from Fisher; and coolly replied He was happy His Dean and Eleven Canons protected Him.

On the Sunday when all went to the Cathedral He commanded the Chapter if they had on the building [?] the person publick reports supposed; the Dean reply'd yes; G. III. went into His private closet with his . . . and Aylward whom He never had seen in his life performed on the organ with the greatest propriety but some degree of fear, Fisher having told him He would not have succeeded had He not been allowed to owne that G. III. said all ye other Candidates were unworthy of . . . in the Organ loft.

In the right hand margin of the same page (59) there is a further reference to the words 'judges of music' already mentioned, which is as follows:

N.B. Mr. Kelway the person I placed as Director and Conductor of my Private Concert and as Harpsichord Master to Queen Sophia . . .

Joseph Kelway (1702?-82) was appointed Instructor on the Harpsichord to Queen Charlotte (Sophia) in 1761. The reference quoted here is very suggestive of the royal hand in these comments.

Pages 83 & 84 record the success of 'Rinaldo' and criticisms of the opera by some unnamed musicians. One of the critics referred to in the printed text by Mainwaring as 'This great man' (page 84, l. 4) is further described in a manuscript note as:

that wretched little crooked ill natured insignificant writer Player and musician the late Dr. Green Organist and Composer to King George II. who forbad his composing the Anthems at his Coronation Oct. 22<sup>d</sup> 1727, and ordered that G. F. Handel should not only have that great honour but except the 1st choose his own words. He had but four Weeks for doing this wonderful work which seems scarcely credible as to the first it is perhaps the most perfect if possible [?] of all His superb Compositions.

Maurice Greene (1695?-1755) is generally credited with having had a strong admiration for Handel, whom he allowed to perform on the organ at St. Paul's Cathedral, where Greene was organist from 1718 to 1727. He was connected with the Academy of Ancient Music, but withdrew from that institution when Bononcini was expelled for fraud. This event may have prompted the reference to Greene as crooked and ill-natured.

a personage, he promised to return, the moment he could obtain permission from the Prince, in whose service he was retained.

Handwritten note in left margin of page 84:
 + that wretched little crooked ill natured insignificant writer Player and musician the late Dr. Green Organist and Composer to King George II. who forbad his composing the Anthems at his Coronation Oct. 22<sup>d</sup> 1727, and ordered that G. F. Handel should not only have that great honour but except the 1st choose his own words. He had but four Weeks for doing this wonderful work which seems scarcely credible as to the first it is perhaps the most perfect if possible of all His superb Compositions.

MANUSCRIPT NOTE FROM PAGE 84 OF THE MAINWARING VOLUME

Page 85, Mainwaring text :

Soon after his [Handel's] return to Hanover [1711] he made twelve chamber Duettos for the practice of the late Queen, then electoral Princess.

The following manuscript note, referring to one of the Duets, 'Se tu, non lasci amore' (German Handel Society's Edition, vol. xxxii.), has been added :

The fine Duet in the Messiah is one of them, O Death where is thy Sting, O Grave where is thy Victory.

Page 88.—Mainwaring has a reference to the works composed by Handel for the Thanksgiving after the Peace of Utrecht in 1713, and to the following sentence: 'But let the grand Te Deum and Jubilate speak for themselves,' a manuscript foot-note has been added :

George III. agrees with Handel that the Dettingen Te Deum is far superior; it has more effect from the subject being treated with a degree of force approaching to Inspiration, and exceeds even the Hallelujah Chorus in the Messiah and if possible Worthy is the Lamb, and the unexpected Amen at the close.

Page 90.—The well-known but apocryphal story of the Water Music and Handel's restoration to royal favour has been dealt with in Newman Flower's biography of Handel, and elsewhere. Mainwaring's account has the following humorous addition :

This is admired by all the world except Zink but He shall Play it every day on the French Horn or Trumpet on board the Royal Yacht till He knows every Note by heart and G. Griesbach soll beystehen und als erster Geige den Tackt schlagen. [... and Griesbach shall be present, and as first violin shall beat time.]

Little is known of Zink, whose poor opinion of the 'Water Music' caused this outburst. The name occurs amongst the players of the bassoon and also of the tromboni or sackbuts in Burney's account of the Handel Festival performances in Westminster Abbey.

G. Griesbach was one of a well-known family of musicians, of whom further particulars are given below in the notes which refer to pages 96-98 of the Mainwaring volume.

Page 92.—George I. granted a pension of £200 to Handel, and the Mainwaring reference to the king has the following manuscript foot-note :

Georg Ludewig und Georg Friedrich feÿren die Handelsche Musik mit gleichem Geschmack wie auch das Liebe Vatterland und treue Hannöversche Landskindern wie der [?] G. Griesbach wird niemals überschlagen. [Georg Ludewig and Georg Friedrich are both admirers of Handel's music and the beloved Fatherland, and the true Hanoverians like [?] G. Griesbach will never topple over.]

Pages 93-95 deal with Pope's failure to appreciate Handel's musical genius, and the poet's confession that his ears were of that untoward make, and reprobate cast, as to receive his [Handel's] music, which he was persuaded was the best that could be, with as much indifference as the airs of a common ballad.

Continuing the subject, Mainwaring states on page 95 that

The greatest talents are often accompanied with the greatest weaknesses, and at this point a note has been added :

I cannot with patience hear so wretched a remark from a little rimer take up the attention of M<sup>r</sup>. Manwaring; with G. III. it has not more weight than that of D<sup>r</sup>. Green, both deserve pity, or contempt, but no warmth from those who love either harmony or melody, the former is one of the attributes of Heaven.

Pages 96-98 describe Handel's residence at Cannons, and the establishment of the Royal Academy of Music for the performance of Italian Operas (1720-28). The passage has a note on the question of the royal patronage of music :

Esther, Acis and Galatea, As pants the Hart, and at least five more Anthems were composed there; neither Science nor any other useful pursuit that is not disgraced by being the object of gain, can be advanced but by the purses of the Great, what would have been the fate of a Deserter in 1756, from the Hanoverian Foot Guards whilst in England, to have played at the Octagon Chappel at Bath, had not G. III. at the expence of His private purse made him a Sternkucker [astronomer] if G. Griesbach does not understand the word F. Griesbach or M<sup>r</sup>. Fischer the Hautbois can explain it.

The deserter referred to was Sir William Herschel (1738-1822), who had a varied career before achieving fame as an astronomer. Born in Hanover and brought up as a musician, he entered the Hanoverian Guards as oboist. He also performed on the violin. After the defeat of Hastenbeck, July 26, 1757, according to one account, his parents privily shipped him off to Dover. The penalties of desertion were thus incurred, but he was pardoned by George III. at his first interview in 1782. In 1766 he was organist at the Octagon Chapel at Bath, and conducted concerts and oratorios. He had at least five nephews of the name of Griesbach, who formed the principal members of the King's Band. George (the eldest) was violinist and leader, Frederick was oboist, and pupil of the famous J. C. Fischer. 'Grove' says :

He [Herschel] came to England with the regiment about 1757, and was stationed at Durham. He soon became organist of Halifax Parish Church, and continued so until 1766, when he was appointed organist of the Octagon Chapel, Bath.

It may be interesting at this point to quote a fairly early reference to the Queen's Band, with which the Griesbach family was closely associated. It is taken from an article on the 'Royal Patronage of Music,' published in the Quarterly Musical Magazine and Review, London, 1818 :

The band which has constantly enjoyed the honour of performing to their Majesties and the Royal Family in private, began to be assembled as early as the year 1777, and was at first composed of only eight persons. It was designated 'The Queen's Band.' The original intention was to have made it wholly military, but the King understanding that several of the persons selected played well on stringed besides wind instruments, and perceiving considerable indications of talent among them, his Majesty placed them under masters of eminence at his own expence, and the result was such as to gratify his expectations. The family of Griesbach formed the greater number of this small party. George, the eldest, was put under the senior Cramer for the violin, and Abel for the study of composition. He made a rapid proficiency, and was appointed the leader; Henry, the second, became under Crodill, a sound and excellent player on the violoncello. M<sup>r</sup> H. G. has not the hand of Lindley nor does he play in the ornate style of that super-eminent master, but in tone, and steadiness in the orchestra, he is not surpassed. Frederick Griesbach and Kellner were for three years under Fischer, the celebrated Oboe player and the former is now without a rival.

Further information about the members of the Griesbach family can be found in 'Grove' and other standard dictionaries of music.

Page 100, dealing with the subject of Radamisto, and the rival merits of Senesino the singer and Handel the composer: Mainwaring says:

To the ladies especially, the merits of Senesino would be much more obvious than those of Handel.

This the writer of the foot-note queries:

dass ist nicht sehr wahrscheinlich, Handel war sehr wohl gebaut und fehlt nicht an männlichen aussehen der andere war ein Hammel. [ . . . that is not very likely; Handel was a fine man, and not lacking in manliness, but the other was a calf.]

It is hardly necessary to repeat here any of the well-known stories of the various male singers who strutted across the Handelian stage. It has long been customary to depict Handel himself as a rather boorish, ill-mannered person, who made little claim on the admiration of the fair sex. A truer estimate of his physical appearance, and less insistence on his supposed love of over-eating, give us a personality anything but unattractive, as readers of Newman Flower's biography will admit.

Page 101, still on the subject of Radamisto and the famous song, 'Ombra cara.' A foot-note adds:

this Song is beautiful but Affani del Pensier, A mio Cor, Falsa imagine, all wrote for Cuzzoni, are finer. Her voice in 1750, when she was an Old Woman, was equal to that of the angelic Miss [sic] Linley in Her best days, even when the latter sang Come Goddess ever sage and Holy in the Penseroso.

'Affani del pensier' is from 'Otho,' 'A mio cor' from 'Alcina,' 'Falsa imagine' from 'Otho.' Cuzzoni, born about 1700, made her first appearance in England in 1722, and her last London appearance at a benefit concert in 1750, when she was 'old, poor, and almost voiceless.'

Page 105 deals with 'Muzio Scevola,' a pasticcio produced in 1721 under the auspices of the Royal Academy of Music. The three composers to the Academy, Attilio Ariosti, Bononcini, and Handel, were each supposed to have written one Act and an overture. Bononcini provided the second Act, and Handel the third. Ariosti's claim as composer of the first Act has been disputed by some writers, mainly on the evidence of existing J. C. Smith copies of the work, one in the British Museum, and one formerly in the possession of Dr. Cummings. In these copies, the first Act bears the name of 'Sig<sup>r</sup>. Pipo,' identified as Filippo Mattei, a violoncellist in the orchestra of the Royal Academy, and who was also known as Pipo or Pippo. Chrysander accepts the statement that Pipo and not Ariosti was the composer of the first Act, but the evidence in favour of the claim is not perfectly clear. The contemporary edition of the 'Songs in the Opera of Muzio Scaevola' (1721) states that the work was 'Compos'd by Three Famous Masters,' and Pipo can hardly be considered to come within the description. Very little is known about him, and there is not much to his credit as a composer.

The manuscript note from the Mainwaring volume strongly supports the opinion that Ariosti was the composer of the first Act, and not Mattei, but the writer may have been merely accepting the current opinion, and not in a position to dispute the statement of Mainwaring. Further references to the question are to be found in Streatfeild's and Chrysander's biographies of Handel.

The manuscript note on page 105 is as follows:

M<sup>r</sup> Mainwaring writes for those who have Eyes not Ears; for if any can hear that overture without Extasy He has no Musick in his Soul; a fine sentiment of Shakespear in the Tragedy of Othello; Hendel was as superior to flimsy Bononcini as was Scipio Affricanus to G. C-y. My dear honoured friend as well as Sub Governor Andrew Stone Esq<sup>r</sup> who nearly loved Hendel's Musick as much as every man of delicate feelings Religion, and Virtue must or ought told me the Attilio was so bad a composer that He was accused of not having written the good [?] Act which fell to his share it was so superior to any of his own Operas that He was accus'd of having stolen it when in Italy and murdered the real Composer least the Theft should have been discovered, I believe this true because my ever revered friend was a good man a Christian and bred up at Ch. Chur. Oxon. but I know a dead march He compos'd not equal to that in Saul; but far superior to that of any other Composer but the Herculean G. F. Handel.

The Dead March referred to is probably the march (reproduced opposite) from Ariosti's 'Coriolanus,' and the vexed question as to the rival claims of Ariosti and Mattei must be left at this point until further evidence is forthcoming.

G. C—y and Andrew Stone, both referred to on page 105, need further comment.

The former, identified as G[eneral] Henry Seymour Conway, politician and soldier (1721-95), was dismissed from his offices and employments for opposing George III.'s arbitrary measures, 1764, and later became Governor of Jersey. If the notes under consideration express the king's opinions, it is not surprising to find that the dismissed General was rated no higher than 'flimsy Bononcini.'

Andrew Stone (1703-73), whose record is fairly well known, was appointed Sub-Governor to George III. when the latter's household was reconstructed in 1751 on the death of Frederick Prince of Wales, his father. The reference in the manuscript note to Stone as 'My dear honoured friend as well as Sub Governor' seems almost conclusive proof that this note at least was written by the royal hand. In the known career of Stone there appears to be no other appointment to which this passage could be taken to refer. Moreover, it is known that George III. had a great admiration for Stone, an opinion strongly endorsed here.

Pages 106, 7, Mainwaring text:

The perfect authority which Handel maintained over the singers and the band, or rather the total subjection in which he held them, was of more consequence than can well be imagined. . . . Senesino, who, from his first appearance had taken deep root, and had long been growing in the affections of those whose right to dominion the most Civilized nations have ever acknowledged, began to feel his strength and importance.

whose life are well known. 'Moses Gordon' refers to Lord George Gordon (1751-93), the agitator, who embraced the Jewish faith. He was convicted of libel against the Government and Marie Antoinette, and imprisoned in Newgate from 1788 until his death.

Page 108 deals with the collapse of the Academy in 1728, the quarrels between Handel and Senesino and between Faustina and Cuzzoni. The added manuscript note is as follows:

G. F. Handel was ever honest, nay excessively polite but like all men of sense would talk all, and hear none and scorned the advice of any but the Woman He loved, but his Amours were rather of short duration, always with [in] the pale of his own profession, but

MARCH FROM ARIOSTI'S 'CORIOLANUS'

Referring to this passage is the following manuscript note:

This Position is very false for though Pope's wit against Handel retorts on himself alone, yet the Creature of [?] Religion (though not very tolerant, yet not less so than that of the Dissenters or Jews, for no one can call either Dr. Priestly of Birmingham or Moses [?] Gordon of Newgate [?] though both originally Presbyterians, Christians) and He beautifully owned Women have no characters, therefore they ought obey men, not govern them.

'Dr. Priestly' (Joseph Priestley, 1733-1804), was the theologian and scientist, the details of

He knew that without Harmony of souls neither love nor the creation could have been created and Discord ends here as certainly as the last Trumpet will call us from our various Pleasures [?] to the all merciful seat of a merciful but at the same time Righteous Judge whether as God the Father or as Our Blessed Redeemer.

This note is one of the very few references to Handel in his relations with women. It is somewhat surprising that, in an age when there was much scandal, a public person like Handel did not figure more frequently in the Court and society gossip of the time than is recorded. The overwhelming demands which his art made upon him, and the satisfaction which he found in the exercise of it, may explain his apparent indifference to many things attractive to the more ordinary person.

Page 109, l. 10, Mainwaring text :

The late Laureat.

Manuscript foot-note :

Colley Cibber.

Cibber died in 1757.

Page 110 contains a reference to Colley Cibber's remarks on the personal discords of the Academy Singers, and his suggestion that some King of Morocco would have known how to bring them to order. Mainwaring continues :

But, had he [Colley Cibber] known anything of the true spirit of Handel, he would not have wished them under better government.

The underlined passage has the following note in the margin :

A false position, but it is Oxford not St. John's Cambridge that deals in syllogisms instead of solid mathematics; the first is the amusement of Fools, the latter good to attain a certain point, viz., the obtaining the habit of coolly searching for truth; there is indeed another absurd pursuit not much countenanced by men of Principle at Cambridge viz Metaphysics which tends only to unbinge every good principle, and to make man presumptuous and absurd [?].

† Having one day some words with Cuzzoni on her refusing to sing Falsa imagine in OTTONE; Oh! Madame, (said he) je sçais bien que Vous êtes une véritable Diablesse: mais je Vous ferai sçavoir, moi, que je suis Beelzebub le Chéf des Diables. With this he took her up by the waist, and, if she made any more * Handel was a man of consummate Sense and forcible Judgement ever knew that to form a good constitution it matters little who makes the Laws provided but few are made; but the Execution of them must be entrusted to one alone with Courage or Authority sufficient to save His Country at the hour of Peril.

MANUSCRIPT NOTE FROM PAGE 110 OF THE MAINWARING VOLUME

Page 110 continues the same subject as the previous reference and has a printed foot-note containing the popular story of Handel's threat to fling Cuzzoni out of the window because she refused to sing 'Falsa imagine' in 'Ottone.'

A manuscript addition is as follows :

Handel as a man of consummate Sense and forcible Judgement ever knew that to form a good constitution it matters little who makes the Laws provided but few are made; but the Execution of them must be entrusted to one alone with Courage or Authority sufficient to save His Country at the hour of Peril.

These sentiments are certainly not in conflict with the opinions of kingship and constitutional government ascribed to George III.

Page 111 continues the subject of Mainwaring's criticism of Colley Cibber, referred to in a previous paragraph in connection with page 110. A manuscript foot-note is added to the passage :

It is true they mutinied, and rebelled at last But the slaves of Asiatic and of African Monarchs have often done as much :

N.B. Dr. Mainwarings Wit or rather impertinence frequently overruns the bounds of Common Sense and gets into the land of Folly. Slaves must be rogues for they have nothing to lose; and Despots void of the feelings of humanity; J : B : W, Sp—r. and . . . must tremble but not suffer; for 'Mercy is an Attribute to God himself; and Earthly power doth then show likest God's when Mercy Seasons Justice.'

The personal references have not been identified.

Page 113.—Referring to Handel's visit to Italy (1729), Mainwaring says :

After a short stay in Italy, he returned with Strada, Bernachi, Fabri, Bertoldi and others.

Two manuscript notes have been added. The first refers to Strada :

She was a very Capital Singer, the Songs He wrote for Her prove it sufficiently.

The second refers to Antonio Bernacchi, who had made an earlier appearance in London in 'Rinaldo,' 1717 :

Bernachi was a good Singer, far superior to any we now hear at the Haymarket Theatre, but not equal to either Senesino or Farinelli; had party, and fashion not made all mad at that time Handel's Operas must have been full, yet solid and good sense cannot always hold its proper place though folly and extravagance for a time may prevail.

Successive biographers of Handel have found difficulty in adequately explaining the sets made against him from time to time. In all probability there were no real reasons other than those mentioned here—'Party and Fashion.' Apart from the professional jealousies talent like his was bound to provoke, he was made the storm-centre about which whirled and raged the private quarrels of society.

Page 116, Mainwaring text :

He [Handel] now removed to Covent-garden, and entered into a partnership with Rich, the master of that house. Hasse and Porpora were the Composers at the Hay-market. When the former was invited over, it is remarkable that the first question he asked, was whether Handel was dead.

A manuscript note has been added to 'Hasse' :

N.B. With German good sense, but interest that Enemy of Virtue and every honorable or Dignified feeling at length tempted Hasse to come over.

Page 118.—Mainwaring laments the fact that Handel, in contrast to his rivals (particularly the Italian composers, who were more remarkable for their melody than harmony) allowed himself to give too much close and particular attachment to harmony, which sometimes led him to neglect the melody, even where it ought most to be regarded, I mean in Vocal Music.

A manuscript note has been added referring to the terms 'harmony' and 'melody':

The Author had better shew where G. F. Hendel shews a want of Melody; but did the Priest understand Musick He would know that Modulation that is true Harmony is the Soul of that science, and the creator of variety, and that Melody is only . . .

Page 134, Mainwaring text:

Indeed in the year 1743, he had some return of his paralytic disorder: and the year after fell under the heavy displeasure of a certain fashionable lady.

Manuscript note:

Lady Brown wife of Sir Thomas Brown.

Streatfeild states that:

Lady Brown belonged to the Cecil family. Her husband, Sir Robert, had at one time been Resident at Venice, where his wife acquired a taste for Italian music. On their return to London she posed as a patroness of foreign singers, and was one of the first London hostesses to give regular musical parties. Horace Walpole, writing to Mann in 1743, mentions the Sunday evening concerts that she was in the habit of giving, according to Burney, 'at the risk of her windows,' for the London mob in those days was nothing if not Sabbatarian.

Lady Brown is also mentioned in Martinelli's correspondence as a leading London hostess ('Martinelli Lettere familiari').

The reference to Lady Brown is the last manuscript addition to the Mainwaring volume.

It is admitted that the publication of these notes may add little to the main facts of the known life of Handel, but as an interesting 18th-century record of persons and events, not otherwise available to the general reader, they have been deemed worthy of reproduction. Moreover, in spite of the excellent work already done by biographers of Handel, there are still many gaps in the story of his life waiting to be filled in by the historian, and many events with which he was connected about which very little is known.

RAG-TIME

BY HARRY FARJEON

I am not one of those who naturally delight in Rag-time. But this for myself I can say: I am coming to be able (sometimes) not to be unduly conscious of it. In the first blush of its youth . . . but no! Rag-time never blushed. It was I that blushed, that memorable evening in Massachusetts, when first burst upon my scholastic ear those distortions which have spiced syncopation out of its original purity. (O thou Fourth Species, was it for such end thou wert designed and destined?) That music should have come to this! But music alone would not have come to this. It is verbal accentuation thrust willy-nilly into an opposing musical scheme that gives rag-time its true atmosphere; or, more precisely, it is an incorrect relation between the pronunciation and the time-signature. In Massachusetts this consoling reflection did not present itself, but the analyst in me has since been freed from that momentary paralysis.

To offer an example:

Ex. 1.

Were the above phrase instrumental there would be no suspicion of a triplet. The quaver C in bar two would bear a slightly stronger accent than would the quaver D. But the first three syllables of the words 'walking along' fall naturally into triplet rhythm, the syllable 'long' demanding an accent. And thus the negro would sing it, obtaining a triplet effect lasting not (as is usual) one beat, but a beat and a half, and following this by a strong-accent note which really occurs on the second half of the second beat. He does justice to the words by imposing their sway upon the notes regardless of the time-signature. The relationship between the two thus enforced produces an effect not only new in folk-song, but different from the syncopations which have hitherto obtained in any form of music.

Now, it must not be thought that Sambo, in his academic enslavement by metrical purity, has found the only way out of the difficulty. He might have chanted of his peregrinations thus:

Ex. 2.

or thus:

Ex. 3.

The third version would, indeed, indulge his idiosyncrasy to a limited extent, for a mild syncopation exists in the dotted minim. But how savourless this compared with the quaver tied to the minim boasted by Ex. 1! And how humdrum this triplet, fitted to its appointed place, beside that other, sprawling over a beat and a half! It is such subtle distinctions as those between the first and third versions that make the true character of rag-time and embody its one claim to be a contributor to art. And, naturally, the innovation thus initiated has spread from vocal to instrumental music, and one can now perceive the raison d'être of similar effects which have never been wedded to words.

A few sentences back I referred to folk-song. It is as the most prominent modern example of this ancient method of expression that rag-time chiefly merits critical attention. What is there in folk-song besides rhythm? Melody, and the suggestion of harmony. I say 'the suggestion,' because such songs exist as independent tunes; there is no folk-song that does not bear being given without accompaniment. Now, the popular music of our hoary past sprang into being in the times when harmonic understanding was either non-existent, rudimentary, or limited; but the feeling for harmony has for some centuries been so dominant in the European that we may take it that there have survived only those tunes which conform to the harmonic schemes latterly in vogue. In other words, those airs which can be naturally harmonized by our major or minor scale, or by such forms of the old modes as are used in Church, remain appreciated as tunes; while those whose appeal was merely melodic became, as the harmonic instinct developed, meaningless jargon, and so passed into oblivion. I have in my possession Serbian and Indian melodies transcribed by personal friends. In Serbia the peasants play and sing in parts, and their melodies are full of harmonic implication; they would not be tolerated else. The Indian tunes, on the other hand, stand or fall by their melodic quality alone, for the Indians have neither understanding of harmony nor any desire for it. Among these traditional airs a few, however, are in our major scale, which is merely one of the seventy-two modes used in Southern India. Should musical development in the East in the course of time follow normally the same order as it has with us (a most unlikely contingency), it is certain that such of this inheritance as did not comply with the needs of the new education would be discarded as 'queer,' and, unless noted down in time, would be lost. The major tunes would remain, just as have with us those major, minor, or Church-modal.

Now, the negro is a modernized savage. As a primitive he is under the necessity of finding his own melody; as a man of to-day he has a whole ready-made system of harmony at his command. What does he do? How many harmonies does he add to those suggested by the ordinary European folk-tune? One. It is true that he will decorate it with all sorts of modern frills: augmented triads, consecutive fifths and sevenths, and so on—but these are exuberance and excrescence only, in many cases being due to the irrepressibility of that enfant terrible, the saxophone. They are not essential to the comprehension of the tune itself. For such comprehension, however, one new chord must be bred in the ear. And the exciting fact about this chord is that it is the very one it scientifically should be. The three-root system underlying chromatic harmony, as advanced by Day and Macfarren, is subjected to fashionable bombardment nowadays; but this is because of its inadequacy to deal with the modern situation, not for its lack of success in solving the problems of classical times. It is attacked as are other 19th century ideals: Capitalism, Church Religion, National Patriotism. Whatever its shortcomings, it does provide an efficient explanation of the growth of the chromatic tree, the first coloured foliage of which is what we name the Supertonic Chromatic chord. In the key of C:

* This supertonic chromatic is precisely the first chord to be borrowed, for the purposes of its melody, by modern folk-song. Just as this coloured growth arose in the classical forest, so it arises in the popular cottage garden. Negro tunes are not based on augmented or Neapolitan sixths: such vegetation is too tropical for ready understanding. But with the appreciation of hues other than plain diatonic green and brown induced by excursions into our classical and now well-varied forest, has come the desire for similar effects nearer home, and instinctively the negro has selected the first of them—the most natural. And, in love with his discovery, he works it to death. Rag-tune after rag-tune is based on just this harmonic scheme and little else:

(The 'walking-along' example begins in this way.)

To write a real rag-time you need to do three things: borrow the harmony; concoct the melody; invent the rhythm. You may as well, while you are about it, borrow the above harmony. It is common property. To use it is not dishonest, though neither is it clever. Upon the frame-work thus provided, you concoct your tune. The invention comes along with the rhythm, and it is originality in this that gives to some rag-times (such as 'Stumbling') their spice of value. It is a good plan, indeed, to invent the rhythm first. That achieved, the creative part of the work is done, and it is by simple stages that you reach the position of sitting in an arm-chair and scooping in the royalties.

This, of course, is a conscious process with an explainable technique. As such it becomes, to a degree however small, art-form rather than folk-form—art-form built upon folk-form, as is the natural chronology. The Negro 'Spirituals' and the earlier examples of the dance-rags are the true popular expression, which has been taken as the basis of to-day's slightly more sophisticated ball-room fox-trot. How different a development from that desired by Dvorák when he wrote the 'New World' Symphony and the 'Nigger' Quartet to point the way for American composers! The Old World sent the New World one of its famous men, to act as father to a childhood eager for self-expression. And this eastern sage said, wisely and well: Your strength lies in the simple forms of native art. Let great trees spring from the seeds of your own song. You are British, French, Dutch; the folk-lore of these races has grown to art among your European ancestors. You are also Negro, and as such have a vegetation not yet cultivated and one we have not touched. Cultivate it.

And, skilful gardener that he was, he showed them the way. He entered into the spirit of the Negro tunes, gathered from that spirit what was beautiful, and wrote the 'New World' Symphony and a couple of works for strings. Then he vanished into the dim East and left the spell to work.

And the spell did not work. The wise man may detect the key that will unlock the future: he cannot ordain what is to be found on the other side of the door.

The New World, in course of time, sent its first-fruits to the Old World. And the Old World thronged to the mart and eagerly tasted. Wry indeed were the faces made by those who were kith and kin to our Eastern sage; and joyous the chuckles, amazing the capers of those equally eastern but less sagacious!

And perhaps the wise were right. Still, rag-time was a growth from the seed selected by Dvorák: the 'New World' Symphony is a sample of what might have come if all forms of growth followed the same model. But each form of seed will find its own form of growth, if it is to thrive at all, for all the sighing of those who would wish every parsnip to be a peach.

Ad Libitum

By 'FESTE'

The Etude for August contains a symposium on jazz—rather late in the day, perhaps, for there are signs that jazz is losing its power of attraction. (Before going further I had better point out that what is said below is the result of a pretty thorough acquaintance with jazz, based on stacks of gramophone records and frequent hearings of the Savoy Orpheans—the latter heard via wireless, I hasten to add.) The amusing thing is that so many people are talking as if jazz were a novelty. Does its fancied newness lie in its rhythm? Hardly, for I doubt if there is an effect in modern dance syncopation that cannot be traced to music written generations ago. Even plainsong contains plenty of hints. Rhythmically, the most rabid of jazz is merely conventional syncopation carried to extremes. Does the novelty lie in the scoring? Only to a limited extent. What is a toy symphony but a kind of jazz, so far as the scoring is concerned? The nigger troupe of our young days, with its tambourines, bones, and banjos, was a simple form of jazz band. One of the Etude writers, Mr. Henry T. Finck, pooh-poohs the idea of jazz being a novelty. He says:

Musical pandemonium . . . is dear above all things to lovers of jazz. But it is far from being a new thing under the sun. Savages, barbarians, ancient civilized nations, in their orgies, had it. So, perhaps, the scholarly Carl Engel, chief of the music division of the Library of Congress, has bestowed too much honour on Philippe Musard in calling him 'the grand-papa of jazz.' Musard lived in Paris, 1793-1859. His orchestra of seventy at the Bals de l'Opéra included fourteen cornets and twelve trombones. 'At some phrenetic climax of a quadrille the tonal volume of these instruments would be increased with the racket produced by the breaking of chairs or the firing of pistol shots. The dancing multitude howled.'

Some of the self-styled 'progressive' musicians on both sides of the Atlantic are very busy and amusing just now in the fuss they are making about jazz. They claim that it is a new force that will revitalise the poor old jaded art of music. So they write and lecture on it without, however, telling us exactly in what way jazz is going to contribute to the art. What has it to offer? Nothing in rhythm, for its rhythmic peculiarities are merely developments of something music had already, as is said above. It has nothing in melody or harmony. Melody was never its strong side, and of late it has become so poverty-stricken that its 'composers' are more and more drawing phrases—sometimes whole melodies—from the despised classics, folk-song, or other familiar sources. It has a few instrumental effects that are fresh, but which, from their nature, tend to become stale very quickly. And some of the most frequently used are not even new. Muted brass had become an irritating mannerism with serious composers long before the jazz boom started. True, the saxophone is made to utter unwonted sounds; it moans, laughs, howls, and comes very near to speech at times. But these effects can be used only sparingly, since they have practically no value or interest beyond their unusualness. As for that favourite effect, the trombone glissando, it is almost as old as the jazzers themselves. Mr. Finck points out that it is employed by Ravel in his 'Rhapsodie Espagnole.' I don't know the date of that work, but I do know that I heard the effect in a London music-hall about twenty years ago. (I thought it funny the first time, but after a few repetitions it seemed a poor sort of joke.)

One thing that strikes the reader of this symposium, and of the articles and lectures on the subject, is that practically all the stress is laid on the new effects provided by such orchestras as Paul Whiteman's. I heard and saw Paul's band when it was in London, and I am prepared to be as enthusiastic as anybody about its 'slickness' (there is no musical term that quite meets the case). In other respects I thought the band was very much overrated. Sheep-like Londoners went and admired what they were told they would find admirable, but some of the strongest points were just those of any good orchestra. For example, a writer in an evening journal was ecstatic over the fact that the players were able to play pianissimo, could grade their power very subtly, alternate swiftly between fff and ppp, and so forth. Every one of the feats over which he slopped for half a column could have been heard at Queen's Hall applied to good music by ordinary English orchestral players. But it was clear that he knew little or nothing of the possibilities of a modern orchestra. The Whiteman band had come from America with a flourish of press trumpets; it provided material for a 'write-up' that would appeal to the man in the 6.15: and written up it was. Whiteman proved to be, like Sousa, a good showman as well as a brilliant manager of his performers, but so far as musical interest and variety were concerned, I found the exhibition far less attractive than that of the Southern Syncopated Orchestra, under Will Marion Crook, at Philharmonic Hall, in 1919. True, the latter had the advantage of vocal items, solo and choral. Without these the programme would probably have become as monotonous as that of Whiteman's.

This brings us to the real weakness of jazz—its almost entire absence of musical interest. All the writers in the Etude emphasise the novelty and piquancy of its instrumental effects. There can be no disputing these, though it would be easy to prove that as a whole they are less novel than their admirers fancy. The effect of novelty is partly due to so many being served up at one helping, so to speak. Heard singly, most of them would rouse no more comment than would any one of the striking touches in orchestration with which modern music abounds. We expect such novel touches in these days, when hundreds of students not yet out of their 'teens could give Berlioz lessons in orchestration.

If a composer wished to astonish us by the novelty of his scoring, he could hardly do so save by writing a work in which the whole bag of new tricks could be loosed on us in a lurid ten minutes. But if he is a musician first and an orchestrator afterwards, he doesn't do so, because he knows that a work must have a great deal beyond novel scoring if it is to be more than a nine days' wonder. Jazz compounders, on the other hand, having as a rule nothing to hand out in the way of thematic invention or development, are forced to depend on startling effects. Hence we read of such feats as those of the cornet player who 'when he put his tomato can on the end of his instrument produced music with strange, quivering pulsations, that seemed to come from another world'; and of a trombonist who plays his instrument through a megaphone, when it 'sounds more like a magnificent baritone voice than anything else,' and so forth. Take away these stunts, and the admittedly better, and, in some cases, really artistic tonal devices of such bands as Whiteman's, and what is left? The jazz writers make no pretence at thematic originality. Isham Jones, for example, says:

It is now quite generally admitted that practically every popular hit of the day is based upon some music of the past, some work of a famous composer, or, in many instances, old folk-songs. This is not always deliberate, but, instead, is often quite accidental. I have known of some popular songs with parts of the melody almost identical with certain parts of an old classic, and yet the composer had never heard that particular classic. This imitation is almost certain, when it is considered that there are actually only twelve different tones in the scale as it is played on the pianoforte. The old masters had a virgin field when they were composing. The popular composer to-day uses only parts of those twelve tones, and yet it is immediately duplication. It only takes two notes to make a tune, and some of the most popular songs in recent years have been based on a two-note combination. And I also know as a fact that the composer was unconscious of the fact that the same combination was used by the great composers.

True; but Isham forgets that the great composers produced some of their finest music from unoriginal themes. And when the jazz writers show that they have sufficient musicianship and resource to do the same thing we shall be ready to forgive them their lack of invention.

As for their 'ragging' of the works of standard composers, hear the feeble excuse of Paul Whiteman:

When I played the famous jazz arrangement of Rimsky-Korsakov's 'Song of India,' I was maligned by many for lowering a great masterpiece. I have rather a sneaking idea that Rimsky-Korsakov himself would have been delighted with some of the tonal effects, and that he would have been amazed to find the whole American public whistling a tune that he could hardly have intended for more than a comparatively few grand opera devotees. The theft of tunes without credit to the composer is unpardonable; but if jazz will put a great masterpiece into currency, all honour to jazz.

But why debase it before putting it into currency? This particular piece of music had already reached a far-wider field than 'a comparatively few grand opera devotees.' It had been played and sung all round the world, like other operatic airs that have become 'famous jazz arrangements.' They were taken up and 'ragged' just because they were already 'put into currency' by their attractiveness.

Even more futile is the plea of Vincent Lopez:

America is learning classical music through the jazz versions played by the dance orchestras. There is something in the rhythm of jazz which makes you remember it without effort. Only musically educated persons can hum a representative number of famous compositions. And yet every one hums the jazz tunes almost unconsciously.

The self-styled 'progressives' who claim that jazz is going to rejuvenate music make much of the fact that Stravinsky and some of the French 'Six' have taken it under their wing, though they do not give us details of any successful results.

Percy Grainger is another who is alleged to have done great things with it. Mr. Finck says:

Highbrow jazz, in the widest and most flattering meaning of the word, reaches its pinnacle in such works as his 'In a Nutshell,' in which he introduces new percussion instruments like the Deagen steel marimba, the bass marimba xylophone, and the Swiss staff bells. His example opens limitless vistas of novel sound effects. Conductors of jazz bands will learn much to their advantage by looking over Grainger's compositions.

The cold, hard truth must be told: 'In a Nutshell' was played at Queen's Hall a few years ago under Sir Henry Wood, and after rousing a good deal of preliminary curiosity (thanks to somewhat sensational preliminary 'pars,' and the popularity of the composer) fell very flat indeed. Rarely has a work that called for so much paraphernalia produced so little result, and given such a miserable ha'porth of effect.

There is a good deal of pretence and humbug hanging round the jazz industry, but the cream of it is perhaps found in the attitude of the above-mentioned 'progressives,' who take a few of the meagre number of good examples and call on us to admire them as a new and vital form of art. They say nothing of the hundreds of failures that have to be set against one such success as 'The Kitten on the Keys.' And the fuss they make about their liking for jazz is ludicrous. Interviewers find displayed on their pianoforte (quite by accident, of course) a copy of the latest fox-trot—clear evidence of the interviewee's breadth of mind and up-to-dateness. They profess to see in 'The Kitten' something that could not have been achieved by the despised 'flat-footed, academic' Brahms, the 'sentimental, moonstruck' Schumann, or any other of the turgid Teutons. Of course it couldn't, any more than 'Die Mainacht' or 'Le Carnaval' could have been written by Irving Berlin (though, as a matter of fact, it is extremely likely that had Brahms or Schumann turned their minds that way they could have beaten Irving at his own game, just as Debussy wrote one of the best of cake-walks. But he seems to have been content with one). Perhaps this sudden priggish patronage of jazz is due to the complete collapse of the ultra-modern bubble, so far as this country is concerned. Who would have thought, five years ago, that the vogue of the later Stravinsky, the 'Six,' and their disciples, ushered in as it was by such a fanfare, would have fizzled out in so short a time? The public is now bored by, or at best only mildly interested in, continual dissonance, and as the advance-guard must have something to boost they find jazz a convenient way of saving their face. Some day these tired old-young men will 'discover' Beethoven, Brahms, and Schumann, and then heaven help those composers!

One or two more quotations from the symposium. Here is an advertisement quoted by Mr. Finck:

PIANO JAZZ

By note or ear. With or without music. Short course. Adult beginners taught by mail. No teacher required. Self-instruction course for advanced pianists. Learn 67 styles of bass, 180 syncopated effects, blue harmony, Oriental, chimes, movie and cafe Jazz, trick endings, clever breaks, space fillers, saxophone slurs, triple bass, tricked harmony, blue obbligato, and 247 other subjects, including ear-playing and musical invention. One hundred and ten pages of REAL jazz. 25,000 words. A postal brings our FREE Special Offer.

Mr. Finck adds:

If that isn't American—as American as Barnum—I'd like to know what is. Yes, ladies and gentlemen, we have given the world a bran' new branch of music. You bet! Hooraa!

John Alden Carpenter says:

I am convinced that our contemporary popular music (please note that I avoid labelling it 'jazz') is by far the most spontaneous, the most personal, the most characteristic, and, by virtue of these qualities, the most important musical expression that America has achieved. I am strongly inclined to believe that the musical historian of the year two thousand will find the birthday of American music and that of Irving Berlin to have been the same.

This is distinctly hard on America, but as it is said by one of their leading musicians, it is not for mere Europeans to contradict. We can only express our sincere sympathy, and hope that American music will have another birthday soon, and make a better choice of parents.

On the origin and meaning of the word 'jazz':

The word 'jazz' is African in origin. It is common on the Gold Coast and in the hinterland of Cape Coast Castle. In his studies of the Creole patois and idioms in New Orleans, Lafcadio Hearn reported that the word 'jazz,' meaning to speed things up, to make excitement, was common among the blacks of the South. . . . In the old plantations . . . when the fun languished, some West Coast African would cry out; 'Jazz her up!' and this would be the cue for fast and furious fun.—New York Sun, quoted by Henry T. Finck.

Vincent Lopez gives a more subtle and less convincing derivation:

I have been for a long time making a study both of the word 'jazz' and of the kind of music which it represents. The origin of the colloquial word jazz is shrouded in mystery. The story of its beginning that is most frequently told and most generally believed among musicians has to do with a corruption of the name 'Charles.' In Vicksburg, Miss., during the period when rag-time was at the height of its popularity, and 'blues' were gaining favour, there was a coloured drummer of rather unique ability named 'Chas. Washington.' As is a very common custom in certain parts of the South, he was called 'Chaz.' 'Chaz.' could not read music, but he had a gift for 'faking' and a marvellous sense of syncopated rhythm. It was a practice to repeat the trio or chorus of popular numbers, and because of the catchiness of 'Chaz.'s' drumming he was called on to do his best on the repeats. At the end of the first chorus the leader would say: 'Now, Chaz!' From this small beginning it soon became a widespread habit to distinguish any form of exaggerated syncopation as 'Chaz.'

Paul Whiteman says that he knows of no better definition than that of Sousa, who derives the word from 'jazzbo,' the term used in the old-fashioned minstrel-show when the performers cut loose and improvised upon or 'jazzboed' the tune. And as a similar difference of opinion is expressed by various writers as to the nature of the thing itself, we may take our choice.

A few of the contributors (blind to the risk of being called pedants, old fogies, and the like) attack jazz roundly. I quote a bit from the article by Will Earhart, Director of Music at Pittsburgh (Pa.). Mr. Earhart is very much in earnest—in itself a crime to-day—but there is a good deal of horse-sense in his homily:

I do not approve of 'jazz' because it represents, in its convulsive, twitching, hiccupping rhythms, the abdication of control by the central nervous system—

the brain. This 'letting ourselves go' is always a more or less enticing act. Formerly we indulged it in going on an alcoholic spree; but now we indulge it by going (through 'jazz') on a neural spree. Just now, the world does not know where to look for some stable principles to cling to, has lost its confidence in the value of ends that it formerly believed in. . . . Restlessness, indecision, and excitement are characteristic of the interim before we again find compelling aims. 'Jazz' is symptomatic of this state. Since it is a symptom, I am not very much worried about it. It will disappear like all things that are not sound and fundamental always have disappeared, and always will. It is a little irritating—when it is not amusing—to hear it justified because it is dynamic, forceful, energetic. A man in an epileptic fit certainly loosens a large amount of energy; but it is ludicrously foggy thinking to appraise such energy as strength. Energy or force has no value except as it is well controlled and purposefully directed. 'Jazz' certainly proves that Americans possess nervous energy. It does not prove that they are safe with it. We have made the mistake before of assuming that fussy, uncontrolled energy meant strength, and we are making it again now. 'Jazz' is defended sometimes because, in its later manifestations, well-trained musicians have put some real interest of musical thought and design into it. Such bright spots of the kind that I have noticed are merely intermittent. They usually appear as oases with a desert of drivel before and another following. Their effect, to me, is that of a voo-doo dancer suddenly shouting out some witty epigram and then relapsing to his primitive nature.

He winds up with a mildly crushing coda :

Perhaps everything must be judged by the company it keeps—and attracts. Bach fugues, Beethoven symphonies, works by Debussy and Ravel are heard in certain places and received by a certain clientele gathered there. They seem to be appropriate to the places in which they are heard, and to the people who gather to hear them. So does 'Jazz.'

This seems to be justified by the admission of Mr. Lopez:

Because there seems to be something animal-like in the emotional effects of 'jazz,' we have turned to animal movements to get a name for it. We have had the 'turkey trot,' the 'elephant glide,' the 'camel walk,' and countless other designations; but at last, and apparently accepted permanently, the 'fox trot.' Perfection of lithesome, graceful bodily action in faultless rhythm can hardly be better pictured than by the harmonious movement of a fox as he trots. The name fits both the dance and the music.

And this is what America has chosen as a basis for the the 'national' school of composers for which she has been crying out! I don't believe it. On the contrary, I believe that there are some young hundred-per-cent. Americans who will eventually express in music the restless energy of America, and her magnificent aspects of Nature, just as practically every great composer has expressed something at least of the scenery and spirit of his country; and they will do it without calling in the aid of West African idioms. These American composers are no doubt young, as I have said—so young that (in the American tongue) they are probably running around in short pants or perhaps still in the cradle. But they are there, and when they get to work they will produce, not noises that are 'animal-like' in their effects, or derived from the orgies of semi-savages, but an art worthy of a great country.

Mr. F. W. Massi-Hardman's letter on critics, which appears on page 837, makes use of an argument as old as the hills. He asks:

Can the critics sing, play, conduct, compose, better than those they criticise? If not, their criticism is a mere pretentious humbug to make a living—a casting the beam out of another's eye before they cast the mote from their own.

(Mr. Massi-Hardman should verify his references. He spoils the simile by transposing the beam and mote.) If we adopt this principle we should throw over our right to complain in a hundred instances that occur in everyday life. When Mr. Massi-Hardman finds his tailor spoiling the cut of a coat, or his cook sending up an uneatable dish, does he maintain an indulgent silence on the ground that he could not do better himself? He does not. And if the culprit turned on him with the above argument, and asked if he could do the job better himself, he would of course point out that it was not his job, but the tailor's or cook's. Similarly, the critic's business is not to sing, play, conduct, or compose (though there have been, and are, critics able to make a fair show at one or more of these accomplishments); his office is to produce a readable judgment on the performance of others. And just as Mr. Massi-Hardman is (presumably) an excellent judge of a dinner, and able to point out the defects in one that falls short of perfection, though (again presumably) but a poor hand at cooking himself, so a reasonably well-educated all-round musician, though no performer, can be trusted to appraise the merits of a player or singer.

The thing is summed up in a figure so well worn that I hesitate before repeating it: One of our best-known critics, when judging some brass performances at a competitive festival, having given a decision unpalatable to some of the audience, was saluted by a voice, 'What do you know about it? Can you play a brass instrument?' and promptly replied, 'No! Nor can I lay an egg, but I know the difference between a good one and a bad one!' The analogy is not perfect, of course, because the faults in an egg are not, I believe, connected with the laying thereof. All eggs are good when laid; the decline in merit comes only when they are kept over-long. Still, the figure is near enough, and it has a homely smack that makes it get home to an audience's heart, as festival judges have found many a time and oft when judging classes that seem to call for special technical knowledge of a type that they are conscious of not possessing. If everybody thought as Mr. Massi-Hardman thinks, there would be no more competitive festivals, no reviewing of new books or music, and no more examinations of any kind. It is a notorious fact that some of the best musical examiners are men who, through pressure of work (and in some cases owing to the passage of years), are unable to keep their technique up to the mark. They must inevitably decline to pass many aspirants whose actual technical skill is superior to their own. Yet the longer they go on examining, and the worse their own performing powers become, the more unerringly can they lay their finger on the weak spot of the examinees. This goes to show that the ability to size up a performance is largely a matter of training, and, therefore, a musical critic who year after year listens with a keen and experienced ear (though with eyes deceptively closed and an air of boredom) can be relied on to give a good estimate of a performance. Ask anybody who has tried his hand at this sort of thing what he felt like at his first attempt. Hitherto he had been merely listening like the rest of the audience, ready enough to discuss the performance orally; faced with the responsibility of committing himself to a judgment on paper that will be read by thousands next day, he has felt a good deal less light-hearted about the task. For one thing, he found that judging a picture or a book is easy in comparison, because he could look at the picture again and again, or go over bits of the book as often as he liked. Even a play is fairly easy game, because it is a long, slow-moving affair compared with a musical performance; moreover, many plays are published as well as acted. But a musical performance unrolls itself (often very swiftly), and there is no turning back to revise your impressions. (All this is painfully obvious, of course, but the Massi-Hardmans have to be reminded of it.) And when the critic has done this bit of skilled listening he has to use skill of another sort in putting his hardly-won impressions on paper in a small space and in a manner that shall be clear and attractive to the average reader. Seeing how well our critics as a body perform this double task of listening and writing I think they receive a good deal less than their due. Mr. Massi-Hardman shows himself inclined to criticise the critics. They may well turn his own feeble arguments on him, and ask him if he could do better himself. Anyway, he may be reminded that musical criticism has been a recognised craft for some generations now, and it will continue because it provides something demanded by the majority of musicians, and, above all, by those who have something to criticise, whether as performers or composers. Those who, like Mr. Massi-Hardman, have no use for it, can easily avoid it.

Mr. Massi-Hardman quotes the Russian parable of the donkey that tried, by braying, to show the nightingale how to sing. A good critic does this sort of thing much better. He shows people how to perform by pointing out merits and defects in such a way that the criticised, given gumption and a teachable nature, can learn a lot. If he tried to show them by actual performance he would be less convincing—probably even ridiculous. So he wisely sticks to his last, whereas Mr. Massi-Hardman's donkey, by lifting up his untunable voice in competition with the nightingale, merely gave himself away with both hooves, thus showing that he was not merely an ass, but a silly ass.

NEW LIGHT ON LATE TUDOR COMPOSERS

BY W. H. GRATTAN FLOOD

II.—JOHN SHEPHERD

John Shepherd was born about the year 1511, and was educated in St. Paul's Cathedral, London, under Thomas Mulliner. The first reference I have met with regarding him is in August, 1536, when he was given the reversion of the Mastership of St. John's Hospital, Armestown, Northampton, diocese of Lincoln, on the next vacancy. In 1542, he was appointed Instructor of the Choristers at Magdalen College, Oxford, and, in 1549, was Fellow, a post which he held till 1551.

The late W. H. Husk, in the second edition of Grove's 'Dictionary of Music and Musicians,' gives no hint as to Shepherd having been a Gentleman of the Chapel Royal. More curious still, G. E. P. Arkwright, in his admirable Catalogue of Manuscript Music in Christ Church Library, Oxford (1915), states that though Shepherd is called 'of the Chappelle,' in 1554, yet, he adds, it is 'an appointment not recorded elsewhere.' However, it is certain that Shepherd was a Gentleman of the King's Chapel in 1551, and was continued as such under Queen Mary in 1553.

While at Magdalen College he was admonished three times for offences 'contra formam statuti'—one of the offences being the surreptitious 'impressing of a chorister from Malmesbury without the King's licence for so doing.'

Shepherd's fame is immortalised in Morley's 'Introduction' (1597), in which work he is included among 'famous English composers,' while six years earlier, in 1591, John Baldwin, in recounting the principal composers of the day, writes:

I will begin with White, Shepherd, Tye, and Tallis, Parsons, Giles, Mundy, th'oulde: one of the Queen's Pallis.

Ample proof that Shepherd was one of the Gentlemen of the Chapel under Edward VI. is evidenced from the official List of Musicians, with their fees, from the Establishment book for 1552—implying that he had then been at least six months in office. This book, with Shepherd's acknowledgement of payment, will be found in the British Museum among the Stowe MSS. 571, folio 36.

For those who have any doubt that Shepherd was continued in office under Queen Mary, the best proof is that his name appears in the list of thirty-one Ministers of the Chapel for whom livery was ordered on September 17, 1553, and was, presumably, worn at the Queen's Coronation on October 1 (Exchequer Rolls, 437, 5-10). Henry Davey, in his 'History of English Music' (second ed., 1921), states that among the 'Gentlemen' in 1552, under Edward VI., Emery Tuckfield was the oldest, but he apparently was unaware that Tuckfield was one of the priests. As a fact, the name of Shepherd appears after that of Robert Stone, who lived to be ninety-seven, his death not occurring till July 2, 1613.

The next reference to Shepherd is in April, 1554, when he supplicated for the degree of Mus.Doc., 'having studied music twenty years,' but it is not known if he was granted it. Mr. Davey writes: 'In 1555 he was complained against, and very sharply reprov'd by the vice-president, after which nothing is known of him.' This latter statement is inaccurate, as I find reference to him on New Year's Day, 1557, among the donors of gifts to Philip and Mary. The entry is as follows: 1557. January 1. 'Shepherd of the Chapel gives three rolls of songs.'

Shepherd was still alive at the death of Queen Mary, in November, 1558, and was probably continued in office under Queen Elizabeth. The Master of the Children of the Chapel Royal, Richard Bowyer, died on July 26, 1561 (Rimbault's date of 1563, in 'The Old Cheque Book of the Chapel Royal,' is erroneous), and was succeeded by Richard Edwards, who had been appointed during Bowyer's serious illness, the patent being dated May 27, 1561.*

It is certain that Shepherd remained a steadfast member of the Roman Catholic faith till his death, although the inclusion of two English anthems by him in John Day's 'Morning and Evening Prayer,' in 1560, and of a 'Prayer' in Day's 'Whole Psalmes in Foure Parts,' in 1563, has been quoted by some recent writers as a proof that he temporised under Elizabeth. This, however, was not the case, nor did he live five years after Elizabeth's Coronation. The exact date of his death has not been recorded, but he was dead in March, 1563. Even if he did compose a few English Services, it was—just as in Byrd's case—merely in an 'official' way.

Fortunately, sufficient of Shepherd's compositions have survived to prove that he was a noteworthy composer. His 'Esurientes,' printed by Burney, is regarded by Dr. Ernest Walker as 'a good specimen of his solid, straightforward, if rather dull, music.'

His five Masses—'Western Wynde,' 'French Masse,' 'Be not afraid,' 'Playn Song Mass for a Mene,' and 'Cantata Mass'—will be found in the British Museum among the Addit. MSS. 17,802-5, and in the Forest-Heyther collection. The 'Western Wynde' Mass is peculiarly interesting by reason of the fact that Taverner and Tye also wrote settings on the melody in the same MS. H. B. Collins, in his scholarly 'Latin Church Music' (1912-13), writes thus: 'Shepherd's Mass is much more concise than Taverner's, the melody being repeated twenty-three times as against Taverner's thirty-four . . . the counterpoint is freer and more vigorous as well as more ingenious than Taverner's. The "Agnus Dei" reaches a high level of expressive beauty, and the Finales in triple time are admirable.'

Shepherd's 'French Masse' is written throughout in perfect time (with the greater prolation), and is in good counterpoint. Mr. Collins considers it, on the whole, 'the best and most practicable of Shepherd's four-part Masses.' His 'Playn Song' Mass is also in good counterpoint, while his 'Be not afraid'—probably founded on a folk-melody—is remarkable for the free use of discords on the strong accents of the bar. Nor must we forget his glorious four-part 'Magnificat'—far superior to his five-part 'Magnificat,' from which Burney quoted the verse 'Esurientes.'

He must have been a prolific composer, judging by what has survived, and he essayed instrumental as well as vocal forms. The anthem, 'Haste Thee, O God, to deliver me,' ascribed to Shepherd by Barnard, is probably by a later composer of the same name. Forty Latin Motets by him are preserved at Christ Church, Oxford, for five, six, seven, and eight voices. Of these there are two settings of 'Cor vestrum,' 'Hic nempe mundi,' 'Sabbatum Maria,' 'Salva Nos,' and 'Te celorum.'

We are safe in dating his creative period as from 1536-60. His music is sound and vigorous. Mr. Collins says that he 'holds an important place among English composers of the period owing to his share in the development of the technique of composition.'

MUSIC AS A LIVING LANGUAGE

BY MRS. FRANK LIEBICH

The present interest displayed in music by people of all sorts and conditions is a peculiar sign of the times. Previous to the five cataclysmal years of war we were inclined to distinguish two categories of persons: those who were musical and those who were not. But though these lines of demarcation still hold good in many cases, they are becoming less hard and fast. For of all the healing processes that came into requisition for the maimed minds and hearts of those who have survived those devastating years, music has proved the finest tonic and consoler. The large, new public—that has completely ousted the various lesser ones, numbering many music-lovers who were trying to keep abreast of the modern developments of music—has created a demand for what is best in the past of the art. Wireless and a plethora of concerts meet the desire. Concerts, however, often remain, owing to the caprice of the public, a risk and a gamble. But in all kinds of unexpected ways we come across people for whom music has become a real need. And they are sometimes anxious to substantiate their reasons for the faith that is in them. Often they have neither time nor inclination to take up music as a serious study. But they want to supplement their gramophone or wireless set or concert-going with as much knowledge, historical and biographical or theoretical, of music and musicians, as they can, and books that give a synthetic idea of the history and development of the art meet their requirements. Such a one is Maurice Emmanuel's 'Histoire de la Langue Musicale,'* giving a detailed account of the successive stages of the evolution of music from the 7th century B.C. to comparatively recent times. The work is in two volumes. It is based on the qualitative continuity of the interpenetrative phases of the single note. Unlike many dry-as-dust treatises, the author brings the imagination of his readers into play along with their intelligence. It is the story, almost the romance, of the unending life and power of musical sound.

The history of the language of words bears testimony to the difference between the speech of Chaucer's time and that of Elizabeth's, as well as to the further changes that have been brought about between the Stuart period and Queen Anne, and again between the advent of the Hanoverians and the present time. The vitality of language is enriched and strengthened by the disuse of obsolete words and terms, and the introduction of new ones. The gradual development of the language of music, of harmonic sound, can also be traced across the successive epochs of the world's history. The evolutionary course of its progress can be likened to a melody in its continuity and indivisibility. Its history is a record of vibratory influences and of the evolutionary adaptation of man's hearing to the qualitative changes of the harmonic forces contained in the single note. M. Emmanuel's work is a synthetical exposé of facts and events, a linking of the present and past history of music. He warns his readers in his preface that he has written an historical essay in which neither artists nor their works figure in the foreground, but that consecutive periods are placed in the limelight and taken severally in the abstract, and it is by them that the various divisions of the work are classified. Though acceptable to scholars in the main, it is not written for them so much as for amateurs who desire to enjoy their favourite art intellectually as well as pleasurably—for nearly every one plays sonatas or listens to symphonies or operas.

* For an account of Edwards, see the Memoir by the present writer in 'Early Tudor Composers,' Musical Times, March, 1924, p. 223.

* H. Laurens, 6, Rue de Tournon, Paris (VI<sup>e</sup>).

As a slight preliminary to the study of his work the author would like his readers to possess an elementary knowledge of solfège, to be able to read the C and F clefs, and to be acquainted with the generic construction of the different major and minor scales. At the outset he defines the empirical principles of resonance, esteeming that all that preceded and all that followed the period from Bach to Wagner is thus elucidated.

The work is divided into two sections: Ancient and Modern Art, and six periods with subdivisions—Antiquity (7th century B.C. to 5th century A.D.), Middle Ages I. (5th to 12th centuries), Middle Ages II. (13th, 14th, and 15th centuries), Renaissance (16th century), Modern Period (1600-1860), and Present Time.

The first and introductory chapter on 'Resonance' treats of the continuous natural phenomena from which all sonorities are evolved. The pure, single note is non-existent, any given fundamental note being surrounded by a cortège of satellites. Theoretically their number is illimitable. Practically the perception of them—as when a low note on the pianoforte is sounded, a violin or harp string set vibrating, or a bell struck—is somewhat restricted.

If G, taken as a fundamental note, is sounded on a pianoforte its partial tones or harmonics, 2, 3, 4, 5 (G D G B) will vibrate in response, and can be discerned by a sensitive ear: the higher harmonics, 6, 7, 8, 9 (D F G A), will be perceived by those of ultra-sensitive hearing. The creative art of music has developed and, so to speak, kept pace with the natural, interpenetrative, resonant succession of these several harmonics.

Rameau called them 'the invisible guide of the musician.' Rutland Boughton has felicitously named them 'spirit notes.' First, he says*

... they caused the faint quality of the perfect musical note to become sensible to our grosser hearing; then we were led by them to build up the simple forms of chord architecture; and chords, be it well noted, sound loud or soft less in dynamic than in some yet undiscovered harmonic relationship. . . . But much more has been effected by the spirit notes: our very speech depends upon them, for Helmholtz has shown how the vowel-sounds are nothing but combinations of notes of harmonic relationship.

If the second harmonic G and its octave (4) are eliminated, out of the five first harmonics only three will remain, 1, 3, and 5 (G D B). These three notes constitute the common chord. Of its extended form 1, 3, 5, 6—which M. Emmanuel calls 'l'accord général'—he says:

All the different chords in use in classic times were evolved from this unique formula, G B D F A, or chord of the major ninth, and from it the founders of modern harmony have derived those which they have employed.

The author's book on Greek dancing is well-known in this country. It was the subject of the thesis which won him his degree of docteur es lettres, equivalent in France to the English M.A. Consequently, following on his study of Greek art, a third of the first volume of his History is devoted to a penetrating scrutiny of the traces of Greek music that are to be found in the music of the earlier Modern periods. Later he deals with their survival in the liturgical chants of the Church and in the songs of the Troubadours.

In each of the six sections of these volumes, intervals, scales, harmony, notation, and rhythm are treated separately and in detail. The chapters devoted to the modes and varied rhythm of the Greeks are among the most interesting. The Greeks, he says, would have looked upon our scales and rhythm as puerile. The theory of the 'accented beat' would only have seemed justifiable to those boon companions of the Kômos who, their libations over, celebrated the praise of the divine Bacchus and endeavoured, often in vain, to move their feet along the ground at equal and equidistant intervals! In contradistinction to much of our regular monotonous rhythm the Greeks delighted to substitute equivalences and symmetries in which our unities of time are considered inartistic and unnecessary. The combined poet-musician-dancer of Hellas was a past-master of rhythm. The mobility of human thought and emotion was reproduced by the Greeks in their sensitive rhythms.

In the third chapter (Middle Ages I.), the gradual merging of the Greek ideals into the Christian liturgy, and even into the polyphonic chorus of the Renaissance, is depicted. The author is specially qualified to write on Gregorian music, having been choir-master for a time at the Church of St. Clothilde, at Paris. Later, in the 16th century, the further absorption of modality into tonality takes place; the rise of polyphony, and the connection of the motet with the primitive organum, is described. Also the different intervals, the vivid interplay of thirds in the polyphony of the day—thirds that were next in succession to the fifths and fourths of the phenomenon of resonance. It is the period of the rise and subsequent domination of tonality and consequent elimination of the modes. The tonal major (Mode of Ut) became despotic. It, so to speak, gave the word of command to its vassals, the neighbouring tonalities. It completely subordinated the hybrid minor scale, situated a minor third below, under the pretext that in its descending form (pseudo-hypodoristi) its component parts were similar to its own, thus establishing a close bond between the two tonalities—the one major, the other minor. A whole gamut of scales became relative one to another, but the radical consequences of tonality were only fully realised towards the commencement of the 18th century. An exhaustive study of Form

* The Musical Quarterly, October, 1915, New York and London.

(1600-1860) in a subsequent chapter brings all the power of tonality into strong relief.

Yet much of the modal tradition was prolonged by several composers into the 17th century. Some of the organists previous to Bach were among the last vindicators of modality. In establishing the pure 'classic' tonality, Bach had to destroy the more or less modal tonality which was still extant in his day. Thus the varied music of the Renaissance, tonal and modal at one and the same time, numbered as many schools (Flemish, Walloon, French, Italian, Spanish, German, English) as the schools of painting.

The 17th-century composers were the founders of the régime of modern harmony. The word 'harmony' at this period takes for the historian a new and more precise meaning. And it manifests that the applied principles of resonance were becoming more extended. The chords of the dominant seventh and dominant ninth, with rectifications, were thus considered to be a product of the natural harmonics.

In Part 6 (Modern Period, 1600-1860), the author discusses still further the problem of Harmony and Tonality and the complete disappearance of the Modes. The evolution of rhythm shows symmetrical time and the bar-line linked to one another. Common-time created the necessity for the accented beat. Between them they abolished all that the Renaissance had rediscovered of the free rhythm of antiquity. At the time when polyphony was at its height a revival of dancing was taking place in many parts of Europe. Dance music was then modelled on the airs and rhythms of the folk-music. But when the bar-line became the indicator of rhythmic stress the progress that had been made in rhythm in the 16th century was compromised. The bar-line and symmetrical common-time were erected as dogmas. In an interesting chapter on Form (Modern Period), special stress is laid on the work of J. S. Bach, whose activities were exercised at the confines of various dual stages of the evolution of music: Modality and Tonality, Monody and Polyphony, Melody and Harmony.

The last hundred pages of the history are divided between the Present Day Period and an Epilogue on the Continuity of the Language of Music. The author warns his readers that the near future reserves many a surprise for the musical pilgrim. (The work was written in 1911.) But in spite of evolutionary methods, the art still remains to some extent conservative. In the present crisis it is not so much its speech that is changing as the relations of the parts of speech to each other. For lovers of the old modes there is satisfaction in seeing their present requisition. Folk-music and its current vogue has restored them to us. The author questions the possibility of a synthesis of homophony and polyphony. For in all the arts it seems as if artists had exhausted their scope. Revolutions imply recommencements.

This closely-reasoned work of six hundred and seventy-nine pages can merely be glanced at in a short essay, and such a cursory survey can only be likened to the vain endeavour of trying to get an idea of the beauty and varied aspects of a fine tract of country—our English Lake District, for example—from an aeroplane. It is a story without an end of melodic affinities and of the gradual expansion of tone and harmony. It is devoid of the characterisation of musical genius. But through all its chapters the spirits of those who used this sonorous language for the expression of their thoughts and emotions and artistic sense of tonal beauty are felt on almost every page. As we follow the evolution of what was their artistic medium we realise that their efforts were, and are, as much prolonged and blended into one another from antiquity to modern times as any note of any given harmonic series. Their activities, the romance of their working lives, their successes, even their occasional failures, are all bound up with the multiple unity of these 'invisible guides,' these vivifying 'spirit notes.'

MYSTICISM IN MUSIC

By J. A. WESTRUP

Music suffers, perhaps in a greater degree than other arts, from loose thinking. It is an art in some ways so peculiarly distinct and remote from others that its very remoteness from the more material forms of human experience and objective realities is an inducement to vague generalisation and unscientific application of unmeaning attributes. We may say that a picture is true to life, that it is what Plato would have called an accurate mimesis, or similarly that a poem represents tolerably well some phase of human passion or emotion, because both painting and poetry are able to provide in their own mediums a copy of that emotion or passion. But when we try to apply the analogy to music we are met at once by a considerable difficulty. It is manifest that music is not the mere representation of an experience, but an experience itself, not the objective realisation of an idea, but an idea itself. We may take a concrete and obvious example first. A man in a state of heat may be represented in painting as sweating or otherwise exhibiting natural signs of his condition, or in dramatic poetry by the words 'I am hot,' or some similar expression, and in narrative by a description. But we cannot represent a hot man in music. On the other hand music can under certain conditions express heat or cold, or beauty or ugliness, but not a beautiful or an ugly thing. It is a well-known fact that programme music fails in its intention when it attempts to represent the concrete, and falls further from its ideal the more it tries to abandon the abstract. We see this pathetic fact very clearly in the work of Richard Strauss. The Death Music in 'Tod und Verklärung' is not a picture of a dying man, which would be impossible. It is the agony of death itself. On the other hand the 'Rocks' theme in the 'Alpine' Symphony no more suggests rocks than cockchafers, simply and solely because music is not by nature and cannot be a mimetic art, that is to say, it does not represent but expresses. It is when it expresses virtually nothing that we term it unsatisfactory, shallow, mean, or uninteresting. Music is only absolute by virtue of expressing something absolute, and any concrete representation introduced into music, if regarded as concrete, becomes at once a foreign and disturbing element. The cuckoo, nightingale, and quail in the 'Pastoral' Symphony cease to be music so long as we are merely conscious that they represent the notes of birds. It is only when they have taken their proper place in the musical scheme that the whole can be regarded as pure music. The idea may suggest concrete objects, just as when we think of beauty we immediately conceive the image of some beautiful object, but to force music definitely to represent concrete things would be absurd.

It is in this light that we must determine the nature of mysticism in music. The term, like many others, as I have suggested, is often wrongly applied to anything which bears the mark of deep religious emotion. But mysticism in its true sense implies the communion of the human mind with the divine essence, the attempted realisation of the ultimate, which is obviously a very high and inaccessible ideal. For while music, being an idea, may commune with the essence of beauty unalloyed in a way which is denied to painting and poetry, the communion with the divine essence is a very different thing. Of course it is difficult to refute any author who sees mysticism in any particular work of any composer. For example, when a writer says that the 'Incarnatus' of the Mass in D is a supreme example of musical mysticism, the proof or refutation depends solely on the ability of the philosopher to visualise such communion as is said to be here expressed. Clearly music is far more able to express this idea than poetry or painting is able to represent it, though we must guard carefully against the error of supposing that any music which has a mystical subject is itself mystical. This would be almost as fatal as the vulgar assumption that all Church music is good because it is written for and performed in churches. Such works as the early Italian oratorios or the 'Passions' of the more serious German composers before Bach must be subjected to a more acute criticism than the hasty diagnosis which is sometimes accorded them. We must often be on our guard against this fallacy even in dealing with the works of Bach, and refuse to be seduced by the contemplative piety of the words into a false view of the music. I suppose that the only way by which we can know whether the music of any particular composer is mystical is by realising the impression which it produces on us. Some composers are obviously not mystical—Handel, for example, and Schumann and Parry. In others we perceive traces, especially in Bach, Beethoven, and Brahms. It will be seen that we are led to the conclusion that all the highest manifestations of musical genius are mystical. Mysticism itself is communion with the divine, and the highest form of inspiration has clearly a divine origin by virtue of being the highest, or, to put it in non-theistic terms, the highest inspiration is directly drawn from the imagination or partial conception of the ultimate, and music being, in the words of Schopenhauer, an 'immediate objectivation of Will as a whole,' that music which is produced by the highest inspiration is the most supremely mystical. Nor is the conclusion proved fallacious by history or experience. I have purposely omitted to mention the great polyphonic composers, for any true estimation or appreciation of their work seems to necessitate a frame of mind both historical and æsthetic beyond the reach of any but the specialist. But within the scope of modern music, that is to say, from Bach onwards, there is abundant evidence to support such a contention, provided that we do not follow Max Nordau either in his definition of mysticism or in his wild and uncompromising theory that all mystics are mad. For though it is true that epileptic and delirious persons are apt to be mystical, he would be a bold man who would assume the converse to be true.

Though it is always invidious to analyse the inspiration and mental processes of living composers, it is clearly the proper function of anyone who would discover the influence of mysticism on music in our own age. While we might all agree in general as to which were the most mystical moments in Bach, Beethoven, and Brahms—I suppose one would refer to the B minor Mass, the Mass in D, and the German 'Requiem'—there would probably be some disagreement in the case of composers like Elgar, Vaughan Williams, and Holst. Of course there is danger in the inquiry; for if we hold that any particular work is deeply mystical, by our conclusion we are compelled to regard it ipso facto as a work of supreme genius. Yet the investigation is not unprofitable. If we hesitate to follow blindly those who are led by the more obvious and sensuous elements in 'Gerontius' to declare that it is rather a highly-coloured and imaginative picture than the real and true manifestation of spiritual experience, we shall of ourselves easily discover where there is a definite vein of mysticism. We shall in all probability find the task easier, on account of the smaller number of distractions, in 'The Apostles.' We shall see very clearly how mysticism seems to depend on vocal expression; how the mere manipulation of artificial instruments, however delicately manufactured or however beautifully played, seems insufficient for the full expression of real and ultimate truths. So we have Vaughan Williams's 'Mystical Songs,' and Holst also has recourse to female voices for 'Neptune the Mystic,' but no one ever wrote a Mystical Symphony or even a Mystical String Quartet, though the string quartet is the most perfect combination of instruments. Nor is it possible to recall any purely instrumental work which does express true mysticism, even among the works of Franck.*

The student of mysticism in modern music might well begin by examining the works which I have mentioned. Of course, the Vaughan Williams song cycle possesses the advantage of definitely mystical words, which are liable, as I have said, to make the hearer uncritical, especially if he is at all susceptible to the influence of mystical poetry. But if this difficulty is once overcome, it is not likely to recur again in the consideration of other works of a similar kind. It would be dogmatic in the highest degree for any individual to lay down that such and such a passage of such and such a work did express mysticism. It is sufficient to indicate the general lines on which such criticism should and can most profitably be based. I have little doubt that the earnest student will find that we have not in this 20th century utterly lost sight of the ultimate and inevitable truths which were the inspiration of the greatest masters of our art.

* I am quite aware that this statement will be contested. To intending combatants I make a present of the instrumental portions of 'Parsifal' and Vaughan Williams's String Quartet. No concession is implied by this offer.

Occasional Notes

The average novelist either ignores music or talks nonsense about it. Musical journals rightly pillory bad examples of the latter, so justice demands that when an opportunity for handing a bouquet occurs they should not miss it. Mr. E. F. Benson's 'David of King's' contains a good deal of musical interest, and the art is written about in a knowledgeable manner. We enjoyed very much the description of the close of a service at King's College Chapel, and above all, the account of Dr. Mann's doings with the voluntary :

Dr. Mann paused a moment before he gave out the subject of a Bach Fugue. It was really a Fugue from the 'Well-Tempered Clavier,' but the wizard who presided over those banks of stops and triple key-board had designed the painting of it with all the orchestral colour of the organ. [Triple key-board? Surely the organ at King's is a four-manual?] It was well-known to David, for his sister in school-room days had been set to learn it, and to enliven her task she and David had created absurd words for it which fitted the subject . . .

thus following the irreverent example of Prout and others. We wonder how many readers can 'spot' the Fugue by means of the jingle?

'Why, it's Margery's,' he said, and made a fluting noise that followed the rhythm of it.

'John Sebastian Back

Sat down on a tack,

Sat do-own on a tack, and said, "Wow"!'.

'Now he's going to sit down again: he keeps sitting down on a tack; there's a tack for him everywhere. Isn't it ripping?'

There follows a capital description of the working-out, and the author considerably provides a clue by telling us that the close was a chord of C major. So we see that the Fugue was No. 2 in Book 1. Learn the jingle, and test it next time you feel moved to sing in your bath: you will find that the third line is not a perfect fit, though near enough to serve.

'O lord, what fun!' said David. 'Worth while sitting down on a tack if it makes you sing like that. I must learn music. I must be a composer. How do you set about a fugue?'

There is much to be said for this light-hearted way of taking a good proportion of Bach. Indeed, a prime difference between Beethoven and Bach lies in the fact that one has to take Beethoven seriously nearly all the time, whereas one cannot play (say) the Clavier Suites and 'Forty-eight' without very often feeling inclined to say with David, 'What fun!'

Mr. Benson's book contains also some excellent fooling in regard to a glee party—none the worse for being on the farcical side—and is in other respects one of the best and most amusing of recent novels.

In our August 'Occasional Notes' we drew attention to the curious facts that in Sir Dan Godfrey's 'Memories and Music' the list of works played at Bournemouth under Sir Dan's direction contains nothing by Bach, and that the composer's name does not even appear in the general index. We expressed the opinion—which was also a hope—that there had been a slip somewhere, and we are glad to find that our surmise was correct. Sir Dan writes and tells us that somehow the Bach works were left out. He promises to send us a complete list, which we hope to insert in our next issue.

The mention of Bournemouth's music reminds us of the excellent work being done in this way at the neighbouring resort of Weymouth. One of our readers who recently spent a holiday there sends us a batch of programmes given by the Weymouth Municipal Orchestra, and becomes quite dithyrambic in regard to the performance. Certainly the programmes are excellent in quality. Here is one chosen at random: Overture to 'Phèdre,' Massenet; Beethoven's fifth Symphony; Liszt's 'Hungarian Rhapsody'; Borodin's 'On the Steppes of Central Asia'; and a Strathspey from Ansell's Ballet, 'The Shoe.' This music was played one morning at 11.15—a time of day when most people would expect nothing but the most trivial music, if any at all. We note that other programmes have included Haydn's 'Oxford' Symphony; Saint-Saëns's 'Phaeton'; Grainger's 'Handel in the Strand' and 'Shepherd's Hey'; Rimsky-Korsakov's 'Capriccio Espagnole'; Berlioz's 'Le Carnaval Romain'; Roger Quilter's 'Children's Overture'; Dvorák's 'Capriccio Italien' and 'Marche Slave'; Dukas's 'L'Apprenti Sorcier'; Franck's Prelude, Fugue, and Variation; the 'Unfinished' Symphony; Borodin's String Quartet in D, &c. The conductor is Mr. Eldridge Newman, who helps his audience by neatly-phrased and well-delivered comments, illustrated by the playing of various themes from the music about to be performed. We are glad to hear that the public shows its appreciation of this excellent work in the most convincing manner by crowding the hall—one more proof that a sea-side audience is as prompt as any other to enjoy good music provided it be of a readily attractive kind. (The mistake too often made is that of trying to gain converts by playing good music that reveals its attractiveness only after repeated hearings.) So many of our readers have recently discussed the problem of the small orchestra that they may be interested to hear that the Weymouth band is thus constituted: four violins, viola, 'cello, bass, flute and piccolo, clarinet, trumpet, trombone, timpani, pianoforte, Mustel organ, celeste, and bells.

The reader who gives us this information, and whose judgment we may rely on, tells us that this small band plays such works as the '1812' Overture, and such complex scores as that of Dukas's 'L'Apprenti Sorcier' with extraordinarily good effect. As not unimportant details, we add that the surprising sum of threepence is charged for a seat, and that the hall holds fifteen hundred.

Professional musicians who paint are not common, and those who manage to find a niche at the Royal Academy Exhibition may be described as rare. We therefore record with pleasure the fact that Dr. Louis A. Hamand, the organist of Malvern Priory, has a couple of water-colours in this year's exhibition. They will be found in the South Room: No. 712, 'Braunton, Devon,' and No. 734, 'The Tithe Barn, Powick.'

More than any art, music appears to suffer from the inability of some of its devotees to express themselves without highfalutin gush. Some time ago we received from a New York Literary Exchange an interview with Rabindranath Tagore on Kreisler. The Exchange said that it took 'great pride and pleasure' in offering us 'this historic interview of paramount artistic importance for free publication.' We saw so little of historic or artistic importance in the matter that we laid it aside. It has turned up again, however, and, after all, we feel that some of its choicest flowers ought to be handed on to our readers. The interviewer, Mr. Basanta Koomar Roy, found Tagore 'seated at his desk in a corner':

A little lamp was burning on his little desk, and he sat as quiet as Buddha in meditation. Without disturbing him, I sat myself on a chair and was watching the master poet write. Suddenly he began to hum a tune, his head was swaying rhythmically, and he kept on writing. After a while Tagore looked back, and found me in the room. 'When did you come in?' he asked quite surprised. 'I did not know that you were here.'

Mr. Koomar Roy really must remember to knock, or to cultivate, for use while waiting, a cough of quiet but telling timbre.

The conversation turned on music, and eventually settled on Kreisler.

What did Tagore think of him?

'I like Kreisler's music very much,' said Tagore, as his magnetic eyes were electrified and his face was lit up with a reverent smile. 'I like it more than words can tell,' continued the poet. 'I shall never forget his music. It has moved me deeply. It has shaken me profoundly. It so simply carries us to the very beginning of things. I have heard many musicians, but no music has moved me so fundamentally as Kreisler's playing on the behala (violin). It is something more than marvellous execution, it is something more than exquisite tone, it is something more than perfect music—it is, in fact, a cosmic cry of the Soul from the realm of the External. I do not know how to express it adequately in ordinary words. Psychic language is necessary to express such feelings. How soulfully he plays! He just mercilessly lances one right through the heart with the inexplicable somethingness of his music. It is simply superb.'

Later Mr. Koomar Roy spoke of the fortitude shown by Kreisler during the war, making a comparison that we prefer not to quote:

'Yes, I understand,' said Tagore pensively, as he shook his unique head and opened wide his wonderful eyes as if to seek a glimpse of something that eyes cannot see. 'Yes, from the quality and message of Kreisler's music I can readily understand what you mean. It is the same thing—it is the same principle. Kreisler plays a cosmic music. His music is a positive spiritual affirmation. He must think in terms of the Infinite. He ponders over the varied expression of the Universal in sound and colour. He is enveloped in his heavenly music; so nothing can affect him.'

The interview wound up with another comparison, again far-fetched, but this time quotable:

'Do you realise,' continued Tagore with fervent eloquence, as he wove his tapering fingers in the air, 'how strong a fish is when it is under water? It is powerful in its own strength. Even man with all his power, intelligence, and inventive genius, has to devise so many ways and means, has to wait long, long hours, and struggle exceedingly hard to catch a fish. And when caught, how hard it is for man to take it out of water. But once out of its own element it is utterly helpless. Even the touch of a straw hurts it. So Kreisler is plunged into the pool of music. Music has clothed him with immortality, and the radiant truth of his art shields him from the unreal. When truth fails, man falls. Kreisler rests on the lap of the Eternal, and this makes him invincible.'

We have struggled hard over this bit of fervent eloquence (even going so far as to weave our own tapering fingers into what is left of our hair), but we cannot be convinced that, apart from his music, Kreisler is so much like a fish out of water as Tagore seems to think. All the signs go to show that he is an excellent man of business—as, indeed, every musician ought to be. He gives his public what he is sure it will like, and, on the whole, probably does no more on behalf of music than does the average prima donna. Of course we all make the most of our opportunities of hearing him play on his behala (violin), but only an Oriental mystic can see in the melodious trifles that occupy a large part of his programmes a cosmic cry of the Soul from the realm of the External, or feel himself lanced right through the heart with the inexplicable somethingness of his music.

But if we may judge from a recent article in the Daily Express, Kreisler himself is somewhat given to extravagant expressions. Thus:

Whether I play in public in the midst of thousands, or in the privacy of my room, I forget everything except my music. Whenever I play I am lifted out of the material plane, and in touch with another, a holier world. It is as if some hand other than mine were directing the bow over the strings. And it is at such times as these that the artist gets in touch with the supernatural.

Of course every great performer, whether singer, player, actor, or even speaker, feels something of this. But in general, the more they feel the less they talk about it. And we take leave to doubt whether any performer is ever so carried away as to forget everything except the music, still less to be lifted out of the material plane. A performance of (say) a concerto by a player who was so completely rapt would give conductor and orchestra some anxious moments.

Speaking of composers, Kreisler said:

Yet our work is secondary to that of the composer; we are, as it were, a second flame. What, then, must be the mind of the composer? It must be a mystical whirlpool of emotions so terrific as to be beyond a layman's comprehension. He must look for divine guidance and be ready to chronicle its slightest movements.

That is how the public likes to picture the composer, but in reality he and his methods are much less picturesque. In the production of fine music that mystical whirlpool of emotions is far less fruitful than a capacity for hard, grinding work. Nobody can study his Bach and Beethoven, for example, without coming across abundant proof that page after page of fine stuff was beaten out by sheer cerebration, working on material that in itself was often insignificant. Composition, like fine fiddling or singing, is possible only when there is good brain and will-power at work at the back of it. The notorious under-estimation of the mental capacity of musicians (especially composers) apart from their art is largely due to the floods of loose talk about inspiration, terrific whirlpools of mystic emotion, and so forth. Yet the men capable of writing such things as (say) the 'Forty-eight,' the 'Rasoumovsky' Quartets, or the 'Ring,' clearly had a mental force and a driving-power at least equal to that possessed by many a writer whose fame is secured by the titles of a few books that are now as dead as the 'Forty-eight,' the Quartets, and the 'Ring' are alive.

The one bit of real commonsense in the Kreisler article comes at the end:

I have often thought that we artists, above all others, should be grateful for the fact that we are able to make profit out of what is our greatest pleasure. Some men are inherent gamblers or drunkards, some are born vicious. If they indulged their natural tendencies they would proceed downhill to their ruin. I feel a great sorrow for those so handicapped at birth. Yet we artists find our greatest joy in expressing our desires in music. And yet while doing so we reap a monetary reward.

Without a doubt! And nobody grudges them a penny of it. Bach lived at too early a date in the history of music-publishing to be able to derive much benefit from his works, but with few exceptions composers ever since have been pretty good hands at taking their goods to market, though on the whole their return is small compared with that of those who perform their music. Indeed, Beethoven, the composer above all others be-legended in this matter of terrific emotional whirlpools, was so good a bargainer that he tried to take his Mass in D to four markets at once; and generally he showed himself well able to hold his own in a business transaction. The public likes to think of music-publishers as harpies, and of composers as rapt innocents with their heads in the clouds—a picture to which composers themselves have not been above contributing a few strokes. Yet there have been idealists among the publishers hardly less than among the composers. During the past two centuries music has probably owed to the publisher a debt second only to that due to the composer. But this and other not unimportant questions concerning the material side of music will never be grasped by the lay mind so long as the art is clouded about by sentimental gush. In all the recent talk about widening the public interest in good music nobody seems to have suggested a ban on misty verbiage and art-y jargon. Yet the point is an important one. It ought to be almost, if not quite, as easy to talk and write plain English and sound commonsense about music as about anything else, and when the fact is grasped by all programme annotators, lecturers, and writers on music, they will gain the ear of thousands of average people to whom at present the art is merely an exotic affair for more or less eccentric specialists.

Since the above was written we have come across a racy little passage in Musical America dealing with the question as an artist sees it. The speaker is Mr. Edward Johnson, a tenor of the Metropolitan Opera:

I think the successful artist of to-day has a good deal of business sense. The dreamer type is out of style; a misfit in this keen, active age. One will often hear the comment, 'He doesn't look like a singer (or an actor or painter) does he?' Whatever may be accepted as the old-fashioned standard of how he should look, I am quite sure 'he,' whoever he is, is glad he doesn't look that way. Little by little artists are proving to the world that they are regular fellows, selling their goods like business men. The only difference is that when you send out your goods, if you are a business man, your job is done. We have to be there with our goods when they are delivered. The agents peddle us around. We are, so to speak, the 'cheese.' In Anglo-Saxon countries there is a bit of leniency. In Latin countries the goods have to be as per ordered or there is a whistle which means 'watch out, something heavy is coming your way.'

We hope the professional reader, bearing in mind that he is the cheese, will prove himself to be a regular fellow.

We seem to be out of luck in our attempts to report the Leeds Choral Union concert at Paris. In an 'Occasional Note' last month we said that 'a French tenor' sang 'Cujus animam.' We now find that this 'French tenor' was Mr. Tudor Davies, who will, we hope, forgive us. However, we trip in good company, for we observe that Le Courrier Musical, in its account of the concert, disguised an old friend by speaking of it as 'Une ode de Melton: "Blert Pair of Sirius," mise en musique par M. Parry.'

From a recent Musical Times:

'I find it difficult to master my liking for a tune,' says Mr. James Agate. We hope he will find it impossible. So long as the fact remains that every composer who has ever mattered very much was a tune-writer, Mr. Agate may shamelessly indulge his liking.

From a twenty-line article on 'Tunes,' by Giulio di Conti, in the Etude for August:

'I find it difficult to master my liking for tune,' writes James Agate. Most people find it impossible. . . . In spite of our friends of 'Modernism' the stubborn fact remains that every composer who has moved the world has been a writer of tunes. . . . My dear Mr. Agate, do go right on, happy in the enjoyment of your tunes.

When Giulio and ourselves do agree, our unanimity is so wonderful as to extend almost to ipsissima verba.

NOTATION OF THE HORN: SOME ALTERED MEANINGS

By TOM S. WOTTON

One need not be a philologist to realise that in every language, while certain words drop out of common usage the meaning of others is modified or altered. The process may be abrupt or gradual, but if all are agreed as to the changed significance, no difficulty arises. Trouble begins when half the speakers or writers cling to the original meaning, while the other half persist in ignoring it. When the word is a technical term, serious misunderstanding will result. Such a term is 'cuivré,' with which may be associated 'bouché,' and the sign +, which may connote either one or the other, or at times the two combined. All three are connected with the notation of the horn.

To fix the latest date when there was no difference of opinion as to the meaning of these terms, would be impossible. To be on the safe side, let us take 1860, for a reason that will presently be apparent. In that year, when the hand-horn was still used almost exclusively in France, and was employed to a large extent in England and Germany, every composer had written for it and every cornist had been trained to play it. And, on the old instrument, notes that were produced by means of the hand in the bell were called by the French 'bouché,' the Germans 'gestopft,' the Italians 'chiuso,' and the English 'stopped' or 'closed.' All the words were synonymous and had but one meaning.

The same notes were beginning to be used on the valve-horn, and the same terms employed to describe them. But while on the hand-horn only certain notes could be closed, and these were 'good' or 'bad' according to the amount they required to be stopped, on the valve-horn every note could be taken as closed, and could be produced as either 'good' or 'bad.'

Berlioz, in his treatise on Instrumentation (1844) says:

. . . hunting fanfares are only really joyful when they are played on trompes (French hunting horns), a somewhat unmusical instrument, of which the strident and brazen tone bears no resemblance to the chaste and modest voice of the horn. By forcing the emission of air in the tube of the horn in a particular way, it can, however, be made to resemble the

trompe; this is called to faire cuivrer les sons (to make the sounds brassy). It can sometimes be used with excellent effect, even with closed notes.

Probably the best-known examples of the effect are in the Carillon of Bizet's 'L'Arlésienne' music (1872), and the Angelus of Massenet's 'Scènes pittoresques' (1874):

Both pieces are written for hand-horns, but while the three notes of the first are open, in the second some closed notes are introduced.

When d'Indy, in 'Le Chant de la Cloche' (1886), said that a + above a horn note connoted the cuivré effect, whether the note were closed or open, nobody mistook his meaning:

The first F is an open note, obtained by the valves, and the other two are respectively 'good' and 'bad' closed notes.

Coming to recent times, we find in an Italian edition of 'L'Arlésienne' suites, edited by Umberto Giordano, the 'cuivrez' of the Carillon translated as 'chiuso.' There is evidently an altered meaning here! The distinguished composer of 'Andrea Chénier' must have known that Bizet intended hand-horns for his work*, and of course knew that E, C, D are open notes on the hand-horn. Yet he marks them as 'closed'! The obvious inference is that the term which in 1860 undoubtedly meant nothing but 'closed' now signifies 'brassy.' A passage in Alfano's 'Suite romantica' (1910) seems to give warranty to this supposition, for we find on p. 90 muted horns marked as 'chiusi.' As nowadays a note cannot be both muted and closed, Alfano's 'chiuso' means something else than 'closed.' On the other hand, in Zandonai's 'Conchita' (1911) there is the indication 'con strumento chiuso,' which certainly implies that the bell has to be closed, whether the tone be brassy or not. The problem is solved by consulting the latest Italian treatise, for in Ricci's 'L'Orchestrazione' (1920) 'chiuso' is said to be equivalent to 'cuivré' or 'bouché.'

We turn to a French authority—and one would think that we could seek no better guide than Ch. M. Widor, whose 'Technique de l'Orchestre Moderne' (1904) professes to continue Berlioz's treatise, and bring it up to date. Having spoken of the effect of muted horns pp as a 'sonority of velvet, true caress for the ear,' he proceeds:

As to the 'Sons Cuivrés,' result of an effort, they are produced by the hand obliterating half the tube: the lips give the semitone above, and the movement of the hand makes the sound emitted descend again by the same amount.

The mechanical part does not concern us! For our present purpose, the point is that for the Widor 'cuivré' the use of the hand is imperative, while the Berlioz 'cuivré' is primarily one on open notes,* which could on occasion be employed with closed notes. As an example of the modern 'cuivré,' Widor mentions the closed and brassy notes of his predecessor's 'Messe des Morts,' but he refrains from quoting the chord in 'La Damnation de Faust':

Had he done so, he would have landed himself in difficulties. Berlioz uses four natural horns throughout his work (except for the scene immediately preceding the 'Ride to the Abyss,' where the 4th horn is 'à pistons'), and all four are here directed to be 'cuivré.' Horns 1 and 2 have closed notes, and therefore may agree with Widor's description. But what about the open G and E of horns 3 and 4? And, in Ex. 3, which of the F's satisfies his definition, and how does he define the other two?

The meaning of 'cuivré,' like 'chiuso,' has altered, and, as with the Italian term, the altered meaning is not adopted by every composer.

Debussy, nine years after the date of Widor's treatise, in 'Jeux' (pp. 48 and 50) has pp en cuivrant légèrement' (lightly brassed). As a horn must be stopped by some definite amount, the indication must refer to an effect produced by the lips and breath, the Berlioz cuivre in fact.†

Again, in Massenet's 'Bacchus' (1909) there are nine trumpets and six trombones on the stage, besides the three trumpets and three trombones in the orchestra, all, like the four horns, marked 'ffff cuivré.' Obviously the indication has the same significance for all the brass, and Massenet means the same Berlioz 'cuivré' for his horns he had intended twenty-five years before in his 'Angelus.' And, as far as I know, d'Indy still clings to the 'cuivré' of 'Le Chant de la Cloche,' which is also the Berlioz one.

Widor gives three ways of indicating his cuivré: 1st, by the +; 2nd, by the word 'cuivré (gestopft f)'; 3rd, by the + and the word 'cuivré (gestopft)' combined. The reason of this unnecessary complication will be seen later. To the second alternative he has a foot-note: "Gestopft" means "bouché," but, accompanied by an accent >, or by an f or by an sf it is taken in the sense of "cuivré." That is, a note marked p without any accent, and directed to be 'gestopft,' strictly speaking should be played as a simple closed note with as little effort as possible. And it should logically follow that a similar note surmounted by a + should be played in the same way, since the + is equivalent to 'gestopft.' In any case, there appear to be two meanings attached to 'gestopft,' and this is corroborated by Hofmann in his 'Instrumentationslehre' (1893). What he says amounts to this, that while on the hand-horn the 'bad' closed notes were avoided as much as possible, or only used for a special effect, on the valve-horn these 'bad' notes (which could be produced on any note of the scale) were often employed 'in recent works,' and indicated by 'gestopft' or a +.

* The original 'cuivré' was often implied merely by the direction: 'With up-turned bells,' i.e., the horns were held with outstretched arms in the position of 'trompes,' and no closed notes were possible.

† Even if 'légèrement' be twisted to mean stopping from the semitone above, it would not correspond to Widor's description.

* By way of exception, the Intermezzo of Suite No. 2 has a pair of 'cors-à-pistons' specified, as given in the Italian edition.

We have seen two meanings for the +, the one, the true cuivré, and the other, 'gestopft' in its modern restricted signification. To these we might add a third with confidence, were there not this uncertainty as what horn terms really do mean. At the head of 'Mlada' (1893) Rimsky-Korsakov explains that a + connotes a 'bouché' note (in the German translation of the directions, a 'gestopft' one). He says the same thing in his treatise on Orchestration, and there is reason to believe that he means merely 'good' stopped notes, for he particularly refers his readers to Gevaert's treatise for details relating to the technique of the various instruments, and the erudite Belgian's idea of 'bouché' on the valve-horn, which he says is equivalent to 'gestopft' or the +, is one obtained by fingering the semitone above. Also, the best-known example of the Russian master's closed notes, where a phrase is repeated almost like an echo, seems to demand 'good' closed notes, however it may be played in modern orchestras:

But as Wagner gave precisely the same direction at the head of 'Tristan,' published in 1860, and as his 'gestopft' is taken by many to mean the term in its modern restricted sense, it behoves us to be wary.

Richter is reported* to have declared that at first Wagner did not understand the valve-horn. Whether he said so or not it is undoubtedly true, and not only of Wagner but of practically every other composer of his time. The players too had very rudimentary ideas of the resources of the modern instrument, compared with their present-day successors. Wagner throughout his career was inclined to display a lofty contempt for instrumental technique, but all that now concerns us is his superstition—if it may be so called—as regards closed notes on the valve-horn. Having been brought up on the hand-horn, he thought of closed notes in terms of the old instrument. Two notes in 'Parsifal' (p. 688) will illustrate his attitude:

Previous to the two E-flats at (a), the horn had been in F, and is changed back again to F immediately after them. There seems to be not the slightest reason why the two notes should not have been written as at (b) for a horn in F. But Wagner wanted closed notes, and to him a D of the harmonic scale did not look so closed. It was a curious idiosyncrasy of his, and to some modern composers perhaps unintelligible. But it is a superstition that has not entirely died out, judging by some modern scores; where a + above an open note of the hand-horn is a rarity.

The first time Wagner marks 'gestopft' is in 'The Flying Dutchman' (p. 522), where the hand-horns in C have with a bassoon giving the minor third.* On p. 533 we find the same notes given to valve-horns, and obviously an exactly similar effect is required. Of course, on the modern instrument, the two notes could be given as 'good' closed notes, and the effect would have been slightly different. But it never appears to have entered Wagner's head that they could be produced in any other way than the one that was imperative on the hand-horn, that is, as 'bad' closed notes. Had he written no more, it might be argued plausibly that the modern restricted meaning of 'gestopft' was invented by him as early as 1843. But he lived to illustrate his real attitude towards closed notes, which was, up to the end of 'Tristan,' that closed notes were played on the valve-horn as they would be on the natural one.† Later, as we shall see, he realised his obsession, but, as our 'Parsifal' extract shows, he was always inclined to revert to his earlier idea. It came to him more easily, and in the fervour of composition a musician follows the (to him) easiest path, if it only means saving an infinitesimal amount of thought.

In 'The Rhinegold' (p. 389) there is a chord (Ex. 7a) for six horns, the key of all six having been altered for the sake of it:

and supporters of the theory that Wagner invariably intended the modern meaning of the + will be hard-pressed to explain why the parts should be noted in this apparently idiotic fashion. Do they convey to anyone the idea of the minor common chord on A flat, which is all they are intended to mean in real sounds? Why could they not have been written for six horns in F, the previous key of the first four horns, as at Ex. 7b? They would have been easier to read—always an important consideration with Wagner—and, if the + really meant the modern 'cuivré' sound precisely the same. But no! The chord as at Ex. 7*b* would have meant to the composer an open note and two 'good' closed ones. And he wanted three 'bad' ones! That he wished the modern effect, or something approaching it, there is no doubt, but he endeavoured to arrive at it in his own peculiar way. His strange notation was not pure wantonness!

* The 'gestopft' is of course unnecessary against hand-horns, which could play the notes in no other way. But Wagner anticipated his parts being taken by valve-horns, when the notes might be given as open ones with the valves.

† Wagner might have placed at the head of his scores the direction that Berlioz has for the opening bars of the March of the 'Fantastic': 'Make the closed notes with the hand, without employing the valves.' The French composer intended four hand-horns throughout his Symphony, and only has this indication—omitted from the Berlioz Edition and miniature score—because he, like Wagner, anticipated his parts being performed on valve instruments, and did not want to risk having his closed notes here given as open ones.

* By Paul Gilson, the well-known Belgian composer and critic, in Le Guide Musical, January 2, 1910.

Again in 'The Rhinegold' (p. 424) we find the following, for four horns:

If, with him, 'gestopft' was employed in its modern restricted sense and could be used on any note of the chromatic scale, why should a change of key be necessary? Why not a series of C's (natural) for F horns throughout, with 'gestopft' marked for the first bar of our extract, and 'offen' (open) for the last? Wagner's answer would have been very simple,—that whatever is marked against it, C natural is an open note of the harmonic scale and therefore could not be closed. If, he directs in 'Tristan,' by chance a + should be found against an open note (of the hand-horn that is)—and it was sometimes unavoidable in a chord of three or four notes—the players are to change the key of their instruments with the valve into a key in which the note is a closed one. It is a roundabout way of putting things, but it is in keeping with his general treatment of closed notes.

On the other hand, when he wrote 'good' closed notes he expected them to be produced in the same manner, that is, as they would be played on a hand-horn. When he wrote a phrase such as this in 'Tristan' (p. 559) he anticipated his performer playing it as one of Mozart's time would. He wanted delicate slurring, and imagined (rightly or wrongly) that the hand would give a better result than the valve.

Space forbids further illustrations, but if the reader can realise Wagner's attitude towards closed notes up to 1860, he will understand the extraordinary notation of chords such as Ex. 7*a*, and will see the reason for some of the changes of key in the horn parts, and how passages similar to our last extract may be played as musical good taste demands without being inconsistent with the Master's ideas. Wagner would have corrected his erroneous impressions earlier, had he had more practical experience, that is, the experience gained from rehearsing and hearing one's own works. But we must not forget that he wrote 'Lohengrin,' 'The Ring' up to the end of 'Waldweben,' and 'Tristan,' with no other practical experience than that derived from 'Tannhäuser,' produced in 1845. After all, his initial mistake was a very natural one. He was the first to employ closed notes for the valve-horn, and when he wrote the C sharp and G sharp ('gestopft') in 'The Dutchman,' the modern instrument itself had been used only twice before in Germany, in his own 'Rienzi' (1842), and in the first version of Schumann's D minor Symphony (1841). Nobody understood the valve-horn, and certainly not a non-player like Wagner, however great his genius. Three or four notes in 'Tannhäuser' would not have corrected his original impression, and then, as I have said, he was debarred from hearing his own works, and, in exile, was out of touch with first-class orchestras.* It was no greater fallacy, believing that closed notes on the valve-horn were the same as on the hand-horn, than in thinking that, by depressing a valve, the modern instrument could be used as a complete chromatic one in another key, and nobody questions the latter as being Wagner's belief. The difference was, that his error as regards closed notes has had a far-reaching effect, as we shall see.

After the publication of 'Tristan' enlightenment came to Wagner, possibly during the rehearsals of the opera in 1865. At any rate, he realised that, however intelligible his method may have been to the older players, nurtured, like himself, on the hand-horn, the younger men could not be expected to make subtle differences between the various crosses, but would treat them all precisely alike. As he without question had a weakness for the modern 'cuivré,' he decided to make his + connote that effect and that alone. Instead of directing that the + signified a stopped note in a general sense, for 'The Mastersingers' it signified a stopped note forcibly blown ('stark angeblasen'), i.e., 'gestopft' in the particular sense described by Hofmann. Now, every note with a + above it meant the Widor 'cuivré.' Wagner may have had relapses at times—we have seen from Ex. 6 that he had them as late as 'Parsifal'—but we may take it that throughout 'The Mastersingers' the specialised 'gestopft' is intended. But trouble came later.

When 'The Rhinegold' and 'The Valkyrie' were published, in 1873, the fact that in them the + had the earlier meaning, while it was necessary to give directions in the scores that it had the meaning to which Wagner was now committed, made but little difference. In the second the + is not found in much more than a dozen places, and in the first, with its dwelves and toads and other wild-fowl, the modern effect is nearly always wanted. But during the composition of the latter end of 'The Ring,' Wagner does not appear to have been quite happy over the two meanings he had attached to the +. It is hard to say exactly how, but such things as giving 'The Question of Fate' motive to muted horns instead of, as previously, to the same instruments with a + above their parts, seem to betoken a certain amount of unrest. He was sure of the effect of mutes, but was not quite sure how the + surmounted notes would be played. In 'Parsifal' his uneasiness seems obvious. He had realised that that which anyone could have prophesied had come to pass—cornists, with the connivance of conductors, were giving the modern 'cuivré' meaning to the + in 'Tristan.'†

The first thing that strikes us as regards the score of 'Parsifal' is that no indication is given as to what the + means. This of course may be taken to imply that in 1882 (date of publication) there was no question as to its signification. But this is far from the truth! The other and more probable reason is that Wagner, grown old and weary, was loth to commit himself further.* Then, contrary to his practice since 'Lohengrin,' 'gestopft' is at times found against single notes. At others, the word (in brackets) is added to the +, a totally unnecessary redundancy if the two connoted precisely the same thing. What was in Wagner's mind I cannot pretend to guess, but if he thought to make his ideas clearer, he was woefully mistaken. Widor regarded the conjunction of term and sign as merely another method of expressing the (modern) 'cuivré' (see his third way, given above). D'Indy, an ardent Wagnerian at the time, seems to have looked upon the two indications as referring to separate effects, and hence his direction in 'La Chant de la Cloche,'—a disciple is unlikely to set up an opposition sign!

* He did not hear 'Lohengrin' till 1861, the year after he had had the temerity to publish the full score of 'Tristan.'

† Paul Gilson, in 'Le Tutti Orchestral' (1913), complains that the Parisian players (which seems to imply that his own countrymen at Brussels were free from the taint) accented unaccented notes in 'Tristan' because they took the + to mean a note forcibly accented ('renforcé') instead of merely 'bouché,' which he probably takes in the Gevaert sense.

As to the confused nomenclature of the present day, there can be no question. If anyone says that he has no difficulty in understanding what a particular composer intends by the directions in his horn parts, the raising of my hat to him must not be taken as a tribute to his veracity. That some uniformity—varying with different orchestras—is introduced into the carrying out of those directions, I admit. But that is another matter! In self protection, cornists are forced to standardise (say) their treatment of the +. Occasionally they may have an uneasy impression that the + of a Dukas may not be that of a Ravel. But life is short and art must be done in a hurry, so they tar every + with the same brush, trusting that the conductor will not notice. Their faith in human nature is so far justified, that the conductor as a rule does not notice. Yet, though he is responsible for much, he is not entirely to blame, since composers, while they are at great pains to explain that an imperceptible twiddle on the strings must be performed by three fiddles, and not by two or four, seem callous as to what may happen to their horn parts (though, it is to be confessed, elucidating your meaning at the head of the score is not always a success).

In conclusion, my theory as to Wagner's attitude towards closed notes on the valve-horn seems to hang principally on whether the stopped note (of 'Tristan') is the same as the stopped note, forcibly blown (of 'The Mastersingers'). Logically, this should be so, since they both equal +. But alas! we are not dealing with logic, but with music and the artistic temperament! And even logically, the equation is not true, unless it can be proved that the signification of + is invariable, and that in 1853 (when the music to 'The Rhinegold' was commenced) 'gestopft' was generally taken to imply the term in its specialised sense. Both these suggestions must be dismissed. There is not a shred of evidence to support them! Indeed, it is against them. My theory, like others, can only be accepted in that it explains a godly number of apparently unrelated facts. No theory, however, can explain occasional inconsistencies. And we must bear in mind Wagner's remark to the harpist who drew his attention to certain impossibilities in his part: 'I am not a harpist. I have given you my ideas. It is for you to arrange them for your instrument.' Now Wagner was also not a horn-player . . .

DEBUSSY AND SOME ITALIAN MUSICIANS

BY ANDREW DE TERNANT

Claude Debussy during his stay in Italy became acquainted with all sorts and conditions of musicians, but the majority were little known, or were mere names beyond the Alps. It was then the sober and slumbrous twilight of imitation and mediocrity. Debussy had become acquainted casually with Ruggiero Leoncavallo. But Leoncavallo was not then a world-wide celebrity. His 'Pagliacci' was in manuscript, but it had not been produced. He had the year before returned from London, after seeking in vain to establish himself there as a teacher of singing. The only musical engagement he secured was as accompanist for a series of Bohemian (smoking) concerts at Cannon Street Hotel. He managed, however, to eke out an existence with his savings from the 'smokers,' and by acting as assistant to the London correspondent of an Italian newspaper. When Debussy met him, Leoncavallo was still a journalist (mainly musical and dramatic criticism), and occasionally added to his income by translating non-copyright French plays for minor Italian theatrical companies. Debussy asked if it was possible to make the acquaintance of Verdi and Boito. 'Oh! that is easy enough,' was the reply. 'You write first to Arrigo Boito, and he will make arrangements for you to meet old Verdi. But you will find Boito to be more a philosopher than a musician.'

Debussy wrote a letter, as directed, and received a reply from Boito saying that he would be pleased to see the young French musician at his Milan residence, on any Wednesday afternoon, from 2.30 to 5.30. 'If unavoidably I am not in at the moment,' Boito added, 'You will find plenty of French books on the shelves of my study to entertain you.' The Italian poet-composer lived in the same house as his married elder brother, Camillo, who was an architect by profession, and a novelist in his leisure hours. When Debussy made his call, Boito was not in, and he was shown into the study. It resembled the work-room of a literary man and a journalist more than that of a musician. There was a pianoforte, but it was dilapidated, and evidently had not been played upon for years. The top was littered with odd numbers of periodicals and magazines, and untidy cuttings from newspapers. Nowhere could Debussy perceive any items of music, printed or MS. The art was represented, not by compositions, but entirely by theoretical and musico-literary works, mainly in Italian, French, and German, a few only being in English. Boito had copies of Berlioz's 'Instrumentation' and Cherubini's 'Counterpoint' in the original French and the English translations, a well-bound set of Grove's 'Dictionary' (with the autograph signature of the first editor, evidently a presentation copy), and John Goss's (Debussy called him 'Jean Gotz') 'Introduction to Harmony.'

A rapid survey of the shelves gave the impression that music had been dethroned by poetry. In fact, more than half of the library consisted of volumes of poems. Nearly all the English, American, and German poets had copious marginal MS. notes.

When, at length, Boito came in, he revealed little of the real Italian in his manner (Debussy was not surprised to learn that his mother was a Polish countess). He explained that he had been delayed by a rather long debate on his lecture. 'It was, of course, on a musical subject,' said Debussy. 'Oh! no,' was the reply, 'it was on the

* It is not without significance that neither Strauss, nor Weingartner, nor Panizza, in their several editions of Berlioz's treatise, mention the +, though their author, with his explanation of closed notes on the valve-horn, gave them opportunity. It is understandable as regards the Italian, since the sign is not often found in Italian scores (though both Alfano and Marinuzzi employ it, in apparently different senses), but the two Germans knew the +, and, it would seem, knew its ambiguity sufficiently well as not to mark it in their own works, as far as I am aware.

English Lake poets.' Boïto added, 'I never lecture on music now.' He was well aware that his life was a puzzle to many people. It was even said of him that he had deserted music. This, however, was entirely erroneous. He was a literary man by profession, and music was his hobby. So did he fulfil the wishes of his Polish mother, who had not wished him to rely on music for a livelihood. He was not singular in thus planning his career. Many celebrated Russian and Polish composers were something else besides musicians—e.g., doctors, naval and military officers, civil servants, &c. Boïto's outlook as a composer had been disheartened by two events. The first was the success of Gounod's 'Faust,' which had delayed the production of his own 'Mefistofele'; and his knowledge of the difficulties that beset Rubinstein's opera 'Nero' (composed to a French libretto by Jules Barbier) had deterred him from making progress with his 'Nerone.'

Boïto had attended a performance of Rubinstein's opera at Dresden, and had thought the music rather disappointing; also he had come to the conclusion that the subject was too vast for an opera occupying about three hours and a-half in performance. It was more suitable for a drama, and Shakespeare and Goethe, he now believed, were the only two men who ever lived who could have transformed the material into a masterpiece for the stage. Barbier was a clever playwright, who knew how to make the most of the incidents selected, but he was not by any means a great dramatic genius. If Shakespeare and Goethe had written plays on the subject, the librettist's labours would have been comparatively easy. Herein lay the chief reason why Shakespeare's and Goethe's plays afforded material for many splendid opera libretti. The Englishman, indeed, had anticipated all the tricks of the modern librettist, and must have been a practical musician. Boïto had, however, gone so far with 'Nerone' that he must make up his mind to finish it. He feared he would not live long enough to complete the score of his 'Orestiad.' With the exception of the libretti he had written for Verdi, all his other works of the kind, which had been set to music by various Italian composers, were originally written for himself. The results were not always satisfactory. His 'Ero e Leandro' had been set to music by two composers, Bottesini and Mancinelli, and it was difficult to say which was the worst. Both composers had misunderstood the libretto. Perhaps the author was difficult to please. Italian opera was, after all, only a short-lived bubble. Generations of librettists and composers had in their time discharged upon an unresisting public torrents of grand opera, serious opera, and comic opera, and other stuff of the same sort, which the thirsty earth had long since drunk up. Boïto believed that the true venue of music was not the theatre, or the church, but the concert-room. There all who sought the approval of the critical public would have to show their competence, without the aid of scenic display and costume, or religious twilight and environment.

Boïto promised Debussy that he would write him a 'nice letter' to Verdi, at Sant' Agate. The veteran composer was now more interested in gardening than in music. He had also lately taken up the study of botany. Debussy did not long delay his journey to Sant' Agate. He found Verdi in his shirt-sleeves, busy, with the assistance of a small boy, planting salads. The aged maestro greeted the young Frenchman with a smile, and said, laughingly, 'So you have come to worry an old man. I suppose you will soon be sending to a newspaper an account of how Verdi plants salads in his garden. Well, he does it very much like any other old man, but I shall have to take precautions and protect my vegetables, or some English or American tourist may run away with my green stuff as souvenirs.' Debussy hastened to explain. Verdi made amends: 'So you are not an iniquitous journalist, but the young French musician Boïto wrote to me about. You won a Grand Prix de Rome at the Paris Conservatoire. Well, you are lucky. I did not gain anything at the Milan Conservatoire, excepting much sorrow and many enemies. But I am still alive, and planting salads in my garden.' At this point a servant came and announced that luncheon was ready. During the meal Verdi asked after his veteran friend, Ambroise Thomas, who, he said, apart from his work as a musician, and as Director of the Paris Conservatoire, had earned the regard of the composers of all nations for his labours in connection with international musical copyright. Verdi was in Paris when the famous librettist, Eugène Scribe, framed his equitable scheme for the protection of literary, dramatic, and musical property, which was first adopted by the French Government, and finally by all countries. Thomas was Scribe's right hand man in the musical section, and the famous librettist often told him that the measure would have been very imperfect had he not had the assistance of the indefatigable Ambroise.

Verdi's conversation gradually drifted towards the artistic side of music. He had always declined to discuss the merits of his musical contemporaries, his principal motive being that he could not then be charged with professional jealousy. He was a composer, and not a musical critic. A composer was not necessarily a good musical critic. He knew that such qualifications were sometimes combined, but it was not always beneficial to musical art. Vasari was a painter of merit, but he had rendered more service to art and posterity by his 'Lives of the Painters, Sculptors, and Architects.'

Verdi's advice to all prospective composers was simplicity. The majority of young musicians of the day were better trained than was the case when he was a young man, but this was often fatal to their interests. Many were under the delusion that the doors of the Milan Scala, the Paris Grand Opéra, and the Vienna Opera House were wide open to receive their first operas. Two of his most famous foreign contemporaries, Wagner and Gounod, had at first to content themselves with decidedly third-rate houses—the German master at Magdeburg, and the French master at the Paris Théâtre-Lyrique for his 'Faust' in the 'fifties. Managers and conductors, singers and orchestra, will not take the same pains with an unknown composer's work—'No, not even if they are handsomely paid for it.' Verdi went on to say that his friend, Boïto, some years ago came on a visit, in company with a gifted and brilliant young Irishman (was this the late Sir Charles Stanford?), who brought with him the score of an opera. He was also a clever pianist, and he played to Verdi, with much intelligence, a lengthy selection from it. It was a very meritorious work, but tremendously difficult. He felt sorry for this charming young man. If it had been on a more simple scale he might have assisted him to place it. Before the young Irishman departed, he confessed that von Bülow had already told him precisely the same thing. Verdi was, however, afraid that it was no use preaching to young people. They would go their own way, and follow unpractical methods. He supposed it was the same in all countries. He could say much more on the subject, but it might lead him into criticism of his contemporaries, which he was always anxious to avoid. After luncheon Verdi returned to his salad plantation, saying that as he had no more operas to communicate to the public, he consoled himself with listening to the natural music of the feathered songsters in his garden.

Debussy was a frequent visitor to the Roman residence of the pianist-composer, Giovanni Sgambati, who was the most gifted of Liszt's Italian pupils. His mother was an Englishwoman, and he was a great favourite with the English residents at Rome. Debussy said the ordinary concert-goers were never aware of the full extent of his genius as an executant. He was extremely nervous and sensitive in public; his proper sphere was the private salon in the presence of a few known admirers. He was the most splendid player of Beethoven's Sonatas in Italy. One day Liszt came on a surprise visit. The great Hungarian musician was accompanied by his intimate friend, Cardinal von Hohenlohe, who was a generous patron of classical concerts at Rome. The prince-cardinal, after being introduced to Debussy, graciously requested, in honour of the young holder of the Grand Prix de Rome and as a compliment to French musical art, that Liszt and Sgambati should play Saint-Saëns's Variations for two pianofortes on a theme of Beethoven (Op. 35). This was the last time Liszt touched a pianoforte at Rome. He left the Eternal City on the following day, and never returned to Italy. Debussy said it was the greatest musical treat of his life, and when he related the incident to Saint-Saëns the French composer was much affected and warmly embraced him.

THE LORE OF THE WELSH HARP

BY MARY L. LEWES

O Harp, within thy magic cells,
Light airy glee, and pleasure dwells,
And gentle rapture sings.
While clear-voiced echo sends around
The heavenly gale of tuneful sound
From all the according strings.*

De Quincey, in his 'Confessions,' tells us that during his rambles through North Wales he found almost every inn of any pretension employing a harper to play for the guests. This pleasant custom, so general in that day, survived in one or two famous North Wales hotels until at least twenty years ago. In 1907 the proprietress of 'The Hand' Hotel, at Llangollen, told us that their harper had only lately died, and that, unfortunately, it was found impossible to replace him. George Borrow, in 'Wild Wales,' writes of the harper 'stationed in the passage' of this particular inn at Llangollen, playing Welsh airs which made Borrow realise that at last he was indeed in Wales.

Until about twenty-five or thirty years ago many a village and small town in Wales could boast its harper, or perhaps its family of harpers—for this art seems often to have run in families; their instrument, a much-treasured possession, passing from father to son. In olden times no family or public gathering, whether the occasion were gay or grave, was complete without the harper, whose skilled hand on the strings of his telyn (harp) could incite the feet to dance at a wedding, or move the feelings to tears in a funeral dirge.

There is something about the tone of the harp that seems peculiarly appropriate to the expression of Celtic music with its mournful, minor cadences and abrupt bursts of queerly elfin merriment; and to those who love Wales and understand the nation's genius it seems a thousand pities that the beautiful art of harp-playing has languished, or at best has been standardized to conventional ideals. No doubt good harp-playing can be heard at the National and other large Eisteddfodau, but the expert musicians, with their fine pedal harps, who compete on these occasions are far removed from the artless, rural harpers of former days.

As an instrument of music the harp, in one form or another, is probably the most ancient in the world, its inception having possibly derived from the vibrating string of the warrior's bow. An authoritative writer says: 'While the instrument is of great antiquity, it is yet from Northern Europe that the modern harp and its name are derived.' That a form of harp was known in Egypt is shown by frescoes dating back three thousand years; this harp had no front pillar, and was probably strung with catgut. Another authority points out that the very oldest form of Irish harp, shown by a rude sculpture in an ancient church near Kilkenny, had also no front pillar, thus differing entirely from the later forms of Celtic harp. Of course this structural likeness to the Egyptian instrument may be fortuitous, but if it is not, the hypothesis that the Celtic harp is of Eastern origin is very plausible.

From the earliest ages, the harp and its player are connected with the history of the Celtic races, Gaelic and Cymric alike. The Gael called his harp clairseach, a name having no resemblance to the Welsh (Cymric) telyn, which in Old Welsh has a tensile meaning. The first syllable of the Gaelic word clair is derived from clar, a table or board, i.e., 'sounding-board.' In this case resonance is the root idea; in the former, tension.

Another Gaelic word for harp was cruit; probably used to designate some different form of instrument; to this point we shall allude later.

Three types of harp were recognised by the ancient Welsh laws, viz., telyn y Brenin, telyn Pencerdd, and telyn Gŵr da (the harp of the king, the harp of a doctor of music, and the harp of a gentleman). The value of the first two was a hundred-and-twenty pence each, and twenty-four pence for the tuning-key; the gentleman's or 'lord's' harp was worth sixty pence, and its tuning-key twelve pence. Great privileges were allowed to the official harpers, who, as bards, accompanied the chiefs and princes to battle, inspiring them with music and song, and praising their exploits in victory. Tradition says that the song used on these occasions was called Unbeniaeth Prydain (the Monarchical Song of Britain), which recited the doings of former heroes and exhorted others to emulate them.

The Pencerdd—sometimes called Bardd Cadeiriawc—was always a member of the higher order of bards and a recognised official of the Court. He received from the king a harp equal in value to the royal harp, and was given a free grant of land. If he were insulted he could claim compensation equivalent to the value of six-score-and-six kine. The Bardd

* From E. Jones's 'Relics of the Welsh Bards.'

Teulu (or family bard) had also considerable status, and when appointed received from the king a harp, along with various other perquisites. If wronged, he could claim six ounces of silver in compensation. These details serve to show how inseparable in idea was the ancient bard from his harp—the symbol of his profession—and also emphasise the fact that, whatever claims may have been made by the Welsh bards in later times to be leaders of literature and poetry, they were originally and pre-eminently in ancient times minstrels and singers. This point seems worthy of note in considering the accomplishments of the modern bards composing the Welsh Gorsedd, who, while suggesting excellence in every branch of Welsh literature and literary research, do not so often appear as musical specialists, and, least of all, in the divine art of harp-playing.

The poet-bard of the Middle Ages wrote often—perhaps always—with a view to singing his compositions, and occasionally made his harp as well as his song, for it is written of Lewis Glyn Cothi, the Carmarthenshire poet, that

He could make a boat and sail it,
Make a harp and play it.

The telyn gŵr da was possessed by every Welsh youth of good birth. It was probably of small size, and could be carried on horseback. In every great family a harp was as indispensable a possession as a coat-of-arms, and was usually an hereditary instrument preserved with the utmost care and veneration, to be used by the household bards of succeeding generations. No slave might touch a harp. It was sacred to the free, nor might the instrument be seized for debt.

Horse-hair was used to string harps until the 14th century, when the large triple harp with gut strings was introduced into Wales. The old Eisteddfod law compelled a music-pupil to spend a long time in the practice of harps with hair-stringing. The gut strings of the triple harp probably produced the required tones with far less practice than horse-hair, which must have needed extraordinary delicacy of touch. But the triple harp had difficulties of its own. It has been described by an expert as ... a very interesting instrument, and as an accompaniment to pennillion-singing and the rendering of Welsh airs is no doubt more in accordance with the national taste and sentiment than the modern pedal harp. But it bears no comparison to the latter in brilliance of tone, power, and effect. ... Its form of construction, which consists of three rows of strings—the two outer rows being placed opposite each other and tuned in unison with the semitones placed in between—renders it most difficult to play, while the tension of the strings upon the wood-work does not admit of their being strained up to that point at which the best effect can be obtained.

The usual number of strings was ninety-eight, with a compass of five octaves and one note from violoncello C. As in other Celtic harps, the left was the treble hand with twenty-seven strings on that side, the bass on the right having thirty-seven, and the middle thirty-four. The difficulty of learning this harp must have been great, and compared to the labour involved, the effect gained was only poor. As an accompaniment to the voice it was probably pleasing enough, and it is likely that such was its principal use, the mediæval bards being singers and poets and requiring but simple melodies for accompaniment. If greater strength of tone were required, several or many harps could be requisitioned, but in the Middle Ages harp-playing, though indispensable to the bard, was doubtless subsidiary to his vocal and poetic powers. It is possible, however, that many became expert harpists, and met in competition at Eisteddfodau. When the triple harp came into use the great days of the Welsh bards were nearly past, and we may suppose that their mediæval successors who carried on the musical traditions of the important Celtic Order unhampered by their ancient political pre-occupations, may therefore have had more time to give to their profession, including the study of the new and rather formidable instrument. But whatever the reason, the triple harp remained a favourite type in Wales until well into the 19th century, when it was gradually superseded by the modern pedal form, the old triple harp coming to be regarded only as a curiosity.

The ancient bardic harp of Wales had a single row of strings, but performers were able to produce flat or sharp notes by a peculiar management of the finger and thumb—a trick, it is said, preserved by some of the rural harpers for a long time, but now entirely lost.

The late Mrs. Marie Trevelyan (a well-known writer on Welsh folk-lore) refers in one of her books to an ancient form of harp made of leather, with wire strings, which was considered a very discordant instrument. I have never heard or read elsewhere of this antique type, but it is quite possible that Mrs. Trevelyan—who was extremely well-informed concerning Welsh antiquities—may have seen a specimen in a museum (perhaps in the National Museum at Cardiff).

The oldest Welsh airs are 'Hob y deri dando' and 'Nos Galan.' Both are said to be of Druidical origin. The connection between the first-named and the Old English refrain of 'Heigh derry, down derry' is obvious. The word deri is a corruption of deru, the Welsh for 'oak,' and it is not too much to suppose that the refrain was connected with Druidical ritual connected with the worship of the oak-tree.

Harp music was no doubt a great feature of Druid rites, which were strongly interwoven with the practice of magic. The world has progressed so far since those distant days, that it is hard for us to realise, as undoubtedly was the case, that a certain class of people then were really magicians, in that they possessed gifts of clairvoyance trained to a high degree by a system known to the priests of the ancient mysteries in all ages and in all lands. In these islands the mysteries were preserved by the cult called Druidism, though how it came here, or whence it derived, are secrets shrouded in the mists of time. But that the Druids were wise above their generation, and possessed of what we should now call occult powers, is fairly certain. Also they constantly recruited their ranks with young people of both sexes, who, showing early signs of the clairvoyant faculty (even now, though rare, a Celtic trait, and formerly far more frequent), were claimed as initiates for the priesthood. Instruction in harp-playing must have formed part of the neophyte's training, for in all the old religions music was held to be of great assistance in the exercise of supernatural powers, whether to soothe and hypnotise worshippers, or to aid in the exorcism of evil spirits. Probably the Druids early discovered that harp music has an ethereal and mystic quality attained by no other instrument.

No master's hand is needed to elicit the spell, for the most artless and simple playing reveals it. In short, most people will admit that there is a kind of unearthly, fairylike* tone about harp music, difficult to express in words but certainly inherent. Doubtless it is by reason of this curious, elusive quality that it has always held an appeal to the Celtic nature, ever enticed by the something lying just beyond our sense-world, and which music above all other arts, and harp-melody most of all, has power to suggest. For the same reason the harp has lost its popularity. The modern Welsh people have neither time nor inclination for cultivating the quiet receptivity of mind that formerly listened with delight to the sweet strains of the telyn who brought his harp to the fire-side in winter and the village green in summer, sure of a welcome wherever he went. His music was the heritage of a bygone age and a primitive people. Were there now any itinerant harpers, their performance would surely be regarded with more curiosity than pleasure by the sophisticated Cymru of to-day.

Many years have passed since harps were made in Wales. Abram Jeremiah, of Llanover, of whom we do not hear after 1884, was possibly the last harp-maker, and earlier in the century, Peters of Llangynog, and Griffith James of Dolgelley, were amongst the later and best-known executants of their historic craft.

Great antiquity is claimed for another instrument, known in Wales as the crwth, which has been somewhat vaguely described as half-fiddle, half-lyre; but certainly in its later form (whatever the antique one may have been) more nearly resembled a violin than a harp. It probably derived from some very early form of Celtic harp; for cruit, one of the Gaelic names for harp, is decidedly suggestive of the Welsh word crwth. That in its turn was corrupted into the English word crowd, an old-fashioned term applied to any kind of rude fiddle. The crwth of Wales was in shape and size rather like a violin. In length  $20\frac{1}{2}$ -in., it was  $9\frac{1}{2}$ -in. wide at the bottom, tapering to  $8\frac{1}{2}$ -in. at the top. The word crwth implies any kind of hollow protuberance, such as a flask or rounded box, and, applied to the instrument, was descriptive of its bellying form.

It has six strings; four running parallel like a violin and which are sounded with a bow, and two not placed over the finger-board but passing diagonally to the left of it, and which were struck by the thumb of the left hand to serve as a bass accompaniment to the notes sounded by the bow. The bridge of this instrument differs from that of a violin in being less convex at the top, a circumstance from which it is to be inferred that two or three strings are to be sounded at the same time, so as to afford a succession of concords. The bridge is placed obliquely across the instrument, and one of its feet passing through the left hole of the sounding-board rests on the back.

This description of the crwth is given by Meyrick in his 'History of Cardiganshire' (c. 1815), but it must even then have been a rare instrument, as another writer in an old magazine called the Cambrian Register, of the year 1795, says that he remembers hearing a crwth played by a man in Carnarvonshire about twenty years before that date, and who was since dead. The account goes on to say that probably this man was the last crwth-player in Wales, and that with him died the art of playing the instrument. It is described as very melodious, and sometimes used as a tenor accompaniment to the harp.

A very good specimen of this interesting instrument may be seen in the National Library of Wales, at Aberystwyth.

* The Tylwyth Teg (fairy-folk) were thought by the Welsh to be expert harpists. But few mortals could hear their music, and for those whose ears were fine enough, to listen was, it is said, not unattended by danger.

New Music

NEW STRING MUSIC

Superstitions die hard. But it is not without a shock that one finds so distinguished a musician as Hamilton Harty openly confessing his belief that you have only to write semiquavers for the 'cello in quick movement to conjure up visions of butterflies. Some little time ago this trick was supposed to be closely associated with waterfalls. The plain truth of the matter is that a perpetuum mobile may change its name but not its nature, and can no more recall a butterfly—or even the humble blue-bottle—than the rumble of a motor-car can recall the chirping of sparrows. Mr. Harty's two pieces for 'cello—'Waldestille' and 'Der Schmetterling' (Forsyth Bros.)—dedicated to W. H. Squire, hardly bear out the promise of the composer's best work. In that there is always evidence of an inquiring type of mind. In these short pieces the only obvious evidence is that of a contented spirit which finds the world good and its conventions unchallengeable. This is an enviable mood, but not likely to lead to originality in musical composition. We feel certain that the composer did not lavish 'infinite pains' on either piece. Indeed, to a musician of Hamilton Harty's talent and experience this sort of work must be pleasant relaxation from the strenuous duties of conductorship—no more.

From Messrs. Elkin we have a number of transcriptions from the works of Edward MacDowell—'A.D. 1620,' and 'Song' transcribed for pianoforte, violin, and 'cello; 'From Uncle Remus' and 'At an Old Trysting-Place' set for string quintet. It must be understood, however, that in the string 'quintet' the players of the upper strings (and viola) must at least be doubled, for no violinist can play nor can a single viola player achieve

The actual value of these compositions does not concern us at present. All that matters is the transcription, and in the two pieces for pianoforte, violin, and 'cello it is fairly evident that these are transcriptions and not original compositions. The adapter had to choose between adding an entirely new part and faking up one, which, however ingenious, must be an unnecessary part. Miss Anna Priscilla Risher, the transcriber in question, has chosen the second course, and given the theme sometimes to the 'cello, sometimes to the fiddle, with an occasional unison. Mr. Edmund Tiersch, who is responsible for the quintet transcriptions, had the more grateful task, and has done it ably enough, although the great distance dividing the double-bass part from the 'cello in two bars of 'From Uncle Remus' looks a bit suspicious on paper. Occasionally it pays to write so that the double-bass will sound a couple of octaves below the 'cello; but it is also possible to create an emptiness within the chord which few people can abide. On the seventh bar from the end the entry of the bass, to our thinking, would be more effective on the second than on the first beat. By the way, the directions of 'At an Old Trysting-Place' say: 'Somewhat quaintly, not to (sic)

(Continued on page 821.)

SHORT ANTHEM FROM "GOD IS OUR REFUGE AND STRENGTH"

Psalm xli. 4-5

Music by W. G. ALCOCK, M.V.O., Mus. D.
Organist of Salisbury Cathedral

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED; NEW YORK: THE H. W. GRAY CO., SOLE AGENTS FOR THE U.S.A.

Andante. ♩ = 84

ORGAN

p Sw.Man.Ped. soft 16 ft.

There is a riv - er, the streams whereof shall make glad .. the

There is a riv - er, the streams whereof shall make glad the

There is a riv - er, the streams where - of shall make glad the

There is a riv - er, the streams shall make glad the

pp

cit - y of God, . .

the ho - ly place ..

cit - y of God, . .

the ho - - - ly

cit - y of God, . .

the ho - ly, ho - ly

cit - y of God, .

the ho - ly, ho - ly

senza Ped.

of the tab - er - na - cles of the most High.

place of the tab - er - na - cles of the most High...

place of the tab - er - na - cles of the most High...

place.. of the tab - er - na - cles of the most .. High...

p Sw.

Man.

mf

God is in the midst of her;

mf

p

p

f

p

She . . shall not be mov - ed, . . shall not be mov - ed: God shall

mf

f

p

She . . shall not be mov - ed: God . .

mf

f

p

She . . shall not be mov - ed: . . God shall

mf

f

p

She shall not be mov - ed: God shall help her, . . . and that right ear - ly.

. . . shall help her right ear - ly.

help her, . . and that right ear - ly.

help her, and that . . . right ear - ly.

p Gt. Sw. coupled

Man.

cres.

f

Ped.

mf

There is a riv - er,

mf

There is a riv - er,

mf

There is a riv - er,

mf

There is a riv - er,

p Sw.

p there . . is a riv - er, the streams whereof shall make glad, . .

p there . . is a riv - er, the streams whereof shall make glad,

p there . . is a riv - er, the streams where - of shall make glad,

p there . . is a riv - er, the streams shall make glad,

pp Man.

rall. make glad the cit - y, the cit - y of God. . .

rall. make glad the cit - y, the cit - y of God. . .

rall. make glad the cit - y, the cit - y of God. . .

rall. make glad the cit - y of God.

rall. pp Man. Ped. 8 ft. only a tempo p Sw. rall. e dim. pp

add 16 ft. 32 ft.

(Continued from page 816.)

sentimentally.' How does one play 'quaintly'? Is the to simply a mistake or 'nu spelin'? Cyril Scott's 'Valse Caprice' is also published (Elkin) in a transcription for violin and pianoforte.

The publications of Messrs. Augener consist of Matthew Locke's Suite in G arranged for violin and pianoforte by the indefatigable Adam Carse; a Trio for pianoforte, violin, and violoncello by C. à Becket Williams; and new editions of Lalo's 'Cello Concerto and Mozart's Quartet in E minor for pianoforte, violin, viola, and violoncello. The first of these is excellent food for the young idea. The second is pleasant enough in its way, unpretentious and workmanlike. Lalo's Concerto has the advantage of having been revised and edited by Arnold Trowell, and Mozart's Quartet (free from any attempt at fingering) is the sort of work which ought to be seriously studied by all who intend to write music for pianoforte and strings. Here the balance between the two is perfect, and there is none of that doubling of parts which is the bane of even a great work like the Schumann Quintet.

Of some educational interest are the 'Studies in Scale Variations in all Keys' of J. Loxston (W. Paxton), which, carefully practised, should achieve the object for which they were written, namely, the development of tone and of finger agility, and the strengthening of the fourth finger and thumb.

B. V.

PIANOFORTE MUSIC

'Der Musikalische Klavier - Unterricht,' of M. Mayer-Mahr (Simrock), is a huge collection of pianoforte works in three volumes. The editor's aim is to provide the student with 'a musical education systematically progressing with his technical training.' The pieces therefore range from short melodic studies of the simplest character up to such exacting works as the Brahms 'Variation and Fugue on a Theme of Handel,' Liszt's 'Après une Lecture du Dante,' and examples of Reger, Busoni, &c. Vol. 1 ends with duets by Schubert ('Marche Militaire') and Volkmann. Vol. 2 starts the student with Mozart's D minor Fantasia and leaves him (fifty-three pieces and nearly three hundred pages later) with Smetana's 'Country Scene in Bohemia.' Vol. 3 opens with the Bach-Liszt Organ Prelude and Fugue in A minor, and is rounded-off with an Epilogue by Busoni. En route practically every school, ancient and modern, is drawn on—excepting the English, of course. The nearest approach to our benighted country is a little tune in the elementary pages, labelled, 'Irish Folk-Melody'—though it bears no trace of Irishry. However, injured feelings must not prevent our admiration of this fine collection of about two hundred works, many of them masterpieces. The volumes are well-printed and strongly bound. Their bulk makes them unwieldy for carriage to and from lessons, but that is the only drawback to a truly magnificent selection—a whole repertory in itself.

From Durand come some new works by Florent Schmitt, Roger-Ducasse, and Tcherepnin. The Schmitt example is a pianoforte arrangement of the composer's Ballet, 'La petite elfe "Ferme-l'œil"' (after Christian Andersen), produced at the Opéra-Comique, Paris, last February. As is usual in such arrangements, rather more is put in than can be negotiated comfortably by one pair of hands. The music is attractive—far more so than recent examples of Schmitt's work would have led us to expect.

Roger-Ducasse's 'Romance' has some exquisite passages, and is a beautiful work despite some over-chromaticism. His 'Basso ostinato' is for chromatic harp, but a good deal of it would probably be more effective on the pianoforte. It has little in common with the ground bass of tradition. Both these pieces are difficult. Tcherepnin's 'Quatre Préludes' are curious little pieces—a Giocoso and an Allegro (a four-voice fugue) that bristle with dissonance, and between them a crawling Adagio of eleven bars and a naive Allegretto in two-part harmony. None is easy, and the Giocoso and Allegro are extremely trying, because of the vague tonality. These uncomfortable—even grisly—pieces grow on one. They have been revised and fingered by Philipp, but players who can tackle such fare are hardly likely to need such complete fingering as he has supplied.

Cyril Scott's 'Technical Studies' (Elkin) are designed to give the player facility in dealing with such progressions as consecutive seconds, fourths, sevenths, and the various clusters of dissonant notes with which modern music is besprinkled. Whether it is worth while going through so much in order to achieve what is usually monotonous (and perhaps only a passing phase) is a question. Fortunately, these studies have their uses apart from any question of modern idiom, being as a whole calculated to give the fingers a good drilling.

Composers are being hard pressed to find titles that are unhackneyed, and as a result they are being driven to out of the way sources. Here is a Suite by Felix White called 'Robinson Crusoe,' with a cover bearing a reproduction of the frontispiece of the first edition of that best of boys' books—which the present-day boy never reads because it is too long. (Robinson Crusoe too long! You and I found him too short.) Mr. White's Suite consists of five pieces, which deal with Crusoe digging his cave, looking in vain for a sail, reading his Bible in despair, his parrot, and a Cannibals' Dance. The music is picturesque, and the most is made of the grotesque opportunities presented by the Cannibals' Dance and the parrot. There is real expressiveness in the piece depicting the castaway reading his Bible. The Suite is rather difficult (Curwen).

In his anxiety to hunt for a fresh label Gerrard Williams has gone off the beaten track even farther than Mr. White. His latest pianoforte work is called 'Propriety, Prunes, and Prism, Three Expressions' (Curwen). As may be imagined, the titles and music have little connection. 'Propriety' begins with a suggestion of mincing correctness (marked preciso), but the middle section shows a fall from grace (poco rubato) which is no doubt intentional. Still, the piece is called 'Propriety' not 'The Lapse,' so where are we? It is quite in the nature of things that the music is more interesting when it strays from the paths of rectitude. 'Prunes' is (or are) appropriately juicy, but succulence is not peculiar to the plum family, so again the title has little significance. 'Prism' gives us the expected scintillating top-of-the-keyboard brilliance, and so might have been named after a dozen other nice things. The pieces call for a good player, and have the effectiveness that we expect from the composer.

More out-of-the-way titles: 'Five Whimsical Serenades,' by Timothy Mather Spelman (Chester). The serenaders are Harlequin, the Faun, the Spanish Captain, Pierrot, and the inevitable Tin Soldier. There are obvious openings here for easily recognisable descriptive writing, and the composer has made the most of some of them. But, as is too often the case with all but tip-top programme works, the music has little point away from the titles. Moreover, Mr. Spelman's material is dry almost to bleakness.

Benjamin Dale's 'Holiday Tune' (Augener) is quite refreshing in its warmth and melodiousness after these arid whimsicalities. It is fairly difficult. Adam Carse has arranged for pianoforte solo his two sketches—'A Northern Song' and 'A Northern Dance,' originally written for string orchestra (Augener). The Dance comes through the process the better, and, played well up to speed, is effective. Its companion seems to lack the sostenuto of the strings.

Roy Agnew's 'Étude' is a brilliant and very difficult affair dedicated to Solito de Solis, under whose fingers it would no doubt be brilliantly successful (Curwen).

Now that our Railway Companies have started employing Royal Academicians to depict the beauties of the districts they serve, we need not be surprised to find them taking music also under their publicity wing. The 'Gleneagles Collection of Old Scottish Dance Tunes, Strathspeys, Reels, and Country Dances' is published by Paterson's, with the familiar monogram 'L.M.S.,' together with attractive cuts of the Gleneagles golf course, hotel, &c. The cover is a very attractive example of old-time ornate printing of the kind found in old music 'Written by a Lady of Quality.' However, the dances are the thing, and there is no need to praise these foot-stirring old measures. They have been straightforwardly arranged by J. Meredith-Kay.

J. Stuart Archer finds the time-honoured 'Berceuse' still good enough to write round, and his example is quite on conventional lines, except that it contains two ff outbursts that are unexpected in a lullaby otherwise so well behaved.

Leff Pouishnov's 'The Musical Box' is an ordinary tinkling bit of imitative music, and his 'Petite Valse' is quite commonplace. One expects something far more interesting from so fine a player (Enoch).

Of M. van Someren-Godfery's 'Four Preludes' (Elkin) the best seem to be the first and last—the quick ones. The composer is over-fond of strings of fifths, and he seems to rejoice in having discovered the whole-tone scale. He writes well enough to be able to shed these already well-worn devices.

Eric Mareo's 'Two Left-Hand Studies' (Elkin) are pleasant little pieces that will serve their purpose well.

Ernest Newton has arranged in a straightforward way nine English Country Dances. The versions are evidently designed for use with dancers, but the tunes are so good that they are worth playing for their own sake (Winthrop Rogers).

A lengthy and difficult piece—a good item for concert performance—is H. Balfour Gardiner's 'Michaelchurch' (Forsyth). It seems to have some sort of programme, but no clue is afforded.

In C. à Becket Williams's 'Five Impressions' and 'Three Pastoral Sketches' (Augener) we have, on the other hand, too many clues. The 'Impressions' are concerned with places of which the composer has recollections, and each piece is prefaced by a lengthy note. The variety promised in the titles and prefaces is, however, not forthcoming in the music, and one might well change over the title of (say) 'Sunset, Ely' and 'Of a certain Devonshire Garden' without the hearer being the wiser. This would matter little if the music were good, but the candid truth has to be told: all the pieces alike are lacking in freshness, and the keyboard writing is too poor to save the situation. The 'Pastoral Sketches' are better, but only slightly. The composer has much to learn in the matter of composition, and he should remember that mere directions can do little for a passage. Thus, on p. 10 of the 'Sketches' he makes a clumsy plunge from A flat into G, and writes above the passage 'In a humorous and unexpected manner.' Any unexpected effect the passage has will not be increased by such directions, and humour there is none, the music itself being simple to banality. By the way, the piece in which this passage occurs bears the dedication: 'This is for myself!'—another humorous and unexpected feature.

Yet one more toy soldier, this time a wooden one! The second of Geoffrey Watson's 'Three Miniatures' (Chester) is a funeral march for the wooden warrior. There ought to be a close time for toy soldiers, whether of timber or tin, or what not. Mr. Watson writes clumsily. His 'Preludio' is supposed to be 'in the olden style,' but I can think of no old composer of repute who would perpetrate such unhandy progressions as several on p. 2. The Funeral March ('Slow and formal') shows that the composer has been taking a sip at the fountain of Stravinsky and Berners, when he should have been studying textbooks on keyboard-writing and harmony.

Ernest Austin has made a version of the beautiful Irish tune 'The Little Red Lark'—a good version too, until the end, where he overweights it with mighty chords that take three staves for their laying out (Larway).

The new Tovey-Samuel edition of the 'Forty-eight' has arrived too late for notice in this month's review.

A new edition of Beethoven's Sonatas, edited by Frederic Lamond, has just been issued by Breitkopf & Härtel. Lamond has provided very copious fingering, as well as metronome suggestions, and a good many marks of expression, phrasing, &c. He distinguishes his marks from those of Beethoven by printing them in smaller type, and, in the case of cres. and dim. signs, those added by the editor have a short, vertical line running through their ends. Ornaments are translated into notation at the foot of the page. Every teacher knows the difficulty of getting pupils to realise the importance of the proper treatment of pauses; Lamond shows their exact effect in note-lengths or rests. In cases where Beethoven modified a passage owing to the limitations of the keyboard, Lamond sticks to the composer's text and suggests no alternative. Although most players prefer the modified version in such examples as that in the first movement of the D minor Sonata (where the limitation led to a striking instance of inverted pedal), there is nothing to be said in favour of (say) a similar passage in the early D major Sonata, where the composer's modification is ineffective. It is a pity not to show both readings in all cases, the original in the ordinary way (because after all it is the original), and, in small type, the passage as Beethoven would almost certainly have written it had the keyboard given him sufficient elbow-room. Liszt, in editing the Sonatas, took the line of adding the modification only when it led to anything in the way of freshness (as in the first of the examples mentioned above), otherwise he adapted the passage to the modern keyboard. The best plan is that of Kohler and Schmitt—to follow Beethoven in the text and print alternative versions in small type. Returning to Lamond: it is good to see the original order of the works retained. Attempts to place them in order of difficulty are more or less futile: one player's difficulty is another's trifle. Moreover, there is always interest and instruction in looking at a composer's output in chronological order. (Liszt graded them, and must have surprised some folk by placing the little one in F sharp as No. 16—after two such exacting specimens as the early A major and B flat Sonatas.) The print in this new edition is large, and the laying-out generally clear. There are two volumes, No. 1 taking us up to the D major ('Pastoral'). With its foot-notes and explanations of knotty points, its ample fingering, and its constant evidence of affectionate and scholarly care, this seems to be as good an edition as the student can desire.

There seems to be so little definite instruction in the use of the damper pedal that Harry Farjeon's 'The Art of Pianoforte Pedalling' should be welcomed by many teachers and pupils (Joseph Williams). The work is in two parts. Part 1 consists of an explanation of an effect, followed by an exercise and a study. Part 2 repeats the text, and exemplifies it by a piece rather more difficult than the studies in the first part. There are seven sections, dealing respectively with pedalling for legato chords, to assist slurring, to sustain chords under a melody, holding bass notes under accompaniment chords, half-damping, pedalling staccato notes, and special effects. Mr. Farjeon might with advantage have been more explicit in the page devoted to half-damping. The pieces are attractive, and serve well as studies apart from pedalling. The combination of the letterpress of Part 1 with these pieces, however, leads to a discrepancy. Mr. Farjeon's mildly jocular style of exposition seems to imply that he has in view very youthful students, whereas the pieces call for fairly mature players, especially if the pedalling is to be well done. But he talks sound sense, and a wide use of his book will save thousands of ears from those 'loud pedal' effects that have become a burden and a byword.

PIANOFORTE DUETS

Recently the output of duets appeared to be drying up, and it seemed that so far as contemporary music is concerned the practitioners of this delightful branch of ensemble playing would have to confine themselves to arrangements. One welcomes, therefore, a couple of good new examples. An 'Introduction, Air, and Jig' by Richard H. Walthew (Augener) is written in the old style suggested by the title. The best movement is the first—an all-too-short Allegro energico that recalls Bach by its vigorous polyphony. In the 'Air' the primo player might well have had a bit more to do. (In bar 3 of the last line of p. 6, by the way, a natural is missing from the C in the left hand.) The 'Jig' is a capital robust piece of music, though it is hardly convincing as a jig. The pieces are fairly difficult.

York Bowen's second Suite (Stainer & Bell) is hardly so good as his first. But that was so uncommonly good that No. 2 might fall short of it and yet be a very successful effort. There are three movements—a sonorous Allegro, a delicate and warmly-coloured 'Barcarolle' (which recalls the 'En Bateau' of Debussy's 'Petite Suite'), and a brilliant 'Moto Perpetuo'—which in its turn occasionally recalls the Dance from the composer's Suite No. 1. Mr. Bowen has a knack of writing music that captures one by its mere effectiveness as sound—indeed, his aptitude is perhaps a bit of a snare. At times one wishes he would be more sparing of those strings of juicy, over-ripe chords, for example. Still this is a jolly Suite, and dashing players will revel in it.

Malipiero's 'Impressioni dal veri' (Part 2) has been arranged for pianoforte duet (Chester). Here is a hard nut, with far more roughness than we associate with Spring, or at all events with the music written round it. The three movements are 'Colloquio di Campana,' 'I Cipressi e il vento,' and 'Baldoria Campestre.' There are some attractive bell effects in the first, dependent on delicacy of touch and nuance. The music must not be judged by its appearance, or by mere trying over. Such progressions as that of the opening bars, for example, in which the primo part has the harmony of C major while the secondo is in A flat, are not so hideous as they look. This is only one instance (and a mild one) of the unusualness of the harmony throughout. In the second piece the rapid low passages seem to be less effective than in the orchestral version. The last movement lives up to its title—a kind of savage bonfire. The work has an uncompromising (even brutal) strength, and calls for first-rate players.

Messrs. Winthrop Rogers have issued a new edition, revised and enlarged, of Charles W. Pearce's 'Questions and Examination Papers' for use in connection with the author's 'The Art of the Piano Teacher.' (2s. 6d.)

H. G.

Gramophone Notes

By 'DISCUS'

ÆOLIAN-VOCALION

Easily the best of the bunch—a very small bunch—is a 12-in. d.-s. of the Life Guards Band playing Godfrey's arrangement of Berlioz's 'Le Carnaval Romain.' There are some dull moments in the first half (the composer's fault), but the second is as brilliant and exciting an affair as can be desired. This fine band is heard also in Vaughan Williams's 'Quick March on Sea Songs,' and Jessel's 'Parade of the Tin Soldiers.' The Vaughan Williams strikes me as being less arresting than the composer's usual treatment of old tunes, and the 'Tin Soldier' piece is banal (10-in. d.-s.).

I don't know how far the blame is to be distributed between player, recorder, and my instrument, but Sasha Culbertson's playing of a couple of light solos by Drigo is disappointing. As my gramophone gives good results with other records, it may be acquitted. The playing seems to be rhythmless, and the tone patchy in quality (10-in. d.-s.).

Eric Marshall wastes his fine voice on two songs by Guy d'Hardelot (10-in. d.-s.); Sidney Hamilton sings songs by Miller-Cohn and Earl Lebeig, in which the effective accompaniment (saxophone, violin, and pianoforte) goes far to atone for the poverty of the material (10-in. d.s.); and there are some good fox-trot records.

One of the most interesting bits of recording that has come my way recently is the 10-in. d.s. of A. Palet Gallarini playing the 'Poet and Peasant' Overture on an accordion. It is a truly amazing performance, technically, with far more variety than one would expect from so limited an instrument. The effect is too much like that of a harmonium to be pleasant, but the Overture is so well—even brilliantly—played, that one cannot help thinking there is a future for the accordion for gramophone purposes. Its power is astonishing—in some passages it sounds like a whole reed band. If its over-reedy quality could be toned down, one could hear it with genuine pleasure because of its clearness. A good deal of organ music could be transcribed for it with good effect, especially if, in pieces where the pedal part is important, a bass instrument of some kind could be called in to help. Some time ago a pained correspondent pitched into me for having enjoyed a record of whistling solos. I fear I have again disgraced myself by saying good words for such a pariah as the accordion. But even pariahs should have their due, though perhaps in this case the bulk of the credit is due to the brilliance of Mr. Gallarini. I have never heard of him before, but evidently he is well-known wherever the accordion is cultivated. I note that the E.-Voc. Bulletin says: 'It is impossible to adequately describe the wonderful results obtained by this King of Accordion Players.' I wince at the split infinitive, and take off my hat to his Majesty.

H.M.V.

The month's output is less striking than usual, owing no doubt to the holiday season, and the works are all on the small and light side. The only orchestral record is a 12-in. d.s. of some not very familiar examples of Edward German—the Prelude to Act 3 of 'Henry VIII.' and a couple of dances from 'The Conqueror.' The orchestra is the Royal Albert Hall, conducted by the composer. The 'Henry VIII.' piece seems restrained after the three familiar dances from that play, and is perhaps not German at his best, despite its generally attractive character. The dances from 'The Conqueror' are capital, especially the second—'Satyrs' Dance,' wherein the brass is used very tellingly. The fact that the dancers seem to be super-gipsies rather than satyrs does not matter much. The playing and recording are capital, German's orchestration, as usual, being of the type that reproduces well.

The Royal Air Force Band, under Lieut. Amers, is heard in a rather badly coupled pair of pieces—an interesting 'Novelette' of Glazounov and a 'Chinese Patrol' of H. Fliege. The latter is poor stuff. You will realise its character when I say that Mr. Fliege's Chinese seem to have been born at Limehouse, and to be patrolling on the pier at Southend on a bank holiday. The strong point about this record—especially in the Glazounov piece—is the excellent reproduction of the instrumental tone-colour (10-in. d.s.).

The only violin record received is above the average of interest—Marie Hall playing Holst's 'Valse-Etude' and Goossens's 'Old Chinese Folk-Song' (10-in. d.s.). The former gives us an unfamiliar aspect of Holst, and an engaging one. The playing is delightful in freedom and delicacy. I don't know whether the Goossens piece deals with a genuine Chinese folk-song, or whether it is just the composer's idea of what such a song might be; but the result—especially in regard to some of the pianoforte harmonies—is excellent.

There are two pianoforte records. Una Bourne is heard in Tchaikovsky's 'June' and a couple of short pieces of Cyril Scott—'A Song from the East' and 'Fairy Folk.' Attractive playing, and very crisp—perhaps a bit over-crisp; the tone is a little dry (10-in. d.s.).

Cortôt records are usually so free from jangling tone that one is a bit disappointed with his latest—a 10-in. d.s. of Albeniz's 'Seguidilla' and 'Malagueña.' The music is picturesque, and the playing everything we expect from Cortôt, but you have to shut your ears to a lot of bad tone.

The song records are few. Peter Dawson is heard in a very poor thing of Molloy's—'Punchinello'—and Grant's 'Paddy's Wedding,' which, one feels, ought to be funnier than it is. Facial expression not being available, surely Mr. Dawson should have given us a lot more humour and variety via the voice (12-in. d.s.). Sydney Coltham sings W. G. James's 'Madelina' and Coates's 'Sea Rapture' with a tone and style that strike me as being over-sentimental. John Henry, the wireless hero, makes what I believe to be his first appearance on a record. He sings a ditty about listening in, and tells us, in his engagingly pawky way, about his experiences with hens. The latter is particularly good, and in both every word comes through clearly. On this form, J. H. promises to be a real acquisition to the comic side of gramophoning.

Jeritza is heard in 'Suicido,' from 'La Gioconda,' and 'Divinités du Styx' (12-in. d.s.), and the Russian tenor Smirnoff sings the 'Hindu Song' from 'Sadko' and an air from 'Eugen Onegin.' His performance is of the weebegone type that so many tenors—especially foreign—affect to-day. His tone has a smack of the suffering quality of the corno Inglese in its most desolate moments. A writer in The Times, speaking of this record, says cautiously that it successfully reproduces the peculiar quality of Smirnoff's voice. It does; that's the trouble!

(The Columbia records arrived too late for notice this month.)

The Musician's Bookshelf

'Harmonic Material and its Uses.' By Adolf Weidig. [Clayton F. Summy Co., Chicago; Weekes, London.]

This is an exhaustive text-book, running to well over four hundred large pages, with a lavish amount of music-type examples. The author claims to strike out new lines, and certainly the book has some unusual features. First of these is the fact that the author supplies all the examples. This is surely a less interesting method than the customary drawing on the great composers. There is textual evidence that Mr. Weidig enjoyed writing the examples, but it can hardly be said that the results are as valuable or convincing as would be extracts from more august sources. Mr. Weidig does his best for his examples by adding copious expression marks—in one case he even tells the reader that 'in order to make this example convincing it must be played with closest observance of the dynamics indicated.' This is going too far, the example being a very ordinary dozen or so bars dealing with the Neapolitan sixth. It is well that the student should, as early as possible, be led to write examples that have æsthetic value. But such

NOVELLO'S PART-SONG BOOK.

A COLLECTION OF PART-SONGS, GLEES, AND MADRIGALS.

For S.A.T.B. unless otherwise stated.

Those marked thus * may be had in Tonic Sol-fa Notation.

- |      |   |  |   |                                |  |                             |
|------|---|--|---|--------------------------------|--|-----------------------------|
| No.  |   | No.                                      |   | No.                            |  |                             |
| 614  | Absence ... H. Goetz 3d.                | 403                                      | Autumn song ... S. Reay 4d.             | 1122                           | Calm is the lake ... F. Abt 4d.          |                             |
| 217  | * Do. (A.T.T.B.) J. L. Hatton 3d.       | 683                                      | Do. ... J. Rheinberger 3d.              | 359                            | Calm night ... J. L. Hatton 4d.          |                             |
| 181  | * Do. ... 2d.                           | 484                                      | Ave Maria ... J. Raff 4d.               | 380                            | Calm of the sea, The H. Hiles 6d.        |                             |
| 67   | Adieu love, adieu G. A. Macfarren 3d.   | 241                                      | * Do. ... H. Smart 2d.                  | 911                            | * Capture of Cremona, The                |                             |
| 312  | Adieu, my native shore Pearsall 3d.     | 968                                      | * Awake, awake ... G. Bantock 4d.       |                                | arr. T. R. G. Jozé 4d.                   |                             |
| 943  | Adieu, sweet Amaryllys                  | 76                                       | * Awake, awake, the flow'rs unfold      | 314                            | Caput apri defero ... Pearsall 4d.       |                             |
|      | J. W. G. Hathaway 3d.                   |  | H. Leslie 2d.                           | 178                            | * Caravan, The ... C. Pinsuti 2d.        |                             |
| 1227 | Do. ... C. Macpherson 4d.               | 25                                       | Awake the starry midnight hour          | 1251                           | * Cargoes ... H. B. Gardiner 4d.         |                             |
| 390  | Adieu to the woods Egerton 4d.          |  | Mendelssohn 3d.                         | 1273                           | Carrion Crow, The (humorous)             |                             |
| 658  | Advice to lovers ... P. W. Pilcher 3d.  | 923                                      | * Away to the woodlands                 |                                | W. W. Pearson 4d.                        |                             |
| 1398 | * After many a dusty mile E. Elgar 4d.  |  | H. W. Warner 4d.                        | 607                            | Cavalier, The ... C. Goodall 4d.         |                             |
| 913  | After the battle arr. T. R. G. Jozé 4d. | 978                                      | * Baby's feet, like sea shells pink, A  | 529                            | Cavalry song ... C. A. Macrone 4d.       |                             |
| 674  | Ah, my dear Son (Carol, 3 V.) ... 4d.   |  | C. H. Lloyd 4d.                         | 635                            | Cephalus and Procris                     |                             |
| 1375 | Ah! what is love ... W. McNaught 4d.    | 225                                      | Bacchanalian Song (A.T.T.B.)            |                                | A. W. Batson 4d.                         |                             |
| 515  | Ah! woe is me (6 V.) H. Lahee 6d.       |  | J. L. Hatton 4d.                        | 482                            | Chaffer's Wedding, A (humorous)          |                             |
| 648  | Airley Beacon C. V. Stanford 3d.        | 193                                      | Bait, The (Come live with me)           |                                | Lewandowski 8d.                          |                             |
| 568  | Airs of Summer ... J. L. Roeckel 3d.    | 996                                      | * Ballad, A (8 V.) ... T. Wendt 4d.     | 1087                           | Chapel, The ... C. Kreutzer 4d.          |                             |
| 17   | All among the barley E. Stirling 3d.    | 1016                                     | Ballade of Midsummer ... 4d.            | 427                            | * Charge of the Light Brigade, The       |                             |
| 971  | * All for my true love H. D. Wetton 4d. | 1017                                     | Ballade of Spring ... 6d.               |                                | E. Hecht 6d.                             |                             |
| 81   | All is not gold that shineth bright     | 1044                                     | * Battle of the Baltic, The             | 85                             | * Charm me asleep (6 V.) H. Leslie 4d.   |                             |
|      | in snow (5 V.) W. J. Westbrook 4d.      |  | C. H. Lloyd 6d.                         | 906                            | Do. ... J. B. McEwen 4d.                 |                             |
| 394  | * All is still ... G. A. Macfarren 2d.  | 861                                      | * Battle song, A arr. T. R. G. Jozé 4d. | 847                            | * Chase, The ... E. German 4d.           |                             |
| 802  | All Souls' Day J. Rheinberger 2d.       | 578                                      | Do. ... E. A. Sydenham 4d.              | 757                            | Cherry ripe ... A. H. Brewer 3d.         |                             |
| 59   | All ye woods and trees and bow'rs       | 1334                                     | * Beacon, The ... A. Carse 4d.          | 583                            | Do. ... arr. E. Land 2d.                 |                             |
|      | J. L. Hatton 2d.                        | 689                                      | Beauty, arise ... K. J. Pye 4d.         | 1255                           | * Do. ... W. G. Ross 3d.                 |                             |
| 83   | * Do. (5 V.) H. Lahee 4d.               | 841                                      | Before me careless lying (5 V.)         | 731                            | Do. (6 V.) S. P. Waddington 4d.          |                             |
| 940  | Do. ... H. W. Wareing 4d.               |  | C. H. Lloyd 6d.                         | 1212                           | Cheshire cheese, The                     |                             |
| 1037 | * Allan Water arr. H. E. Button 3d.     | 1238                                     | * Beleaguered, The A. S. Sullivan 3d.   |                                | arr. J. C. Bridge 4d.                    |                             |
| 478  | * Allen-a-Dale ... C. H. Lloyd 6d.      | 56                                       | * Belfry Tower, The J. L. Hatton 2d.    | 734                            | Chi la Gagliarda ... B. Donato 4d.       |                             |
| 1020 | * Do. ... J. B. McEwen 4d.              | 1311                                     | * Belgian National song                 | 375                            | Chieftain to the Highland bound, A       |                             |
| 334  | Already snow has fallen R. Franz 2d.    |  | F. Campenhout 2d.                       |                                | Pearsall 3d.                             |                             |
| 113  | Alton Locke's Song                      | 572                                      | Bells across the snow Ch. Gounod 4d.    | 466                            | * Do. ... O. Prescott 6d.                |                             |
|      | G. A. Macfarren 2d.                     | 432                                      | * Bells of St. Michael's Tower, The     | 94                             | Childhood's melody F. Berger 2d.         |                             |
| 1011 | * Amaryllys I did woo J. E. West 3d.    | W. Knvett (5 V.), arr. R. P. Stewart 6d. | 101                                     | Chivalry of Labour, The (5 V.) |  |                             |
| 1322 | * American National Songs (Three)       | 1271                                     | * Ben Bowlegs (humorous)                |                                | J. B. Calkin 6d.                         |                             |
| 972  | Amintor's well-a-day J. E. West 4d.     |  | W. W. Pearson 4d.                       | 1145                           | Chloe, that dear bewitching prude        |                             |
| 1364 | An address to the nightingale           | 984                                      | Bendemeer's Stream J. Pointer 4d.       |                                | H. Willan 3d.                            |                             |
|      | W. W. Pearson 4d.                       | 1216                                     | Beside the river ... A. Jensen 3d.      | 1147                           | * Chorus of Empire                       |                             |
| 175  | An Autumn song ... C. Pinsuti 4d.       | 793                                      | Better music ne'er was known            |                                | C. A. E. Harriss 4d.                     |                             |
| 20   | An emigrant's song W. Macfarren 4d.     |  | C. H. H. Parry 4d.                      | 66                             | * Christmas... G. A. Macfarren 2d.       |                             |
| 1074 | * An Empire song A. C. Mackenzie 4d.    | 184                                      | * Beware ... J. L. Hatton 2d.           | 1109                           | * Christmas greeting, A. E. Elgar 8d.    |                             |
| 1053 | An end will I bring Schubert 4d.        | 220                                      | Do. (A.T.T.B.) ... 2d.                  | 314                            | Christmas song, A ... Pearsall 3d.       |                             |
| 1387 | * An old Song resung                    | 111                                      | * Bird of the Wilderness J. Barnby 4d.  | 967                            | Do. ... M. Prætorius 4d.                 |                             |
|      | H. B. Gardiner 6d.                      | 196                                      | Do. ... J. L. Hatton 4d.                | 845                            | Close to my heart... W. Davies 4d.       |                             |
| 485  | And then no more ... R. Raff 3d.        | 1157                                     | Birds are singing, The Hans Sitt 3d.    | 677                            | * Clouds, The J. Rheinberger 4d.         |                             |
| 1103 | * Angelic hunter, The                   | 798                                      | Birthday serenade, A G. J. Elvey 4d.    | 823                            | * Come again, sweet days                 |                             |
|      | arr. J. Brahms 4d.                      | 1308                                     | Birthingright, The ... E. Elgar 4d.     |                                | J. Dowland 3d.                           |                             |
| 1091 | Angel's call, The I. I. Viotta 4d.      | 300                                      | * Bishop of Mentz, The Pearsall 2d.     | 726                            | * Come away ... E. German 4d.            |                             |
| 960  | * Angel's greeting, The J. Brahms 4d.   | 1107                                     | * Black Monk, The (Welsh                | 873                            | * Do. ... H. Parker 6d.                  |                             |
| 1167 | * Angelus (Tuscany) E. Elgar 6d.        |  | folk-song) arr. R. Boughton 4d.         | 1169                           | Come away, come away, death              |                             |
| 1340 | * Anglers, The W. W. Pearson 3d.        | 55                                       | * Blow, blow thou winter wind           |                                | arr. Arne 3d.                            |                             |
| 30   | Angler's Trysting-tree, The             |  | G. A. Macfarren 2d.                     | 36                             | Do. (5 V.) G. A. Macfarren 4d.           |                             |
|      | C. W. Corfe 4d.                         | 1254                                     | Blow, breeze, from the North            | 51                             | Do. (5 V.) ... 4d.                       |                             |
| 1039 | * Annie Laurie arr. H. E. Button 2d.    |  | G. Elvey 4d.                            | 58                             | Come celebrate the May ... Hatton 2d.    |                             |
| 108  | Annie Lee ... J. Barnby 2d.             | 1369                                     | Blow, western wind Pearson 4d.          | 668                            | Come, fairies, trip it ... F. Iliffe 4d. |                             |
| 182  | April showers ... J. L. Hatton 2d.      | 661                                      | * Blue-bottle's fate, The               | 102                            | Come fill, my boys (A.T.T.B.)            |                             |
| 218  | Do. (A.T.T.B.) ... 2d.                  |  | (humorous) A. H. Ashworth 4d.           |                                | J. B. Calkin 4d.                         |                             |
| 1318 | Arethusa, The ... W. Shield 4d.         | 544                                      | Blue-eyed lassie, The F. Brandeis 3d.   | 118                            | * Come follow me A. Zimmermann 2d.       |                             |
| 137  | Arise, sweet love ... H. Leslie 4d.     | 933                                      | * Blyddyn Bywyd D. Protheroe 4d.        | 1143                           | Come forth, the summer's                 |                             |
| 97   | Arise, the sunbeams hail F. Berger 4d.  | 187                                      | Blythe is the Bird J. L. Hatton 3d.     |                                | murmur hear ... E. Franz 3d.             |                             |
| 520  | Around the maypole tripping             | 399                                      | * Boat Song ... H. Leslie 2d.           | 14                             | Come, heavy sleep J. Dowland 3d.         |                             |
|      | J. L. Hatton 2d.                        | 357                                      | * Do. ... E. Prout 6d.                  | 745                            | Come if you dare... Purcell 6d.          |                             |
| 859  | * Arranmore Boat Song                   | 1088                                     | Do. ... F. Schubert 3d.                 | 1210                           | Come, lasses and lads                    |                             |
|      | arr. T. R. G. Jozé 4d.                  | 385                                      | Boat, The ... R. Schumann 4d.           |                                | arr. J. C. Bridge 4d.                    |                             |
| 457  | * Arrow and the song, The W. Hay 3d.    | 3  | Boating Song ... E. G. Monk 3d.         | 899                            | Come let me take thee J. Pulein 3d.      |                             |
| 973  | As Amoret with Phillis sat              | 521                                      | * Boatman's Good-night, The             | 317                            | Come let us be merry Pearsall 2d.        |                             |
|      | John E. West 3d.                        |  | F. Schira 2d.                           | 507                            | * Come live with me W. S. Bennett 2d.    |                             |
| 1054 | As I dawdled at morn Schubert 4d.       | 545                                      | * Bonnie Bell A. C. Mackenzie 3d.       | 360                            | Do. ... J. L. Hatton 4d.                 |                             |
| 525  | As I saw fair Clara F. Corder 4d.       | 1310                                     | * Boy, The (humorous) Brewer 4d.        | 193                            | Do. (The Bait) ... 2d.                   |                             |
| 146  | As it fell upon a day ... S. Reay 4d.   | 63                                       | * Break, break on thy cold grey         | 497                            | Come, May, with all thy flowers          |                             |
| 619  | As the ripples flow                     |  | stones, O sea G. A. Macfarren 2d.       |                                | J. L. Gregory 3d.                        |                             |
|      | E. A. Sydenham 3d.                      | 99                                       | Breathe soft, ye winds J. B. Calkin 2d. | 1052                           | Come, O come, dearest, come              |                             |
| 1052 | As the watcher longs Schubert 4d.       | 1307                                     | * Do. ... W. Paxton 2d.                 |                                | Schubert 4d.                             |                             |
| 900  | As through the land J. Pulein 3d.       | * 878                                    | Bridal Song ... H. Leslie 6d.           | 671                            | Come o'er the burn, Bessie (3 V.)        |                             |
| 796  | * As torrents in summer E. Elgar 3d.    | 639                                      | Bright be thy dreams Oliver King 3d.    |                                | 1214                                     | Come out across the heather |
| 1180 | As when the sun renews his              | 402                                      | * Bright-hair'd morn, The S. Reay 4d.   |                                | A. Jensen 4d.                            |                             |
|      | strength (Madrigal) C. E. Miller 4d.    | 584                                      | Bright Moon ... John E. West 3d.        | 791                            | * Come, pretty wag, and sing             |                             |
| 1257 | * Ash Grove, The arr. Dunhill 4d.       | 1222                                     | * Bring me a golden pen                 |                                | C. H. H. Parry 3d.                       |                             |
| 1105 | At Andernach in Rhineland Abt 4d.       |  | F. H. Cowen 4d.                         | 38                             | Come sleep... J. Benedict 4d.            |                             |
| 393  | At first the mountain rill              | 601                                      | Broken Flower, The Oliver King 3d.      | 1060                           | Do. ... J. W. G. Hathaway 3d.            |                             |
|      | G. A. Macfarren 2d.                     | 447                                      | Brook, The C. G. Reissiger 4d.          | 1110                           | * Do. ... R. H. Walthew 2d.              |                             |
| 981  | At her fair hands ... J. Elliott 3d.    | 1015                                     | * Brownies, The Moellendorff 4d.        | 945                            | Do. ... A. G. Wathall 4d.                |                             |
| 788  | Do. ... C. H. H. Parry 4d.              | 1416                                     | Bushes and Briars (Folk-song)           | 1007                           | * Come to me, gentle sleep Cowen 4d.     |                             |
| 335  | A arting ... R. Franz 2d.               |  | R. Vaughan Williams 3d.                 | 701                            | Do. ... H. W. Schartau 4d.               |                             |
| 358  | * At the coming of the Spring           | 223                                      | Busy, curious, thirsty fly (A.T.T.B.)   | 713                            | Come, tuneful friends (humorous)         |                             |
|      | J. L. Hatton 4d.                        |  | J. L. Hatton 3d.                        |                                | C. H. Lloyd 4d.                          |                             |
| 195  | Auburn ... 4d.                          | 743                                      | * Butterfly, The J. Blumenthal 6d.      | 1032                           | Come with me, fairest J. Brahms 4d.      |                             |
| 582  | * Auld Lang Syne ... arr. E. Land 2d.   | 1095                                     | * By a gentle river laid                | 615                            | Comfort ... H. Goetz 3d.                 |                             |
| 71   | Autolycus' Song C. A. Macrone 2d.       |  | John E. West 4d.                        | 999                            | * Comfort in tears... P. Cornelius 6d.   |                             |
| 1006 | * Do. ... C. Lee Williams 4d.           | 1002                                     | * By the waters of Babylon              | 1182                           | * Comrades' song of hope, The            |                             |
| 158  | Autumn ... W. Macfarren 4d.             |  | P. Cornelius 3d.                        |                                | arr. A. Adam 3d.                         |                             |
| 274  | Do. (A.T.T.B.) ... 4d.                  | 1141                                     | By woodland and wayside                 | 383                            | Confidence (8 V.) ... R. Schumann 4d.    |                             |
| 353  | Do. ... A. C. Mackenzie 2d.             |  | E. Franz 3d.                            |                                | arr. W. W. Pearson 4d.                   |                             |
| 62   | Autumn fields, The N. W. Gade 4d.       | 1272                                     | Call John (humorous)                    |                                |  |                             |
| 64   | Autumn is come again (5 V.)             |  | arr. W. W. Pearson 4d.                  |                                |  |                             |
|      | F. Corder 4d.                           |  |   |                                |  |                             |

NURSERY RHYMES

FOUR-PART SONG
OLD ENGLISH RHYMESMUSIC BY ADAM CARSE

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED; NEW YORK: THE H. W. GRAY CO., SOLE AGENTS FOR THE U.S.A.

Allegro vivo

SOPRANO

ALTO

TENOR

BASS

Of New-ing-ton, of New-ing-ton, And

Of New-ing-ton, of New-ing-ton, And

f There was a man of New-ing-ton, . . . of New-ing-ton, And

p Of New-ing-ton, of New-ing-ton, And

Allegro vivo. ♩ = 138

(For practice only)

he was won-drous wise, a

he was won-drous wise, a

he was won-drous wise, f He jump'd in-to a quick-set hedge, . . .

he was won-drous wise, p a

NURSERY RHYMES

quick set hedge, a quickset hedge, And scratch'd out both his eyes ; But when he saw his quick-set hedge, a quickset hedge, And scratch'd out both his eyes ; But when he saw his a quickset hedge, And scratch'd out both his eyes ; But when he saw his quick-set hedge, a quickset hedge, And scratch'd out both his eyes ; But when he saw his eyes were out, With all his might and main an - eyes were out, With all his might and main an - eyes were out, With all his might and main He jump'd in - to an - oth - er hedge, ..

 eyes were out, With all his might and main an -

- oth - er hedge, an - oth - er hedge, And scratch'd 'em in a - gain.
 - oth - er hedge, an - oth - er hedge, And scratch'd 'em in a - gain.
 an - oth - er hedge, And scratch'd 'em in a - gain.
 - oth - er hedge, an - oth - er hedge, And scratch'd 'em in a - gain.

NURSERY RHYMES

Molto moderato

There were two birds sat on a stone, Fa la la la lal de; . .

There were two birds sat on a stone, Fa la la la lal de; . .

There were two birds sat on a stone, Fa la la la lal de; . .

There were two birds sat on a stone, Fa la la la lal de; . .

Molto moderato. ♩ = 80

f

dim. p

One flew a-way, and then there was one, . . Fa la la la lal de; . . The

dim. p

One flew a-way, and then there was one, . . Fa la la la lal de; . . The

dim. p

One flew a-way, and then there was one, . . Fa la la la lal de; . . The

dim. p

One flew a-way, and then there was one, . . Fa la la la lal de; . . The

poco rall.

oth-er flew af-ter, and then there was none, Fa la la la lal de; And

poco rall.

oth-er flew af-ter, and then there was none, . . Fa la la la lal de; And

poco rall.

oth-er flew af-ter, and then there was none, . . Fa la la la lal de; And

poco rall.

oth-er flew af-ter, and then there was none, . . Fa la la la lal de; And

NURSERY RHYMES

Lento
pp
 so the poor stone was left all a-lone, .. Fa la la la lal de! ..
 so the poor stone was left all a-lone, .. Fa la la la lal de! ..
 so the poor stone was left all a-lone, .. Fa la la la lal de! ..
 so the poor stone was left all a-lone, .. Fa la la la lal de! ..
Lento
pp

Allegretto moderato
mf
 Did you not hear of Bet-ty Prin-ple's pig? It was not ve-ry lit-tle, nor Did you not hear of Bet-ty Prin-ple's pig? It was not ve-ry lit-tle, nor Did you not hear of Bet-ty Prin-ple's pig? It was not ve-ry lit-tle, nor Did you not hear of Bet-ty Prin-ple's pig? It was not ve-ry lit-tle, nor Allegretto moderato. ♩ = 88
mf p

mf
 yet ve-ry big; The pig sat down up-on a lit-tle hill, And then poor pig-gy
 yet ve-ry big; The pig sat down up-on a lit-tle hill, And then poor pig-gy
 yet ve-ry big; The pig sat down up-on a lit-tle hill, And then poor pig-gy yet ve-ry big; The pig sat down up-on a lit-tle hill, And then poor pig-gy
mf p

NURSERY RHYMES

The musical score is written for a four-part vocal ensemble (Soprano, Alto, Tenor, Bass) and a piano accompaniment. The key signature is one flat (B-flat major or D minor), and the time signature is 4/4. The score is divided into two main sections. The first section, 'Bet - ty Prin - gle came to see this pret - ty pig, That was not ve - ry lit - tle, nor yet ve - ry big; This lit - tle pig - gy then lay', is marked with dynamics mf and p, and includes tempo markings rall. and poco rit.. The second section, 'down and died, And poor Bet - ty Prin - gle sat down and cried. Then', is marked with dynamics p and mf. The piano accompaniment features a steady eighth-note bass line and a more active treble line with chords and single notes.

rall. mf p
made his will. Bet - ty Prin - gle came to see this pret - ty pig, That was
rall. mf p
made his will. Bet - ty Prin - gle came to see this pret - ty pig, That was
rall. mf p
made his will. Bet - ty Prin - gle came to see this pret - ty pig, That was
rall. mf p
made his will. Bet - ty Prin - gle came to see this pret - ty pig, That was mf poco rit.
not ve - ry lit - tle, nor yet ve - ry big; This lit - tle pig - gy then lay
mf poco rit.
not ve - ry lit - tle, nor yet ve - ry big; This lit - tle pig - gy then lay
mf poco rit.
not ve - ry lit - tle, nor yet ve - ry big; This lit - tle pig - gy then lay
mf poco rit.
not ve - ry lit - tle, nor yet ve - ry big; This lit - tle pig - gy then lay
mf poco rit.
p mf down and died, And poor Bet - ty Prin - gle sat down and cried. Then
p mf down and died, And poor Bet - ty Prin - gle sat down and cried. Then
p mf down and died, And poor Bet - ty Prin - gle sat down and cried. Then
p mf
down and died, And poor Bet - ty Prin - gle sat down and cried. Then

NURSERY RHYMES

John - ny Prin - gle bu - ried this ve - ry pret - ty pig, That was not ve - ry lit - tle, nor

John - ny Prin - gle bu - ried this ve - ry pret - ty pig, That was not ve - ry lit - tle, nor

John - ny Prin - gle bu - ried this ve - ry pret - ty pig, That was not ve - ry lit - tle, nor

John - ny Prin - gle bu - ried this ve - ry pret - ty pig, That was not ve - ry lit - tle, nor

p

Poco allargando

yet ve - ry big; So here's an end of the song of all . . three,

yet ve - ry big; So here's an end of the song of all . . three,

yet ve - ry big; So here's an end of the song of all . . three,

yet ve - ry big; So here's an end of the song of all three,

Poco allargando

mf

pp a tempo

John - ny Prin - gle, Bet - ty Prin - gle, and lit - tle pig - gy.

pp a tempo

John - ny Prin - gle, Bet - ty Prin - gle, and lit - tle pig - gy.

pp a tempo

John - ny Prin - gle, Bet - ty Prin - gle, and lit - tle pig - gy.

pp a tempo

John - ny Prin - gle, Bet - ty Prin - gle, and lit - tle pig - gy.

pp a tempo

Allegro moderato
p leggiero

NURSERY RHYMES

Sol - o - mon Grun - dy, Born on Mon - day, Chris - ten'd on Tues - day,
p leggiero
Sol - o - mon Grun - dy, Born on Mon - day, Chris - ten'd on Tues - day,
p leggiero
Sol - o - mon Grun - dy, Born on Mon - day, Chris - ten'd on Tues - day,
p leggiero
Sol - o - mon Grun - dy, Born on Mon - day, Chris - ten'd on Tues - day,
Allegro moderato. ♩ = 103
p leggiero

Mar ried on Wed - nes - day, Took ill on Thurs - day, Worse on Fri - day, Died on Sat - ur - day,
Mar ried on Wed - nes - day, Took ill on Thurs - day, Worse on Fri - day, Died on Sat - ur - day,
Mar - ried on Wed - nes - day, Took ill on Thurs - day, Worse on Fri - day, Died on Sat - ur - day,
Mar - ried on Wed - nes - day, Took ill on Thurs - day, Worse on Fri - day, Died on Sat - ur - day,

Bu - ried on Sun - day; This is the end Of Sol - o - mon Grun - dy.
Bu - ried on Sun - day; This is the end Of Sol - o - mon Grun - dy.
Bu - ried on Sun - day; This is the end Of Sol - o - mon Grun - dy.
Bu - ried on Sun - day; This is the end Of Sol - o - mon Grun - dy.

NURSERY RHYMES

Allegro moderato

f Rob-in the Bob-bin, the big boy Ben, He ate more meat than four-score men; He p

f Rob-in the Bob-bin, the big boy Ben, He ate more meat than four-score men; He p

f Rob-in the Bob-bin, the big boy Ben, He ate more meat than four-score men; p

f Ro-bin the Bob-bin, the big boy Ben, He ate more meat than four-score men; p

Allegro moderato. ♩. = 108

f p

ate a cow, He ate a butch-er He ate a church, he molto cres.

ate a cow, He ate a butch-er He ate a church, he molto cres.

he ate a calf, and a half; He ate a church, he molto cres.

he ate a calf, and a half; He ate a church, he molto cres.

ate a stee-ple, He ate the priest and all the peo-ple!

ate a stee-ple, He ate the priest and all the peo-ple!

ate a stee-ple, He ate the priest and all the peo-ple!

ate a stee-ple, He ate the priest and all the peo-ple!

NURSERY RHYMES

Molto maestoso

ff pesante

Tom - my Trot, a man of .. law, Sold his bed and lay up-on .. straw: ..

f pesante

Tom - my Trot, a man of .. law, ..

Molto maestoso.  $\text{♩} = 69$

ff

L.H.

Sold the straw and slept on grass, To .. buy his wife a

Sold his .. bed .. and lay up-on .. straw: .. Sold the .. straw and

pesante

Tom - my Trot, a man of .. law, Sold his .. bed and

pesante ff

Tom - my Trot, a look - ing - glass, Sold the .. straw and slept on slept on grass, To buy .. his .. wife a look - ing - glass, to lay up-on .. straw: .. Sold the straw and slept on grass, To .. man of .. law, .. Sold his .. bed and lay up-on .. straw: ..

NURSERY RHYMES

grass, To buy his.. wife a look - ing - glass, a buy.. his.. wife a look - ing - glass, to.. buy.. his.. wife a..

buy his wife a.. look - ing - glass, to buy . . . his..

Sold the.. straw and slept on.. grass, To buy.. his.. wife a

The musical score for the first system is written for voice and piano. It consists of four staves. The first three staves are for the voice, and the fourth is for the piano accompaniment. The key signature is one flat (B-flat), and the time signature is 4/4. The melody is simple and repetitive, with the lyrics 'The Old Woman Who Lived Under a Bush' written below the notes. The piano accompaniment provides a steady harmonic background.

rall.
look - - - ing - glass.

rall.
look - ing - glass, a look - - - ing - glass.

rall.
wife a look - ing - glass, to buy his wife a.. look - ing - glass.

rall.
look - ing - glass, . . . a look - ing - glass.

The musical score for the second system continues the melody and accompaniment from the first system. It consists of four staves. The first three staves are for the voice, and the fourth is for the piano accompaniment. The key signature remains one flat (B-flat), and the time signature is 4/4. The tempo marking 'rall.' (rallentando) is placed above the first staff of this system. The lyrics continue below the notes, and the piano accompaniment maintains the same harmonic structure.

NOVELLO'S PART-SONG BOOK.

A COLLECTION OF PART-SONGS, GLEES, AND MADRIGALS.

For S.A.T.B. unless otherwise stated.

Those marked thus * may be had in Tonic Sol-fa Notation.

- |      |   |        |  |         |  |
|------|---|--------|--|---------|--|
| No.  |   | No.    |  | No.     |  |
| 303  | * Let us all go maying Pearsall 3d.                                       | 1244   | * Marseillaise Hymn, The ... 2d.                                   | 533     | Notte che attriste piaci M. Costa 4d.                              |
| 234  | * Letter, The (A.T.T.B.) J. L. Hatton 4d.                                 | 961    | * Mary and the boatman J. Brahms 3d.                               | 95      | Now ... F. Berger 4d.  |
| 1106 | Libera me, Domine Kalliwooda 2d.  | 965    | * Mary Magdalene ... G. H. Ely 4d.                                 | 417     | * Now fie on love G. A. Macfarren 2d.                              |
| 867  | * Liberty ... E. Fanning 8d.  | 732    | Mary Morison ... W. H. Bell 3d.                                    | 1072    | * Now is my Chloris F. Idle 4d.                                    |
| 736  | Lie down, poor heart (5 V.) ... F. C. Woods 4d.                           | 962    | * Mary's wandering J. Brahms 3d.                                   | 904     | Now is the month of maying G. Holst 4d.                            |
| 1258 | * Lie still, my little one ... C. Harriss 4d.                             | 905    | Matin song ... R. Franz 2d.  | 259     | Now May is here ... H. Smart 4d.                                   |
| 238  | Lifeboat, The (A.T.T.B.) Hatton 4d.                                       | 338    | May song ... R. Franz 2d.  | 398     | * Now the bright morning star H. Leslie 4d.                        |
| 1352 | Do, ... W. W. Pearson 6d.   | 1108   | Men of Harlech arr. R. Boughton 4d.                                | 1402    | * Do, do, ... H. Boyce 4d.   |
| 164  | Light of life, The J. Lemmens 4d.   | 617    | Merrily fly the hours Sydenham 4d.                                 | 401     | Do, ... H. H. Pierson 4d.  |
| 641  | Light of love, The A. W. Batson 3d.                                       | 813    | Merry bells of Yule, The Taylor 6d.                                | 1045    | Now the golden morn J. E. West 3d.                                 |
| 319  | * Light of my soul (6 V.) Pearsall 3d.                                    | 710    | Merry month, The T. Rogers 6d.                                     | 1195    | Nun, The ... R. Schumann 2d.                                       |
| 705  | Like desert woods C. V. Stanford 3d.                                      | 1100   | Merry-time of Maying, The arr. J. Brahms 4d.                       | 1413    | Nursery Rhymes (humorous) Adam Carse 4d.                           |
| 909  | Lilian ... John Pullen 3d.  | 895    | * Message bringers, The Warner 6d.                                 | 285     | * Nymphs are sporting Pearsall 4d.                                 |
| 408  | Lilies white, crimson roses (5 V.) L. Marenzio 4d.                        | 805    | Messengers of Spring Rheinberger 4d.                               | 1365    | Nymphs of the Ocean Pearson 4d.                                    |
| 304  | List! lady, be not coy (6 V.) Pearsall 4d.                                | 1198   | Midnight by the sea A. C. Mackenzie 3d.                            | 325     | O all ye ladies fair and true (A.T.B.B.) ... Pearsall 3d.          |
| 616  | Little bird, The E. A. Sydenham 4d.                                       | 318    | Mibi est propositum Pearsall 3d.                                   | 1152    | O bounteous nature F. Hegar 4d.                                    |
| 854  | Little Jack Horner C. E. Horsley 6d.                                      | 692    | * Milkmaids, The E. A. Sydenham 4d.                                | 1293    | * O can ye sew cushions? G. Bantock 4d.                            |
| 1284 | * Little Sandman, The arr. John E. West 2d.                               | 320    | * Miller, The G. A. Macfarren 4d.                                  | 1213    | O Canada ... C. Lavallée 4d.                                       |
| 564  | Lo! the peaceful shades Hatton 2d.  | 495    | * Miller's Wooing, The E. Fanning 8d.                              | 1161    | O come with me and wander far N. W. Gade 4d.                       |
| 430  | * Lo, where the rosy bosomed hours ... J. Goss 4d.                        | 1111   | Milton! thou should'st be living at this hour ... G. Bullivant 6d. | 959     | * O death, thou art the tranquil night (8 V.) ... P. Cornelius 6d. |
| 1388 | * London Town ... E. German 6d.   | 1322   | * Mine eyes have seen the glory W. Steff 2d.                       | 1123    | O Fatherland ... F. Abt 3d.  |
| 857  | * Londonderry Air, The arr. T. R. G. Joze 3d.                             | 1196   | Minstrel, The R. Schumann 2d.                                      | 902     | O gentle sleep ... H. Leslie 6d.                                   |
| 1188 | Lonely hunter, The Schumann 2d.   | 370    | * Moon shone calmly, The J. L. Hatton 4d.                          | 27      | O happy he who liveth (5 V.) G. Gastoldi 3d.                       |
| 804  | * Long day closes, The A. Sullivan 2d.                                    | 173    | Moan, The ... H. Smart 4d.   | 151     | * O hush thee, my babe A. Sullivan 4d.                             |
| 610  | Longing ... H. Goetz 3d.  | 505    | Moorland witch, The E. Hecht 4d.                                   | 1070    | O Jesu, tender Shepherd arr. J. Brahms 4d.                         |
| 1289 | Do, ... H. Keeton 3d.   | 998    | * Mopsa ... C. Lee Williams 4d.                                    | 278     | O lady, leave thy silken thread W. Macfarren 4d.                   |
| 508  | Looking for Spring C. H. Lloyd 4d.  | 270    | * More life ... W. Macfarren 4d.                                   | 787     | * O love, they wrong thee much C. H. H. Parry 3d.                  |
| 1106 | Lord, I pray thee, set me free Kalliwooda 2d.                             | 1004   | Morning ... G. M. Palmer 3d.                                       | 726     | * O lovely May ... E. German 4d.                                   |
| 315  | Lord Ullin's daughter Pearsall 3d.  | 243    | Do, ... H. Smart 4d.   | 871     | O Mary dear ... H. E. Button 3d.                                   |
| 466  | * Do, ... O. Prescott 6d.   | 349    | Morning greeting ... F. Hensel 4d.                                 | 1046    | * O memory (3 V.) H. Leslie 3d.                                    |
| 855  | Lordly gallants A. Zimmermann 6d.   | 1101   | * Morning song arr. J. Brahms 4d.                                  | 711     | O mistress mine arr. J. F. Bridge 3d.                              |
| 1028 | * Love ... E. Elgar 6d.   | 268    | Do, ... W. Macfarren 4d.   | 547     | * Do, ... H. MacCunn 3d.   |
| 915  | * Love and beauty W. H. Bell 4d.  | 339    | Morning walk, A ... R. Franz 4d.                                   | 128     | * Do, ... G. A. Macfarren 2d.                                      |
| 250  | Love and mirth ... H. Smart 4d.   | 1035   | * Mother's lamentation, The arr. T. F. Dunhill 3d.                 | 853     | Do, ... S. P. Waddington 4d.                                       |
| 1009 | * Love and youth (6 V.) Cornelius 6d.                                     | 1204   | Music ... C. Lee Williams 6d.                                      | 1085    | O Most Holy One (O Sanctissima) 4d.                                |
| 707  | * Love in my bosom C. V. Stanford 4d.                                     | 941    | * Music all powerful T. F. Walmisley 3d.                           | 429     | O my sweet Mary (5 V.) J. Goss 6d.                                 |
| 264  | Love is a sickness W. Macfarren 4d.                                       | 534    | Music when soft voices die (6 V.) A. King 6d.                      | 863     | * O Nightingale ... H. E. Baker 4d.                                |
| 772  | * Do, ... C. H. H. Parry 3d.  | 766    | * Do, ... C. H. H. Parry 3d.                                       | 872     | Do, (5 V.) ... P. Pitt 4d.   |
| 1248 | * Do, (6 V.) ... P. Pitt 4d.  | 854    | Musical joke, A ... C. E. Horsley 6d.                              | 937     | * O peaceful night ... E. German 4d.                               |
| 801  | * Love is enough ... G. Holst 4d.   | 1247   | * My bonnie lass she smileth E. German 4d.                         | 415     | O say, what nymph (6 V.) ... Palestrina 4d.                        |
| 637  | Love me little, love me long King Hall 6d.                                | 885(*) | My Country, 'tis of thee arr. 12 cents. 2d.                        | 1286    | O say, ye saints (5 V.) J. L. Rogers 3d.                           |
| 210  | Do, ... J. L. Hatton 4d.  | 1322   | * Do, ... 2d.  | 708     | O shady vales C. V. Stanford 3d.                                   |
| 420  | Do, ... L. Wilson 3d.   | 1287   | My dear mistress has a heart John E. West 3d.                      | 714     | * O sing unto my roundelay (5 V.) S. Wesley 6d.                    |
| 840  | * Love symphony, A J. A. Clegg 4d.  | 1136   | * My delight and thy delight Parry 4d.                             | 919     | O sleep, fond fancy arr. J. Benet 3d.                              |
| 1284 | Love, the harlequin Wareing 4d.   | 1038   | My heart is sair arr. H. E. Button 3d.                             | 888     | * O'Sullivan Mór arr. T. R. G. Joze 3d.                            |
| 632  | Love wakes and weeps W. N. Johnson 3d.                                    | 1415   | My lady fell a-sighing W. H. Reed 4d.                              | 511     | * O sunny beam ... R. Schumann 3d.                                 |
| 562  | Lovely Adelaide, The Volklied 3d.   | 100    | My lady is so wondrous fair J. B. Calkin 2d.                       | 342     | O thou world so fair ... F. Abt 3d.                                |
| 1079 | * Lovely night ... F. X. Chwatal 2d.                                      | 1218   | My love and I ... A. Jensen 3d.                                    | 494     | O too cruel fair (5 V.) Rockstro 6d.                               |
| 279  | Lover's parting W. Macfarren 4d.  | 465    | My love beyond the seal F. H. Simms 4d.                            | 165     | O welcome him ... J. Lemmens 4d.                                   |
| 1099 | * Lover's wraith, The arr. J. Brahms 4d.                                  | 585    | * My love dwelt in a northern land E. Elgar 4d.                    | 970     | O what a lovely magic hath been here ... G. Bantock 4d.            |
| 631  | Love's adieu ... A. W. Batson 3d.   | 84     | * My love is fair (5 V.) H. Leslie 2d.                             | 286     | * O who will o'er the downs so free Pearsall 2d.                   |
| 264  | Love's heigh ho W. Macfarren 4d.  | 75     | My soul to God, my heart to thee H. Leslie 4d.                     | 286 (*) | * Do, (A.T.T.B.) ... 2d.   |
| 634  | Love's inconstancy A. W. Batson 4d.                                       | 1197   | * My soul would drink those echoes (8 V.) ... A. C. Mackenzie 6d.  | 1058    | * O wild west wind E. Elgar 6d.                                    |
| 423  | Love's question and reply J. B. Grant 3d.                                 | 1019   | * My sweet sweeting H. F. Simson 4d.                               | 455     | O world, thou art wondrous fair F. Hiller 6d.                      |
| 1300 | * Love's tempest ... E. Elgar 8d.   | 139    | * My true love hath my heart H. Smart 3d.                          | 305     | O ye roses (6 V.) ... Pearsall 4d.                                 |
| 742  | Loyal lover, The (5 V.) J. Blumenthal 4d.                                 | 1067   | Naiades, The arr. J. Brahms 4d.                                    | 684     | Oak Tree, The ... G. J. Bennett 4d.                                |
| 975  | * Lullaby ... A. R. Mote 4d.  | 378    | * Night ... Ch. Gounod 4d.   | 1353    | Ocean, The W. W. Pearson 4d.                                       |
| 1283 | * Lullaby, A G. Bantock 4d.   | 1013   | Night her shade is bringing, The Otto Goldschmidt 3d.              | 689     | Ode to Hymen ... K. J. Pye 4d.                                     |
| 1215 | * Do, ... J. Brahms 2d.   | 359    | Night is calm and cloudless, The J. L. Hatton 4d.                  | 569     | O'er the meadows B. Smith 4d.                                      |
| 1258 | * Do, ... C. Harriss 4d.  | 92     | * Night, lovely night F. Berger 2d.                                | 666     | Of a' the airts the... Oliver King 4d.                             |
| 477  | Do, ... Oliver King 4d.   | 281    | Night, sable goddess W. Macfarren 4d.                              | 1328    | Off to sea ... W. W. Pearson 6d.                                   |
| 1175 | * Do, ... H. Leslie 6d.   | 1158   | Night softly falling G. Lewin 4d.                                  | 476     | Oh I wish I were a swallow O. Wagner 4d.                           |
| 1077 | Do, ... J. B. Lott 4d.  | 344    | * Night song ... F. Abt 2d.  | 1033    | Oh maiden dearest, my heart is true ... J. Brahms 4d.              |
| 539  | Do, ... R. Mählig 4d.   | 39     | Night song, A ... J. Benedict 4d.                                  | 249     | Oh say not that my heart is cold H. Smart 3d.                      |
| 881  | Lullaby of life ... H. Leslie 6d.   | 926    | * Night whispers (6 V.) Moellendorff 4d.                           | 1313    | Oh! say not woman's heart is bought ... H. M. Higgs 4d.            |
| 105  | * Luna ... J. Barnby 2d.  | 98     | Night winds that so gently flow J. B. Calkin 2d.                   | 1097    | Old affection ... L. Spohr 2d.                                     |
| 231  | Lye, The (A.T.T.B.) J. L. Hatton 4d.                                      | 1155   | Nightingale in moonlit glade, The H. Sitt 3d.                      | 37      | Old May-Day ... J. Benedict 2d.                                    |
| 532  | Maeldaine ... J. L. Roedel 2d.  | 680    | Nightingale, The J. Rheinberger 4d.                                | 1361    | * Old Neptune ... A. R. Gaul 4d.                                   |
| 699  | Magdalen at Michael's gate E. M. Boyce 3d.                                | 400    | No longer mourn for me C. Holland 4d.                              | 1316    | * Olden time, The E. Cutler 4d.                                    |
| 10   | Magdalen College song, A Monk 3d.   | 332    | No! No! Nigella (6 V.) Pearsall 3d.                                | 704     | On a hill there grows a flower C. V. Stanford 3d.                  |
| 595  | * Maiden fair, O deign to tell (humorous) arr. Haydn 4d.                  | 1223   | * Nocturne, A ... F. H. Cowen 4d.                                  |         |  |
| 662  | * March like the victors R. Rogers 4d.                                    | 528    | Norse Queen's gift, The W. Hay 4d.                                 |         |  |
| 1252 | * March of the Cameron men (air by M. M. Campbell) arr. by G. Bantock 4d. | 1183   | North or South R. Schumann 4d.                                     |         |  |
| 780  | Mark when she smiles C. H. Lloyd 3d.                                      | 1093   | Northman's song, The F. Kücken 3d.                                 |         |  |
| 1012 | * Marriage of the frog and the mouse, The (humorous) A. H. Brewer 4d.     | 365    | Not for me the lark is singing J. L. Hatton 4d.                    |         |  |

examples must first of all be satisfactory qua harmony and part-writing, and must not depend on dynamic subtleties in order to be convincing. Mr. Weidig breaks away from custom in setting the student to write little pieces instead of filling up skeletons and figured basses, the use of these props being discontinued very early in the book. This is a good plan, though the author limits its usefulness by writing all his examples for pianoforte. A good proportion should have been for voices and strings. There is right insistence on learning to listen, and a good working knowledge of the pianoforte is demanded. ('I refuse to teach instrumentalists and singers who do not play the piano,' says Mr. Weidig.) He is emphatic, too, on the importance of analysis; from first to last the student is bidden to dissect the examples, as well as certain works of the great masters. On p. 60, by the way, in advising works for analyses of key, Mr. Weidig says that 'Bach's compositions furnish the best material, because there is almost a total absence of chromatic; their strength lies in the uncompromising use of diatonic intervals'—which is somewhat too sweeping a statement, surely. And in suggesting certain Preludes and Fugues from the 'Forty-eight' the key only is given, whereas the Book should have been mentioned as well. A good feature about the volume is the enthusiasm of the writer. In two cases this shows itself oddly. Thus the chapter on the dominant seventh opens with a kind of rhapsody:

It is customary to finish the subject of triads before taking up the study of seventh chords. I have departed from this custom for several reasons. First of all, the dominant seventh chord must be considered the sacred chord in music, because it is God's own creation; it is part of the universe, vibrating with elemental strength, having dominated the musical world since its inception; reigning and ruling for evermore.

Many of us think it dominates the musical world far too much; a cadence with a plain dominant triad is quite refreshing on the few occasions when we are allowed such a thing. Mr. Weidig, having claimed for it 'elemental strength,' goes on to say that 'it is beloved by every human being on account of its mildness of sound.' Dominant seventh worshippers cannot have it both ways: in elemental strength the plain chord has the seventh beaten all the time. However, we may more easily forgive Mr. Weidig his worship of the dominant seventh than his infatuation for the diminished variety. Probably most teachers of composition have to warn the aspirant against too lavish a use of this enervating progression—in fact, it is now looked on by most as the harmonic 'mark of the beast.' But hear Mr. Weidig on it:

There is an old whist rule—'When in doubt'—well, you probably know it—which, when applied to music, reads, 'When in doubt use a diminished seventh chord.' No words could describe its character more forcefully. It is the most useful combination of tones in all music; its ambiguity furnishes the means of startling changes in tonality—the evasiveness of its sound keeps the listener in suspense, until, through resolution, a definite key is revealed.

And so on.

The English reader naturally has a little quarrel with the author on a small point on p. 416. Recommending the student to analyse, Mr. Weidig says that 'it would be rather presumptuous' to suggest compositions for this purpose, and proceeds to suggest a few classics. He says:

The foregoing list comprises what I might call the 'indispensable works.' After the student has accomplished this, he will be ready to analyse the more modern works of French, German, Russian, Italian, and American origin, which will naturally lead him to the music of the present time.

But has Mr. Weidig never heard of any English music at least as well worth the student's attention as anything produced by Italy or America?

An interesting book in many ways, but, so far as this country is concerned, one sees no reason to recommend its adoption in place of the scholarly treatises of our own Bucks, Kitsons, and others.

H. G.

'A Book of English Prosody.' By Sydney Grew.

[Grant Richards, 6s.]

Mr. Sydney Grew has been known for a long time as a critic with a wide and comprehensive knowledge of music: he now shows himself in this book of English prosody to have an equally wide and comprehensive knowledge of poetry. He says, on p. 225, that the preparation of the book required some months of thought and research, and that when the material was acquired, the book was written in a few days. If I may paraphrase a remark of Whistler, it was only possible to write a book such as this in a few days, or even a few months, because the author was fortified by the accumulated knowledge of a life-time.

Mr. Grew chooses his illustrations from the poets of yesterday and to-day, and his method of accenting is clear and helpful. Furthermore, his use of musical 'counts,' indicated by arabic figures, is valuable, especially to musicians, for preserving the relative strength of accents and the correct phrasing of the line.

The volume is a careful analysis of metres, and of the variations by which the great poets free their poems from the stiffness of the abstract form. Mr. Grew says in the Preface that he hopes that the book 'may help young people who have a desire to write in metrical forms.' It will, for it will shake the would-be poet out of his complacent satisfaction with lifeless and wooden verses which he has hitherto regarded as the finest poetry, just as a close study of the melodies of Bach, with their intricate phraseology, will awaken the young composer to the fact that a common measure hymn-tune is not the last word in rhythmic possibilities. Of course, all the books on prosody in the world will not make a John Milton, but if any book can prevent a Thomas Hoole, this is the book to do it.

Another hope that Mr. Grew had in writing the book was that it might induce young people to read aloud and to create it as pure form. This is perhaps the real purpose of the work, for, after all, the young poet, if he be a real poet, will instinctively feel his own rhythm, and will introduce his own variations, through his youthful and immature imitations of the classics. But for every one poet there are a thousand would-be readers of poetry who certainly ought to be instructed and guided in the art of interpreting poetry as carefully as the would-be pianist has to be instructed in the art of interpreting Beethoven's Sonatas.

All teachers of English would do well to study Mr. Grew's book, and strengthened by its teaching, to destroy the deadly sing-song methods of reading and reciting which sensitive visitors to school functions are sometimes obliged to endure.

To the ordinary reader some of the analyses of metrical peculiarities, though interesting to the student of prosody, will appear unnecessary and confusing. Frequently the beauty and strength of a line lies in its intelligent interpretation rather than in its writing. Many lines of Shakespeare, lines borrowed almost word for word from North, are mechanically hammered out pentameters; so too many lines of other good poets are, as they stand, just as roughly fashioned. That these mechanical lines should be rescanned to appear as though conforming to some subtle variations of metre is doing but scant justice to the many intentional and beautiful variations which require no such special treatment. No; let the student understand the principles, and intelligently appreciate the artistic variations, and he may then be safely left to read all good poetry with a fine understanding of its sense and form. And this is what anyone who has digested this book, and received a good send-off from the author, will most certainly do. A. E. B.-S.

'Impressions of Europe, 1873-74.' By Philo A. Otis.
[Boston: Richard G. Badger.]

The writer of this book is incumbent at a well-known New York Church, and clearly a musical enthusiast. In 1873 he started on a year's trip to Europe, and made copious notes on the journey. These he has touched up and amplified, interspersed with excellent reproductions of photographs of persons, places, and famous paintings, and so made a volume mainly of interest to his friends, next to American friends of his friends, and last (but not negligibly) to the general public on both sides of the Atlantic. Inevitably there is a great deal that is less momentous than Mr. Otis thought it to be, both at the time of writing and revision. Yet one would not have all those youthful enthusiasms pruned away. It is pleasant to see England and other bits of the Continent as it appeared fifty years ago to this American youth, eager to admire and ready—almost too ready—to be impressed. Musical references abound. Young Philo seems to have gone to the opera almost every possible evening, and to concerts on the remainder, marking time at church services, picture galleries, and museums until the opera-house opened its doors again. Apropos of church services, here is a note concerning a well-known hymn-tune:

At St. George's, Edinburgh; a full choral service with anthem by a choir of boys and men, accompanied by a large organ. One of the hymns, 'The Church's one Foundation,' was sung to such stirring music that I could not leave the church without learning the name of the author. In this manner I became acquainted with the tune 'Aurelia,' by Samuel S. Wesley.

At Baden he seems to have been assiduous in attendance at the English Chapel on Sunday mornings, 'where one was sure to see some members of visiting royalty.' The young man from the Republic basked in the presence at concerts too:

On Saturday evening the Empress [of Germany] came to a chamber concert in the Conversation House, given by Hans von Bülow, Sivori, and Cossmann. The artists had just commenced the second movement of Beethoven's Trio No. 5 when the Imperial party entered. At once the music stopped, artists and audience reverently rose, and remained standing until the royal visitors were seated.

He tells a good story about Wagner's King Ludwig:

The King was recently walking about the streets of Munich when he met a wounded soldier limping along on his crutches.

King: 'Where were you wounded?'

Soldier: 'At Sedan.'

King: 'Do you not recognise me? I am Ludwig of Bavaria.'

Soldier: 'How should I know you? I do not go to the opera and you are never seen on the field.'

Which leaves one speculating as to Ludwig of Bavaria's answer (if any). A pity so many stories leave off at an interesting point!

Among other things for which the reader of this pleasantly chatty book will be grateful is the author's quotation from Carlyle on a notorious pianoforte piece. Musical references in Carlyle are few, but highly characteristic, and this is one of the best. It is brought in apropos of Mr. Otis's arrival at Prague:

Prague! Who has not heard of the Battle of Prague?

One of the furious battles of the world. Loud as Doomsday, the very emblem of which, done on the piano by females of energy, scatters Mankind to flight, who love their ears.

'Done on the piano by females of energy!'

Only a Carlyle, fresh from hearing it, could have so perfectly summed up piece and performance. One can picture the Sage, sitting through the din (as he himself was wont to say, 'not without thoughts'), and longing for his sound-proof room.

H. G.

'Pianoforte Accompaniment.' By Welton Hickin.

[Novello, 4s.; cloth, 5s.]

The author of this book—No. 99 of the 'Music Primers Series'—set himself a difficult task. His object is 'to assist the young or inexperienced student' who desires to specialise in accompanying. But the fact is that there is no place for the 'young or inexperienced' in the accompaniment of modern song. This is shown by the fact that with few exceptions the examples given call for good technique and ripe musicianship. Mr. Hickin rightly begins by laying stress on the indispensability of ample technique, and indicates works that will be of special value to the accompanist, particularly in regard to the left hand. At first one feels that a larger portion of the book should have been devoted to elementary examples. But it has to be remembered that Mr. Hickin has in mind the inexperienced accompanist, not player. One frequently finds brilliant soloists who fail completely when called on to accompany. Mr. Hickin does well, therefore, to take nothing for granted: there is hardly a principle too obvious to be set down. His chapters deal with technique, imagination, alertness (ensemble, balance of tone, &c.), sight-reading, transposition, recitatives, harmonization, and modulation, and he follows on with the detailed study of Liszt's 'The Three Gipsies' and Parry's 'The Witches' Wood,' both songs being printed in full. Bearing in mind the muddle made by so many players when called on to improvise an accompaniment to the National Anthem one is glad to see two effective treatments provided. Ought the accompanist to link up songs by means of modulatory passages? Surely not! The practice belongs to the bad old days when it was felt that all consecutive numbers should be in related keys. To-day the ear welcomes a plunge into remote tonality. The linking-up is often done, but, like the preliminary and usually futile flourish with which a pianist announces his intention of beginning, it is an unnecessary habit that irritates many and pleases none. Mr. Hickin admits that it is unnecessary, but says that 'occasionally it is desirable and effective.' It is a pity he should give even so much sanction as this, especially as he follows it by some examples that recall the all-too-familiar methods of organists 'filling-up' a brief gap in a service. The fact is, anything interpolated between songs (except by the composer himself, as in a song cycle) is an impertinence even when done skilfully. This detail apart, Mr. Hickin's book can be recommended with confidence to the student. It is above all simple and practical, and its wealth of examples from such song-writers as Brahms, Ravel, Debussy, Stanford, Quilter, &c., add to its musical interest as well as to its educational value. H. G.

No. 27 of The Journal of the Folk-Song Society has been received. It contains a very interesting set of songs noted in Dorset by the late H. E. D. Hammond. In the discussion on the variants of 'The Bailiff's Daughter of Islington,' both 'L. E. B.' and 'F. K.' say that the tune to which this song is generally sung (as given in Chappell) was actually composed by Rimbault. According to 'F. K.': 'He [Rimbault] had heard that a certain man in the North was acquainted with the tune; but finding that he was too shy to sing, or of no vocal ability, Dr. Rimbault composed the tune himself. Perhaps he founded his composition upon the fragment he had noted.' An interesting example of the wide diffusion of a song is seen in the case of No. 16, 'Deep in love,' sung by Mr. Jacob Baker, at Bere Regis, Dorset, in 1905. It is clearly a variant, so far as the words are concerned, of the beautiful fragment, 'Must I go bound,' in Herbert Hughes's 'Irish Country Songs,' though its tune has not the haunting beauty of the Irish setting. It seems to have found its way south via Scotland, as it contains stanzas from 'The Prickly Rose,' a song popular in Banffshire and Aberdeenshire. Such connections, with what they imply of folk making new homes at a distance, and grafting their native songs on local stock, are among the most fascinating things in these Journals. H. G.

REVIEWS IN BRIEF

Books on singing steadily increase, and will play a useful part in the scheme of things so long as their readers regard them as no more than mere supplements to proper training. Lilli Lehmann's 'How to Sing'—'Meine Gesangkunst'—translated by Richard Aldrich, appears in a new, revised, and supplemented edition (Macmillan, 14s.). A work from such an authority, and one that has already been reprinted eight times, needs no bush. It is one of the most thoroughgoing treatises in existence—too thoroughgoing, perhaps. Can all those diagrams with red dotted lines denoting movements of the various organs, and indicating the vocal sensations of various parts of the register, lead to anything but self-consciousness in the student? And the even more complex pictorial representation of subtleties in diction? They may help a singer here and there, but the majority will find a better way to the goal by gumption and the simple rule of 'sing as you speak' (with the little modifications on which authorities generally are agreed). The book is an exposition of the unpopular gospel of hard work and thoroughness, and therefore has its value to-day when so many young singers try to interpret before they can sing.

It is tough reading: one has to bend the mind to it. But there is authority and practice behind it all, and the bending is well rewarded.

Another book entitled 'How to Sing'—this one by Luisa Tetrazzini (C. Arthur Pearson, 5s.). She deals almost entirely in generalities, expressed without distinction of any kind. There are complacent touches: 'Some fortunate ones, like myself, have voices which are quite perfectly placed by nature' . . . 'new Carusos, new Patis—and, shall I say it?—new Tetrazzinis.' And so forth. The omission of 'not' leads to the statement on p. 57 that 'You can really produce a tone in your face or in your throat.' A delightful non sequitur is on p. 29: 'Caruso was one of my greatest friends. But he gave little promise in his younger days of the wonderful career which was in store for him.' Madame puts up a goodish case for coloratura singing, but she apparently fails to see that there is a difference in values between the twiddles of Donizetti and the melismata of Bach. In the chapter 'How I sing an aria' we are taken through the Recit. and Polonaise from 'Mignon.' ('I ask myself what I might feel like were I able to become a fairy. Giving myself free rein . . .', &c.) It is good to find her describing the tremolo as a crime. Young singers who wobble, and think it is the swagger, prima-donna-like thing to do, nota bene!

W. S. Drew's 'Voice Training: the Relation of Theory and Practice,' is one of the excellent series of 'Oxford Musical Essays' (Milford, 3s. 6d.). A writer who sets out to treat of this subject in a mere seventy-five pages must be sorely exercised as to what to omit. And when he has decided, readers will agree that he has not decided for the best. As, however, they will disagree as to the way in which more profitable use could have been made of the narrow space, he needn't trouble over-much. Was it necessary to define singing? We might have taken it for granted, and so saved a couple of pages. One grudges, too, the seven given up to 'Identification of Notes and Quality of Sound,' in which the table of vibration numbers and other acoustical details seem to be of little practical use. The chapters on Interpretation and Teaching and 'The Singer in Relation to his Audience' might well have been longer. By the way, on p. 64 Mr. Drew falls foul of a setting of 'Blow, blow, thou winter wind' on the score of the accentuation in the refrain. He complains that the poet says 'This life is most jolly,' whereas the composer sets it in such a way that the singer has to deliver it 'This life is most jolly.' 'The contrast [says Mr. Drew] must surely be between different kinds of life, not between life and something else.' Not necessarily. It may of course be argued that Amiens was comparing the woodland life with that of the court, but the most reasonable way of looking at the song is to regard it as a characteristically misanthropic reflection with a conventional refrain tacked on by way of contrast. The word 'this' need not imply comparison. Next time Mr. Drew sets his teeth in a particularly juicy apple and says 'This apple is most delicious,' he will slightly stress 'apple' and 'delicious,' but he will not emphasise 'this,' unless he has just tried several apples and rejected them. In the chapter on 'The Singer in Relation to his Audience,' Mr. Drew says sensible things, though there are not enough of them. Young singers (and some old ones) need plenty of sage advice of this type. Mr. Drew puts the matter of naturalness and unaffectedness in its right light. It is hopeless to tell young singers they must be natural. How can they be, during such an ordeal as public appearance? As Mr. Drew says, 'The singer's object is not so much to be natural and unaffected as to appear so.' It is a matter of self-discipline. Every singer worth his salt is nervous, but the successful one is he who doesn't show it.

Those who like to read about the singer rather than about singing will find their modest needs met in 'Sunlight and Song: a Singer's Life' (Appleton), wherein Maria Jeritza tells us a great deal about herself and other people. Some of the facts are interesting—a few are almost important—but the volume generally is naive and egotistical, as such books are wont to be. There are many portraits, almost all of Jeritza in various rôles.

'Colour and Key,' by Jessie Field (Murdoch, 2s.), is a booklet written (its opening phrase tells us) 'not for clever people, but for some of that much larger number who, really loving music, find themselves hindered from playing by various difficulties and inabilities.' The author sets out to help these unclever folk, but some of her devices seem to be unnecessarily complicated, and the association of colours with certain notes of the scale is more picturesque than practical: tonic=blue; dominant=red; and subdominant=green. The writer has imagination and enthusiasm, and is eager to help, so the unclever ones for whom she writes may profit. Perhaps even a few of the clever ones on whom she frowns in her opening pages may benefit.

A fourteen page pamphlet called 'The Adeste Fideles,' by James Britten, summarises all that appears to be known of the words and music of that famous hymn (Blackfriars, Oxford; no price given).

'Pulpit and Platform Oratory,' by Harold Ford (Smith's Publishing Company, Temple House, E.C., 2s.). This is the fifth revised edition of a work dealing with a subject that at first sight appears to be outside the scope of musicians. But so many members of the profession are called on to speak in public as lecturers, adjudicators, &c., or to stand and deliver a few words on all sorts of occasions, that they cannot afford to neglect such good advice as is here provided. There are chapters on breathing and elementary voice training.

'Frederick Smetana,' by Zdeněk Nejedlý (Geoffrey Bles, 5s.), appears rightly during the centenary of the composer's birth. The book seems to be the first biography of Smetana in English, and as such has a value of its own. Smetana has many admirers in this country, and Mr. Nejedlý shows us that he is a good deal of a hero in his own: never, surely, was a more 'national' composer than Smetana. An aspect of his work that ought to be better known in England is his choral music. Smetana became choirmaster of the Prague 'Hlahol,' the largest Czech choral society, and brought its singing to a high level. The choral writing of a composer who did such practical work ought above all to be effective. It is a pity that so far no English versions seem to be available. The language bar is also the obstacle to our hearing his operas. An Overture so good as that of 'The Bartered Bride' makes one want to go farther. Perhaps this little book—a warm and pious tribute rather than a critical study—will help to open the road to a wider acquaintance with a fine composer. The author's English is plain and good, and none the worse for an occasional naivety.

E. Douglas Tayler's 'Mind Power in Music for Students, Teachers, and Performers' (Bosworth, 1s. 3d.) goes to the root of the matter. Performers who fail blame a hundred and one things, but rarely hit on the actual trouble—want of thought. One need do but very little examining of any kind to be aware of this fatal weakness among young musicians. This little book will put them in the right way. The style is homely and colloquial; there is the minimum of jargon—a mercy in a work dealing with psychology—and it leaves no withers unwrung, for in this matter of concentration we are all unprofitable servants.

H. G.

Wireless Notes

BY 'CALIBAN'

In last month's notes I expressed the view that wireless music had an advantage over that heard direct at the concert-hall in that the listener was free from distraction and in more intimate contact with the work itself. I am interested to see in the Radio Times of August 15 that something of the same sort was felt by Dame Clara Butt on the occasion of her first experience in broadcasting. We are told that the thought of the vast, unseen audience thrilled her as she had never been thrilled when singing to a visible audience in a packed Albert Hall. She says:

I confess it sounds like a psychological puzzle; it is, notwithstanding, true. There is a mighty dynamic in the sight of thousands of upturned faces. Yet, strangely enough, years ago I used to argue that a singer should sing unseen. Someone once told me that, in order to get the fullest enjoyment from a concert, it was necessary to shut one's eyes. It was an aid to concentration. People and their plaudits are all very well, but there is another side to all this. It is detrimental to the highest artistry in a subtle way. See! There are two people in yonder box, or in the front row of the stalls, whispering together in the very middle of my song. The mind slips a cog. For a flash one's whole artistic being is misdirected. One becomes acutely conscious of one's audience. The spell is broken; and it is difficult to piece it up again. Now, when I was singing to that vast, unseen multitude I had none of these antagonisms to fight against. Whatever of artistry there is in me had its perfect opportunity. I visualized my audience though I did not see it. There was no talking, no fidgeting, no coming in late, no going out early. It was a most perfect audience, the best-mannered audience I have ever sung to! I had often longed for the record audience, a record both in numbers and appreciation, and, lo, I had got it! I felt it in every nerve. I knew I was singing, for once, at least, from heart to heart—the only kind of singing worth while.

I regard this as a convincing reply to those who have been attacking wireless performances on the ground that an artist would be unable to give his best without the stimulus of a visible audience.

A capital symphony concert, despite rather a lot of ragged playing, was that given from the Studio on August 18. It was a good plan to afford so large a public an opportunity of hearing Beethoven's second Symphony. Miss Scharrer's group of Chopin Études was also an enjoyable feature. Curiously, I found the Rachmaninov Concerto more enjoyable than at Queen's Hall. I have never before heard so much of the detail in the pianoforte part of a concerto. The effect altogether was so good that I hope the Company will make a feature of pianoforte concertos during the coming winter. The form is one that is immensely popular, and I am confident that a large proportion of listeners would be glad to have a liberal supply on tap. It might be a good plan for the Company to confine itself less to the stock works than is usual at ordinary concerts. Mr. Scholes can put them up to some delightful examples that are rarely heard. These, alternated with familiar war-horses, would be very welcome.

A little grumble. We were naturally glad to have a Kneller Hall concert relayed, but we were let down rather badly in regard to the programme. It happened to be an awkward evening for me and for some musical visitors, but seeing that the band was announced to play a transcription of Bach's E flat Organ Fugue, familiarly known as the 'St. Anne' Fugue (but not founded on the tune 'St. Anne,' as the programme mistakenly said), we dodged to and from the set, disorganized the feeding arrangements, and generally put ourselves out. (As we found the programme was being altered right and left, we dared not trust the printed order.) When at last there seemed to be nothing remaining but the Fugue we lit our pipes and settled down. Whereupon there came the avuncular voice from the Studio: 'A telephone message has been received from Kneller Hall saying that owing to the length of the programme the Bach Fugue will be omitted.' I mention this in order that the B.B.C. may realise (as it no doubt does) that even a slight alteration in the order of a programme is a nuisance to a host of listeners. It really matters far more than does an alteration at a concert given in a hall. Seeing how much better the results of all performances are when heard direct from Savoy Hill, and that the timing and order, being under the Company's own control, can be looked after properly, I hope there will be less and less relaying from other places.

The B.B.C. is to be thanked for letting us hear the much-talked of 'Hyper-prism' of Edgar Varese. That it turned out to be a case of much cry and precious little wool is not the Company's fault. These new and queer manifestations of art must have a show lest there be one among them that we should be the poorer for missing. But the strange collection of noises brought together by Varese proved to be a damp squib. It was not thrilling, beautiful, or significant, and only faintly and fleetingly amusing. Certain cat-like sounds interested us—one instinctively looked round for a water-jug or a boot—but the 'lion's roar' was so mild as to suggest the gentle demonstration promised by Bully Bottom. Mr. Varese must do a long sight better than 'Hyper-prism' if he is to make us sit up.

Church and Organ Music

ROYAL COLLEGE OF ORGANISTS

Full particulars and the Syllabus of the Certificate Choir-Training Examination for those who do not hold the diploma of F.R.C.O. or A.R.C.O., to be held on November 5 and 6, 1924, may be obtained on application to the Registrar of the College.

Free lectures on Choir-Training will be given at the College on Monday, November 3, at 7.30 p.m., by Dr. H. W. Richards, on 'The General Principles of Choir-Training.'

Tuesday, November 4, at 3 p.m., by Dr. Keighley, on 'Mixed Choirs'; at 6 p.m., by Dr. Stanley Marchant, on 'Boys' Voices.'

Members and their friends are cordially invited. No tickets required.

H. A. HARDING, Hon. Secretary.

THE ALBERT HALL ORGAN

By GEORGE DIXON

Not long ago there appeared in this journal an historical article on the Royal Albert Hall, with a specification of the organ. As an entire reconstruction and enlargement of the instrument is now in progress, some account of what is being done may be of interest. In order that the new design may be more fully understood and appreciated, it is desirable in the first place to consider in some detail the salient features of the various departments of the old organ. It is probable that a good deal of what is to be said has not been generally realised. The Albert Hall organ, as every one knows, was built by the late Henry Willis, and was opened by W. T. Best in 1871. With all its limitations (and what these were we shall presently see) it was the greatest of the many great achievements of its builder. That it should have stood for over half a century without reconstruction, and should have remained in tolerable playing order up to the last, is convincing proof, if any were needed, of the soundness of its construction and design, as well as of the quality of its material and workmanship. Its freedom from serious derangement is the more remarkable when it is borne in mind that the Barker lever action employed in so large an organ involved the use in many cases of very lengthy tracker connections between the console and the sounding-boards. This is indeed eloquent testimony to Willis's excellent 'engineering' to which Grove referred. With one or two exceptions, it was well laid out considering the mechanical limitations imposed by the pneumatic lever action. Apart from its size—for it was among the largest organs of the world—it was renowned for the brilliancy of its chorus and reed work. On the other hand, it was well known for the almost complete absence of manual wood stops and of true diapason tone. With regard to the flutes, Willis is understood to have held at the time that better tone could be obtained from metal pipes. His later practice, however, differed in both cases, e.g., there are no fewer than three open wood claribels in the Lincoln Cathedral organ (1898).

The specification of the old Albert Hall instrument was given in the Musical Times for April, 1921, p. 232, but it may be of interest to supplement this by the wind-pressures, which have hitherto not been published:

Pedal Organ.—Flue-work, 3-in., 4-in., and 5-in. wind; Contra Posaune 32-ft., Contra Fagotto 16-ft., Trombone 16-ft., Fagotto 8-ft., and Clarion 8-ft., 10-in. wind; Ophicleide 16-ft., Bombard 16-ft., 20-in. wind.

Choir Organ.—Flue-work (except Violone), Cor Anglais, and Oboe, 3-in. wind; Violone, Corno di Bassetto, and Clarinet, 4-in. wind; Trompette Harmonique and Clarion, 5-in. wind.

Great Organ.—Flue-work, Contra Posaune 16-ft. and Posaune 8-ft., 5-in. wind in bass (24 notes) and 6-in. in treble; Trumpets and Trombas 8-ft. and 4-ft., 15-in. wind in bass (24 notes) and 24-in. in treble.

Swell Organ.—Flue-work, 4½-in. and 6-in. wind; Oboes and Vox Humanas, 5-in. wind; Chorus reeds 16-ft., 8-ft., and 4-ft., 10-in. wind; Tubas, 20-in. wind.

Solo Organ.—Flue-work, 5-in. wind; Corno di Bassetto, Clarinet, and Bassoon, 7-in. wind; French Horn and Oboe, 10-in. wind; Bombardon, Ophicleide, and Trombone, 15-in. wind; Tubas, 20-in. wind in bass (24 notes) and 24-in. in treble.

The use of so many wind-pressures, differing so widely, was much in advance of the time, no greater pressure than 24-in. having been used until 1898, when the Dome Tubas at St. Paul's were placed on 25-in. in the treble. The latter pressure was employed for the Tuba at Glasgow Cathedral in 1903 and at York Minster in 1916. So far it has only been exceeded in this country at Westminster Cathedral, where the Solo reed and the lowest octave of the Pedal 32-ft. reed speak on 30-in., but it is understood that the Tuba Magna at Liverpool Cathedral is to be on 50-in. The 24-in. reeds at the Albert Hall were typical of Willis's work at that period; to modern ears, however, they were rather rough in the bass and thin in the treble.

Before going into further details, the opinion of the late Henry Heathcote Statham, as given in his admirable book entitled 'The Organ and its Position in Musical Art,'* may well be quoted. On page 96 he says:

'Of the Albert Hall organ it may be said that, like the curate's boiled egg, parts of it are excellent. This is indeed faint praise, for there is hardly an organ to be found which offers to the player so great a variety of beautiful, contrasted effects of tone and timbre, in the soft stops and in the solo stops. It is when one comes to play large organ music in strict style that it becomes unsatisfactory. The Great organ has too little diapason and too much reed; its tone is noisy and yet deficient in weight and fullness, which is exactly the opposite of what is required to do justice to Bach's organ music. The same builder's great instrument at Liverpool, built some twenty years earlier, is far superior in this respect.'

Of the latter more anon. Now Mr. Statham's judgment may be safely accepted as quite unbiased. Nevertheless, he has probably exaggerated the extent of variety in the soft stops and solo registers. For instance, there were only two kinds of flute tone in the instrument, the harmonic and the lieblich. There were no fewer than fourteen harmonic flutes, promiscuously labelled, but almost identical in quality and similar in power. Much the same criticism applies to the clarinets and the various stops called Bassoon, Orchestral Oboe, Cor Anglais, &c., which were nearly all alike, both in construction and tone-quality. In fact it was really a case of wasted opportunity. Mr. Statham, however, was an enthusiastic admirer of Willis's work, and knew the Albert Hall organ intimately, for he gave frequent recitals there in its early days. Though a conservative critic, his writings on the organ, which extended over a number of years, always seemed to express the modern spirit of interpretation—e.g., his fine article on 'Registration' in the original (1879) edition of 'Grove.'

In reviewing the old Albert Hall organ, the Pedal must first be considered. It was chiefly remarkable for the wealth of 32-ft. tone. There are no less than three open flue stops in this pitch, of which two are of tin and stand in the front. Willis's description tells us that all the front pipes are made of tin 90 and lead 10 in 100 parts; but he was a little better than his word, for chemical analysis reveals the fact that as much as 91.5 per cent. of tin was used. He quaintly adds, 'The inside pipes belonging to those stops which contribute to the front are similarly shaped in mouth, body, and foot.' What such a tin front would cost in these days can only be surmised; yet it is more than probable that if these big pipes had been made of stout zinc their tonal effect and durability would have been considerably greater.

It may be noted that there was scarcely any perceptible difference in quality and power between these two stops. Away from the organ the 16-ft. tone was weak for an instrument of this size, and was further dwarfed by the abundance of 32-ft. and the assertive upper work. The latter peculiarity may have been due to the prominent position occupied by the Pedal chorus stops in the side arches of the front. Apart altogether from the relative want of 16-ft. tone, the Pedal, like all other English examples, lacked the variety of soft and expressive basses upon which Casson laid such stress and showed us how to obtain. The old 32-ft. reed with wood tubes was intractable, owing probably to the comparatively low wind-pressure. Though there was 24-in. wind in the organ to draw on, only 10-in. was used for this stop. In other cases Willis employed considerably less. The double reed on the Pedal at St. Paul's speaks on approximately 6-ins., and is practically inaudible in the full. The last time the writer met him, Willis proudly exhibited a sample pipe of the metal 32-ft. reed for the new Colston Hall organ at Bristol. It was voiced on about 7-in. wind. On the remark being made that it was rather quiet, the old man characteristically replied, 'I don't like those big blurring 32-ft. reed effects.' Perhaps he had in mind the Hope-Jones diaphone. Nevertheless, the stop as he left it proved quite useless and was his last attempt, for the 32-ft. reed in Lincoln Cathedral, on 15 (or more) ins., was not inserted until two or three years after his death.

As regards the manuals, the Choir organ was probably the most satisfactory of any. Its Open Diapason was a singularly pleasing specimen. Though the Mixture had only three ranks, the number of 4-ft. and 2-ft. registers was remarkable, giving a peculiarly piquant effect. As usual it contained unenclosed orchestral registers, and—a very rare feature—two chorus reeds in addition. Both were labelled 'Harmonique,' but had single length pipes throughout! About half the stops were intended to represent the unenclosed Echo organ, and were voiced accordingly.

Reference has already been made to the Great organ flue-work, which was the most unsatisfactory feature of the whole instrument. In the first place there was an imposing array of four 16-ft. flue stops, but not a Diapason among them. The number is somewhat remarkable, since in his largest Great organs, save in one or two instances, Willis never inserted more than a single flue double. Even the 25-stop Great at St. George's Hall, Liverpool, contains but one.* True diapason tone was unrepresented in the Albert Hall Great. Out of six 8-ft. registers two only bear that title, and these are extreme examples of a type which Willis affected during what may be termed the middle period of his career. After the lapse of half a century the following characteristic story may perhaps be told. The Albert Hall organ had been completed, and Best had to pass it. Willis was playing (for he was quite a competent performer), while Best listened in the body of the Hall. After a time Best stopped him saying, 'Now, Mr. Willis, let me hear the Great diapasons.' Willis drew the two stops so named and proceeded. Best very soon again stopped him, saying, 'No, Mr. Willis, I said I wanted to hear the "diapasons."' Willis fumbled among the knobs and continued. Best at once stopped him peremptorily. 'No, Mr. Willis,' he said, 'I asked for diapasons and not your — gambas.' Willis turned to a friend who was standing by, and remarked, 'Not Best but Beast!' Though many of his organs built during the next twenty years contained the Albert Hall type of diapason, this objectionable feature was eliminated in the work of his latter days. At St. Alban's, Holborn (1896), Lincoln Cathedral (1898), and St. Bees Priory Church (1899), for example, the diapason tone, though light, is altogether beautiful. Of the other 8-ft. flute stops the Gamba and Flûte à Pavillon are worthy of mention. Mr. Statham described them as two of the finest stops Willis ever voiced.† Certainly the Gamba was keen, and must have been a revelation in times long before Thynne introduced the modern method of voicing small-scaled Viols. Moreover, it was quite different from the slow speaking Schulze productions, beautiful as they were. Unfortunately that kind of colour only served to accentuate the shortcomings of the Great organ. The same may be said of the so-called Flûte à Pavillon, of which there was another example on the Solo. This class of tone seemed to dominate the whole of the Great, and gave it that objectionably keen character by which it was so well-known—a feature quite unsuited to the building. Anyone who has compared it with the flue work of the Liverpool instrument must have been struck, as Mr. Statham says, with the vastly superior effect of the latter. The Great there contains four Open Diapasons (one of wood), and the combinations up to Fifteenth and Mixtures are entirely beautiful in quality and at the same time very brilliant. In heavy reeds, however, the Albert Hall was superior. Before leaving the Great it may be of interest to give the composition of the two compound stops:

* Published by Chapman & Hall, London, 1909.

* A Double Open Diapason metal 16-ft. † Op. cit., p. 143, note

THE NEW CONSOLE. PHOTOGRAPHED IN THE FACTORY

Photo [y]

[John R. Edis, Durham

MIXTURE—5 RANKS

CC to B, 24 notes, 8, 12, 15, 19, 22.

C to G, 8 notes, 1, 8, 12, 15, 19.

G♯ to C, 29 notes, 1, 8, 12, 15, 19.

SESQUIALTERA—5 RANKS

CC to G, 32 notes, 8, 15, 17, 19, 22.

G♯ to C, 17 notes, 1, 8, 15, 17, 19.

C♯ to C, 12 notes, 1, 8, 12, 15, 19.

The Swell was the least effective department, the crescendo being weak. Some of the 16-ft. Pedal stops, for no very obvious reason, stood immediately in front of it and obstructed the egress of tone. As is well known, the Swell was situated in a room behind the organ, and there it will remain.

The design of the fourth manual was remarkable because it displayed a serious attempt to build up a tonal structure of a definite character, instead of being the usual fortuitous collection of solo stops thrown together haphazard. With the exception of five orchestral reeds it stood in the open. Reference has already been made to the splendour of the solo Tubas. Indeed the reed work throughout, as with Willis always, was the most striking feature; yet with all its magnificence, how little variety there was! E.g., the Great Posaune and the Choir Trompette Harmonique (sic) differed but slightly. The Tromba and Harmonic Trumpet on the Great and the Tuba Mirabilis on the Solo were practically identical. Again, the Solo Ophicleide and Trombone on 15-in. wind were scarcely distinguishable.

But this defect was common to all organs of every make up to twenty or twenty-five years ago. The heavy-pressure reeds with which Willis's name and fame are indissolubly bound up were voiced with closed shallots, the tongues being loaded with weights in their lower octaves; but he failed to envisage the further development of this method, which has given us the variety of smooth reed tone we now possess. It is only right, however, to point out that the French Horn on the Albert Hall Solo was a creditable attempt for 1871. It must also be remembered that toward the end of his career he inserted comparatively smooth-toned Trombas as Great organ chorus reeds with fine effect—very different from the ordinary builder's keened-toned trumpets. In this, as in most other respects, he stood head and shoulders above his contemporaries. The drawback was that his Swell cornopeans became almost identical in timbre with the Great reeds, whereas fiery trumpet tone would there have been the more acceptable. The lack of tonal differentiation in chorus reeds persisted for the most part until recent times. For instance, up to 1916 the Trumpet and Horn in the York Minster Swell were only distinguishable by the fact that the latter was somewhat keener than the former.

We have in some respects been looking at the old Albert Hall organ through 20th century spectacles, which serves to remind us of the great progress in tonal matters and in mechanism that has been made since Willis died nearly a quarter of a century ago. Making all allowances for the time at which it was built, it was an instrument of superb construction, and a monument to his genius. No expense was spared. The pure tin front has already been alluded to, and we need only mention two other points—the extent to which separate sounding-boards and varied wind-pressures were employed. These features were unique, but costly.

The Albert Hall organ was the biggest and most notable instrument in the metropolis, and it is significant that it was decided to entrust the work of rebuilding and enlarging it to Messrs. Harrison & Harrison, of Durham. Of the many large and important organs built or rebuilt in this country during the last twenty years, the great majority have been done by this eminent firm. To speak of no others, the following Cathedral instruments are to be noted: Durham, 1905; Belfast, 1906; Carlisle, 1907; Ely, 1908; Wells, 1909; Glasgow (St. Mary's), 1909; Newcastle, 1911; Ripon, 1912; Down, 1914; York, 1916; Manchester, 1916; Gloucester, 1920; Oxford, 1922; and Worcester, now being rebuilt. Such a pre-eminence was not established even by Willis for years after the Albert Hall organ was built. Apart from excellence of mechanism, their instruments are celebrated for the fine diapason work and scientifically developed chorus, for the remarkable variety not only of flue stops but of reeds, and above all for the beautiful finish and regularity of the voicing—a most essential point in which Willis also excelled.

The following scheme of reconstruction and enlargement was prepared by Mr. Arthur Harrison nearly five years ago. It virtually amounts to the construction of a new organ, incorporating all that is of value in the original instrument.

SPECIFICATION

There will be six manual departments controlled from four key-boards, CC to C, 61 notes, and two and a half octaves of concave and radiating pedals, CCC to G, 32 notes; 146 speaking stops and 30 couplers, &c., making a total of 176 drawstops.

PEDAL ORGAN, 36 Stops, 4 Couplers.

	FT.
1. Acoustic Bass (20 from No. 2; lower 12 acoustic) ...	Wood 64
2. Double Open Wood ...	32
3. Double Open Diapason ...	Metal 32
4. Contra Violone (from No. 64) ...	32
5. Double Quint (from Nos. 3 & 9) ...	21½
6. Open Wood I. ...	Wood 16
7. Open Wood II. (20 from No. 2) ...	16
8. Open Diapason I. ...	Metal 16
9. Open Diapason II. (20 from No. 3) ...	16
10. Violone ...	16
11. Sub-Bass ...	Wood 15
12. Salicional (from No. 37) ...	Metal 16
13. Viole (from No. 48) in Choir box ...	16
14. Quint ...	10½
15. Octave Wood (20 from No. 6) ...	Wood 8
16. Principal (20 from No. 8) ...	Metal 8
17. Violoncello ...	8
18. Flute ...	Wood 8
19. Octave Quint ...	Metal 5½

	FT.
20. Super Octave ...	Metal 4
21. Harmonics, 10, 12, 15, 17, 19, 21, 22 ...	—
22. Mixture, 15, 19, 22, 26, 29, in Solo box ...	—
23. Double Ophicleide (20 from No. 25) ...	32
24. Double Trombone (20 from No. 27) in Swell box ...	Wood 32
25. Ophicleide ...	Metal 16
26. Bombard ...	16
27. Trombone, in Swell box ...	Wood 16
28. Fagotto ...	Metal 16
29. Trumpet (from No. 115) in Swell box ...	16
30. Clarinet (from No. 60) in Choir box ...	16
31. Bassoon (from No. 129) in Solo box ...	16
32. Quint Trombone ...	10½
33. Posaune (20 from No. 25) ...	8
34. Clarion ...	8
35. Octave Posaune (20 from Nos. 25 & 33) ...	4
36. Drums

I. Choir to Pedal.
II. Great to Pedal.
III. Swell to Pedal.
IV. Solo to Pedal.

CHOIR AND ORCHESTRAL ORGAN, 27 Stops. Tremulant and 5 Couplers. First division (Choir), unenclosed, 11 Stops.

	FT.		FT.
37. Double Salicional Metal 16		43. Lieblich Flute ...	Metal 4
38. Open Diapason ...	8	44. Flageolet ...	2
39. Lieblich Gedeckt ...	8	45. Mixture, 12, 19, 22 ...	—
40. Viola da Gamba ...	8	46. Trumpet (harmonic)	8
41. Dulciana ...	8	47. Clarion ...	4
42. Gemshorn ...	4

Second division (Orchestral), enclosed in a Swell box, 16 Stops.

	FT.		FT.
48. Contre Viole ...	Metal 16	56. Quintatön Wood & Metal	16
49. Violoncello ...	8	57. Harmonic Flute	Metal 8
50. Viole d'Orchestre I. ...	8	58. Concert Flute ...	4
51. Viole d'Orchestre II. ...	8	59. Harmonic Piccolo ...	2
52. Viole Sourdine ...	8	60. Double Clarinet ...	16
53. Violes Célestes, 2 ranks ...	8	61. Clarinet ...	8
54. Viole Octavante ...	4	62. Orchestral Hautboy ...	8
55. Cornet de Violes, 12, 15, 17, 19, 22 ...	—	63. Cor Anglais ...	8

V. Tremulant
VI. Octave
VII. Sub-Octave
VIII. Unison Off
IX. Swell to Choir
X. Solo to Choir

to second division only.

N.B.—The Orchestral division will be playable on either Choir or Solo key-board by means of a rocking switch on the Choir key-slip.

GREAT ORGAN, 31 Stops, 4 Couplers.

	FT.		FT.
64. Contra Violone Metal 32		81. Viola ...	Metal 4
65. Double Open Diapason ...	16	82. Harmonic Flute ...	4
66. Contra Gamba ...	16	83. Octave Quint ...	2½
67. Bourdon Wood & Metal 16		84. Super Octave ...	2
68. Double Claribel Flute Wood 16		85. Fifteenth ...	2
69. Open Diapason I. Metal 8		86. Harmonics, 10, 15, 17, 19, 21, 22 ...	—
70. Open Diapason II. ...	8	87. Mixture, 8, 12, 15, 19, 22 ...	—
71. Open Diapason III. ...	8	88. Cymbale, 19, 22, 26, 29, 31, 33, 36 ...	—
72. Open Diapason IV. ...	8	89. Contra Tromba ...	16
73. Open Diapason V. ...	8	90. Tromba (harmonic) ...	8
74. Geigen ...	8	91. Octave Tromba (harmonic) ...	8
75. Viola da Gamba ...	8	92. Posaune ...	8
76. Hohl Flute ...	Wood 8	93. Harmonic Trumpet ...	8
77. Harmonic Flute Metal 8		94. Harmonic Clarion ...	4
78. Quint ...	5½
79. Octave ...	4
80. Principal ...	4

XI. Reeds on Choir.
XII. Choir to Great.
XIII. Swell to Great.
XIV. Solo to Great.

SWELL ORGAN, 25 Stops. Tremulant and 3 Couplers.

	FT.		FT.
95. Double Open Diapason Metal 16		105. Harmonic Flute Metal 4
96. Bourdon Wood & Metal 16		106. Octave Quint ...	4
97. Open Diapason Metal 8		107. Super Octave ...	2
98. Viola da Gamba ...	8	108. Harmonic Piccolo ...	2
99. Salicional ...	8	109. Mixture, 8, 12, 15, 19, 22 ...	—
100. Vox Angelica ...	8	110. Furniture, 15, 19, 22, 26, 29 ...	—
101. Flûte à Cheminée ...	8	111. Contra Oboe ...	16
102. Claribel Flute Wood & Metal 8		112. Oboe ...	8
103. Principal ...	Metal 4	113. Baryton ...	16
104. Viola ...	4	114. Vox Humana ...	8

XV. Tremulant.
XVI. Octave.
XVII. Sub-Octave.
XVIII. Solo to Swell.

	FT.		FT.
115. Double Trumpet Metal 15		118. Tuba (harmonic) Metal 8
116. Trumpet (harmonic trebles) ...	8	119. Tuba Clarion (harmonic) ...	4
117. Clarion (harmonic trebles) ...	4

SOLO AND BOMBARD ORGAN, 27 Stops, and 7 Couplers.

First division (Solo), in a Swell box, 17 Stops, Tremulant and 3 Couplers.

	FT.		FT.
120. Contra-Bass		128. Piccolo Traverso Metal	2
Wood & Metal	16	129. Double Bassoon	16
121. Flûte à Pavillon Metal	8	130. Corno di Bassetto	8
122. Viole d'Amour	8	131. Hautboy	8
123. Doppel Flute	8	132. Bassoon	8
124. Harmonic Claribel		133. Double Horn	16
Flute ... ..	8	(harmonic) ... ..	16
125. Unda Maris (2 ranks)		134. French Horn	8
Wood & Metal	8	(harmonic) ... ..	8
126. Wald Flute	4	135. Carillons
127. Flauto Traverso Metal	4	136. Tubular Bells

XXIX. Tremulant.

XX. Octave.

XXI. Sub-Octave.

XXII. Unison Off.

Second division (Bombard), 10 Stops and 4 Couplers.

137. Bombardon	Metal 16	141. Quint Trumpet Metal	5½
138. Tuba (harmonic)	8	142. Orchestral Clarion	4
139. Orchestral Trumpet	8	(harmonic) ... ..	4
(harmonic) ... ..	8	143. Sesquialtera, 12, 15,
140. Cornopean	8	17, 19, 22
(harmonic trebles),	8

Nos. 137 to 143 in a Swell box.

144. Contra Tuba	Metal 16	146. Tuba Clarion	4
(harmonic) ... ..	16	(harmonic) ... ..	4
145. Tuba Mirabilis	8
(harmonic) ... ..	8

XXIII. Tubas on Choir.

XXIV. Octave.

XXV. Sub. Octave.

XXVI. Unison Off.

N.B.—The Bombard division will be playable on either Solo or Choir key-board by means of a rocking switch on the Solo key-slip.

COMBINATION COUPLERS.

XXVII. Pedal and accompaniment to Choir pistons.

XXVIII. Great and Pedal combinations coupled.

XXIX. Pedal to Swell pistons.

XXX. Pedal and accompaniment to Solo pistons.

ACCESSORIES

Nine combination pedals to the Pedal organ.
Two adjustable combination pedals to the Pedal organ.
Five combination pistons to the unenclosed division of the Choir organ.
Seven combination pistons to the enclosed (Orchestral) division of the Choir organ.
Nine combination pistons to the Great organ.
Nine combination pistons to the Swell organ.
Seven combination pistons to the first division of the Solo organ.
Six combination pistons to the second (Bombard) division of the Solo organ.
Eight adjustable combination pistons, two to each manual.
Rocking-switch, Orchestral division of Choir organ to Solo key-board.
Rocking-switch, Bombard division of Solo organ to Choir keyboard.
Reversible piston to No. 25.
Reversible pedal to Great to Pedal.
Reversible piston to Great to Pedal.
Reversible piston to Solo to Pedal.
Reversible piston to Swell to Great.
Reversible piston to Solo to Great.
Three reversible foot pistons to Orchestral, Swell, and Solo Tremulants.
Three balanced crescendo pedals to Orchestral, Swell, and Solo organs.

WIND-PRESSURES

Pedal flue-work, 3-in. to 10-in.; reeds, 5-in. to 30-in. (Ophicleides and Posaune).
Choir, unenclosed division, flue-work, 4-in.; reeds, 5-in.
Choir, Orchestral division, flue-work, 10-in.; reeds, 5-in.
Great flue-work, 5-in. and 6-in.; reeds, Posaune, 12-in.; Trombas and Trumpets, 25-in.
Swell flue-work and orchestral reeds, 5-in. and 6-in.; chorus reeds, 10-in.; Tubas, 20-in.
Solo, first division, flue-work, 6-in.; orchestral reeds, 10-in.; Horns, 25-in.
Solo, second (Bombard) division, Sesquialtera, 10-in.; enclosed reeds, 20-in. and 25-in.; unenclosed Tubas, 30-in.
Action, 7-in. to 20-in.

The draw-stop jamps will be at an angle of 30 degrees to the keyboards, and fitted with ivory bushes. The stop-handles will be of solid ivory, the speaking stops being lettered in black, and the couplers, &c. (indicated above by italics), in red. The latter will be grouped with the speaking stops of the departments they augment. The combination pistons will have solid ivory heads.

The builders' latest system of electro-pneumatic mechanism will be applied to all the action, except the manual to pedal couplers which will be mechanical.

The organ will be tuned to the new French pitch, i.e., C=517 vibrations per second at 60 degrees F.

The enclosed division of the Solo organ will be placed in a new chamber specially constructed alongside the existing Swell chamber. The Swell box containing the Orchestral division of the Choir organ will be placed within the organ-case.

The blowing apparatus, which has already been installed, consists of three of the largest three-stage 'Discus' blowers (Messrs. Watkins & Watson's patent), which supply all wind up to 30-in. pressure, and two rotary compressors supplying wind up to 30-in. pressure. Two of the 'Discus' blowers are connected in tandem, and direct-coupled to a 10 h.p. electric motor. The other is direct-coupled to a 5-h.p. motor. The rotary compressors are belt-driven by two 8-h.p. motors. These motors are controlled by automatic shunt regulators, which vary the speed according to the demand on the wind, and, therefore, like the 'Discus' blowers, consume current in proportion to the wind used. The cost of current for blowing this large organ is approximately 2s. 6d. per hour. The whole plant has been supplied by Messrs. Watkins & Watson. It is the largest ever undertaken by this firm, and is probably the most powerful in the country.

Speaking generally, the first point that will strike even the most casual reader is the completeness of the tonal structure in every department. Excluding separate mutation registers, there are ten compound stops comprising no fewer than fifty-three ranks of pipes, which is decidedly in advance of anything ever proposed before, at any rate in this country. Taking the scheme as a whole, it is believed that nothing so complete has ever appeared—not even the Great Wanamaker organ across the water, although it contains over 230 speaking stops, including 92 ranks of Mixtures. The number of manuals remains the same, for it has been found by experience that the supposed advantages of the fifth key-board can be obtained more conveniently by manual subdivisions, of which there are six—or, rather, seven, for the unenclosed Tuba department on 30-in. wind is virtually independent of the enclosed Bombard, an important point the significance of which must not be overlooked.

We will now examine each division and note the salient features. Taking the Pedal first, a large increase of the 16-ft. flue-work will be observed. The variety of softer registers, obtained by the almost universally approved method of borrowing from manual doubles, will be appreciated. Several stops are to be enclosed in the various Swell boxes. Among these will be noticed the old 32-ft. reed, which, together with a 16-ft. extension, will be put on 20-in. wind instead of 10-in. as before, and will form the true basis of the full Swell, as in Messrs. Harrison's organ at St. Mary Redcliffe, Bristol (1912), where this plan was first adopted. Furthermore, the Pedal is to be supplemented by a new unenclosed metal 32-ft. reed of great grandeur, on 30-in. wind, and this will be reinforced by the extremely rare, if not unique, reed Quint of 10½-ft. pitch. The compound stops will be augmented to include a very complete series of Harmonics of seven ranks, and a pure Mixture of five ranks to be enclosed with the Bombard division.

On the first manual in the unenclosed division, or Choir organ proper, the tonal scheme of the flue-work is rather limited when compared with the rest of the instrument. In an organ of this size one would have expected to find at least another 4-ft. stop and five ranks of Mixture—say, 12, 15, 17, 19, 22. Perhaps exigencies of space may have precluded further additions, for it is only fair to say that the development of the Choir on the lines of a miniature full Great is due to Messrs. Harrison more than anyone else—witness some of their larger tonal schemes where the Choir organ comprises both mixture and chorus reed. It is a curious fact that it should be almost impossible on English instruments, even of the first magnitude, to render such pure organ music as, say, the 'Dorian Toccata' in the manner evidently intended by Bach, according to the directions given. What is required is a bolder conception of the Choir as a secondary Great organ. Mr. Statham evidently considered this an important point in the playing of Bach's music.* (At Worcester Cathedral an effort is being made to meet the difficulty by arranging for four of the lighter Great flue stops to be transferred to the Choir at the player's discretion.) The second division of the Choir manual is a beautifully designed orchestral organ, consisting of complete families of strings, flutes, and wood-wind. The string family of eight, including a compound stop of five ranks, will be the finest in this country. The orchestral scheme of the fourth manual at Ely Cathedral is considerably smaller.

The most important changes in tonal character have been made on the Great. In the first place a metal 32-ft. stop has been provided by utilising one of the Pedal 32-ft. opens that stand in the front. When this was planned it was thought to be the only example of a manual 32-ft. metal\* stop open throughout, but it has since become known that one will be inserted in Messrs. Willis & Lewis's new organ for Liverpool Cathedral. It is not a little strange that when the Liverpool scheme was first published in 1912 the inclusion of such a register was derided on the ground that a 64-ft. Pedal stop also would be required.† The same argument would exclude all manual doubles until the 32-ft. appeared on the Pedal. It is worthy of note that there has been a complete example of a stopped 32-ft. register on the Great at Ely since 1908. Among the 16-ft. stops on the Albert Hall Great there is now to be a Double Open Diapason. The pipes of the old Pedal Open Diapason (metal) will be used for this purpose, and a new Pedal stop of much bigger scale inserted in place of it. Three new 8-ft. diapasons will be added, one of large scale, one slightly smaller with a  $\frac{2}{3}$  mouth, and one of more normal type, and the two old stops will be re-voiced with a view to obtaining more variety. In order to balance these additions to the diapason work, another Principal is to be added and the chorus increased to eighteen ranks, which is much beyond anything contemplated up to the present time. An equal number of mixture ranks might possibly be found on the Great manuals in some of the older Continental instruments, but they would rarely if ever include the intervals of the tenth, seventeenth, and twenty-first. The seven-rank Cymbale was originally on the Solo, but it is much more in the picture on the Great. There will be six chorus reeds as before. The three new Trombas are to be of the builders' well-known distinctive type, and the Harmonic Trumpet and Clarion will be re-voiced. Personally the writer would have preferred to see the latter relegated to the unenclosed Tuba department, but as it is the Great will scarcely be over-reeded. It should be mentioned that all the old reed pipes retained will be re-voiced throughout with new tongues, the fullest advantage being taken of the latest developments in reed voicing. The brass of the old tongues has been found to be very soft.

* P. 80, note, 'My Thoughts on Music and Musicians,' by H. Heathcote Statham. Chapman & Hall, London, 1892.

On paper the Swell has been unaltered except for the substitution of a Vox Angelica for the Quint and a reconstitution of the Mixtures, but considerable improvement may be looked for in tonal effect.

Great changes, however, will be made in the fourth manual, which also is to be subdivided. In the first place, with the exception of the family of Tubas on 30-in. wind, the whole of the two other departments will be enclosed in a new chamber situated at the back of the organ alongside the Swell. The first division, the Solo proper, will contain a number of new stops. Its wood-wind will include a pair of French Horns voiced on the latest method, whereby the peculiar quality of the orchestral instrument is closely imitated. The Bombard department will be a novelty in this country, and will consist of a foundation of very powerful reed stops (including a Quint) of varied quality, and a big Mixture, all on heavy wind-pressure. The only other British example of a Quint reed now extant is on the Swell at Ely. At the opposite end of the scale from the Solo Horns are the Orchestral Trumpet and Clarion on 25-in. wind, which will represent the extreme type of open reed tone. Apart from the use of its individual registers for solo purposes, the Bombard will be capable of some striking and novel crescendo effects, and will serve to bridge the gap between the full Great and the unenclosed Tubas. The original conception of an unenclosed division consisting entirely of reeds and mixture work was French, and goes back probably to the first half of last century, but the wind-pressure used was light. The germ of the modern idea lay in the mixtures and heavy-pressure Swell reeds of the late Henry Willis. The first to propose an independent enclosed department consisting entirely of powerful reeds and mixtures, both on heavy wind, was the late T. C. Lewis, whose scheme for the organ at the People's Palace, Mile End Road (c. 1887), comprised 16-, 8-, and 4-ft. reeds, together with a Mixture, all on about 12-in. wind, enclosed in the Swell box. These stops could be played independently from either the Great or Swell keyboards. The same plan was strongly advocated by the late Carlton C. Michell. Well-developed Bombard divisions exist in the organ at St. Paul's Church, Toronto (the reed work of which was made and voiced in England), and at Johannesburg Town Hall. But until now there has been no complete example in this country. The Johannesburg instrument, designed by Dr. Alfred Hollins, contains on the Bombard not only a Quint reed but also a 32-ft. reed to tenor C—probably the only manual reed of this pitch in the world. In the revised scheme for Liverpool Cathedral there are four enclosed Solo Trombas on 20-in. wind, but no affiliated mixture work, and a subdivision of the fifth manual, called the Bombarde, includes a compound stop of ten ranks on 6-in. wind and four Tubas—three on 30-in. and a Tuba Magna on 50-in. wind. As the whole will stand in the open it would appear to be the apotheosis of the early French type. It is really an enlarged St. Paul's Cathedral Tuba department plus a complete organ (for such is the 'Grand Chorus') in flue-work. Apart from the absence of the thrilling crescendo, it will not be possible, as at the Albert Hall, to realise the superb contrast of the blaze of pure Mixture work against the golden glory of the tuba tone, for at Liverpool these will be inseparable. The unenclosed Tuba organ at the Albert Hall can be played from the Choir keyboard independently altogether of the enclosed Bombard division—a valuable feature the importance of which will now be realised.

The mechanism of the instrument will be electro-pneumatic. Owing to the great and varied distances to be traversed in so large an organ, this form is obviously more suitable for the purpose than tubular pneumatic. The console will remain in its old position. It is beautifully laid out, the grouping of the draw-knobs being very clear and systematic. On the right are the Great, Solo and Bombard, and Pedal. On the left, the Swell, Choir, and Orchestral. The reeds are separated from the flue-work, and the couplers (except those of the Pedal) are grouped with the departments they augment. In spite of the great size of the instrument, the control should be simple and easy to manipulate, for every accessory will be within comfortable reach of the player. It is satisfactory to know that the pitch is being lowered to normal diapason. In recent years the high pitch of the old organ became very inconvenient. Except for the cleaning of the front, the external appearance of the organ will not be altered. It is understood that the whole of the Great and Swell, and thirty stops of the Pedal (excluding only the five-rank Mixture and those stops borrowed from the Choir and Solo departments) will be completed and in use before the end of the year.

A word must be said about the fine electric blowing plant by Messrs. Watkins & Watson. It was installed a year or two ago and replaced the original Willis air pumps and feeders, driven by steam power. The only important change to be made is the reversing of the action of the vacuum apparatus in order to augment the heavy pressure supply. The drawstop action was originally worked by suction, but in the new organ this method will be abolished.

When first erected the Albert Hall organ was considered to be the finest in the world. If the reputation achieved by the Durham firm and the artistic scheme they have produced are any guide, its restoration to that proud position may be confidently expected.

In conclusion the writer desires to express his indebtedness to Mr. H. M. Wilkinson, second master of Durham School, for the chemical analysis of the tin front, and to Mr. Arthur Harrison for much information without which the preparation of this article would have been impossible.

* There is, however, a complete 32-ft. Double Diapason wood open throughout on the Great manual in the organ at St. Mary's Church, East Parade, Bradford, built by Annesens in 1888. There appears to have been a similar stop, also on the Great, in the Italian Church, Hatton Garden, London, by the same builder, but it is understood that this was removed during reconstruction by another firm.

† The Cathedral instrument will now contain this stop also, borrowed from the 32-ft. open wood, the lowest twelve notes being acoustic, as at the Albert Hall.

Readers who wish for a complete specification of the Liverpool Cathedral organ may obtain one by applying to Messrs. Henry Willis & Sons & Lewis & Co., Ferndale Road, S.W.9, enclosing 3d. in stamps to cover postage, &c.

At St. John's College, Hurstpierpoint, on July 13, the choir gave a recital, singing Motets by Dubois and Widor, Parry's 'England,' and a faux-bourdon setting of the Canticles by Tallis. One of the Widor Motets, 'Regina Cœli,' is for a body of tenors and basses mainly in unison, accompanied by two choirs in four-part harmony, organ, and orchestra. Instrumental items included Handel's Concerto in B flat for full orchestra. Mr. Horace Hawkins directed the concert, assisted by Mr. T. Church Saxby, the latter conducting the Motets.

The hundredth recital of the series given at the Parish Church, Brighton, by Dr. Chastey Hector and the choir, consisted of English music of c. 1824-1924. The choir sang Clarke-Whitfield's 'Behold, how good and joyful,' Attwood's 'Turn Thee again, O Lord,' Harwood's 'O how glorious is the kingdom,' and Holst's 'Turn back, O man.' Dr. Hector played Thomas Adams's Overture, three pieces by Samuel Wesley, Norman Cocker's 'Tuba Tune,' and three pieces he had himself written for the occasion—'Cantilena,' 'Exultation,' and 'Réverie.'

The organ at Haslingden Parish Church was reopened on July 9, when Mr. H. Goss Custard gave a recital. His programme included Lemare's March Solenne, the Prelude to 'Parsifal,' Bach's Prelude and Fugue in D, the Finale from Vienne's first Symphony, and the Largo and Finale from the 'New World' Symphony. The rebuilding of the organ has been carried out by Messrs. Henry Willis & Sons and Lewis & Co., and the instrument is now a four-manual of forty-eight speaking stops and nineteen couplers.

At the Jubilee Commemoration of St. Mary Magdalene's, Ashton-upon-Mersey, on July 22, the Bishop of Chester dedicated a new pulpit and font. Mr. G. W. Harris Sellick, organist of the Church, gave two recitals, his programmes including Bach's Toccata and Fugue in D minor and Prelude and Fugue in D, Brewer's 'Marche Héroïque,' Parry's Fantasia and Fugue, Bairstow's 'Evening Song,' and the Finale from Vienne's first Symphony.

We are glad to see that the statement of accounts of the Southwark Diocesan Plainsong Association shows the Society to be clear of debt. A good deal more financial support must be forthcoming, however, if the Association is to continue and develop its excellent work. Those interested and willing to help in any way should write to the hon. secretary and treasurer, Mr. Godfrey Sceats, 18, Ballina Street, S.E. 23.

The Kingsway Hall organ is being renovated and enlarged by Messrs. Hill & Son and Norman & Beard. The additions will consist of a fourth manual and a set of chimes and timpani. The work will be completed early in September.

We have received the programme of the Congress of the National Union of Organists' Association, which takes place at Newcastle-on-Tyne on September 1, 2, 3, and 4. A very attractive series of events is promised. A report will appear in our October issue.

A selection from the B minor Mass will be sung at St. Nicholas Cole Abbey on Tuesday, September 30, at 1 p.m. The soloists will be Miss Gertrude Dunthorne, Miss Doris Evans, Mr. Bruce Flegg, and Mr. Topliss Green.

Messrs. Rushworth & Dreaper have recently completed an organ for the Dutch Reformed Church, Warden, Orange Free State—a two-manual of seventeen speaking stops and thirteen pistons.

ORGAN RECITALS

Mr. F. G. M. Ogbourne, Parish Church of St. Andrew, Holborn—Toccata in F, Bach; Sonata No. 6, Mendelssohn; Pastorale (Symphony No. 2), Widor.

Mr. Cyril S. Christopher, Ebenezer Baptist Church, Netherton—Concert-Fantasia, Stewart; Andante con Moto, Frank Bridge; 'Rakoczy' March.

Mr. W. Wallace Thompson, St. James's, Garlick Hill—Fantasia on the hymn-tune 'St. Anne,' Cuthbert Harris; Prelude and Fugue in B minor, Bach; Berceuse and Carillon, Vierne.

Mr. A. M. Hawkins, St. Dunstan's-in-the-East—Two Chorale Improvisations, Karg-Elert; Prelude and Fugue in B minor, Healey Willan. (Violin solos by Mr. S. H. Gowing—Pastorale and Elegy, Rheinberger; Andante Cantabile from String Quartet, Tchaikovsky.)

Mr. C. H. Trevor, St. Michael-at-the-North Gate, Oxford—'Pax Vobiscum,' Karg-Elert; Prelude on 'Martyrs' and Meditation in Ancient Tonality, Harvey Grace; Andante (Sonata No. 4), Bach; 'Festal Commemoration,' John E. West; Prelude in B minor, Bach; Pastorale in F, Bach.

Mr. Ernest A. Moore, Ebenezer Primitive Methodist Church, Halifax—Concerto in D minor, John Stanley; Toccata and Fugue in D minor, Bach; Funeral March and Hymn of Seraphs, Guilmant.

Mr. Frank H. Mather, St. Paul's, Paget, Bermuda—'Pastoral' Sonata, Rheinberger; Fantasia in D minor, Merkel; Toccata, Maily.

Mr. Bertram Hollins, St. Lawrence Jewry—Prelude and Fugue in F minor, Bach; Allegro (Symphony No. 6), Widor; Meditation in F sharp minor, Guilmant; Finale in B flat, Wolstenholme.

Mr. G. W. Harris Sellick, St. Mary Magdalene, Ashton-upon-Mersey—Sonata No. 1, Mendelssohn; Sonata in the Style of Handel, Wolstenholme; 'Arcadian Idyll,' Lemare; Meditation, Hillemacher; Toccata and Fugue in D minor ('The Dorian'), Bach.

Mr. H. Cyril Robinson, St. John's, Barmouth—Sonata No. 1, Rheinberger; Sketch No. 3, Wolstenholme; Three Miniatures, Pullein; Prelude, Fugue, and Variation, Frank.

Mr. Frank B. Porkess, Minehead Parish Church—Fantasia and Fugue in G minor, Bach; Prière et Berceuse, Guilmant; Postlude in D, Smart.

Mr. Henry F. Hall, St. Lawrence Jewry—Suite in E minor, Borowski; 'Pastoral' Sonata, Rheinberger. (Mr. Charles Young sang Purcell's 'Evening Hymn,' Handel's 'Wife spread His Name,' and Vaughan Williams's 'The Call' and 'Antiphon'.)

Miss Emmie Bowman, Parish Church, Barkway—Concert Overture, d'Eury; Fugue ('Pastoral' Sonata), Rheinberger; 'From Hebridean Seas,' Julian Nesbitt.

Mr. Herbert Walton, Glasgow Cathedral—Prelude and Fugue in G, Bach; Moderato Cantabile (Symphony No. 8), Widor; Sonata No. 1 (first movement), Harwood; Scherzo in G minor, Bossi.

Miss Lilian Trott, St. Nicholas Cole Abbey—Prelude and Fugue in A minor, Bach; Organ Concerto in B flat, Handel; Finale (Sonata in D minor), Lloyd.

Mr. Herbert Hodge, St. Nicholas Cole Abbey—Canzona, Bach; Finale (Sonata in F sharp minor), Rheinberger; Sonata in D minor, van Eyken; Fantasia in F minor, Mozart.

Mr. Joseph Soar, St. David's Cathedral—Sonata in F minor, W. H. Speer; Two Sketches, Schumann; Fantasia and Fugue 'Ad nos,' Liszt; Sonata in D minor, Bach.

APPOINTMENTS

Mr. T. J. Bell, choirmaster and organist, Aylesbury Parish Church.

Mr. Bernard Elliott, choirmaster and organist, Christ Church, Mayfair.

Mr. Alwynne H. Griffiths, organist, St. George's Cathedral, and Director of Music in the English College for Men, Jerusalem.

Mr. R. G. Harwood, choirmaster and organist, Petersfield Parish Church.

Mr. Arthur J. Hooper, organist, Bethlem Royal Hospital, Lambeth Road.

Mr. W. Hunt, choirmaster and organist, Melton Mowbray Parish Church.

Mr. J. B. H. Longmire, choirmaster and organist, St. Matthew's Parish Church, Ealing Common.

Mr. Clifford Marshall, choirmaster and organist, Aigburth Parish Church, Liverpool.

Mr. John J. Weatherseed, choirmaster and organist, St. Thomas's Church, St. Catherine's, Ontario.

Letters to the Editor

'A COMMENTARY UPON MENDELSSOHN'

SIR,—With great respect to Mr. J. Wearham, I would suggest to him that he should endeavour to acquire a little of what Wodehouse calls 'the big, broad, flexible outlook.' Reduced to its lowest terms, his letter in your August issue amounts to this: 'Mr. Foss finds flaws in Mendelssohn—I don't—therefore Mr. Foss's article is a "pathetic attack" and savours of night-clubs and jazz.—Q.E.D.'

Mr. Wearham should recognise that it little avails his cause merely to condemn Mr. Foss's argument in the summary way he does, without attempting to indicate how it fails of justification, or to offer any definite refutation of his views. To many of us Mr. Wearham's assertion that a 'deep and sacred appeal' underlies much of Mendelssohn's music must appear a pitiful fallacy indeed, strongly reminiscent of horse-hair sofas and wax-flowers, but we acknowledge his right to discern as much pious unction there as he pleases, and shall not emulate his own practice of hinting that the 'opposition party' is the product of a morbid or frivolous age.

De gustibus non est disputandum, and it surely behoves Mr. Wearham, however widely his tastes may diverge from those of Mr. Foss, to deal with the latter's 'Commentary' with that deference which is most justly due to the erudition, discernment, skill, and research which even a casual perusal of it makes manifest.

The genuine devotee does not resent honest and intelligent criticism of the composers of his choice, and distrusts a fulsome paean of praise. Those whose admiration for Mendelssohn is tempered by some critical judgment and a little artistic perceptivity will hope to hear from Mr. Foss again.—Yours, &c.,

Bournemouth, Hants.

August, 1924.

PRIEST-ORGANISTS

SIR,—The Bournemouth Organists' Association—or was it the Hampshire Association?—passed a resolution condemning priest-organists as such; apparently on the ground that some few of them (very few) have been appointed Cathedral organists. Mr. Gordon's letter in your July issue is a complete answer to this, and I need not repeat his arguments. May I, however, add a few remarks?

I am sure that on all grounds good Church musicians—including Dr. Moody—would rather have a skilled priest-organist play his own services and train his own choir when it is certain that in no other way can such good results be obtained.

The number of Cathedral priest-organists can be counted, I believe, on one hand. They are well-qualified men, and Dr. Moody has no more right to hint about backstairs methods of appointment in their cases than I have about his, for if this matter is entered into there will be many chickens that will come home to roost! Surely, Sir, this dog-in-the-manger attitude is unworthy of organists; for no Cathedral authorities appoint as chief musician any man, priest or layman, unless he is practically 'up to his job.'

The work of a priest is many-sided; the direction and playing of services in Church or Cathedral is a piece of work for God which certainly cannot be ruled outside his ordination vows. Those who hold otherwise will surely not follow that argument to its logical conclusion, for, if they do, they will find themselves denying the spiritually uplifting influence of good music, and classing it as 'the study of the world and the flesh!' The point is, that everything must be done with only the highest aim in view, namely, the greater glory of God; and, therefore, every Church organist ought to be a spiritually-minded man. This is the only correct angle of view, which, I fear, Dr. Moody, in his turn, has missed. I would ask him, with our Hampshire brethren, to think over the question again.—Yours, &c.,

2, Scott Street,
Leicester.

August, 1924.

(REV.) A. M. SAMSON
(Priest-in-Charge and Choirmaster of St. Michael and All Angels, Knighton, Leicester; sometime Organist of Queens' College, Cambridge.)

SIR,—I have no wish to continue this correspondence, but I would submit that Dr. Moody has evaded my contention that in the few actual cases before us we have men who are capable of, and are ably fulfilling, a double office. I will pass by the suggestion as to 'backstairs methods,' except to say that the organists referred to being equal to any of their compeers, there could be no need of such methods.—Yours, &c.,

L. M. GORDON.

SIR,—Will you allow me a little space to repeat what I said in The Times a month or so ago? It was as follows:

'May I state one reason why a priest should not be appointed organist? As an organist and choirmaster, I find that organ practice takes up six hours a week and choir practices eight hours, which means that a priest would have fourteen hours less a week for visiting. Think of it—fifty houses.

'I believe it is still true that a house-going parson makes a church-going people.'—Yours, &c.,

Christchurch, Hants.

JOHN NEWTON.

VOICE-PRODUCTION

SIR,—Your articles and letters in relation to the larynx are apt to confuse. You have those who favour the larynx being held high, those who favour the low position, and those who swear by the 'natural' position. It would be a godsend to singers if you could sift the evidence and discover the right position. I am inclined to think that in the end this right position will be nothing less than the low setting. I will endeavour to demonstrate this by giving certain extracts from the works of well-known masters, and also by offering my own opinion.

Everybody knows that the tongue is attached to the larynx; also that if you flatten the tongue the larynx must perforce descend. And again, that if you allow the larynx to ascend the base of the tongue bunches up and obstructs the buccal cavities. No pure tone could result if the chief resonator were plugged, or indeed if there were any obstruction at all. The tongue and the larynx being interconnected, the movement of one affects the other, particularly if the laryngeal movement is vertical. Keep your larynx low and your tongue will be flat; if your larynx is high the tongue will bunch and curl and obstruct the tone. So much for my view.

Edwin Holland, in his 'Voice-Production,' p. 10, says:

'The so-called breaks in the voice are brought about by a difference of the position or setting of the larynx. The perfectly educated singer, as I am convinced from many years' experience and observation, permits no visible alteration in the position of the larynx to occur when ascending or descending the scale.'

Emil Benke, on p. 119 of his 'Mechanism of the Human Voice,' says:

'The Voce mista is mixed in this sense, that it combines the vibrating mechanism of the lower thin with the position of the larynx of the lower thick; that is to say . . . the larynx itself takes a lower position in the throat than for the lower thin.'

This seems to demonstrate that the larynx, when producing the mixed voice, must be kept low in the throat. S. F. Rook, in 'Curwen's Standard Course,' p. 149, says:

'To gain success [in the production of the mixed voice] keep the larynx low in the throat . . . the result is a remarkable increase in the volume.'

No doubt one could quote indefinitely from either side, but the writer's own observation compels him to assert that the larynx should be kept low and permitted to make no upward flights. Your contributor, Mr. Granville Humphreys, declares that the movements of the larynx in great singers can be seen from the auditorium. Is he sure that it is the larynx he sees moving and not the shield cartilage? He should bear in mind that the shield supports the forward portion of the vocal ligaments and that these are stretched or relaxed by the vertical motion of the shield. This movement can often be seen, and is no doubt mistaken sometimes for the larynx moving.—Yours, &c.,

Main Street,

A. E. LACY.

Keyworth, Notts.

August, 1924.

THE SUFFIX 'ED' IN CHANTING

SIR,—It was interesting to read in the Musical Times for August (p. 750, 'Answers to Correspondents') that singers of the past generation appear to have chanted the Psalms without enunciating 'ed' as a separate syllable. I first heard chanting on those lines in 1916, although I had previously heard chanting in many parts of the country for upwards of twenty years before that date.

Not long ago a professional organist (when adjudicating upon some chanting in a school singing competition) stated that 'ed' was adopted in later Victorian times by some clergy in order to combat the carelessness with which many of them spoke and delivered themselves, and he criticised it rather severely. At Westminster Abbey they have recently dropped 'ed,' and now sing 'prais'd,' &c. But surely the reason for sounding 'ed' lies deeper than as given above?

H. B. Briggs, in the 'Elements of Plainsong,' p. 31, says that 'we are dealing with prose, and not with poetry.' One hesitates before disagreeing with such an authority, but is not the very opposite the case? We are using Coverdale's Rhythmical Version of the Psalter, and I maintain that the enunciated 'ed' is necessary to maintain the rhythm. Curiously enough, on p. 9 of the 'Manual of Plainsong,' Mr. Briggs has subscribed to the statement that 'when the Psalms are correctly chanted it will be found that a regular rhythmical movement is created, which may be represented by a series of beats.' Surely this implies poetry.

Coverdale's Psalter is in Chaucerian English. Everybody who has read Chaucer knows that prefixes and suffixes have to be sounded, especially in his poetry, in order to maintain the rhythm. Here some one may exclaim, 'Oh, but Chaucer died in 1400, and Coverdale was not born until 1485! There is a century at least between their works.' So there is, but the language was almost unchanged. The two earliest sonneteers—Wyatt (1503-42) and Surrey (Henry Howard, 1537-1614), both later than Coverdale—suffered greatly from endeavouring to write rhythmically in a language which was in a most unstable condition, prefixes and suffixes only gradually being dropped, and consequently the balance of the words altering. I have not my Saintsbury's 'Short History of English Literature' by me, but, if I remember aright, he gives a splendid example of an early sonnet by Wyatt illustrating this point. Coverdale's Bible appeared in 1535, and the century after Chaucer was particularly barren as regards literature, so the language did not develop, and the Church, as ever, would be conservative in such matters.

I therefore think that 'ed' should invariably be sounded as a separate syllable. It is easy to ridicule 'for the mouth of them that speak lies shall be stopp'd,' but thus it is in the 'Manual of Plainsong' (Psalms 63), and it is much more dignified and less abrupt than 'stopp'd.' The same with 'look'd.' Some may say that I am merely the victim of habit or prejudice, but the 'Chaucerian theory' is my own. I haven't borrowed or copied it from anybody else, and I really think that my evidence is strong. If you drop 'ed' you spoil the rhythm, and the rhythm is the life.—Yours, &c.,

W. J. COMLEY.

Hertford.

THE FINGERING OF SCALES

SIR,—If the discussion in your pages had no other result than to show that thoughtful teachers are trying to teach this important subject in a systematic and efficient way, based more or less on classification, it would have achieved something worth while. But we have arrived, I think, at a much more advanced stage, and may fairly postulate that such teaching is the only efficient way, and that the materials are ready at hand.

It is not to be expected that all teachers will ever use the same system, but surely the great point is that we may be able to establish certain simple rules, by the observance of which a definite number of scales may be accurately and readily performed. And this was the reason for the publication of my little book, 'Scales and Chords,' referred to by several of your correspondents. I fancy I was a pioneer in that direction: others possibly may find better ways. But do let us discard those awful volumes, some bearing very distinguished names, in which every note and every finger is indicated; in which not a single principle is formulated, which make no attempt to impress the memory, and which have repelled multitudes of young students.

And let us remember that all 'fingering' is based upon definite principles, the application of which will solve all ordinary difficulties. It may of course be granted that in modern music one does come across passages which demand exceptional treatment; but to those who have mastered their scales and chords in their early days, even extraordinary passages present no impossibility.—Yours, &c.,

B. VINE WESTBROOK.

298, Stanstead Road, S.E. 23.

August, 1924.

OF WHAT USE ARE CRITICS?

SIR,—With reference to the 'Ad Libitum' notes by 'Feste,' in the August number of the Musical Times, I observe in the last paragraph, on p. 700, the following: 'A virtue or defect may easily escape one critic; it can hardly get past the whole gang.'

If a whole gang of critics are necessary to detect a defect or a virtue, and if one critic cannot do this, of what earthly use are critics? In any case, of what use are critics, anyhow? Have they a definite standard by which to judge a work? If so, what is their authority for such a standard?

From what I see, they appear to make criticisms according to personal likes or dislikes—perhaps governed by their stomachic condition—and unless they can set a standard above that of any ordinary human mind governed by moods and feelings, their criticisms are mere presumption. Can the critics sing, play, conduct, compose, better than those they criticise? If not, their criticism is a mere pretentious humbug to make a living—a casting the beam out of another's eye before they cast out the mote from their own.

It appears to me that a Russian poem expresses the whole matter most admirably. This poem treats of the singing of a nightingale, high in the heavens, being criticised by a donkey, reclining lazily on the muddy earth. The critics who cannot do better than those they criticise are in worse case than the donkey in the poem—for the donkey did try, by braying, to show the nightingale how to sing.—Yours, &c.,

Somerset Road,

Teddington.

F. W. MASSI-HARDMAN.

August, 1924.

CONFUSION OF TONALITY IN ELIZABETHAN COMPOSITIONS

SIR,—This characteristic of 16th-century compositions, discussed by Mr. Heathcote Statham in the Musical Times, is especially found in Spanish works. Papers on the subject were read at the Conference of the International Society, held at Vienna in 1909. Specimens from Vittoria, also from Hassler and Lassus, are quoted in the Report, pp. 109-127.—Yours, &c.,

H. DAVEY.

14, Powis Square,

Brighton.

The South London Philharmonic Society starts next season's activities on September 17 (choral) and 23 (orchestral). A fine list of works will be undertaken—choral works by Holst, Dvorák, Mendelssohn, Parry, Wagner, &c., and orchestral by Bach, Beethoven, Handel, Weber, Grieg, &c.

Sharps and Flats

I was born in the year in which Mendelssohn died, and, with the modesty characteristic of my race, I have always been under the impression that that was Nature's own way of keeping the chain of great music intact.—Sir Alexander Mackenzie.

Jazz, like the poor, are ever with us.—John Philip Sousa.
Intemezza from Cavallerie Rustuana, Cujus Animam from Rossini's Stabat Master.—Report of a Monmouth organ recital.

. . . the haunting violin solos of de Groot, the only man who can make me stop both eating and drinking at dinner.—Hannen Swaffer.

I am consumed with a great aspiration. Some day, one voice will sing to the world. I want above all things that that voice shall be mine. I pray that when that day comes I may not have grown too old to sing a song which shall be heard in the back-blocks of Australia, on the lonely sheep-runs of New Zealand.—Dame Clara Butt.

I do not know whether the fact that I am thinner than I used to be is due to improvement in my singing, or whether I sing better because I am thinner—or if either has anything to do with the other—but certainly it is a coincidence that I find with the growth of my voice that I have grown thinner.—A bby Putnam Morrison.

. . . that infamous Prelude—I need not give the composer's name.—James Agate.

Publicity is as great a feature in music as in any other business. They say that Mary Garden, after Roosevelt, is the most widely advertised person in the world, and she said to me once: 'I don't care what people say about me as long as they say it.'—Edward Johnson.

The Amateurs' Exchange

Under this heading we insert, free of charge, announcements by amateur musicians who wish to co-operate with others.

Vocalist (lady) wishes to meet accompanist for mutual practice. N. London (near Muswell Hill).—M. R., c/o Musical Times.

Violinist (leader), residing in district, wanted for small club, meeting to practise chamber and other music. (Strings and pianoforte).—E. S., 9, Oak End Way, Gerrard's Cross.

A few instrumentalists, strings and others, amateurs (good players), wanted to accompany choral works. Choir of two hundred. Islington.—RONALD CHAMBERLAIN, c/o Newman, 12, Canonbury Street, N.1.

Baritone wishes to meet contralto, with good voice, for mutual practice. London.—A. M., c/o Musical Times.

Dorian Symphony Orchestra, Westminster, S.W., invites applications for membership for season 1924-25. Prospectus post free on application (stating instrument) to the SECRETARY, 30, The Green, Twickenham.

Amateur ladies, gentlemen, and instrumentalists required to take part in a costume-choral-song recital of 18th-century music this autumn. The production will be on the lines of the Russian 'Chauve-Souris' Theatre. Small subscription.—ALEC BROOKSBANK, 97, Belgrave Road, S.W.1.

Vocalist wishes to meet tenor and soprano for trios.—P., 'Aysgarth', Shirley Road, Croydon.

Will singers or string players give occasional help, Monday afternoons, at Fellowship meetings in three poor parishes in South London? Good accompanist provided.—S. A., c/o Musical Times.

Pianist (lady) wishes to meet violinist or 'cellist for practice in sonatas, or both for trios. Canterbury or district.—E. H., c/o Musical Times.

Pianist (gentleman) wishes to meet violinist, 'cellist, or flautist for practice of chamber music. W. London, Chiswick or Kew districts preferred.—E. A. C., 32, Thorney Lodge Road, Chiswick, W.4.

Male-Voice Quartet, winner three London Festivals, invites another quartet or individual singers to join in forming octet. Wood Green district.—G. H. WHEELER, 198, Lymington Avenue, N.22.

A thoroughly reliable amateur orchestral flute and piccolo player, sharp or flat pitch, wishes to join good orchestra. W. or S.W. districts.—H. F. C., c/o Musical Times.
Pianist (lady) wishes to meet advanced violinist and 'cellist for trio practice. W. Hampstead district.—L. B., c/o Musical Times.

Whitefield's Orchestra has vacancies for violins, violas, double-bass, two flutes, clarinets, oboe, bassoon, and cornet, for monthly Sunday evening musical service at Whitefield's Tabernacle, Tottenham Court Road, W.1.—SPENCER SHAW, 112, Tufnell Park Road, N.7.

Good amateur instrumentalists required in the orchestra of the West Middlesex Musical Society. Rehearsals commence in September. Applications should be made to the hon. secretary, Mrs. C. S. SMALLMAN, 20, Fordhook Avenue, Ealing, W.5.

There are vacancies in the Choir (all voices) of the West Middlesex Musical Society. Works to be performed include 'Faust' (Gounod), 'The Revenge,' and 'The Seasons.' Applications should be made to the HON. SECRETARY, 20 Fordhook Avenue, Ealing, W.5.

Soprano wishes to join quartet or glee party. S.W. or W. London.—A. P., c/o Musical Times.

Capable violinist desires addresses of well-balanced orchestras in Central or S.W. London, where good music only is rehearsed.—O. G., c/o Musical Times.

The Arundel Male-Voice Choir resumes rehearsals early in October. Vacancies for first tenors and second basses. Rehearsals, Wednesdays, Memorial Hall, Farringdon Street.—HON. SECRETARY, 48, Stockwell Road, S.W.9.
Voluntary accompanist wanted for the above Choir.

Two violins and violas (students) wish to meet 'cellist (student) for mutual practice of the easier quartets.—W. R. LYON, 1, Blandford Street, Manchester Square, W.1.

Chiswick and Gunnersbury Philharmonic Society (conductor, Mr. David M. Davis) has vacancies in choir and orchestra. Season commences—orchestra, September 22; choir, September 25, at Chiswick Town Hall.—Hon. orchestral secretary, Mr. E. LESLIE SYKES, 223A, Hammersmith Road, W.6.

Grafton Philharmonic Society has vacancies for all voices. Rehearsals begin on September 11, in the Church Parlour of Clapham Congregational Church, Grafton Square, Old Town, Clapham. The works to be rehearsed are: Brahms's 'Requiem,' English madrigals, 'St. Matthew' Passion, &c.—Apply to the hon. musical director, HENRY H. HALL, 'Forest End,' Forest Hill Road, S.E.23.

Brotherhood Orchestra has vacancies for lady and gentlemen instrumentalists. Rehearsals, Fridays, 8 to 10, at Caledonian Road Primitive Methodist Church, corner of Market Road, N.1.

Experienced second violin and viola wanted for permanent string quartet in London.—E. A. C., c/o Musical Times.

Violinist (gentleman) wishes to meet other players for practice of chamber music. N.W. district.—C., c/o Musical Times.

Lady pianist wishes to accompany violinist or orchestra for practice.—E. M. R., Roxwell, Squirrels Heath Avenue, Gidea Park, Romford.

London Sketch Club Orchestra has a few vacancies for competent string and wind players. Applicants must have had some orchestral experience. Rehearsals, Thursdays, 7.45 to 10, at 246A, Marylebone Road, N.W.—Hon. secretary, W. S. BAGDATOPOULOS, 7, New Court, Lincoln's Inn, W.C.2.

Violinist (lady) wishes to meet other instrumentalists for practice of trios or quartets.—I. B., 18, Normanton Road, Clifton, Bristol.

Vocalist (male) wishes to meet accompanist for mutual practice.—F. C. A., c/o Musical Times.

Bass singer wishes to meet accompanist for mutual practice. Evenings.—J. N. R., c/o Musical Times.

Lady offers services as accompanist, pianoforte or organ. London district.—G. F. B., c/o Musical Times.

South London Philharmonic Society has vacancies for all voices, and for violas, 'cellos, double-basses, oboes, bassoons, and brass-wind. The following will be performed: 'Elijah'; Dvorák's 'Stabat Mater'; Holst's

'Hymn of Jesus' and 'Hymn to Dionysus'; Parry's 'Pied Piper,' &c., and orchestral works by Bach, Beethoven, Grainger, Sibelius, &c.—Applications should be made to the hon. secretary, EDWARD A. WHITE, 15, Ashurst Street, Battersea, S.W.11.
Ladies and gentlemen (alto, tenor, and bass) please see advertisement columns.—All Saints', Sumner Road, S.E.15.

The Tudor Singers have vacancies for a first soprano, a contralto, and a light tenor. Excellent reading and regularity essential. Meetings every Friday (recommencing in September) at Victoria. Works by Morley, Weelkes, Byrd, Palestrina, &c.—C. J. BATES, 76, Leighton Road, Ealing, W.13.

Violinist and pianist (good sight-readers) wanted to form trio to practise light music. Good pianoforte and library. One afternoon a week.—Mrs. S. R., 13, Wellington Mansions, Upper St. Martin's Lane, W.C.2.

TRINITY COLLEGE OF MUSIC

The following candidates were successful in the open competitions held at the College in July. Scholarships awarded for one year: Miriam Frances Anglin, Lucy Annie Bonner, Marguerite Alice Caseau, Florence Nellie Daniels, Constance Davies, Israel Feliciant, Lena Hooper, Phyllis Ada Ivermee, Ruth Marion Johnson, Rose Violet Kemp, Ethel Kerkin, Harry Kossovsky, Henrietta Victoria Le Bosse, Sylvia Sarah Levy, George M. Melachrino, Edith Olive Millard, Frances Reginald Mitchell, Geraldine Mary Nolan, Dorothy Frances Sexton, Emily Daisy Scott, Vera Snare, Rigmor Trim, Mary Winifred Walter, Florence Joan Worsdell. Probationary scholarships for one term were awarded to Grace Ferry and Clement P. Peters. The examiners were Sir Frederick Cowen and Dr. E. F. Horner.

OXFORD SUMMER COURSE IN MUSIC

The third Oxford Summer Course organized by the Federation of British Music Industries and the British Music Society ended on August 19, after a fortnight's interesting and useful lectures. Under the direction of Major J. T. Bavin, of the Federation of British Music Industries, this year's Summer School was taken in hand on successive days by lecturers well-known for their activities in the field of musical education, each of whom delivered short courses of instruction to the many students who had come for purposes of that instruction, and for the opportunity of getting it in the pleasant surroundings of Oxford in summer-time.

The School was inaugurated by a dinner in New College Hall, at which the Vice-Chancellor of the University presided, many well-known musicians being present. Sir Hugh Allen, Mr. Howard Hanson (Director of the Easton Music School, Rochester, U.S.A.), Dr. Malcolm Sargent, and Mr. Frank Roscoe spoke to the several toasts. The course began with Mr. Adrian C. Boul's series on Conducting, in which the lecturer dealt with many of the problems attaching to that art, and laid especial emphasis upon such questions as confront conductors of small country orchestras, choral societies, and choirs. Dr. Malcolm Sargent, with similar intention, gave a series of lectures on the formation of amateur orchestras and the things concerning the instruments their conductors should know, and another series on the work possible in the villages by way of community singing. Dr. George Dyson gave four lectures which he entitled 'Chapters in the History of Music,' and which brought clearly before his hearers many of the outstanding factors in the growth of musical art, and many of the things that have mattered in respect of various forms of that art. The lectures of Mr. Herbert Wiseman, who turned more directly to the subject of music-teaching in the schools, were of great value to the many teachers in attendance, for they dealt with the best methods of teaching children voice-training and sight-reading, and with the choice of songs desirable in the schools.

In the same vein, Mr. E. A. Adams, head-master of a Birmingham elementary school, gave a series of instructive talks on his own musical experiences in such schools, and Major Bavin, lecturing on the value of the gramophone to the work of teaching music in the schools, gave many gramophone illustrations of his own use of the instrument for that purpose.

There were also lectures by Mr. Frank Roscoe on 'The Presentation of a Subject,' by Mr. W. W. Starmer on the science of bell-construction and the art of the carillonneur, and by Mr. Gordon Stutely on 'The Organization of Children's Orchestral Concerts.'

During the fortnight of the course two chamber music concerts were given by the Winifred Smith Quartet, Mrs. Farnell provided the programme of a musical evening, and Mrs. J. S. Curwen gave a talk at Lady Margaret Hall on pianoforte-teaching.

MUSIC IN PUBLIC SCHOOLS

At WINCHESTER the Glee Club gave a concert on July 28, when the chief choral item was 'The Revenge.' Among the smaller choral works were items by Morley, Brahms, Sullivan, and Vaughan Williams. The orchestra played the Overture to 'Mireille' and 'Dargason' from Holst's 'St. Paul's' Suite. Among the soloists were Mr. Steuart Wilson and Dr. Fellowes, the latter playing violin solos of Hurlstone. The concert marks the end of Dr. E. T. Sweeting's twenty-three years of office as music-master, during which period the school concerts and recitals have been notable for enterprise and wide range. Dr. Sweeting went to Winchester in 1901, his previous work of the kind having been at Rossall (1882-97)—where, by the way, his pupils included a youth named Thomas Beecham. At Winchester he found practically no provision for musical work. The art was merely tolerated—indeed by some it was actively discouraged. Fortunately, the then new headmaster (Dr. Burge) and the Governors were ready to back up his plans for developing the musical side. Dr. Sweeting took office on the understanding that a Music School should be built, and three years later it materialised—a well-equipped affair with a capital hall suitable for lectures and concerts, and an organ. In 1901 the pupils were a mere handful—Dr. Sweeting was able to manage his first term single-handed—but for some years now the number has remained steadily round the hundred mark. Choral work has from the first been a strong feature, and the programmes published in these columns have shown a fine range of choice, from Elizabethan madrigals to modern works, large and small. Talking to us recently about his work at Winchester, the Doctor paid a warm tribute to those who had helped to place the School music on so secure a foundation. He had been fortunate in his staff, some of whom had been at the School for a long time. Among his assistants were Jervis Read, Adam Carse, Albert Sowerbutts, and (during the war) H. Balfour Gardiner. Dr. Sweeting gave his last organ recital in the College Chapel on July 20, playing Bach's Toccata in F, Schumann's Canon in B minor, Franck's 'Pièce Héroïque,' the Prelude to Act 3 of 'The Mastersingers,' and the Finale to a Widor Symphony. An interesting event during the end-of-term happenings was the placing of a tablet in the Cloisters to the memory of Weelkes, who, it will be remembered, was a former organist of the College. At this ceremony the choir sang Weelkes's 'Hosanna,' 'On the plains,' and 'Sing we at pleasure.' The memorial owes much to Dr. Fellowes, himself an old Wykehamist.

Two concerts marked the end of term at RADLEY. On July 28 the orchestra and Madrigal Society combined in a scheme that included Holst's 'St. Paul's' Suite and Fugal Concerto, Grainger's 'Handel in the Strand,' Bach's 'Brandenburg' Concerto in F (first movement), Balfour Gardiner's 'News from Whidah,' Stanford's three Elizabethan Pastorals, and Holst's two Eastern Pictures, with madrigals and part-songs by Weelkes and Morley. Among the smaller instrumental items, special interest was attached to the first movement of B. J. Naylor's String Quartet in A, written when the composer was a boy at the school. On June 30, the School Band gave a capital programme that included Purcell's 'Trumpet Tune,' Vaughan Williams's 'Folk-Song' Suite, Rébikov's 'Pastoral Scene' (for flute, oboe, and clarinet), 'Sellenger's Round,' Byrd's 'Wolsey's Wilde,' and the March from Holst's Suite in F.

At HIGHGATE, on July 28, the concert was of a miscellaneous character, the programme comprising the Serenade from Elgar's first 'Wand of Youth' Suite, and a Suite in D, by P. N. Parker, two of Dvořák's 'Slavonic Dances' for pianoforte duet, solos for clarinet by Gade, for pianoforte by Purcell, and for violin by Jarnefelt and Pergolesi, with vocal items by Keel and Truhn.

Competition Festival Record

In our August issue 'G. W.', reporting the Leamington Festival, stated that 'the test-pieces in a number of classes were the same as those set recently at other competitions in the district,' and went on to imply that the Leamington syllabus was based on other local schemes with a view to increasing the number of entries. A correspondent writes pointing out that the Leamington syllabus was issued in October last, some considerable time before that of another local Festival in which a good many of the Leamington choices appeared. Copying there certainly appears to have been, but it was not by the Leamington executive.

There are many Girls' Clubs, Women's Institutes, &c., where a singing class languishes, or is not started, because of the lack of means to pay a conductor. On the other hand, there are conductors who, for love of the work, or from a desire to gain valuable practical experience, are happy to conduct such classes in return for out-of-pocket expenses. The Federation of British Musical Competition Festivals is adding to its good works by putting these institutions and honorary conductors in touch with one another. Those interested should write to the Secretary, 3, Central Buildings, Westminster, S. W. 1.

THE NATIONAL EISTEDDFOD

BY ALFRED KALISCH

Each Eisteddfod has its distinguishing feature, and among the things by which—apart from the growing importance of all literary activities—the Pontypool Eisteddfod of 1924 will be remembered are the great improvement in orchestral work and the curious incidents which marked the two chief choral competitions.

In the principal choral competition two choirs made slips in Bach's chorus, 'O Light Everlasting,' and were not together with the orchestra for a considerable time; and in the Male-Voice Choir competition no first prize was given, but the first and second prizes were both divided.

The accident in the first competition suggests some reflection. The judges decided to deprive the two choirs in question of all marks for the first piece. The adjudicator said that he and his colleagues thought they had no other alternative. A great many people, on the other hand, were of the opinion—with which I agree—that it would have been wiser to have stopped the choirs and allowed them to start again, and make a certain deduction from the marks.

There was another unfortunate incident in connection with the principal choral competition. It was announced on the platform that Mr. Cyril Jenkins's Choral Ode, 'Song of the Silent Land,' would not be sung because the orchestral parts had not arrived in time. Mr. Jenkins strenuously denied that this was his fault, and pointed to the fact that more than one choir had rehearsed the piece with orchestral accompaniment within the past months. Without entering on any controversy, it may be said it was an unfortunate thing that the choirs who had engaged orchestras at considerable expense felt that they had a grievance. Besides, as this was the most difficult of the three test-pieces, some of the choirs had spent more time in preparing it than on the others, and felt they had been badly treated on this ground also.

THE ORCHESTRAL ACCOMPANIMENT

One other point with regard to the principal choral competition should be dealt with. On paper the idea that an orchestra should be engaged to accompany the competitions is admirable, but in practice it does not work so well. Welsh choral conductors as a rule have comparatively little experience in dealing with an orchestra, and so we have a conductor who is strange to his orchestra, and an orchestra which is strange to the choir it is accompanying. Even in the case of the London Symphony Orchestra, which accompanied a previous Eisteddfod, a difficulty was felt from this source; and with a comparatively young body like the Welsh National Symphony Orchestra it was of course accentuated. I am fairly certain in my own mind that the low marking of the choirs in the principal competition, which was lower than it has been for a long time, is largely due to this cause of want of cohesion between the three principal elements. In former years no choir with less than a hundred and eighty-five marks would have been in the running, but Troedyrhiw won with only a hundred and seventy-eight.

This brings me to speak of the Welsh National Orchestra which made its first appearance at a National Eisteddfod. The ultra-Nationalists seem to make it a point of honour to belittle its achievements. While the principal papers in London, Manchester, and Birmingham praise its work in 'The Messiah' and 'The Dream of Gerontius,' the Welsh organs which represent the Nationalist party consistently complain of its poor tone, ragged entries, and lack of musical understanding. They are indignant at its calling itself 'National,' to which epithet they say it has no right. It would be interesting to know how these gentlemen would say that a right to the title can be acquired. The worst of it is, one cannot help feeling that a good deal of this criticism is a veiled attack on one particular person—Sir Walford Davies.

THE WELSH NATIONAL ORCHESTRA

Another grievance is that help from outside was called in for the National Eisteddfod, but seeing that the outside artists who joined the Orchestra for this occasion included players like Mr. Leon Goossens, Mr. Draper, and Mr. Cruft, it is difficult to see that the ensemble would have been improved by their absence. Those who have raised the question should be reminded that when Mr. Goossens played at Covent Garden in the spring, Herr Bruno Walter expressed the opinion that he was one of the greatest oboe players of the day, and his playing in, for instance, the 'New World' Symphony can only be described as exquisite.

The Welsh Nationalists, as I said last year, seem to me to obstruct real progress by reason of their desire to go too fast. They should study more carefully the history of English music in the last fifty years. At first all the plums were seized by French, German, or Italian musicians, or native musicians who had studied abroad. These, in turn, trained a new generation of natives, and it was not till that home-trained generation had reached maturity that we could say we had an English, or British, school of music in the strictest sense of the word.

NATIONALISM RUN RIOT

The ultra-Welsh seem to me to be attempting to put the cart before the horse, or, to change the metaphor somewhat violently, to wish to anchor their boats in a backwater instead of floating on the main stream.

The most interesting of the adjudications delivered were those of Sir Richard Terry, the most important of which bore on this subject. With a great deal of his eloquent plea for sincere nationalism I cordially agree, but he made one remark which I cannot help considering unfortunate. Sir Richard said that Offa's Dyke should be reconstructed, and that no Welsh musician should be allowed to cross it until his National character was so firmly fixed that no Fellow of the Royal College of Organists or Doctor or Bachelor of Music could harm it. Now, that some F.R.C.O.'s and Mus. Docs. get into grooves no one can deny, but they are not all bad. Why should Sir Richard thus prepare a rod for his own back? Does he not himself bear both titles, and adorn them? And how about the other leaders of the National movement, such as Dr. Vaughan Thomas, Dr. David Evans, and

Mr. Hopkin Evans? The only exception—in this case I suppose one ought to say honourable exception—is Mr. Leigh Henry. I naturally exclude Sir Walford Davies, because he is quite absurdly looked upon by the extremists as the arch-enemy of Welsh National art. He has, as a matter of fact, done more than anybody else for the cause, and, fortunately, the violence of the unreasonable attacks on him has served only to consolidate his position.

THE REAL HANDEL

In another adjudication Sir Richard Terry spoke words of much wisdom, which deserve the most careful consideration not in Wales only but throughout the Empire. He protested against the ridiculous idea of Handel-worshippers practically confining themselves to 'The Messiah' and 'Judas Maccabeus.' Still stuck in the slough of mid-Victorianism, they regarded what Sir Richard called Handel's 'big bow-wow' choruses as his greatest works. Apart from his other oratorios, which were unduly neglected, Handel was one of the greatest, if not absolutely the greatest, writer of song the world had ever known. How many people, asked Sir Richard, know his 'Julius Cæsar'? His operatic overtures, he contended, contained some of the jolliest music ever written, and would be an admirable study for young orchestral players.

It is a curious thing that whereas England is supposed to be the home of Handel worship, Germany has been several years ahead of us in the revival of Handelian opera; indeed, the idea of trying a Handelian opera, even in concert form, never yet seems to have entered an English head.

The instrumental competitions are worth considering in a little more detail because of the extraordinary advance they showed over previous years. Mr. Herbert Ware's Cardiff Orchestra won the prize for the performance of the first and second movements of Beethoven's C minor Symphony, and Mr. Amos Harding's Abertillery Orchestra was not very far behind. One could not help feeling that the interval between the two would have been still smaller if Abertillery had as much chance of hearing symphonic music as Cardiff has—and that is small enough, heaven knows. I was glad to notice that neither orchestra began the first movement with a triplet, a mistake which even the best bands are given to making. It was unfortunate that only four bands entered, and that only two faced the adjudicators. Mr. Herbert Ware's String Orchestra also gave an excellent performance of two movements from the 'Peer Gynt' Suite; in both cases there was an improvement on previous years which could hardly be imagined. The winning string quartet (again only two competitors), which played a Haydn Quartet and Grainger's 'Molly on the Shore,' was awarded ninety marks for the first and eighty-five for the second—figures which would hardly have been thought possible a few years ago.

I am inclined to attach as much importance as to anything else to the new competition for choirs and orchestras in the same locality. It shows that there is a growth of interest in orchestral music, and encourages choral singers to accustom themselves to performing with orchestra. The test-piece was one of the 'Chandos' Anthems of Handel. The keen interest shown by singers and players was most refreshing, and it was of considerable educational value to the audience to realise that Handel wrote splendid music outside his too familiar works. Again, the only regret felt was that the competitors were so few; but at any rate it was an excellent beginning, and it is very much to be hoped that the competition will become a permanent feature.

For reasons already mentioned there was a little disappointment about the chief choral competition, but the second choral competition produced some very fine singing of Percy Fletcher's 'Song of the Grey Sea' and Edward Arthur's 'Contrasts.' Mr. Daniel's choir from Llandilo and Mr. Ben Devonald's choir from Ton sang remarkably well, and were praised by the adjudicators for the qualities of artistic interpretation and sensitiveness to mood in which the best Welsh choirs were so often lacking of old. Still more remarkable was the extraordinarily high level attained by the male-voice choirs. The test-pieces were 'Hereward the Wake,' by S. E. Lovatt (a Staffordshire musician), and 'Dominus Illuminatio Mea,' by Walford Davies. The result was unprecedented: Swansea and Dowlais, with 191 marks each, divided the first prize, and Cardiff and Fishguard divided the second prize in proportions of £30 to £20. It will be seen from the table of marks (p. 842) that of the two winning choirs one was pre-eminent in Sir Walford Davies's chorus, which demands a subtle appreciation of mood and a mastery of difficult modulations, whereas the other was supreme in the impulse and vigour called for in 'Hereward.' If Cardiff had not made an unfortunate slip towards the end of the first piece the result might have been different. The singing of the end of 'Hereward' by the Dowlais choir was a thing to be remembered. After the competition the choirs united, and sang both works magnificently. The ultra-Nationalists apparently regard this as a weak concession to mid-Victorian jumboism, but the effect on all unprejudiced persons was overwhelming.

While waiting for the adjudication the whole of the massed choirs and the congregation sang hymns—an unforgettable effect. Speaking of the hymn-singing by the congregation on the previous day, Sir Richard Terry said that it was a long time since any music had given him such a lump in his throat. On this occasion the experience was more moving still.

It remains now to speak only of the concerts. I found the performance of 'The Messiah' extremely spirited and inspiring. The soloists were Miss Annie Rees, Miss Dilys Jones, Mr. Tudor Davies, and Mr. David Evans. The inclusion of 'The Messiah' was much criticised on the ground that it is too well known, but it should be remembered that out of the fifteen thousand people in the audience, probably not more than a couple of hundred had heard it performed with full orchestra and a large choir, and to the remaining fourteen thousand eight hundred it must have been a revelation.

The performance of 'The Dream of Gerontius' seemed to me excellent. Mr. John Coates was in admirable form, and held the audience completely under his spell. In the playing of the orchestra there were flaws, but the performance was full of the right significance, and there was some first-class individual work.

There were some who hinted that in 'The Dream of Gerontius' there are suggestions that would not be quite wholesome for the 'Welsh spirit.' All that can be said is that a case which needs such arguments to support it must be a fairly bad one; and any standpoint, however good it may be, is not assisted by wild statements of this kind.

It is not necessary to say very much about the two Welsh compositions. Mr. Hopkin Evans's 'Kynon,' which was played for the first time, is a spirited setting of an old Welsh legend, and is admirably suited for performance by choral societies all over the country. A good many Welsh folk-songs are woven into the orchestral texture, and the resemblance of one of them (unless indeed it be a melody of the composer's) to the opening of the slow movement of Beethoven's seventh Symphony is remarkable. 'Kynon' shows considerable skill in the employment of orchestral and choral resources, and the inclusion of 'Men of Harlech,' which is very skilfully done, aroused enormous enthusiasm.

I was very much impressed by the songs of Dr. Vaughan Thomas, which were sung at one of the evening concerts. They may be recommended to all singers in search of something to vary their programmes, and I am glad to find myself in agreement on this subject with the representatives of the National party.

Kenneth Harding's orchestral piece 'The Prelude' is also full of promise, and the 'Fantasy on Children's Melodies,' by Hubert Davies, leader of the National Symphony Orchestra, is very agreeable, though on slightly conventional lines—for which reason ultra-patriots ask us to regard it as an outrage on Wales.

The level reached by the solo singers was very high. Of the two winning sopranos—both junior and senior—the adjudicators said they are young ladies of whom a great deal is likely to be heard in the future. The tenor who won the prize for singing the 'Prize Song' from 'The Mastersingers' is also unusually promising. One of the other competitors has, perhaps, a better voice, but the adjudicators rightly said that he could not be preferred to the winner because his style is rather that of oratorio than of opera. The two winning baritones have magnificent voices. Of the violinist who won in the Open Competition the adjudicators said that his performance marked the highest artistic level reached during the week. The winning junior violinist, who has the not very Welsh name of Leyshon, also has remarkable talent.

In conclusion, it seems to me that the Eisteddfod is faced by a grave problem owing to its great success. It is almost impossible to get through the programmes in the time allotted. Every day it was almost time to start the evening concert when the afternoon session ended. Possibly some time might be saved on the oratory, but that would appear to the patriotic Welshman a mere sacrilege—perhaps rightly, for it would rob the function of its national characteristic. As it was, only three chosen female choirs had time to appear on the platform, which was a great pity, as the singing of the winning choir was remarkably beautiful. There were never more than three competitors in any of the vocal solo finals, although the entries were very large. One does not want to hear seventy competitors sing the same song, but still in some ways it would be more instructive to the listeners to hear more than three, so that they might get an idea of the general level of acquirement, about which the exceptional excellence of the winners can tell us nothing.

CHIEF CHORAL COMPETITION

Test-pieces: (a) Bach's 'O Light Everlasting' (Chorus No. 1) and (b) 'The Silent Harp' (David Evans).

	(a)	(b)	Total.
1. Troedryhiw (Mr. Ethelbert Llewellyn)...	91	87	178
2. Port Talbot (Mr. Thomas Davies) ...	86	90	176
3. Rhymney (Mr. John Price) ...	86	88	174
4. Mid-Rhondda ...	84	82	166
5. Risca ...	82	83	165
6. Cardiff ...	80	78	158
7. Pontycymmer ...	—	89	89
8. Llanelly ...	—	78	78

SECOND CHORAL COMPETITION (60-80 voices)

Test-pieces: (a) 'Dau Gwair' (Edward Arthur) and (b) 'Song of the Grey Seas' (Percy Fletcher).

	(a)	(b)	Total.
1. Llandilo United Choir (Mr. P. R. Daniel) ...	92	89	181
2. Jerusalem Ton (Mr. Ben Devonald) ...	93	86	179
3. Hirwain United Choir (Mr. G. Collier) ...	83	79	162
4. Newport Musical Society ...	78	80	158
5. Crumlin Choir ...	73	80	153
6. Birchgrove (Cardiff) United Choral Society ...	74	78	152

MALE CHOIR

Test-pieces: (a) 'Dominus Illuminatio Mea' (Walford Davies) and (b) 'Hereward the Wake' (S. E. Lovatt).

	(a)	(b)	Total.
1. Swansea (Mr. L. R. Bowen) ...	94	97	191
2. Dowlais (Mr. Alan Morlais) ...	98	93	191
3. Cardiff (Mr. Ted Lewis) ...	94	90	184
4. Fishguard and Goodwick ...	89	91	180
5. Milford Haven ...	86	82	168
6. Rhymney ...	82	85	167
7. Barry ...	80	81	161
8. Wattstown ...	74	77	151

SECOND MALE-VOICE CHOIR

Test-pieces: (a) 'Castilla' (Dan Protheroe) and (b) 'Gentle Dove' (E. T. Davies). Six competitors.

	(a)	(b)	Total.
Brynmaur (Mr. W. R. Lewis) ...	89	93	182
Glafrwd (Mr. Sam Lucas) ...	89	89	178
Gwent (Mr. Alban Evans) ...	91	85	176

Tone-poem for full orchestra (based on the story of Branwen).—Mr. Franklyn Sparkes, Salisbury.
String Quartet (1st and 2nd violins, viola, 'cello).—Mr. Franklyn Sparkes.

Soprano solo (seventy-nine competitors). Test-pieces: 'Woodland Voices' (D. Vaughan Thomas) and 'Ave Maria' (Max Bruch).—Madame Jennie Davies Ellis, Pontycymmer. Consolation Prize, Madame Alice Morton Thomas, Cross Keys.

Pianoforte Solo (open). Test-pieces: (a) Fugue in C sharp minor, No. 4 (Bach); (b) First movement from B flat Sonata, Op. 22, No. 11 (Beethoven); (c) Prelude No. 4 (William Baines).—Miss Mary Irene Phillips, Swansea.

Orchestral band competition (eight professionals allowed). Test-piece: First and second movements from fifth Symphony, in C minor (Beethoven).—Herbert Ware's Orchestra, Cardiff.

Choir and orchestra (not to exceed sixty voices) from the same locality (four professionals allowed in the orchestra). Test-piece: Handel's sixth 'Chandos' Anthem ('O praise the Lord with one consent'). Two choirs competed.—Kenfig Hill District (Mr. William Rees), 80 marks; Gwent Choral and Orchestral Society (Mr. Dan Owen), 83 marks.

Girl Guide Choirs (new competition), choirs from 15-20 voices, all under 17:

	Total
1st Pontnewydd Company Girl Guides ...	84
Griffithstown Girl Guide Choir ...	80
Barry and Rhose Districts ...	80
Fleur de Lys Girl Guides ...	51

Children's Folk-Song Choirs:

Nantymo Children's Choir (Mr. James Evans)...	98
Abercarr House School Choir (Miss B. Nicholas) ...	95
Ynysybwll Juvenile Choir (Mr. Tom Jones) ...	93

Boy Soloists (under 16):

Tom Howell, Port Talbot ...	172
Haydn Elliott, Abertillery ...	169
(Consolation) Eddie Hobbs, Blaenavon ...	163

Violin Solo (under 16):

- (1) Eluned Leyshon, Bridgend.
- (2) Gwyn Edwards, Pontycymmer.
- (3) Sidney Williams, Barry.

Solo Girls (under 16) (seventy competitors):

- (1) Alice Spence, Abertillery.
- (2) Nancy Jenkins, Abercynon.

Juvenile Choirs (fifteen competitors):

	Total.
1. Blaenclydach Juvenile Choir ...	280
2. Nantymoel Children's Choir ...	272
3. Mountain Ash Girls' Choir... ..	268
4. Bethel Juvenile Choir, Garnant ...	266
5. Ynysybwll Juvenile Choir ...	258

Action-Song Competition:

1. Pentre Broughton Action Party ...	191
2. Heolgerrig Party ...	168

Duet for Soprano and Contralto:

Madame Annie Rees-Perkins, Pontycymmer (soprano), and Madame Mattie Davies, Three Crosses, near Swansea (contralto).

Pianoforte Solo (open):

1. Mary Irene Phillips, Swansea ...	175
2. May Roval, Brynna, Llanharan ...	174

Baritone Solo:

1. Mr. W. E. Llewellyn, Llantrisant, and Mr. H. Emlyn Jones, Cwmlllynfell (tie).

Soprano Solo (under 16 years of age):

1. Gwynfryn Price, Ferndale (aged 10 years).
2. Sadie Eynon, Trimsaran, Llanelli.

Tenor Solo. Test-pieces: Walter's Prize Song ('Mastersingers') and 'Thy fair face, Myfanwy' (Cyril Jenkins):

1. Emlyn Barnes, Mesteg ...	94
2. John Thomas, Dynyant ...	89
3. Herbert Cornfield, Pontnewynydd ...	86

Mezzo-Soprano:

Miss Fuller Mills, Carmarthen ...	180
Miss Alice Cole, Abercynon ...	188
Miss Howells, Cardiff ...	187

Contralto Solo. Test-pieces: 'Don Fatale' (Verdi) and 'Lullaby' (Morfydd Owen). Twenty-two competitors:

Miss Mattie Davies, Three Crosses.

Violin Solo (open). Test-pieces: 'Berceuse' (Arensky) and third movement of 'Kreutzer' Sonata (Beethoven).

W. H. Jenkin, Angelton Bridgeend.

PROMENADE CONCERTS

First, a very brief note of changes in this thirtieth season of Promenade Concerts, over which Sir Henry Wood and Mr. Robert Newman still happily hold sway. Some old familiar (albeit quite young) faces are gone from the orchestra. No new works are to be produced, but some of the best of those brought forward in recent years are revived. If one regrets a little the absence of opportunities for hearing new music, it is to be remembered that few novelties proved worth the doing, or attracted the public. There is an average of one native work a night, and a score of British composers are to conduct their pieces.

The Beethoven Symphonies, on Fridays, are not given in chronological order this year. An additional 'classical' night (Tuesday) is fixed, when ten Haydn Symphonies and over a dozen major works of Mozart are to be heard. This, with the increase in the number of Bach Concertos, Suites, and Overtures, is the brightest feature of the season—one at which all musicians rejoice.

The renovated organ is to be employed too rarely, and then chiefly in music of small importance. Some good solos by our fine native players would have been immensely appreciated.

The lighting of the hall is greatly improved. One other improvement would be welcomed: the programmes, with their lengthy and valuable notes, ought to be available before the concerts. Why not sell them with the tickets?

At the first Wagner evening Miss Austral and Mr. Widdop sang exceedingly well. I am not sure that the latter's voice, outside its present fairly wide though clearly limited area of power, and a considerable capacity for lyrical expression, has the further attributes that will allow him to develop into a true heroic tenor. His manner is good and his style attractive.

The Mozart G minor Symphony, on the first Tuesday, was a big test for an orchestra only just getting into its stride. The proceedings had been damped, earlier, by Miss Ethel Leginska's painstaking but quite undistinguished performance of the A major Concerto (K. 488). Neatness and respectable tone-grading are not sufficient in Mozart. There must be individuality, finesse—a leaven working in the thing, an effervescence of the soul, and of this Miss Leginska gave no sign that evening.

In the Symphony the players, though they did not snatch us up into the ether, at least extended themselves and gave us, from their shoulders, a glimpse of the heights. Their work in the E flat Symphony the week after was in every way happier—more delicate and assured. The first Haydn was No. 4 in the new Breitkopf edition. (As so few people have this, it would be well to announce the old number when the work has no title. Most people have no idea what work they are going to hear at present, if it is known merely by number.) This charming little experimental Symphony in D, with its naive grace, its distinction and easy resource in ideas (the slow movement, with its effective three-part harmony for strings alone, is a gem), was a taste of delights to come. The second Haydn (also in D—No. 6 in the new edition) was perhaps a trifle less interesting to anyone but the student, until we came to the rollicking Finale, that sent us all away with a hum on our lips and a lilt in our steps.

On August 14 the Dohnányi F sharp minor Suite was another delight. This charming work (an American would rightly call it 'cute'), with its set of variations—a form the composer manages with admirable artistry—is just the thing for recording. Gramophone users, amateur or professional, would enjoy it. What an ingenious, companionable fellow Dohnányi is!

The vocal soloists have performed very competently. I liked best Mr. Mostyn Thomas, who used his fine voice wisely and well in Purcell's wonderful air, 'Ye twice ten hundred deities.' Mr. Malcolm MacEachern, most astonishingly subduing his very big tone to a somewhat muffled mezza voce, went with satisfactory speed but with rather less than complete audibility through the difficult 'Haste, haste' from Bach's 'St. John' Passion. The other singers so far heard have been Miss Bella Baillie and Miss Hilda Blake, both seizing something of the Mozart spirit in operatic airs, Miss Ivy Phillips, who has too promising a voice to waste it on 'Samson' music, and Mr. Peter Dawson, than whom there is no more friendly singer. He does not go deep, but his work on the surface is something more than superficial, and he is always heard with pleasure.

Of the pianists, Signor José Iturbi has been the most striking. He chose Mendelssohn's No. 1 for some curious reason (since he is intellectually quite above it), but never let the composer sun himself on his sentimental side. This player is notably a pianist's pianist, giving high satisfaction by his musicianly qualities. Rarely have I heard power so accurately and so easily applied, shading so sure and fine, phrase-moulding so judicious and beautiful. Possibly his mind is a little cold, but his personality is exceedingly interesting.

Mr. Leon Kartun, playing Bach's Concerto in F minor (No. 5), on August 9, used a technique of a familiar Continental type, that never seems to give the best results. Playing almost entirely from the forearm, with a too little adaptable hand in scales, he gets hard outlines, and tone that sings but slightly, and so brings about a general feeling of dulness.

W. R. A.

Mr. Norman Andrew and Mr. Walter A. Barlow have passed Final Mus. Bac. at Manchester University. The Hargreaves Exhibition was awarded to Mr. George Parker.

At the Leyburn Musical Festival, on August 10, a fine performance of 'Elijah' was given by a choir augmented from Harrogate. Mr. C. L. Naylor accompanied on the organ and Mr. R. H. Adamson conducted.

Music in the Provinces

ABERYSTWYTH.—At the fourth concert given by juveniles in University Hall, on July 17, under the auspices of the National Council of Music for Wales, Sir Walford Davies was the conductor. An orchestra of seventy represented Aberystwyth, Machynlleth, and Llanfyllin, and was composed of strings, with one clarinet—played by a boy of ten. The band played the March from Handel's 'Occasional Overture,' the Minuet, Hornpipe, and Allegro from the 'Water Music,' the Gavotte from Grieg's 'Holberg Suite,' two Gavottes from Bach's Suite in D, the first movement of Bach's Violin Concerto in A minor (Mary Fleure, aged twelve, was the soloist), and pieces from 'Samson.' The children's choir, conducted by Miss Kate Griffiths, sang unison songs.

BLACKPOOL.—Excellent soloists have recently been heard at the Opera House. On August 3 a capital programme was given by Miss Olivia Hilder, Miss Joan Ashley, Mr. John Hulme, and Mr. Miroslav, the last-named playing the first movement of Tchaikovsky's Violin Concerto. On August 10 Miss Nora Delmarr and Mr. Edward Nichol were the singers, and Mr. John Dunn the violinist, with Mr. Hulme again playing pianoforte solos (Chopin and Liszt). On August 17 the performers were Miss Gladys Palmer, Mr. Hubert Cave, Mr. Miroslav, and Miss Una Truman. Mr. Walter Rummel was announced to give a recital on August 31.—Attractive programmes have been the rule at the North Pier, the artists including Miss Laura Evans-Williams, Mr. Norman Williams, Miss Muriel Brunskill, Mr. Arthur Catterall, Mr. Peter Dawson, Miss Stiles-Allen, Mr. Norman Allin, &c.—Mr. Arthur Davies is conducting popular programmes at the Tower, assisted by local soloists.

HINCKLEY.—Elgar's 'Caractacus' has had a week of open air performances in costume. The work proved to be well suited to this quasi-operatic style of presentation, and great credit is due to Mr. P. W. Powell, the conductor; Mr. A. R. Whatmore, the producer; Mr. H. J. Francis, the organizing secretary; and to the large numbers of enthusiastic workers without whom the ambitious enterprise could not have been carried through with such striking success. Crowded audiences attended during the week, many visitors coming from Warwick, Birmingham, Derby, Nottingham, Stamford, and other neighbouring centres. The South Leicestershire Advertiser of July 18 contained many large illustrations of the chief performers, and of some of the more picturesque scenes.

MONTGOMERY.—On July 26, 27, and 28, the National Council of Music for Wales held its fifth annual conference at Gregynog Hall, by invitation of the Misses Davies. Sir Walford Davies, Director, reported that the Welsh Symphony Orchestra had over a hundred members, graded into teaching members, professional members, and associate members, the latter having passed a test and being available for concerts in their own areas. The full orchestra was engaged to play at the National Eisteddfod at Pontypool, and would also play during the Welsh week at Wembley at the end of August. Sir Walford added that thirty Welsh choirs would participate in the culminating concert of that week, and others would perform daily. During the past year the Council had organized a hundred and seventeen lecture-concerts in elementary and secondary schools and elsewhere, and gifted children had been placed where they would receive sound musical and general education. Gramophones and records had been issued to schools.

IRELAND

His many friends were grieved to hear of the tragic death, by drowning, on August 1, of Mr. Leonard Shanahan, in the forty-fifth year of his age. He was professor of music at Clongowes Wood College, a brilliant organist, and a composer of promise.

Herr F. Reuter, organist of St. Mel's Cathedral, Longford, was recently made the recipient of a presentation from the choir, on his departure to take up an appointment in Buenos Aires.

Music formed a special feature of the Tailteann Games, which were held at Dublin during August 2-17. Among distinguished visitors present were Sir Henry Hadow, the Ambassador of Brazil, the Swedish Envoy and the Envoy of the Dutch Parliament, Señor da Costa, Sir Edward Lutyens, and Sir John Lavery. The inauguration Ode, by Senator Gogarty, set to music by Louis O'Brien, was performed under the composer's direction on August 3, at the Theatre Royal, the soloists being Mr. Joseph O'Mara and Mr. Michael J. Gallagher. The work gives promise of better things from Mr. O'Brien. Traditional piping and fiddling made a fair show on Bank Holiday, but the harp (including the Irish harp) did not produce a single entrant. It must be presumed that the theme of Tom Moore's 'Harp that once thro' Tara's Halls' cannot be far astray. There was only one entry for string orchestra; the traditional singing was poor. The special award for first prize-winners was won by Miss Violet Pearson, of Dublin (winner of the Plunket Greene Cup in 1921), Mr. John McCormack being the adjudicator.

Mr. John McCormack's concert on August 3 was a huge success, and the encores kept the audience till a late hour. His second concert, on August 10, was equally successful, notwithstanding the high prices of admission. Mr. McCormack has given £250 towards the fund for a central concert-hall for Dublin. He has promised to give a recital in the new building, gratuitously, as soon as it is opened.

Three operas of Irish interest were produced at the Theatre Royal, Dublin, during the week August 11-17, viz., 'Shamus O'Brien' (Villiers Stanford), with Joseph O'Mara in his original rôle; 'Sruth na Maoile' (Molyneux Palmer); and 'Shaun the Post' (Harold White), the last-named for the first time on any stage. Stanford's opera is an old favourite, and 'Sruth na Maoile' (conducted by Mr. Vincent O'Brien) had a good reception a year ago. Both were cordially received, yet the audiences were not so large as they should have been. Details of the new opera, 'Shaun the Post,' will be given in next month's issue.

THE SALZBURG FESTIVAL

BY HUBERT J. FOSS

The question how to rate the importance of the Festival of the International Society for Contemporary Music, at Salzburg, has exercised more minds than my own, particularly of those who (like me, until this year) had never been present at it. To some it is the work of cranks, produced for the benefit of cranks; to some a remote, and therefore entirely unimportant, series of performances of music by people not heard of in England; to others it is a blessed compliment to English music, in having selected four English works for the enlightenment of the Austrians; and to still others it is the most important event of the year—the idea of a life-time. But if one thinks of Salzburg without hope or prejudice, enthusiasm or scorn, without a love for either classical or modern music, but with only a love for music, its significance as an event does not come under any of the above headings.

Salzburg is just a Festival of modern music, an encouragement of talent organized by an entirely international body, a meeting-place for the music and musicians of all countries. Clearly it is vitally important; but it is neither the hope nor the condemnation of the musical activity of the day. Salzburg, curiously, is in the position of being too important and not important enough. It is a living paradox, for while it is important both as a Festival and as the only Festival of modern music, yet it is too exclusive in its appeal, and remote from everywhere except Salzburg, fully to achieve its proper end. This Festival should never be remembered as the Festival, but only as a Festival. It is at present the only volume published of a work that has obviously got to extend to twenty, or fifty. Thus, while Salzburg is unimportant for the stay-at-homes, it is not sufficiently important for the go-abroaders. Salzburg should give the lead to the world; and I feel convinced that no vital results will come of what is a very splendid effort until the international jury chooses a set of works for performance in all the musical cities of the world. The Festival, as it is, reaches far too few, however important those few may be.

The jury system will stand for this development as it does to-day, for someone must take the lead. I should, perhaps, add that if it is successful in its endeavour of propaganda, it must be prepared to withdraw at that moment when it achieves its end. At present, however, the jury stands, whether the new rule for 1925 is right or not; but the reduction of the jury's numbers from seven to three is a procedure of dangerous tendencies. Egon Wellesz (Vienna), Alfredo Casella (Rome), and André Caplet (Paris) are to choose the works for next year's performance at Venice in September, and undoubtedly their job will be far less clumsy and awkward than it has been before. It will be awkward enough indeed planning a whole Festival upon judgments made entirely from score. But it will at the same time be dangerous, for the whimsies of one, if strong enough, have no great obstacle to overcome if the whimsies of only two are opposed to them.

Apart from the scope of its appeal, a matter in which it clearly is but a child and deserves judgment as a child, I am not sure that the whole design of the Festival is right. To crowd the chosen works into four concerts each of three hours and more, is a debatable policy. Other international reunions, such as a display of printed works, should be effected, and especially the matter of performance should be more carefully considered. True, there were some exceptionally fine artists on the list of concerts, but there were also some very poor ones, and the whole must be kept steady to be satisfactory. Each branch is, I believe, supposed to provide the executants for its own works. The central committee ought, however, to be in itself absolutely assured that the chosen performers are of the first rank, particularly in interpretation. One bad performance in a Festival is enough to make us suspicious of forming judgments of works which, for all we know, are being grotesquely distorted in the way Peter Warlock's 'Curlew' was maltreated.

Yet Salzburg remains an essential of the development of modern music. It was important for its music—on the whole a most valuable anthology of European efforts, and containing only some five works that would with difficulty have graced a provincial town. Secondly, there were some performances of the highest merit. Thirdly, and by far the most important of all, this Festival has become a meeting place for musicians of all nations. The vital work, as Mr. Bernard Shaw said of the Washington Conference, is done outside the concert-hall—in the discussions and in formal talks between foreign musicians, the interchange of ideals, ideas, and practice, the discovery of European music as a vital and sometimes quite exciting thing, and not only as a promising subject for a newspaper article. As countries are seen by some in the stereoscope, so music is viewed by some through the minds of journalists. To these there is no better cure than a week devoted to Salzburg or Venice. Not only is the experience very enjoyable; it is also very broadening, very developmental, and it is full of interest and pleasure.

The concerts were held in the beautiful hall of the Mozarteum, a room particularly good for sound and pleasant as a background for music. The audiences filled the hall. The first work of the first concert was Arnold Bax's Viola Sonata, beautifully played by Mr. Lionel Tertis and Miss Harriet Cohen: the only flaw in the performance seemed to me that the dynamic level of the pianoforte was rather too low for its sonorous companion. The work is yet one more sign that Bax has reached his musical maturity, which means that what he writes is no longer promising or startling but the reasoned utterance of a well-attuned mind. The second movement is inclined to be scratchy, and there are one or two tunes which are more satisfying romantically than they are musically—e.g., the second subject of the first movement. But the third movement is particularly beautiful, and the whole is a work that, despite its super-romanticism and occasionally luscious and even spurious emotionalism, appeals to me strongly. This programme provided a work with which Bax's Sonata may be interestingly compared, i.e., Pizzetti's 'Cello Sonata. The performance was not of the same standard, for the artists were here reversed in excellence. Mr. Tertis is better than Signor Gilberto Crepax (whose style I found jerky and tone a little nasal), and Signor Casella better than Miss Cohen, with the result that the pianoforte drew more factitious attention than Pizzetti's notes gave it. Here is a work also of strong emotional bias, and which wears its heart upon its sleeve. This must not be thought to be its disadvantage in my eyes. What it did do, however, was to make me look more definitely for its musical sense, and it was in failing to discover this that I found the work dull. But the Sonata made one consider what is Bax's special quality that makes his music absolutely individual despite its occasional common emotionalism. It is not only, I think, his remote and mystical outlook, but also that in his expression he uses an 'inexhaustible store of musical invention which, once perhaps his disadvantage, now under the discipline of his experience can transform even a dull tune, even a dull thought, into a thing beautiful of itself. It is here that Pizzetti fails; his idiom is uninspired, which means that his sense of musical texture is insensitive. Again, his idiom is not diatonic in its own way, but in the way of the harmony books; his form is not æsthetic form; his thought is not his own but that of a period. The incessant reliance upon the sweetness and poise of the  $\frac{6}{4}$  chord, the fulsome emotion of his leaping sixths, his ubiquitous flattened submediant, his major thirds, his agitated diminished sevenths, are all flaws in the texture of sound; they have no meaning as music. The somewhat mawkish meditation of the composer is not interesting when expressed by these means, and the whole work is summed up by the solo recitative which opens the last movement. It is musically dull.

Heinrich Kaminski's 'Drei geistliche Lieder' for voice, clarinet, and violin, are of a totally contrasted kind. Their idiom, like the combination of instruments, is original without being unfamiliar, and my only regret was that Madame Lottie Leonard's powerful voice sometimes obscured the sound of the whole. In the first song one was particularly sensible of the beauty of the vocal line, and of the restraint with which the powerful feelings were expressed in the music. The second song was dainty, simple, and charming, and full of meaning, though I confess that at this first hearing I was a little puzzled by the significance of certain harmonies, particularly those of the closing chords. They had the obscurity of simple speech. It is in the third that the composer seems to achieve completeness of expression. It has the freshness and spirited frankness of the old Church music, admirably expressed by the clear contrapuntal idiom, and when it ends one is left with a sense of spiritual exaltation, a feeling something like that of having just drunk nectar. This was to me the most interesting German work in the whole Festival.

In Kurt Weill's 'Frauentanz'—seven songs for soprano, viola, flute, clarinet, horn, and bassoon—I was irresistibly reminded of Arthur Bliss, but it was not long before I discovered that he makes better use of his instruments. Here they are chosen with a view to certain effects, and are able to produce them, though I fancy the addition of one or two strings would have improved the ensemble, softening the whole and providing a bridge between the voice and the inflexible wood-wind. The influence of Stravinsky is very marked, and the composer has not discovered his own individuality, though that he has talent I do not for a moment doubt. His harmony is often more obscure than his meaning, as in No. 1, and the latter is sometimes just silly, as in No. 3. No. 2 is beyond me, and No. 7 fails to be dolente because it is never tranquillo. Nos. 4 and 6 are the best, the latter for its colour, and No. 5 has charm, but is too clever by half. That is the fault of the work, which is, I hope (I do not know), a juvenile production. If it is, then it shows promise; if it is not —

In Ernst Kanitz's 'Drei Lieder' we had one of the errors of the jury. Virtually, they amount to 'ballads' in the Lied style, and as examples of tricking out commonplace by ornaments they are almost unsurpassed. The singer (Mr. C. A. Case) here gave indication of how limited are his powers, but Miss Ada Golschmidt is quite an exceptional accompanist.

It was the simplicity of Ladislav Vycpalek's 'Lieder' that immediately appealed to me. These songs are original—a quality enhanced by their date (1911-1915); they are full of a great fire, and deeply spiritual, and Madame Marya Freund was able to develop from them all that they contained of emotion and musical feeling. The first ('Winterabend'), a great song, appealed to me particularly for the close musical development of its simple initial idea. The second ('Ruhe') is full of fire, but interesting chiefly for its strange harmonic idiom, which, flowing continuously, is full but angular, and uses the common triad almost as a discord. The third song ('Sonne') brought out a magnificent performance, but here the emotional intensity of the other numbers seemed to have become violence, with not such pleasing effect. The fourth ('Mysi') is brilliant, swift, beautiful both melodically and dramatically, and has a real climax. The promise of this work impressed itself deeply on me, and it stands, I find, as the most important contribution of the first concert.

After it Ernst Krenek's fourth String Quartet (Op. 24, 1924) sounded poor in contrast, mainly because of its intellectuality and the unrestrained restlessness of its march. It is, of course, three times too long, and its bare aridity and violence weary one long before the end. There is humour, but it is a cynical grin; there is counterpoint, but it is the counterpoint of the devil, not of angels. The fourth of the seven movements is to me the most memorable, and this I found strangely beautiful, with a spiritual quality lacking in all the rest of the work. The fifth and sixth movements are very interesting—more interesting than successful in my view. The ending is odd: the sixth movement returns almost to the diatonic idiom, and the seventh is a Mozartean Rondo, quite irrelevant, but a welcome relief after the intellectual note-spinning of the rest. I cannot commend the ensemble of the Züricher Tonhalle String Quartet, though the work is excessively difficult to play.

The second concert opened with a Septet, by Willem Pijper, for flute, oboe, clarinet, horn, double-bass, and pianoforte, the performance of which I imagine to have been good, though the rhythm is odd enough for the instrumentalists to have had to wait on the composer at the pianoforte. The work of a serious young man, this is not, I fancy, his best production. The scoring lacks assurance, and throughout the double-bass and pianoforte were too prominent. There is a streak of originality in this intelligent work, but it is not developed; the inspiration is self-conscious and technically jerky. In rhythm and form there is a lack of æsthetic interest, and throughout a reliance on harmonic colour that is structurally weak. The 'Passacaille' I found quite beyond my comprehension.

It is pitiable that the English works which followed the Septet—Warlock's 'The Curlew' and Vaughan Williams's 'On Wenlock Edge'—should have suffered at the hands of the performers. A more grotesque result could hardly be imagined than their presentation of 'The Curlew,' and though 'On Wenlock Edge,' having more definite features as landmarks, was better treated, it was still a travesty. I am told that the English section is to blame for this. Whatever the reason, the result was unnecessary, for if fine singers and players can be found to give adequate readings of French, German, and other works, they can be found for English works also. 'As it was, the singer, Mr. Charles Albert Case, was not even a tenor, nor was he an artist; the conductor, Herr Gruenberg (oh, that he should have been necessary!), had only the vaguest sense of the music he was directing; the instrumentalists seemed to have no power of assertion, and rhythmically distorted both works. At least, I suggest Mr. Case might have had the courtesy to know his notes (especially his leads), his words, and the correct pronunciation of the proper names, and I am sure that, apart from the competent English musicians present, there are many who would for their expenses have been glad to go to Salzburg and direct these works better than did Herr Gruenberg. I cannot speak too strongly in condemnation of the performance of 'The Curlew,' both artistically and in its results, for it gave no one a chance of assessing its extraordinarily high value. It was obviously the English work of importance at this Festival, and stands out as one of the big works of the whole series of concerts. 'On Wenlock Edge' sounded a little disappointing in its new surroundings; it seemed local, and the clumsiness of the writing was more than ever evident from the scratchy playing. The music is good enough, the workmanship poor, and though it retains my warm affection it does not seem to me one of the most valuable productions of the English revival.

Zoltan Kodály's Sonata for violin and 'cello introduced to me Herr Paul Hermann, who is certainly one of the best 'cellists I have heard; he should come to London and surprise us here. The work is over-long, particularly the second movement, but it is written with a restrained and absolutely certain mastery of musical style that alone would make it remarkable. It is original without showing any signs that it will influence anyone else; nationalist in spirit, and deriving its idiom largely from folk-music, it seems to have achieved that rare height when nationalism can also be universality. The first movement appeals to me most, and then the last, with its strong folk-tunes. It is a work of great interest.

Another exceptional artist, though one of less finish, came forward to sing Alexander Shenshin's 'Der undurchbrechliche Kreis.' Oskar Jolli has a beautiful voice, which he uses with subtlety of timbre. At present his style is overdone, but one feels that experience will reduce what are now sometimes exaggerations into a very fine method of expression. The songs themselves are very beautiful, endowed with a tranquillity often absent from modern music, and with an emotional persistence which, as in the songs of Vycpalek, appealed at once to me. The exquisite seriousness of the opening has a rare charm, and after this number I think I prefer the fourth.

This was a concert of exceptionally good (as well as exceptionally bad) performances, for the trio of the Hindemith brothers, with Licco Amar, could not have done more with Paul Hindemith's String Trio. The opening Toccata was a relief after a somewhat 'soulful' concert; the sound, however, was often muddled, and that means that the counterpoint—and there was no other interest—was poor. I found the second movement dull—wandering, formless, without melody. I have no doubt in my mind that the Hindemith-Jarnach type of music is wrong; its complete lack of spiritual content is damning. Such music is not so unsatisfactory when rhythmic and swift, like the Massig schnell section here; but when it becomes meditative it is the condemnation of itself. Meditation upon nothing is dull as a spectacle for an audience. As for the Fugue Finale, I never spotted the subject from start to finish, and should not have known it was a Fugue had not the programme said so. That, I think, cannot have been entirely my fault.

The most auspicious opening put us all in good humour at the third concert. Malipiero's 'Stornelli e Ballate,' beautifully played by the Venetian String Quartet, which has an uncommon delicacy of ensemble, is a most appealing work. But I do not like the form; its fourteen short movements, broken into three groups by the repetition of a prologue theme, is not to my private taste; there is too little continuity and development. The execution I found beautiful. The idiom is delicately original, with plenty of skilfully produced colour, and it is a particularly pleasant work to hear as sound—lucid and sonorous. More: it is a work full of character and meaning, an extraordinarily fine mixture of expressive means. It is interesting to compare this work, with its humour and levity, with the similar productions of modern Paris.

Of Erik Satie's 'Socrate' I can only say that I consider it sacrilege to apply such music to the exquisite prose of Plato. This work is half-an-hour of light music, to which any words, one would imagine, would be more appropriately matched than the death of Socrates. I cannot imagine why this travesty was included in the Festival.

Erwin Schulhoff's Vier Stücke für Streich Quartet are not big or important; as light music they are engaging, skilful, and full of humour. The Alla Tango is a little dull, but the Alla Tarantella is a compensation. The performance of the Zika Quartet was particularly good.

Of far less charm, and even less important, was Poulenc's Sonata for clarinet and bassoon. The Allegro is funny, and the Romance a beautifully written satire on the romantic ballad. The whole work is clever, but I cannot discover its raison d'être. Why write things like this?

M. Gil-Marchex did all he could for the twelve Szymanowski Studies; he played them easily and beautifully, but I cannot consider them high musical achievements, though I liked them better than some of this composer's work. They are derivative to a great degree, full particularly of Chopin and early Scriabin, but at least they are based upon purely musical ideas; my doubt is whether it is possible in so short a space as most of these studies occupy to give the full flavour of any idea of importance. Just as one becomes interested he is left to go empty away.

John Ireland's Piano-forte and 'Cello Sonata is a work of which I find it difficult to write. The performance, by Miss Beatrice Harrison and Miss Harriet Cohen, was good, though there is little doubt that the 'cello part could have been done better; Miss Harrison's tone was not very good, and she is rather inflexible. While I admire Mr. Ireland's intentions here, his achievement is so opposed to my taste in music that I am, perhaps, not a fair judge of the work. Its sincerity and utter seriousness are without question, but there seems to me to be a lack of musical invention which disqualifies it as a musical utterance. Its sentimentality and lack of humour are the result of this, and the rhapsody in which it abounds is to me dull. Further, the sound is not pleasant, the sensuous appeal small, and after long consideration I still disagree with the majority, and find the work quite unsuitable for performance at Salzburg.

The same unsuitability was apparent, in my view, in Othmar Schoeck's 'Gaselen,' for baritone, flute, oboe, bass-clarinet, trumpet, drums, and piano-forte. This seems to me a mass of humbug. More I cannot say.

The fourth concert opened with an interminable Quartet by Philip Jarnach, very skilfully performed by the Amar-Hindemith Quartet, which surely is the pianola of chamber combinations. This work is written with considerable skill—far more than most works of its type—and employs a species of contrast and a system of themes unusual in modern German music. But what a waste of good talent! Here is real ability expended upon useless, soulless, shallow sound that is only rarely beautiful to hear, and then mainly by contrast with the aridity of the neighbouring passages. Really, it is a vast concatenation of intellectual jargon, and though it is more musical than some of its fellow deserts of sound, because (particularly in Part 2) it has more pattern, more technical achievement, more invention, yet that does not affect its origin in the mind, which is what damns it as musical expression.

The two Czecho-Slovak works for piano-forte which succeeded it are facing the directly opposite way, which, apart from being a welcome contrast, is a way that will lead much further, to a much greater future. But on the whole these works were a little disappointing after Vycpalek and Shenshin. The first, an Adagio: Tempo Rubato from the Suite 'Hledání,' by Borelav Vomáčka, is based upon a very expressive first theme, romantic in spirit. The colour in this work is all provided by the harmony, and there is a noticeable lack of rhythm. It does not stay well in the memory, and its main impression at the time was one of disappointment. K. B. Jirak, whose March, Berceuse, and Scherzando from 'Na rozhraní' followed, has a more definite personality; his work has a greater firmness. The March is rhythmic music of no deep kind, but is interesting, first for its colour and also for its curious emotional quality. This is surprising, because it is conveyed almost, it seems, unconsciously by notes that are primarily facile, and it is evidently part of the composer's romantic make-up. The Berceuse is anything but original, but I liked it at once, chiefly for its real tranquillity. The Scherzando, I felt, was rather poor. Both these composers have something to say, but seem to be groping for a philosophical basis for their thought, and for a better means of musical expression. Dr. Václav Stěpán played the works with a fine musicianship, but he is obviously not a solo pianist.

Milhaud's 'Catalogue des Fleurs' does not improve upon acquaintance. I am definitely not amused by it, and if there is not amusement here, what else remains? George Auric's 'Alphabet' is greatly better than the Milhaud work, because it has a simple and natural charm. I found it quite delightful, especially No. 4, but not a whit more important than Peter Warlock's 'Candlelight'; for this playing is a side-line of music, and not, surely, as some people think, its main current. The performance by Signor Casella was magnificent, and Madame Freund's very delightful, though perhaps a little heavy. In the first work she lacked dramatic variety and pace.

Egon Wellesz's Short Suite for seven instruments, or Violin Concertante, is a pleasant enough work, beautifully written in the old forms and a not very original style. Undoubtedly his Vienna nick-name of Ravellesz is justified. The first movement, Moderato, succeeds, particularly the fugal passage, and there is a purely musical development of the themes that is attractive. The slow movement, meditative and dissonant, fails again, though the second slow movement, Largo, has a better sense of line, and is more interesting. Here, however, the harmonies are sometimes allotted to the instruments in a way that makes them sound ugly. The last movement returns to the more charming mood of the opening, and has some good melodic germs. This is a human work, however derivative one may find it.

To the eleven short lyrics on Spanish popular poems, 'Coplas,' of Mario Castelnuovo-Tedesco, which Madame Freund sang without much inspiration, applies the remark I made of the Szymanowski 'Etudes.' The work did not appeal to me. It is too heavy in outlook, the pictures it paints are not clear and clean in colour, and at the opening one has to wade through some dull passages. At No. 3 the interest begins—No. 4 is the best number—and with intermissions remains to No. 9. But the whole lacks individuality of conception and execution, and though I had looked forward to hearing the work, I was left dissatisfied at the end.

The highest achievement of the week was the performance of Stravinsky's Octet for wind instruments by the principals of the Frankfurt Opera orchestra, under Herr Hermann Scherchen. It was a superb performance that one cannot forget, of such clarity that one wonders how much modern music he has misheard through bad playing and misdirection. I found in this work a streak of beauty I had not expected, and after 'L'Histoire du Soldat' and some other recent examples it was good to hear. Technically it is the work of a master, brilliant, ingenious, and genuinely written for the instruments, not only scored for them. Yet, although it provided quite a thrilling close for the Festival, I went away with an uncomfortable sense of the decadent cleverness of the whole thing which I cannot explain. It is a clean and bold work indeed, but it does not seem to be that of a clean and bold mind. I fear I must leave my impression unexplained, but it was none the less real.

Apart from the several exceptional performances, Salzburg this year was musically of the greatest interest. The works that stand out particularly in my memory are a miscellaneous lot—Bax's Sonata, Kaminski's and Vycpalek's songs, Warlock's 'Curlew,' Shenshin's Song-Cycle, Kodály's Sonata, the Malipiero Quartet, and the Stravinsky Octet. All of these are works which have a purely musical quality combined with an emotional quality. What is noticeable is that no work of modern Germany, except Kaminski's, is here included, and I came back convinced that the German school is looking to the wrong leader. I have no hopes there.

And now one looks forward to next year's Festival at Venice. I have already made up my mind to be there.

Obituary

We regret to record the following deaths:

PHILIP WILSON, on July 26. He was born on November 29, 1887. Going to Australia in 1913, he made known there a large number of English songs, giving the first Australian performance, among other things, of Vaughan Williams's 'On Wenlock Edge.' For a time he was on the staff of the Sydney Conservatorium. He returned in 1920, and did a good deal of concert and recital work. He was co-editor with Peter Warlock of an 'untouched up' edition of the Lutenist composers. At the time of his death he was busy with editorial and literary work in connection with the English Ayre and other English music of the Elizabethan period, and he had also started a comprehensive tour of the broadcasting stations, giving lecture-recitals on Lutenist Ayres, and generally doing propaganda work for Tudor music. His early death is a severe loss to the profession in which, by his enthusiasm for all that was best in his art, he was steadily making for himself a prominent place.

FERRUCCIO BENVENUTO BUSONI, on or about July 27, at Berlin. He was born in 1866, at Empoli, near Florence. At nine he made his first public appearance at Vienna, and a few years later had established himself as one of the greatest of pianists. As a composer he had a long list of works to his credit, but, as is usual in such cases, the public refused to take him seriously save as a performer. For once the public was less wrong than it seemed to be, for it has to be admitted that his output was notable for little beyond an elaborately displayed skill. He did fine work as an arranger of Bach, especially of a number of the Choral Preludes. His immense gifts as a player were shown above all in Bach, Beethoven, and Mozart. It was announced a few days before his death that he had just completed a music-drama on the subject of Faust.

Answers to Correspondents

Questions must be of general musical interest. They must be stated simply and briefly, and if several are sent, each must be written on a separate slip. We cannot undertake to reply by post.

THE CLARINET

J. B.—(1.) We know of no 'comprehensive bibliography of clarinet music,' and we doubt if such a work exists. You will find in 'Grove,' at the end of the article on the clarinet, a list of works by the chief composers, from Mozart to Brahms, Stanford, and Coleridge-Taylor. Keep in touch with publishers and reviews for present-day works. (2.) Here are particulars of some instruction books for the instrument: Berr; this is a complete method, published by Hawkes & Son, Denman Street, W. (paper boards, 20s., cloth, 25s.). The same firm issues a tutor by Klose (same prices); a cheaper one by Langey (6s. and 9s.); and an even less costly one, 'The Simplicity Tutor' (2s.). The last-named is of course elementary. (3.) You ask if the 'simple system' is rendered obsolete by that of Boehm. We understand that, although the Boehm system is adopted by practically all the principal clarinetists, the 'simple' is still of use for ordinary purposes. (4.) We do not know if the late Oscar Street developed his 'Musical Association' (1915-16) paper on the instrument.

'ROYALTIES' AGAIN

AMPERSAND.—(1.) A composer publishing a piece on a royalty basis is not usually called on to pay a part of the cost of engraving, &c. As a rule, we should look with a doubtful eye on a publisher who made a demand of the kind. (2.) A composer can sell his work outright, of course, but the royalty system is to be preferred, for its combination of prudence and fairness.

MUSICAL JOURNALS, ETC.

K. (Lisbon).—(1.) We cannot spare space and labour to give a complete list of the musical journals we lumped together in our January 'Occasional Note.' Still less have we the courage to say 'which is the best from a general point of view,' though we have long since made up our mind on the point. You say 'The Musical Times is quite splendid, but it is more chiefly devoted to organ music and choir singing.' Far be it from us to dispute your first assertion, but we deny the second. The organ and choir side usually takes no more than a tenth part of our space. You add: 'All the songs inserted this year have been practically sacred, and not one of them is a solo song.' The 'songs' are merely supplements, and are always choral, in accordance with the custom of the journal since its inception seventy years ago. Only a half are 'practically sacred.' No musical journal in this country issues solo songs as supplements, so far as we know.

(2.) Bound volumes of the Musical Times may be had of the publishers (11s. 6d.), and covers for binding, with a complete index, are available at the end of each year (2s. 6d.). (3.) The first four of Mr. William Wallace's articles on conducting appeared in September, October, November, and December, 1923. The articles on Rheinberger's Organ Sonatas began in September, 1923.

E. V. E.—You ask us to say 'Who is the best female pianist in (a) England, and (b) the world?' We wouldn't if we could. All those you name are excellent, and all excel in different ways. Go on enjoying their playing without worrying yourself (and us) over questions which for obvious reasons cannot be settled, and which, even if they could be settled, would be of no importance.

LOVER OF HAYDN.—(1.) You can obtain odd string parts of any of Haydn's Symphonies from Novello. Single copies of wind parts are to be had in some cases, but as a rule they can be obtained only in complete sets. (2.) There is a good deal of confusion in the numbering and description of Haydn's Symphonies, and it will never disappear, because about half-a-dozen publishers have their own system. The remedy is, when ordering one of the works, to quote the opening bars.

SCHUBERTIAN.—(1.) The only recent book on Schubert known to us is one by Theodore Gerold, published by Alcan, Paris, in the series 'Les Maîtres de la Musique' (7.50 fr.). No English edition is yet available so far as we know. You can obtain the work from Novello. (2.) Try the books on Elgar by Ernest Newman and R. J. Buckley (John Lane, each 2s. 6d.). A more recent work is that of J. F. Porte; it gives biographical notes, and a complete list of his works in chronological order (Kegan Paul, 7s. 6d.).

AMBITIOUS.—Adrian Boult's 'A Handbook on the Technique of Conducting' (William Reeves, 3s.) is an excellent, concise work that should help you. We know of no book devoted specially to choral conducting.

DICKENS'S 'CHRISTMAS CAROL.'—We doubt if a record exists of the 'songs and pianoforte pieces used at the early performances of the "Christmas Carol." Can a reader help our inquirer?

M. G.—It is impossible to suggest a list of works for your choir without knowing its capabilities. It is unnecessary, too, for publishers will gladly send you 'on approval' a parcel from which you can make the choice yourself. When writing, give the publishers an idea of the style and degree of difficulty.

K. W. M.—Helmholtz's 'Sensations of Tone' is published by Messrs. Longmans, Green (30s.).

A. E. H.—(1.) It is difficult to recommend 'a book on voice-training which does not go into detail too closely.' What kind of detail? Physiological? And what is your limit of closeness? Your best plan is to take a glance at them at the publishers, and decide for yourself. Probably your public library may have some on its shelves. (2.) A pianoforte version of Grieg's Suite 'Sigurd Jorsalfar' is published by Augener, who also issue an organ arrangement of the March therefrom. (3.) Rheinberger's Organ Sonatas are issued separately, and are stocked by Novello.

R. J. H.—In Chopin's Prelude in C minor the last chord in bar 3 is C major, not minor. We have answered this question before, so evidently players are doubtful. But why? The various editions leave no room for uncertainty, and, as for the effect, we have just played the passage both ways and cannot hear the minor version of the chord without a shudder.

F. J. A. E.—The organ works of Horace Wadham Nicholl are as a whole extremely difficult. Opinion must vary as to their value. After going through the whole of his output for journalistic purposes some years ago, we ourselves found him dry. He reminded us a good deal of Reger, not only in his mastery of counterpoint and his liking for using lots of notes, but in his alternation of really fine passages with long arid stretches. But this is a purely personal view, which we do not press against the contrary opinion of the critic you quote.

L. H.—We have no copy of 'If she forsake me.' An inquiry concerning a work outside the easily-accessible classics should be accompanied by a copy, or by MS.

extracts. If the words 'appear to suggest quiet sadness' there is your cue, surely.

SOPRANO AND OTHERS.—One of the following would probably suit you: Hampstead Garden Suburb Choral Society (Mr. Frank Hamblin, 8, Clifton Gardens, Golders Green, N.W.11.); Willesden Green and Cricklewood Choral Society (Mr. C. F. W. Belchamber, 64, Cranhurst Road, N.W.2); Alexandra Palace Choral Society (Secretary, Mr. C. J. Dunn, 33, Thornby Road, E.5).

K. H. W.—See reply (2) to K. (Lisbon).

Miscellaneous

The London School of Violoncello announces that a Scholarship, tenable for three years, is open to children under fifteen years of age, who must be British subjects. The competition takes place on September 15, and entries must be received not later than September 10. Further particulars from the Secretary at the School, 10, Nottingham Place, W.1.

The Annual Medal Competitions at the Tobias Matthay Pianoforte School, resulted as follows: Senior Silver Medal, Hilda Bor; Bronze Medal, Eunice Norton; Extra Bronze Medal, Sybil Bagnall; Junior Silver Medal, Beryl Rogers; Bronze Medal, Wendy Tyler. Miss Lily West judged.

Mr. E. Sims-Hilditch, of Crewe, has been appointed University Extension Lecturer on Music at the University of Manchester.

CONTENTS.

	PAGE
Conductors and Conducting.—III. The Conductor in the Making. By William Wallace	785
The Tenor and his Song: A Complaint. By Erik Brewerton	787
George III., Handel, and Mainwaring. By William C. Smith ( Illustrated )	789
Rag-Time. By Harry Farjeon	795
Ad Libitum. By 'Feste'	797
New Light on Late Tudor Composers.—II. John Shepherd. By W. H. Grattan Flood	801
Musica as a Living Language. By Mrs. Frank Liebich	802
Mysticism in Music. By J. A. Westrup	804
Occasional Notes	805
Notation of the Horn: Some Altered Meanings. By Tom S. Wotton.	808
Debussy and Some Italian Musicians. By Andrew de Ternant	812
The Lore of the Welsh Harp. By Mary L. Lewes	814
New Music	816
Gramophone Notes. By 'Discus'	823
The Musician's Bookshelf	824
Wireless Notes. By 'Caliban'	828
Church and Organ Music	829
Royal College of Organists	829
Royal Albert Hall Organ. By George Dixon ( Illustrated )	829
Letters to the Editor	836
Sharps and Flats	838
Amateurs' Exchange	838
Trinity College of Music	839
Oxford Summer Course in Music	839
Music in Public Schools	839
Competition Festival Record	840
The National Ffisteddfod. By Alfred Kalisch	840
Promenade Concerts	842
Music in the Provinces	843
Music in Ireland	843
The Salzburg Festival, 1924. By Hubert J. Foss	844
Obituary	847
Answers to Correspondents	847
Miscellaneous	848

MUSIC.

'There is a river.' Short Anthems from 'God is our refuge and strength.' By W. G. ALCOCK ... 817
EXTRA SUPPLEMENT given with this Number:
 "Nursery Rhymes." Four Part-Song. By Adam Carse.

DURING THE LAST MONTH.

Published by NOVELLO &amp; CO., LIMITED.

A LCOCK, W. G.—“There is a river.” Short Anthem from “God is our refuge and strength.” (No. 979, The Musical Times.) 2d.

BACH, J. S.—Prelude and Fugue in G minor. Part 2, No. 16 of “The Forty-Eight.” Arranged for String Orchestra (or Quartet), by Julius Harrison. Score, 2s. 6d. Parts, 3s. 4d.

CHILD, W.—“O bone Jesu” (“O blessed Jesu”). Motet for S.A.T.B. Edited by H. G. Ley. (No. 1132, Novello's Octavo Anthems.) 4d.

FLETCHER, P. E.—“The Pilgrim Fathers.” Four-part Song. (No. 1420, Novello's Part-Song Book.) 4d.

—“The Valleys of Dream.” Trios for S.S.A. (No. 493, Novello's Trios, &c., for Female Voices.) 4d.

—“Who liveth so merry.” Old English Ballad. Arranged for S.S.A. (No. 494, Novello's Trios, &c., for Female Voices.) 4d.

HAM, ALBERT.—“Outlines of Musical Form, with Analyses from Well-known Classical Works.” (Canadian Music Text-Books, No. 3.) 5s.

HARWOOD, BASIL.—“Lead, kindly Light.” Hymn and Tune, “Bradfield College.” 2d.

KNOWLES, S.—“Nearer, my God, to Thee.” Hymn Tune. 1½d.

MACKENZIE, A. C.—“The Song of the Sickie.” Tenor Solo from “The Dream of Jubal.” 2s.

RICHARDSON, M.—“The Swallow and the Rosebud.” Song. 2s.

SIX CAROLS.—Words by Blind Poets, music by Blind Musicians. 3d.

TONIC SOL-FA SERIES:

No. 2454. “Vision of Belshazzar.” Dramatic Ballad for T.T.B.B. P. E. FLETCHER 3d.

No. 2455. “The Arethusa.” WILLIAM SHIELD. Arranged for Chorus and Orchestra. By F. M. JEPHSON 3d.

WAGNER, R.—“Bridal Chorus” from “Lohengrin.” Adapted and arranged by ALBERT HAM. 3d.

PUBLISHED FOR

THE H. W. GRAY CO., NEW YORK.

MATTHEW, G.—“Benedictus es, Domine.” For T.T.B.B. 12 cents (6d.).

VAN CAMPENHOUT, F.—“La Brabançonne.” Belgian National Anthem. Arranged and harmonized by F. T. HARRAT.

BASS WANTED, £15-£18. Vicar, St. Martin's Vicarage, Creffield Road, Acton, W.3.

A.R.C.M. would like to purchase TEACHING CONNECTION, Singing or Pianoforte. “Experienced,” c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

ORGANIST and CHOIR-TRAINER WANTED for Rothbury Parish Church. Lovely and pleasant parish. Opening for practice. Northern experience desirable. Apply Rector.

FOR SALE.—Mason & Hamlin Organ, 17 Stops, Liszt Model, in walnut. Perfect condition. 55 guineas. Reply, Wilmot, Beethoven House, Dingwall Road, Croydon.

TENOR REQUIRED for St. Matthew's, Upper Clapton, E.5. Good reader. Salary, £15 per annum. Apply, Neville Campton, 25, Forburg Road, Stoke Newington, N.16.

WILLIAM WOLLER

(Dip. Leip. Cons.)

SCHOOL OF VOICE CULTURE

AND

PIANOFORTE PLAYING,

75, GUNTERSTONE ROAD, W.14.

Complete Professional Training for SOLO PERFORMERS (Concert and Opera), and for TEACHERS.

Special WEEK-END and HOLIDAY Courses for Teachers, Choirmasters, and Organists.

Special VOICE RESTORATION Courses for misused and impaired voices.

CORRESPONDENCE COURSES BY ARRANGEMENT.

“Foremost among leading Voice Producers and Singing Masters in this country.”

“You have done more good in these few lessons than all the years under other professors.”

“It is well we have in our midst Singing Masters like Mr. Woller, who have the intuitive intelligence to apply the results of enlightened research to each individual pupil.”

SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE COURSES

1. L.R.A.M. PAPER WORK.
2. A.T.C.L. AND L.T.C.L. PAPER WORK.
3. COURSES IN RUDIMENTS, HARMONY, FORM, &c.
4. A SYSTEM OF EAR-TRAINING AND SIGHT-SINGING FROM STAFF NOTATION.

Model Workings to all Questions.

Highest recommendations. Particulars on application.

CYRIL S. CHRISTOPHER,

“Ingleside,” Rounds Green, Oldbury, Birmingham.

ST. MICHAEL'S, CORNHILL, E.C.

DR. HAROLD DARKE

WILL GIVE

SIX BACH RECITALS

ON THURSDAYS, AT SIX P.M.,

From SEPTEMBER 25th to OCTOBER 30th.

Full Programme (post free, 7d.) on application to

DR. DARKE, St. Michael's Vestry, Cornhill, E.C.3.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

To ensure insertion in their proper positions,
Advertisements for the next issue should reach the Office, 160, Wardour Street, London, W.1, not later than

FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 19 (FIRST POST).

OLD ENGLISH VIOLIN MUSIC

EDITED BY
ALFRED MOFFAT.

PREFATORY NOTE.

Although considerable attention has been given to the resuscitation of Church Music, Glee and Madrigals, Organ and even Harpsichord Music by the older English composers, very little has been done to make known the large mass of music for the Violin written by English musicians from the time of Purcell to the close of the 18th century. These works for the most part consist of Suites or Sonatas written for a solo violin with a figured bass, or for two violins and violoncello with a figured bass for the harpsichord or organ; another favourite form was the Concerto grosso.

It is with the object of making known to the public a selection of the best of these compositions that the present series has been undertaken.

ALFRED MOFFAT.

				s. d.
No. 1.	SONATA in G major	...	JAMES LATES	3 0
.. 2.	SONATA in D minor	...	HENRY ECCLES	3 0
.. 3.	SONATA in B flat major	...	WILLIAM BABELL	3 0
.. 4.	SONATA in G minor	...	JOHN STANLEY	3 0
.. 5.	SONATA in A major	...	JOHN COLLETT	3 0
.. 6.	TRIO-SONATA in E minor	...	THOMAS AUGUSTINE ARNE	4 6
.. 7.	SONATA in D major	...	RICHARD JONES	3 0
.. 8.	TRIO-SONATA in D minor	...	WILLIAM BOYCE	4 6
.. 9.	THREE PIECES	...	WILLIAM BOYCE	3 0
.. 10.	SONATA in E major	...	CHARLES MACKLEAN	3 0
.. 11.	SONATA in G minor	...	WILLIAM CROFT	3 0
.. 12.	SONATA in D minor	...	JOSEPH GIBBS	3 0
.. 13.	SONATA in D minor	...	JOHN HUMPHRIES	3 0
.. 14.	SONATA in A minor	...	THOMAS VINCENT	3 0

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

HIAWATHA'S WEDDING-FEAST

A SELECTION

FOR THE

ORGAN

COMPOSED BY

S. COLERIDGE-TAYLOR.

ARRANGED AND ADAPTED BY

HUGH BLAIR.

Price ... Four Shillings.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

"OUTLINES OF MUSICAL FORM."

BY

ALBERT HAM.

PRICE FIVE SHILLINGS.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

NEW EDITION, WITH ADDED TENOR SOLO.
MAGNIFICAT and NUNC DIMITTIS in G.

For Full Choir, Soprano and Tenor Soli, and Organ.

By JOHN J. JONES.

PRICE SIXPENCE.

Composer of "March of the Sea-Kings" (Curwen)
(First performed by Sir Dan Godfrey's Orchestra at Bournemouth).

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JOHN SEBASTIAN BACH

48 PRELUDES AND FUGUES

(THE WELL-TEMPERED CLAVICHORD)

A NEW EDITION, EDITED BY

HAROLD BROOKE.

IN TWO PARTS.

Price Four Shillings each.

Or, Complete, Cloth, Price Twelve Shillings and Sixpence.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

"Such settings as these cannot do otherwise than tend to popularise the Church Service."—Musical Standard, June 6th, 1891.
 "Good, effective, easy, and dignified."—Musical Times, April 1, 1891.
 "Admirably adapted to meet the requirements of the majority of choirs and congregations." "Deserve extensive recognition and use."
 —Musical News, September 4 and 25, 1891.
 Also recommended by the Guardian, Church Times, &c., &c.

POPULAR CHURCH MUSIC

BY

J. H. MAUNDER

HARVEST ANTHEMS.				Staff	Tonic
				Notation.	Sol-fa.
Sing to the Lord of Harvest	...	...	...	4d.	3d.
While the earth remaineth	...	...	...	4d.	3d.
Blessed be the Name of the Lord	...	...	...	4d.	3d.
SERVICES.
SERVICE IN G	...	...	...	2s.	1s. 4d.
Or, separately:—
Te Deum	...	...	...	4d.	3d.
Benedicite, omnia Opera	...	...	...	3d.	3d.
Benedictus	...	...	...	3d.	3d.
Jubilate	...	...	...	4d.	3d.
Office for the Holy Communion	...	...	...	10d.	8d.
Pater Noster from the above	...	...	...	3d.	3d.
Amen ditto	...	...	...	1½d.	1½d.
Magnificat and Nunc dimittis	...	...	...	4d.	3d.
SERVICE IN CHANT FORM (No. 1)	...	...	...	1s. 4d.	10d.
Or, separately:—
Te Deum, &c., with Kyrie	...	...	...	4d.	3d.
Office for the Holy Communion	...	...	...	8d.	6d.
Magnificat and Nunc dimittis	...	...	...	4d.	3d.
Te Deum in B flat	...	...	...	4d.	3d.
Magnificat and Nunc dimittis in C (partly Unison)	...	...	...	4d.	2d.
Magnificat and Nunc dimittis in D	...	...	...	4d.	3d.
ORGAN.
Voix Seraphique (for Recitals)	...	...	...	2s. 6d.	—
CHURCH CANTATA.
Penitence, Pardon, and Peace (for general use)	...	...	...	2s.	1s. 4d.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

ORIGINAL COMPOSITIONS

FOR THE ORGAN.

(NEW SERIES.)

No.	RECENT NUMBERS	s. d.
75.	TOCCATA AND FUGUE ("The Wanderer") C. Hubert H. Parry	3 6
77.	ANDANTE RELIGIOSO ... Alec Rowley	1 6
78.	SCHERZO ... G. J. Bennett	2 3
79.	THREE PRELUDES ... G. J. Bennett	2 3
80.	DÉSÉPOIR ... Ch. Quef	1 6
81.	CAPRICE IN D FLAT ... J. A. Sowerbutts	2 3
82.	THREE PSALM-PRELUDES, No. 1 ... H. Howells	1 6
83.	" " " " No. 2 ... H. Howells	1 6
84.	" " " " No. 3 ... H. Howells	1 6
85.	THEMA OSTINATA ... C. C. Palmer	1 6
86.	COVENANTERS' MARCH ... R. G. Hailing	1 6
87.	CHORAL MELODY ... C. F. Waters	1 6
88.	CONCERT OVERTURE IN F MINOR ... Alfred Hollins	3 0
89.	HOMAGE TO HANDEL ... S. Karg-Elert	3 6
90.	THREE SHORT AND EASY POSTLUDES (2nd Set) F. W. Wadely	2 3
91.	INTERMEZZI (No. 1, Pastorale) ... C. V. Stanford	2 0
92.	" (No. 2, Marcia Eroica) ... C. V. Stanford	2 0
93.	" (No. 3, Hush Song) ... C. V. Stanford	2 0
94.	" (No. 4, Intermezzo Founded upon an Irish air) ... C. V. Stanford	2 0
95.	CHORAL IMPROVISATION ON "DER HÖLLE PFORTEN SIND ZERSTÖRT" ... S. Karg-Elert	2 0
96.	CHORAL IMPROVISATION ON "GELOBT SEI GOTT IM HÖCHSTEN THRON" ... S. Karg-Elert	2 0
97.	SEVEN PASTELS FROM THE LAKE OF CONSTANCE S. Karg-Elert	5 6
98.	PRELUDE AND FUGUE IN C ... C. V. Stanford	2 0
99.	PRELUDE AND FUGUE IN C MINOR ... C. V. Stanford	2 0
100.	PRELUDE AND FUGUE IN B MINOR ... C. V. Stanford	2 0
101.	VARIATIONS ON AN OLD ENGLISH MELODY ("Heartsease") Geoffrey Shaw	2 0

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

A NEW AND CHEAPER EDITION

OF

A BOOK OF DESCANTS

By ALAN GRAY

ORGAN EDITION

Fcap 4to

5s net

"We commend Dr Gray's book to the attention of all organists who wish to encourage and add interest to the congregational singing in their churches."—The Music Student.

CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY PRESS
FETTER LANE, LONDON, E.C.4

ORIGINAL COMPOSITIONS

FOR THE

ORGAN

BY BASIL HARWOOD.

No.	s. d.
1. DITHYRAMB	2 6
2. COMMUNION IN F MAJOR	1 0
3. INTERLUDE IN D MAJOR	1 6
4. PÆAN	3 6
5. SHORT POSTLUDE FOR ASCENSIONTIDE	1 0
6. REQUIEM ÆTERNAM	2 3
7. ANDANTE TRANQUILLO IN E FLAT	1 6
8. CAPRICCIO	2 6
9. TWO SKETCHES	1 6
10. CONCERTO IN D MAJOR	3 0
11. THREE CATHEDRAL PRELUDES	3 0
12. SONATA No. 2, IN F SHARP MINOR	3 0
13. FANTASIA, "CHRISTMASTIDE"	3 6
14. RHAPSODY	3 0
15. IN AN OLD ABBEY	2 0

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

NEW AND ENLARGED EDITION.

Cathedral Organists

PAST AND PRESENT.

A Record of the Succession of Organists

OF THE

CATHEDRALS, CHAPELS ROYAL, AND PRINCIPAL
COLLEGIATE CHURCHES OF THE
UNITED KINGDOM.

From about the period of the Reformation until the present day.

With Biographical Notes, Extracts from the Chapter
Books, Anecdotes, &c.

BY

JOHN E. WEST.

Price Seven Shillings net.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

HARVEST FESTIVAL MUSIC.

CANTATAS.

A GOLDEN HARVEST

FOR TENOR AND BASS SOLI AND CHORUS
WITH HYMNS TO BE SUNG BY THE CONGREGATION

THE WORDS AND HYMNS SELECTED AND WRITTEN BY

H. KNIGHT

THE MUSIC BY

THOMAS ADAMS.

Price One Shilling and Sixpence.

Tonic Sol-fa, 1s.; Words only, 9s. 6d. per 100.

THE RAINBOW OF PEACE

FOR TENOR AND BASS SOLI, CHORUS, AND ORGAN

THE MUSIC BY

THOMAS ADAMS.

Price One Shilling and Sixpence.

Words only, 9s. 6d. per 100.

HARVEST-TIDE

FOR TENOR AND BASS SOLI, CHORUS, AND ORGAN
OR SMALL ORCHESTRA

THE MUSIC BY

HUGH BLAIR.

Price One Shilling and Sixpence; Tonic Sol-fa, One Shilling.

Words only, 6s. 6d. per 100.

Full Score and Orchestral Parts can be hired.

HARVEST CANTATA

FOR CHORUS, SEMI-CHORUS, AND ORGAN.

THE WORDS SELECTED AND WRITTEN BY

J. F. WALLER

THE MUSIC BY

G. M. GARRETT.

Price One Shilling and Sixpence.

Tonic Sol-fa, 8d. Words only, 6s. 6d. per 100; or 3d. each with Music to the Hymns. Full Score and Orchestral Parts can be hired.

RUTH

FOR SOPRANO, CONTRALTO, AND BASS SOLI
AND CHORUS

THE WORDS BY

E. OXENFORD

THE MUSIC BY

ALFRED R. GAUL.

Price Three Shillings; Paper boards, Four Shillings.

Tonic Sol-fa, 1s. Choruses only, 1s. 6d. Book of Words, 6s. 6d. per 100.

Full Score and Orchestral parts can be hired.

HARVEST CANTATA

FOR SOPRANO (OR TENOR) AND CONTRALTO (OR BARITONE) SOLI AND CHORUS

THE WORDS BY

R. D. BETJEMANN

THE MUSIC BY

JULIUS HARRISON.

Price One Shilling and Sixpence.

Tonic Sol-fa, 1s.; Words only, 6s. 6d. per 100.

SONG OF THANKSGIVING

FOR SOPRANO, TENOR, AND BASS (OR CONTRALTO)
SOLI AND CHORUS.

WITH HYMNS TO BE SUNG BY THE CONGREGATION

THE WORDS WRITTEN AND ARRANGED BY

S. WENSLEY

THE MUSIC BY

J. H. MAUNDER.

Price Two Shillings and Sixpence;

Paper boards, Three Shillings and Sixpence.

Tonic Sol-fa, 1s.; Words only, 12s. 6d. per 100;

String Parts, price 13s. 6d.; Wind Parts, 21s. 5d.; Full Score, MS.

THE JUBILEE CANTATA

FOR SOLO VOICES, CHORUS, AND ORCHESTRA

THE MUSIC BY

C. M. WEBER.

Price One Shilling and Sixpence.

Paper boards, Two Shillings and Sixpence.

Words only, 9s. 6d. per 100.

String Parts, 12s.; Wind Parts, 9s. 8d.; Full Score on hire.

SEED-TIME AND HARVEST

FOR SOPRANO AND TENOR SOLI AND CHORUS

THE MUSIC BY

JOHN E. WEST.

Price Three Shillings.

Tonic Sol-fa, 1s. 6d.

Words only, 6s. 6d. per 100; or 3d. each with Music to the Hymns.

Orchestral Parts can be hired.

A HARVEST SONG

FOR SOPRANO SOLO AND CHORUS

THE WORDS BY

J. BENNETT.

THE MUSIC BY

C. LEE WILLIAMS.

Price Two Shillings and Sixpence.

Words only, 6s. 6d. per 100.

String Parts, 9s. 9d.; Full Score and Wind Parts, MS.

HYMNS AND CAROLS.

BARNBY, J.—Come, ye thankful people, come ... ..	1½d.
Harvest-tide thanksgiving, The. (Tonic Sol-fa, 1½d.) ...	2d.
Words only, per 100 ... ..	2s.
Let all our brethren join in one ... ..	1½d.
Words only, per 100 ... ..	3s.
Lord of the harvest, Thee we hail (Two Versions) each	3d.
O Lord of heaven and earth and sea ... ..	1½d.
Praise, O praise, our God and King ... ..	3d.
Sing to the Lord a joyful song ... ..	3d.
Sower went forth sowing, The. (Tonic Sol-fa, 1½d.) ...	2d.
BUNNETT, ED.—Sing to the Lord a joyful song ... ..	1½d.
CRAMENT, J. M.—Sowing and reaping (Carol) ... ..	2d.
Words only, per 100 ... ..	2s.
GILBERT, B.—Come, ye thankful people, come ... ..	1½d.

HARVEY, W. C.—We thank Thee Lord for this fair earth (Children's voices) (Staff and Sol-fa Notations) ... ..	1½d.
HERVEY, F. A. J.—Make melody within your hearts (Carol)	2d.
LEE, T.—King and Ruler of Creation ... ..	4d.
LOWE, A.—Holy is the seed-time (Carol) ... ..	2d.
Words only, per 100 ... ..	3s.
MAUNDER, J. H.—Harvest Hymn of praise, A. (Tonic Sol-fa, 1½d.) ... ..	3d.
Words only, per 100 ... ..	3s.
Joy of Harvest, The. (Tonic Sol-fa, 1½d.) ... ..	3d.
Words only, per 100 ... ..	3s.
STIRLING, E.—Now Autumn strews on every plain ... ..	2d.
TOZER, F.—Lord of the rich and golden grain ... ..	3d.
Words only, per 100 ... ..	3s.
TWELVE HYMNS selected from The Hymnary ... ..	1½d.

NOVELLO'S HARVEST ANTHEMS

SELECTED LIST.

LET THE PEOPLE PRAISE THEE. By PERCY E. FLETCHER.

Price Twopence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

THOMAS ADAMS

ALL THY WORKS PRAISE THEE

Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Threepence.

IT IS A GOOD THING TO GIVE THANKS

Price Twopence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

W. G. ALCOCK

GIVE EAR, O YE HEAVENS

Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

E. C. BAIRSTOW

I WILL GREATLY REJOICE

Price Fourpence.

J. BARBY

THE EYES OF ALL WAIT UPON THEE

Price Twopence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

HUGH BLAIR

OH, BRING TO THE LORD

Price Fourpence.

A. HERBERT BREWER

LET THE PEOPLE PRAISE THEE

Price Twopence.

EDWARD BUNNETT

BLESSED BE THOU, LORD GOD

Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

O CLAP YOUR HANDS

Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

PERCY C. BUCK

GOD BE MERCIFUL UNTO US

For Boys' Voices.
Price Fourpence.

H. A. CHAMBERS

IF YE WALK IN MY STATUTES

Price Twopence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

EDWARD ELGAR

FEAR NOT, O LAND

Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Threepence.

MYLES B. FOSTER

PRAISE WAITETH FOR THEE, O GOD

Price Twopence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

ALFRED R. GAUL

O BE JOYFUL IN THE LORD

Price Twopence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

A. M. GOODHART

LET US NOW FEAR THE LORD

Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Threepence.

CUTHBERT HARRIS

AND GOD SAID

Price Twopence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

SING A SONG OF PRAISE

Price Twopence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

ALFRED HOLLINS

GOD THE ALL-FATHERLY

Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Threepence.

ALBERT LOWE

THE EARTH IS THE LORD'S

Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Threepence.

ARTHUR W. MARCHANT

I WILL MAGNIFY THEE

Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

GEORGE C. MARTIN

THUS SAITH THE LORD GOD

Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Threepence.

E. W. NAYLOR

I WILL CAUSE THE SHOWER

Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

J. VARLEY ROBERTS

BLESS THE LORD THY GOD

Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

I WILL MAGNIFY THEE

Price Fourpence.

BRUCE STEANE

COME, YE THANKFUL PEOPLE, COME

Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

HERBERT W. WAREING

THE LORD GOD PLANTED A GARDEN

Price Twopence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

HAROLD E. WATTS

THE GOD OF ABRAHAM PRAISE

Price Twopence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

JOHN E. WEST

PRAISE TO GOD, IMMORTAL PRAISE

Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

FATHER OF MERCIES, GOD OF LOVE

Arranged for Boys' or Female Voices.
Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Threepence.

W. WOLSTENHOLME

O THAT MEN WOULD PRAISE THE LORD

Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

— TO —

ORGANISTS

TWO USEFUL SOLOS FOR RECITAL OR CHURCH—

By DR. HUGH BLAIR.

Two notable compositions of Dr. Blair in widely different styles. The 'Festal Scherzo' is a brilliant piece of organ writing, opening allegro con spirito with a grandioso middle section and Finale. The 'Sunset Hour' is a delightful rêverie suggested by the 'Alpine-glow' at Grindelwald.

'Festal Scherzo,' 'The Sunset Hour.' Both of Moderate Difficulty. Price, each, 1s. 6d.

'EASY PIECES FOR ORGAN'—

Edited by ALEC ROWLEY.

While of an easy grade, the works contained in these volumes are typical of the composers' varying styles. In the realm of organ music British composers have perhaps attained greater prominence than in any other branch of composition.

'Easy Pieces for Organ' by British Composers. In Two Books. Edited by Alec Rowley. Grade: Very Easy to Easy. Price 2s. each.

Book I. Contents: Allegretto con Grazia, Farjeon; Andante Grazioso, Alan Gray; Berceuse, John E. Campbell; Interlude, John E. Campbell; Menuetto, G. St. George; Postlude in G, E. d'Eury; Prelude in E flat, J. Stuart Archer; Rêverie in E flat, E. d'Eury.

Book II. Contents: A Little Fancy, John E. Campbell; Andante Piacevole, Ernest Halsey; Berceuse, J. Stuart Archer; Minuet, Charlton Palmer; Pastorale in F, William Faulkes; Postlude in D, Henry Rogers.

VARIATIONS OF DISTINCTION—

Two Sets by J. STUART ARCHER.

Dedicated to the famous French organist, Marcel Dupré, and played by him at the opening of the Westminster Cathedral organ, 'Five Short Variations on a Scots Air' are at once scholarly and musically attractive. The composer, who is well known for this type of work, has taken the familiar tune 'Gala Water,' and draped around it a decorative dressing admirable in form and development, and showing a fund of inventive resource.

In 'Six Short Variations on an Irish Air' the theme employed is the traditional tune to which the hymn 'At the marriage-feast in Cana' is sung in the Decies part of the province of Munster. The original air which the composer gives out in his introduction is an appealing lento theme. This is next developed in an Andante, which gives place to a Duet, followed by a Scherzino and Fughetta. The original theme is then re-stated in the form of a Romance, with added beauty in chordal development, ending in a spirited Finale in toccata form.

'Five Short Variations on a Scots Air' ('Gala Water'). Price 2s.
'Six Short Variations on an Irish Air.' Price 2s. 6d. Both by J. Stuart Archer, and of Moderate Difficulty.

TWO ORGAN WORKS OF MERIT—

'Carillon' and 'Cradle Song.'

By PURCELL J. MANSFIELD.

Mr. Purcell J. Mansfield enjoys an enviable reputation as organist and composer. These two works are in his happiest vein. In 'Carillon,' a toccata theme, the bell impression is cleverly suggested. 'Cradle Song' is a melodious inspiration in which notable use is made of the flute and oboe stops.

'Carillon.' Grade: Moderate. Price 2s. 'Cradle Song.' Grade Moderately Easy. Price 1s. 6d. Both by Purcell J. Mansfield.

'EIGHT SHORT PIECES FOR ORGAN'—

A useful album for players needing pedal practice, by J. STUART ARCHER.

This volume is designed to fill an undoubted gap in organ music for unadvanced players by the use of easy and progressive pedal obligatos. As the composer points out, beginners at the organ usually possess a certain amount of manual technique, but directly the simplest pedal obligato is added they find themselves faced with a difficulty which is only overcome after a considerable amount of sustained effort. To provide those who are not gifted with over much application with some readily mastered pieces, as well as to encourage those who find their first steps in serious study irksome, Mr. Stuart Archer has written eight well-varied and tuneful pieces—'Quasi Minuetto,' 'Moderato in D,' 'Andante in F,' 'Ostinato,' 'Andante in G,' 'Wedding Song,' 'Romance,' and 'March in C.' Though the pedal part is rendered as simple as possible, the music as a whole is of a calibre to repay serious attention.

'Eight Short Pieces with Easy and Progressive Pedal Obligatos' (2-7 notes), by J. Stuart Archer. Grade: Moderately Easy to Moderate. Price 3s.

— TO —

CHOIRMASTERS

A NOBLE WORK FOR CHOIRS AND CHORAL SOCIETIES—

'A World Requiem.'

By JOHN FOULDS.

Fittingly described as a war memorial in music, a 'cenotaph in sound,' the production of this impressive work at the Albert Hall on Armistice Day, 1923, is still fresh in the public memory. After that performance 'A World Requiem' was everywhere spoken of as a great and inspired effort to express in music the tribute of the living to the memory of the glorious dead.

Though it interprets the noble solemnity of the subject, the music is not unduly mournful or sombre. There are many passages of striking melodic beauty, while the work abounds with masterly choral effects and brilliant touches of modernism, both in the vocal and orchestral writing, that lend it distinction. Such words as 'colossal' and 'enormous' have been used with reference to the first production of 'A World Requiem,' but, though the work naturally gains in effect with large numbers of performers, great forces are not essential to its success. It may be performed by small choirs of 20 voices, with organ; or by larger choirs with string orchestra and organ; or by the average choral society of about 250 voices with orchestra of about 60. The 1923 Albert Hall performance is to be repeated annually on Armistice Night in London as a festival commemoration for all who fell in the Great War, and the proceeds will be devoted to Earl Haig's appeal for ex-service men of all ranks (British Legion).

'A World Requiem,' by John Foulds, Op. 60.
Piano and Vocal Score. Price 5s. Excerpts from the work for performance by Choirs, Festival Chorus, &c., are also published. Price 6d. each.

SIX NEW PART-SONGS FOR MIXED VOICES.

In these works the publishers have hit upon the unique idea of arranging famous compositions as part-songs for mixed voices. Thus we have 'Welcome to May,' which, on investigation, proves to be none other than Mendelssohn's 'Bees' Wedding'; Schumann's 'Traumerei' under the title of 'Dreaming,' and our old friend Raff's 'Cavatina' in an effective new dress with the title 'At Eventide.' The 'Song of the Volga Boatmen' and the 'Londonderry Air' are treated in similar fashion. The sixth work, 'The Fruits of Love,' is an original composition with a suggestion of the modern.

'Welcome to May' (Founded on Mendelssohn's 'The Bees' Wedding') (O.N.) 3d., (S.F.) 2d.; 'Dreaming' (Founded on Schumann's 'Traumerei') (O.N.) 3d., (S.F.) 2d.; 'At Eventide' (Founded on Raff's 'Cavatina') (O.N.) 4d., (S.F.) 2d.; 'Londonderry Air' (Founded on the Traditional Irish Melody) (O.N.) 3d., (S.F.) 2d.; 'Song of the Volga Boatmen' (Founded on the Traditional Russian Folk-Song) (O.N.) 3d., (S.F.) 2d.; 'Fruits of Love' (with Bass Solo), by Leslie Woodgate, (O.N.) 3d., (S.F.) 2d.

TWO NEW ANTHEMS—

'Forward be our Watchword' and 'Come, ye Children.'

Two representative anthems by organist-composers of eminence. Dr. Hugh Blair has a fine reputation as a church musician, and his output of choral and organ works is very considerable. Children's voices are never better in ensemble than when singing in march rhythm, and the fact that 'Forward be our Watchword' is written in spirited march time will commend itself to leaders of children's choirs.

J. Stuart Archer is one of the younger school of composers who have done so much to infuse life and colour into church music. 'Come, ye Children' is a musically offering wherein a bass solo is introduced with artistic effect.

'Forward be our Watchword,' by Hugh Blair, Processional Anthem suitable for Anniversary or Flower Services. Price, O.N. 4d., S.F. 2d. 'Come, ye Children,' by J. Stuart Archer, Anthem for General Use. S.A.T.B., with Bass Solo. Price, O.N. 4d., S.F. 2d.

BACH'S 'ST. MATTHEW' PASSION—

A New Edition.

Bach's 'St. Matthew' Passion is undoubtedly one of the greatest of all oratorios, and it is surprising that it is not more frequently sung by choral societies as a variant from 'The Messiah' and other well-tried works. This edition, which was adopted as the official edition for the Welsh National Eisteddfod, is unique in the fact that it combines old notation and tonic sol-fa in one volume. This, of course, is a great advantage to choral societies. The edition is carefully edited and exceptionally well produced.

The Passion according to St. Matthew, by J. S. Bach. Old Notation and Tonic Sol-fa combined. Price 3s.

The above publications can be obtained of all Music Dealers or the Publishers—

W. PAXTON & CO., LTD., 22, HIGH STREET,
NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON, W.C.1.

Send for complete Catalogues, Organ, C.501; Choral, C.201, post free. Ask to see copies through our 'On Approval' Department.

INSTRUCTION BOOKS FOR THE VOICE.

GUSTAV GARCIA A GUIDE TO SOLO SINGING

Price 3s. ; Paper Boards, 4s.

H. H. HULBERT. BREATHING FOR VOICE- PRODUCTION

Price 3s. ; Paper Boards, 4s.

AGNES J. LARKCOM THE SINGER'S ART

Price 1s. 6d.

RICHARD MANN A MANUAL OF SINGING

Price 1s. 6d.

MARGARET NICHOLLS SCHOOL CHOIR TRAINING

Price 3s.

ALBERTO RANDEGGER SINGING

Price 6s. ; Paper Boards, 7s.

J. STOCKHAUSEN METHOD OF SINGING

Price 6s. ; Paper Boards, 7s.

D. C. TAYLOR SELF-HELP FOR SINGERS

Price 2s. 6d. ; Paper Boards, 3s. 6d.

VOCAL EXERCISES FOR ALL VOICES

WITH MARKS OF EXPRESSION AND PHRASING

BY

ALBERTO RANDEGGER.

MARCO BORDOGNI TWENTY-FOUR VOCAL EXERCISES FOR MEZZO-SOPRANO

Price 2s. 6d.

CONCONE

50 Lessons for the Medium Part of the Voice.
(Cloth, 4s. 6d.)

25 Lessons. A Sequel to the Fifty Lessons for the Medium Part of the Voice.

15 Vocalises. A Sequel to the Twenty-five Lessons for the Medium Part of the Voice.
Ditto. For Mezzo-Soprano or Contralto.

40 Lessons for Contralto.

40 Lessons for Bass or Baritone.

Price 2s. 6d. each.

AUGUSTE PANSEON FORTY MELODIC AND PROGRESSIVE VOCAL EXERCISES

FOR SOPRANO AND TENOR

IN TWO PARTS.

Part I. Containing Nos. 1 to 26. Part II. Containing Nos. 27 to 40.

Price 3s. each Part.

FORTY-TWO MELODIC AND PROGRES- SIVE VOCAL EXERCISES

FOR CONTRALTO, BARITONE, OR BASS

IN TWO PARTS.

Part I. Containing Nos. 1 to 29. Part II. Containing Nos. 30 to 42.

Price 3s. each Part.

FIFTY VOCALISES FOR TWO VOICES SOPRANO AND MEZZO-SOPRANO, OR TENOR AND SOPRANO, OR TENOR AND BARITONE.

IN TWO PARTS.

Part I. Containing Nos. 1 to 30. Part II. Containing Nos. 31 to 50.

Price 3s. each Part.

PROGRESSIVE STUDIES FOR THE VOICE

WITH PIANOFORTE ACCOMPANIMENT

BY

GEORG HENSCHEL.

PART I.

STUDIES IN SUSTAINED SINGING.

PART II.

STUDIES IN FLORAL SINGING.

Each Part published for High, Medium, or Low Voice.

Price 4s. each.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

NOVELLO'S

POPULAR PIANOFORTE ALBUMS

FOR YOUNG PERFORMERS.

HUBERT BATH DOLL'S-HOUSE SUITE

Price Three Shillings.

FRANCESCO BERGER EIGHTEEN LITTLE PIECES

Price Two Shillings and Sixpence.

J. D. DAVIS. FOUR LITTLE PIECES

Price Two Shillings and Threepence.

EDMONDSTOUNE DUNCAN HAPPY THOUGHTS

Price Three Shillings.

ARNOLD KRUG TEN LITTLE PIECES

Op. 109.

In two Books. Price Two Shillings and Threepence each.

ARNOLD KRUG SCENES FROM FAIRY-LAND

In two Books. Price Three Shillings each.

TH. KULLAK TWENTY-FOUR PIECES

Op. 62 AND 81.

In four Books. Price One Shilling and Sixpence each.

MAX MAYER BAGATELLES

Price Four Shillings.

MENDELSSOHN SIX CHRISTMAS PIECES

Price One Shilling and Sixpence.

ERNEST NEWTON WOODLAND DANCES

Price Three Shillings.

ERNEST NEWTON ROMANY LIFE

Price Three Shillings.

HUBERT G. OKE THREE PIECES

Price Three Shillings.

SCHUMANN PIECES FOR THE YOUNG

Part I., Price 1s. 6d.; Part II., Price 1s. 6d.

SCHUMANN THREE PIANOFORTE SONATAS

(Part III. of Pieces for the Young).

Price One Shilling and Sixpence.

CLEMENT M. SPURLING SIX SHORT AND EASY PIECES

Price Three Shillings.

CLEMENT M. SPURLING OUR VILLAGE IN SUMMER

Price Two Shillings and Threepence.

E. A. SYDENHAM SIX SHORT AND EASY PIECES

Price Three Shillings.

TSCHAIKOWSKY CHRISTMAS ALBUM

In three Books. Price One Shilling and Sixpence each.

FRANCESCO BERGER FIRST STEPS AT THE PIANOFORTE

PRICE FOUR SHILLINGS.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

FOLK-SONGS WHICH ARE CREATING A GREAT SENSATION.

NEGRO SPIRITUALS

BY

HENRY THACKER BURLEIGH.

The plantation songs known as "Spirituals" are the spontaneous outbursts of intense religious fervour, and had their origin chiefly in camp meetings, and other religious exercises.

Over Thirty numbers with pianoforte accompaniment are now issued in keys to suit all voices. Price 2s. net each. Complete List giving the title, key, and compass of each number can be had post free on application. Apply for it now. All the numbers published are being sung; but for those who may not be acquainted with these famous Folk-Songs we recommend the following to begin with.

Solos with Pianoforte Accompaniment. Price 2s. net each.

SWING LOW, SWEET CHARIOT. F (C-D) and A<sup>b</sup>.
I GOT A ROBE ("Heaven, Heaven") A (E-C).
GO DOWN, MOSES. G min. (D-D) and B min.
STEAL AWAY TO JESUS. F (F-D) and A<sup>b</sup>.
OH, DIDN'T IT RAIN. G (D-D) and A<sup>b</sup>, &c.
'TIS ME, O LORD. A<sup>b</sup> (A<sup>b</sup>-E<sup>b</sup>).

I STOOD ON DE RIBBER OB JERDON. F (C-C) and A<sup>b</sup>.
DEEP RIVER. C (G-E) D, and F.
I WANT TO BE READY. E<sup>b</sup> (B<sup>b</sup>-E<sup>b</sup>).
O, PETER, GO RING DEM BELLS. F (C-F) and A<sup>b</sup>.
HARD TRIALS. E<sup>b</sup> (E<sup>b</sup>-E<sup>b</sup>), &c.
LITTLE DAVID, PLAY ON YOUR HARP. F (C-D) and A<sup>b</sup>.

NEGRO SPIRITUALS BY H. T. BURLEIGH.

Arranged as Quartets for Mixed Voices (s.c.t.b.). Price 9d. net each.

COULDN'T HEAR NOBODY PRAY.
GO DOWN, MOSES.
I GOT A ROBE ("Heaven, Heaven").

SINNER, PLEASE DOAN LET DIS HARVES' PASS.
MY LORD, WHAT A MORNIN'!
SWING LOW, SWEET CHARIOT.

NEGRO SPIRITUALS BY H. T. BURLEIGH.

Arranged as Trios for Female Voices (s.s.c.). Price 9d. net each.

BALM IN GILEAD.
BY AN' BY.
DE GOSPEL TRAIN.
DEEP RIVER.
GO DOWN, MOSES.
HARD TRIALS.
I DON'T FEEL NO-WAYS TIRED.
I GOT A ROBE ("Heaven, Heaven").

I WANT TO BE READY.
MY WAY'S CLOUDY.
NOBODY KNOWS DE TROUBLE I'VE SEEN.
OH, DIDN'T IT RAIN.
SINNER, PLEASE DOAN LET DIS HARVES' PASS.
SOMETIMES I FEEL LIKE A MOTHERLESS CHILD.
SWING LOW, SWEET CHARIOT.
WEEPIN' MARY.

NEGRO SPIRITUALS BY H. T. BURLEIGH.

Arranged as Quartets for Male Voices (t.t.b.b.). Price 9d. net each.

DEEP RIVER.
DE GOSPEL TRAIN.
GO DOWN, MOSES.

O, PETER, GO RING DEM BELLS.
SWING LOW, SWEET CHARIOT.
I GOT A ROBE ("Heaven, Heaven").

VERDI'S "REQUIEM."

Staff Notation, with Pianoforte Accompaniment. 6s. net. Tonic Sol-fa, 3s. net.

The Chorus parts (Men's and Women's), with Latin words, the Full Score and Orchestral parts of this magnificent work, may be hired from the Publishers.

Duration of performance—One hour and a half.

G. RICORDI & Co., 265, Regent Street, London, W.1.

NOVELLO'S HANDBOOKS FOR MUSICIANS.

EDITED BY ERNEST NEWMAN.

CHORAL TECHNIQUE AND INTERPRETATION

BY

HENRY COWARD.

MUS. DOC., OXON.

*Published as a Net Book.Price, Cloth, gilt, Seven Shillings and Sixpence net.*THE TEACHING AND ACCOMPANIMENT OF PLAINSONG

BY

FRANCIS BURGESS.

Published as a Net Book.Price, Cloth, gilt, Five Shillings and Sixpence net.

THE

Interpretation of the Music of the 17th &amp; 18th Centuries

AS REVEALED BY CONTEMPORARY EVIDENCE

BY

ARNOLD DOLMETSCH.

Published as a Net Book.Price, Cloth, gilt, Fifteen Shillings net.

APPENDIX

CONTAINING TWENTY-TWO ILLUSTRATIVE PIECES.

Price Five Shillings and Sixpence.

THE

SOURCES OF KEYBOARD MUSIC IN ENGLAND

BY

CHARLES VAN DEN BORREN.

Professor of the Université Nouvelle of Brussels.

TRANSLATED FROM THE FRENCH BY

JAMES E. MATTHEW.

Published as a Net Book.Price, Cloth, gilt, Ten Shillings and Sixpence net.

THE THEORY OF HARMONY

An Inquiry into the Natural Principles of Harmony, with an examination of the chief systems of Harmony from Rameau to the present day.

BY

MATTHEW SHIRLAW,

MUS.D., F.R.C.O.

(Lecturer in Music, University of Edinburgh, &c.)Published as a Net Book.Price, Cloth, gilt, Fifteen Shillings net.

THE ORGAN WORKS OF BACH

BY

HARVEY GRACE.

With an Introduction by ERNEST NEWMAN.

Published as a Net Book.Price, Cloth, Nine Shillings net.

LONDON : NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

PATERSON'S AUTUMN NOVELTIES

"TEN MINUTES DAILY"

(THE NEW CZERNY)

Exercises on Pianoforte Technique by

PRICE 2s. 6d. J. MICHAEL DIACK PRICE 2s. 6d.

HAROLD SAMUEL says:

"Should prove most useful, and I shall most decidedly recommend them to my pupils."

FRANCESCO BERGER, Hon. R.A.M., says:

"Your Exercises are not only good, they are excellent, and cannot fail to be of extreme benefit to pianoforte students."

FREDERICK DAWSON says:

"Excellent examples of the type of study that I always recommend to students for acquiring a genuine pianoforte technique."

MYRA HESS says:

"These exercises cover the ground of all the most prominent technical difficulties."

JULIUS HARRISON says:

"I must indeed compliment you on the thoroughness with which you have dealt with the subject of piano technique. The book should prove extremely useful, for you have clothed your subject with some really musical phrases, which should go far to lessen the boredom that the pupil usually evinces when the subject of exercises is mentioned."

DANCE MOVEMENTS from BACH

Selected from the Suites and arranged for pianoforte.

Price ... .. 2s.

FOLK-SONG RECREATIONS

By PAUL ZILCHER

Seven well-known songs simply arranged for pianoforte.

Price ... .. 2s. 6d.

CHORAL WORKS BY J. S. BACH

THE Peasant Cantata

ARRANGED FOR
SOPRANO, BARITONE, CHORUS, AND SMALL ORCHESTRA.

Staff	...	...	3s.
Sol-fa	...	...	1s. 6d.
Choruses	...	...	1s. 6d.

THE Coffee Cantata

ARRANGED FOR
SOPRANO, TENOR, BARITONE,
CHORUS, AND SMALL ORCHESTRA

Staff	...	...	2s. 6d.
Choruses	...	...	1s.

THE Hundredth Psalm

ARRANGED BY IVOR ATKINS
FOR SEMI-CHORUS, CHORUS, AND ORCHESTRA.

Staff	...	...	2s.
Sol-fa	...	...	1s.

PATERSON SONS & CO., LTD.

152, BUCHANAN STREET, GLASGOW.

95, WIMPOLE STREET, LONDON, W.1.

REEVES' LIST.

(PUBLISHED AT NET PRICES).

WITH THE GREAT COMPOSERS. A Series of Pen Pictures exhibiting in the form of Interviews the Personal Characteristics as Artists of the World's great Tone Poets. Illustrated with portraits. By Gerald Cumberland. Crown 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d.

THEORY OF MUSIC FOR YOUNG MUSICIANS. By M. Sharp, L.L.C.M. Paper, 1s.; limp cloth, 1s. 6d. Ready September 16.

ART OF VIOLONCELLO PLAYING. Complete Tutor. By E. van der Straeten. Text in French and English. Book 1, 3s.

"THE IMMORTAL NINE."

BEETHOVEN'S NINE SYMPHONIES Fully Described and Analysed. A Series of Chapters giving a complete account of Thematic Material and auxiliary motives: an Analytical Chart of each Movement: full Technical Descriptions of Developments: Particulars of Formal and Rhythmic features: Epitomical Tables, &c. Illustrated by 637 Musical Examples. By Edwin Evans (Senior), Author of "Handbook to the Works of Brahms." &c. Cloth, Vol. I. (Nos. 1 to 5), 10s. 6d. Vol. II., completing the work (in October), 10s. 6d.

THE BYRD ORGAN BOOK, for Piano or Organ.—A collection of 21 Pieces (Pavans, Galliards, &c.), by William Byrd. 1543-1623, edited from the Virginal MSS. and now published in Modern Notation. By M. H. Glyn, in two books, 3s. each, or complete, 5s.

ABOUT ELIZABETHAN VIRGINAL MUSIC AND ITS COMPOSERS.—By M. H. Glyn, 7s. 6d.

BOW INSTRUMENTS.—Their Form and Construction. Practical Detailed Investigation and Experiments regarding Vibration, Sound Results, and Construction. By J. W. Giltay. Enghlished by the author and E. van der Straeten. With diagrams. 8vo, cloth, 8s. 6d.; paper, 6s. 6d.

HANDEL'S "MESSIAH." The Oratorio and its History.—A Handbook of Hints and Aids to its Public Performance, with Notes on each Movement, and much original Information. By J. Allanson Benson. 2s.

THE VIOLIN, its History and Construction.—Illustrated and described from all Sources. List of Tyrolese and Italian Makers. With 29 Illustrations and Folding Plates. Enghlished by J. Broadhouse, from Abele & Niederheithmann. Cloth, 4s. 6d.; paper, 3s.

PRIMARY COURSE IN THE RUDIMENTS OF MUSIC, with Hints on answering Questions (Written work) for All Examinations in the Primary, Elementary, and Preparatory Grades. By Wilson Manhire, L.R.A.M., &c. 1s.

EXAMINATION CANDIDATE'S GUIDE to Scale and Arpeggio Piano Playing (with Tests).—All that is required for the Various Exams. By Wilson Manhire. 2s.

CANDIDATE'S SCALE AND ARPEGGIO TESTS for the Piano. By Wilson Manhire. 9d.

YOUNG VIOLINIST'S SCALE AND ARPEGGIO MANUAL.—With Directions. By Wilson Manhire. Folio. Text and Music. 2s.

70 PREPARATORY VIOLIN EXERCISES for Beginners, in the First Position.—Carefully Graduated. By Wilson Manhire. 2s.

GUIDE FOR THE YOUNG COMPOSER.—Hints on Composition, with examples of Easy Application. By Rev. E. H. Melling, F.R.C.O. (Author of "Extemporising (Piano) Made Easy"). Cloth, 2s. 8d.; paper, 1s. 6d.

STUDIES IN MODULATION, Practical and Theoretical. By Percy Baker, F.R.C.O., &c. Cloth 3s.; paper, 2s.

OPERA STORIES OF TO-DAY AND YESTERDAY, Retold Act by Act (including Wagner's "The Ring"). By Edmondstone Duncan. Complete, cloth, 4s. 6d.; or in 2 vols., paper, 1s. 6d. each.

THE SPIRIT OF MUSIC FROM EAST TO WEST IN NATURE, ART, AND LEGEND.—Penned in 16 articles for General Reading, with Drawings of Eastern Musical Instruments. By C. P. Green (Author of "Some Aspects of Chinese Music"). Crown 8vo, cloth, 4s. 6d.

HOW TO LISTEN TO GOOD MUSIC and Encourage the Taste in Instrumental and Vocal Music.—For Listener and Executant. By K. Broadley Greene. Cloth, 4s. 6d.; or in 2 Books, paper, 1s. 6d. each.

MODERN ORGAN BUILDING.—A Practical Explanation and Description of Organ Construction. With especial regard to Pneumatic Action and Chapters on Tuning, Voicing, &c. 76 Illustrations drawn to scale and reproduced from Actual Working Drawings, together with diagrams, tables, &c. By W. & T. Lewis. Second Ed., corrected and added to in text and illustrations. 4to, extra gilt, cloth, 17s. 6d.; or cloth, 15s. 6d. Postage 1s.

* * * Catalogue B, containing full list of our works on Biography, History, Criticism, Aesthetics, Essays, Organ, Orchestra, Piano, Violin, Vocal, and Wagner. Sent anywhere, post free.

LONDON: 83, CHARING CROSS ROAD, W.C.

Save Half the Cost of your Music Library

by buying from Foyles. Call and inspect the exceptionally wide range of second-hand copies (in good condition) of Standard Text-Books at about Half Published Prices.

Including amongst others the Works of STEWART MACPHERSON, MATTHAY, Mrs. CURWEN, OAKEY, PARRY, PEARCE, PETERSON, PROUT, and others. GROVE'S DICTIONARY OF MUSIC AND MUSICIANS, THE MUSICAL EDUCATOR (5 Vols., 25s.), and CURWEN'S PUBLICATIONS.

If unable to call, write, mentioning requirements or interests. A special quotation and a copy of Foyle's Catalogue 122 will then be sent free of charge.

ORCHESTRAL, STRING, VOCAL, ORATORIO, AND PIANOFORTE MUSIC

Foyles hold a wide range at greatly reduced prices.

NEW MUSIC AND TEXT-BOOKS

Foyles supply on the best terms and guarantee quick delivery.

MUSIC AND BOOKS PURCHASED; BEST PRICES PAID.

FOYLE'S MUSIC DEPT.,

121-125, CHARING CROSS ROAD,
LONDON, W.C.2.

50 LESSONS IN SINGING.

J. CONCONE. Op. 9.

FOR MEDIUM REGISTERS OF THE VOICE.

VOCALISED AND EDITED BY

W. H. GRIFFITHS.

Concone's great guide-book to vocal art has helped many a singer on the road to fame. The exercises that he devised more than a century ago have been followed by the most eminent teachers down to the present day, and even in these enlightened days it is generally conceded that Concone's principles cannot be improved. The feature that makes this new edition particularly useful is the fact that it is vocalised throughout, that is to say, the exercises are sung to all the vowels. In this it marks a great improvement on other editions issued in the past which were limited in their field owing to the fact that they advocated that these lessons should be sung only to the open vowel AH. Mr. W. H. Griffiths, however, rightly points out that Concone presented a much wider interpretative spirit, for in the preface to his earliest editions it is clearly indicated that the exercises should be vocalised throughout. In vocalising this new edition, therefore, Mr. Griffiths has been led to follow more strictly the original intentions and instructions of one of the greatest teachers of his day.

BOOK I. (Lessons 1 to 25)	29001a	...	...	Price 1s. 6d.
BOOK II. (Lessons 26 to 50)	29001b	...	...	Price 1s. 6d.
COMPLETE (Lessons 1 to 50)	29001	...	...	Price 3s. 0d.

Of all Music Dealers, or if offer No. 17 is mentioned, POST FREE, from:

W. PAXTON & Co., Ltd.,

22, HIGH STREET, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON, W.C.1.

A free specimen copy will be sent to bona-fide teachers of singing sending card and enclosing 3d. to cover postage.

Send for Complete Vocal Catalogue, (C. 201), post free.

THE SHAFTS OF CUPID

SONG.

THE WORDS BY

FRED G. BOWLES.

THE MUSIC BY

PERCY E. FLETCHER.

IN THREE KEYS.

PRICE TWO SHILLINGS EACH.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

SONGS

BY

ERNEST FARRAR.

BRITTANY

(Words by E. W. LUCAS).

THREE KEYS.

Price One Shilling and Sixpence each.

O MISTRESS MINE

(Words by SHAKESPEARE).

TWO KEYS.

Price Two Shillings each.

TWO PASTORALS

COME YOU, MARY.

WHO WOULD SHEPHERD PIPES
FORSAKE.

(Words by NORMAN GALE).

TWO KEYS.

Price Two Shillings each.

TWO SONGS

DIAPHENIA.

(Words by H. CONSTABLE).

THE LOVER'S APPEAL.

(Words by Sir F. WYATT).

TWO KEYS.

Price Two Shillings each.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

TWO SONGS

FROM

SHAKESPEARE.

1. O MISTRESS MINE.

2. COME AWAY, DEATH.

SET TO MUSIC BY

B. J. DALE.

Op. 9.

Price Two Shillings each.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

TWO NEW SOLOS

FOR THE ORGAN

BY

MARTIN SHAW

ENTITLED

NOON

AND

THE RIDE.

Price One Shilling and Sixpence net each.

J. B. CRAMER & Co., LTD.,

139, NEW BOND STREET, W.1.

HIAWATHA'S WEDDING-FEAST

AND

THE DEATH OF MINNEHAHA

COMPOSED BY

S. COLERIDGE-TAYLOR.

ARRANGED FOR PIANOFORTE SOLO

BY

JOHN POINTER.

Price, Five Shillings and Sixpence each.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

T. MEE PATTISON'S POPULAR CANTATA

THE ANCIENT MARINER

33rd 1,000.

Vocal Score, 2s. 6d. Choruses only, 1s. 3d.

Band Parts may be hired.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

COMPETITION FESTIVAL MUSIC

PUBLISHED BY NOVELLO & CO., LTD.

VIOLIN SOLOS WITH PIANOFORTE ACCOMPANIMENT.

	s.	d.		s.	d.
BREWER, A. H. Auf Wiedersehen ... ..	3	0	MACCUNN, H. Romance in G ... ..	3	0
CARSE, A. Suite in four movements ... ..	4	0	MACKENZIE, A. C. Benedictus ... ..	3	0
COLERIDGE-TAYLOR, S. Ballade in D minor ... ..	3	0	— Distant Chimes (Op. 89) ... ..	3	0
— Four Characteristic Waltzes (Op. 22) ... ..	4	6	— Saltarello ... ..	3	0
COWEN, F. H. Minuet d'Amour ... ..	3	0	— Zingaresca (Op. 37, No. 1) ... ..	3	0
DAVIES, H. WALFORD. Solemn Melody ... ..	2	3	MARKS, J. C. Réverie ... ..	3	0
ELGAR, E. Chanson de Matin (Op. 15, No. 1) ... ..	3	0	NESVERA, J. Berceuse Bohémienne ... ..	1	6
— Chanson de Nuit (Op. 15, No. 2) ... ..	2	3	NEWTON, E. Eight Easy Melodies ... ..	4	6
— Mazurka (Op. 10, No. ... ..	3	0	PARRY, C. H. H. Bourrée (Suite in F, Lady Radnor's Suite) ... ..	2	3
GERMAN, E. Bourrée and Gigue (Much Ado About Nothing) ... ..	4	0	— Capriccioso (Suite in D) ... ..	2	3
— Pavane (Romeo and Juliet) ... ..	3	0	— Twelve Short Pieces, in 3 sets ... ..	each set	4	0
— Three Dances (Henry VIII.) ... ..	4	6	RAFF. Cavatina ... ..	1	6
GOUNOD. Judex from "Mors et Vita ... ..	3	0	REED, W. H. A la Campagne ... ..	3	0
HAYNES, BATTISON. Idyll ... ..	3	0	SCHUMANN. Träumerei ... ..	1	6
HOLBROOKE, J. Souvenir de Printemps (Op. 23, No. 6) ... ..	3	0	SITT, H. Bunte Blätter (twelve easy pieces, in 4 books) ... ..	each book	3	0
IRELAND, J. Bagatelle ... ..	3	0	WARNER, H. W. Elegie ... ..	2	3
LEMARE, E. H. Andantino ... ..	3	0	WOLSTENHOLME, W. Allegretto ... ..	2	3
LLOYD, C. H. Six Easy Pieces ... ..	4	6

PIANOFORTE SOLOS.

	s.	d.		s.	d.
ARENSKY, A. Prelude in F minor (Op. 42, No. 1) ... ..	3	0	LANGE, G. Two Hungarian Dances (Op. 266) :
— Romance in A flat (Op. 42, No. 2) ... ..	3	0	1. Isteni Czárdás ... ..	2	3
BACH. Bourrée in C ... ..	2	3	2. Rozsabokar Czárdás ... ..	2	3
— Gavotte in B minor from Violin Sonata (Saint-Saëns) ... ..	2	0	MENDELSSOHN. Perpetuum mobile (Op. 119) ... ..	3	0
BEETHOVEN. Andante in F (Klindworth) ... ..	3	0	— Prelude and Fugue in E minor (Klindworth) ... ..	3	0
— Two Rondos (Op. 51, No. 1 in C, No. 2 in G) (Klindworth) ... ..	3	0	— Scherzo in G minor from Octet (Op. 20) (Kihl) ... ..	3	0
COLERIDGE-TAYLOR, S. Valse de la Reine ... ..	2	3	RUBINSTEIN. Barcarolle (Op. 30) ... ..	2	3
DALCROZE, JACQUES. Four Characteristic Dances ... ..	3	0	— Melody in F ... ..	1	6
ESIPOFF, S. Ballade. G minor ... ..	3	0	SAINT-SAËNS. Gavotte in C minor ... ..	2	3
— Cantique d'Amour ... ..	3	0	— Mazurka in G minor ... ..	3	0
FLETCHER, PERCY E. Valse Lyrique ("Smile of Spring") ... ..	2	3	SCHUBERT. Impromptu in B flat (Klindworth) ... ..	3	0
HANDEL. Aria con Variazioni ("The Harmonious Blacksmith") (Klindworth) ... ..	2	3	SCHUMANN. Arabesque in C major (Op. 18) ... ..	1	6
— Fugue in E minor (Klindworth) ... ..	2	3	— Three Romances (Op. 28) ... ..	1	6
HAYDN. Andante con Variations in F minor (Klindworth) ... ..	3	0	SCOTT-BAKER, H. Pantomime ... ..	3	0
HENSELT, A. Si oiseau j'étais, A toi je volerais! (Op. 2, No. 5) (Pachmann) ... ..	2	3	SPINDLER, F. Husarenritt (Op. 140) ... ..	3	0
— Wiegenslied (Op. 45) (Chanson de Berceau) (Pachmann) ... ..	2	3	STRELEZKI. Miniature ... ..	2	3
HOFMANN, H. From Golden Days (Op. 34, No. 3) ... ..	1	6	— Valse Impromptu ... ..	2	3
— Puck (Op. 37, No. 9) ... ..	2	3	TSCHAIKOWSKY. Marche Militaire ... ..	3	0
HUMMEL, J. N. Rondo in E flat (Op. 11) (Klindworth) ... ..	3	0	— Valse Scherzo in A major ... ..	3	0
— Rondo in B minor (Op. 109) (Klindworth) ... ..	3	0	WEBER. Rondo brillant (E flat) (Op. 62) (Klindworth) ... ..	3	0
			WEBSTER, ERIC. Vignettes (Three Pieces) ... ..	3	0
			WENDT, T. Cantique d'Amour ... ..	2	3
			WEST, A. H. Toccata ... ..	3	0

SONGS.

SOPRANO.	s.	d.	TENOR.	s.	d.
DVORÁK. Invocation ... ..	2	0	FARRAR, E. O Mistress Mine ... ..	2	0
ELGAR, E. Oh soft was the song ... ..	2	0	MACKENZIE, A. C. While my lady sleepeth ... ..	1	6
FARRAR, E. Brittany ... ..	1	6	PARRY, C. H. H. God breaketh the battle ... ..	2	0
MACKENZIE, A. C. Cross and Crown ... ..	2	0	SOMERVILLE, R. Invocation to the Dawn ... ..	2	0
PURCELL. Evening Hymn ... ..	2	0	WAGNER. Walter's Prize Song ... ..	2	0
CONTRALTO.			BASS.
COLERIDGE-TAYLOR, S. Soul's Expression ... ..	4	0	BENEDICT. Rage, thou angry storm ... ..	2	0
DVORÁK. Infammatu ... ..	2	0	DALE, B. J. O mistress mine ... ..	2	0
ELGAR, E. A child asleep ... ..	2	0	GREENE, M. Like the young God of wine ... ..	2	0
GLUCK. Thou art gone, alas, for ever ... ..	2	0	HARTY, HAMILTON. Homeward ... ..	2	0
PARRY, C. H. H. Ballad of Meshullemeth ... ..	2	0	SMYTH, E. M. Chryssilla ... ..	2	0

Specimens of every kind of music will be forwarded on application. To ensure a satisfactory selection, the Syllabus of the last Festival should accompany the request.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

COMPETITION FESTIVAL MUSIC

PUBLISHED BY NOVELLO & CO., LTD.

MIXED VOICES.

BAIRSTOW, E. C. Dawn of Song, The ... ..	4d.	MEWEN, J. B. Let me the canakin clink ... ..	6d.
BANTOCK, GRANVILLE. Awake, awake ... ..	4d.	Links o' love, The... ..	2d.
Grass of Parnassus ... ..	4d.	PARRY, C. H. H. Music, when soft voices die ... ..	3d.
On Himalay... ..	4d.	My delight and thy delight ... ..	4d.
BRAHMS. Dirge of Dardula, The (Op. 42, No. 3) ... ..	6d.	Sweet day, so cool... ..	3d.
COLERIDGE-TAYLOR. Evening Star, The ... ..	2d.	There rolls the deep ... ..	3d.
Lee Shore, The ... ..	4d.	REED, W. H. My lady fell a-sighing ... ..	4d.
CORNELIUS, P. Hero's rest (Op. 19) ... ..	4d.	SHAW, GEOFFREY. Who would true valour see ... ..	4d.
O death! thou art the tranquil night (Op. 11, No. 1) ... ..	6d.	STANFORD, C. V. Corydon, arise ... ..	4d.
ELGAR, E. After many a dusty mile (arr.) ... ..	4d.	Phœbe ... ..	4d.
Death on the hills ... ..	8d.	SULLIVAN, A. When love and beauty ... ..	8d.
Feasting I watch (arr.) ... ..	4d.	WALTHOW, R. H. Sleep... ..	2d.
Go, song of mine ... ..	8d.	WEST, JOHN E. How eloquent ... ..	4d.
Shower, The ... ..	6d.	Woodmen, shepherds, come away ... ..	4d.
FLETCHER, PERCY E. Folly's Song ... ..	4d.	WILLIAMS, C. LEE. Song of the Pedlar ... ..	4d.
GARDINER, H. BALFOUR. Cargoes ... ..	4d.	WILLIAMS, R. VAUGHAN. Fain would I change that	3d.
Old song resung, An ... ..	6d.	note ... ..	3d.
GERMAN, E. Chase, The ... ..	4d.	WOOD, CHARLES. Full fathom five ... ..	3d.
London Town ... ..	6d.
My bonnie lass, she smileth ... ..	4d.

ELIZABETHAN MADRIGALS.

BATESON. Hark! hear you not... ..	4d.	MORLEY. Arise, awake, you silly shepherds ... ..	4d.
BENET. All creatures now are merry-minded ... ..	4d.	Shoot, false love, I care not ... ..	4d.
BYRD. I joy not in no earthly bliss ... ..	4d.	TOMKINS. Oyes! has any found a lad... ..	2d.
This sweet and merry month of May... ..	4d.	Weep no more ... ..	2d.
FARMER. I thought my love, that I should overtake you ... ..	4d.	WEELKES. As Vesta was from Latmos' Hill descending ... ..	4d.
GIBBONS, ORLANDO. Ah! dere heart ... ..	2d.	Lady, your eye ... ..	4d.
I tremble not at noise of war ... ..	4d.	WILBYE. Adieu, sweet Amarillis ... ..	3d.
MARSTON. Nymphs and shepherds ... ..	4d.	Alas! what hope of speeding ... ..	3d.
		Lady Oriana, The... ..	4d.

MALE VOICES (T.T.B.B.).

BANTOCK, GRANVILLE. Festival Song ... ..	6d.	FLETCHER, PERCY E. Sailor's Return, The ... ..	6d.
Give a rouse ... ..	4d.	Vision of Belshazzar, The ... ..	4d.
How sleep the brave ... ..	4d.	GARDINER, H. BALFOUR. Sir Eglamore ... ..	4d.
BOYCE, E. Dirge ... ..	3d.	GERMAN, E. O peaceful night ... ..	4d.
CARSE, A. The tide rises, the tide falls ... ..	3d.	Sleeping ... ..	4d.
CORNELIUS, P. Rider's Song, The ... ..	6d.	HEGAR, F. Phantom Host, The ... ..	8d.
DAVIES, H. WALFORD. Hymn before Action ... ..	4d.	LLOYD, C. H. Wet sheet and a flowing sea ... ..	4d.
DUNHILL, T. F. Full fathom five ... ..	4d.	SCHUMANN. Night March, The (Op. 62, No. 1) ... ..	4d.
It was a lover and his lass ... ..	4d.	Song of Freedom (Op. 62, No. 2) ... ..	4d.
Who is Sylvia? ... ..	3d.	SOMERVELL, A. Soldier, rest ... ..	4d.
Wind and the rain, The ... ..	4d.	WEST, JOHN E. John Peel (Old English Song) ... ..	4d.
ELGAR, E. Reveille, The ... ..	8d.	WILLIAMS, R. VAUGHAN. Bushes and briars (Folk-	3d.
Wanderer, The ... ..	4d.	Song) ... ..	3d.
Zut! zut! zut! ... ..	4d.	WOOD, CHARLES. Down in yon summer vale ... ..	3d.

FEMALE VOICES.

ATKINS, IVOR. Sea Song, A. (S.A.) ... ..	4d.	FLETCHER, PERCY E. *Dream, baby. (S.S.A.) ... ..	4d.
BERLIOZ. Ophelia. (S.A.)... ..	4d.	*Oh the merry May. (S.S.A.) ... ..	4d.
BOUGHTON, RUTLAND. Piper's Song. (S.S.A.)... ..	3d.	GERMAN, E. Beauteous morn. (S.S.A.) ... ..	4d.
BRAHMS. *Barcarolle (Op. 44, No. 3). (S.S.A.) ... ..	2d.	O lovely May. (S.S.A.) ... ..	4d.
Gardener, The (Op. 17, No. 3). (S.S.A.) ... ..	4d.	HOLST, G. *Now sleeps the crimson petal. (S.S.A.A.) ... ..	3d.
*Now all the roses (Op. 44, No. 7). (S.S.A.A.) ... ..	4d.	*O swallow, swallow. (S.S.A.) ... ..	3d.
COLERIDGE-TAYLOR, S. Encinctured with a twine of		*Splendour falls, The. (S.S.A.A.) ... ..	4d.
leaves. (S.S.A.) ... ..	4d.	*Sweet and low. (S.S.A.A.) ... ..	4d.
From the green heart of the waters. (S.S.A.) ... ..	4d.	*Tears, idle tears (S.S.A.A.) ... ..	3d.
DAVIES, H. WALFORD. Cradle Song, A. (S.S.A.) ... ..	4d.	SHAW, GEOFFREY. Three Hymns from Pan's
Lamb, The. (S.S.A.) ... ..	4d.	Anniversary:—
Shepherd, The. (S.S.A.) ... ..	4d.	Of Pan we sing. (S.S.A.)... ..	6d.
ELGAR, E. Christmas greeting, A. (S.A.) ... ..	8d.	Pan is our all. (S.S.A.A.) ... ..	4d.
My love dwelt in a northern land (arr.). (S.S.A.) ... ..	4d.	If yet Pan's orgies. (S.S.A.A.) ... ..	4d.
Stars of the summer night. (S.A.) ... ..	8d.	WILLIAMS, R. VAUGHAN. Sound sleep. (S.S.A.) ... ..	6d.
		WOOD, CHARLES. La Fileuse. (S.A.) ... ..	4d.

ELIZABETHAN MADRIGALS (ARRANGED).

*BATESON. Nightingale, The. (S.S.A.) ... ..	2d.	MORLEY. *My bonny lass she smileth. (S.S.A.A.) ... ..	4d.
*BYRDE. Look downe, O Lord. (S.S.A.A.) ... ..	3d.	*Now is the month of maying. (S.S.A.A.) ... ..	3d.
*EDWARDS. In going to my lonely bed (S.S.A.A.)... ..	3d.	WEELKES. *Nightingale, The. (S.S.A.) ... ..	3d.
*GIBBONS, ORLANDO. The silver swan. (S.S.A.A.) ... ..	2d.	WILBYE. *Seek sweet content. (S.S.A.) Adapted from the madrigal—"Fly love, to heaven!" ... ..	2d.

* Unaccompanied.

UNISON SONG FOR MASSED VOICES.

Words by WHITTIER.

WORSHIP.
PRICE TWOPENCE.

Music by GEOFFREY SHAW.

Specimens of every kind of music will be forwarded on application. To ensure a satisfactory selection, the Syllabus of the last Festival should accompany the request.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

FOUR CHARACTERISTIC WALTZES

1. VALSE BOHEMIENNE.

3. VALSE DE LA REINE.

2. VALSE RUSTIQUE.

4. VALSE MAURESQUE.

COMPOSED BY

S. COLERIDGE-TAYLOR.

(Op. 22).

PIANOFORTE SOLO.

PRICE, COMPLETE, FOUR SHILLINGS; SEPARATELY, 2s. 3d. EACH.

	s.	d.		s.	d.
Violin and Pianoforte ... .. complete	4	6	Full Score (Full Orchestra) ... ..	11	6
Violin and Pianoforte ... .. separately, each	2	3	Full Score (Small Orchestra), MS.
String Parts for Full or Small Orchestra ... ..	9	0	Arrangements, as Quintets, for Pianoforte and
Wind Parts for Small Orchestra ... ..	10	5	Strings, each Number ... ..	3	0
Ditto, for Full Orchestra ... ..	17	5	Separate String Parts, 8d. each.
			Military Band Arrangement ... ..	19	0

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

WORKS BY E. J. MOERAN.

TWO SONGS

THE BEAN FLOWER.

IMPROMPTU IN MARCH.

FOR HIGH VOICE AND PIANO.

Price Two Shillings net.

STALHAM RIVER

BALLADE FOR PIANOFORTE.

Price Two Shillings net.

TOCCATA

FOR PIANOFORTE.

Price Three Shillings net.

SONATA

FOR VIOLIN AND PIANOFORTE.

Price Seven Shillings and Sixpence net.

STRING QUARTET IN A MINOR.

Miniature Score ... ..	Price 3s. net.
Parts ... ..	Price 6s. net.

Within a very short time, E. J. Moeran has established for himself a prominent position among the younger British composers. His String Quartet and his Violin Sonata have already been most cordially received by lovers of chamber music. "Stalham River," a tone-picture of the Norfolk Broads, is a truly English piece of musical landscape painting, while the "Toccata" is a brilliant and original piece of pianistic writing by no means devoid of poetical mood. The two songs are imbued with the spirit of folk-song, of which the composer has made so profound a study, without being in the least imitative as regards external features.

J. &amp; W. CHESTER, LTD., 11, Great Marlborough Street, London, W.1.

THE MUSICAL TIMES

AND SINGING-CLASS CIRCULAR

FOUNDED IN 1844

PUBLISHED ON THE FIRST OF EVERY MONTH

No. 980.—Vol. 65
Registered at the General Post
Office for Canadian Postage

OCTOBER 1 1924

Price 6d.; Postage 2d.
Annual Subscription, post-free, 7s. 6d.

ROYAL CHORAL SOCIETY.

ROYAL ALBERT HALL.

Patron - HIS MAJESTY THE KING.

General Conductor - - MR. H. L. BALFOUR.

FIFTY-FOURTH SEASON, 1924-1925.

SATURDAY, OCTOBER 18, 1924, at 2.30 p.m.

ELIJAH - - - MENDELSSOHN

Conductor: MR. ALBERT COATES.
MISS CARRIE TUBB. | MISS DOROTHY CLARK.
MR. FRANK WEBSTER. | MR. HORACE STEVENS.

SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 15, 1924, at 2.30 p.m.

THE SPIRIT OF ENGLAND - - ELGAR
MASS IN D - - - ETHEL SMYTH

Conductor: DR. MALCOLM SARGENT.
MISS DORIS VANE | MISS ASTRA DESMOND.
MR. JOHN ADAMS. | MR. JOSEPH FARRINGTON.

SATURDAY, DECEMBER 20, 1924, at 2.30 p.m.

CAROLS

Conductor: MR. H. L. BALFOUR.
MISS MEGAN FOSTER. | MISS OLGA HALEY.
MR. PARRY JONES. | MR. PETER DAWSON.

SATURDAY, JANUARY 3, 1925, at 2.30 p.m.

MESSIAH - - - HANDEL

Conductor: MR. H. L. BALFOUR
MISS FLORA WOODMAN. | MISS PHYLLIS LETT.
MR. BEN DAVIES. | MR. ROBERT RADFORD.

SATURDAY, JANUARY 31, 1925, at 2.30 p.m.

HIAWATHA - COLERIDGE-TAYLOR

Conductor: MR. EUGENE GOOSSENS.
MISS DOROTHY SILK.
MR. WILLIAM BOLAND. | MR. HAROLD WILLIAMS.

SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 28, 1925, at 2.30 p.m.

THE DREAM OF GERONTIUS - ELGAR

MISS MARGARET BALFOUR.
MR. JOHN BOOTH. | MR. CHARLES KNOWLES.

SATURDAY, MARCH 21, 1925, at 2.30 p.m.

MASS IN B MINOR - - - BACH

Conductor: MR. HAMILTON HARTY.
MISS CAROLINE HATCHARD.
MISS MURIEL BRUNSKILL.
MR. ARCHIBALD WINTER. | MR. HERBERT HEYNER.

GOOD FRIDAY, APRIL 10, 1925, at 2.30 p.m.

MESSIAH - - - HANDEL

Conductor: DR. E. C. BAIRSTOW.
MISS RUTH VINCENT. | MISS CLARA SERENA.
MR. FRANK MULLINGS. | MR. NORMAN ALLIN.

THIS IS NOT A SUBSCRIPTION CONCERT.

DOUBLE CHORUS OF 850 VOICES.

THE ROYAL ALBERT HALL ORCHESTRA.

At the Organ - MR. R. ARNOLD GREIR.

Of the EIGHT CONCERTS to be given, Seven, including the Carol Concert on December 20, will be comprised in the Subscription Series. Prices of Subscription for these Seven Concerts: Stalls, £2 14s. 6d.; Arena, £1 19s.; Balcony (Reserved), £1 7s. 6d.
Prices of Tickets for each Concert: Stalls, 10s. 6d.; Arena, 7s. 6d.; Balcony (Reserved), 5s.; Unreserved, 3s. 6d.; Gallery (Promenade), 2s.
Subscribers' names will be received and tickets issued at the Booking Office, Royal Albert Hall, and the usual Agents.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

YORK GATE, MARLYBONE ROAD, LONDON, N.W.1.

Instituted 1822. Incorporated by Royal Charter, 1830.

Patron: HIS MAJESTY THE KING.

President: H.R.H. THE DUKE OF CONNAUGHT, K.G.

Principal: JOHN B. McEWEN, M.A., F.R.A.M.

A SPECIAL COURSE FOR THE TRAINING OF CONDUCTORS has been instituted.

A SPECIAL TEACHERS' TRAINING COURSE has been arranged to meet the requirements of The Teachers' Registration Council.

FORTNIGHTLY CONCERTS, Saturdays, October 11 and 25, at 3.

L.R.A.M. CHRISTMAS EXAMINATION. Last day for entry, October 31.

J. A. CREIGHTON, Secretary.

THE ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

PRINCE CONSORT ROAD, SOUTH KENSINGTON, S.W.7.

(Incorporated by Royal Charter, 1883.)

Patron: HIS MAJESTY THE KING.

President: H.R.H. THE PRINCE OF WALES, K.G.

Director: SIR HUGH P. ALLEN, M.A., Mus. Doc.

Honorary Secretary: GEORGE A. MACMILLAN, Esq., D.Litt.

Registrar: CLAUDE AVELING, Esq., M.A.

The College offers a Complete Course of Musical Education to pupils of both sexes, both professional and amateur. Upwards of seventy Scholarships and Exhibitions are founded which provide free musical education.

SPECIAL CLASSES for CONDUCTING and TRAINING of TEACHERS have been instituted.

The OPERATIC and BALLET CLASSES have the use of the fully equipped College OPERA THEATRE with SUNKEN ORCHESTRA.

Examinations for the Associateship of the College (A.R.C.M.) in all subjects held three times a year in December, April, and September.

Guildhall School of Music.

(CORPORATION OF LONDON.)

VICTORIA EMBANKMENT, E.C.4.

PRINCIPAL: SIR LANDON RONALD, F.R.A.M., F.R.C.M., &c.

PRIVATE LESSONS in all Musical Subjects, and STAGE TRAINING in Elocution, Gesture, Dancing, Opera.

Complete Musical Education at inclusive fees, £9 9s. and £12 12s. Opera Class, Saturdays. Special Training Course for Teachers (approved by Teachers' Registration Council).

Prospectus and Syllabus of Local Centres and Schools Examinations (open to general public) free.

Telephone: Cent. 4459. H. SAXE WYNDHAM, Secretary.

MR. HERBERT HODGE will give an Organ Recital (1,829th) at St. Nicholas Cole Abbey, on October 7th and every Tuesday at 1 p.m.

A BACH RECITAL will be given by Mr. Herbert Hodge at St. Stephen's, Walbrook, on October 9th, at 1.10 p.m.

The Royal College of Organists.

THE SOLO-PLAYING TESTS for the next F.R.C.O. EXAMINATION are:

Prelude and Fugue in C, 9-8 time, J. S. Bach. (Novello, Book 9, p. 156; Augener, p. 69; Peters, Vol. 2, No. 7.)

Fantasia in G major (without Fugue), C. Hubert H. Parry, Original Compositions for the Organ (New Series), No. 22. (Novello.)

Adagio espressivo, from the Symphony in C, Schumann. Stainer's arrangements, No. 5, p. 54. (Novello.) This arrangement only.

The 10 selected pieces and the book set for the Essay for the January, 1925, A.R.C.O. Examination, are the same as those set for July, 1924.

All Candidates for the next Examinations must send in their names for FELLOWSHIP by DECEMBER 11th, for ASSOCIATESHIP by DECEMBER 18th. In the case of NEW MEMBERS proposal forms duly filled up must be sent in before DECEMBER 4th. No names will be entered after the above dates.

The Choir-Training Certificate Examination will take place during the week beginning November 3rd. Entries must be received by the Registrar not later than Monday, October 6th. Application for Membership (or re-election) must be made on a proposal form to be obtained on application. This form must be duly filled up and returned to the Registrar, with the Membership Subscription, not later than Monday, October 6th.

Free lectures on Choir-Training will be given at the College on Monday, November 3rd, at 7.30 p.m., by Dr. H. W. Richards, on "The General Principles of Choir-Training." Tuesday, November 4th, at 3 p.m., by Dr. Keighley, on "Mixed Chords"; at 6 p.m., by Dr. Stanley Marchant, on "Boys' Voices." Members and their friends are cordially invited. No tickets required.

Regulations, list of College Publications, Lectures, &c., may be had on application.

Examples indicating the character and approximate difficulty of the NEW TESTS, set for the first time at the July, 1924, Examinations, may be obtained at the College.

Associateship or Fellowship, 6*g*. each (post free).

The College is open daily from 10 to 4: Saturdays 10 to 1.

H. A. HARDING, Hon. Secretary.

Kensington Gore, S.W.7.

ROYAL MANCHESTER COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

Founded 1893. Incorporated by Royal Charter, 1923.

Patron: HER MAJESTY QUEEN ALEXANDRA.

President: H.R.H. THE DUKE OF YORK, K.G.

Principal: Dr. ADOLPH BRODSKY.

Registrar: STANLEY WITHERS, M.A.

Students are required to enter upon a complete course of Musical instruction, and are not admitted for a shorter period than one year.

Fee for the year, £36. Special fee for Organ Course, £30, and for Wind Instrument Course, £18.

Systematic Course for the Training of Teachers included in the curriculum.

The Prospectus, with Scholarship information, Diploma Regulations, and Entry Forms, on application.

96 and 95, WIMPOLE STREET, W.1.

TOBIAS MATTHAY PIANOFORTE SCHOOL

Instruction under his teachers, and under his own supervision.

Open to Professionals and Amateurs, and also to Children.

The Staff consists of thirty-nine senior Professors of thorough experience and platform reputation, all trained by the founder.

Special Short Courses for Teachers during term and vacation.

LECTURE-LESSON Class by Mr. MATTHAY on the practical teaching of Technique and Interpretation, diagnosis and correction of faults, musical analysis and synthesis, &c., alternate Wednesday evenings.

Mr. FREDERICK MOORE takes alternate Wednesdays.

COMPLETE TRAINING COURSE FOR TEACHERS.

(Approved by the Teachers' Registration Council.)

This ONE-YEAR Course may be joined at the beginning of ANY TERM.

For further particulars please apply, Mrs. MARION COLE, Secretary.

MANCHESTER SCHOOL OF MUSIC.

Principal: ALBERT J. CROSS, A.R.A.M.

FOUNDED 1892.

The oldest Institution in Manchester devoted solely to the interests of Music.

All branches of Music taught. Day and Evening Private Lessons. Opera Class. Full Orchestral Class. Intermediate and Elementary String Orchestras, Classes for Ensemble Playing, Elocution, Choral Singing, Harmony, &c.

Single Subjects taught. Prospectus from 16, Albert Square.

GLASGOW

ATHENÆUM SCHOOL OF MUSIC.

SESSION 1924-25.

The Session consists of Three Terms: September 8 to November 1, December 1 to March 7, and March 9 to June 5.

Complete Musical Curriculum. Day and Evening Classes. Single Subjects taught.

Prospectus and further information may be obtained from:

STUART S. FORSYTH, Secretary,

ATHENÆUM BUILDINGS, GLASGOW.

BIRMINGHAM & MIDLAND INSTITUTE

SCHOOL OF MUSIC.

Visitor ... Sir EDWARD ELGAR, O.M., Mus.Doc., LL.D.

Director ... GRANVILLE BANTOCK, M.A., D.Mus. (Ed.).

SESSION 1923-1924.

The Session consists of AUTUMN TERM (September 20 to December 18); WINTER TERM (January 19 to April 9); SUMMER TERM (April 11 to July 9).

Instruction in all branches of Music, Students' Choir and Orchestra, Chamber Music, Students' Rehearsals, and Concerts.

Prospectus and further information may be obtained from—

H. M. FRANCIS, Secretary.

Paradise Street, Birmingham.

THE LONDON SCHOOL OF SINGING.

20A, HENRIETTA STREET, CAVENDISH SQUARE, W.1.

President: A. NETTLEFOLD.

Principal ... ... WARD COWDERY.

Acting Principal ... ... DAVID GODELL.

The School provides complete instruction and training in all branches of Vocal Art for both Professional and Amateur. Latent talent successfully developed. Public appearances arranged. Students' Concerts monthly. Auditions free.

Particulars from Secretary. Mayfair 3819.

THE LONDON COLLEGE FOR CHORISTERS.

6 and 7, BLOMFIELD CRESCENT, PADDINGTON, W.2.

Founder: Mr. JAMES BATES.

Solo Boys and Chorus Boys supplied at short notice for Church Services, &c. Telephone: Paddington 5990. Sec., ARTHUR G. BATES.

PAPER WORK BY MUS. B., F.R.C.O.

OVER 1100 SPECIMEN WORKINGS.

"Your lessons and ideas splendid."

"Your excellent models make my attempts look cold."

RECENT SUCCESSES.

2*s*. 6*d*. per lesson and postage.

"E. B.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

L.R.A.M. AND A.R.C.M.

TEACHING SINGING AND ELOCUTION EXAMINATIONS.

Numerous Successes both in Singing and Elocution Exams. at L.R.A.M. and A.R.C.M.

Special Correspondence Course and personal tuition.

Complete preparation.

Also Special Short Instructional Courses in Voice-Production and The Art of Teaching Singing, to meet particular requirements of the General Practitioner in Music.

MR. W. LEE WEBSTER, L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M.

INGLESIDE, PARK ROAD, NOTTINGHAM.

THE LONDON CHOIR SCHOOL

(CHAMPION HILL SCHOOL).

GROVE LANE, DENMARK HILL, S.E.5.
(Twelve minutes from Victoria, L.B.S.C. Railway;

L.C.C. Trams 56, 58, 62, and 84 pass the door.)

Director: CARLTON BORROW, A.R.C.O.

Solo and Chorus Boys for Services, Oratorios, Madrigal Societies, Concerts, &c. Solo and Chorus Altos (male), Tenors, and Basses for Temporary Engagements.

Telephone: Brixton 2124.

Apply, Secretary.

JOHN B. WOOD, Mus. Bac.

C. G. WOOD, Mus. Bac., L.R.A.M.

THE IDEAL CORRESPONDENCE SCHOOL OF MUSIC.

EXPERT TUTORS.

THEORY OF MUSIC, HARMONY,
COMPOSITION, ART OF TEACHING,
INTERPRETATION,
FORM AND MEMORY TRAINING
FOR MUSICIANS.Correspondents from all parts of the world and ex-students of the Principal Musical Institutions have been enrolled as pupils.

Write,

6, BOLTON ROAD, FARNWORTH, BOLTON.

WILLIAM WOLLER

(Dip. Leip. Cons.)

SCHOOL OF VOICE CULTURE

AND

PIANOFORTE PLAYING,

61, GUNTERSTONE ROAD, W.14.

Complete Professional Training for SOLO PERFORMERS (Concert and Opera), and for TEACHERS.Special WEEK-END and HOLIDAY Courses for Teachers, Choirmasters, and Organists.Special VOICE RESTORATION Courses for misused and impaired voices.

CORRESPONDENCE COURSES BY ARRANGEMENT.

VALUABLE VOCAL SCHOLARSHIPS (over £1,000 value), open for Competition. Exceptional opportunity for those taking up the Vocal profession.Residence arranged for Country and Colonial pupils (long or short period)."Foremost among leading Voice Producers and Singing Masters in this country.""You have done more good in these few lessons than all the years under other professors.""It is well we have in our midst Singing Masters like Mr. Woller, who have the intuitive intelligence to apply the results of enlightened research to each individual pupil."

MR. CHARLES TREE

BOURNEMOUTH. Lecture. Bournemouth Times, September 13, 1924.—"Mr. Tree has been before the public as a singer for more years than most imagine, yet to-day his voice is resonant in quality and, as ever, flexible in execution. Mr. Tree is himself proof of the fact that the secret of success is production of tone based on sound method. Every pupil and every teacher should read his invaluable book, 'Practice makes perfect,' but only if conducted on sound method. I fail to find in his book any reference to the 'bugbears' which embarrass so many students—no chapter on voice registers, nor on the function or the physiological causes affecting the larynx, nor is it suggested that the pupil should invest in a laryngoscope (our own experiences have proved their futility). Unnecessary and confusing technicalities are an evidence of inefficient tuition. The indispensable sequel to his book on 'How to acquire ease' is the book of vocal exercises on 'The Art of the Bel Canto.' It affords the real guide and key to the method. One question is pertinent to this all-important question, let those answer who can—What becomes of the thousands of young singers who are trained at the great musical institutions throughout the country, and how many of them retain their freshness of voice for any considerable time? No one can read the books without being convinced that the method which he so clearly expounds can be imparted to all and sundry. Mr. Tree is, to me, the most lucid and practical exponent of the art of singing now before the public."

"How to ACQUIRE EASE OF VOICE-PRODUCTION" AND ITS
COMPANION, "BEL CANTO" EXERCISES, 5/2 and 3/7 postfree.
(If difficult to obtain, write direct.)

Mr. Tree will give a few Special Lessons to any keenly interested who will be up for the Exhibition. Accommodation may be had at

Bolton Mansions Hotel, Bolton Gardens, S.W.5.

Courtfield Gardens Hotel, Courtfield Gardens, S.W.5.

Concerts, &c., address, Bolton Mansions Hotel, S.W.5.
(Kensington 816.)

ST. JOHN AMBULANCE ASSOCIATION, BACUP CENTRE.

President: ALDERMAN J. H. LORD, J.P., H.S.B.

Hon. Treasurer: FRED COOPER, Esq.

Hon. Secretary: W. BROWN, H.S.B., 134, Todmorden Rd., Bacup.

ANNUAL MUSICAL FESTIVAL

IN CO-OPERATIVE AND TOWN HALLS, BACUP,

SATURDAYS, JANUARY 24th and 31st, 1925.

JUVENILE COMPETITIONS include: Pianoforte and Solo Singing, Chords, Action Songs, English Country Dance, &
Both Open and Local Classes.

ADULT COMPETITIONS include: Pianoforte and Solo Singing,
Quartets, Duets, Chords, &c. All Open Classes, Shields, Rose Bowls, Gold Medals (including the Norman Allin Gold Medal), also other valuable prizes.

Official SYLLABUS now ready, price 6d., post free, from the Hon.
Assistant Secretary.

Mr. HAROLD H. SHEPHERD, 13, Ribbles Street, Bacup.

QUEEN'S HALL,

TUESDAY EVENING, OCTOBER 21, at 8.

ORGAN RECITAL

By MARJORIE RENTON, F.R.C.O.

(Bach, Reubke, Vierne, Widor, Franck, Howells).

Assisted by Mrs. Mary Layton's Ladies' Choir, and a String Quartet.

Reserved, 6s. 6d., 5s. 9d., 3s. 6d. Unreserved, 2s. 4d.

LIONEL POWELL &amp; HOLT, 6, Cork Street, W.1.

MR. ALBERT GARCIA

LESSONS IN VOICE PRODUCTION AND SINGING

Special Coaching in Opera, Oratorio, and for Recitals.

Pupils prepared for A.R.C.M. and L.R.A.M. Exams.

"A number of Mr. Albert Garcia's pupils sang excellently at the concert which they gave on Wednesday evening. It was particularly pleasant to hear voices so well placed and well poised, smooth and even in tone from the lowest to the highest notes, showing a control which too few learn to exercise."—Daily Telegraph.

"One takes it that a concert by pupils fulfils its object if it demonstrates—as the one given at Wigmore Hall by singers studying with Mr. Albert Garcia certainly did—the excellence of that master's method."—Era.

"Mr. Garcia—himself a fine artist and the inheritor of a great tradition and a great name—has some most promising pupils, and such singers as Miss Rosa Burn and Mr. Frederick Lippold show in what an excellent school they have been trained."—Daily Telegraph.

For Auditions, Appointments, &c., write,
59, Queen's Road, St. John's Wood, N.W.8.
(Hampstead 4597.)

A.R.C.M. A.R.C.O. L.R.A.M.

Candidates for the above cannot afford to neglect the enormous advantage of a Postal Course in my "From Brain to Keyboard System," to which many pupils attribute their success.

OPINIONS OF PUPILS.

"One of the greatest assets a pianist can have."

"Worth twenty times the fee charged."

"I have passed my examination with honours."

"The technical rules are alone worth the fee."

"I have acquired easy trills, at sixty."

"The exercises are a veritable treasure trove."

"The effect sometimes seems supernatural."

"To me it has been a veritable godsend."

ILLUSTRATED LANTERN LECTURE

"From Brain to Keyboard."

Come to Æolian Hall on October 2nd for my Winter Season Lecture. I shall be glad to answer enquiries there personally. Seats 2/4 from the Hall, usual ticket agencies, or from my own address.

ÆOLIAN HALL,
October 2nd, 8.0 p.m.

"From Brain to Keyboard"

Macdonald Smith's System of Pianoforte Playing.

17,000 SUCCESSFUL PUPILS OF ALL AGES.

My illustrated book, "LIGHT ON PIANOFORTE PLAYING," will be gladly sent to any pianist. It fully explains the principles and advantages of the methods used in the System. When applying, please do not omit to state whether comparative beginner, average, or advanced pianist. The book will be sent free of charge, and post free.

M. MACDONALD SMITH, 19, BLOOMSBURY SQ., LONDON, W.C.1.

"THE TUDOR GALLERIES" The GILLETT Modern Teaching

(SIR HERBERT MARSHALL & SONS, LTD.),

69 AND 71, DEANSGATE, MANCHESTER.

THURSDAYS, OCTOBER 16, 1924, TO MARCH 19, 1925,

5.40 to 7 p.m.

DR. KEIGHLEY'S CLASS

FOR MUSIC TEACHERS.

- (a) LECTURES.
- (b) DISCUSSIONS.
- (c) CRITICISM LESSONS.

LECTURERS:

Dr. Brodsky, Mr. Arthur Catterall, Mr. Richard Evans,
Mr. R. J. Forbes, Mr. Frank Merrick, Mr. Max Mayer, Mr. Paul le Vallon, Dr. A. W. Wilcock, Dr. A. W. Wilson, and Dr. Keighley.

FEE FOR THE COURSE OF TWENTY MEETINGS:
ONE GUINEA.

Syllabus from the Secretary,

MR. GEORGE PARKER, F.R.C.O.,
35, Orchard Lane, Leigh, Lancs.

is a distinct advance in the art of Pianoforte Tuition.

"Your Lesson on ROTARY MOVEMENT is wonderful."

"Your two Chapters of MEMORISING and MENTAL STUDY OF TECHNIQUE have been of the very greatest use to me."

"I have to thank you for your wonderful lesson on OCTAVES; it is marvellous how EASILY and RAPIDLY one can play after studying your method."

"I am now absolutely convinced that complete relaxation is the secret of easy playing and good tone in Pianoforte Playing."

The above are extracts from testimonials—that is what his pupils think, and to these may be added 2,000 other opinions all equally commendatory and dealing with a hundred different aspects of pianoforte playing.

And there is the point—Mr. Gillett's special Postal Courses for Home Study do not end with the set printed lessons, but invite pupils to bring all their difficulties to Mr. Gillett, who deals with each one personally and thoroughly, never leaving a question unanswered.

It is the knowledge that they have made a distinct advance in their playing and the feeling that there is a "personality" even in the print to the Course that causes pupils to write with such enthusiasm.

Particulars, with further letters describing the merits of the "Gillett" teaching, will be sent to those giving details of their individual difficulties, with names of one or two pieces they play.

CHARLES A. GILLETT,

Pianoforte School,

11, SOUTH MOLTON STREET, NEW BOND STREET,
LONDON, W.1.

MODERN CORR. COLLEGE

Principal : ARTHUR McALISTER, B.A. (CANTAB.).

JUDGE BY RESULTS.

MATRIC.	-	-	113	July, 1924	-	-	9
A.R.C.O.	-	-	24	L.R.A.M.	-	-	16
F.R.C.O.	-	-		A.R.C.M.	-	-

A. MUS. T.C.L. July, 1924.

A successful Student gains an average of 82% Musical History 93%

Another Student

94% COUNTERPOINT.

Another Student

A.T.C.L.

85%

ART OF TEACHING.

L. MUS. T.C.L. July, 1924. Note the date.

A Student of the M.C.C. PASSES L. Mus. T.C.L.

THIS STUDENT HAS NOW QUALIFIED FOR F.T.C.L.

YOU CAN GAIN THE F.T.C.L.

Take up our COMBINED Guarantee COURSE—L. Mus. T.C.L., L.T.C.L.

MUS. BAC. - DURHAM—LONDON—OXFORD—DUBLIN.

GUARANTEE COURSE.—For one FEE we guarantee to coach you until you gain the DEGREE.

Guarantee Courses -

L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., L.T.C.L.

PIANOFORTE TEACHING.
SINGING.
ELOCUTION.
AURAL TRAINING AND SIGHT-SINGING.
MUSICAL APPRECIATION.
BANDMASTERSHIP.

SINGLE SUBJECTS.

HARMONY.
COUNTERPOINT.
COMPOSITION.
REVISION OF COMPOSITION.

ORCHESTRATION.
MEMORY TRAINING.
SIGHT READING.

MUSICAL FORM.
MUSICAL HISTORY.
ESSAY.
MATHEMATICS.

LATIN.
FRENCH.
GERMAN.
SCIENCE.

Tuition is also given for B.A., B.Sc.

ALL PROFESSIONAL EXAMS.—Oxford and Cambridge Locals.

CIVIL SERVICE.—Scholarships for Boys and Girls—Secondary Schools.

FREE - GUIDE TO DEGREES AND DIPLOMAS IN MUSIC.

"ST. MORITZ," 201, ILKESTON ROAD, NOTTINGHAM.

WESTMINSTER CATHEDRAL.

ORGAN RECITALS

THURSDAYS, AT 6.30 P.M.

RECITALISTS FOR OCTOBER, 1924.

- OCTOBER 9th. MARCEL DUPRÉ.
 OCTOBER 16th. REGINALD GOSS CUSTARD.
 OCTOBER 23rd. GUY WEITZ, C.O.C.
 OCTOBER 30th. HENRY G. LEY, Mus. Doc.

M. Marcel Dupré has promised to play his new work "Symphonie-Passion," and also to improvise a Double Fugue.

MENTAL-HEARING AND MENTAL STUDY.

THE ability to HEAR MENTALLY seems to be possessed by few students, as the following from a well-known Musical Paper proves:

"Harmony on paper is a dead thing except to those who can hear what they see—the possession of about one student in a thousand."

Mental-hearing will enable the student to hear in his mind the sounds of the notes he is writing on the paper; they will not be mere soundless signs, but each will convey a definite sound to him, and until they do so all written harmony is a waste of time.

The acquisition of Mental-hearing will materially assist the practical work of the pianoforte and organ student, for if the student can hear mentally he will be encouraged to study mentally. Mental-hearing is the key to mental study, and Mental study is the key to more rapid progress. The mastery of this subject will also improve the student's sight-reading, memorising, and transposing.

Mental-hearing is a necessity for candidates for Diplomas such as L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., A.R.C.O., &c., and this work will also be of the greatest help to pupils preparing aural tests for the Associated Board Examinations.

Particulars of Correspondence Course of seven Lessons from

W. H. WATSON, GORDON COTTAGE, ELGIN.

SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE COURSES

1. L.R.A.M. and A.R.C.M. Paper work.
  2. L.T.C.L. and A.T.C.L. Paper work.
  3. Courses in Rudiments, Harmony, Form, &c., for T.C.L. and Associated Board Candidates.
  4. Ear Training. A Practical Course for all Candidates preparing for Aural Tests. Complete in Ten Lessons.
- Model workings to all questions Highest recommendations.
 Particulars on application.

CYRIL S. CHRISTOPHER,

c/o W. H. Priestley & Sons, Colmore Row, Birmingham.

A VOICE is—

1. MENTAL APPRECIATION OF TONE.
2. MUSCULAR EFFORT.

A good Teacher will help you with the first.

The Saxby Vocal Calisthenic Course will work wonders with the second.

The Course trains every little muscle used in singing and speaking.

RESULT: Power, Resonance, Brilliancy, Control, in fact all the qualities of a GREAT VOICE.

T. CHURCH SAXBY,

Studio: 3A, SEVEIR BUILDINGS, LEWES.

MUSICAL COMPOSITIONS REVISED.

LYRICS SET TO MUSIC, MELODIES HARMONIZED, MUSIC TRANPOSED AND COPIED, BAND PARTS WRITTEN, MSS. PREPARED FOR PUBLICATION BY A MASTER HAND, ACCOMPANIMENTS OF DISTINCTION WRITTEN TO SONGS.

For terms, write, A. CARRINGTON BRIGGS,
 Glennholme, The Common, Hesse, E. Yorks.

“I am astonished at my progress . . . .
Nervousness seems to have vanished.
Pieces memorised by the System I never forget.”—Extract from letter of Professional Pianist.

HUNDREDS of pianists, organists, and teachers who were previously unable to learn the simplest piece have gained the ability to memorise easily and play from memory without nervousness through the Mackinnon Musical Memory Course.

Appreciations fully as glowing as the above are received daily.

If you find difficulty in memorising, here is your opportunity. Through the Mackinnon Musical Memory Course you can gain a reliable musical memory—play in public without nervousness, and express yourself in your music with full artistic freedom.

This Course is complete in six Correspondence Lessons. Fifteen minutes daily practice only is necessary. There is no drudgery of any kind. The principles of the Course can immediately be applied to any music you are working on. The Course can be taken successfully at any age. Finally, progress is assured, or your fees are returned without question.

Send Coupon below for free booklet, to-day.

MACKINNON'S MUSICAL MEMORY COURSE.

EMPIRE HOUSE, 175 PICCADILLY, W.1.

IN SIX POSTAL LESSONS - FEE, £3:3:0

—GUARANTEE—

If, within four weeks from the receipt of the first lesson, and before the receipt of the second, any Student feels that he or she has not already made definite progress as a result of taking the Course, such Student's fees will be refunded in full.

Just a few of the appreciative letters received daily. You can be equally successful:

From a Cathedral Organist.

“Many students of the organ find it difficult to accompany the Psalms satisfactorily. To those who find it so, I recommend this memory Course.”

From a Pianist.

“Your method makes one feel it is impossible to break down.”

From a Teacher.

“Prior to your lessons I found it impossible to memorise any piece. I can now learn and play with confidence and ease.”

From a Church Organist.

“Of the greatest assistance, cannot fail to play from memory where your instructions are followed.”

POST THIS COUPON TO-DAY .....

MACKINNON'S “MUSICAL MEMORY,” Empire House, 175, Piccadilly, W.1.

Please send me, free, and post free, your booklet on “MEMORY TRAINING.”

Name.....

Address.....

PROFESSIONAL NOTICES.

MISS FLORENCE EAVES,

SOPRANO.

Oratorios, Concerts, Recitals, Lecture-Illustrations.
Address: 36, Castle Street, Tyldesley, Lancs.

DORIS TURNER,

SOPRANO.

Oratorios, Concerts, Organ Recitals.

"Messiah," "Lobgesang," "Creation," "Hiawatha," "Acis and Galatea," Dvorák's "Stabat Mater," "Elijah," &amp;c., &amp;c.

ROBERT RADFORD writes:

"You sang the soprano solos in 'The Messiah' most charmingly, with great skill and beauty of voice: you ought to do well."

For vacant dates, apply, 10, Cambridge Gardens, Hastings.

MISS LYDIA JOHN

(A.R.A.M., L.R.A.M.), CONTRALTO.

Concerts, Oratorios, Organ Recitals, &c.
Recital-Lectures of Folk-Songs, Elizabethan Songs, &c.

Pupils received for Voice-Production and Singing.

Prepared for L.R.A.M., Associated Board, &amp;c.

15, Albion Road, London, N.W.6. Tel.: Hampstead, N.W.6.

HORACE CURTIS

TENOR.

CONCERT, ORATORIO, MASS, Etc.

34, Ravenslea Road, Balham, S.W.12.

HAROLD KNOWLTON

TENOR

St. Paul's Cathedral, E.C. 4.

1, Hatherley Gardens, Crouch End, N. 8.

JULIUS WALTHER

The well-known Tenor of the Carl Rosa Opera, desires a position as teacher in Voice Production and Singing.

Address, 95, Wakehurst Road, London, S.W.11.

WILLIAM COLEMAN

(THE MANCHESTER BASS.)

Oratorio, Concerts, Lessons.

Address: 18, Plymouth Avenue, Manchester, S.E.

VERNON HARRISS,

L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., Gold Medalist. BASS.
Oratorio, Concerts. Vocal Coach and Adjudicator.
Senior Music Master, Downside School, near Bath.

ARTHUR LEES

BASS.

Concerts, Recitals, Masonics, Oratorios, &amp;c.

"Ravenscroft," 120, Waldegrave Road, Brighton.

EDMUND TELFER (BARITONE)

May be engaged for the rôle part of

"ELIJAH"

AND OTHER ORATORIOS.

'For vacant dates, and Experts' criticisms,

Apply, Ibbs &amp; Tillet, 124, Wigmore Street, London, W.1.

MR. HERBERT TRACEY

BASS.

8, Cavendish Mansions, E.5.

London Wall 4033.

MISS THELMA DANDRIDGE (A.R.C.M.),

'CELLIST.

Concerts, Pupils, &c., apply to "Inversnaid," Chinbrook Road,
Grove Park, S.E.12. ('Phone: Lee Green 1707.)

TO CONCERT DIRECTORS.

ARTHUR MANGELSDORFF

(British).

The well-known Pianist is arranging a Recital Tour for the coming season.

Special terms can be quoted for a Recital or part programme if immediate application is made.

Managers of suitable Concert-Halls also please send terms for hiring.

Please address all communications to

ARTHUR ELLARSHAW, 497, Coventry Road, Birmingham.

MISS MARGARET COUPE, L.R.A.M.,

ACCOMPANIST. Recommended by Mr. Welton Hickin, F.R.A.M.
Address: 18, Upper Gloucester Place, N.W.1.

MR. FRANK THISTLETON

(Author of "The Art of Violin Playing" and "Modern Violin Technique") whose Recitals have received the patronage of Her Majesty Queen Alexandra, has vacancies for one or two violin pupils. Special terms to professionals.

"Mr. Frank Thistleton is an expert violin player and teacher."—Daily Telegraph, March 1, 1924.

For particulars write,

MUSIC STUDIO, 72, HIGH STREET, BAKER STREET, W.1.

DR. F. H. WOOD

(Organist of Blackpool Parish Church),

COACHES FOR UNIVERSITY DEGREES.

Students' recent Successes include—

Durham Mus. D. (1923), Ex. and Final, both in the same year and at the first attempt. Mus. B. Ex. (1924). Also other Universities, Mus. D. (1922); Mus. B. (1923) and 1924 (2).

252, HORNBY ROAD, BLACKPOOL.

THE TRAINING OF TEACHERS.

CORRESPONDENCE COURSES IN

VOICE-PRODUCTION, covering the whole subject.

FORM AND TEACHING, TOUCH, ACCOMPANIMENT,

MUSICAL APPRECIATION, AND AURAL TRAINING.

Nearly 1000 Successes at L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., &amp;c.

MR. R. J. PITCHER, Mus. Bac., F.R.C.O., A.R.C.M.
(Double Dip. Singing and Piano), L.R.A.M., Class A, Performer and Teacher.

Prof. Singing G.S.M., 1905-1915. Special Lect. on Mus. Appreciation to L.C.C.

"Recit. and its Rendering," 1s. 6d. "Vade Mecum for Singers," 6d.
Send for prospectus, 21, Boundary Road, N.W.8.

'Phone: 1715 Maida Vale.

MUSICAL REVISER TO MESSRS. NOVELLO FOR THIRTY-NINE YEARS.

COMPOSERS' MSS.

REVISED AND PREPARED FOR PRINTING

H. ELLIOT BUTTON, "Harewood," Ardwick Road, N.W.2.

** The late Sir HUBERT PARRY and Sir FREDERICK BRIDGE permitted their names to appear, along with those of the following composers to whom reference is kindly permitted:—Sir EDWARD ELGAR, O.M.; Sir HENRY WALFORD DAVIES, Mus. Doc.

DR. ALLISON instructed by Post Candidates who

OBTAINED DEGREES OF MUS. B. and Mus. D. at Oxford, Cambridge, Dublin, London, and Durham Universities, Diplomas of L.L.C.M. (April, 1924), L.R.A.M., F.R.C.O., L. Mus. L.C.M., A.R.C.M., Gold Medals, Silver Medals, Scholarships, Prizes, Certificates, and valuable professional appointments. Dr. Allison is willing to teach those who neither require nor desire to pass examinations. Harmony, Counterpoint, Orchestration, and Analysis of Compositions by Post, to correspondents anywhere. Personal instruction in Theory, Singing, and Piano. 24, Park Range, Victoria Park, Manchester.

REVISION OF MUSICAL COMPOSITIONS.

Dr. Horton Allison, 24, Park Range, Victoria Park, Manchester.

MR. J. PERCY BAKER, Mus. B., Dunelm.,

F.R.A.M., gives Postal Tuition and prepares for Examinations. Personal Lessons (Pianoforte and Theory), at 14, Hanover Square, W.1. Address, 12, Longley Road, Tooting Graveney, S.W.17.

SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE COURSES:—

- (1.) L.R.A.M. Paper Work.
- (2.) A.R.C.M. Paper Work.
- (3.) Interesting Courses of Study in Rudiments, Harmony, Form, &c.

L.R.A.M. Exams. 1910-24 ... 244 Correspondence Pupils successful.

A.R.C.M. Exams. 1914-24 ... 64 " " "

MR. E. H. BIBBY, Mus. Bac., L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M.,

Waterloo Buildings, Piccadilly, Manchester.

In response to many requests, MR. BIBBY begs to announce that he has prepared the following additional CORRESPONDENCE COURSES:

- (1.) The "Mus. Bac." Degree.
- (2.) A.R.C.O. and F.R.C.O. Paper Work.
- (3.) A.T.C.L. and L.T.C.L. Paper Work.
- (4.) The Associated Board Examinations in Rudiments, Harmony, and Counterpoint.

(Address as above.)

MISS J. BLAKE, A.R.A.M., A.R.C.M. (Regd.

Teacher of Singing), prepares pupils L.R.A.M. and A.R.C.M. Exams., as Teacher or Performer. Highest recommendations.—Studio, 139, New Bond Street, W.1.

CAPTAIN PERCY BAKER, M.C., F.R.C.O.,
L. Mus. T.C.L. (Author of "Compend of Musical Knowledge,"
"Studies in History and Form," &c.). Specialist in Tuition by post for T.C.L. and R.C.O. Essay Models, Sight Reading Courses.
Study Aids, 9d. Studies in Modulation, 3s.

Send for interesting Pamphlets on Methods.

HAZELDENE, TEWKESBURY.

L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M. SPECIAL COACHING by ARTHUR ELLARSHAW, L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M. Pianist.
Paper-work Postal. Address, 497, Coventry Road, Birmingham.

DR. A. C. PHILLIPS EMBLING, Mus. Doc.,
Dunelm. (1921), Mus. Bac., Oxon., F.R.C.O. Lessons by post
for Diplomas and Degrees. 64, Wokingham Road, Reading.

FREDERICK GREEN, L.R.A.M., Etc. Voice
Specialist, Vocal Coach, and Adjudicator. Preparation for
L.R.A.M. c/o Rushworth & Dreaper, 11, Islington, Liverpool.

DR. CUTHBERT HARRIS, Mus. Doc., Dunelm.,
F.R.C.O. SPECIALIST IN CORRESPONDENCE
TUITION. 405 Successes in Mus. D., Mus. B., F.R.C.O., and
A.R.C.O., &c. 58, Avondale Road, Gorleston-on-Sea.

DR. HARRIS REVISES and PREPARES MSS.
FOR PUBLICATION. Accompaniments to Songs written.

MISS H. HEALE COACHES for all EXAM-
INATIONS IN MUSIC (at private residence or at West-End Studio), in Pianoforte, Harmony, Counterpoint, Fugue, Form,
Orchestration, "Teaching," Modulation, Transposition, &c. For
Terms, &c., apply Dunraven House, 41, Albert Bridge Road, S.W.11.

HERBERT HODGE, F.R.C.O., A.R.C.M.,
Organist and Choirmaster, St. Nicholas Cole Abbey, Queen
Victoria Street, London, has, since 1908, made a speciality of coaching Candidates for the Organ Playing Examinations of the Royal College of Organists, and can arrange a private course of instruction
(or single lessons) to organists visiting London, at St. Nicholas
Cole Abbey. Many recent F.R.C.O. and A.R.C.O. successes.
5, Streatham Place, S.W.2. Telephone: Streatham 295.

DR. A. G. IGGULDEN, Mus. Doc. Dunelm., F.R.C.O.,
SPECIALIST IN CORRESPONDENCE COACHING.
Latest Successes: Durham, March, 1924—2 in 1st Mus. Bac. Sept., 1923
—2 out of the 3 Mus. Doc. passes, and 4 out of the 6 Final Mus. Bac.
passes. Also 6 Exercises, after prelim. course in composition. Over 150 Successes at Durham alone. The Durdans, Reigate.

DR. F. J. KARN (Mus. Bac. Cantab.; Mus. Doc.
Toronto) continues to give lessons in Harmony and other
Theoretical subjects, and prepares for all Musical Examinations.
Compositions revised and Analyses written. Candidates prepared by
Dr. Karn have gained the Mus. Bac. and Mus. Doc. degrees at the Universities and diplomas from the Musical Colleges.
Address: 106, Haverstock Hill, London, N.W.3.

DR. KNOWLES (Manchester 1919, Durham 1920)
specialises in preparing candidates by post for the Paper-work of all examinations in music. Solutions, with methods of working.
Address, 45, Churchgate, Bolton, Lancs.

MADAME LARKCOM, F.R.A.M., Prof. Singing,
R. A. Music, has resumed her lessons in Singing at the Wigmore Hall Studios, 40, Wigmore Street, W.1.

J. H. MAKINSON, F.R.C.O., A.R.C.M., A.T.C.L.
Correspondence Tuition in Paper Work (T.C.L. and other Diplomas). Terms moderate. Latest success, A.T.C.L., July, 1924.
Kent House, Lake Road, Ambleside.

DR. ORLANDO A. MANSFIELD, Mus. Doc.,
University of Toronto; Mus. Doc., Trinity University, Toronto;
F.R.C.O.; F.A.G.O., &c. 15, Sydenham Villas Road, Cheltenham.
Correspondence Lessons. Revision of MSS. Scoring, editing, and arranging. Examination pieces analysed and annotated.

MISS F. HELENA MARKS, Author of "The Sonata: Its Form and Meaning," prepares for L.R.A.M.,
A.R.C.M., and all other examinations, Pianoforte, Harmony, "Form and Teaching," &c. Personal or Correspondence Lessons in all Paper-Work subjects, including those for L.R.A.M. "Aural Training and Sight-Singing," and A.R.C.M. in "The Teaching of Musical Appreciation," &c. Pupils received and visited for the Pianoforte.
Many recent successes L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., &c.
10, Matheson Road, London, W.14.

DR. H. H. L. MIDDLETON, Mus. Doc., F.R.C.O.,
L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M. Twenty-five years' experience in Private
Tuition and Coaching for Degrees. More than 800 of Dr. Middleton's Pupils have obtained Degrees at the Universities, R.A.M., R.C.M.,
and R.C.O. Address, 60, Berners Street, W.1.

W. J. FREDERICK PUGH, L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M.,
prepares for L.R.A.M. (Aural Culture and Voice Culture Diplomas), A.R.C.M. (Appreciation Diploma). Recent Successes, 34,
Wilmington Avenue, Chiswick, W.4.

JOHN ROBERTS has VACANCIES for a few PUPILS in VOICE PRODUCTION. "R. J., c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

DR. TAYLOR'S POSTAL PUPILS HAVE passed Mus. Bac. 1st and final. A.R.C.O.; L.R.A.M.;
A.T.C.L. Pupil gained the Stillie Bursary at Glasgow for Counterpoint. Latest success, A.R.C.O. for 1924. Portland
Place, Lancaster.

W. G. WEBBER, F.R.C.O. Recitalist, &c.
Preparation for Exams. Organ lessons given on new four-manual Willis. Address, Christ Church, Westminster Bridge Road,
London, S.E.1.

DR. PERCY WOOD, Mus. Doc. Oxon., F.R.C.O.
SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE COURSES:
(1) Elementary Harmony and Counterpoint.
(2) F.R.C.O. and A.R.C.O.
(3) L.R.A.M. and A.R.C.M.
(4) Mus. Bac. Degree.
Several recent Mus. B. successes at Durham.

R.C.O. EXAMINER says: "Your system is undoubtedly an excellent one."

SUCCESS GUARANTEED—given any pupils with the requisite musical ability for the examination in view.

R.C.O. SUCCESSES IN PAPER WORK:

6 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1914.	11 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1914.
6 F.R.C.O., July, 1914.	12 A.R.C.O., July, 1914.
4 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1915	5 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1915.
5 F.R.C.O., July, 1915.	9 A.R.C.O., July, 1915.
2 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1916.	3 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1916.
3 F.R.C.O., July, 1916.	5 A.R.C.O., July, 1916.
2 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1917.	2 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1917.
3 F.R.C.O., July, 1917.	4 A.R.C.O., July, 1917.
2 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1918.	2 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1918.
4 F.R.C.O., July, 1918.	2 A.R.C.O., July, 1918.
1 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1919.	3 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1919.
3 F.R.C.O., July, 1919.	3 A.R.C.O., July, 1919.
4 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1920.	10 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1920.
3 F.R.C.O., July, 1920.	6 A.R.C.O., July, 1920.
3 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1921.	7 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1921.
6 F.R.C.O., July, 1921.	8 A.R.C.O., July, 1921.
5 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1922.	5 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1922.
4 F.R.C.O., July, 1922.	5 A.R.C.O., July, 1922.
8 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1923.	6 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1923.
7 F.R.C.O., July, 1923.	10 A.R.C.O., July, 1923.
7 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1924.	9 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1924.
5 F.R.C.O., July, 1924.	10 A.R.C.O., July, 1924.

"Tralee," Warwick Road, Cliftonville, Margate.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC. Mr. James
Bates will give a Course of Ten Lectures to Teachers and Choir-Trainers on the teaching of Voice-Production and Singing to Boys and Girls, at the Royal Academy of Music, Marylebone Road.
N.W.1, on Saturdays, commencing October 11, from 11 to 12.30 o'clock.
For full particulars address, Mr. Bates, 75, Carlton Hill, N.W.8.

UNION CHAPEL, UPPER STREET, ISLINGTON.

A LECTURE on "The Story of Part-Singing in England" will be given by Mr. Herbert Pierce, on Monday, October 13th, at 7.45.
Illustrations by the London Male-Voice Octet.
Collection for the "Union Chapel £1,000 Bazaar Fund."

EASTBOURNE.

DOWNSMEADE BOARDING SCHOOL FOR BOYS.
Modern education with special musical education if desired. Prospectus on application to the Headmaster, F. E. Wilson, F.R.C.O., L.R.A.M.

SOLO and CHORUS BOYS supplied (CITY OF LONDON CHOIR COLLEGE). Apply to Francis Sutton,
F.R.C.O., St. Stephen's Walbrook, E.C.4.

CHORISTERS.—Boys with good voices wanted.
Salary according to ability. Also BASS, capable of singing Solos. State salary required. Letters only to "M. B.," 3, Glendower Place, South Kensington, S.W.7.

ST. MICHAEL'S COLLEGE, TENBURY.
ALTO LAY-CLERK WANTED. Communicant, age about 30.
Two Choral Services daily (full Cathedral type). Usual Public School holidays. Salary, £80 per ann. Last three vacancies caused by promotion to Cathedrals. Applications with three recent testimonials to the Rev. The Warden.

WELLS CATHEDRAL.—WANTED, an ALTO
SINGER, age under 30. Stipend, £80 per annum, with small house in due course. £100 for the first year. Apply, stating age, before October 8, to Canon Hollis, The Liberty, Wells, Somerset.

TENOR REQUIRED for Nonconformist Church
Choir, in Highgate. £15 to £20 per annum. Write,
Mr. J. Makeham, 35, Ashley Road, N.19.

ST. JAMES THE LESS, Moreton Street, Vaux- hall. BASS REQUIRED. Two Services, Friday practice, Honorarium, £10 per annum. Personal application preferred.

BASSES (Voluntary) WANTED for the Choir of St. John's, Waterloo Road, S.E.1. Expenses paid up to £5 per annum. Apply, Arthur M. Stacey, F.R.C.O., 18, Eton Villas, Hampstead, N.W.3.

BASS WANTED.—St. Luke's, Sydney Street, Chelsea. £16 p.a. Two Sunday Services, one weekday rehearsal. Cathedral Service Apply, Choirmaster, 14A, Gunter Grove, S.W.10.

£100 SINGING and PIANOFORTE COMPETITION. Souvenir Cup, Medals, and Cash Prizes. Oct. 25th and Nov. 1st. Entries close: Piano, Oct. 21st; Singing, Oct. 28th. Adjudicators: Mr. Philip O'Donnell, L.R.A.M., and Mr. Harold Howell, late Conductor, Carl Rosa and Beecham Opera Companies. Prospectus from Secretary, the Clifton Cooke Competition, 26M, Guilford Street, W.C.1.

R.C.O. EXAMINATIONS.

SINGLE LESSONS (covering all the requirements) and PRACTICE on facsimile R.C.O. instrument. Pieces registered. Many recent successes in F.R.C.O. and A.R.C.O.

ALLAN BROWN, F.R.C.O., 298, High Road, Balham, S.W.17.

ORGANIST-CHOIRMASTER REQUIRED immediately. St. Margaret's, Ilkley. £125. Must reside. References, &c., to Vicar.

PARISH CHURCH (St. Michael's), Highgate. ASSISTANT-ORGANIST REQUIRED.—Good sight-reader. Essential to sing also regularly in choir, in return for Examination coaching and free organ practice. Fine organ: electrically blown. Write, Mr. G. T. Pinches, F.R.C.O., 4, Hornsey Lane Gardens, N.

EXPERIENCED ORGANIST-CHOIRMASTER, A.R.C.O., &c., desires appointment. N. A. Sayers, 4, Grosvenor Avenue, East Sheen, S.W.

ORGANS (New and Second-hand) for SALE.—Electric and pneumatic action up-to-date. Built or reconstructed. Bedwell & Son, The Cambridge Organ Works, Cambridge.

CHURCH ORGANS STANDARDISED.—Two Manuals, Pneumatic Pedals, various sizes; specially built. Five to fifteen stops. Introduced to meet the requirements of the times at minimum of cost. W. E. Richardson & Sons, Central Organ Works, Manchester, S.W.

A VERY BEAUTIFUL ORGAN for SALE. Two Manuals, 16 Stops. By Bishop. Suit Church or Chamber. Price £400. Can be seen by appointment. Eastern counties. Apply to "X. Y. Z.", 20, Upper Gloucester Place, London, N.W.1.

BELOW PRE-WAR PRICE.—ORGAN, as new. Two manuals and pedals. R.C.O. Six full rows reeds. Stops throughout. Seen London. Write, "B.", c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

AMERICAN ORGAN (Storey & Clarke), suitable small Church or Institution. Pedals, two Manuals, 22 stops. £60. Beautiful toned 'CELLO', £15. "P.", c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

FOR SALE.—NORMAN & BEARD PIANO PEDALS (radiating and concave) and stool. Excellent condition. £10. J. R. S. Stranack, 22, Whitehall Gardens, Acton, W.3.

PIANO PEDALS WANTED.—Must be pneumatic, radiating, and concave, in good condition. Price and particulars to Hewitt, 23, Saville Street, Cudworth, Barnsley.

STEINWAY GRAND PIANO FOR SALE, overstrung, 7½ octaves, magnificent instrument, rosewood. New condition. 150 gns. Apply, "C. B.", 58, Southbrook Rd., Lee, S.E.12.

VIOLA.—BUTHOD MODEL (Thibouville Lamy), fine tone and varnish. Perfect preservation. Price £8 8s.

MUTE VIOLIN.—FULL SIZE. Sweet, soft tone. Price, £3. Towner, 133, Hither Green Lane, Lewisham, London, S.E.13.

DONT'S for CHOIRMASTERS. A Companion to "Dont's for Church Organists." By John Newton. Foreword by Sydney H. Nicholson. 1s. net, post, 1½d. Heffer, Bookseller, Cambridge.

FOR SALE.—ROBES and HOOD for Mus. Doc., Oxon. Perfect condition, only requiring a little dry cleaning. Bargain. Apply to Miss Florence Marks, 2, Dartmouth Square, Dublin.

ORGAN MUSIC for SALE. Boëllmann, Franck, Guilmant, Albrechtsberger, Marx, &c. Lists free. "Organist," 21, Kingsmead Road, London, S.W.2.

WANTED TO HIRE.—LANTERN SLIDES, illustrating music lectures. State subjects and terms. Dr. Ivimey, The College, Marlborough.

WANTED, TEACHING CONNECTION. Apply, "L.R.A.M.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

JAMES SMITH & SON (Music Sellers), Ltd., require capable

SHEET MUSIC ASSISTANT.

Write, stating full particulars, age, and salary expected. Replies treated in confidence.

76-72, Lord Street, Liverpool.

IMPORTANT APPOINTMENT

is offered Smart Young Lady who possesses a thorough knowledge of the

GRAMOPHONE RECORD TRADE,

and who is able to assist in the sale of Gramophones. In the North of England. Excellent scope for ambitious saleswoman.

Reply, stating experience, age, &c., to "S. J.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

BARITONES and BASSES should buy new songs, "BEAUTY'S DAUGHTER" (Oakley). Compass B flat to E flat. "THE GONDOLIER" (Oakley). Compass C to C. "Love for ever lost" (Oakley). Compass B to D or F. Price 2s. each. Weekes & Co., 14, Hanover Street, W.1.

MUSIC COPYING and Transposition Work WANTED. Neat and accurate. Terms moderate. "M. O.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

MUSIC COPIED.—12-stave page, 6d. (transposition 8d. page). Neat and accurate. Andrew V. Wilson, 51, Connaught Avenue, Mutley, Plymouth, Devon.

MUSIC COPIED neatly and accurately. Transposition, Band-Parts, &c. Gordon Jacob, A.R.C.M., 1, Homefield Road, S.W.19.

MUSIC COPIED, neat work, Transposition and Duplicating. E.W. Cartwright, 17, Belvedere Rd., Bournemouth.

MUSIC COMPOSERS and LYRIC WRITERS. The Cosmos Publishing Co. are open to consider Songs, &c., with a view to publication. Send MSS. with stamp for reply, to Glenholme, The Common, Hesse

THE UNKNOWN TRUTH ABOUT THE VOICE AND ITS DEVELOPMENT. By E. DAVIDSON PALMER, Mus. Bac., Oxon. Showing the prevailing Error in the Training of Men's Voices, and the primary cause of Voice-Failure in Singers and Public Speakers. Post free, 1s. (Postal Order). Address: 11, Grazebrook Road, Stoke Newington, N.16.

RUDYARD KIPLING'S RECESSIONAL HYMN, Set to Music by ROWLAND H. WILLIAMS. Price 2d., post free. Special Prices for quantities. ESCOTT & Co., Ltd., 67, Newman Street, London, W.1.

WIGMORE HALL STUDIOS.—These splendidly appointed Studios are the recognised centre of the best musical activities in London. Forty-five rooms. Grand Piano in every room. Lift, telephone and every comfort and convenience. Low inclusive rates. One morning or afternoon per week the minimum time arranged for. Apply, 38, Wigmore Street, W.1.

PIANO PEDALS, with Octave Coupler

This wonderful invention supersedes all Piano Pedals, and is a Master Patent.
St. George's Hall, Liverpool,
9th April, 1921.

"The simplicity of the attachment, and the clever sixteen-feet, eight-feet, or both combined, 'OPTIONAL OCTAVE' contrivance, astonished me.

"I was delighted with the Pedal touch and with the variety in that touch, which your Attachment makes possible. It is very responsive to the movements of the feet, and is reliable."

HERBERT F. ELLINGFORD, Mus. Bac., Oxon., F.R.C.O.

Owing to increased output, we have reduced the price of our Popular Model to 14 guineas cash. Deferred payments if desired.

Write for Lists, Prices, and Clients' Opinions, and References to

THE MALKIN PATENT PEDAL CO., LTD.,
NEWCASTLE-UNDER-LYME.

London address: 11, Ashlake Road, Streatham, S.W.16.

MR. M. KINGSTON'S ORGAN RECITALS.

ST. LUKE'S, HAMPSHIRE.
On SATURDAYS, from OCTOBER 4, at 6 p.m.
Fine Diapasons. Vocalists.

THE "DISCUS" ORGAN BLOWER

Is installed and giving complete satisfaction in over a thousand Cathedrals, Churches, Theatres, and Cinemas in Great Britain alone. This fact is eloquent, as well as convincing testimony, to its efficiency and durability. It is the most satisfactory method of mechanical organ blowing, and as the motive power may be oil, gas, or electric motor, the "Discus" is suitable for churches in any locality. The application of a "Discus" equipment to an organ ensures a steady supply of wind being instantly available, and enables the organist to obtain the best possible effects from the instrument. The "Discus" blower is the most scientifically designed machine for organ blowing purposes on the market. It is made of metal throughout, of the best quality combined with high grade workmanship. Being entirely free of complicated mechanism, a minimum of attention is required, and very many years of satisfactory services ensured. Efficiency and reliability are fully guaranteed with each "Discus" equipment we instal.

AS SUPPLIED TO WESTMINSTER ABBEY, YORK MINSTER, ETC., ETC.

WRITE FOR NEW BOOKLET.

*Sole Makers, Watkins & Watson, Organ Blowing Specialists for the past thirty years.
Designers and Manufacturers of all types of Hydraulic Engines, Gears, and Fittings for Organ Blowing.*

ESTIMATES SUBMITTED FREE.

WRITE TO

B. WATKINS AND WATSON
WHITE LION STREET, LONDON, N.1.

Telegrams: "HYDISBLOW, ISLING, LONDON."

Telephone: NORTH 2039.

JUST PUBLISHED.

THE TEACHING OF INTERPRETATION IN SONG BY DAWSON FREER

"One of the greatest joys in a teacher's life is the belief that he has enabled another human being to express in a beautiful form the feelings common to humanity."

In this new book Mr. Dawson Freer shows how the ideals of the singing teacher can be fulfilled in a practical way. It is a book which experienced teachers will enjoy and treasure; a book which young teachers will find of constant help and inspiration; a book which would-be teachers and student-artists will find of practical service.

It is authoritative—the work of a distinguished artist and professor of singing. It is practical—the fruits of over twenty years' experience. It is written in a simple, straightforward style, concise and to the point. It crystallises the essential things which the teacher has to teach and the student has to remember.

SOME OF THE CONTENTS.

The teacher's equipment. The relationship between technique and interpretation. The liberation of the emotions. The cure of artificiality. The artistic expression of the emotions. Intellectual perception. The factors that make an artist. The choice and study of songs. Songs, good and bad. Varying song types. Songs from the Oratorios and Operas. Facial expression—Memorising—Translations—Platform deportment—"Sensing" an audience, &c., &c.

Order this book for yourself, and advise your pupils to get it also.

PRICE 2s. 6d. through all musicsellers, newsagents, or booksellers; or post free, 2s. 9d., from the publishers,

EVANS BROS., LTD., Montague House, Russell Sq., LONDON, W.C.1.

BECHSTEIN PIANOS

THE BECHSTEIN PIANO needs little recommendation to cultured tastes. Its beautiful tone and incomparable touch—qualities which have gained for it the esteem of every music-lover, and have set a standard to the world—are as exquisite and as characteristic as ever.

Write or call for Catalogue.

126, NEW BOND STREET
LONDON, W. I.

TELEPHONE: MAYFAIR 2653.

PIANOS

GRAND and UPRIGHT

By High Grade Makers.

NEW AND SECOND-HAND FOR
SALE OR HIRE PURCHASE.

CHAS. STILES & CO.

74-76, SOUTHAMPTON ROW
LONDON, W.C.1.

Phone: MUSEUM 439.

STEINWAY

MUSIC LOVERS
CAN OBTAIN
PERFECT RESULTS
ONLY FROM THE PERFECT INSTRUMENT
THE STEINWAY.

115-117, WIGMORE STREET,
LONDON, W.1.

MOLLENHAUER FLUTES AND PICCOLOS

MESSRS. J. MOLLENHAUER & SONS possess a hundred years' world-wide reputation as makers of first-class Wood-Wind Instruments. Their Flutes and Piccolos are unrivalled in purity of tone, pleasing intonation, and solidity of mechanism, and are consequently used by the leading artists in every land.

Catalogue from—

FAUPEL BROTHERS,
4 & 5, OLD CHANGE, CHEAPSIDE, LONDON, E.C.4.
Telephone: City 5693.

Far Eastern inquiries to be addressed to our Hong-Kong office,
P.O. Box 631, Hong-Kong.

MUSIC FOR STRING ORCHESTRA.

JUST PUBLISHED.

J. S. BACH. PRELUDE AND FUGUE IN G MINOR.

Part II., No. 16, of the "Forty-Eight."
Arranged for String Orchestra (or Quartet) by
JULIUS HARRISON.

Score, 2s. 6d. Parts, 3s. 4d.

ERNEST AUSTIN. THE VICAR OF BRAY. Variations.
Score, 9s. Parts, 9s.

ADAM CARSE. BARBARA ALLEN. Variations.
Piano Conductor, 2s. 3d. String Parts, 6s.

J. D. DAVIS. SONG OF EVENING.
Score, 4s. Parts, 3s. 4d.

T. F. DUNHILL. THE CHIDDINGFOLD SUITE.
Score, 7s. 6d. Parts, 9s. 9d.

EDWARD ELGAR. ELEGY.
Score, 2s. 6d. Parts, 1s. 8d.

INTRODUCTION AND ALLEGRO (Op. 47). Quartet
and Orchestra.

Score, 16s.; Quartet Parts, 6s.; Orchestral Parts, 10s. 6d.

PERCY FLETCHER. TWO BAGATELLES.
Parts, 3s. 6d.

C. H. H. PARRY. SUITE IN F (Lady Radnor's Suite).
Score, 7s. Parts, 7s. 6d.

PERCY PITT. AIR DE BALLET.
Score, 3s. Parts, 3s. 4d.

HENRY PURCELL. SUITE FROM DRAMATIC MUSIC.
Edited by ALBERT COATES.
Score, 1s. 6d. Parts, 2s. 8d.

TWO SUITES FROM "THE GORDIAN KNOT UNTIED."

Edited by GUSTAV HOLST.
(With additional wind and drum parts ad lib.
MS. on hire.)

No. 1. Score, 4s. Parts, 2s. 8d.

No. 2. Score, 4s. Parts, 2s. 8d.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

A MODERN SUPPLEMENT TO ALL EXISTING DICTIONARIES OF MUSIC.

DICTIONARY of MODERN MUSIC

Royal 8vo.

and MUSICIANS

35s. net.

— FROM 1880—THE PRESENT DAY —

General Editor:

A. EAGLEFIELD-HULL, M.A., Mus.D. (Oxon.).

EDITORIAL COMMITTEE:

Sir HUGH ALLEN, M.A., Mus.D. (Oxon.).

Prof. GRANVILLE BANTOCK, M.A.,
Mus.Doc. (Edin.).

EDWARD J. DENT, M.A.

Sir HENRY J. WOOD.

"A complete and well-planned volume."—

Morning Post.

"An invaluable work of reference."—

Yorkshire Post."Remarkable for clearness and directness of expression."—Referee."One may very heartily congratulate all who accept responsibility for the new British work upon their exceptional understanding of the business of displaying and labelling."—Observer."Indispensable."—Daily News."An admirable work."—Scotsman.

8pp Prospectus post free.

A NEW standard work of reference compiled by a COMMITTEE OF EMINENT MUSICIANS, assisted by 32 NATIONAL SUB-COMMITTEES composed of 76 MUSICAL EXPERTS representing every civilised nation in the world.—IN ALL THERE ARE 115 CONTRIBUTORS OF INTERNATIONAL REPUTATION. The work touches on every aspect of music. Contemporary musicians and their work are dealt with in great detail. There are exhaustive articles on Modern Theory representing the consensus of expert critical opinion. THERE ARE ALSO MANY SPECIAL ARTICLES (WITH MUSICAL EXAMPLES) CORRELATING UP-TO-DATE INFORMATION FROM EVERY PART OF THE GLOBE.

ONE of the leading articles, that on HARMONY, HAS BEEN WRITTEN, NOT BY ONE EXPERT, BUT BY A COMMITTEE OF EXPERTS WITH GRANVILLE BANTOCK as Chairman. Among the other notable contributors may be mentioned: Parry, by Sir HUGH ALLEN. Berlioz, by Dr. PRUNIÈRES. Wagner, by Dr. EINSTEIN. Busoni, by Dr. LEICHTENTRITT. Musical Appreciation, by M.D. CALVOCORESSI. Orchestral Colour and Values, by Sir HENRY WOOD.

Write to-day for 8 pp. Prospectus giving fuller details.

J. M. DENT & SONS, LTD., 10, ALDINE HOUSE,
BEDFORD STREET, LONDON, W.C.2.

OXFORD BOOKS.

A SURVEY OF CONTEMPORARY MUSIC. BY CECIL GRAY.

In this important and provocative critical study, the author makes a complete survey of contemporary activity in music. 7s. 6d. net.

THE NEW MUSIC. BY DR. GEORGE DYSON.

Primarily a study that will appeal to all who have heard the modern masters and want to know a little more of how and why they seek to obtain their effects. 8s. 6d. net.

THE MARGIN OF MUSIC. BY EDWIN EVANS.

The point of view expressed in this book (the latest volume in the Oxford Musical Essays series) is that of the musician whose knowledge is not academic and whose experience is that of the world rather than the schools. 3s. 6d. net.

OXFORD CHORAL SONGS.

The seventeen new numbers now added to the Oxford Choral Songs (edited by Dr. W. G. Whittaker) brings the total up to 108. The high standard of both the music and words of the series, and its exceptional suitability for the voices and understanding of young people, have won for the series constant adoption by competition festivals and school choirs. The publication of two children's songs by Frederick Delius (No. 22 and No. 115) is an important event for school music, and particular attention is called to the two numbers (Nos. 208 and 209) of sacred and secular Rounds which Gustav Holst has edited. A new catalogue is now published which will be sent on request.

THE OXFORD EDITION. SONGS BY PETER WARLOCK, NORMAN PETERKIN, AND E. J. MOERAN.

During the Autumn the Oxford University Press proposes to publish some new songs by well-known composers, including Peter Warlock, Norman Peterkin, E. J. Moeran, Edgar Bainton, Dr. W. G. Whittaker, Hubert J. Foss, Gerrard Williams.

OXFORD UNIVERSITY PRESS.

NOVELLO'S HANDBOOKS FOR MUSICIANS.

EDITED BY ERNEST NEWMAN.

CHORAL TECHNIQUE AND INTERPRETATION

BY

HENRY COWARD.

MUS. DOC., OXON.

*Published as a Net Book.Price, Cloth, gilt, Seven Shillings and Sixpence net.*THE TEACHING AND ACCOMPANIMENT OF PLAINSONG

BY

FRANCIS BURGESS.

Published as a Net Book.Price, Cloth, gilt, Five Shillings and Sixpence net.

THE

Interpretation of the Music of the 17th &amp; 18th Centuries

AS REVEALED BY CONTEMPORARY EVIDENCE

BY

ARNOLD DOLMETSCH.

Published as a Net Book.Price, Cloth, gilt, Fifteen Shillings net.

APPENDIX

CONTAINING TWENTY-TWO ILLUSTRATIVE PIECES.

Price Five Shillings and Sixpence.

THE

SOURCES OF KEYBOARD MUSIC IN ENGLAND

BY

CHARLES VAN DEN BORREN.

Professor of the Université Nouvelle of Brussels.

TRANSLATED FROM THE FRENCH BY

JAMES E. MATTHEW.

Published as a Net Book.Price, Cloth, gilt, Ten Shillings and Sixpence net.

THE THEORY OF HARMONY

An Inquiry into the Natural Principles of Harmony, with an examination of the chief systems of Harmony from Rameau to the present day.

BY

MATTHEW SHIRLAW,

MUS.D., F.R.C.O.

(Lecturer in Music, University of Edinburgh, &c.)Published as a Net Book.Price, Cloth, gilt, Fifteen Shillings net.

THE ORGAN WORKS OF BACH

BY

HARVEY GRACE.

With an Introduction by ERNEST NEWMAN.

Published as a Net Book.Price, Cloth, Nine Shillings net.

LONDON : NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

THE "INDIVIDUAL" METHOD (SPECIALISED COACHING).

INDIVIDUAL COACHING by Correspondence, in Paper Work, for all degrees and Diplomas in Music.

Full preparation for L.R.A.M. and A.R.C.M. All Paper Work, and questions on Touch, Technique, Fingering, Pedalling, etc. Also for Mus.Bac. and Mus.Doc. and all R.C.O. and Trinity College Diplomas.

Numerous Successes.

DR. NORMAN SPRANKLING

Mus. Doc. (London), L.R.A.M.,

46, CLARENDON ROAD, REDLAND, BRISTOL.

'PHONE : BRISTOL 3033.

Candidates entering for the first time, and also those who have failed to pass any examination, should write to Dr. Sprankling (address above).

PERSONAL LESSONS—BRISTOL AND LONDON.

The extraordinary success of Dr. Sprankling's System is due very largely to the fact that the tuition is entirely INDIVIDUAL. Instead of forming a fixed and rigid "Course" of lessons, each lesson is sent with a view to the special requirements of the individual student. By this method, all weak points are at once concentrated upon, and each student is individually given a grip of everything essential to success, in the shortest possible time.

JUST PUBLISHED.

EMPIRE SONG BOOK

A COLLECTION OF SUITABLE MUSIC FOR CHILDREN'S FESTIVALS WHICH IS SO ARRANGED THAT IT MAY BE PERFORMED WITH OR WITHOUT ACTIONS.

"SHE STANDS A THOUSAND-WINTERED TREE"

"AN EMPIRE SONG"

AND THE

MEDLEYS

COMPOSED BY

PERCY E. FLETCHER.

(PRICE ONE SHILLING.)

Vocal Parts (Staff and Tonic Sol-fa Notations combined), Sixpence.

Orchestral Parts may be obtained.

LONDON : NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

TRINITY COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

President :

THE RT. HON. THE EARL OF SHAFTESBURY, K.P., G.C.V.O.

Director of Studies : C. W. PEARCE, M.A., Mus. D.

Director of Examinations : E. F. HORNER, Mus. D.

October 1st, at 3 p.m. Violin and Pianoforte Recital by Messrs. A. J. Slocombe and Joseph Speaight.

October 15th, at 3 p.m. Pianoforte Recital by Mr. George W. Punter.

October 22nd, at 3 p.m. Students' Concert.

October 29th, at 3 p.m. Pianoforte and Vocal Recital by Miss Catherine O'Brien and Miss Joan Cross.

The College provides INSTRUCTION and TRAINING in all Musical Subjects (Instrumental, Vocal, and Theoretical) and Dramatic and Operatic Elocution. The Lessons are arranged to meet the convenience of both day and evening students. Entry may be made for any number of Subjects—from one to the Full Course. The College is open to beginners as well as to the more proficient student; pupils under 16 years of age are received for the Junior School at reduced fees.

The ORCHESTRAL, CHORAL, the OPERATIC, and CHAMBER MUSIC CLASSES are open also to sufficiently competent persons who are not College Students for other subjects.

Tuition in the Rudiments of the Theory of Music, Harmony, Counterpoint, Form, Instrumentation, Composition, and the Art of Teaching is also given by Correspondence.

There are between Forty and Fifty Scholarships tenable at the College and open to all British subjects up to certain age limits, and the Cambridge Pianoforte Scholarship, value £100 per annum; also Eighteen Scholarships which provide complete preparation for the Degree of Bachelor of Music.

Particulars of the Teaching Department, with list of Professors, Fees, Scholarships regulations, &c., and the Syllabuses of the Diploma and Local Examinations, free on application to the undersigned.

C. N. H. RODWELL, Secretary.

Mandeville Place, Manchester Square, London, W.1.

CYRIL SCOTT ORGAN ALBUMS.

VOLUME I.

(Six pieces transcribed by Dr. A. W. POLLITT.)

- |                          |                          |
|--------------------------|--------------------------|
| 1. Vesperale.            | 4. A Song from the East. |
| 2. Alpine Sketch, No. 2. | 5. Solitude.             |
| 3. Chansonette.          | 6. Berceuse.             |

VOLUME 2.

(Six pieces transcribed by Dr. A. EAGLEFIELD HULL.)

- |                      |                      |
|----------------------|----------------------|
| 1. Ode Héroïque.     | 4. Cavatina.         |
| 2. Over the Prairie. | 5. Evening Idyll.    |
| 3. Diatonic Study.   | 6. Prelude Solennel. |

Price, 3s. 6d. each volume.

ELKIN & CO., LTD.,

8 & 10, BEAK STREET, REGENT STREET,
LONDON, W.1.

BROADWOOD PIANOS

BOSWORTH & CO., LTD.

MIND-POWER IN MUSIC.

By E. DOUGLAS TAYLER.

This Text-book covers a wide range of psychology as applied to music, and will prove of great help in overcoming any difficulties which may occur in the study of music.

Price, 1s. 3d. net.

THE SECRET OF SUCCESSFUL PRACTICE.

By E. DOUGLAS TAYLER.

Short cuts to piano-technique; a book of unique value to all students.

Price, 1s. 3d. net.

HAND CULTURE.

By BLANCHE RENNIE.

Finger, Hand, and Arm Gymnastics at the Piano. These exercises, which are fully explained and illustrated, give strength, freedom, and independence.

Price, 5s. net.

BOSWORTH & Co., LTD.

8, HEDDON ST., REGENT ST., LONDON, W.1.

JUST PUBLISHED.

SCHOOL MARCHES FOR PIANOFORTE SOLO BOOK III.

Price One Shilling and Sixpence.

CONTENTS.

Arrival of the Visitors ... ..	H. Hofmann
Bright and Buxom Lasses from "Martha" ... ..	Flotow
Instrumental Band, The ... ..	Percy E. Fletcher
Little March, A ... ..	J. D. Davis
March from "Egmont" ... ..	Beethoven
March from "St. Polycarp" ... ..	F. A. G. Onseley
March ... ..	Th. Kullak
March from "Tannhäuser" ... ..	Wagner
Marching off to Bed ... ..	Myles B. Foster
March of Priests from "The Magic Flute" ... ..	Mozart
Soldiers' Chorus from "Il Trovatore" ... ..	Verdi
Toy Soldiers' March ... ..	Tschaiakowsky

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

The Musical Times

AND SINGING-CLASS CIRCULAR

OCTOBER I 1924

(FOR LIST OF CONTENTS SEE PAGE 943)

THOMAS RAVENSCROFT, B.Mus.

(c. 1583—c. 1633)

BY JEFFREY MARK

The name at the head of this article has a familiar ring with it, but when the average musician comes to reckon up, he will find he knows little or nothing about the man. When I tried to find out why this is so, it came to me quite clearly that, in my own case at any rate, my whole knowledge of him was gained as a choir-boy. When singing, as I did then, from 'The Hymnal Companion,' I knew by heart most of the names—such as 'Saffron Walden,' 'Castle Rising,' 'Dominus regit me,' and the like—which are put at the head of the harmonizings in that book. One which frequently recurred was 'Ravenscroft's Psalter.' This meant nothing to me at that time and, until quite recently, has meant very little more, so that, when Dr. E. H. Fellowes, in his 'English Madrigal Composers,' says that it is by 'the sadly garbled versions of his hymn-tunes he is now best known,' he is no doubt telling us the bare truth about Ravenscroft's position in musical history to-day.

The known facts about Ravenscroft's biography can be given in a short space. In one of the prefaces to his 'Briefe Discourse' (1614), his age is given as twenty-two, but this would make him only fifteen when he became B.Mus. (at Cambridge in 1607), and only seventeen when he brought out his 'Pammelia' and 'Deuteromalia.' It is probable, therefore, that he was born about 1583. He was a chorister at St. Paul's under Edward Pearce, and music-master at Christ's Hospital from 1618 to 1622. He died about 1633 (see 'English Madrigal Composers').

Actually, Ravenscroft's Psalter ('The Whole Booke of Psalmes,' 1621) is quite the least important of his publications. It consists of a hundred harmonizings—forty-eight by himself and the remainder by twenty other musicians, some dead and some alive at that time. It is a creditable compilation, and in some ways more valuable than many other Psalters, but it only does in a slightly different way what had been done many times before and has been done scores of times since. In the case of his other publications, all are interesting and one at least, unique. The first appeared in 1609 under the following title:

Pammelia. Musick's Miscellanie; or, Mixed Varieties of Pleasant Roundelays, and delightful Catches of 3. 4. 5. 6. 7. 8. 9. 10 Parts, in one. None so ordinarie as musically, none so musically, as not at all, very pleasing and acceptable.

This was reprinted in 1618, and consists of a hundred catches and rounds, some to sacred words of the metrical Psalm type and others to Latin fragments from the Roman missal and elsewhere, but the majority to short stanzas of a traditional, popular, and mostly humorous or jovial character. It was the first collection of its kind to appear in England. The famous canon 'Robin, lend me thy bowe' is amongst them, and some others are of a simple and rare beauty in both words and music. The sweet and magic sadness of this, for instance:

Oken leaves in the merry wood so wilde,
When will you grow green-a.
Fayrest maid and thou be with child,
Lullaby maist thou sing-a.

Or this, in another vein:

Birch and green holly
(Birch and green holly),
If thou be'est beaten, boy,
Thanke thine own folly.

The excellent eight-part canon below, I give with the music. It scores very well, and the imperative 'Come again, ho' at the end is amusing and effective. It is resolved at a bar's interval:

Ex. 1.

Hey hoe, what shall I say? Sir John hath carried my wife a-way. They have gone ere I wist
She will come when she list, hey trol-ly, trol-ly lolly— Come a-gain, Ho!

'Deuteromalia' appeared in the same year, and is described on the title-page as below:

Deuteromalia: or the Second part of Musick's Melodie, or melodious Musicke. Of Pleasant Roundelays; K. H. mirth* or Freeman's Songs and such delightful Catches. 'Qui canere potest, canat.' Catch that catch can. 'Ut Melos, sic Cor melos afficit et reficit.'

Ravenscroft, as may even be gathered from this, was something of a wag in his way, but in other respects rather heavy and pedantic—a most unfortunate contradiction, particularly as, like many other Elizabethans, he was strongly addicted to punning and other laboured forms of witticism. 'Deuteromalia' is accordingly described as containing Mirth and Musicke to the Cunning-catcher.

Derth and Physicke to the Cony-catcher.†

* K. H. mirth has generally been thought to mean 'King Henry's mirth,' but Dr. Fellowes suggests that 'K. H.' stands for 'King's Head' and, as such, would refer to a famous tavern of this name in Cheap-side, or to a house in Greenwich known later to Pepys as 'the great musick house.'

† Cony-catchers (literally 'rabbit-catchers'), the popular name for certain types of disreputable thieves and deceivers who preyed, then as now, on the ignorance of people in London who 'had scarce seen the lions.' For an intimate description of these rogues, see Dekker's 'Gull's Horn Book,' and Robert Greene's 'Conny-catching' pamphlets.

In his introduction, Ravenscroft begins, with heavy sprightliness, to point out, that since

... 'secundae cogitationes' are ever (they say) meliores
... why may not then secundae cantiones be as well
dulciores

—which, we suppose, is his playful way of excusing himself for bringing out 'Deuteromalia' so quickly after 'Pammelia.' He continues, throughout, in a mixture of English and Latin, and ends as below:

Candidus imperti; sinon, hiis utere mecum, either commend me, or come and mend me, and so I end me, as resolute as thou art dissolute, and finally puts his name to his effusion as perkily as any Tom d'Urfey: 'THINE, T. R.'

'Deuteromalia' is a collection of some thirty-one pieces, of which eight are catches for three voices, and nine catches for four. 'Three Blind Mice' here appears perhaps for the first time in print, as below (the tune does not bear any resemblance to that sung to-day):

Three blind mice,

Dame Julian, the Miller and his merry old Wife,
Shee scrapte the tripe, licke thou the knife.

'Hold thy peace, knave,' a catch sung in 'Twelfth Night,' also appears, as well as another which is fairly well-known:

Mault's come downe, mault's come downe from an old Angell to a French crown.
There's never a maide in all this towne
but well she knowes that mault's come downe.
The greatest drunkards in this towne are very glad that mault's come downe.

The 'Freemen's Songs' (of which there are seven for three voices, and seven others for four) are rather more pretentious, but still settings to words of a popular and humorous character. 'The Wedding of the Flye and the Bee' describes, in nine four-lined stanzas, the wooing of this strange pair; who were bid to the wedding ('all Flyes in the field and Wormes creeping'; 'the Snail . . . with all her ioly trinkets at her traine'; 'Tenne Bees . . . all clad in Gold'); how the wedding was held in an 'old Ive tree,' how the bread was baked in an 'old horse head' and the ale brewed in 'one Walnut shale,' and of the matter and conclusion of the marriage. This is set as a canon for three voices.

Below is given the first verse and air of a song which was no doubt brought back by English soldiers from the Continental wars of the 16th century.* It is printed in Hawkins's 'History,' and with the occurrence of a French phrase at intervals along the stanzas brings to mind at once certain other familiar songs brought over from France by our soldiers during the Great War.

Ex. 2.

Wee be Soul-diers three. "Par-don-a moy, je vous an pree." Late-ly come forth of the low coun-try, with nev-er a pen-ny of mo-ny.

* See my setting of this song, for tenor, baritone, and bass solo, with male-voice chorus (T.T.B.B.). (The Year-Book Press.)

Ravenscroft's third collection appeared in 1611, as below:

Melismata. Musicall Phansies. Fitting the Court,
Citie and Countrey Humours. To 3, 4, and 5 voyces.

This contains twenty-three numbers which appear under the following headings: 'Court Varieties' (six pieces), 'Citie Rounds' (four), 'Citie Conceits' (four), 'Country Rounds' (five), and 'Country Pastimes' (four), and is described as being:

To all delightful except to the Spitefull,
To none offensive, except to the Pensive.

All except the 'Citie and Countrey Rounds' are short part-songs or madrigals, with the words and music arranged to fit the various 'humours' they are meant to represent. Perhaps the best of them is a setting for four voices of the famous 'Three Ravens' ballad which is included in the 'Country Pastimes.' Many of them are regularly arranged for verse and chorus, as in 'A Wooing Song of a Yeoman of Kent's Sonne,' where the last two lines in every stanza are repeated by the chorus. The first verse given with the music below will show that the poem is one of the many variants common in English and Scottish popular literature of the 16th and 17th centuries, based on the familiar line 'I cannot come every day to woo.' The first phrase of the treble is almost the same as that of the tune which Ravenscroft gives for the better-known 'Three Ravens' referred to above. The alto part, it will be noticed, is an ideal one for those who are nervous and somewhat uncertain in their part-singing:

Ex. 3.

I have house and land in Kent, and if you'll love me, love me now. Twopence halfpenny is my rent, I cannot come every day to woo.

CHORUS, repeat: 'Twopence-halfpenny, &c.
is my rent, I cannot come every day to woo.

Ravenscroft's fourth and (except for the Psalter) the last publication, appeared in 1614, under the following title:

A Briefe Discourse of the true (but neglected) use of Charactering the Degrees, by their Perfection,
Imperfection, and Diminution in Measurable Musicke, against the Common Practise and Customs of these Times. Examples whereof are exprest in the Harmony of 4 Voyces, Concerning the Pleasure of 5 usuall Recreations—1. Hunting, 2. Hawking, 3. Dauncing, 4. Drinking, 5. Enamouring.

In the introductions and prefaces to this work we have a very different Ravenscroft from the 'Thine, T. R.' of 'Deuteromalia.' He begins with a pompous dedication:

To the Right Worshipful, most worthy Grave Senators, Guardians of Gresham College in London.

An 'Apologie' follows, in which Ravenscroft bemoans:

. . . the piteously scourged and mangled body of music . . . with scarce Ligatures left to preserve the compacture of her Body, so much is shee wrong'd, dilacerated, dismembred and disioned in these our daies, she scarcely hath Forme or Habit left, but e'en as a Sceleton retaines only a shape, or shadowe, of what she was in her former purity.

After this come nine poems, praising Ravenscroft's endeavours. These are by 'Nathaniel Gyles, Thos. Campion, John Dowland, Io. Davies (Heref.), Martin Peerson, William Austin, Thos. Piers, T. H., and R. L. L. Theo-musophilus.' Dowland's compact little contribution is given in full below:

Figurate Musicke doth in each Degree
Require it Notes of severall Quantity,
By Perfect, or Imperfect Measure chang'd,
And that of More, or Lesse, whose Markes were rang'd
By Number, Circle and Poynt; but various use
Of unskil'd Composers did induce Confusion, which made muddy and obscure
What first Invention fram'd most cleere and pure.
These (worthy Ravenscroft) are restrain'd by Thee
To one fixt Forme: and that approv'd by Me.

Then comes a Preface which defines the scope of the work, and refers contemptuously to the Minstrels, who

. . . (though our City makes Musicians of them) . . . making account to doe the Art Honour, now in these daies of the ill opinion, and small credit it beares, have fairly brought [Music] downe from a chiefe Liberrall Science, to the basest almost of Mechanick Functions.

Since Ravenscroft's time, the 'body' of music has been continually 'dilacerated and dismembred,' and it is a testimony to her wonderful constitution that she has not only survived these barbarous attempts, but also the equally determined counter-efforts of such as he to restore her 'mangled body' to its 'former purity.' Ravenscroft thought to mend her shape by restoring the 'ligatures' invented or practised by composers and theorists such as Glareanus, Ornithoparcus, Sebaldus Heydon, John Dunstable, and Thomas Morley, and his 'Briefe Discourse' proper (which is largely duplicated in another 'Treatise of Musick' by Ravenscroft in the British Museum—Add. MS. 19,578) seeks to define the 'Divisions of Moode, Time and Prolation in Measurable Music' by a series of quotations from the theoretical works of these men.

Whereas, in his three earlier collections, there is no evidence (but rather his own ambiguous statement to the contrary) to show that Ravenscroft was the composer, or even the arranger, of any of the pieces, in the musical 'examples' from 'The Briefe Discourse,' seven of the twenty were composed by John Bennet, two by Edward Pearce, and the rest by Ravenscroft himself. In the Hunting section, Bennet and Pearce contribute a song each; under Hawking, Ravenscroft writes two songs and Bennet a third 'for the Hearne and Duck'; in the 'Dauncing' section Ravenscroft is responsible for 'the Fayries dance' and 'the Satyres daunce,' and Bennet for 'the Urchins daunce' and 'the Elves daunce'; the three Drinking songs ('of Beere,' 'of Ale,' 'of Ale and Tobacco') are all by Ravenscroft. The most remarkable thing about these songs is the deliberate endeavour to create the atmosphere peculiar to each 'recreation.' Technically considered they are all madrigals or part-songs with chorus, but some, according to Dr. Fellowes, are 'mere tavern songs.' Pearce's Hunting song is actually a four-voiced setting of the following words:

Hey trola, lola, hey trola, lola there there boys, there—hoicka, hoick-whoope
Crie there they goe, crie there they goe, they are at a fault—Boy winde the Horne.

Ravenscroft's Drinking songs are settings for four voices, with chorus, or such stanzas as this:

Trudge away quickly, and fill the black Bole, devoutly as long as wee bide.
Now welcome good fellows, both strangers and all,
set grief and sadness,
set sadness aside;

or this, for a chorus:

Tosse the pot, tosse the pot, let us be merry
And drinke till our cheeks be as red as a cherry.

Only the four 'charming fairy-like pieces' under the 'Dauncing' heading Dr. Fellowes is prepared to admire. Ravenscroft's own words as to their content and meaning will probably explain why:

. . . with some difference from the common Exercise now a daies of it, in our Maskes and Revells: As not grounded on the Dauncing of Measures, and accordingly bound to some particular Rules and Numbers, proper to the nature of the Daunce only, which then is afoot; But fashioned like those Antique Daunces, which the Poets would have us belevee, the Fayries and the Satyres, and those other Rurall Natures frequented, and having in them much more variety and change than any other Composition and withall so expressing our imperfect Moods and Measures, for their Tact, Prolation and Diminution.

All the same, I wish that Ravenscroft had followed out his realistic principles in this as in the other sections, so that we might now be able to catch the spirit which animated 'the common Exercise in the Maskes and Revells' of those days.

The fifth and last section, however, illustrating the 'recreation' of 'Enamouring' is possibly the most interesting of all. Bennet's two songs in the 'Court humour' and Pearce's in the 'City humour' are fairly orthodox, but the 'Countrey humour' is illustrated by Ravenscroft himself (except for a final chorus by Bennet) in a setting of a South-country dialect poem called 'Hodge Trillindle to his Zweethort Malkyn.' It is set 'vor Dreble, Denor, Meduz ond Basis,' and is in four distinct sections concerned respectively with the following stages in the wooing of Hodge and Malkyn :

1. 'Hodge to Malkyn.'
2. 'Malkynz anzwer to Hodge Trillindle.'
3. 'Their Gonglusion.'
4. 'Their Wedlocke' (set by Bennet).

This sequence is specially interesting as perhaps the earliest example of a song-cycle we have in English music. Mr. J. W. Brown of Carlisle, in an article in the Cornhill Magazine for May, 1920, claims this honour for a song-cycle in eleven sections composed by Richard Nicholson, the first Heather Professor of Music at Oxford University. Considerations of space alone prevent me from discussing this interesting point, which I shall leave until I can get an opportunity for comparing the two side by side. 'Hodge and Malkyn' is interesting enough in itself, but I must content myself with quoting the text of the 'Zegund bart' (Malkyn's reply to Hodge's avowal), which will give some idea of the temper of the thing:

Yo tell ma zo: but Roger ich a vound your words but thou not vor vorty bound [wynde, wooll I beeleave yo vurther than Ich zee.
Your words and deeds like Beens and Bacoan gree:
But if yol loave ma long a little vit,
Thon wedlocke Ich a little wool gomit, that ich wooll I.

Ravenscroft's position in Elizabethan music is, so far as my knowledge takes me, unique, or at any rate unusual. It appears to me, that in those times, and certainly for a fair time afterwards, the line between the professional or patronised musician and the hardy race of minstrels, was very clearly drawn. On the one hand were the musicians proper, who composed or played under the direct protection and patronage of some private gentleman or public body, and on the other, the unlicensed minstrels in various stages of decay and actual disrepair, who snatched a precarious livelihood from the very jaws of a law which classed them with 'rogues, vagabonds, and sturdy beggars.' The musicians' attitude towards them seems to have been one of complete and contemptuous indifference, except in so far as the minstrels proved themselves actually capable of 'queering a pitch' which they imagined to be specially reserved for themselves. Though it is largely this uncompromising and self-centred point of view which has given the work of these men that peculiarly intensive quality which the modern musician finds so attractive, yet it is also this same spirit of exclusiveness which prevents their music from attaining to the universal significance of the contemporary drama.* True it is that some others amongst them, Byrd and Bull included, were not above writing in a popular vein occasionally (albeit in a rather stiff sort of style), or even composing variations on tunes connected with 'carmen' and the like, but Ravenscroft, with his efforts to satisfy the 'Court, City, and Country humours'—now something of a coxcomb, and then again a regular pedant—somehow manages to bridge over the gap between two bodies of musicians, each of whom might have learned a great deal from the other. Even in Ravenscroft's own case, it seems likely that his irregular doings were a feature of his early life only, and that later he came back to the fold and behaved himself properly with Dowland, Campion, Peirson, and the rest of them. During the time of 'Pammelia,' 'Deuteromalia,' and 'Melismata,' I imagine him as something like Hardy's 'Jude,' who, although well educated, and a man of keen and sensitive perception, was yet capable of reciting the creed in Latin to call up some sort of admiration for himself from a crowd of drunkards and ne'er-do-wells in a tavern. By the time of his 'Briefe Discourse,' 1614, Ravenscroft's 'conversion,' as already suggested, was complete. In 1616, he contributed three anthems and a motet (all for five voices), to Sir Thomas Myriell's collection 'Tristitiæ Remedium'; besides these, some six or seven other anthems by him are in MS. in the British Museum (Add. MSS. 29,427, 30,478-9), and in the library at Christ Church, Oxford. Five years later he made a complete atonement with his 'Whole Booke of Psalms.'

The slight sarcasm in the last paragraph aimed at the more venerable figures in Elizabethan music need not offend the enthusiast, as nothing can really touch them, still less oust them from the peculiar strength of their position. The point is that, taking their work in the sweep of musical history, it appears so very limited and so very much the same in determination and in actual quality. It is no answer to say that one must be soaked in it before he can begin to realise the differences in the work of the various composers, which are, in effect, quite striking and not subtle. This fact is appreciated even in the case in question. Ravenscroft, in his serious and more orthodox work, is inferior in both the quality and inspiration of his music to most of his more famous contemporaries. It is as definitely 'Elizabethan' in structure and flavour, but in all his music which I have scored, I find a definite stiffness in the texture, and a jerkiness and woodenness in the part-writing. John Bennet's final chorus in the Hodge and Malkyn cycle, for instance, is at once smoother and much more spontaneous than any of the other three by Ravenscroft. Still the fact remains that to a modern intelligence at any rate, the whole musical output of the age is remarkably homogeneous in intention and in effect; particularly (and this is most strange and disconcerting to us) in that there is little, or none at all, which can definitely be stigmatised as bad. There is so much of orthodox anthem, motet, madrigal, and fancy, all of a uniform and excellent quality, and so very little of what Ravenscroft gives us in his 'Melismata' and 'Briefe Discourse.' That is why I consider him to be important.

* The Elizabethan poets proper (i.e., apart from the dramatists), and with the possible exception of Spenser, are like the professional musicians in this respect. With their preoccupation with form and the neatness and delicacy of the context, their imitations of Ronsard, du Bellay, and the rest, as well as other Italian and Spanish schools of intense and somewhat precious ideals, they are of small importance compared with the dramatists, who, by virtue of a rude contact with the theatre, and more particularly, the humanising influence of 'the stinking groundlings,' became the true poets and singers of a wonderful age.

ACCIDENTAL STROKES OF GENIUS

BY ALEXANDER BRENT-SMITH

Strictly speaking, all strokes of genius are accidental, but some are obviously more a matter of chance than others. For instance, the invention of Sam Weller was a stroke of genius and the invention of Rugby football was a stroke of genius, but the first was an incident in the literary career of Charles Dickens, and the second was an accident in the scholastic career of William Webb Ellis, who, 'with a fine disregard of the rules of the game as played in his time, first took the ball in his arms and ran with it, thus originating the distinctive features of the Rugby game.'

That some strokes of genius are the merest accident is proved by the fact that they happen occasionally even to machines. All of us have gurgled with delight over the masterly stroke of genius on the part of the linotype machine which changed the Christian name of a famous demagogue from Horatio into Hotario, with its deadly hint at his gaseous platform eloquence. Many have inwardly chuckled over a similar mistake when a father lamenting the loss of his daughter was made to say 'It was the bridge-room stole her from me' instead of 'It was the bridegroom stole her from me.' We can only gasp with astonishment and murmur 'Truth will out.'

There are three classes of accidental strokes of genius—those that we know were accidental from our study of biography; those that we know were accidental, by inference; and those that we think were accidental, by conjecture.

In the first class we put those inspired moments in music or literature which occurred to their creators through some external prompting. We know that Wagner inserted the cor Anglais solo in the third Act of 'Tristan and Isolde' because he heard just such an effect during the darkness and silence of night at Venice. We know that the famous D flat Prelude of Chopin owes its chief characteristic to the fact that Chopin composed it to the accompaniment of incessantly dripping rain outside. We know, too, that the most arresting feature in the 'Hymn of Praise' was suggested to Mendelssohn by the most wearisome of life's lesser evils—a sleepless night.

In the second class we put all those passages which composers arrived at almost unconsciously. This is a very large class, and embraces nearly all the big architectural passages in music, in which chance phrases, born of the original subject-matter, play an unexpectedly important part. This is a common occurrence in fugues, and the reason is that when a composer begins the composition of a fugue he cannot quite tell where his idea will lead him. Of course, he foresees certain possibilities in his subject-matter, but he cannot tell what accidents by the way may alter his course. And the same thing is true of novel-writing. The novelist knows the main incidents, but cannot tell how far these will be altered by the actions and characters of his hero or heroine once they have been put in motion. He is, as it were, Columbus, intending to sail to India but actually discovering America; or Saul, the son of Kish, who set out to find his father's asses and succeeded in founding a kingdom.

John Milton set out to write a drama, but instead of a drama he produced an epic. Jane Austen, in 'Northanger Abbey,' intended to parody the sensational writing of Mrs. Radclyffe, but discovered as her work progressed that she was producing not a parody but a novel of remarkable genius. Wagner built the Finale of the second Act of 'The Mastersingers' upon a theme which he intended to sound foolish, but which turned out in its development to be magnificent, just as Mr. Pickwick was created by Dickens to be the butt of every swindler, and became almost imperceptibly the master of every circumstance.

Beethoven wrote a canon making fun of Maelzel and his metronome, but this same tune he used shortly afterwards in the eighth Symphony and transformed into one of the loveliest movements he ever composed. Thus it happens that well-written movements frequently take their character from accidental features rather than from their parent themes. For example, the 'Doric' Fugue of Bach depends more upon its counter-subject than upon its subject, though the one could not have existed but for the other. Similarly the Finale of the 'Jupiter' Symphony is a triumph of second thoughts. In fact, the great masters in no way display their greatness so clearly as in their ability to follow the beckoning of the spirit whithersoever it happens to lead them.

In the third class we must put those rare strokes of genius which we imagine, with insufficient reason, to be accidental. Included in this class would be all those doubtful readings which may be either inspirations or misprints. Take the opening speech of 'Twelfth Night,' which contains the doubtful lines:

It came o'er my ear like the sweet sound
That breathes upon a bank of violets.

Some editors read 'sound,' others read 'south.' Each perceives in his own reading the genius of Shakespeare. Now either may be an inspiration, but it is certain that both cannot be true Shakespeare: therefore one, I know not which, can only be an accidental stroke of genius. In the same category must be placed the debated close of Chopin's F major Prelude, and another even more acrimoniously debated passage which I will not even mention, lest I disturb a hornet's nest.

In this class also we must put those fortunate slips of the pen which composers have realised are an improvement upon their original intention. It is well known that on one occasion when Liszt was playing, he hit a wrong note at the top of a magnificent arpeggio. Nothing daunted by his mistake, he used the wrong note as part of a new harmony, worked his way down the pianoforte on this new harmony, and then repeated the faulty arpeggio, this time correctly. Now that is the sort of accident which seems to account for various strokes of genius in the works of some composers, though of course they may possibly be natural inspirations. In the opening bars of the F minor Fantasy of Chopin there is a rhythmic figure which drops from F to C. One day (we may surmise), when Chopin was strumming, he happened to turn round to speak to George Sand. Not thinking what he was doing, he let his fingers stumble on to C flat instead of C. Hence that superbly unexpected modulation which thrills us every time we hear it played. This is, of course, pure supposition, but it is none the less probable.

Such strokes of genius might happen to anyone, but they do not, because it is only the few who can hear their possibilities. Beauty and Truth are for ever confronting us, but there are few who can hear in the slip of a finger anything more than an unfortunate mistake, just as there are few who can see in a falling apple anything more than the prospect of a dumpling.

FOOT-NOTES TO MUSICAL HISTORY

BY WILLIAM C. SMITH

[Notes on some unique and rare works recently acquired by the British Museum]

The publication in 1912 of the 'Catalogue of Printed Music (1487-1800) in the British Museum' placed within the reach of students and collectors information on the earlier printed musical works then available in the National Library.

Apart from the steadily growing mass of modern music received under the Copyright Acts and by purchase, the Museum has opportunities from time to time of acquiring unique and rare works by purchase, gift, or bequest. Since the publication of the Catalogue referred to above, a considerable number of additions of old works have been made to the Library, and pending the issue of the particulars of these recent accessions in a Supplementary Catalogue, it will doubtless be of interest to have descriptions of some of the most interesting and important of them.

Occasionally, when a unique work changes hands and is placed in the Museum, the matter is referred to in a newspaper or magazine article, but in the majority of instances the work is quietly added to the Museum collection and the matter is not brought immediately to the notice of the public. A few, therefore, of the works mentioned here have been already chronicled, but the present whereabouts of the majority is known only to the authorities and to a limited circle of readers.

The particulars given here include references to some works of which no other copies are known, and in other cases to works that are otherwise unrecorded by the standard bibliographical authorities.

The accessions cover generally the whole field of music, and although no one class has been especially selected for description, specimens of certain types of work are particularly well represented. For instance, the great number of Madrigals published on the Continent during the 16th century, and the tendency for the complete sets of parts of these works to be broken up and scattered are reasons for the frequent occurrence of this type of composition in sale catalogues, &c. Odd parts are thus always being acquired by the Museum as additions to broken sets, but unless the parts are complete or have some special interest they are omitted from descriptions here given. The works are treated in chronological order. The press-marks are supplied in round brackets. The composer or heading precedes the title and description. Particulars in square brackets have been supplied from other sources than the works themselves, and unless stated to the contrary each work is complete.

Motets. Motetti a cinque Libro primo. [O. Petrucci: Venice, 1505.] obl. 4°. (K.1.d.5.*)

The Superius part only of an exceedingly rare work, formerly in the possession of Alfred Littleton. Several other collections of Motets of the 16th century have also been acquired.

Dobneck (Johann) Cochleus. Tetrachordū Musices Joannis Coclei Norici. Artium Magistri . . . Impressi In Officina . . . Joannis Weyssenburger: Nurnberge, 1511. 4°. (K.1.h.22.)

The Museum previously possessed the 1512 edition. Only three other copies of the 1511 edition are known. The work consists of thirty leaves, thirty-eight lines to a full page.

Virdung (Sebastianus). Musica getutscht vnd auszgezogen durch Sebastianū virdung . . . vnd alles gesang ausz den notē in die tabulaturē diser benantē dryer Instrumētē der Orgeln: der Lautē: vnd 4 Flöten transferieren zu lernē . . . [Furter? Basel? 1511.] obl. 4°. (K.8.c.9.)

This work, formerly owned by Alfred Littleton and described in 'Grove,' is one of the earliest printed works on instruments and has many illustrations.

Senfl (Ludwig). Liber selectarum cantionum quas vulgo mutetas appellant sex quinque et quatuor vocum. [S. Grimm and M. Wirsung: Augsburg.] 1520. fol. (K.9.a.24.)

A large folio volume, edited by Senfl. It contains compositions by the composers whose names are given as follows: H. Yzac, Josquin de Press, L. S[enfl], J. Hobrecht, P. de la Rue, and Mouton.

Martínez de Bizcargui (Gonçalo). Ate [sic] de canto llano y cōtrapunto y canto de organo con proporciones y modos breuemēte cōpuesta y nueuamente anādida y glosada . . . Juan de Jūta: Burgos, 1528. 4°. (K.8.f.21.)

The 1550 edition was previously in the Museum. The earlier edition is very rare, and unknown to Eitner.

Chansons. Quart liure contenant xxvj. chansons musicales a troys parties a deux dessus & ung concordant, Le tout de la composition de Claude geruaise . . . Pierre Attaignant: Paris, 1550. obl. 4°. (K.2.a.9.)

Psalms. Pseaumes de David, mis en rythme francoise par Clement Marot, & Theodore de Besze, avec Nouvelle et facile methode pour chanter chacun couplet des Pseaumes sans recours au premier selon le chant accoustumé en l'Eglise, exprimé par notes compendieuses exposées en la Preface de l'Auteur d'icelles. Pierre Dauantes: [Lyons? or Geneva?] 1560. 12°. (K.8.a.15.)

Very rare. Formerly in the Littleton library, the sale catalogue of which gives a reproduction of the numerical notation which Davantes claimed to have invented. The text is printed in 'lettres de civilité.'

Other collections of Psalms acquired include:

Four score and seven Psalmes of Daud in English mitre by Thomas sterneholde and others . . . [J. Day: London,] 1561. 16°. (Case 36.bb.4.)

Formerly in the Britwell library.

The Whole Booke of Psalmes . . . John Day: London, 1565. 4°. (Case 24.a.31.)

Imperfect.

The Whole Booke of Psalmes . . . Iohn Daye: London, 1580. 8°. (689.a.41.)

Imperfect.

The Whole Booke of Psalmes. Iohn Windet for the Assignes of Richard Day: London, 1594. 4°. (1411.f.25.)

Imperfect.

The three latter works presented by Robert Steele, who described them in his 'Earliest English Music Printing,' London, 1903 (Nos. 48, 80, 142). Other books of Psalms are described under their respective composers.

Rufolo (Matteo). Di Matteo Rufolo Il Primo Libro de' Madrigali a Quattro Voci . . . Appresso Girolamo Scotto: Venetia, 1563. obl. 4°. (K.7.b.13.)

The only known copy. Rufolo (or Rufile) published another book of Madrigals for five voices in 1561.

Day (John). Mornyng and Euenyng prayer and Communion . . . John Day: London, 1565. fol. (K.7.e.8.)

This is another edition of 'Certaine notes,' &c., published by Day in 1560. The British Museum previously possessed Contra Tenor and Tenor parts only. The Medius and Bassus parts have now been added from Lincoln.

Le Roy (Adrian). A Briefe and easye instrution to learne the tableture to condeute and dispose thy hande vnto the Lute [by Adrian Le Roy] englished by J. Alford Londonor. Ihon Kyngston for James Roubothum: London, 1568. obl. 4°. (K.1.c.25.)

A later English edition of Le Roy's work was published by Kyngston in 1574, in three books with continuous pagination, but separate title-pages. On the first title-page it is described as 'translated into English by F. Ke. Gentelman.' The second book of the 1574 edition consists, however, of fol. 1-16 of Alford's translation (1568), with another illustration of a Lute player added, and with the author's and translator's prefaces and folios 17-39 of Alford's selection of lute pieces omitted. This unexplained appropriation does not appear to have been noted hitherto.

Chamatero (Hippolito). Di Hippolita Chamatero . . . Il Secondo Libro delli Madrigali à quattro voci . . . Appresso Girolamo Scotto: Vinegia, 1569. 4°. (K.7.a.2.)

The only Museum specimen of a number of works published by this composer, who is described as 'Maestro di Capella nel Domo di Udine.'

Corona (Giovanni). Di Gioanne Corona Organista Il Primo Libro de Madrigali A Cinque Voci . . . Appresso li Figliuoli di Antonio Gardano: Venetia, 1574. obl. 4°. (K.7.b.2.)

A unique copy of this work, formerly at Lincoln, by a composer of whom nothing else is known, except that he contributed a madrigal to Chamatero's collection described above.

Cosyn (John). Musike of Six and Fiue partes. Made upon the common tunes vsed in singing of the Psalmes. Iohn Wolfe: London, 1585. obl. 4°. (K.8.b.6.)

No complete copy of the work exists. To the Altus part at the Museum, the Tenor, Quintus, and Sextus parts have now been added from Lincoln. Little is known of John Cosyn, who may have been the father of Benjamin Cosyn, the compiler of the Virginal Book formerly at Buckingham Palace, but now at the Museum.

Pozzo (Vincenzo dal). Di Vincenzo dal Pozzo Il Primo Libro de Madrigali a Cinque Voci . . . Appresso l'Herede di Girolamo Scotto: Vinegia, 1585. 4°. (K.4.f.9.)

This copy, formerly in the Huth collection, is one of a number of works by a composer whose compositions have been hitherto inaccessible to English students, with the exception of a book of Madrigals for four voices published in 1600.

Primavera (Giovanni Leonardo). Il Settimo Libro de Madrigali a cinque voci . . . Appresso l'Herede di Girolamo Scotto: Vinegia, 1585. 4°. (K.7.a.8.)

The Museum possesses only two other works by this rather prolific composer, particulars of whom appear in 'Grove' and other authorities. The copy mentioned here was formerly at Lincoln.

Manenti (Giovanni Piero). Li Pratinoli . . . A Cinque Voci . . . Appresso Angelo Gardano: Venetia, 1586. obl. 4°. (K.7.b.5.)

The composer, described as 'Bolognese Musico del serenissimo Gran Duca di Toscana,' was previously represented in the Museum by the Canto part of 'Madrigali . . . a Sei Voci . . . Libro Primo, Venetia, 1574.'

Tristabocca (Pasquale). Di Pasquale Trista Bocca da l'Aquila Il Secondo Libro di Madrigali a Cinque Voci . . . Appresso l'Herede di Girolamo Scotto: Vinegia, 1586. 4°. (K.7.a.11.)

This copy from Lincoln, is the only one known to Eitner.

Pascarola (Giovanni Thomaso de Benedictis da). Di Don Gio. Thomaso de Benedicti da Pascarola Il Primo Libro de Madrigali a cinque voci . . . Ad instantia di Scipion Rizzi: Venetia, 1589. 4°. (K.4.f.8.)

The composer is known only by this work, formerly in the Huth library, and another copy of which is at Naples.

Damon (William). The former Booke of the Musicke of M. William Damon . . . containing all the tunes of Dauids Psalmes, as they are ordinarily sung in the Church: most excellently by him composed into 4. parts . . . Published for the recreation of such as delight in Musicke: By W. Swayne Gent. T. Este, the assigné of W. Byrd: [London,] 1591. 4°. (K.3.m.4.)

The Altus, Tenor, and Bassus parts have now been added to the Cantus part. The Museum also possesses the Cantus part of 'The second Booke of the Musicke,' &c., 1591. The two books were issued to replace 'The Psalmes of David in English meter, with Notes of foure partes set vnto them by Guilielmo Daman, for Iohn Bull . . . 1579,' an earlier edition of Damon's work which had an unfavourable reception.

Cavendish (Michael). [...] (I) 14. Ayres in Tabletorie to the Lute expressed with two voyces and the base Violl or the voice & Lute only. 6. more to 4 voyces and in Tabletorie, And 8. Madrigalles to 5. voyces. By Michaell Cavendish Gentleman. At London Printed by Peter Short, on bredstreethill at the signe of the Starre: 1598. fol. (K.2.i.20.)

A unique but imperfect copy of this large folio table book. Unfortunately, mutilation of the title-page leaves the beginning of the title unknown. The work is probably to be identified with the Ghost 'Ayres for four voyces,' 1599, ascribed to Cavendish by bibliographers, no copy of which, however, has ever been traced. Cavendish contributed a Madrigal 'Come, gentle Swaines' to Morley's 'Triumphes of Oriana,' 1601, and another setting of the same words is in the '14 Ayres.' A long and interesting description of the work appeared in the Times Literary Supplement, April 4, 1918.

Vecchi (Orfeo). Orpheu Vecchii . . . In septem Regij prophete Psalmos vulgò poenitentiales Sacrarum modulationum quæ Motecta nuncupantur & senis vocibus concinuntur Liber Quartus. Apud hæc. Simonis Tini & Franciscum Besutium Mediolani, 1601. 4°. (K.7.a.12.)

One of a number of works by this composer, who has escaped the notice of many authorities. Eitner, however, has a long article. The Museum possesses one other work, the Bassus of a volume of Motets published in 1603.

Dowland (John). Lachrimæ, or Seaven Teares Figvred in Seaven Passionate Pauans, with diuers other Pauans, Galiards, and Almonds, set forth for the Lute, Viols, or Violons, in fve parts . . . Iohn Windet: London [1604.] fol. (K.2.i.16.)

A magnificent copy of this famous Table Book for Instruments, formerly in the Huth library. The work is extremely rare, and it is a notable addition to the Museum collection.

Banchieri (Adriano). La Pazzia Senile. Ragionamenti vaghi et dilettevoli, a tre voci . . . Libro Secondo. Appresso Ricciardo Amadino: Venetia, 1611. 4°. (K.7.a.1.)

A rare copy of the 1611 edition of an almost epoch-making work, 'the first comic-opera,' originally published in 1598. Banchieri excelled in almost every branch of music, and is well represented in the Museum library.

Dering (Richard). Cantica Sacra ad melodiam madrigalium elaborata senis vocibus, Cum Basso Continuo ad Organum . . . Apud Petrum Phalesium: Antverpiæ, 1618. 4°. (K.7.a.4.)

An earlier work than any other in the Museum by this composer. The copy was formerly at Lincoln. From the same source was also obtained Dering's Canzonette a quattro voci, con il Basso Continuo . . . Appresso Petro Phalesio: Anversa, 1620. obl. 4°. (K.7.b.3.)

Adson (John). Courtly Masquing Ayres, composed to 5. and 6. Parts, for Violins, Consorts, and Cornets. Printed for T[homas] S[nodham], for Iohn Browne: London, 1621. 4°. (K.8.f.8.)

The Museum possessed a copy of the Altus part. A fine complete set of the six parts has now been added from the Britwell library.

Porter (Walter). Madrigales and Ayres of two, three, foure and fve Voyces, with the continued Base, with Toccatos, Sinfonias and Rittornellos to them. After the manner of Consort Musique. To be performed with the Harpeschord, Lutes, Theorbos, Base Violl, two Violins, or two Viols. Published by Walter Porter, one of the Gentlemen of his Maiesties Royall Chappell. Printed by William Stansby: London, 1632. 4°. (K.8.f.20.)

This copy, formerly in the Britwell library, consists of five vocal parts (Canto, Alto, Tenor, Quinto, Basso) and one instrumental part (Basso). In Porter's preface 'To the Practitioner' the instrumental parts are referred to as follows:

Thus much I thought good to certifie thee; what shall be wanting as through Bases, for the other Instruments, which is to be vsed to make up the body of Musicke, according as I haue set downe, thou must take a little paines to write out, as I haue taken a great deale to make them, and to haue them printed.

Caputi (Gio. Battista). Canzonette Spirituali a tre voci. Con il Basso Continuo . . . Opera Seconda. Appresso Ottauio Beltrano: Napoli, 1640. 4°. (K.2.d.18.)

The composer and work are otherwise unknown. The dedication is dated 1641.

Barnard (John). The First Book of Selected Church Musick . . . Edward Griffin: London, 1641. fol. (K.7.e.2.)

The Medius Decani part has now been added to the Secundus Contratenor Decani, Bassus Cantoris, and imperfect Tenor Cantoris parts in the Museum.

Frescobaldi (Girolamo). Canzoni alla Francese in Partitura . . . raccolte d'Allessandro Vincenti . . . Libro Quarto. Appresso Allessandro Vincenti: Venetia, 1645. fol. (K.2.i.18.)

Only two other copies known.

Gamble (John). Ayres and Dialogues for One, Two, and Three Voyces; to be Sung either to the Theorbo-Lute or Basse-Viol . . . The Second Book. W. Godbid for Nathaniel Ekin: London, 1659. fol. (K.2.g.13.)

This copy, formerly owned by Julian Marshall and Dr. Cummings, is bound up with a copy of the first book of 'Ayres and Dialogues,' 1656, another copy of which the Museum also possesses.

Playford (John). Courtly Masquing Ayres . . . of two parts Treble and Basse for Viols or Violins. Composed by several Excellent Masters . . . W. Godbid for J. Playford: London, 1662. obl. 4°. (K.2.c.13.)

The Treble part only, formerly owned by Dr. Cummings. A complete copy is at the R.C.M.

Gaultier ( ) called Le vieux and Gaultier (Denys). Liure de Tablature des Pieces de Luth. De M<sup>r</sup> Gaultier S<sup>r</sup> de Nètte Et de M<sup>r</sup> Gaultier son Cousin, sur plusieurs differents Modes, avec quelques Reigles, qu'il faut observer pour le bien Toucher. Graué par Richer. A Paris chez la veufue de M<sup>r</sup> Gaultier dans la monnois. [1664?] small obl. 4°. (K.4.a.17.)

A very rare (probably unique) copy of the work of the last two members of a celebrated family of lute players. Ninety-two pages (1-8; 5-88), the whole charmingly engraved, with illustrated title-page. The music, in tablature, consists of Giges, Courants, Fantaisies, Sarabandes, Canaries, &c., the respective composers being named. This copy may be the one described in the sale catalogue of the library of J. B. Weckerlin. No other copy is known.

Visée (Robert de). Liure de Gvittarre dediée av Roy, Composé par Robert de Visée. Gravé par Hierosme Bonnetüil. Se vend a Paris Chez le dit Bonnetüil . . . et Chez Nicolas Cheron . . . [1682.] obl. 4°. (K.1.k.12.)

Only one other copy is known (Bib. Nat. Paris). Eighty-four pages. The work contains Preludes, Suites, Courantes, Sarabandes, &c., in tablature and staff notation, with explanatory preface, and is finely engraved in a picturesque style.

Hudgebut (John). A Collection of New Ayres: Composed For Two Flutes with Sonata's. By some of the Ingenious Masters of this Age. The First Collection. [With preface signed: John Hudgebutt.] Printed by J. Heptinstall for John Hudgebutt: London, 1695. obl. 4°. (K.2.c.15.)

The first flute part only. Composers named are Courtville, Will William, Solomon Eccles, Keene, Morgine, John Eccles, John Banister. This copy was formerly in the possession of Dr. Cummings.

Morgan ( ). A Collection of New Songs With a Thorough Bass to each Song, and a Sonata for two Flutes, Compos'd by M<sup>r</sup> Morgan. I. Walsh . . . and I. Hare: London, 1697. fol. (K.2.i.21.)

A finely engraved folio (title-page and ten leaves) containing songs in 'Ye Musick of the Generall Peace' sung by 'Mrs. Linsey, Mr. Leveridge, Ms. Cross'; songs in 'The Imposture Defeated,' sung by 'Ms. Linsey, Ms. Cross'; 'Endimion sung by Ms. Cibber' and 'Cinthia sung by Ms. Mills' [from 'Endymion']: and a Sonata for two flutes and a bass.

'The Imposture Defeated,' a comedy by George Powell, followed by 'Endimion,' a Masque by the same author, was produced in 1697, and the text published in 1698. Morgan the composer, about whom little is known, is represented by a Catch in 'Joyful Cuckoldom' [1690?-96?], and he may have been the 'Morgine' mentioned in the work by Hudgebut described above.

Musica Oxoniensis. A Collection of Songs: for One and Two Voices, with the Thorough-Bass. Publish'd by Francis Smith, and Peter de Walpergen Letter-Founder, by whom 'twas Cut on Steel, and Cast, by the Directions of the former. Oxford: Printed by Leon. Lichfield: And are to be Sold by John Walsh . . . and John Hare . . . London, 1698. fol. (K.8.k.12.)

Twelve pages, dedication and preface. Contains a song in two parts by John Welldon, three songs by Richard Goodson from the 'Mask of Orpheus and Euridice.' The preface 'To all Lovers of Musick' states

The Character with which all Musick has been as yet Printed, not being Comparable to that which is generally Written; we have been induced to consider of a new way how any Musick may be Printed so as to be more Convenient, and more Beautiful than Any yet Publish'd, if not equal to any in Manuscript. Whether the Effect has answer'd the Design, we leave to the Censure of those, who will, without Prejudice, compare this Specimen with any Printed Musick; and we doubt not, but the Neatness of the Character, the Regularity and Evenness of the Lines, the natural Division of the several Syllables to their proper Notes, &c. will easily be seen; and the great Expence and Trouble, we have hitherto been at, be in some measure Rewarded by a candid Reception and Encouragement . . . The Musick is Compos'd by Good Masters, and several Songs by the same Hands and Others, may be procur'd and Monthly Publish'd if the Work meets with Encouragement.

Copies of the work are also at Glasgow and in the Bodleian Library.

Purcell (Daniel). The Songs in Phaeton: or, The Fatal Divorce . . . With An Addition of some Songs in the last New Play (The Campaigners). Printed by J. Heptinstall for Samuel Scott: London, 1698. fol. (G.112.a.)

A hitherto unrecorded edition of the Songs in these two plays. Sixteen pages, with 'Symphony for Violins or Flutes.'

Hotteterre (Jacques). Pieces pour la flute traversiere, et autres instruments avec la basse-continue . . . Livre premier. Œuvre second. Chez Christophe Ballard: Paris, 1708. obl. 4°. (c.14.a.)

Formerly in the possession of Dr. Southgate. A rare work by one of the most famous flautists of the time. Unrecorded in 'Grove,' he appears in Eitner and Riemann as 'Louis Hotteterre.'

Manfredini (Francesco). Sinfonie Da Chiesa a due Violini col Basso per l'Organo & una Viola a beneplacito con vna Pastorale per il Santissimo Natale . . . Opera Seconda. Per Marino Siluani: Bologna, 1709. fol. (K.2.i.19.)

The composer wrote several oratorios, and the Museum possesses 'Six Sonatas for Two Violins and a Violoncello with a Thorough Bass for the Harpsichord,' London [1770?].

Flute Music. Catches for Flutes or A Collection of the best Catches contriv'd and fitted for 1 : 2 : 3 : or 4 Flutes, to be perform'd in the nature of Catches, which makes a compleat Consort of Flutes, being y<sup>e</sup> first of y<sup>e</sup> kind yet publish'd . . . J. Walsh . . . and J. Hare : London, [1710?] obl. 8°. (b.171.a.1.)

A nicely engraved work of twenty-four leaves and index, bound up with

A Choice Collection of Airs or Ariett's for two Flutes with the Overture of Camilla & Arsinoe . . . to which is added a New Sonata for two Flutes Compos'd by Mr Daniel Purcell . . . I. Walsh and I. Hare : London, [1708?] obl. 8°. (b.171.a.2.)

Nicely engraved ; two parts of seventeen leaves each. Includes Airs and an Overture by 'Mr. Keen,' otherwise known only by the existence in MS. Harl. 4899.f.4, of an 'Overture and Sonata in G' for two flutes by [Edward?] Keene.

Pécour (Louis Guillaume). Nouveau Recüeil de Dance de Bal et celle de Ballet contenant un tres grand nombres des meilleures Entrées de Ballet . . . qui ont été dancées à l'Opera . . . Recueillies et mises au jour par Mr. Gaudrau . . . Chez le Sieur Gaudrau : Paris, [1712.] 8°. (K.8.k.II.)

A quaint work, showing the figures. Two earlier collections are in the Museum.

Pasquini (Bernardo). A Second Collection of Toccates Vollentarys and Fugues made on Purpose for the Organ & Harpsicord Compos'd by Pasquini, Polietti and others The most Eminent Foreign Authors Engraven & Carefully Corrected. I. Walsh . . . and I. Hare : London, [1715?] fol. (g.56.)

The other composers named are Kerl, Aresti, Amadori, Fontana, and Froberger. An important Handel source book, one of the edition with which Handel was most likely familiar, although earlier editions of the works in it occur elsewhere. A former owner has marked the original passages from Kerl used by Handel as subjects for 'Let all the angels of God worship Him' ('Messiah') and 'Egypt was glad' ('Israel in Egypt'). The first of these subjects, not so closely followed by Handel as the second, is not recorded in Sedley Taylor's book 'The Indebtedness of Handel to Works by Other Composers.'

Haendel (Georg Friedrich). Suites de Pieces pour le Clavecin. . . Premier Volume. Printed for the Author : London, [1720.] obl. fol. (K.I.k.9, 10, 11.)

A set of the three first issues of this work, all from the Cummings library. The title-page of the first is engraved by J. Cole, the second and third 'Engraved and Printed at Cluer's Printing-Office in Bow-Church Yard, Cheapside.' There are other slight differences in the issues, but they each contain the explanatory preface by Handel regarding the 'surreptitious and incorrect copies of them' which had got abroad.

Bach (Johann Sebastian). Clavir Übung bestehend in Præludien, Allemanden, Couranten, Sarabanden, Gigueen, Menuetten, und andern Galanterien . . . [Theil I.] Partita III. In Verlegung des Autoris. 1727. obl.fol. (K.10.a.30.)

Formerly in the possession of A. H. Littleton.

Jones (Richard). 'Suits or Setts of Lessons for the Harpsicord or Spinnet Consisting of great variety of Movements as Preludes Aires Toccats All'mands Jiggs Corrents Borre's Sarabands Gavots Minuets &c. &c. Composed by Mr Richard Jones. London. Printed for and Sold by I. Walsh . . . [1730?] fol. (K.7.g.12.)

A unique copy of a 'Ghost' Book, only known hitherto by a reference in Wm. Randall's list for 1776 ('Grove'). Jones was a fine violinist and composer for the instrument. He succeeded Carbonelli as leader of the Band at Drury Lane. 'The Lady's Banquet, First Book,' London [1735?], a copy of which is in the Buckingham Palace collection, contains a 'Symphony or Overture in [The Miser, or] Wagner and Abericock,' by 'Mr. Jones.' This play was produced in 1727, and the composer was probably Richard Jones.

Bickham (George). An Easy Introduction to Dancing: or the Movements in the Minuet fully explained. Adorn'd with twelve Figures drawn from the Life . . . By George Bickham, junior. London, 1738. 8°. (K.2.d.20.)

An interesting work by the publisher of the well-known 'Musical Entertainer.'

Hymns [English]. Hymns and Sacred Poems. By John Wesley . . . The Second Edition. Bristol: Printed by Felix Farley, 1743. 8°. (K.7.c.1.(1).)

Bound up with

A Collection of Tunes Set to Musick, As they are commonly Sung at the Foundery. London: Printed by A. Pearson, and sold by T. Harris . . . T. Trye . . . and at the Foundery, near Upper-Moor-fields. 1742. 8°. (K.7.c.1.(2).)

The latter work with music, the former having words only, was the first Wesleyan Hymn Book. Copies are very rare, and the one under review is imperfect, wanting pp. 5-8; pp. 29-32 being supplied in duplicate. The work was badly printed, has many errors, and never reached a second edition. A facsimile was published in 1882.

Bach (Johann Sebastian). Die Kunst der Fuge . . . [With preface by F. W. Marburg.] [J. Schübler? Zella?] 1752. obl. fol. (K.I.k.8.)

A copy of the second issue of this very rare work from Dr. Cummings's library.

The above list is a small selection from a much larger number of accessions, which include works by Cipriano de Rore, C. & J. C. Stamitz, Filippo di Monte, Monteverde, and Orlando di Lasso. The magnificent collection of early printed music at the Museum has still, however, many gaps waiting to be filled, and it is suggested that owners of rare and early works, before disposing of them elsewhere, should consider the claims of the National Library as a permanent resting-place for their treasures.

CONDUCTORS AND CONDUCTING

BY WILLIAM WALLACE

(Continued from September number, page 787.)

IV.—THE PHYSICAL ASPECT OF THE BEAT

Viewed from its physical side the act of conducting is a form of athletics. Like all exercises of the muscles it calls for co-ordination, quick response to stimulus, and from continuous practice it becomes in a sense automatic. Here we will deal with the muscular aspect, and consider the musical aspect at a later stage, involving as it does questions of personality and interpretation.

The most effective beat is that which expends least energy. The movements of the arm should be determined by the functions which its four sections, upper arm, forearm, wrist, and hand, discharge in nature. These are, large and broad movements at the shoulder, more restricted at the elbow, fine and delicate at the wrist and hand: all being preserved in a state of equilibrium. There should be flexibility at each of these points. Rigidity means fatigue, for in order to keep a joint in a stiff position the antagonistic muscles must be maintained in a state of tension, without the alteration of relaxation which comes about with movement.

We may therefore assert that when a conductor feels his arm 'give out,' it is due to the still, small voice of a muscle protesting against its misuse, and he should reconsider his style. Doubtless awkward gestures can with practice be indulged in without ultimate fatigue, but the training to acquire clumsiness is a waste of effort which would equally well be employed to attain to grace.

So, following nature, the actions are broad at the shoulder, restrained at the elbow, delicate at the wrist. If the arm is held too high, with the elbow on a level with the chin, the first muscle to give way is that covering the shoulder, and when that muscle is not in training the pain can be almost insupportable.

The advice given by Berlioz to keep the hand on a level with the head, 'dropping the point of the stick perpendicularly (bending the wrist as much as possible; and not lowering the whole arm)*' does not agree with Seidl's description of his conducting. His directions, if followed implicitly, would cause intense pain in a very short time and look inelastic and expressionless. It would appear that he held his arm high and rigid, and beat à la métronome with his wrist only. If this inference is correct, it would seem that his study of anatomy and physiology in the old Ecole de Médecine, where we are told he was a student, was as perfunctory as his injunctions on this point.

In terms of music the joints should act thus: shoulder—forte; upper arm, elbow, forearm—dim . . . poco . . . a . . . poco; wrist and hand—piano.

Physiologically the flexor muscles have a higher tension than the extensors: it is easier to fold the arms and keep them folded than to hold them stretched out. With the right hand and arm, therefore, the beat is easier obliquely downwards and towards the body than when it is directed away from the body, as in the third beat in 4/4 time, or up at the end of a bar. These points may be regarded as splittings of hairs, but they are not to be derided by the novice or amateur, who possibly may find in them an explanation why on some occasion he had to transfer the stick to his left hand in the middle of a concert, to the confusion of the forces before him.*

Not only is it unbecoming, but also significant of lack of observation to clutch the stick as if it were a sword-hilt and hold it vertically with stiff elbow and wrist, with all the movements carried out from the shoulder alone. This excites the wonder of the orchestra and the pity of the audience. There is a certain feeling of impudence coupled with impotence when the shoulder and elbow are kept rigid and the movement is from the wrist alone. One is reminded of the inhabitants of some paddock where the gallinaceæ are wont to forgather. Perky dabs at the air, leaps, acrobatic performances, may hold up to nature so distorted a mirror that the eye-impression drives out the ear-impression.

Quite as bad a practice is to hold the stick horizontally with the tip pointing downwards to the left, the movement being up and down in the vertical plane. This might pass when the time-signature is one-in-the-bar, or two-in-the-bar, but for other subdivisions a different movement would be necessary, and confusing. This beat is a peculiarity of some theatre conductors.

The diagrams given in some books, if followed too literally, would result in hard and mechanical gestures. The most that they indicate are the relative points to which the hand should be carried. The movements are most easy and graceful when the conductor traces in the air with the point of his stick fancied waves and curves.

So far as movements of the body are concerned restraint will be found more profitable than a display of agility. The wise conductor who harbours his resources stands in one position only, with his muscles relaxed. The feet need not be moved except when it is necessary to turn to the violins. Our conductors stand full face to the orchestra. This is a good plan, for it prevents them, when half-face to the platform as some Continental musicians used to do, from copying their bad example and addressing more or less pertinent remarks to the audience during the progress of the music.

Such actions as stamping the feet or slapping the score with the stick have no place in the concert-room. Beating time on the upper edge of the desk seems to be a vice of alien origin. One author suggests that the edge should be padded with leather in order that the knocks may at least * Berlioz: 'The Orchestral Conductor' in 'Modern Instrumentation,' p. 246. See also Musical Times, March, 1924, p. 213.

* A left-handed conductor has been known to visit these shores—his stay was not a lengthy one—and the effect on the orchestra was much the same as that which a left-handed batsman produces on 'the field.'

be muffled. Another authority recommends a small piece of metal, fixed to the top of the desk, to be struck when it is necessary to interrupt a tutti. These devices would appear to indicate that the orchestra does not notice the cessation of the beat, and that the desk is of the old-fashioned, sloping pattern. With the large score-paper now in use a table and not a desk is required.

There are some mannerisms which it is well to avoid. A frequent tendency when one-in-the-bar is beat is to make the down stroke so short and quick, a kind of flick, that the up stroke, the recovery, gives the accent. One conductor used to revel in constantly describing circles and figures-of-eight with the point of his stick, which were so bewildering that from the orchestra it was well-nigh impossible to tell where the beat began or ended. To add to the confusion he sometimes conducted from memory, but as he never ventured from the beaten track of the repertoire, which everybody knew, no great harm was done. The change from a three-beat to a four-beat in a continuous movement, or vice versa, becomes automatic in time, but at first the muscles do not respond unless the mind is concentrated on the new beat. But even with this effort of attention the muscles resist the call of the music, and having become habituated to one kind of rhythm will persist for at least a bar of the change of rhythm.

Again, there is a disposition to cut short the last beat of a bar which precedes a bar containing an important 'lead.' While it is the aim of these papers to discuss points of general rather than of special interest, there is necessity here to refer to an example, and the Prelude to 'Tristan' provides us with a case in point. So far as the conductor is concerned the time-signature of 6/8 is somewhat awkward, for the dynamic accent falls impartially on the first or fourth beat, in slow time. The mental impulse is to shorten the third or sixth beat and not give it its full value, so that the second half of the bar, instead of consisting of quaver, dotted quaver, and semiquaver, sounds like two quavers and semiquaver. The character of the work in question, with the constant repetition of similar phrases, induces this tendency to bring the arm up too sharply for the sixth beat.

It will be clear that exuberance of movement, or restraint, will be determined to a large extent by the quality, experience, and strength of the musical body under control. If wise principles have been laid down in rehearsals, a small and efficient orchestra or choir will not need the efflorescence suitable for a 'Handelian' festival. Trained musicians have so delicate a responsiveness to the slightest nuance that excess of movement is merely waste of energy.

As most human beings are right-handed, the play of the left hand is less free and spontaneous, and of all the conductor's gestures it is the most abused.

In the concert-room, with nothing to obstruct the view of the beat, there is no necessity to keep it perpetually in action, and it should be reserved strictly for definite signs. A wise rule to observe is, The right hand for tempi: the left hand for nuances. If the left is kept moving throughout, its value at critical points is annulled, but when held in reserve till wanted its co-operation with the right conveys a message of special import and cannot be misunderstood.

The left arm should hang loosely by the side in readiness for communicating and enforcing dynamic effects of intensity or softness, as well as for bringing out middle parts while the right hand is occupied with the general effect. The soundest maxim is to use it sparingly, and only when the purpose is clear.

The pose of the hand also calls for remark, and its powers of expression are wide. It is generally extended when some emphasis or moderation in nuance is required, but nothing signifies want of understanding or of taste so much as when the fingers are bent stiff like a bird's claw. It is not suggested that the hand should move with the little flutters—pétilements, as it were, of the wrists associated with the tip-toe pointes of the ballerina. It is only when its gesture is clumsy or exaggerated that it catches the eye. It is not given to everybody to have a graciousness of hand-movement, and when it is not a natural endowment, it can be acquired, but only with much practice.

From what has been said it will be clear that the left hand should not know what the right is doing, or at least should not imitate, but co-operate.

For the novice some suggestions may lead him to a line of thought of his own. Let him study his own movements before a looking-glass, standing erect, without stooping. Nothing is more unattractive than the doubled-up body, with the arms wildly waving. Conducting is not Swedish drill: the concert-room is not the place for that: but it would not be a bad plan were some of our youth to practise it in its proper place, to their own physical and moral advantage.

As the student is certain to know orchestral works by heart, let him think the music in silence before the glass, as if he had the orchestra in front of him, or let him read the score in silence while beating time. It is better to discover weakness and clumsiness when alone than to show muscular inexperience on the platform, no matter how far it may be transcended by musical ability. Orchestras are sympathetic, but at the same time they can be severely critical.

There is nothing derogatory in this study in private. Executants, whether pianists, or violinists or 'cellists, have to practise in solitude before they come before an audience. Everyone who has to appear in public has to submit to a preliminary and exacting routine. Why, then, not the conductor? Above all, let the novice study the method of the experienced, and not hold to the rigid, impersonal school, whose exponents leap at the conductor's desk when no leap is needed, and do not leap when the avalanche of music overwhelms them.

(To be continued.)

SONG TRANSLATION

BY ERIK BREWERTON

The problem of singing in foreign languages has three aspects. There are the abstract merits, the attitude of the singer, and the feelings of the audience. From the first point of view the matter is soon settled. It is obviously best to sing the original words to which the song was written. In the case of the older arias, such as Handel's 'Ombra mai fu,' the words are simple and melodious, they are soon learnt, and there would be no advantage in singing a translation. In singing music of this bel canto type, the words, except for the simple emotion which they state rather than express, are not of great interest or importance. It has become conventional to sing these arias with the original words, and there seems no adequate reason for upsetting the convention. With the more modern songs the original words should still be retained, though the reason for doing so is different. In these so-called 'art-songs' it is understood that the verse should be closely woven into the texture of the music. The inflections of the speaking voice as we read through the phrases have their corresponding inflections in the singing voice. A translation, therefore, is bound to be unsatisfactory, for while the words which form the verbal phrases change, the notes which form the musical phrases remain the same. With every translation an antagonism springs up which can never be entirely reconciled.

Let anyone compare Schumann's setting of

Du bist wie eine Blume
So schön, so rein, und hold with the English translation (as given in Boosey's edition of Schumann's songs), and he cannot but feel the weakness of the change:

Thou'rt like a lovely flower
So fair, so graceful and pure.

Not only have the translated words lost the simplicity, the rhythm, the charm of the original, but the purely musical effects of the song are damaged. For example, in the last phrase of the song to the words, 'So rein, und schön, und hold,' the master-note E flat is given to the word 'schön,' followed after the slightest pause by the words 'und hold' to the notes G and A flat. The English words in the edition already mentioned are 'to keep thee evermore.' The master-note falls on the unimportant first syllable of 'evermore,' and the effect of the slight pause and simple conclusion becomes impossible. A sensitiveness to such faults as these is a musical quality; it does not merely represent a fad for singing in a foreign language. Directly a singer translates the words to himself, and observes the harmony existing between them and the music of the composer, directly he begins to appreciate the colour properties of the language, the characteristic words, and the striking phrases, the translation provided for him becomes an irritating thing, something unrefined, even crude, something he cannot read over with the slightest emotion or zest.

Looked at in this light the problem is easily settled, in fact there seems no difficulty to resolve. Culture and commonsense combine in asserting that the song should be sung in the form which the composer gave it expressly and of set purpose. Thus a translation will simply exist as an aid to those who do not know the language well; it may be printed on programmes, but it is not to be sung.

It is only when we drop the general and come to the particular, when we throw over what is right for what is expedient, that the complexion of the matter quite changes, and difficulties arise which were not thought of before. Though the singer knows that the song will suffer if he does not sing the original words, he knows that it will suffer in other ways if he does sing them. Foreign words, however carefully learnt, can never come trippingly from the tongue of anyone who does not know the language exceptionally well; and, granted the singer has a good knowledge of languages, granted he makes it a point of honour to have a fair understanding of French, German, and Italian, not to mention Russian, Spanish, and Norwegian, what profit does all his labour bring when his audience as a whole cannot be said to know any of these languages well, and would prefer to follow the words from his own lips as he sings them, to follow them easily and naturally in the language it thoroughly understands? Just as the singer should understand the words he sings, so the audience should be en rapport with the singer. The same standard exists for the one as for the other. The singer is not necessarily a linguist, and if he is a linguist he may still be a very poor singer. The pleasure of music is not enhanced because the obstacle of a foreign language is deliberately raised between the singer and the audience. Vocal music has not the universality of instrumental music. The pianist can play any pianoforte music he chooses, but the singer if he has a wide interest in music is sadly handicapped; for much of what he admires, he can only admire dimly, through the veil of a language of which he may know little or nothing.

A logical solution is to sing no foreign songs at all, to ignore the progressive work of Schubert, Schumann, Grieg, and Wolf, and to confine oneself entirely to British work, old or new. A liberal mind can hardly be content with this solution, and to be logical is not always to be convincing. The great song writers deserve to be known; it is well that they should be known even though, as in the case of Grieg, very few people understand the language of the poems he set to music. If some of Schubert's songs are well known in this country it is because they have been sung in English fifty times to every single time in the original German. A moderate number of Schumann's, of Rubinstein's, and of Grieg's songs are known for a similar reason. Two conclusions naturally follow. If these songs are known their translations must be above the average, and, secondly, the standard of translation has only to be raised to make other good songs by foreign composers well-known to us. Most of the French, German, and Russian songs are not translated at all, or are translated very badly. Until they are translated—and translated well—to a large number of musical people they must remain unknown. Where the English words make nonsense, as is often the case, the songs labouring under this burden will be passed over and never come into their just heritage.

If the singer is not entirely a musician, he is a musician primarily. No amount of ideas, education, languages, and poetry can make up for the lack of a true musical sense. Intelligence can be overrated. The artist does not think much of being intelligent. He does not concern himself with what educated people think the proper thing to do. He will not sing Brahms in German just because the dictum is promulgated that 'Brahms must be sung in German.' He realises that everything is relative in music, especially in singing, where two arts are combined, the arts of speech and of musical sound. He must sacrifice something or he will do nothing; indeed, if he did not sacrifice something he would never sing songs at all, but consider vocalising a more satisfactory and consistent form of music. Let the singer, however, make the smaller sacrifice and not worry too much about it. Critics worry, artists act. There are times when a song, if sung at all, must be sung in the original words when there is no good translation, or when the singer believes that the nature of the poem is such as to defy a good translation. There are examples of the older music which are best given in the original words with which they have been long associated. But in the majority of cases—perhaps fifteen out of twenty—it is better to sing to an English audience an English translation than to sing in a foreign language. The moral follows: if translations are not good they must be improved.

NEW LIGHT ON LATE TUDOR COMPOSERS

By W. H. GRATTAN FLOOD

III.—WILLIAM MUNDY

Notwithstanding the numerous compositions of William Mundy, and the high level of his anthems, it is strange that his biography up to the present is almost a blank, save the date of his appointment to the Chapel Royal, and the filling of his place presumably on his death. Henry Davey, in his 'History of English Music' (new ed., 1921), dismisses him thus:

William Mundy, a Vicar-Choral of St. Paul's, entered the Chapel Royal on February 12, 1563; nothing more is heard of him until his place was filled up on October 12, 1591, when he was probably dead. His works are still heard in our Cathedrals, and the anthem published as Henry VIII.'s is commonly attributed to Mundy.

William Mundy was born c. 1515, and, on March 4, 1540, he was leased certain lands at Leigh, Lambourne. In this lease he is described as of Lambourne, Berks. Ten years later he became Vicar-Choral of St. Paul's Cathedral, under Sebastian Westcott, and he remained undisturbed in his post at the Visitation of 1561, for Elizabeth was partial to good musicians irrespective of their religious views. In fact she was so fond of music that she willingly retained any Roman Catholic musicians, provided they did not obtrude their opinions.

Mundy's reputation in 1563 was fully recognised, and John Baldwin, of Windsor, in recounting the principal composers of that period, writes:

I will begin with White, Shepherd, Tye, and Tallis; Parsons, Giles, Mundy, th'ould: one of the Queen's Pallis.

Accordingly we are not surprised to find that Richard Edwardes, Master of the Children of the Chapel Royal, offered him a post in the Queen's Chapel, and, as a fact, William Mundy, 'th'ould'—to distinguish him from his son John, who was organist of Eton College, in 1575—was appointed one of the Gentlemen of the Chapel Royal, on February 21, 1563. In this post he remained till his death in 1591, aged seventy-six, and, like his contemporaries Westcott, White, and Byrd, remained a Roman Catholic. Morley, in his 'Introduction' (1597), includes Mundy among ... those famous Englishmen who have been nothing inferior in art to Alfonso, Orlando, Striggio, Clemens non Papa, namely Fairfax, Taverner, Shepherd, Mundy, White, Parsons, M. Byrd, and divers others, who never thought it greater sacrilege to spurn against the Image of a Saint, than to take two perfect cordes of one kinde together.

But, if a good deal of biographical information as to 'th'ould Mundy' is lacking, his works testify in abundance to his powers as a composer. Dr. Ernest Walker, in his 'History of Music in England' (new ed., 1924), writes as follows:

A strange neglect has fallen over most of the music of Farrant's greater contemporary, William Mundy, who was probably the strongest genius of his day after the three leaders, while his one fairly familiar work—the very sincere and expressive 'O Lord, the Maker of all thing'—has been usually ascribed, in defiance of all evidence, to Henry VIII. The contrapuntal Service printed in Barnard's part-books is one of the very finest of all written for the English ritual; it is free from the sort of harmonic squareness of those of Tallis and Farrant, and forecasts rather the method of Gibbons, though Mundy cannot equal his successor's majesty. The anthems, 'O Lord, the world's Saviour' and 'O Lord, I bow the knees,' are both, in their different ways, strikingly beautiful works, rather less childlike and more elaborate than those of Farrant, but not at all inferior in tenderness. Occasionally, as in the verse anthem, 'Ah, helpless wretch' (which Barnard printed), he fails to achieve more than rather stiff, though refined, work of a simple, hymn-like character, and he never, even at his best, reaches the heights of the greatest things of Tye, or Whyte, or Tallis; yet he is certainly one of the outstanding men of his time, and deserves to be far more widely known.

Mundy composed two four-part Masses, one of which is entitled 'Upon the Square,' and is an interesting, even artistic, composition. The whole text is provided for, including Kyrie and Credo complete, and H. B. Collins considers that it dates from Queen Mary's time.

In addition to the two Masses, Mundy composed a large number of Motets—eleven of which are in the Royal College of Music, others (fifteen) being at Christ Church and the British Museum. Two of these are delightful specimens of mid-16th century work, namely, 'Surge, propra, amica mea' and 'Exsurge Christe,' the latter containing a prayer 'for the destruction of schism and the revival of apostolic truth.' There are five settings of the Magnificat in Add. MSS. 17,802, of which Mundy's is the finest. There are also several English anthems by Mundy in Barnard's Collection.

Among Mundy's instrumental compositions there is one for twelve instruments, in parts, 'Let the sea make a noyse,' in the British Museum (Add. MSS. 31,390), dating from the year 1578. Other compositions of his have been arranged for lute, five strings, and six strings.

THE ASSOCIATED BOARD EDITION OF THE 'FORTY-EIGHT'

BY HARVEY GRACE

An edition of the 'Forty-eight' bearing on its title-page the names of Donald Tovey and Harold Samuel must needs raise the highest expectations. Prof. Tovey's is the lion's share. He writes a long Preface—nine pages of the stimulating quality that we expect from him; a further three-and-a-half pages of general instructions on the use of the edition; and, before each Prelude and Fugue, a brief essay compounded of criticism, analysis, and hints as to performance. The style fits the music—learned and human. The point is worth noting, for too many writers on Bach have produced a mixture of the solemn and arid that was for so long supposed to be the fitting way of showing reverence and understanding. Not so Prof. Tovey. Thus, speaking of the C sharp major Prelude in Book 1, he tells us that the crotchet-quaver theme has a better swing when phrased bar by bar () than from quaver to crotchet, adding: 'It should suggest dancing, not braying.' The reader chuckles—perhaps waggishly brays sotto voce—and is never likely to misread the theme thereafter.

No less happy is another natural history touch that occurs in the notes on the B minor Fugue in Book 2, where he decries 'an elegant hen-like staccato.'

Again, hear him showing the futility of over-anxious marking of the subject in fugue-playing:

Part-playing.—The nature of polyphony has been obscured rather than illuminated by Ouseley's famous definition of counterpoint as 'the art of combining melodies.' Much 'pianistic' fugue-playing has passed as 'scholarly' when it even fails to realise that definition, inasmuch as it 'brings out the subject' as if all the rest of the fugue were unfit for publication.

(But when he goes on to say that the notion is peculiar to pianists, and adds that

... organists, who perhaps play fugues more often than most people, do not find it necessary, whenever the subject enters in the inner parts, to pick it out with the thumb on another manual, he is unduly complimentary to the organists. Unfortunately, too many are prone to 'solo' the subject whenever possible. Indeed, more than one edition of Bach's organ music encourages the practice, sometimes going so far as to indicate a soloing so fantastically difficult of achievement that the progress of the work must needs be held up. There are even cases where editors have gaily embarked on a soloing expedition without due forethought, and have been unable—or have forgotten—to show the player how to bring the soloing hand back into the main stream! But it is good to have this pronouncement against a practice that is apt to miss the chief beauty of a fugue—texture—and to give us instead a kind of ostinato or theme with variations.

Perhaps it is late in the day to 'show up' Czerny's edition, but as that version may still have a following because of its bearing a name honoured in the development of pianoforte technique, it is well that the case should be put so unanswerably as this:

Czerny's edition . . . is based on his notes of Beethoven's playing. Hence its enormous prestige. Its text is as worthless as a Shakespeare edited by Garrick; and as to its marks of expression, Beethoven would have been the first to protest (and that in his most Olympian quarter-deck style) against the idea of imposing his inevitably crude guesses upon generations of students who can get from any competent choral society a daily experience of Bach's musical language in that vast field of vocal work which Beethoven knew only as a dim legend.

Organ playing is now more than ever a matter of pianoforte technique, and the old idea of glue-your-fingers-to-the-keys-and-change-them-as-often-as-possible is almost dead; it might receive its quietus if organists would note carefully what Prof. Tovey says on the legato-playing of fugues on the pianoforte. With very little modification it applies to organ playing as well, and a good course of the '48' on the lines laid down in this edition would do a lot for organ technique. In the Instructions (a section in which Mr. Samuel no doubt had a hand) we read that 'many fingerings are unnecessarily difficult from being designed to preserve a legato which the musical sense does not demand'; the pianist who wishes to excel in polyphonic playing is advised to develop skipping with the little finger of the left hand in fourths, fifths, and octaves, a 'cute little study being given as a sample.

In this way he will gain confidence, and will learn that pianoforte polyphony requires no organist's fingerings, but, on the contrary, a balance of tone which cannot be attained when the hand is preoccupied with squirming in order to avoid infinitesimal discontinuities and overlaps which the ear does not notice at all. On the pianoforte a breach of legato is not so often a gap as a bump in the tone, and it is sometimes produced at its worst by the very means taken to avoid gaps.

A breach of legato in organ playing is always a gap and never a bump, but in general it may be said that there are either too few of such gaps or that they occur in the wrong places. A careful reading of this preface and an examination of the fingering of some awkward passages would enable many organists to improve their fugue-playing.

Certain conventions in the playing of the '48' come in for hard knocks from Prof. Tovey. Perhaps he over-stresses some technical points that have to do with the keyboard instruments of Bach's day. After all (to take a somewhat similar case), there is a considerable difference between the pianoforte for which Beethoven wrote and that on which his works are heard to-day, but players are not expected to take the fact into account. And although the difference between the pianoforte and the harpsichord is partly one of kind, it is mainly one of degree. That is to say, although the harpsichord was an instrument differing from the pianoforte in some vital aspects, it was still a precursor of the modern instrument, and for good or ill (on the whole for good) harpsichord music has now to be regarded as pianoforte music. It seems pedantic to imply that in order to play the '48' a pianist must be thoroughly 'aware of the difference between the clavichord, the harpsichord, and the organ, and, further, have sufficient acquaintance with the old instruments to know 'where Bach's music leaves the common ground of all and begins to specialise.' How many Associated Board aspirants need know (even if they could know) that "Das Wohltemperirte Klavier" favours the clavichord more often than the harpsichord, and that Book 1 is more typically clavichord music than Book 2? Again, we are told that ... it may be taken as an axiom that when a phrasing or touch represents a 'pianistic' mannerism that would sound ugly on the harpsichord, that phrasing will misconstrue Bach's language and tell us nothing interesting about the pianoforte.

But very few pianists, whether pupils or teachers, are able to know what sounds ugly on the harpsichord. The fact is, as the Professor says later in discussing another point,

... it is arguable that some pianistic mannerisms ... are to be respected as representing the real character of the pianoforte, and are therefore pertinent in the real art and science of idiomatically translating Bach.

There is the case in a nutshell, and one has only to hear Mr. Samuel play the 'Goldberg' Variations on a concert grand to be convinced that considerations of the question of the instrument for which Bach wrote that amazing work don't matter a toss to the hearer—or, apparently, to Mr. Samuel himself.

Of Prof. Tovey's introductions to each number there is no space to speak. Their style and quality are best shown by the remark that however long the reader has lived with these works, and however great his affection for them, he will know them better and like them even more after going through them yet once again with the Professor as cicerone. These introductions, with the Preface, make a collection of Bach articles that have no superior and few equals. If you want to realise the difficulty of the task, and the skill with which it is here carried out, read Riemann's descriptive analyses and compare their wordy gush with the calm and sensible, yet sensitive writing of Prof. Tovey—writing which, in its most coolly critical moments, has behind it enthusiasm so infectious that you will want to bear off the volume to the keyboard and play the movement he happens to be talking about.

Like everything else, a new edition of a classic has to be judged in relation to its avowed purpose, and it is here that the present work falls short. It is put forth for the use of examinees of the Associated Board, and appearing under such auspices it will inevitably claim the attention of teachers and pupils generally. The players for whom it is designed may or may not read Prof. Tovey's scholarly and entertaining pages; their constant concern will be with the music itself, and we must not allow the dialectics of the Preface, &c., to distract our attention from the practical question: To what extent will this edition help the Associated Board candidate? This leads to another question: What are the reasonable demands of such candidates? We may acquit them of a desire to be spoon-fed, and they would probably agree that a fool-proof edition of this or any other work would be undesirable, even if it were attainable. But they would ask that the music-pages should contain a few indications as to pace, dynamics, style, and phrasing, with approximate metronome marks, &c. Such signs are a concession to human weakness, perhaps; but experience proves that, reasonably used, they stimulate interest and imagination. An editor would naturally make clear the fact that Bach left his music practically bare of such indications, and so players would take them for what they are—mere editorial suggestions that may be disregarded at will. Candidates would be right in expecting, too, that snags arising from differences between the notation of Bach's time and that of to-day should be removed, and that the text should be set out in such a way as to facilitate study. Let us see how this edition meets these modest requirements.

Criticism here must take the form of comparison with the existing editions, which the Associated Board implies are not good enough for its candidates. It would be unfair to take an early edition for such purposes of comparison, so I select the most recent English example, that edited by Harold Brooke, and published by Novello a few years ago.

First as to pace. The metronome may easily be a delusion and a snare, but it has its uses, and as a guide to speed it is far more helpful than any number of picturesque Italian terms, many of which after all refer to style rather than pace. There seems to be no good reason for the omission of metronome marks. All players know that they are merely approximate and suggestive, and nobody can work long at the '48' without being aware that certain movements are capable of being performed at several widely differing paces. Prof. Tovey has made up his mind about the speed of the pieces, and he has not hesitated to indicate it. Unfortunately he does so in a manner least helpful to the player. Thus, he heads each movement with such terms as Allegretto tranquillo, quasi andante; Andante con moto, quasi allegretto; Moderato, ma con moto energico, quasi allegro; Tempo di Gavotta; Vivace non troppo; Andante leggermente, quasi un poco allegretto; and so forth, with far too much hedging with ma's and quasi's. If an editor doesn't mind committing himself to such flowers of speech he should be ready to back them up with a metronome figure. But stay! Prof. Tovey does give the student further help in regard to pace—provided the student can make use of it—a large proviso, as we shall see. Thus, in the notes on the F sharp minor Fugue in Book 1, we read:

The tempo is that of a broad Andante, not quite so slow as the first movement of the B minor Clavier and Violin Sonata. The quaver figure should correspond more or less to the flow of semiquavers in the great chorale at the end of the first part of the 'Matthew' Passion.

The player may well ask why, in order to arrive at the pace of a work, he should be referred to two others, one of which is hardly likely to be in his library.

Again, of the F sharp minor Fugue in Book 2:

The tempo is pretty exactly that of the great C sharp minor Fugue, making the present quavers equal to the C sharp minor's crotchets.

Of the Prelude to this Fugue we are told helpfully that:

With the use of a large cantabile tone it is possible and desirable to maintain almost an Adagio tempo which might be risky in a less terse and concentrated trio of this type. The Andante of the 'Italian' Concerto (which is full of demisemiquavers) is about the same tempo, likewise the thirteenth of the 'Goldberg' Variations. (The twenty-fifth 'Goldberg' Variation would be slower.)

—a circuitous way of telling us something that may be shown by a couple of figures—approximately, it is true, but not less definitely than by Prof. Tovey's long paragraph.

Yet once more (Prelude in A, in Book 2):

With the best tone-production the piece will easily bear a tempo no faster than that of the Pastorale in the 'Christmas Oratorio.' (The Pastorale in 'The Messiah' represents a tempo just too slow for this.)

The advice as to dynamics and phrasing is similarly complicated. Speaking of the G sharp minor Prelude in Book 1, the editor says:

Ask a good violinist to show what the right hand of that bar [24] would mean in double stops with an expressive swell and the lourd stroke, in which the bow repeats the notes without changing its direction or leaving the strings.

But the pianist may easily have no good violinist at hand, and moreover he may well point out that he has to play the passage on the pianoforte, not on the violin. Why not therefore mark that 'expressive swell' and legato in the music-page, instead of quoting the bar and marking it in the prefatory note?

Again, in the note on the E major Fugue in Book 1, we are told that:

The subtle entry of the subject without its initial quaver in bar 20 must be given with an enthusiastic swell in the up-rushing semiquavers.

Exactly; but why not indicate this natural effect in the score? I turn up this Fugue in the edition of Harold Brooke, and see the 'enthusiastic swell' in bar 20 shown thus by a simple sign instead of by twenty-four words:

The prefatory note is good, but it should not be left to do duty for those familiar, expressive marks which catch the player's eye at the right moment.

But the pick of these roundabout indications has to do with phrasing—a matter easy enough to show by means of the customary slurs, &c. Speaking of the G minor Fugue in Book 2, Prof. Tovey says:

As to phrasing, a good hint may be gathered by looking at the strings in the Coda of the first movement of Beethoven's C minor Symphony, and seeing what Weingartner has to say (in 'How to Conduct Beethoven's Symphonies') about the occasion when he found at a rehearsal that somebody had put fussy little cross-accent marks into the band-parts.

For sheer circumlocution this would be hard to beat!

Discussing the E flat minor Fugue in Book 1,* Prof. Tovey remarks:

The phrasing of the subject demands constant attention in all entries, direct and inverted. On no account must the third and fourth crotchets of the second bar seem to echo the first two crotchets. The resulting tautology, already annoying in the Subject, would be intolerable in the Answer and in the Inverted Subject. The first seven beats of the theme must be one legato phrase ending on the D sharp [E flat], and the rest a fresh clause.

* This Fugue, by the way, appears in D sharp minor, its Prelude being in E flat minor—another meaningless following of the autograph.

I turn to Mr. Brooke's version and find the phrasing marked exactly on the lines thus set forth by Prof. Tovey; the marking is carried through consistently, no matter in what form the Subject appears. Thus the player is told, by a few simple signs, all that Prof. Tovey sets out at such length, and the signs are where the player wants them, whereas the words appear apart from the music.

When the young Associated Boarder has surrounded himself with all the scores and other works of reference indicated by Prof. Tovey he or his teacher will proceed to do what ought to have been done by the editors, and insert such phrasing and other marks as will serve to remind them of the principles so laboriously set forth in the notes.

These sins of omission are not the only grounds of complaint. There are annoying traps due to the retention of certain inconsistencies of notation that were common to writers of the Bach period. The commonsense method is to translate such passages into the notation of to-day. At the opening of the G minor Prelude of Book 2 Prof. Tovey adds this warning:

(N.B.— throughout. See notes.)

So the player refers to the notes and is told that

... the dotted quavers throughout this piece are to be played as double-dotted (a notation unknown to Bach) in order that their complementary semiquavers may conform to the prevailing rhythm by becoming demisemiquavers, as was always understood by Bach and Handel in such cases.

Unfortunately Prof. Tovey is not alone in retaining this ambiguous notation. (The timidity of editors in such matters is past the plain man's understanding!) But he might at least have helped the player by ranging the notes in such a way that there can be no doubt as to the time-values. Thus, although Mr. Brooke follows Bach's notation, the ranging practically does away with the ambiguity. Here is a brief quotation showing the importance of ranging:

(Associated Board Edition.)

(Novello Edition.)

Similarly, the opening of the F sharp major Prelude in Book 2 has this note:

N.B.— always means

Then why not let it say what it means? Surely nobody can dispute the clearness and comfort of this method:

Ex. 3. (Novello Edition.)

as opposed to

Ex. 4. (Associated Board Edition.)

Why should the player throughout a long piece of seventy bars have to remember that the notation of one of the chief themes says one thing and means another?

In an edition for examination candidates there is no room for such slavish adherence to the autograph. The player's concern is with the music, and his progress should not be hindered by pedantic following of notational peculiarities that have long since been discarded.

Again, the first bar of the subject of the E flat minor [D sharp minor] Fugue in Book 1 is noted thus:

when it begins on the first beat of a bar, but thus:

on all other occasions.

This is yet another instance of slavish respect for the letter. As Mr. Brooke points out in the preface to his edition, Bach often wrote a phrase in two different ways, following the fancy of the moment. In the case of the subject under notice he uses the two forms shown above, but on the analogy of innumerable passages in his own and other music of the period, Ex. 6 might have been shown thus:

There is everything to be said in favour of preferring the tie to the dot, as in Ex. 6; it shows the rhythmic shape at a glance, and should be used throughout. As a result of the inconsistency in this edition, in bar 52 the passage is noted in two different ways.

The laying out of this particular Fugue raises in an acute form another question on which few players will see eye to eye with Prof. Tovey—that of the distribution of the parts between the hands. The consensus of opinion to-day is in favour of the simple plan of making the staves as a rule represent the hands. Prof. Tovey holds that to break up the part-writing for this purpose 'will give the player more trouble in following the sense than it saves him in reading the notes.'

It is true, as he says, that 'the letters L and R supply all necessary information as to the distribution of the parts between the hands'; but do they supply it in the most convenient way? Many passages of the split-up kind contain notes that might be taken by either hand, and at such points the player is in momentary doubt as to whether a letter remains in force until contradicted. With the staves representing the hands he sees the distribution at a glance. Moreover, the use of R-L often makes the score unnecessarily crowded, especially when the fingering is on the full side, as is the case here. There are so many passages that might serve as convincing examples of the disadvantage of the R-L method that selection is difficult. Here is a very simple case from the E flat Prelude in Book 1. Prof. Tovey gives it thus:

This involves the use of four letters, one of them—the R above the treble staff—being absurd, seeing that the player cannot manage the E flats with anything but his right hand or his nose: it presents the crossed inner parts in an unnecessarily awkward way, and altogether makes a simple passage difficult to read. Here is the same bar as set out by Mr. Brooke, who adopts the plan of showing the hands by means of the staves:

The directing lines show the progression of the parts; those at the beginning of the quotation are, of course, carried on from the preceding bar.

The following bar from the same Prelude shows the two methods in another aspect:

At the risk of hammering at a nail already home, I quote a passage from the B minor Fugue in Book 1, as one of a good many instances of Prof. Tovey's perverse lack of consideration for the player's convenience:

Compare this ugly, sprawling disposition with Mr. Brooke's version, which gives less trouble to all concerned, from the engraver onwards:

Such details would matter less if the edition were not designed for the use of young players, whose way through Bach should surely be made as grateful as possible.

It is a pity the edition perpetuates the antiquated and clumsy custom of contradicting a  $\times$  or  $\flat$  with  $\sharp$  and  $\flat$ . For example, when  $g \times$  is followed by  $g \sharp$ , the natural applied to the latter is obviously superfluous— $g \sharp$  can hardly be anything but  $g \sharp$ !

Mr. Samuel's fingering it is of course unnecessary to discuss. The only possible objection that might be raised is perhaps on the score of over-fulness; but that is a leaning on the right side. Much of it well repays careful examination, especially some passages that at first strike one as being fingered less easily than they might be. A good reason will show itself on acquaintance. There is even a touch of the adventurous about some of it—a capital thing for the young player who thinks with his finger-tips.

A valuable feature is the printing in small notes of some alternative readings. In one or two cases these are suggested by the editor as being what Bach would almost certainly have written but for the limitations of his keyboard. The music-type is bold, but some of the pages—e.g., the first page of the A major Fugue in Book 1—are somewhat crowded. A more liberal lay-out would have been an improvement.

No apology is needed for the length of this review, nor should the fault-finding be regarded as captious.

A new edition of such a work is an important event, and criticism is challenged by the prefatory note signed by Sir Hugh Allen and Dr. Buck. This note admits that the appearance of one more edition 'may seem to demand an explanation in view of the number and excellence of those already in existence.' The excellence of those editions being thus admitted, it seems a pity that the note should go on to 'explain' the new one by saying that the Associated Board decided to prepare an edition 'embodying the views of the highest scholarship and musicianship available,' thus implying a lack of both qualities in the 'excellent' editions aforesaid. One would have thought that Kroll and Busoni, for example, had not only provided the necessary 'scholarship and musicianship,' but had also applied those assets to 'the service of what is, and must be, the final end of all editions—artistic performance.' The Associated Board edition can fully justify itself only by meeting the practical needs of players in a greater measure than do the best of the existing editions.

An exhaustive examination and comparison leaves the present writer convinced that it does not so justify itself. Its shortcomings are so obvious as to prompt the suggestion that the Board would have done better had it confined itself to the issue of Prof. Tovey's Preface and Notes as a handbook for use with those editions whose excellence it acknowledges.

ON GETTING BACK TO WORK

BY THOMAS ARMSTRONG

A writer in The Times has been discussing the prospect of returning to work after holidays. 'No normal, healthy-minded man really likes going back to work,' he says. 'Anyone who claims to like it lays himself open to the suspicion of being either a god, lifted high above human weakness, or a brute incapable of rising to the level of human feeling.' He goes on to compare the process with that return of the prisoners to the cave, which is described by Plato in the Republic. Each prisoner ... is set free for a time and brought up into the day ... he breathes an ampler air, learns to see things—not through caricaturing shadows, but in their true form and colour ... But presently he must go down again into the cave.

It is a gloomy picture, but not too gloomy, perhaps, for the man who has till yesterday been walking with good friends in high and windy places, or swimming in a cool, deep river, or 'sitting careless on a granary floor.' And, in fact, the windy places this year have been so unusually full of 'the lisp of leaves and ripple of rain,' that we have often been grateful for the mere sight of a granary floor, if it had only a roof over it to shelter us. But whether in rain or in sudden and inconstant sunshine, we must all have had glimpses of quietness and beauty that have made us realise how much too much the world is with us in the rush of ordinary life. It is we townsmen who enjoy the country. The beauty of trees and fields is a bread that the countryman has in plenty, that makes him contemptuous—the townsman goes to the country starving for it.

And yet only last week a musician was heard to say that his first week back at work after the holidays was the best week of the year. He, moreover, was one who had to return not to a London, but to the worst inferno of squalor, deformity, and noise that was ever achieved by the great Victorian age. He was, it is true, a Cathedral organist, one of a class of men who are always 'open to the suspicion of being either gods, lifted high above human weakness, or brutes incapable of rising to the level of human feeling'; but this can hardly account for his strange taste. Nor was it the mere joy of returning home—which is a very real one. As children, we loved the actual moment of arrival, the familiar smell of our own house, and the excitement of running into the garden to see how long the grass had grown since we went away, how many apples had fallen, and whether the grapes were turning. Some of this joy still survives, but not enough to account for that organist's love of getting back to work.

The only thing that can account for it is real love for music. What could be pleasanter for the musician than the return from a remote village, a place of 'silence and slow time,' to London, when all the music is just beginning again? What greater joy could there be than one's first 'Prom.'?—to see Sir Henry Wood, and all the people hurrying along Langham Place, and the fountain with its goldfish, and Mr. Kiddle, and two minor poets hatching a plot to write a book about music? It's all thrilling; and the mere sound of an orchestra, for the first few moments, is something more wonderful than we had remembered. Not all musicians, unfortunately, can return to a 'Prom.'; some go back to routine work in dull schools or provincial towns, but even for them there is something. There will be the first choir practices, when the boys are still singing with some country air in their lungs; and the first few moments at their own organs again in the darkness, after the church is locked. The Franck Pastorale, with those lovely phrases at the end, floating in the music like clouds in a clear sky, will have a new and intimate beauty, and they themselves a deeper determination to play it well.

For we have, most of us, however jaded we may be at times, a real need of music; and in our better moments we still count ourselves lucky to be even the humblest of its servants. But it is a risk as well as a privilege to spend life in the service of an art, because there is the danger of enthusiasm being killed by drudgery. And if there are some to whom this does happen, there are others, more pitiable still, to whom music becomes mere material for debate—a game they play to exercise their critical faculties. It furnishes them with clever conversation, and they attend to it only with the minimum of effort that enables them to make a certain profit out of it. But there are yet others—chiefly, perhaps, among amateurs—who hunger and thirst after music, and to whom music is the very breath of life. These can say, with George Herbert, of that 'heavenly art' of which 'he was a most excellent master':

Now I in you without a body move,
Rising and falling with your wings;
We both together sweetly live and love,
Yet say sometimes, 'God help poor kings.'
Comfort, I'll die: for if you part from me,
Sure I shall do so, and much more:
But if I travel in your company,
You know the way to heaven's door.

It is to such men, whose music costs them most in effort and feeling, that music most generously gives herself, in those moments of deeper insight and intimacy which are hid from the wise and prudent.

And it is they who will be the most grateful, however good their holiday may have been, for the touch of their own pianoforte again, and the sound of a Mozart Symphony at Queen's Hall.

A NEW SYSTEM OF MUSICAL NOTATION

BY HOWARD PARSONS

The objects of this System are to provide that music may be taught 'without tears' on the part of the pupil, or despair on the part of the master, and to facilitate the reading of music by musicians, even those of the highest skill: in short, to supersede the present system of musical notation by something far more scientific.

The inventor is convinced that some of the difficulty in reading music is caused by different clefs being used for different voices. The complication is really appalling, for a note in a certain position may be any of six notes according to the clef. For example, the second space up may be either C, G, B, D, F, or A—all the other notes on the staff varying accordingly. Vocalists, who are primarily possessors of voices, are sometimes poorly equipped so far as musicianship is concerned, and when this is the case it is not surprising that they never properly learn to pick out the right patterns from such a bag of tricks. To use a motoring illustration, these clefs are a complicated set of gears that have to be changed with every slight variation in the gradient, whereas the Parsons System, being of infinite flexibility, takes on top speed all that comes.

The three great faults in musical notation the inventor set himself to remove are:

- (1) That more notes are written (on ledger lines) above, below, or between the staves than upon them;
- (2) That a note on the treble staff is not identical in name with a note in the same position on the bass staff, and that its name again varies when the tenor, alto, or soprano clefs are used;
- (3) That clefs are essential accessories.

These defects are mainly due to the present system of musical notation not being of direct construction, but merely an adaptation from the Great Stave of eleven lines. The treble and bass staves are the eleven lines of the Great Stave, the sixth (centre) line being omitted, but still reckoned, for there are three notes between the parted halves of the remaining ten lines. This is the only reason why a note on any line in the treble clef is not of the same name as a note on the corresponding line in the bass clef, for if the omitted line between the treble and bass staves be restored, it will be seen that, as in the Great Stave, the notes read in alphabetical order from the first (bottom) line upwards, make three octaves, i.e., twenty-one notes (G—G—G—F). It is unfortunate for present-day music that the Great Stave should start from G instead of A. The Great Stave is, as regards the number of its lines, the result of many alterations, extending over centuries, so it is clearly quite accidental that it happens to start with G, and quite certainly G was not given first place because it was best fitted to occupy that position. The Parsons System, which is nothing if not consistent and methodical, assigns the first letter of the alphabet to the bottom line. 'From alpha to omega' is a proverb with which, to their great detriment, both the Great Stave and its modern counterpart are at variance.

DIAGRAM NO. I

KEY TO ORDINARY AND PARSONS NOTATIONS.

No doubt skilled pianists, harpists, organists, &c., read their music with the Great Stave always in mind, and having, by years of practice, acquired great facility in reading music as at present written, may not be eager for the Parsons System—for such the lowest bass note to the highest soprano note represents far less than seven octaves, and, to turn to another example, the violin has a compass of about half that of the keyboard instrument. It may be said that present-day instruments have outgrown the notation, for a fourth string has been added to the double-bass. When the pianoforte had not long been invented, makers gave a compass of only four performers can hardly be expected to relish partly re-commencing their studies in order to play under a new method, even if they agree that it is a great improvement on the old. The inventor is, however, confident of receiving the whole-hearted support of the teaching profession. Even famous executants may be reminded that, chiefly owing to the difficulty of reading music as now presented, they frequently have to memorise, whereas under the simplicity of the Parsons System, memorising would seldom be necessary. It does not seem impracticable for musicians to use both systems without confusion, in the same way as a linguist can change without difficulty from one language to another, or a writer from shorthand to longhand.

'Valse de la Reine.'

DIAGRAM NO. 2

S. COLERIDGE-TAYLOR.

Beyond the modifications necessary for eliminating the three faults referred to, the inventor has not interfered with the present system of musical notation, for accepted conditions should not be changed without good reason.

We will now consider in what direction the perfect system, equally pre-eminent for all instruments and voices, should be sought, taking for our purpose music written for the horizontal grand pianoforte of the fullest compass as having the maximum range. That is to say, the scheme to be advanced includes a compass of over seven octaves. Possibly some special instrument may produce notes either above or below the pianoforte's range of fifty-two naturals. (We need not consider sharps and flats, as these occupy the same positions in the score as naturals.) Even so, accommodation is to be found for such extremely high or low notes. The compass of the grand pianoforte should, however, be ample for all requirements, for, in the case of the voice, from or five octaves, as in the older clavichord and harpsichord. The accepted way of writing music for the clavier was then a better fit for the instrument than it is at present, when the pianoforte has grown two or three sizes larger.

If we had a stave of twenty-six lines, there would then be a position for a note for each key of the pianoforte; but as, from the reading point of view, the Great Stave of eleven lines was so inconvenient that it had to be divided into the present arrangement of two staves of five lines each, and the middle line omitted (but still reckoned as there), it is clear that twenty-six lines would be an impossible multiplicity. Hence, if music is to be written on lines, the first thing to be done, in compiling a new system, is to find a method of reducing the number of lines of the stave from twenty-six, and, therefore, to below the present ten; for, as multiplicity is the thing to be avoided, perfection should be looked for in the irreducible minimum. This irreducible minimum, it is submitted, is exactly sufficient lines and spaces to take the seven notes found in the octave, all written music being merely a repetition of such notes in various circumstances and order, in the same way as all literature consists of letters of the alphabet. Thus, with a stave of four lines and three spaces, there is, it would seem, a possibility of arranging 'a place for everything, and everything in its place.' This is the ideal number (1), because the octave is the only perfectly natural division of pitch, for a new series of intervals begins with each octave. Therefore, at least seven notes (but not necessarily more) are required, and it is essential to assign a special position to each. (2) In most instrumental music, chords are used, and these frequently include the whole seven notes within their extremities. Thus it is practically impossible to have less than four lines and three spaces, and an increase on that number is inadvisable, for (3), as in the present system, it increases the difficulty of reading, and cannot cure the use of makeshift ledger lines. In the system of ten lines (eleven, with the invisible middle line) there is proper accommodation for only two octaves. Room is found for a third octave between these two (partly as ledger notes). The rest of the notes are represented on a multiplicity of ledger lines, and even these are insufficient, so that an Ottava, and an Ottava sotto, have to be called in to assist (see Diagram 1). The two staves do not solve this musical 'housing problem.' They provide homes for some of the 'middle class,' but nothing better than garrets and basements for the 'outsiders.'

How are the three faults of musical notation overcome in the Parsons System? The answer is very simple, but it is hoped that that will be considered a point in its favour. It is, briefly, to use the four-line stave, already described as the ideal stave. This is made possible by employing numerals to indicate the notes. No. 1 notes are those of the lowest octave of the keyboard (that is, assuming that all pianofortes have A for their lowest note); No. 2 notes are those of the second octave; No. 3 notes those of the third octave; No. 4 notes those of the fourth octave (which includes middle C); No. 5 notes those of the fifth octave; No. 6 notes those of the sixth octave; No. 7 notes those of the next and final octave of most pianofortes, except that there is the addition of the top A. This topmost A, along with the extra B and C found only in expensive instruments, are written as 8's. Hence,

Therefore a stave is necessary for each hand, and undoubtedly it is better if the music for the left hand is confined to the lower stave. This can be done with the Parsons System, the upper stave being labelled 'R,' and the lower stave 'L.' See Diagram 4, and compare the two systems in the example from 'Le Cygne.' It will be seen that whereas in the present system, notes to be played by the left hand are skied into the treble clef, in the Parsons System the same notes are simply expressed by higher numbers than their neighbours. A solo instrument or voice would require only one stave. The staves are quite independent of each other, and the space between them is a no-man's-land so far as notation is concerned, for no note is permitted to be represented there. No clefs are necessary, the figure in which any note is written giving its 'absolute pitch.' As will be seen in Diagram 2, octaves are indicated by placing the two notes side by side. This is easier for the executant than the present way of writing them apart, especially for the beginner, who cannot read his notes in groups.

The saving of labour by the Parsons System is very great. In ordinary music there are, in the treble stave, nine notes, and the same number are frequently used in ledger lines above and below the stave. So there are practically three staves, instead of one, for a note on the bottom ledger line above the stave would not be of the same name as a note on the bottom line of the stave, and a note on the top ledger line below the stave would not be of the same name as a note on the top line of the stave. The same remark is true of the bass stave. Hence there are not merely the notes on two staves to be learnt, but six, for each

DIAGRAM NO. 3

'MARTHA'. FLOTOW.

The diagram illustrates the Parsons System notation for the piece 'MARTHA' by Flotow. It consists of two staves, labeled 'R' (Right) and 'L' (Left). The 'R' staff contains a series of notes represented by numbers 1 through 8, indicating absolute pitch. The 'L' staff contains notes represented by numbers 1 through 8, also indicating absolute pitch. The notation is designed to be read without traditional clefs or ledger lines.

there are no ledger lines required and no clefs. Should there be, now or later, instruments producing sounds lower than the No. 1 notes, these could be written as ciphers—0's.

For the purpose of musical notation, the left hand of the pianist can almost be considered as being employed at a different instrument. It may be said that the two hands execute a duet.

clashes with the other. Compare this with the Parsons System, wherein the bottom line, in both left- and right-hand staves, starts with A, thus making only one stave of notes to be learnt, and we find 'singleness of purpose,' instead of six contradictions. Further, the eye does not have to keep jumping up and down from high to low ledger notes—there are no hills, but a level road all the way.

The reader should now refer to the diagrams. At the top of No. 1 is a representation of the finger-board of a pianoforte of the widest compass (= fifty-two naturals), and, immediately below that, are represented the staves for treble clef and bass clef as in the ordinary style of pianoforte (and most other English) music, with a note in each space between the perpendicular lines (which are drawn to guide the eye) to correspond with each key on the finger-board. Below are the staves as used in the Parsons System, in this case depicting the C major scale. At the side of the ordinary style notation are figures which clearly show that, as already mentioned, the two staves properly accommodate only octaves 3 and 5. Attention has already been drawn to the example from 'Le Cygne' (Diagram 4). Turning to Diagram 3, it may be pointed out that whereas in the line from 'Martha' almost all the notes are on ledger lines in the ordinary notation, the Parsons System represents right octave, and, of course, any difference in the number of each note will never exceed one, such as 3 and 4, 4 and 5, 5 and 6, &c. As no one at present has played under the Parsons System, the merit of this method of writing chords is a matter of opinion, and while critics are entitled to differ from the inventor, only an impartial test can decide the question. To any who may not be convinced, the inventor would say that it is better to choose the lesser of two evils, and again he points to the difficulties of the ordinary notation. Look at all the ledger notes above, below, and between the staves, and compare the twenty-four or so spaces used with the three spaces in the Parsons System. The odds are twenty-four to three in favour of the latter. A Chancellor of the Exchequer once referred to 'the sweet simplicity of the three-per-cents.' The inventor turns to the sweet simplicity of the only three spaces in his staves—the positions for notes B, D, and F.

DIAGRAM NO. 4

The diagram consists of two musical staves. The top staff is labeled 'LE CYGNE.' and the bottom staff is labeled 'SAINT-SAËNS.' Both staves use a four-line system with notes represented by numbers 1-5 and stems indicated by hooks. The notation is simplified, focusing on the vertical position of notes relative to the four lines.

them as all properly staved. To a slightly lesser extent, the same remark applies to Diagram 2 ('Valse de la Reine'). The last-named example shows how the highest note of a chord is, when necessary, placed lowest on the chordal stem. This should offer no difficulties to readers of music, and the inventor thinks his discovery of the perfect feasibility of this arrangement is the greatest novelty of his system—that it was only the failure of other inventors to untie this knot in the 'chord' that accounts for the survival of the present archaic notation. The rule is, that as there are only seven notes in the staff, the note of the highest number in the chord is always the top note of the chord, even, to give the extreme example, if it is on the bottom line, and there is a note of a lower number on the top line. The number of the note is of more importance than its position on the staff. This is as it should be, for in locating the position of a note its octave should be found before its position in that octave. The glance by which a chord is read, as regards the names of the notes, will also enable the mind to assign each to its

As to the length of notes, the various quavers are indicated by the hooks attached to their stems in the usual way. Crotchets have only a stem. These can all be in slender type. The minim is denoted by a wider and heavier figure. The semibreve and the rarely-used breve are printed in the same type as the minim, the semibreve having one, and the breve two, short, perpendicular lines on each side of the figure, and thicker than the stems.

As there are only four lines per staff, and no space is required for ledger lines, the spaces of the staff can be  $\frac{1}{2}$ -in. deep without the music occupying more room on the sheet than the ordinary notation. This extra depth is advantageous, for it is desirable that the figure-notes should be clearly legible in a half-light.

In the same way as there is a 'learner's style' in shorthand, so could there be a learner's style in music, and for this the Parsons System is eminently suitable. If the present system of notation must continue to be used, only pupils of proved ability need wade into its depths.

Occasional Notes

From time to time we receive letters from organists in the provinces (and even in the remote parts of the Empire) pointing out the difficulty of obtaining information as to the character, length, degree of difficulty, &c., of organ music. They complain that local music-sellers do not stock music of the kind (naturally, because there are few customers for it), and organs vary so much in scope that the mere title and composer's name give them no idea as to a work's suitability for their particular needs. As a result, the purchase of organ music becomes far too speculative a transaction. To meet this undoubted need, Messrs. Novello are presenting with each issue of the Musical Times, beginning with the present number, a four-page supplement giving extracts from organ works of varying types and grades of difficulty. In due course a selection of these supplements will be issued in the form of a thematic catalogue, with informative notes. We hope this departure will enable organists—whether amateur or professional, in church or concert-hall—to build up, with a minimum of trouble, a repertory suitable to their needs.

The inclusion of Rossini's 'Stabat Mater' in the Hereford Festival programme called forth a measure of condemnation that must have staggered those responsible for the faux pas. The press reports show that the hearers were either shocked or amused, according to temperament; nobody seems to have been edified. The Times of September 13, in its final notice of the Festival, expressed the general feeling among musicians as to the authorities having again overlooked the claims of the finest English Church music. For all the notice accorded it at Hereford, the revival of Tudor and Elizabethan music might never have taken place. Yet where should it be made much of, if not at a Festival held in a Cathedral under the most advantageous circumstances? The inclusion of a few examples would have done something towards giving a cappella music its proper proportion in the Festival scheme, and would have brought the revival to the ears of many hundreds of musicians to whom at present it is nothing more than a rumour—perhaps a mere antiquarian fad. Reverting to the amusement of the congregation during the performance of the 'Stabat Mater,' we suggest to the Festival authorities that in Tolhurst's 'Ruth' they might have found a work even funnier, and one that would have given less trouble in preparation.

We were glad to see The Times protest, too, against the slightness of the tribute to the memory of Parratt, Bridge, and Stanford. The choice of Beethoven's three 'Equali' for trombones might pass muster had the musicians' deaths occurred immediately before the Festival; as, however, they took place so long ago as March, there is no excuse for so inadequate a tribute to three men who, in differing ways, did so much for church and cathedral music. One of Stanford's finest anthems or motets should have been sung. We can never understand the vogue of those 'Equali'; there are scores of excellent Anglican chants of far more musical interest. The effectiveness of a brass quartet, however, being so great, we have often wondered why nobody has scored for it, or for some other brass combination, the 'Third Mode Melody' of Tallis. Here is a truly noble miniature fit for all In memoriam purposes. It has the double advantage of being fairly familiar through its inclusion in the 'English Hymnal' (No. 92), and of being by an English composer—though on second thoughts we have doubts about the second advantage. Vaughan Williams has already written a worthy string work on this Tallis piece; we suggest that he should score it for brass and drums, and so make available a little masterpiece of English music that on national and other occasions might supersede the Beethoven 'Equali'—and even (dare we suggest it?) the Funeral Marches of Handel and Chopin.

At an important concert in New York recently, Stravinsky's 'Petrouchka' was substituted at the last moment for Scriabin's 'Poem of Ecstasy.' The conductor, Fritz Reiner, says that only a few of the audience were aware of the change, 'yet they applauded and cheered; the enthusiasm was as spontaneous as it was genuine.' He went on to say that the incident proved 'that interest in Stravinsky is not a fad of the moment; those people did not know they were hearing Stravinsky, and they liked it, anyhow.' It seems to us to prove even more the futility of labels attached to music, and the extremely limited powers of music as a means of conveying definite impressions. There can be fewer contrasts than the eroticism of the Scriabin work and the realistic imitations of all sorts, from bears to barrel-organs, in the Stravinsky. The other point that calls for comment is the discourteous custom of changing an item in a programme without giving the audience an intimation. Surely the conductor or some other official has sufficient voice, vocabulary, and nerve to make an audible announcement, about a dozen words in length? But tradition seems to insist that conductors, like little boys, should be seen and not heard. (Yet there are conductors the sight of whom we would willingly forego in order that we might listen the better.) Not long since, at Queen's Hall, Ravel's 'Valse nobles et sentimentales' were down for performance. They were not played, however, Tchaikovsky's 'Valse des Fleurs' (if we recollect aright) being substituted. There was no intimation of the change, either in the programme (price one shilling, and yet misleading) or from the platform. Two ladies in front of us, obviously new to orchestral music, were loud in their appreciation ('What a delicious waltz!'), and went away with an idea of Ravel that will be rudely dispelled one of these days.

We are glad to hear that Mr. Kennedy Scott and his enterprising Philharmonic Choir do not intend to succumb to the present adverse conditions in the concert world. They will be heard at Queen's Hall on November 13 (B minor Mass) and on May 21 (Henschel's 'Requiem,' Brahms's 'Alto Rhapsody,' and a new work of Bax, 'St. Patrick's Breastplate'). In addition, the Choir will continue its valuable educational work by singing the Bach to school-children on November 29, a second concert of the kind being given later by the Oriana Singers and the Euterpe String Players. The Choir will also sing in Delius's 'Mass of Life' at the Philharmonic Society's concert on April 2. Rehearsals are held on Wednesdays, from 6.30 to 8.30, at the Guildhouse, Eccleston Square. There are vacancies for singers with good voices and reading ability. Application should be made to the hon. secretary, Mr. D. Ritson-Smith, 70, Esmond Road, W.4. (Tel.: Chiswick 2439.) Readers who are not singers, but who wish to avail themselves of the privilege of being present at rehearsals, as well as of obtaining tickets on advantageous terms, should join the Choir as honorary members. They will thus give practical help to the Choir, and have the opportunity of getting a thorough inside knowledge of fine works and of studying the methods of one of the best of choir-masters. We hope this honorary members' scheme will meet with a large response, as otherwise the Choir will probably be compelled to wind up—a real disaster for London's music.

In our September number we mentioned that Sir Dan Godfrey had kindly promised to send us a list of the Bach works performed under his direction at Bournemouth—a list which somehow got left out of his 'Music and Memories.' Here it is, so that readers may cut it out and make good the hiatus in the book:

'Brandenburg' Concerto for Strings (No. 3); Suite in B minor, for Flute and Strings; Gavotte and Rondo for Strings; Aria on the G String; Violin Concerto in E major; Violin Concerto in A minor; Pianoforte Concerto in D minor; Concerto in C minor, for two Pianofortes and Strings; Suite in G minor; Suite for Cello alone; Suite in C, Bach-Weingartner; Chorale and Variation, arr. by Maurice Besly; Fugue in C minor, Bach-Elgar; Prelude and Fugue in G minor, Bach-Albert; Chaconne (Orchestral Transcription); Concerto in F for Violin, Flute, Oboe, and Trumpet; Præludium

In his accompanying note Sir Dan points out that not many of the works for string orchestra are included, as he considers that they call for a bigger body of strings than are available. We are not sure that this view is sound. After all, none of Bach's works were written with a very large force in view, for the best of reasons; and however fine the effect of (say) the No. 3 'Brandenburg' may be with a big body of tone, musicians are more and more beginning to have doubts about the modern practice of using large forces for early instrumental works, from Bach to Mozart. The occasional gains in sonority are poor compensation for the almost constant loss in regard to delicacy and rhythm. The Bournemouth list is rather timid considering the vast amount of music played there under Sir Dan's regime. We are often given to understand that, musically, London doesn't count; so it is pleasant to be able to point to her record in the matter of Bach. At Queen's Hall alone, more of his music is heard in a month than most provincial musical centres hear in a season. Yet Newcastle has for years been showing what can be done in a town where there are enthusiastic leaders and followers—and not too much devotion to 'international celebrities' on tour with their little store of well-worn show pieces. Think, for example, of the local musical activities of all kinds that could be financed liberally by the thousands of pounds that the public will hand over to Galli-Curci this autumn for the pleasure of hearing 'Una voce' and a few other brilliant superficialities, winding up with 'Home, Sweet Home'! The best antidote to waste of this kind is a healthy appetite for Bach, above all.

Readers will remember that 'The Magic Flute' recently had two performances by school-boys in a remote part of the East-End of London under the direction of Mr. C. T. Smith. A third—or rather a series—is announced to take place in the Co-operative Hall, Todmorden, on September 30, and October 1, 2, 3, and 4, at 6.45, the performers being Mr. Ronald Cunliffe's Boys' Choir of Todmorden. Without anticipating any critical comment on the performances we venture to extract from a pamphlet some particulars of the choir and its work, as the organization seems to be unique. Mr. Cunliffe begins by expressing a hope that musicians will not be 'scared off the pitch' by his stating that the choir is at bottom an 'appreciation class,' and a class which confines itself to severely practical work—doing rather than hearing or talking, or being talked to. Mr. Cunliffe holds, rightly we think, that a boy will, for example, get a better idea of great songs by studying and singing a lot of them 'earnestly and often,' than by listening to a few of them occasionally.

During the past two years the choir has prepared 'The Magic Flute' (without a single cut!); songs by Bach, Handel, Purcell, and other composers of the 16th and 17th centuries; some Mozart in addition to the opera; 'a fair amount of Schubert; a little Schumann, Brahms, Wolf, and Strauss; and some Mendelssohn.' Among recent writers drawn on are Parry, Quilter, Vaughan Williams, Elgar, Holst, Bantock, Ireland; 'a very mixed bag of odd bits of Gounod, Sullivan, Mallinson, Martin Shaw, Frank Bridge, Boughton, Atkins,' and many others; a dozen genuine sea chantes, a ditto of Negro Spirituals, a hundred folk-songs, and some forty carols. As samples of the kind of thing these young Todmordenites sing in chorus may be mentioned Bantock's 'The Wilderness,' Gounod's 'Lend me your aid,' and Frank Bridge's 'Love went a-riding,' which are 'tackled with no more concern than "Let the bright Seraphim."' The Choir has sung illustrations at about thirty lectures during the past two years. During the coming winter its members will work chiefly at song-cycles and separate songs, the cycles including Somervell's 'Maud,' Butterworth's 'Shropshire Lad,' Hughes's 'Nursery Rhymes,' and Moussorgsky's 'Dances of Death.'

On the operatic side [says the pamphlet, lightly] we shall be doing some Wagner things, dipping our toe into each of his operas except 'Rienzi,' and if 'The Magic Flute' does well this year and we decide to do another opera, we shall probably take 'The Golden Cockerel.' As regards the wages, i.e., finance, the Choir may be said to be a failure. The boys pay a good weekly subscription, but expenses are abominably heavy. . . . However, the Choir has never yet begged so much as a penny.

What manner of boy is this, who enjoys such fine, confused feeding so keenly that he not only gives up many of his evenings, but pays a good weekly subscription as well? We are in the dark, but presume he is that best of material, the pick of the elementary school. As to vocal ability, one would expect a stringent method of selection. But no; hear Mr. Cunliffe on this:

The boys of this Choir are subjected to no voice test on application for admission (this is a self-imposed condition, and one which gives one a set of ordinary boys such as one would get in an average day-school). Boys of any age from eight to fourteen are admitted, and all are taught together (a condition which would simply appal an average day-school teacher). A boy may leave at any time, no matter how valuable he may be (this is of course taking a risk!). No influence is exerted upon any boy to join (this again is in the nature of a risk, or at any rate a limitation). The total time of active rehearsal per week does not exceed two hours; no 'patent' or 'secret' systems of voice-production are used; all exercises are done collectively in class; the class numbers an average of forty; I take sole charge, without any assistance beyond that of monitors and a boy cashier at the subscription desk.

We hope our readers will not grudge the space we have devoted to this very unusual type of choir. Whether the actual singing be good or bad, there can be no doubt about the value of such practical coming to grips with stacks of good music of many kinds. A paragraph in the pamphlet says that 'as to the future, the Choir will continue so long as the boys continue to enroll.' If it goes on for (say) a few more years the town ought to be exceptionally rich in young tenors and basses of good reading ability and catholic taste. We advise any of our readers who happen to be down Todmorden way on the dates given above to go and hear 'The Magic Flute.' We ourselves must be elsewhere, but we shall miss no opportunity that may occur later. Perhaps, if we are lucky, we may drop in some fine evening and find these lively youngsters 'doing some Wagner things,' or handing out a Moussorgsky opera.

Among the correspondence called forth by the 'back to the foreigner' policy of the London Symphony Orchestra in the matter of conductors, the choicest specimen was a letter that appeared in the Daily Telegraph of September 6, signed 'An L.S.O. Admirer.' He refers patronisingly to 'the work of a conductor like Sir Henry Wood in his efforts to popularise good music among the masses' (as if Sir Henry had no merits beyond that of fitness to act as a kind of Apostle to the Gentiles of music!), and goes on to say that if, as rumoured, this is the last season of the Promenades, 'he will indeed be sadly missed.' 'L.S.O. Admirer's' assumption that with the ending of the 'Proms.' Sir Henry's occupation will be gone is distinctly funny. This naive correspondent proceeds:

There is no gainsaying the fact that the English as a whole will never be as intensely musical as the Germans, Austrians, Italians, &c., for the simple reason that those races are born so—even their climate and surroundings seem to aid them.

Has the climate of England deteriorated since the day when the poor old country took a front place in musical matters? And we should like to know on what grounds the Italy of to-day is placed there. The 'L.S.O. Admirer' shows his admiration curiously by adding:

I think I am voicing the feelings of all real music-lovers when I say that the L.S.O. is capable of really inspiring performances when in the hands of masters like Weingartner or Bruno Walter. May they continue to get conductors of international fame, and thus give us concerts which are an education.

The L.S.O. may well ask to be saved from 'admirers' who suggest that it is capable of 'really inspiring performances' only when conducted by a Weingartner or a Walter.

We gladly give publicity to the following letter received from Leipsic a few days ago:

DEAR SIR,—Presenting my newest catalogue music, I beg to ask you to insert a bespeaking of the enclosed catalogue in the redactional part of your esteemed revue perhaps in that kind:

'Old musics, autographs of musicians, theorie and modern literature of music is the contents of the newest catalogue music (2,227 items) of the bookseller

Rudolph Hönisch, Leipzig (German) 40 Gustav Freytagstrasse. Rarities e. gr. Mag Reger, partitions, corrected by the hand of the composer, old engraved editions of Mozart, Bach a. o. As we hear, this firm was buying the libraries of the professors of music, Hugo Riemann, Th. Müller—Reuter and Karl Kipke, which collections are offered in series of catalogues.'

The composer of a recently produced English opera has been approached by a Berlin publicity agent, and has handed us the correspondence as being of interest, not only for its quaint diction, but also for the calm assurance with which the writer makes a demand that no business house would dream of entertaining:

DEAR SIR,—Mister —, the Vienna conductor, told me much of your musical works, which he recommended urgently to my activity. I should like very much to work for you, but only I ought to know then something more of your theatrical works, as I do up to the present moment, especially of your opera. . . . Please have the kindness to inform me on this subject as much as you like and, if possible, in German language. I should be very much obliged by your sending me the concerning pianoforte arrangement and the words. Further, I beg to answer the following questions: If your opera has only been published in English? I beg to ask then, if you would have interest, to have it translated into German. . . . For the representation on the stages I should endeavour myself; for this would want more than anything much energy, diligence, and personal interest. Would you be so kind, only to inform me on your operas, for I should not to like to work on the first hand for concert-compositions.

Then follow particulars as to the writer's qualifications, &c. The composer handed the letter to his publishers, who wrote very reasonably suggesting a performing fee, and inquiring as to the would-be agent's commission for such performances as he could bring about. They also expressed a natural desire to see the translation before accepting it.

To them the agent replied:

. . . everything you want in your letter is quite right, but you forgot one thing: Mr. — is an absolutely unknown man in Germany, and to make him known would take very hard work, very much energy and much time. This work is not paid by commission. Therefore if you or Mr. — are not able to pay, I would not be in a position to work for him. My business being the greatest theatrical agency, with the largest number of business connections in the world, I should make for him an extend propaganda. . . . I am a friend with all opera conductors and managers of importance and that means something, in our country being more than sixty operas. . . . The payment I ask for my work would be £250 payable by signing the contract. For this sum I should deliver a perfect German translation, done by people understanding excellently this business, so that you need not pay extra for translation.

He followed this up with a letter to the composer:

DEAR SIR,—I received your letter and the score and words of your opera from Messrs.—. They have written too, but their proposals cannot be interesting for me at all. It is the situation that you are an absolutely unknown man in Germany and to make you known would take very hard work, much energy and much time. Therefore I have asked £250 including the work for translation. If Messrs.— are willing to accept I am sure that we would have a great success, if not, I should be very sorry for you.

Can we wonder at the neglect of British music abroad when our publishers are so cautious as to think twice before handing over a mere £250 to an unknown foreigner on his signing a contract? All they venture to do is to make proposals that cannot be interesting for him at all. No wonder he will be very sorry for the composer.

West country readers will do well to remember the week of opera at Victoria Rooms, Clifton, from October 13-18, when works by Purcell, Vaughan Williams, and others will be performed, as well as a new one-Act opera by Manuel de Falla based on an episode in 'Don Quixote.' A strong cast of British singers will appear, and the conductors will be Adrian C. Boulton and Malcolm Sargent. The business manager is Mr. W. J. Masters, Kings Weston, Bristol (telephone: Stoke Bishop 69).

From a musical instrument maker's advertisement in a Canadian journal:

Parents Who Gratify The Musical Ambition of Their Son for a Saxophone need no longer fear the Lure of the Pool Room. It loses its interest for the boy who possesses a Saxophone. His evenings are spent in pleasant recreation among clean associates in developing a talent that may be highly capitalised.

—an astute appeal to both worldly and other-worldly sides of parents. But should the musical instrument prove to be the more powerful of the Lures, what a prospect is before an already over-saxophoned public!

We wondered why so many of our bass and baritone friends were experimenting with falsetto recently. When we saw the following tempting advertisement in a Church newspaper we understood:

WELLS CATHEDRAL.—Wanted an ALTO SINGER, about £1,000 net. Good house and garden; modern house in due course (£100 for the first year).—Apply, stating age, before September 15, to Canon Hollis, The Liberty, Wells, Somerset.

Nevertheless, we think the credit of so munificent an offer must go to the printer rather than to the Dean and Chapter.

A writer in the Radio Times, discussing Tchaikovsky, under the titles of 'The Despairing Musician' and 'The Moody Russian,' says:

It is doubtful if Tchaikovsky experienced any conscious pleasure, apart from the joy of creation, in the tonal expression of his morbidity; and we may take it for granted that it was the only work of which he was capable, being the articulation of suggestions as they occurred to him in a non-volitional process over which he had no control. In other words, it was all quite natural to him.

We prefer the 'other words.'

Handel . . . is the greatest song-writer, not excepting Hubert.—Provincial Paper.

Poor Franz! Not only dethroned, but beheaded as well.

We regret that, owing to a proof going astray, some slips occurred in Mr. Wotton's article in the September issue 'On the Notation of the Horn.' On page 811, col. 2, line 10, '. . . nobody questions the latter as being Wagner's belief,' should have been altered to 'yet many consider the latter as being Wagner's belief.'

THE HEREFORD FESTIVAL

By HERBERT THOMPSON

'The two hundred and fourth meeting of the Three Choirs of Hereford, Gloucester, and Worcester'—to give it its official title—took place on September 7 to 12, and achieved more than one record. One of these records was deplorable. A long experience of these Festivals has engendered a faith that the weather at least would be favourable, and local farmers have, during a wet summer, congratulated themselves that the Festival was sure to bring a fine week. Dr. Hull took an opportunity, at a rehearsal, for making a public apology for the weather, and made the playful suggestion that it would at any rate give the critics something to write about. But I fancy that, with the music and its performance to pass under review, the critics would find less room for such an extraneous subject than would the ladies, whose chances of ornamenting the city by a display of their choicest 'creations' would be materially diminished. I should say that another record was the number of vocalists who, for one reason or another, fell away. Lady Howard de Walden was to have sung in the 'Flying Dutchman' duet, but had to recall her promise. Miss Agnes Nicholls was to take her place, and actually rehearsed the duet on Tuesday, but on Wednesday had herself to give up her part in 'Elijah.' A most able substitute was found, however, in Miss Elsie Suddaby, who thus had (in Elgar's version of the National Anthem) the first word in the Festival, and in 'The Messiah' almost the last. Mr. Norman Allin was another unwilling seceder, and his share had to be distributed among the other basses, Messrs. Heyner, Knowles, and Radford. Fortunately, it cannot be said that the performances suffered materially from these changes, for the works involved were all so well known that any experienced singer could be presumed to have studied them. Perhaps it is in a measure due to the fact that the bulk of the programme was familiar that it proved so attractive, and accounted for the more satisfactory records in the attendance and the collections. I was told, on the unimpeachable authority of the hon. secretary, Mr. George Holloway, that the attendance at one of the Cathedral performances was the highest recorded at Hereford, and this, not for 'The Messiah' or 'Elijah,' as might have been expected, but when Elgar conducted his 'The Kingdom.' The number, 2,235, practically indicated the capacity of the Cathedral, which is not so spacious as those of Gloucester and Worcester, but is in fair proportion to the size of the city and the diocese.

As usual, 'The Messiah' and 'Elijah' occupied two of the six Cathedral programmes, and of Elgar, whose power to attract at the Three Choirs Festivals shows no sign of decrease, we had 'Gerontius,' 'The Kingdom,' 'Go, song of mine,' the Violoncello Concerto (Miss Beatrice Harrison), the 'Empire March, 1924'—a brilliant work, more distinguished in its very effective development than in its themes—and, at the orchestral concert, the Introduction and Allegro for strings, beside which there were sundry transcriptions, such as the admirable orchestral version of the 'Chandos' Anthem Overture, first heard at Worcester last year. Of all of these, exceedingly good performances were given—those of the two oratorios superlatively so; indeed, I am inclined to describe as another 'record' the performance of 'Gerontius,' in which Miss Astra Desmond, Mr. John Coates, and Mr. Radford were the principals, and the personality of the composer at the conductor's desk made all concerned do their utmost for the work. The choir, I may at once say, was one of the best I have ever heard at these Festivals: it was well balanced, and followed Dr. Hull's beat faithfully, which was the more of a feat since he has an impulsive nature which inclines him to get the bit in his teeth and hurry the pace. His tempi in 'Elijah' were very quick, but one was less troubled by this than in Bach's B minor Mass, which was the great feature of the Festival, but was, to me, spoilt by the exceptional speed at which the more brilliant choruses were taken. I say 'to me' advisedly, because tempi are to a certain point a matter of temperament and mood; but I must add that I think the point was overstepped in the Sanctus, which I have never heard taken so quickly, not even by such lovers of brilliance as Sullivan and Wood. Admiration for this as one of the greatest things in all music makes one the more jealous of an interpretation which so effectually deprived it of its immense majesty. On the other hand, the Incarnatus and Crucifixus were deeply impressive. Miss Dorothy Silk, Miss Astra Desmond, Mr. Steuart Wilson, and Mr. Radford were the soloists, and though I felt (as always) that the solo parts suffer from being more intimate in character than the choruses, and are therefore at a disadvantage in a performance on festival scale, they were artistically sung. As a detail I noticed that the high trumpet parts sounded particularly well in the Cathedral, and were free from that keenness of quality which is often noticed in them.

The novelties were, with one exception, of minor importance. This exception was Mr. Edgar Bainton's 'The Tower,' a setting for chorus and orchestra of a poem by Robert Nichols. The scene is in the 'Upper Room,' where Our Saviour blesses the bread and wine, and comforts His disciples, who grieve over His approaching departure. A sinister note is afforded by the treachery of Judas, who is depicted as setting forth on his traitorous errand. The narrative is simply told, but vividly, and has given the composer a cue which he has worked out with keen sympathy. He has succeeded in catching the atmosphere of the story from the opening bars, which suggest the silence and mystery of night in Jerusalem, and down to the striking harmonies of the final cadence for the voices, the mystical, tragic note is well sustained. There were some indications that the choir was not quite familiar with the idiom of the music—though it is not aggressively modern—but it was otherwise well performed under the composer's direction. This was the only new work given in the Cathedral. All the rest were included in the orchestral concert, and were by composers more or less closely connected with the Festival. Mr. W. H. Reed, the leader of the London Symphony Orchestra, is one of the cleverest of our writers of orchestral music, and his adroit use of the orchestra has never been more happily shown than in his Suite entitled, 'Æsop's Fables.' A short Prelude on a theme of archaic character personifies Æsop, and then we have in succession five of his Fables, illustrated—so far as is possible for music which retains its musical character—in a fashion that is effective and witty. Each Fable is followed by Æsop's 'moral,' and the more developed Finale presents the story of 'The Wind, the Sun, and the Traveller,' with Æsop himself as the Traveller, and furnishes a vivid and satisfying ending to this original and clever work. Mr. Brent-Smith's Introduction and Rondo is so far programme music that the composer tells us it records his impressions of an autumn in the beautiful country between the Severn and the Wye, but it is none the less pure, or 'absolute,' music. One can, however, realise that the musicianship involved in this well-wrought piece has been infused by a poetry inspired by the outward aspects of nature, though it would no doubt serve no less adequately as an impression of the Lake District or the Highlands, just as Mr. Reed's might serve, if applied to other stories than he has chosen. Mr. Brent-Smith was also responsible for an orchestral accompaniment to Croft's splendid tune, 'Hanover,' sung at the opening Service. With a view to compelling unison singing by the congregation, and confounding all futile ladies who 'sing seconds,' it was freely treated, and introduced some very effective bits of counterpoint. At the concert some new songs by Sir Ivor Atkins, of Worcester, and Dr. Brewer, of Hereford, were sung by Miss Astra Desmond, and were musicianly and effective, with well-written orchestral accompaniments.

The Thursday evening programme in the Cathedral presented a contrast which was striking, if not incongruous, and we may attribute an exceptional breadth of vision to those who could find equal enjoyment in Brahms's 'German Requiem' and Rossini's 'Stabat Mater.' Between these was sandwiched Parry's 'Blest Pair of Sirens,' but this did not altogether remove, though it mitigated, the violence of the contrast. It is not simply because the 'Stabat Mater' is theatrical, or because its treatment is trivial, that one objects to it, but because it is so flippant and insincere a version of its subject that its worst qualities are made more flagrantly obvious in a church, for which it is entirely unfitted. One professed admirer was driven to confess that he had to forget what it was all about in order to enjoy it—which is surely a sufficient condemnation. At the opposite pole was Holst's 'Hymn of Jesus,' given for the second time at Hereford, and justifying its repetition in an ancient Cathedral, where, one feels, it finds its most suitable environment. It had a finished and satisfactory performance under Dr. Hull. Another thing still more closely associated with Hereford is the 'Grail' Scene from 'Parsifal,' which Dr. Sinclair introduced in 1897, since when it has always been in the Hereford programmes. The semi-chorus of choir-boys, stationed in the central tower, had a beautiful effect, and, as usual, the pitch was kept perfectly. Another interesting episode was the introduction of Beethoven's three 'Equali' for four trombones, which were composed in 1812, afterwards arranged for men's voices and sung at the composer's funeral. This circumstance is recalled since it seems to enhance the appropriateness of their performance on this occasion, as a tribute to the memory of the three recently deceased native musicians—Frederick Bridge, Parratt, and Stanford. Another slight, but pleasing, memory of Stanford was afforded by his very genial 'Shamus O'Brien' Overture. Two Symphonies were heard during the Festival—Haydn in C, described as 'No. 7,' and one of the most delightful of the Salomon set, and Brahms in E minor, which was the more welcome since it is not nearly so often heard as its three predecessors. It was given at Worcester in 1905, otherwise I do not think it had been heard at the Three Choirs Festivals. Save that Dr. Hull inclined to rush all the movements except the Allegro giocoso, it went well, and one wondered why the Chaconne should once have been deemed such a hard nut to crack. It is a pleasant custom at Hereford to end with a chamber concert, which on this occasion consisted entirely of native works. The W. H. Reed Quartet played Walford Davies's 'Peter Pan' Suite and A. C. Mackenzie's pleasant arrangement of two old songs, and took part (with Mrs. Percy Hull at the pianoforte) in one of the most thoughtful and impressive readings of Vaughan Williams's 'Wenlock Edge' song-cycle I have ever heard. Mr. Steuart Wilson enhanced one's opinion of his interpretative powers by his singing of these songs; he gripped the hearer by his dramatic performance. Miss Dora Labbette's refined singing—of F. Keel's Elizabethan Love Songs and some of Holst's songs for voice and violin, among other things—was another feature of this concert, which suffered from a slight excess of the melancholy, but was otherwise very enjoyable. The only vocalist not already mentioned is Miss Muriel Brunskill, the rich quality of whose contralto proved most effective in the Cathedral.

A POSTSCRIPT

No festival is without its anxieties, especially to the conductor, and even Dr. Hull's good humour must have been singularly tried at times by the requests launched at him from all quarters. The most embarrassing was, I imagine, a letter which reached him addressed to 'Dr. John Bull, First Gresham Professor of Music, c/o Three Choirs Festival, Hereford Cathedral, Hereford.' It had also the superscription, 'Kindly forward,' which Dr. Hull was unable to comply with, having unfortunately mislaid the address. The letter emanated from a press-cutting agency, which offered to supply Dr. Bull with references to himself and his compositions, and advised him that it had 'a large theatrical and musical department, under competent (sic) supervision.'

Music in the Foreign Press

CHARLES BORDES

The August issue of the Revue Musicale is partly devoted to Charles Bordes. It contains articles on him by Paul Dukas and Gustave Samazeuilh, and a full catalogue of his works.

Bordes had devoted a great part of the little spare time his activities as organizer and propagandist left him, to composing the text and music of a lyric drama, 'Les Trois Vagues,' which remains unfinished.

Both Dukas and Samazeuilh agree in deeply regretting that his rough drafts for this work should show so very little of the music such as he used to play it to his friends. Dukas writes:

When hearing Bordes play excerpts from 'Les Trois Vagues,' I felt that this was going to be the only French work that could stand comparison with 'Carmen.'

ON CONTEMPORARY COMPOSERS

Many articles on contemporary composers have appeared of late, chiefly on the occasion of the Prag, Salzburg, and Donaueschingen Festivals. The June-July Anbruch contains contributions by Adolf Weissman on Stravinsky, Paul Bekker on Krenek, Max Brod on Janaček, and Dr. Torbé on Egon Wellesz's Persian Ballet. Another article on Stravinsky, by O. Tiby, is to be found in the September Pianoforte. There is a special Donaueschingen number of the Neue Musik Zeitung (July 15). The August 15 issue of the same periodical contains an article on Gerard von Keussler by Edith Weiss Mann. In the Auftakt (July), H. F. Schaub writes on the same von Keussler. Paul Krause's organ music is praised by W. Nestler in the Neue Musik Zeitung (June 15).

The June Revue Musicale contains a useful essay by Maurice Boucher on Guy Ropartz, and a full catalogue of his works.

In Die Musik (August), appear short articles by E. Rychnovsky on Zemlinsky, Kurt Singer on Siegfried Ochs, and J. Stutschewsky on Julius Klengel.

AN UNPUBLISHED LETTER BY MENDELSSOHN

In the same issue of Die Musik, Georg Kleibömer publishes a letter written in 1844 by Mendelssohn to Heinrich Romberg at Petersburg, previous to Schumann's journey to Russia:

Two very dear friends, who are two of our very foremost and best German artists, are going to Petersburg: Herr and Frau Dr. Schumann, for whom I ask you to do all you can. You know them well by name. You are aware that Schumann has composed delightful things, that his latest works are lofty and genuinely inspired, and that even greater and better things are to be expected from his pen; that his wife is our best German woman pianist, and indeed the best of living women pianists. But as regards the frivolous, coquettish savoir-faire which people often expect and praise nowadays, both of them are somewhat deficient: so that their friends must act in their stead, and do for them what they cannot, or rather will not, do for themselves.

NIETZSCHE'S SONGS

The August issue of Die Musik also includes an article by Max Unger devoted to Nietzsche as a composer.

A good deal has been written on Nietzsche's attitude towards music, but the book on Nietzsche as a composer remains to be written. Few people are aware that many compositions by Nietzsche—songs, pianoforte pieces, and orchestral works—are preserved in manuscript at Weimar. All this music is shortly to be published. The first volume to appear will contain fourteen songs, with pianoforte accompaniment.

Max Unger considers that these songs are not altogether uninteresting: but one example, published in full, does not quite confirm this view of his.

WHO INFLUENCED SCHUMANN?

In the Zeitschrift für Musik (July-August), Dr. Rudolf Felber seeks to determine which composers influenced Schumann as a song-writer. He gives the first place to Mendelssohn, mentions Schubert and Löwe, and, curiously enough, finds good reasons for comparing passages in Schumann's Op. 77, No. 3, Op. 83, No. 1, and Op. 87, with passages in 'Lohengrin.'

JOSEF MARTIN KRAUS

In the Svensk Tidskrift för Musikforskning (June-July), Anrep Nordin considers the output of J. M. Kraus, bringing out many points of interest as regards structure. The Sonatas and Quartets in cyclic form are carefully analysed.

A DUFAY MANUSCRIPT

In the August Revue de Musicologie, G. Thibault describes a manuscript, preserved at Florence, which contains six part-songs by Dufay. One of these is given in full.

VIOTTI

The same issue contains letters from Viotti to Baillot, published with a commentary by Marc Pincherle, and an article on Baillot as manager of the Paris Opéra, by L. de la Laurencie.

THE EMPEROR NAPOLEON III. AND
'TANNHÄUSER'

In the August Revue Musicale appear excerpts from an unpublished letter of Marschner written to a friend after the 1861 performance of 'Tannhäuser' at Paris:

During the third Act we could see from our box the Emperor and his retinue laughing as heartily and ostentatiously as the rest of the public. The Empress we could not see. But it was a comical sight to see the Emperor, at every outburst of laughter, turn his eyes towards Metternich, as if to say: 'See what a nice German mess we owe you!'

A FRENCH CRITIC ON 'PIERROT LUNAIRE'

Writing from Naples, in the August Revue Musicale, Paul-Marie Masson says:

'Pierrot Lunaire,' which I heard for the first time, impressed me very deeply. The music is a wonderful creation, and in my opinion bears the stamp of true genius. To my surprise, I did not for one moment find it strange; all struck me as direct, natural, and convincing. When I heard for the first time music by Debussy or Stravinsky, I was baffled: but here Schönberg does not baffle me in the least.

INSTRUMENTS, TONAL AND ATONAL

In the Musikblätter des Anbruch (June-July issue), Josef Matthias Hauer asks why certain modern types of music sound out of tune when written for orchestra or chamber combinations, whereas the same type of music written for pianoforte or organ (likewise songs with pianoforte accompaniment) sounds right. His reply is that whereas certain ... composers conceive their music in accordance with the equal temperament (which is essentially 'atonal'), the orchestral instruments on which it is played remain 'tonal.' Even in classical orchestral music certain chromatic and modulatory passages never sound quite right, although they do sound right when played on the pianoforte. The need for building instruments that will conform with the principle of equal temperament will soon be acknowledged.

A BACH NUMBER

The July issue of the Zeitschrift für Musik is a special Bach number published on the occasion of the Stuttgart Bach Festival. It contains the following articles: 'On Performing Bach's Keyboard Music,' by Prof. K. Hasse; 'On Performing Bach's Organ Music,' by H. Keller; 'On Bach's Vocal Ornaments,' by Prof. H. J. Moser; 'The Bachs in Arnstadt,' by W. Heimann.

CIMAROSA'S FORTEPIANO SONATAS

In the July Revue Musicale, F. Boghen announces his discovery of a book of unpublished Sonatas (eighty-one in all) by Cimarosa. He describes these works as well-written for the instrument, and containing many beautiful things. An Allegro alla Francese is published as a musical supplement.

M.-D. CALVOCORESSI.

New Music

SCORES

Among the full scores received for review are a good number of the miniature type. Some of these show a marked advance in regard to clearness. In the case of the more complex and heavily scored works perhaps too much appears to have been sacrificed to mere smallness. After all, the side-pocket of most men's coats is of a sensible capacity, and can easily accommodate a booklet 8-in. by 6-in. (The old Donajowski miniature scores are about 7½-in. by 5¼-in., but one must remember that most of the works were for the small classical orchestra.) Clearness is, after all, the prime consideration, especially as many of us use the scores without ever taking them out of the house. The score of Stravinsky's 'L'Oiseau de Feu' Suite, as re-orchestrated by the composer in 1919, is very minute but wonderfully clear, considering that many pages have no fewer than twenty-eight staves. This interesting score is published by Chesters, who issue also scores of Timothy Mather Spelman's 'Five Whimsical Serenades' for string quartet, Francis Poulenc's Sonata for horn, trumpet, and trombone, and Peter Warlock's 'An Old Song'—an attractive looking little work for small orchestra (strings—violins in four parts throughout—one flute, one oboe, one clarinet, and one horn).

A String Quartet by V. Broderson (Op. 16) comes from Steingraber, and may be obtained at Novello's. Augener's issue Adam Carse's 'Two Sketches' for string orchestra ('A Northern Song' and 'A Northern Dance'), and Delius's String Quartet. All the above, except the Warlock piece, are miniature scores.

Eulenburg of Leipzig sends several numbers of a very interesting series of miniature scores. So far we have had few of the choral masterpieces issued in this form. Here are Palestrina's 'Missa Papæ Marcelli' and 'Stabat Mater,' and Bach's 'Magnificat.' (When is the last-named work going to be heard again? A good many years have passed since its last performance in London, and probably anywhere else in the country. Some of the choirs who are overtaxing themselves with the B minor Mass and the 'St. Matthew' Passion should turn to the 'Magnificat.') These Eulenburg scores are obtainable at Novello's.

An important issue from an historical point of view is that of Monteverde's 'Il Ritorno d'Ulisse in Patria.' It forms the fifty-seventh volume of the Gesellschaft zur Herausgabe der Denkmäler der Tonkunst in Österreich, and is the issue for the twenty-ninth year of that body (Universal Edition, Breitkopf & Härtel). This, of course, is not a miniature score.

Another reprint in the same series is that of Gottlieb Muffat's 'Zwölf Toccaten und 72 Versets für Orgel und Klavier.' There is a good deal more than antiquarian interest here. True, Muffat's flights are very short, the longest Toccata running to no more than about thirty bars. The versets are all fugal, sometimes consisting of little more than an exposition. The writing is very finished, and the little pieces are so enjoyable that the present writer played them all through in a couple of bouts and was sorry when the last was reached. A selection of a score or so of the best would make excellent short voluntaries for manuals only. The volume contains also facsimile reproductions of the original title-page and dedication—fine examples of old engraving and type.

From Curwen's comes the vocal score of Armstrong Gibbs's 'Midsummer Madness'—capital tuneful stuff that well deserves the success it has achieved at the Hammersmith Lyric.

Even the Stravinsky score above-mentioned seems mild in comparison with that of Kaikhosru Sorabji's Pianoforte Concerto No. 2 (Curwen). It is for piccolo, two flutes, alto flute, two oboes, alto oboe, two clarinets, bass clarinet, two bassoons, double-bassoon, four horns, four trumpets, three trombones, tuba, drums, Basque drum, castanets, triangle, cymbals, tam-tam, bass drum, military drum, glockenspiel, xylophone, celesta, and harp; all the strings are divided, the double-basses are tuned down to C, and the pianoforte should be one with a third (sostenuto) pedal.

I am glad to see that Mr. Sorabji writes the actual notes sounded by the instruments (except of course in the cases of such as sound an octave higher or lower than written). Even so this score baffles one—the most that can be done is the painful piecing together of the less formidable portions of the structure. (There are a few exacting folk who would have us believe that all qualified musicians ought to be able to read mentally any full score, however complex. I should like to put this score into their hands and tell them to get on with it). The Concerto is dedicated to Cortôt, and it is to be hoped that he will give us a chance of hearing it. But I fear that it will be too expensive a business for these days when St. Cecilia has to carry on by means of overdrafts. The cost of rehearsal would be terrific. There is clearly an amazing brain at work here—so much so that one learns without surprise that Sorabji writes his music straight away, full score and all—no sketches for him, and it goes without saying that such a prop as the keyboard for experimental purposes is scorned. (These facts we learn from Philip Heseltine's article on the composer in the new 'Dictionary of Modern Composers,' just issued by Dent.) Still, music has no real existence until it is converted into sound, wherefore it is to be hoped that Mr. Sorabji will cut his coat to suit the present straitened supply of cloth, and speak to us in a less bewildering and costly tongue.

H. G.

VIOLONCELLO AND PIANOFORTE

Three pieces of very moderate difficulty for violoncello and pianoforte, by E. T. Sweeting (Stainer & Bell), are to be commended chiefly on account of their straightforward manner, which provides the student with the necessary material for the study of a cantabile style without driving the lesson too far and without making a toil of a pleasure. All three pieces—Aubade, Minuet, Romance—are melodious and simple harmonically. Yet each can be useful to the teacher anxious to point the moral to some study or other. No doubt the same end could be attained by using classical examples, or portions of a classical work, but there is a good deal in a name, and a great name is apt to frighten a reticent, modest student. Here moreover the whole thing has been thought out in terms that students understand, and the pianoforte part being not more difficult than that of the 'cello, the opportunity offers for the kind of homely duet which makes fond parents proud.

B. V.

SONGS

A prolonged examination of a big pile of new songs leaves one with a sense of disappointment. How many of the composers sing, or have studied the possibilities of the voice in the same way as they would study those of (say) the clarinet before writing for orchestra? Most of the songs show not only a failure to realise the limitations of the voice, but also a disregard of attractiveness both to singer and hearer. It is easy to gibe at the desire of singers for melodic and other interest. The desire is natural, and if so many composers continue giving all the interest to the pianist, they must not complain if singers in return give them the cold shoulder and fly to balladry, where they are at least pretty sure of getting something grateful for the voice. But perhaps the chief defect is the apparent inability to be simple. A plain common chord seems to be anathema; the accompaniment is often made to dodge the harmony implied by the voice-part; and sometimes even the two hands are not allowed to play in the same key. Of course, there is no objection to any of these devices provided the effect be good. But it can hardly be denied that they are among the exceptional types of material, and that their effectiveness diminishes with frequent use. Over-employed, as they are by some of our younger composers, they give an effect of 'preciousness,' and may even end in the very fault the composer was trying to avoid—monotony.

AUGENER

A neat touch, especially in the matter of accompaniment, is shown by M. Harwood in his (or her) 'April Song,' 'Secrets,' and 'A Cotsal Wood.' More ordinary—one might call it Little-grey-home-in-the-West-y—is Vivian Hickey's 'A little while.'

Phyllis M. James must learn to write better accompaniments than that of her 'Farewell,' which consists far too much of stolidly-moving one-beat chords with the top note doubling the voice-part.

J. & W. CHESTER

A capital bit of leg-pulling is Lord Berners's 'Dialogue between Tom Filuter and his Man, by Ned the Dog Stealer.' 'Whose leg is pulled?' you ask. The anti-folk-songites will say it is the collective leg of the folk-song enthusiasts, and there is ground for the view; but I fancy there are other butts too. Something, however, may be said for the theory that there is no satire at all, but that the song is just a little bit of nonsense thrown off by the English Stravinsky just to see what folk will make of it. Anyway, butt or no butts, it will raise a roar in the hands of the right singer and player.

Reginald Steggall's 'Villanelle' ('The winnowers of corn invoke the winds'), the text by Percy Allen from the French of du Bellay, is extremely difficult, especially for the pianist; the almost fantastic degree of difficulty does not seem to be called for by the words, and yields no fair return to the performers.

Herbert Bedford's 'Night Piece' ('The Dancer') is for medium voice, strings, and bass triangle. Some loss is no doubt involved by the arrangement for pianoforte (done by the composer). It belongs to the scena family, and calls for a singer able to deliver it 'tensely' (the term is used twice), 'as if under torture,' 'contemptuously,' and 'in a changed manner.' The voice-part is mainly declamatory, and the accompaniment highly coloured with (presumably) oriental effects.

(Continued on page 916.)

TO THE LADY MARY TREFUSIS

Truth

UNISON SONG FOR MASSED VOICES

Words by BEN JONSON

Music by GEOFFREY SHAW

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED; NEW YORK: THE H. W. GRAY CO., SOLE AGENTS FOR THE U.S.A.

Maestoso. With dignity

PIANO

f

con Ped.

The piano introduction is in 3/4 time, marked Maestoso. With dignity. It features a right-hand melody starting on a half note G4, followed by quarter notes A4, B4, C5, and a half note B4. The left hand provides harmonic support with chords and single notes, including a half note G3 and a half note F3. The piece is marked f and includes a con Ped. (con sordina) instruction.

mf

Truth is the trial . . . of it - self, And needs no oth - er

The first line of the song is in 3/4 time, marked mf. The vocal melody begins on a half note G4, followed by quarter notes A4, B4, C5, and a half note B4. The piano accompaniment consists of chords and single notes, including a half note G3 and a half note F3. The lyrics are "Truth is the trial . . . of it - self, And needs no oth - er".

touch, And pu - rer than the pu - rest gold, Re - fine it ne'er so

The second line of the song is in 3/4 time, marked mf. The vocal melody begins on a half note G4, followed by quarter notes A4, B4, C5, and a half note B4. The piano accompaniment consists of chords and single notes, including a half note G3 and a half note F3. The lyrics are "touch, And pu - rer than the pu - rest gold, Re - fine it ne'er so".

Copyright, 1924, by Novello and Company, Limited much. It is the life and light on love, The sun that ev - er shi - neth, And spi - rit of that spe - cial grace, That faith and love de - fi - neth. . . . . e

It is the war - rant of the word That yields . . so sweet a scent, As gives . . a . .

cres.

cres.

This system contains the first two staves of music. The vocal line is in G major, 4/4 time, with lyrics 'word That yields . . so sweet a scent, As gives . . a . .'. The piano accompaniment consists of two staves. The right hand plays chords and moving lines, while the left hand plays a bass line. Both piano parts are marked with a crescendo (cres.).

power to faith . . . to tread All false . . hood .

ff rit.

f ff rit.

This system contains the next two staves of music. The vocal line continues with lyrics 'power to faith . . . to tread All false . . hood .'. The piano accompaniment continues with two staves. The right hand has a forte (f) dynamic, and the left hand has a fortissimo (ff) dynamic. Both piano parts are marked with a ritardando (rit.).

un - der feet.

This system contains the final two staves of music. The vocal line concludes with the lyrics 'un - der feet.'. The piano accompaniment continues with two staves, featuring a series of chords and arpeggiated figures in both hands, ending with a double bar line.

(Continued from page 912.)

'The Shropshire Lad' has been so drawn on by composers that it is surprising to find one of the poems now being set for the first time, apparently. It is that grim set of verses 'The Carpenter's Son' ('Here the hangman stops his cart'). Perhaps composers have felt that the lines do not call for musical setting, or even for recitation; they belong to the large body of poetry that is best read to oneself. However, C. W. Orr has ventured on a song setting, and, granted his point of view, he has made a striking thing of it. I mention the point of view because he has gone to work on lines the fitness of which may be questioned. One's first idea of a musical setting would be that it should reflect the terrible simplicity of the words. (Butterworth might have worked on these lines.) Mr. Orr, however, has gone 'all out' with a liberal use of dissonance and big chords. He has hit on a fine idea in the march-like theme, and works it well. His setting gives us a good deal of the pity and terror of the scene, but one feels that music can do nothing to fit the bitter whimsey of such lines as

Oh, at home had I but stayed
'Prenticed to my father's trade . . .
Then I might have built, perhaps,
Gallow-trees for other chaps,
Never dangled on my own.

A dramatic tenor with a big voice, backed up by a fine pianist, could make a striking and harrowing thing of this song. Less good are two other songs by Mr. Orr from the 'Shropshire Lad'—'Tis time, I think, by Wenlock Town' and 'Loveliest of trees.' The first has an angular melody overloaded with fat chords and consecutive ninths—wearying in any case, and quite out of the picture here. 'Loveliest of trees' is too sophisticated. Mr. Orr does better in dealing with a stanza from the Chinese by Arthur Waley—'Plucking the rushes,' which has a well-written and effective pianoforte part.

Poldowski has gone to William Blake for a couple of songs—not a good choice, judging by results. In 'My silks and fine array' the idiom is that of the Lutenist composers, and there is an air of affectation about it. Some awkward misprints have got through. A sharp is missing from the bass C in the first bar, and another in the alto C in the last bar of the first page; and surely the last note of the voice-part in bar 2 should be C, not A? It is C in the corresponding passage at the close, and there seems to be no reason for any difference. Moreover, the effect of the A is very harsh. 'Reeds of Innocence' is the rather affected title given to the familiar 'Piping down the valleys wild.' There are happy touches here, as well as some harshnesses that seem quite inappropriate. On the whole the setting has not the right simplicity. The composer is far more successful in two songs with French text—'La Passante' and Verlaine's 'J'ai peur d'un baiser.' The latter for some reason appears with an English title ('A poor young shepherd') but without an English translation. Perhaps this is an oversight.

Of outstanding excellence are 'Six Shakespeare Songs,' by Mario Castelnuovo-Tedesco, issued in two sets of three. Some time ago a former set of six were highly praised in these columns, and one need pay this second set no higher compliment than to say that it is as good as the first. The composer does all sorts of things that are vaguely called 'modern,' but he does them so naturally that they convince, not only on their own account but also in relation to the text. The songs call for a highish voice, and it need hardly be said that only a first-rate pianist can do justice to the subtleties of the accompaniment. The songs are (Book 1) 'Sigh no more,' 'Seals of love' ('Take, O take, those lips away'), and 'O mistress mine'; the companion set being 'Orpheus with his lute,' 'Silvia' ('Who is Silvia?'), and 'For the rain it raineth every day' ('When that I was and a little tiny boy').

CURWEN

Among the songs recently issued by this firm, are some good examples by Armstrong Gibbs. He generally has something to offer in the way of a tune, and as a rule he does not overload his accompaniments. In most of the songs under notice he has gone for his text to the poet with whom he seems to have a special affinity—Walter de la Mare. I like best 'The Sleeping Beauty' and 'The Tiger-Lily'—the latter a poignant setting of lines by Dorothy Pleydell Bouverie, 'At night in black Gethsemane Our Lord was praying there.' In both these the unusual harmony used at times is in the picture, and so justifies itself. But in 'The Galliass,' what is the point of opening with a chord of D minor in the right hand against a chord of C minor in the left? And the use of the same ugly effect at the word 'sleep' later seems even less happy. There are beautiful touches in 'Lullaby,' as well as some effective rhythmic variety. 'The Little Salamander' calls for quick, light singing and playing; here again the freakish, picturesque harmony is in place. 'When I was young and twenty' (Housman) is perhaps too simple and rather too consciously in folk-song style, and the close seems to call for something more than the very plain cadence. 'Neglected Moon,' one of the best songs in Mr. Gibbs's 'Midsummer Madness,' has been issued separately.

Roy Agnew's 'Dirge' (Shelley's 'Rough wind that moanest loud') and 'Sorrow' (Tennyson), are depressing essays with more heavy, lumpish chords and uglinesses than are necessary, surely. I have seen pianoforte pieces by this composer that show a far better aptitude than these songs. A couple of songs by E. J. Moeran are notable for a skilful handling of original harmony. (The words are by Robert Bridges.) 'When June is come' has a folk-song-like tune with some delightful and unexpected modulations. 'Spring goeth all in white' shows a delicate touch. Is its wistful feeling quite in keeping with this exquisite little poem of spring? Be that as it may, there is real beauty in both songs.

A very striking bit of work is Gordon Bryan's 'Phantom.' The phantom is a ship, and the passing and disappearance of the uncanny vessel that goes steadily on despite the absence of wind and crew is tellingly depicted. Perhaps it would have been even better without the ff climax in the middle. The sense of mystery is to some extent lessened by this outburst. But it is a fine song, calling for a couple of good performers.

Percival Garratt has chosen some ugly words in 'Gettin' off':

Oi've never done no courtin' yet,
Though Oi be seventeen;
Our Lizzie's got a boy, you bet—
Oi think it's awful mean, &c.

However, a young feller 'eaves a plumstone at 'er 'at, and 'its 'er on the ear (arpeggios in contrary motion), so she titters and reckons she'll be walkin' out soon. There is little real humour and point in the words, and the music seems to be cleverness misapplied.

Herrick's 'Fair Daffodills' has been musicked so often that a new setting is a kind of challenge. George Oldroyd's effort is over-luxurious. Should not the simplicity of the text be expressed in the music? It is a pity this composer is developing a habit of overloading his scores, not only with notes and accidentals, but also with directions. His 'To a Snowflake' (Francis Thompson), for example, averages about six directions per bar, which is at least five too many. Performers might be credited with a little imagination! And it ought to be sufficient to state at the beginning, 'Freely.' Instead, we have 'With absolute freedom.' Is there such a thing?

Herrick is better served by Ralph Greaves in his setting of 'The Maypole is up'—a texture of the right lightness. But it needs courage in these days of small families (or no families) to sing the injunction with which the frank old poet ends.

Some additions to the 'Unaccompanied Songs' series have to be noted: Herbert Bedford's 'The Unlessoned Lover' (Herrick), 'A Corner in the Garden' (Malcolm Mackenzie), and 'If music be the food of love'; Eugene Bonner's 'Prayer to the Wind' (Ion Swinley); and a couple by Frederic Austin—'Wanderers' (de la Mare) and 'The Song of Soldiers' (de la Mare). Of these the two by Mr. Austin strike one as being most effective. The rest meander far too much. Mr. Bedford's tortured excursion with Shakespeare's lines, for example, must be seen to be believed. Mr. Bedford is responsible also for a version of Giulio Caccini's 'Deh, deh, dove son fuggiti,' to which he has provided an English text.

'Snatches and Catches' is the title of an album of unaccompanied songs by Harry Farjeon. The words are charming little poems from Eleanor Farjeon's 'Tunes of a Penny Piper.' Some of the settings go a good way toward converting one to the unaccompanied song idea, e.g., 'For Easter,' in which the tune and rhythm are so delightful that the thing seems complete. But when either rhythm or tonality become vague, as they do here and there in some of the other songs, the listener starts mentally supplying the pianoforte background that appears to have been forgotten. Only folk-song, or essays in that style, seem fitted for unaccompanied singing.

ELKIN

Granville Bantock's 'Songs of Childhood' are settings of poems by Graham Robertson. There are three (published separately): 'Babyland,' 'Lullabye,' and 'Dream Merchandise.' All are simple and singable, but with the streak of common-place that unfortunately shows itself in so much of the composer's recent work.

Cyril Scott's 'The Garden of Memory' (Rosamund Marriott Watson) is a characteristic effort, and will please the Scottites just as much as it will irritate the rest of us, who are tired of everlasting ninths and other conventional features.

M. van Someren-Godfery's 'Snow' (Alfred Austin) suggests the monotony called for by the text, but the actual musical interest is slender. This is one of the numerous cases where the composer has to depict monotony without letting his medium become monotonous in the sense of being featureless. In 'The Ballad of Semmerwater' (a North-country legend by William Watson), Mr. Godfery seems to go to the other extreme in his efforts to be descriptive and dramatic. It would be too sweeping to say that he has failed, but a simpler scheme would probably have been more convincing. This is partly due to some signs of lack of skill in handling his material.

Eric Fogg is tuneful and rather ordinary in a setting of Keats's 'The Dove,' and Dorothy Glass's 'Nocturne' belongs to the class that lies between the ballad and the so-called 'art-song,' leaning towards the former in some sentimental touches of melody and harmony, and to the latter in a few rather 'precious' touches such as the close, in which the key-chord C has the fashionable submediant tacked on.

George Oldroyd's 'Tresses' (Browning) has its moments, but like his songs mentioned above, it gives an impression of being a bit fussy and pretentious, bristling, as it does in places, with more or less unnecessary advice to the performers.

It is with pleasure that one comes across such a song as Michael Mulliner's 'To Daffodils'—yet one more setting of Herrick's familiar lines; it has the right simplicity and directness without commonplace or affectation. There are many happy touches—e.g., the occasional changes of rhythm—and the accompaniment (largely in three-part harmony) is delightful.

ENOCH

The songs composed by Sir Edward Elgar for the Pageant of Empire have been issued by this firm—'The Islands' (a Song of New Zealand), 'Shakespeare's Kingdom,' 'The Blue Mountains' (A Song of Australia), 'Sailing Westward,' 'The Heart of Canada,' and 'Merchant Adventurers.' The words are by Alfred Noyes. These show the popular side of the composer somewhat below its best. In 'The Blue Mountains' it is a good way below the mark—in fact, had I not seen Sir Edward's name on its title-page I should have ascribed it to one of the feeblers among our 'best-sellers.' The rest of the batch have good singable tunes, with the familiar Elgarian hall-mark in some passage or other.

Landon Ronald's 'Pastels'—a set of five songs—and his 'Wander-thirst' are what we expect from his practised hand—nothing original, and nothing ineffective: clever balladry, in short.

NOVELLO

Three songs calling for notice are reprints—the tenor solo, 'The Song of the Sickle,' from Mackenzie's 'Dream of Jubal'; 'Softly sighing,' from 'Der Freischütz'; and 'Pour out thy heart,' from Molique's 'Abraham.' The last-named is for tenor, and is a flowing, grateful song, worthy of a place beside the best of Mendelssohn's oratorio airs of the same type—with which, indeed, its material and style have a good deal in common. The accompaniment lends itself easily to the organ, so the number should be a good addition to the not over-large stock of songs suitable for use at recitals.

Of 'The Year's at the Spring,' the latest and one of the best of the many settings is that of Ivor Atkins, which had its first performance at the Hereford Festival. The accompaniment, with its numerous trills—some in the inner parts—calls for a good pianist, and appears to have been conceived orchestrally. But it can be made very effective on the keyboard. The compass suits a mezzo-soprano.

PAXTON

Josef Holbrooke has made a queer choice of words in Ezra Pound's 'The Tea-Shop Girl' ('The girl in the tea-shop is not so beautiful as she was . . .

She does not get upstairs so eagerly. Yes, she also will turn middle-aged,' &c.). There is a part for clarinet obbligato.

John Foulds has written music for use with a recitation of Poe's 'The Tell-Tale Heart.' It is appropriately significant and lurid in colour, and should be highly effective, especially in the orchestral version. W. H. Griffiths's 'Daily Studies in Singing' consist of thirty-six exercises in three series—elementary, intermediate, and advanced. From the first emphasis is laid on the use of all the vowel sounds instead of limiting the student to Ah, and the exercises are interspersed with good, practical advice. The collection is not large, but, as Mr. Griffiths says, a great mass of exercises is not necessary; a few used with care and thought will produce better results than volumes merely run through.

W. MAURICE SENART

Reginald C. Robbins appears to have composed about forty songs, four of which have been received for review—'Ode to Duty,' 'Evening,' 'The Great Misgiving,' and stanzas from the 'Ode in May,' the words of the first being from Wordsworth, and the remainder from Sir William Watson. Mr. Robbins makes no concessions to singer or player. The voice-parts are angular, with wide-striding intervals and a big compass; there is little melodic appeal, and the rhythm is often stiff; the accompaniments are crudely laid out, and lack design. The faults quite outweigh the occasional striking points. One is sorry to have to be so damping in regard to work so clearly that of an earnest composer aiming high.

H. G.

WAGNER AND RICHTER

BY A. KALISCH

The long-expected letters written by Wagner to Richter have now been published by Paul Szolnay, of Berlin and Vienna, with a preface by Ludwig Karpath, who was an old friend of Dr. Richter and his family.

They are a hundred in number, and date from April 26, 1868, to January 28, 1883—a little more than a fortnight before Wagner's death.

The correspondence is supremely interesting, not because it contains anything that is wildly sensational or will change our views on any of the important things which made musical history during those fifteen years, but because it throws a light on the personality of Wagner. As the Editor says, it is a human document of the rarest quality. We are allowed to hear Wagner talking quite openly and frankly, from heart to heart, in every kind of mood. It used to be said that the relationship between the two men was something like that between Wotan and Brunnhilde, to whom he communicated his 'inmost knowledge.' One can understand when one reads the books, the charm that Wagner exercised on all with whom he came into contact, far better than from his full-dress prose works in which he addressed the world and posterity. One thing that makes for enjoyment is that the sentences are mostly short, and the style is lucid, sometimes colloquial. The letters show, too, what a high-souled man Richter was, how noble his ideals, and how unswerving his devotion to his master.

We can trace step by step how the relations between the two gradually grew more intimate. The gradual change in the forms of address is interesting.

The first event of importance that is discovered is the resignation of Richter from his post at Munich, in 1869, rather than conduct an imperfectly prepared performance of 'Rheingold.' It was an act of self-sacrifice such as can be expected from few young men at the outset of a career. Wagner's letters on the subject give the lie to the idea that he accepted all kinds of sacrifices as a matter of course, and never thought of gratitude. His solicitude for Richter's future at that time was more than fatherly, and his acts showed that he meant what he said. In one letter he writes, 'When I am Pope you shall be an Archbishop' (note that he did not say, 'If ever I am Pope').

There are a good many interesting things about the idea of costumes for the 'Ring.' It is curious to note that he wished Wotan to wear his Wanderer's hat in 'Rheingold.' He changed his mind, however, for at the first Bayreuth performance (a note of Herr Karpath tells us) it was not worn. He insists that the costumes must be Germanic and not classical, and is particularly anxious that Fafner and Fasolt should not look like 'the wild men in a Prussian escutcheon.' Seemingly, however, it is impossible to prevent it.

It is good to know that he was very anxious that at Bayreuth the physique of every artist should be ideally suited to the character he or she represented. Not everybody will agree with the Editor when he says that at Bayreuth this ideal has always been realised.

In a letter dated August 13, 1869, there is a passage which, in view of all that Wagner has said and written elsewhere, is frankly surprising. Writing of 'Rheingold,' he says:

In the whole performance I can only have one thing in my mind, the score must be performed correctly, well, and with spirit. Scenery, dramatic talent—all that I waive: but the music must be flawless, for then the chief thing is safe. I should have been best pleased if the whole performance had taken place without scenery and costumes.

Those who want to see how Wagner could scold will not be disappointed. His choicest invective—and it can be very choice—is reserved for the 'abject' (niederträchtig) Germans, and there is a delightful passage in which he says that the usual way of choosing an 'Intendant' seems to be to look for the biggest ass in the country. Wagner's own word is 'stupidest,' but that German word means a good deal more than our comparatively mild 'stupid.'

There is a passage on a widely different subject which gives much food for reflection. After saying that the greatest singers can speak their words beautifully without being conscious of any special method, he goes on:

It is just this fact that has filled me with such apprehension in all the attempts I have known to treat these matters in accordance with a definite method. Why have all these teachers whose theories sound so seductive and so true never, never been able to point to a success? Because they believe that their method does everything, and especially that it must take a pupil who has no talent just as far as those who have talent. What is the consequence? The man who has talent runs away from the teacher and laughs at him. With luck the man without talent really learns this speech, but, it does not sound, it is not speech. At best parrot's speech. . . . It is the lesser or greater degree of soundness in the methods that is responsible for so many pronounced failures, but the great rarity of true talent.

This was written in 1870, at a time when Richter was assisting his mother, who was a teacher of singing. He says further that it is no good flattering oneself that one can teach what only nature can give, and instances the case of his housemaid, who, he feels, would have been a real singer could she have had any training.

There are more than a few allusions to the press campaigns against Wagner, which seem to have been conducted in a peculiarly mean way. A favourite device was to circulate stories to the effect that Richter had abandoned the intention of conducting 'The Ring,' because he found it impossible; because the more he studied it the less he liked it; because he found Wagner too exacting, and so forth. All these stories, it is hardly necessary to say, were pure inventions.

In conclusion, there is one sentence which it will delight Mr. Chesterton (and hundreds of lesser men) to read. Wagner was always running out of beer, and asking Richter to get it for him. In one place he ends a passionate appeal with the words, 'Get me the beer, or my inspiration will run dry.'

The Musician's Bookshelf

'A Dictionary of Modern Music and Musicians.'

[Dent, 35s.]

A book of this kind has been needed for a long time, and during the past few years, with their almost feverish activity in some departments of music, the need has become urgent. A powerful editorial committee is responsible for the work—Sir Hugh Allen, Prof. Granville Bantock, Mr. Edward J. Dent, and Sir Henry Wood, with Dr. Eaglefield Hull as general editor. The foreign side of such a dictionary, always important, is even more so to-day, when the lines of intercommunication between the British and Continental musical worlds, broken by the war, have not yet been fully repaired. Not only is there a lot of lee-way to make up in the matter of information; the war threw into prominence several nationalities hitherto little-known, and some of these—above all, perhaps, the group that make up Czecho-Slovakia—show great activity in all departments of music. The highest praise must go to the Dictionary for the comprehensive way in which it has met the situation. Some thirty sub-committees and sub-editors were organized, and the ground surveyed so thoroughly that the expression 'from China to Peru' at once comes to mind. And it is nearly the literal truth; for 'China' say 'Japan,' and you have it. The contributors number over a hundred. (About the same number were concerned in the 1910 'Grove'.)

Comprehensiveness is a virtue in a book of reference, so it would be captious to complain of the inclusion of a few dozen composers whose significance is of the slightest. It is to be assumed that there are folk curious as to the birth-date of the composer of, say, 'A little grey home in the west,' so he finds a place here. Still, if he, why not scores more of writers of songs no better and no worse? The problem of whom to omit must have exercised the committee no less than the kindred one of inclusion. The backward line has been drawn at about 1880—a good choice on the whole. This brings in the fag-end of the activities of such men as Stainer, Barnby, Steggall, and others of a school now under a cloud. Whatever views one may hold as to the compositions of these men, there can be no denying the importance of their work in educational and other directions. It would not be difficult to give a list of less useful men of that period whose names are included. Among living musicians whose claims have been overlooked are John E. West and Walter Hedgcock. Seeing that the net has been cast so wide as to include composers of indifferent songs, one is surprised to find it missing such excellent all-round musicians as these.

Ought a dictionary of living composers to concern itself much with criticism? There is a lot to be said for both 'Yes' and 'No.' Nevertheless, many readers will feel that this volume contains too much adulation and too many sweeping statements—e.g., 'The most trusted musician in Britain'; 'has the largest following of all the English music critics'; 'the perfection of her playing of works of the old masters has never been equalled'; 'the most popular contralto in Britain of the present day,' &c. These are pronouncements of a type that should have no place in any book of reference, for the good reason that they state as a fact what is merely enthusiastic supposition—the kind of thing that will pass in conversation but not in print.

The article on choral societies is curiously proportioned. If the amount of space given to the various countries is to be taken as a guide, England shows far less activity in this way than Spain, Czecho-Slovakia, Canada, France, and the United States—indeed, the last-named country has about three times as much as any of the others. Yet if we are to believe the American musical papers, choralism is one of the weak spots in that country's music. Among the London choirs we miss those of the two Palaces, Alexandra and Crystal, both of which have done steady, good work for many years past. An article of the kind should either deal with the various nations' choralism in a general way, or should give a really inclusive list with, as far as possible, the names of secretaries. The latter would be a very valuable feature for purposes of reference.

It is in some ways a pity that the article on 'The Gramophone in Musical Culture' was entrusted to an enthusiastic amateur rather than to one of the large number of prominent musicians who make regular use of the instrument in their work. Mr. Compton Mackenzie, who writes the article, makes some curious statements, leading off with an analogy that will not bear looking into: 'The gramophone in musical culture will contribute as much to musical education as the printing press has contributed to the spread of knowledge.' He says, too, that 'the average man . . . begins by disliking the sound of an orchestra.' If this be so, the crowds who listen contentedly to the orchestras at restaurants and cinemas must be made up of exceptional people. Surely the reverse is the case. The average man takes to the orchestra at once because of its immense variety in colour and power, whereas he is coy in regard to the string quartet, where the contrasts are too subtle for his ear. And unless the music played on it be frankly of the type that appeals to him at once he is not keen about such a (to him) monochrome affair as the pianoforte. Mr. Mackenzie suggests that he may be lured into liking the 'orchestra and great music by the bait of 'such melodies as the Andante from the C minor Symphony of Beethoven,' arranged for cornet solo. This is not a good choice, for the Andante is not a melody of the type that would capture the uninitiated—in fact, it has only slender claims to be regarded as a first-rate tune. Mr. Mackenzie considers that the gramophone is very successful in reproducing brass. I doubt if many gramophonists will agree with him. I have never yet heard any brass tone that did not come out shorn of most of its nobility, the trumpets especially; they almost always sound as if muted—of all orchestral tones the poorest, and useless, save for special effects. It was rash and hardly fair of the writer to name specimen records as showing the gramophone at its best. Such pronouncements are not only matters of taste and opinion, but also depend a good deal on the type of gramophone and needle used. And to wind up by saying that 'the best surface on records is the Columbia's' is misleading, and may in the course of a few months be contrary to fact. How does Mr. Mackenzie know that long before a new edition of this Dictionary appears, one of the companies will not produce a surface far better even than the Columbia's?—which, let me hasten to admit, is very good indeed. Moreover, mere surface excellence must not be over-rated. I have heard records so good that a somewhat noisy surface mattered little; on the other hand, more than one Columbia orchestral record, despite that excellent surface, is poor in clearness and colour. Records have to be judged as a whole.

Dr. Eaglefield Hull's article on Josef Holbrooke contains a comment that had been better omitted: 'He is a writer of great vigour, and regularly and fearlessly engages in exposing the futility of newspaper criticism as at present practised.' One would have thought that if there is a department in Mr. Holbrooke's activities on which it would be kind to remain silent it is just this 'regular and fearless' war on the critics, who, instead of being chastened, are disgracefully amused. Mr. Holbrooke is 'a writer of great vigour' only in the sense that an abusive cabby is an orator of great vigour. Dr. Hull's implication that newspaper criticism as at present practised is futile comes oddly from one who himself does a good bit in that line; and it runs counter to his own warmly appreciative articles on Newman, Colles, Evans, and other critics.

Among the many articles of value and interest must be mentioned specially that of Sir Henry Wood, on 'Orchestral Colour and Values.' A small syndicate is responsible for an interesting survey of the present harmonic position; this is copiously illustrated. But why does the syndicate quote as an example of polytonality such a puerility as this from Stravinsky's 'Les Cinq Doigts'?

where we are told the polytonal effect is obtained 'through empirical means in counterpoint.' If such high-sounding means, employed even by a Stravinsky, can give us nothing better than such infantile results as this, the future of polytonality is not very bright.

Readers of the Musical Times will not need to be told of the zest and conviction with which Mr. Edwin Evans has fulfilled his task of writing on Bax, Goossens, and others of the young British school. Model articles in their sanity and style are those of Mr. Calvocoressi on Liszt and Mr. Herbert Howells on Stanford. (It is a pity Mr. Howells does so little in musical literature.) One assumes that Mr. Edward German was given the task of writing the Sullivan article on the strength of his being regarded as the musical successor of that composer. But the qualification does not prevent the article from being a rather feebly-written panegyric couched in terms that would be lavish applied to far greater composers than Sullivan.

It is good to learn from the General Editor's Preface that the publishers have undertaken to keep the type standing so that the Dictionary may be brought up to date in successive editions. It should take a place that can never be filled by a work on the scale of 'Grove,' which has to deal with the past to such an extent that its bulk and comprehensiveness make frequent editions impossible. A one-volume work such as this, limiting itself in date, and concentrating on contemporary subjects, will be of immense value. It has made an excellent start, most of the defects being of a type that are inevitable in a new venture. With a little pruning away here and there, and a touching-up of the literary side of some of the articles written by authorities who are musicians first and writers a very long way afterwards, the work will develop into one of the most valuable in the musician's library. It should be added that the book is slightly larger than a volume of 'Grove'; it contains 544 pages; the arrangement of its matter seems to be all that can be desired; and print, paper, and binding are first-rate. H. G.

'Chats on Big and Little Fiddles.' By Madame Olga Racster.

[T. Werner Laurie, Ltd.]

This new edition, largely rewritten and revised, ought to appeal to a fairly large public. The age has a decided weakness for 'chats'; it likes knowledge in well-coated, well-sugared pills; small doses to be taken at any odd, convenient moment. That is no doubt the reason why most dailies have their office window through which some Londoner—or, more likely, Scotsman—surveys the world in the manner of Ancient Pistol: 'The world is mine oyster which I with my pen will open.' These gentlemen have a wide choice—the statesman and his errors, the politician and his vanities; the theatrical agent who will give so much in exchange for so little; the agitator, the striker, the tax collector; the capitalist, the scientist, the artist, the charlatan; they all come at some time or other within their field of observation. The writer on violins turns, of necessity, to a much more limited public. It is not only that love of instruments is the exception while dislike of taxation is general; the fact is that even of those who do care for violins there are many who would regard a joke or a story about their beloved instruments as something little short of heresy. I cannot imagine Tarisio enjoying a joke about his travels in search of old fiddles. I am sure my friend, the late S. T., who fondled fiddles like babies, would have rebuked my flippancy if I had seen anything funny about an ill-treated Stradivari. The race of fiddle-makers, so far as my experience goes, is like the race of fishermen, 'their heart fit for contemplation.' But this second edition is evident proof that a public exists which can relish a good story—even about fiddles.

Some of the episodes told by Madame Racster are now family jokes. We have all heard the tale of George III., the amateur 'cellist, who asked Handel for a criticism of his playing. 'Played like a Brince, your Royal Highness,' answered the courtly composer. Less known is the story of the two rogues who cheated a pawnbroker of a considerable sum of money. The first pawned the fiddle; the second offered to buy it for a fantastic sum while it was not for sale, but so belated the instrument that when the time came the pawnbroker bought it himself, and discovered soon after that the fiddle was worthless. The rogues of course had disappeared. This is a good tale, and points a very extraordinary moral. Apparently pawnbrokers themselves are apt to be led astray by the extraordinary fascination of a 'find' amongst fiddles. The only connoisseur who actually did find a Stradivari in Tottenham Court Road for a few shillings is Sherlock Holmes, but I very much doubt whether anyone else not endowed with that horrible habit of crawling about the floor on all fours could possibly equal such an achievement. Imitation Stradivaris, on the other hand, are not rare. And Madame Racster tells of the pseudo Stradivari owned by the Duke of Cambridge, and later by a Manchester merchant on whose death it was sold for £370. The inexplicable thing to me in this is how a maker whose work commanded such respect came to hide his light under the more brilliant light of another. But perhaps the labels were changed by an astute broker. Not long ago I was visited by a gentleman with a fiddle labelled Stradivari, and anxious to know the current prices for such wares. He was not a little shocked when I told him that to the best of my ability the value of his violin could only be determined by an examination of the current prices for firewood.

Thus with the help of anecdotes—historic, ben trovati, good, and indifferent—the author takes us very pleasantly through the pages of her volume, even though the general arrangement is far from ideal. Surely it was not necessary to touch upon the fog of London and the French Revolution before introducing us to Mr. Handel in the South Kensington Museum, and it is a little fatiguing after seeing an instrument safe in the hands of Herr Hugo Becker or Mr. W. E. Whitehouse to track another to its birthplace at Grancino's workshop at Milan. The love and knowledge of the subject which Madame Racster displays in these pages could be very usefully employed in an exhaustive life of Tarisio, which has yet to be written. The many anecdotes about him in the works of Madame Racster and others can only whet our appetite for a more complete study of this first collector of genius who thought nothing of a journey across half Europe if at the end there was the back or belly of a Stradivari.

B. V.

'Outlines of Musical Form, with Analyses from well-known Works.' By Albert Ham.

[Novello, 5s.]

Dr. Ham adopts the catechism form—a good plan for a subject of this kind. He seems to be asking himself: 'What are the likeliest questions to be put (a) by examiners, (b) by keen, intelligent students?' Having decided, he asks the questions, and provides clear, exhaustive answers. This method covers the ground more thoroughly than would be possible in an ordinary treatise of the same size. One might well write a book on any subject—above all, on one so wide in range as musical form, with its excursions into the fields of rhythm and harmony—and yet contrive to miss a good many points of the examination type, partly because some would be too obvious, and others too loosely connected. In this primer of just over a hundred pages little seems to have been missed. The twenty-three chapters deal fully with all the various forms, from symphony to modern dances, with sections also on imitation, canon, fugue, various types of vocal music, key-relationship, cadences, barring, modulation, &c. As an example of Dr. Ham's practical method, see how, for illustrations of poetic feet, he chooses words that the student will easily remember, thus:

A trochee has an accented syllable followed by an unaccented one — — as Elgar.

An Amphibrach has two unaccented syllables with an accented syllable between them — — — as Pinsuti.

And so forth, calling in the aid of 'Lemare,' 'Harmony,' and 'Violin' for other definitions.

No book of the kind can be expected to be free from slips in its first edition, so it may be helpful to point out the few that have come to light. In the specimens of cadences two are given as 'Pathetic,' the first of which is this, from the 'Funeral March' in Beethoven's Op. 26:

This is not a 'pathetic' cadence, the sixth not being a Neapolitan. (On p. 13 it is explained that this form of sixth is an essential ingredient.) A quotation on p. 16 is described as being from Bach's Organ Passacaglia, whereas it is from the Fugue following that work—a small point, but not unimportant to the non-organ-playing student who sets out to examine the context of the quotation. On p. 25 the word 'cadenza' is used in the sense of cadence; the Italian form of the word is now so generally confined to the cadenza in concertos, &c., that it seems a pity to confuse the student by using it when the cadential sense is intended. In speaking of sonata form we are told that Brahms is, perhaps, the only modern composer who has maintained the high standard set by Beethoven, and it is implied that nobody else has made any advance on the structural side. This is surely an extreme view. Thus, Dr. Ham, as an organist, is no doubt well aware that of Rheinberger's twenty Sonatas all but a few of the early ones are structurally up to the Beethoven average; moreover, in some cases Rheinberger has made a real contribution to the structure by his combination of fugue and sonata forms. In speaking of the scherzo, its descent from the minuet is noted. It might be worth while telling the student that Bach includes one in his A minor Partita. In a foot-note on p. 78 it is said that concertos are sometimes written for more than one solo instrument, and reference is made to examples by Beethoven, Brahms, &c., and to the fact that Mozart wrote one for two pianofortes. The student would be interested to hear that Bach went several better by writing three concertos for two claviors, two for three claviors, and one for four claviors and orchestra, besides others for more than one solo instrument.

The value of a text-book of this kind depends largely on its containing plenty of well-chosen music-type illustrations. Here there are well over a hundred, some of them lengthy. The complete Beethoven sonata movements analysed include the Allegro of the E major, Op. 14, No. 1, the Presto of the D major, Op. 10, No. 3, and the Finale of the 'Pathétique.' There is a copious index. In all respects this is an admirable little work, with no waste, no hiatus of a serious nature, handy in size, and with a practical scheme well carried through.

H. G.

'Greek Themes in Modern Musical Settings.' By Albert Stanley.

[The Macmillan Co., 4s.]

Volume 15 of the magnificent Humanistic Series, produced by the University of Michigan, is devoted to Greek themes in modern music, by Albert Stanley. It contains the music written for the Michigan University performances of Greek, Latin, and pseudo-Greek plays, with a full explanation of the composer's aims and intentions. There is also a chapter on the dances and movements of the chorus, by Herbert Kenyon, and another on the necessary costumes for such plays, by Orma Butler.

The production of a Greek play always reopens the question as to whether we ought to attempt to reproduce the modes and simplicity of ancient Greek music, or whether we should use the resources of to-day. In theory Mr. Stanley advocates the former, but in practice he fortunately disagrees with his own opinion—rightly, for it is impossible for us of the present day to ignore the experience of a thousand years. Our ears, trained to appreciate the emotional power of harmony, will never thrill to the sound of a single flute, as doubtless the Greeks did in the year 400 B.C. To what extent the setting of a Greek play should draw upon all the resources of modern harmony is another question. It is certainly a shock to find the composer, who advocates and uses the modal method with great charm in 'Sapho,' descend to the use of nerveless ninths in 'Alcestis.'

In his accompaniments Mr. Stanley has been unfortunately more faithful to the classic tradition than in his choral writing. He has limited his orchestra to two flutes, two clarinets, and two harps, which instruments are supposed to be the nearest approach to the ancient orchestra. This is surely a mistake. If once you have allowed your chorus to break into modern choral effects, the accompaniments of these six instruments will sound miserably thin and inadequate. And, as the composer says that these settings were intended to meet the conditions obtaining in the majority of Colleges and Universities, surely a setting for string orchestra would be far more suitable than one for two harps, which I very much doubt could be found in any University town on this side of the Atlantic, except London. Strings would be far more binding and expressive than harps, and, moreover, would represent the modern man's idea of music, because strings are to the modern man what the lyre was to the Greek.

The chapters devoted to the dances and dresses are wholly admirable, the diagrams helpful, and the photographs beautiful. In fact, the experiences of these University players must be of interest to all who are responsible for such productions. But why should this edition retain Greek words written in English characters, such as 'akone'? Where all is English, why should this one word be left untranslated? And why should the music be so full of mistakes? Moreover, though it must needs be that misprints should come, 'Harps tacet' is indeed a sorry blunder in the work of scholars upon a classical subject.

A. B.-S.

'Music for Children.' By M. Storr.

[Sidgwick & Jackson, 6s.]

This book raises anew the big question of the teaching of music in elementary schools. Its clear and enlightening ideas will help very many teachers who are not specialists in music; but the problem of how those teachers are to get the training that will enable them to apply the book's ideas is still far from a satisfying solution. The author is perfectly aware of the difficulties inherent in the present system. Musicians are divided between the inclination to place the greater part of school music work in the hands of visiting specialists (the specialist on the staff is an alternative that the authorities in these schools have not yet taken up), and the desire to keep all the child's early guidance in the control of one set of teachers, whose influence can continually be brought to bear on his work as a whole.

The importance of the correlation of music with other subjects cannot be overestimated. The old days of water-tight compartments—of mutually exclusive history and geography, of Euclid divorced from any practical application in geometry—are over, or, at least, the dividing lines are becoming obliterated. Music has lagged behind almost all other graces of knowledge. Its peculiar estimation as a 'fancy' subject was a drawback to its taking its place—a reasonable, not an exaggerated place—in the curriculum.

In working out any system of teaching music in schools, therefore, we ought to keep a good sense of proportion, and to try to find out what it is possible to teach, and how far the general teacher is now able, or may by training be made able, to apply our system. From that consideration we urgently need now to press on to find out how the teacher who is not a specialist can be trained to do that which it is possible and desirable to do in the most efficient, musicianly way—and there, of course, we must begin by remembering that not all teachers have the musician's spirit. There are still many people, excellently educated according to the older views, intelligent, and able to assimilate many kinds of specialised knowledge, who are not and never will be capable teachers of any but the most mechanical of musical work. You cannot make musicians by any amount of training; and the training in music, in many of the elementary teachers' colleges, is by no means sufficient.

Miss Storr's book aims at making the best of the present situation. She gives the results of her experience in teaching school-children to listen, and leaves her ideas with the reader to be compared with those that develop from his own experience, and to be widened and adapted as his knowledge grows or his circumstances demand. Hers are the conclusions—by no means final—of an enthusiast in whom good sense and industry are joined to an appreciation of the present limits of knowledge. Her book, she modestly says, is intended, 'to act as a spur to those who are qualified to lead, by showing exactly what help the non-professional needs.' It should enlist, then, the sympathy of all musicians.

The preparatory work recommended by Miss Storr includes free movement to rhythmic music, and teaching (by imitation) plenty of nursery rhymes and simple tunes. In further development she builds on some of the Dalcroze principles, paying tribute also to the clear-sighted and broadening labours of Mr. Stewart Macpherson.

In separate chapters the author outlines what she believes may be done in rhythmic, melodic, and harmonic training in this second stage. It may seem to some that here she insists rather too keenly on the analytical side of appreciation. This sort of thing is only dangerous in the hands of teachers who, as anxious hewers of trees, are either too dull-spirited or too devotedly technical to realise the beauty of the woods in which they work, and the vital need of sending their pupils away filled with a sense of delight in the freedom, balance, and power of great art. Again, much depends upon the quickness and intensity of the teacher's response to beauty.

In an experimental book such as this, we must not grumble if there are not elaborately detailed plans of work, schemed out minutely for each lesson, showing precisely how the parts of the subject are to be related and how presented. Miss Storr's syllabus covers merely three pages. It is, indeed, simply intended as a suggestion.

There are many careful analyses of pieces, from the simple to the complex. Mr. A. E. F. Dickinson has analysed some Beethoven Sonatas and Bach Fugues. Many musicians will feel that they would like to discuss with him a few of his conclusions, which are debatable, but they will all appreciate his care in detail.

Finally, a great value in the book is its lists of music and gramophone records that experience has taught are interesting to children. Dr. R. T. White has supplied the gramophone list. Names of publishers (and prices) are very sensibly added.

This is one of the many volumes we shall need before we come to any foundation of assured knowledge as to what it is possible for elementary school-teachers to do in dealing with music. It is to be praised as a wise and practical presentation of a musicianly-minded teacher's faith. A.

Gramophone Notes

By 'DISCUS'

COLUMBIA

I took up the records of Mozart's E flat Symphony (three 12-in. d.s.) with pleasurable anticipations that were not fully realised. The players are the London Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Weingartner, and the combination is one from which we expect much. But there is a lack of clearness about some of the record, and a good deal of it is actually dull. Some of the latter effect comes, I think, from the Allegro of the first movement being started at too slow a pace. Weingartner quickens up later, but again drags a bit when the opening subject reappears. Listening, score in hand, I got an impression that the lack of clearness is due partly to the drum being over-loud, and so blurring the middle of the texture; the chief cause, however, seems to be the poorness of the bass strings, whose figuration and scale-passages generally are muzzy. At one or two points the bass is practically inaudible. But we expect more than mere clarity in the playing of a Mozart Symphony, and it must be confessed that of the charm and life of the work we get little. The orchestral tone-colour does not come out well, and as a result we miss a lot of the delightful little contrasts between the strings and wood-wind. The slow movement comes off best in this respect, and the Finale is the most successful in the matter of spirit. There are no 'cuts.' Let us hope for more Mozart and Haydn records, at the same time praying that steps be taken to ensure a reproduction of tone-colour as good as that usually forthcoming in records of more modern orchestral works. I don't know what force is employed in recording these lightly scored works of the older classical school, but generally one has an impression that it is too big. Bearing in mind the clearness and telling tone in chamber music records, one feels that such a work as this Mozart Symphony would come off best with a couple of players to each of the string parts, except the violoncello, which might have three. Anyway, we want a better-defined bass, and a clearer, more solo-like effect in the passage-work generally.

It is tantalizing to find the qualities the Symphony record lacked present in some orchestral records of comparatively little importance. Here is a Suite by Arthur Wood, 'My Native Heath,' played by the Court Symphony Orchestra, conducted by the composer (two 10-in. d.s.). Now, Mr. Wood is not a Weingartner, and the Court Symphony Orchestra would probably be the last to claim that it is on a level with the L.S.O. Yet the fact remains that we get a far better reproduction of the various tone-colours, and on the whole more clearness.

Mr. Wood's music is slight and unoriginal, but (or 'and,' whichever you prefer) it makes pleasant hearing. The Suite consists of four short movements—'Barwick Green,' 'Bolton Abbey,' 'Knaresborough Status, or Hiring Fair,' and 'Ilkley Tarn, a Dance of the Sprites.' So we see that Mr. Wood's native heath is the county that has just carried off the championship once more.

The remaining orchestral record is of Herman Finck and his band playing Mr. Finck's 'Looking Backwards' ('Memories of Melodies we loved')—a string of tunes, or bits of tunes, that ran round the town when the middle-aged man of to-day was a bit of a lad. I suppose it is useless to expect Mr. Finck and other arrangers of such fantasias to see how much more satisfactory an effect could be got by using fewer themes and giving them a hint of development. A long series of snippets is irritating in its scrappiness. Quilter's 'Children's Overture' is an example of the kind of thing needed—just enough development to make the medley hang together. Incidentally, this Finck Fantasia shows that the melodies we used to love were in the main sentimental.

A 12-in. d.s. of the Léner Quartet playing the Adagio from Schumann's A major and the Scherzo from Mendelssohn's E minor is good, but not in the first flight of Léner achievements. A better all-round result is got by three mere Englishmen—Arthur Catterall, W. H. Squire, and William Murdoch—in the Scherzo and Trio from Schubert's Trio in B flat and the Scherzo from Arensky's Trio in D minor.

These are quite first-rate. The pianoforte tone is especially good—practically no jarring note is heard. I wish records of pianoforte solos would give such good results. But they never do. You may hear a pianist playing in an ensemble work and producing (as in this Trio) excellent tone; and yet the same player, in solo work, will give a jangling record. Why? The answer is obvious, yet there is little improvement on the pianoforte records of five years ago, despite the rosy descriptions in companies' bulletins and advertisements. A 10-in. d.-s. of Pouishnov gives us the problem in a nutshell. On one side we have him playing his own 'Petite Valse' and 'Musical Box' (two pleasant-sounding little pieces of slender significance), and on the other a Humoresque of Rachmaninov. In the former the music is quiet and the tone is good; in the latter there is a good deal of loud playing, and in practically all of it the tone is bad. It ought not to be beyond the power of this scientific age to devise a pianoforte for recording purposes—one that may be smitten and yet not jangle and blast. It would probably sound vilely in the recording-room, but that would not matter if it sounded well in the drawing-room.

Strockoff is recorded (12-in. d.-s.) playing the overworked 'Hymn to the Sun,' from 'Coq d'Or,' and a Dvorák-Kreisler Slavonic Dance. Both are excellent reproductions, but the playing of the Dance seems to be far too slow.

Only three vocal records call for notice. The best is a 12-in. d.-s. of Norman Allin singing Moussorgsky's 'The Seminarist' and Strauss's 'The Solitary One.' Both songs being unfamiliar, it is unfortunate that the words come through only fitfully. One can gather the drift of the songs, however. Both show the singer's magnificent voice to great advantage—the long-held, low notes in the Strauss song are a feature. 'The Seminarist' is a very striking bit of interpretation.

The Holme Valley Male-Voice Choir is a fine body of singers, but it is not heard to advantage in a record (10-in. d.-s.) of Vaughan Williams's arrangement of 'Down among the dead men,' and Adams's terribly threadbare 'Comrades in Arms.' There is a lack of grip and incisiveness, partly due (it seems) to rather poor management of the words.

Dame Clara Butt is recorded singing two indifferent songs—Squire's 'Just a ray of sunshine,' and Ivor Novello's 'A Page's Road Song.' In the latter the singer modifies her great voice to suggest the page, but unfortunately the result gives an impression that the youth has been drawn from a church choir trained on the most colourless lines. One almost expects to hear him switch on to Manktelow in F.

H.M.V.

This month's output includes three important instrumental works. First, there is a Brahms Symphony—No. 2, in D, played by the Albert Hall Orchestra, under Sir Landon Ronald (four 12-in. d.-s.). Brahms does not appear to be very well represented on the gramophone, apart from two or three of the 'Hungarian Dances'—which of course can be heard easily at all sorts of places from supercinemas and restaurants to Queen's Hall. Only the first Symphony is frequently played, so we may well be grateful to the Company for giving us the genial and attractive No. 2. This said, it has to be added that the record is not quite a success throughout. The opening movement and the Adagio on the whole sound confused and heavy; the third movement (Allegretto and Presto) is capital, especially the quick staccato section; and the Finale is good in general, with some passages quite first-rate. The reason for this somewhat streaky result is to be found, I think, in the scoring. One need only put on a succession of orchestral records of various kinds to be convinced that, almost without exception, the more modern composers come off best. For example, I know nothing better, so far as clarity and reproduction of tone-colour are concerned, than the H.M.V. records of 'Petrouchka' and the Vivace of the 'Pathetic' Symphony. On the other hand, most of Beethoven's orchestral music sounds dull. Even in the concert-room Brahms's scoring is apt to dissatisfy by its consistent thickness and greyness. Listening to this record, it seems evident that the classical convention of frequently doubling the flute, oboe, or clarinet in the octave below by the bassoon, and of duplicating parts in other ways, is against good recording unless the passages lie rather high and/or are unaccompanied. I believe that the scoring of practically all orchestral music is already modified slightly in the recording-room; if so, there is room for yet more courage. We want the music passed on to the best advantage, and as a rule it will be found that the clearer the record, the nearer the effect is to that intended by the composer. The case is analogous to that of the pianoforte: if the tone comes out badly on the gramophone, it is no matter to us how good it is in the recording-room. If, in order to give the gramophonist good pianoforte tone, it is necessary to use for recording purposes an instrument with dull and woolly tone, very well. The recorder's feelings are as nothing compared with those of his thousands of hearers. However, back to the Brahms: a very enjoyable set of records, especially if you have the score in your head or hand, so as to be able to make good any occasional shortcomings. Readers who wish for the pick of the bunch should get No. D 873, on one side of which appears the delightful Allegretto and Presto, and D 874, which gives the Finale.

The second important item is Schumann's 'Carnaval' in full, played by Cortôt. There are three 12-in. d.-s., and for the guidance of readers who want any special items, I mention that record 706 comprises Nos. 1-7; 707, Nos. 9-17; and 708, Nos. 18-21. Cortôt's playing is as delightful as we expect it to be, and nothing more need be added in the way of eulogy. The tone, however, comes out somewhat harshly at times. I note that in the article on the gramophone in the new 'Dictionary of Modern Music and Musicians' (Dent), Mr. Compton Mackenzie speaks with enthusiasm concerning recent improvements in the production of piano tone. I think he is unduly kind to the companies.

I have Cortôt records made four or five years ago that are better toned than the majority that have since come my way. However, we must turn a deaf ear to the uncomfortable noises, and rejoice in the recording of such playing and music as this. To students embarking on the pleasurable task of getting up the 'Carnaval,' these records will be a boon.

Thirdly, here is the Chaconne, played by Isolde Menges (two 12-in. d.-s.). I am Philistine enough to want some kind of accompaniment to this great work. Played solus, much of the interest is of a technical nature that can be appreciated only by proficient fiddlers. To the rest of us, especially those whose work lies much in the way of keyboard music, the effort of violinists to make their instrument play big chords and polyphony always seems perverse. 'Here,' we say, 'you have the perfect instrument for the delivery of melody, yet four-fifths of a violin recital are devoted to chords, part-playing, and passage-work of a type that the pianoforte can do infinitely better.' Miss Menges's playing is first-rate at the start, and not quite so good towards the end, where there is slightly faulty intonation in some of the high chords. Her fine tone is well reproduced.

Vocal records this month are of unusual interest and excellence. A 10-in. d.-s. of Chaliapin gives us the singer at the top of his form in the 'Song of Galitsky' from 'Prince Igor,' and Varlaam's song, 'In the Town of Kasan' from 'Boris Godounov.' One need not understand all that the songs are about in order to enjoy these vivid performances. The only fault that can be found is on the score of power; the volume is so great that in a small room it fairly hits one. The orchestral accompaniments are remarkably clear and full of colour—so much so that one naturally asks why they should be better than those of the Mozart Symphony and parts of the Brahms mentioned above.

One finds a melancholy interest in the 10-in. d.-s. of Caruso singing a couple of songs by E. de Curtis and S. Fucito. The music is merely so-so, but one forgets it in enjoyment of that rich, warm voice. We have heard a good deal about various tenors being the successors of Caruso; the best of them are a long way off, especially in breath control, and in ease of production where power and high notes are required.

Records of 'Shepherd, see thy horse's foaming mane' continue to be made. The best known to me is the latest—that of Robert Radford. The words come out well, and the climax is as ferocious and bloody-minded as it ought to be. I have heard no record of Radford that shows him to so much advantage. (But why does he break most of the phrases throughout?) On the other side is the other Hungarian favourite, 'Had a horse'—less striking in every way (10-in. d.-s.).

After Chaliapin, Caruso, and Radford, comes Peter Dawson, who might have made a good show in such company had his material been better. Unfortunately, he wastes his fine voice on a couple of poor songs of the patriotic type—Harriss's 'England, Land of the Free' and Byng's 'The Empire's calling.' A pity that the Imperial idea produces so little worthy music! Try to devise a programme of works inspired by the Empire, and see what blatant flap-doodle you are thrown back on after your first few items.

ÆOLIAN-VOCALION

Yet another classical Symphony—this time the G minor of Mozart. The players are the Æolian Orchestra, and the conductor Mr. Greenbaum—a name in this connection new to most of us. He secures an excellent performance, letting the delightful music tell its own tale. The recording is first-rate—on rather too small a scale of power in my opinion, but beautifully clear. In this respect it is superior to either of the symphonic records discussed above, and among the best known to me. Only the first two movements are issued so far, each on a 12-in. d.-s., the remainder being promised for next month.

Eugène Goossens's Suite for flute, violin, and harp is recorded on a 12-in. d.-s., the players being Charles Stainer, Charles Woodhouse, and Marie Goossens. The reproduction is very clear, and the use of three so well-contrasted instruments leads to some delightful tone-colours. The main interest of the music lies in this. Of the two movements, 'Impromptu' and 'Divertissement,' the latter is perhaps the more attractive. It recalls the style of Bliss's 'Conversations.'

Only two vocal records call for mention. Both are by native singers whose voices record remarkably well. Frank Titterton is heard in 'Lohengrin's Narrative' and in the same rather boring person's 'Farewell,' with orchestral accompaniment (words not clear enough); and Watcyn Watcyns sings a poor song by Sanderson—'When you're away'—and a rather less poor one by Kennedy Russell—'Why shouldn't I?' (There is a slight tendency to flattening on a note here and there.) Both these are 12-in. d.-s.

Some capital dance records give just the vividly clear reproduction of texture and tone-colour that I hope we shall soon find in records of classical orchestral music. (This point must be harped on till something comes of it.)

ANGLO-FRENCH MUSIC COMPANY

These publishers have just issued a set of records of pianoforte pieces set for Trinity College Examinations. The player is Alec Rowley, who does his trying task with a clean and fluent touch that should serve examinees and their teachers as the best of models. There are eight records. I have not space to set out the full list of pieces and studies recorded, but a pamphlet giving these and other particulars may be had from the Anglo-French Music Company. The recording is well up to the average as regards the tone. The venture opens up a new field for the gramophone, and wise teachers will keep an eye on developments. My only complaint about this set is on the score of the list itself. Frankly, it is poor. There is no Bach; the examples from other classical composers are far more hackneyed (even feeble) than they need be; and the modern works drawn on include some specimens that will give the more perceptive of young students a poor opinion of contemporary music.

Wireless Notes

BY 'CALIBAN'

The B.B.C. audience includes so many uninitiated listeners that the policy of prefacing the items with a few explanatory or historical remarks is sound. But the very fact of so many of the hearers knowing little about serious music makes it all the more important that these prefatory remarks should be accurate, and that any excursions into criticism should not be over-reckless or sweeping. I have heard some critical pronouncements that made me squirm to such an extent that I omitted to make notes of them for reference in this column. But I am able to remember one set of comments that was very misleading. Like other Bachites, I was on hand when the band of the Scots Guards played what was announced in the Radio Times as a 'Prelude, Chorale, and Fugue.' This title made me suspicious, for I could recall no work of Bach so named. But judge what we listening Bachites felt like when the announcer told us (1) that Bach was first and foremost an organ composer (a popular delusion; Bach's organ works are only a smallish portion of his output); (2) that the work now to be played was one of these organ works; and (3) that the form of it—Prelude, Chorale, and Fugue—was one in which a good many of his works are cast. As to (2) the Prelude was that in C sharp minor in Book 1 of the 'Forty-eight.' The Chorale I could not identify, but it was certainly not one of what are known as the 'Organ Chorales'; the Fugue was an organ work—the 'Great' G minor. Fine music is something to be grateful for, even if the wrong label be attached, so I soon forgave the announcer, and settled down to enjoy myself. But the miscreant who arranged the work, after associating two movements that Bach never intended to be linked, and sticking in between them a Chorale, went further, and spoilt the Fugue by working in the Chorale from time to time. The result, of course, was that the beautiful contrapuntal texture disappeared at times, and the prominent feature became something with which Bach had nothing to do. It is all to the good that military bands should play transcriptions of Bach, but they ought to show proper respect for the text. I should add that the playing of this annoying perversion was excellent.

A capital symphony concert was that broadcast on September 15, conducted by Sir Landon Ronald. I mention it specially, because it gave us another example of the wireless beating the concert-room. I have never heard 'L'Après-Midi d'un Faune' to such advantage as on this occasion, when it reached me in the dead stillness of the countryside. There was the usual short break after the announcement, and then into the intense silence stole the familiar little run-down of the flute. How much more fitting than the usual concert-room opening, with somebody rustling a programme, or squeezing past your knees, or releasing a few germs via a cough or sneeze! This emergence of music from absolute silence is not the only striking thing about wireless concerts. The close of some pieces is extraordinarily effective in the same way. Recalling the frequency with which in the concert-room the usual burst of applause shatters the spell, one is not surprised at the impressiveness of most of the final cadences when heard by wireless. For this reason I hope the B.B.C. will not adopt some unimaginative people's suggestion that a small audience shall be present in the studio for the purpose of rounding-off the performances with due smiting of palms. Now that thousands of us are at last beginning to appreciate the beauty of silence in connection with music, we don't want to go back to conventional noise. Apropos of this question, I cannot refrain from mentioning an example that gave me the thrill of a thousand. Some months ago the B.B.C. broadcast from its studio a performance of 'Hamlet.' Like most people, I thought that, heard and not seen, would be a fiasco. Perhaps it was to listeners who didn't know the play. To those of us who did, and who could mentally visualise the action, it proved extraordinarily moving—at all events, that was my experience. But the finest moment was at the end, which came with Hamlet's death; his final words, 'The rest is silence!' were followed by a stillness that gripped one. Here was an effect impossible in a theatre, seeing that hats and belongings have to be rescued, and trains caught.

Going back to Sir Landon Ronald, I was interested to read his remarks in the Evening Standard on wireless concerts. Sir Landon is not one of those who see in wireless nothing more than a kind of toy, or who regard its transmission of music as a travesty. 'People who will have nothing to do with broadcasting will find themselves badly left,' he said, 'for it has come to stay, and to be one of the biggest factors in the world of music.' I was interested, too, in his opinions as to the effect of broadcasting on the ordinary concert. I have never agreed with the view that listening to music via the wireless would send people to hear performances at first hand in the concert-hall. I have come to the exactly opposite opinion through my own experience, and I was not surprised to find Sir Landon saying:

While wireless has, like the gramophone, done much for music, in the sense that it has introduced the works of great composers to a new and wider public, it has caused a falling off in attendances at concerts. People hear a symphony through their wireless set, but that doesn't awake in them any desire to go to Queen's Hall or the Albert Hall to hear it; and those who have been concert habitués seem to prefer to stop at home and enjoy their music there instead of turning out and spending money.

It is a good thing that the B.B.C. seems to be aware of this tendency on the part of musicians to look to wireless for their concerts. All sorts of good things seem to be in store for us during the coming winter. But let us hope that those responsible will think twice before letting loose on us the music played at Pavlova's performances. Only the very best of ballet music is worth listening to apart from the ballet, and that played at the opening of Pavlova's season on September 5 was about the very worst. My programme told me that I was listening to a ballet called 'Don Quixote,' but my ears couldn't credit it. The programme was right, however, and as a result I have one more name to add to my list of the world's worst composers—that of Ludwig Minkus. Incidentally, here was another case where the wireless listener scored. When I had heard enough of Minkus to be quite sure that he was the sort of composer who would be consistently bad, I switched off. You may imagine my chuckles when I learned from the Sunday Times that Ernest Newman was at the performance and had been unable to escape a bar of it!

In a long experience of bad music [he wrote] I have never come across anything so utterly banal, so inane, so thoroughly incompetent in every respect, as that of Minkus to 'Don Quixote.' The stuff is an insult to the intelligence of any musical hearer; I had to summon up all my respect for Madame Pavlova to persuade myself to sit it out.

I hope the musical authorities of the B.B.C. saw Mr. Newman's outburst. If so, it should make them cautious about relaying to their clients music of whose quality they have no kind of guarantee. 'Tis bad business buying a pig in a poke for yourself, but far worse when you are buying for some one else.

The eleventh season of the Central London Music Study Circle will open on Saturday, October 4, at 3 p.m., when the President, Mr. Percy Scholes, will give a brief synopsis of the course chosen for the season, 'The Development of British Music and Literature.' The Circle meets at the Metropolitan Academy of Music, 72-74, High Street, Marylebone. Visitors are invited, and particulars of membership will be forwarded on application to the hon. secretary, Mr. Anton Herrick, 19, Christchurch Road, N.W. 3.

Messrs. Schott offer a prize of about £300 for a Concerto in chamber style. Manuscripts should be received by them at their Mainz office not later than December 1. The judges are Joseph Haas, Paul Hindemith, Erich Wolfgang Korngold, Lothar Windsperger, and Dr. L. E. Strecker. Full particulars on application to Messrs. Schott, Mainz.

Church and Organ Music

ROYAL COLLEGE OF ORGANISTS

Full particulars and the Syllabus of the Certificate Choir-Training Examination for those who do not hold the diploma of F.R.C.O. or A.R.C.O., to be held on November 5 and 6, 1924, may be obtained on application to the Registrar of the College.

Free lectures on Choir-Training will be given at the College on Monday, November 3, at 7.30 p.m., by Dr. H. W. Richards, on 'The General Principles of Choir-Training.'

Tuesday, November 4, at 3 p.m., by Dr. Keighley, on 'Mixed Chords'; at 6 p.m., by Dr. Stanley Marchant, on 'Boys' Voices.'

Members and their friends are cordially invited. No tickets required.

H. A. HARDING, Hon. Secretary.

CHOIR-TRAINING AT THE ROYAL COLLEGE OF ORGANISTS

The great value of the Examinations in Choir-training instituted by the Royal College of Organists is not yet fully realised. The examination for the 'Choir-Training Certificate' is held in November each year, and the requirements cover all the work which an efficient choir-trainer should be ready to undertake. The examination is in two parts, paper work and practical demonstration.

The paper work covers questions on the training of voices, church music of a simple character, general principles for the selection of music, conduct of a simple congregational service, methods of rehearsal, &c. There will also be a short melodic ear-test of four bars to be written down as heard.

The practical tests are of an eminently useful character. Simple demonstration of the methods of voice-production (breathing, resonance, diction, and the correction of common faults) is required. The candidate conducts a small choir in the singing of a hymn, a psalm, and an anthem. (This year the selected anthem is Ouseley's 'How goodly are thy tents'). As it seems reasonable to expect the choirmaster to be able to play simple pieces correctly, he is asked to play a given hymn-tune at sight, though he is excused from playing the pedals.

A choir-training certificate from such a body as the R.C.O. will be an immense boon to the young organist in applying for posts; for in many cases his youth prevents him from being able to produce much other evidence of experience and knowledge of choirs. The next examinations are held between November 3 and 8, and the last date for entry is October 6.

THE NATIONAL UNION OF ORGANISTS' ASSOCIATIONS: NEWCASTLE CONGRESS

The members of the National Union of Organists who held their Annual Congress this year at Newcastle-on-Tyne, September 1, 2, 3, and 4, formed the opinion that the Northern Metropolis is a fine place, inhabited by warm-hearted and hospitable people. They were impressed by the ancient and historic features of the City, and still more by the evidences of its progressive modernity, its business activities, its spacious streets and stately lines of buildings. A tremendously virile place and people. The nation looks to it for ships, guns, and coal. It is famous for these things, perhaps not so famous, except in another way, for its City Hall organ. But this is a matter of hearsay only. Certainly nothing could have been kinder in tone and expression than Newcastle's Civic welcome offered to the Congress of Organists on behalf of the City, by the Lord Mayor. The preliminary meeting was held on Monday evening in King's Hall of Armstrong College, when close on a hundred members attended, and were refreshed—after, in many cases, long railway journeys—by the interesting and stimulating address on 'Temperament and Vocal Expression' given by Mr. George Dodds, with vocal and instrumental illustrations by his wife, an artistic soprano, his brother, Mr. Veaman Dodds, a sympathetic accompanist, and Miss Ella Tomlinson, a young violinist who is already an accomplished player. The lecturer said that a musical setting should be the individual and rhythmic expression of the inner meaning of the poet's words. By way of illustrating his points, it was a happy idea to give four contrasted settings of Christina Rossetti's 'My heart is like a singing-bird,' by Cowen, Scott, Coleridge-Taylor, and Parry. Another example one would have liked repeated was Dr. Whittaker's charming setting of de la Mare's 'Dream Song,' which by the way is dedicated to Mr. J. B. Clark, a musical amateur well-known at Newcastle. A 'Nocturne' for soprano, baritone, violin, and pianoforte also showed the lecturer in favourable light as a composer, and in both capacities Mr. George Dodds gave real pleasure to his audience. On Tuesday morning, Mr. Sydney H. Nicholson, President of the National Union, took the chair at a meeting of the delegates, and after business matters had been disposed of, a formal welcome was given to the assembled members by the Rev. W. A. Studdert Kennedy, Vicar of Gosforth, a clergyman of broad mind and musical sympathies. The local Association is fortunate to possess him as its president. Discussion arose on the vexed question of the 'Priest-Organist,' and Mr. J. H. Dixon (Lancaster) moved 'That this Congress of Organists, amateur and professional, whilst loyally supporting the ministerial efforts of the clergy, notes with regret the growing tendency to appoint ministers of religion to the post of organist in churches where no difficulty could arise in having such services performed by a fully qualified musician.' The discussion which ensued certainly ventilated the matter from varying points of view. Eventually the motion was withdrawn.

On Tuesday afternoon a visit was paid to St. George's Church, Jesmond, where a recital was given on the four-manual Lewis-Binns organ, which Mr. J. M. Preston's recitals have for many years made notable. This fine player greatly impressed his hearers by his brilliant technique in playing Vienne's third Symphony (the first, third, and fifth movements) and pieces by Maleingreau and Jongen, music whose atmospheric harmonies and elusive horizons made us realise how far organ music has travelled since the days of Mendelssohn. Stuart Archer's Variations and Lemare's 'Toccata di Concerto' were no less acceptable and effective items in a masterly performance. The event of the evening was the Civic Reception held by the Lord Mayor and Lady Mayoress in the Laing Art Gallery. His Lordship was supported by the Sheriff, and attended by the City Sword-bearer, whose official 'biretta' evoked respectful admiration. It took men's minds back to the spacious old days, if not to the misty past, when Hadrian came into Britain, and reared his famous Roman Wall, beginning at Pons Elii and ending at the Solway Frith. The Sheriff, Councillor Lambert, is a high functionary with a human side sympathetic to musicians, for he himself is one. He made a point in recalling the story of the bright boy at a musical examination, who described an 'interval' as the time to adjourn for refreshments. Before and after this interval some delightfully interesting music was heard under the direction of Dr. W. G. Whittaker, that fine musician whose many-sided activities and remarkable achievements, both as a composer and choral-conductor, have made his name an outstanding force, radiating far and wide. At Newcastle one was glad to see him in the flesh, and to enjoy with him the humour and humanity of Northumbrian folk-music, examples of which were sung by Mr. E. J. Potts, with Dr. Whittaker at the pianoforte. Added interest was given to the various items by his explanatory remarks. The Wallsend Male-Voice Choir, conducted by Mr. G. Danskin, in its singing of several choral arrangements by Dr. Whittaker of Northumbrian folk-music, showed the perfection of training in all points. It was really splendid singing, full of expression and fire. One will not soon forget 'Bobby Shaftoe.' Last, but not least, was the interesting playing on the Northumbrian small pipes, by Messrs. H. and T. Clough, father and son, members of a family whose skill as players is hereditary and locally famous. These pipes, while similar in appearance to the Scotch bagpipes, are distinctly more pleasing in sound, and less provocative of battle, murder, and sudden death. Mr. Clough, jun., is a very dexterous performer, as he showed in the rapid 'Keel Row' variations by Shield, the Newcastle musician of 'The Wolf' fame. Wednesday was devoted to junketing, and in ideal weather a motor-trip was made to Durham Cathedral, where the Dean, Bishop Welldon, welcomed the party, and an enjoyable short recital was given on the fine Willis-Harrison organ by Mr. Cyril B. Maude, the deputy-organist, an able and musicianly player. Then on to Sunderland to be entertained to lunch by Sir John and Lady Priestman. Following this a visit was made to St. Andrew's Church, Roker, a fabric of interesting and unique interior design, of which Sir John had defrayed the cost. He is himself its organist, and also possesses in his house near-by a large four-manual concert organ of great power and variety of tone, including a Terpodian by Schulze. In Roker Church is a fine two-manual organ by Norman & Beard, and upon both instruments short recitals were given by Mr. Preston, whose masterly skill was shown in examples by Widor, Liszt (Fugue, 'Ad nos'), Silas ('Blenheim Fantasia'), Vienne, Ferrari, and Bonnet.

The Congress dinner at Tilley's Restaurant wound up an enjoyable day. Mr. Sydney H. Nicholson occupied the chair. He said that the next few years were going to be very important to organists. The Report of the Commission on the 'Property and Finances of the Church' had come to the conclusion that the organist had not been recognised at his full worth in the past. In responding to the toast of the National Union, proposed by Mr. J. C. Lumsden (Edinburgh), the general-secretary, Councillor John Brook (Southport), referred to the great help given by Mr. S. W. Pilling, who was prevented by illness from attending the Congress. Mr. Brook modestly withheld any reference to his own work in helping to found an organization which is so rapidly increasing in numbers and usefulness. It is largely through his untiring efforts and wise counsels that organists are beginning to reap the advantages of federation. But they do not seek to improve their status by becoming a trade union of the kind which is a menace to the community.

On Thursday morning a delightful hour was spent listening to Prof. W. L. Renwick, of Armstrong College, whose subject 'Music and Verse' dealt with the desirability of lyrical music conforming to the metrical quality and rhythmical impulse of the words. A visit was paid to the fine old cathedral and grim old castle, on the tower of which the visitors were photographed, as in many other places. A recital by Mr. Ellis, the cathedral organist, had been projected. Much sympathy was expressed at his absence owing to serious eye trouble. In his place Mr. Bull, the deputy-organist, displayed the powers of the notable Lewis-Harrison organ in the cathedral.

As guests of Mr. and Mrs. R. Stanley Dalgleish the Congress was entertained to tea, first visiting the beautiful Holy Trinity War Memorial Church erected by their hosts at Jesmond. They afterwards, on the same invitation, spent Thursday evening at the Theatre Royal.

On Thursday afternoon the president of the National Union, Mr. Sydney H. Nicholson, gave an address on the 'Report of the Archbishops' Committee on the Use of Music in Worship.' The genial organist of the Abbey had plenty to say, and that to the purpose. As a member of the Committee he said the Report was a sincere document. There was no justification for the use of music as a sort of bribe to attract people to church, and the Report laid it down that the organ should be regarded as an adornment, not a necessity. Asked to define the word 'bribe,' he suggested music chosen or performed solely with the idea of increasing or influencing church attendances. But, he added, organ recitals were not to be deemed bribes. Organists, as well as choirs, needed periodical spring-cleaning. Were things done as well as they might be? Was the music suitable, the pitch maintained, the chanting clear? Were the voluntaries well chosen? Mr. Nicholson also referred to organists' stipends, and to parsimonious churches which could afford to pay more. Useful discussion followed upon the address and the points raised in the Archbishops' Report. It is manifest that things are capable of improvement. This will ensue if organists as a body unite in supporting their own National Union.

The interest and success of the Newcastle Congress were largely due to the excellent arrangements made by the local chairman, Mr. H. Yeaman Dodds, and secretary, Mr. F. Stone. Other prominent helpers included Dr. Hutchinson, and Sir John Priestman, chairman of the Sunderland branch of the Union. Next year's Congress will be held at Exeter.

W. A. ROBERTS.

PLYMOUTH GUILDHALL ORGAN

The organ in Plymouth Guildhall, originally built by Henry Willis in 1878, with four manuals and thirty-nine stops, has been entirely rebuilt and enlarged by Messrs. Hele, to the specification of the Borough organist, Mr. H. Moreton. It now stands as a five manual (the Echo organ in a separate swell box, and controlled from the Solo manual), with sixty-one speaking stops, and over forty couplers, &c., and ranks as one of the finest and most complete concert organs in the country. The re-opening took place on August 13, the date happily coinciding with the fiftieth anniversary of the Hall itself, and the completion of twenty-five years' service by Mr. Moreton as Borough organist. His programme on this occasion included Thomas Adams's Overture in C, the Allegro and Finale from Vienne's first Symphony, and the Finale from Stanford's 'Sonata Eroica.' This was Mr. Moreton's 2,741st performance, and a crowded audience gave him an ovation.

In a recent issue we gave a short account of an excellent musical service in a tiny Surrey village. A correspondent sends a programme of a concert given at Upper Clatford Church recently, which also deserves to be placed on record as an example of what can be done in a parish with a population of a few hundred people. The Church was crowded on a Sunday afternoon, and so much pleasure was evinced that some of the items were repeated at the evening service. The organ items included Intermezzo and Scherzoso by Rheinberger, a Pavane and Galliard by Byrd, Wolstenholme's Rondino, and Best's March for a Church Festival (given erroneously in the programme as by Bach). Miss Gwendolyn Teagle played violin solos by Pugnani, Bach, Handel, Lemare, and Wagner, and Miss Edna Scammell sang Schubert's 'Hymn to the Almighty' and Handel's 'O had I Jubal's lyre.' This little Hampshire village is happy in the fact that it has a musical rector, the Rev. W. R. Bentham, to whose enterprise this concert was due, and who himself played the organ solos.

Dr. Lawrence Walker gave the opening recital on the organ of St. James's Parish Church, Belfast, after its renovation by Messrs. Rushworth & Dreaper. His programme included Mendelssohn's first Sonata, three Bach Chorale Preludes, and pieces by Guilman, Mozart, and Rheinberger. Dr. Bullock, of Exeter Cathedral, also gave a recital, playing Bach's Fantasia in G and the B minor Prelude and Fugue, Chorale Preludes by Hubert Parry and Harvey Grace, Schumann's Fugue on BACH, Vienne's Arabesque, &c.

So few women take up organ recital work on its concert side that special interest attaches to the announcement of a recital on the Queen's Hall organ, on the evening of October 21, by Miss Marjorie Renton. She will play works by Bach, Reubke, Vienne, Widor, Franck, and Howells, and will have the assistance of Mrs. Mary Layton's Ladies' Choir. We understand that Miss Renton is a pupil of Dr. Henry Ley.

A clockwork carillon of fifteen bells, made by Messrs. Benson, of Ludgate Hill, has just been sent to Canada, as a gift to St. George's Church, Oshawa, Ontario, the donors being Mr. and Mrs. Houston, in memory of Edward and Rebecca Carswell. A series of a hundred and thirty changes can be rung automatically, and a hand clavier is also provided for use when a carillonneur is available.

Messrs. Hill & Son and Norman & Beard have recently built a new organ for Ulsterville Presbyterian Church, Belfast. Mr. Robert Winnington, gave the opening recital, playing a Prelude and Fugue of Mendelssohn, and items by Goodhart and E. Halsey. The instrument is a gift from Dr. Joseph Fulton, a member of the congregation.

At St. George's Presbyterian Church, Blackburn, on August 31, the organ was re-opened by Dr. Percy Elton, who gave a recital, his programme including a Fantasia by Saint-Saëns, Franck's Pastorale, and the Fugue from Guilman's fifth Sonata.

Dr. Harold Darke is now engaged on a series of six Bach recitals at St. Michael's, Cornhill. The recitals are given on Thursday evenings at 6, and the last four will take place on October 9, 16, 23, and 30.

RECITALS

Mr. J. Stuart Archer, Cathedral Church of Christ, Canterbury—Variations on an original theme and two Chorale Preludes, Stuart Archer; Villanelle, Ireland; Prelude and Fugue in F minor, Bach.

Mr. Hugh Fowler, St. Peter's, Budleigh Salterton—Finale from Sonata in C sharp minor, Harwood; Fantaisie in E flat, Saint-Saëns. (Pianoforte Solo: Sonata in A minor, Schumann, Mrs. Foss.)

Dr. Alfred E. Whitehead, Trinity Congregational Church, Peterborough—Prelude in E minor, Bach; Canon in B minor, Schumann; Legend, Harvey Grace; Ballade, H. Sanders; Suite Gothique, Boëllmann.

Mr. Laurence M. Ager, Hellingly Parish Church—Chorale Prelude on 'Nun danket alle Gott,' Bach; 'From Hebrid Seas,' Nesbitt; Six short Variations on an Irish Air, Stuart Archer; Finale from Sonata No. 4, Mendelssohn.

Dr. Harold Darke, Christ Church, St. Leonards—Prelude on 'Rhosymedre,' Vaughan Williams; Fantasia and Fugue in G minor, Bach; Pastorale, Franck; Canon in B minor, Schumann; Prelude on a theme of Tallis, Harold Darke; Berceuse and Carillon, Vierne.

Mr. G. Sayers, Gorleston Parish Church—Allegretto grazioso, Allegro comodo, and Allegro marziale, Frank Bridge; Chorale Prelude, 'Lord Jesus Christ, unto us turn,' Bach; Prelude and 'Angel's Farewell,' Elgar.

Mr. Ernest F. Mather, St. Lawrence Jewry—Choral No. 3, Franck; Prelude to 'The Blessed Damsel,' Debussy; Prelude on 'Old 136th,' Charles Wood; Passacaglia (Sonata No. 8), Rheinberger. (Flute solo: Sonata, Frederick the Great, Mr. William Alwyn.)

Mr. W. A. Gardner, St. Paul's, Covent Garden.—Fugue in E flat, Bach; Sonata No. 2, Mendelssohn. (Violin solos by Miss Annette Ellis: Sonata in G, second movement, Grieg; Aria for the G string, Bach; Largo, Handel; 'Pieta Signore,' Stradella-Papini.)

Mr. Harold Helman, All Hallows', Ordsall—Sonata Britannica, Stanford; Cradle Song, Legend, and Psalm-tune on 'London New,' Harvey Grace.

Mr. N. S. Wallbank, Hexham Abbey—Toccata in D minor, Bach; Fantasia in F minor, Mozart; Prelude and Fugue on B A C H, Liszt.

Mr. H. Cyril Robinson, St. John's, Barmouth—Symphony in C minor (first movement), Holloway; Lament, Harvey Grace; Capriccio, John Ireland; Benedictus (Sonata Britannica), Stanford; Three Chorale Preludes, Bach; Toccata-Prelude, 'Pange Lingua,' Bairdston.

Mr. Herbert Walton, Glasgow Cathedral—Prelude and Fugue in A minor, Bach; Symphony No. 5, Widor; Rhapsody, Harvey Grace; 'Sea Fret' and 'Sea Surge,' Julian Nesbitt; Introduction and Theme Fugué, Gigout; 'Rouet d'Omphale,' Saint-Saëns; Impromptu and Toccata, Alcock.

Mr. James Easson, Church of the Holy Trinity, St. Andrews—Concerto in F, Corelli; Choral Preludes by Charles Wood and Karg-Elert; Scherzo in A minor and Rhapsody in D minor, Alec Rowley; Fugue in G minor, Dr. Nares; Sonata, Reubke; Berceuse and Finale, Stravinsky; Rhapsody in E, Harold Darke; Pastorale, Franck.

E

Mr. F. J. Livesey, St. Bee's Priory Church—Concerto No. 1, Handel; Andante (Sonata No. 4), Bach; Choral No. 3, Franck; Carillon, Vierne.

Mr. Alfred Wilson, St. Ninian's Cathedral, Perth—Toccata and Fugue in D minor and the 'Great' G minor Fugue, Bach; Choral No. 3, Franck; 'Sea Fret' and 'Sea Plaint,' Julian Nesbitt.

Dr. Ernest Bullock, Christ Church, Bala—Two Sketches, Schumann; Preludes on 'Melcombe,' Parry, and 'Martyrs,' Harvey Grace; Prelude and Fugue in B minor, Bach; Postlude in D, Stanford.

Mr. Harry Wall, St. Andrew-by-the-Wardrobe—A Rheinberger programme: Preludio, Tema variato, and Passacaglia (Meditations, Op. 167); Allegretto in A minor and Andantino in B flat (Trios, Op. 189); Fugue (Sonata No. 7); Adagio and Finale (Sonata No. 5).

APPOINTMENTS

Mr. H. M. Bouchier, choirmaster and organist, St. Paul's Church, Denholme, Yorks.

Mr. Douglas M. Coates, choirmaster and organist, St. Mary Magdalene, Paddington.

Mr. J. Vanderpump, choirmaster and organist, Temple Church, St. Mary Cray, Kent.

Letters to the Editor

OF WHAT USE ARE CRITICS

SIR,—With reference to the comments on my letter, made by 'Feste' in his 'Ad Libitum' notes in your September issue, 'Feste' has avoided my main point in a cloud of words two columns long.

Let us have fair play. My point was: If a GANG of critics is necessary to detect a defect or virtue, of what use are critics? If ONE critic cannot give an authoritative opinion, why should great publicity be given to his remarks at all?

Now, regarding 'Feste's' observations.

Let him understand first of all that the inversion of 'mote' and 'beam' was intentional, to provide some one with an opportunity to 'criticise.'

As to a badly-cut suit or a badly-cooked dish, I believe that I alone could find the defect, without calling in a whole gang of neighbours to help to do it. If I could not, alone, find a defect of this sort, I could be regarded as a duffer—and this is precisely what 'Feste' infers of the single critic. Imagine a similar situation in business—the whole office staff to do the work of one!

Apart from this—I state as my opinion that reviewers and critics have not an authoritative standard wherefrom to judge, and that mere opinions, widely published, can be harmful and misleading to the public (which, unfortunately, is largely guided by 'criticisms').

To illustrate this point of lack of authoritative standard, if a hitherto unknown work of, say, Bach, Beethoven, or Wagner were discovered and offered for examination, under an unknown name, to reviewers and critics, what would happen? These self-flattering, would-be-authoritative beings would most probably make criticisms showing the 'defects' and inferiority of such a work; but if such a work were discovered bearing the name of such a master—what then? A chorus of admiration, flattering remarks—broadcast in the press.

The criticism of music being widely published, and based on no real foundation, I am convinced that such opinions should be drastically censored before their appearance, or should be stated as the opinions of such and such a person, without the authoritative tone at present adopted. When the critics have evolved to a stage in which they, with their lower-plane intellect, have reached the higher plane to which music belongs, then they can speak with the authority which they at present assume.

Concerning my criticising the critics, I do this from the standpoint of truth, honesty, and fair play for composer, performer, and public.

As to 'Feste's' comparison between giving judgments of a comparatively slowly moving play and of a swiftly moving piece of music, he makes it all the more obvious (painfully obvious, but the 'Festes' have to be reminded of it) that such hasty judgments should not be broadcast as authoritative, and that if the work has to be done so hastily, then the critic is useless, as he cannot give a reasonably considered judgment.

I know that musical criticism has been a recognised craft for generations, but I contend that as it stands at present it is very much in need of improvement, without which it should be swept away.

Let 'Feste' answer my question (based on his own statement)—in one word, 'Yes' or 'No'—without reference to tailors and cooks who perform functions of a material character, as compared with music, which is, if not spiritual, at least mental.

But of what use to add more?

'Feste' states that a gang of critics is necessary, and being one of the gang or closely allied therewith he no doubt knows their uselessness singlehanded.—Yours, &c.,

The Chestnuts, F. W. MASSI-HARDMAN.
Somerset Road, Teddington.
September, 1924.

['Feste' writes: 'First, let me take off my hat to Mr. Massi-Hardman for his delightful "explanation" of the mote-and-beam slip. Probably his use of "infers" when he appears to mean "implies" is another crafty snare. My "cloud of words" did not set out to discuss all the issues raised by Mr. Massi-Hardman's first letter. I took the only point that seemed worth discussion—his question and answer, "Can the critics sing, play, conduct, compose, better than those they criticise? If not, their criticism is a mere pretentious humbug." Mr. Massi-Hardman demands fair play. Had he been as ready to give it as to ask for it, he would not have twisted and exaggerated a remark that occurred in my August article. Pointing out that the differences of opinion between critics are not only easily understandable, but might even be advantageous to the person criticised, I added that "a virtue or defect may easily escape one critic; it can hardly get past the whole gang." This obvious variant of the old tag that "in a multitude of counsellors there is wisdom," was interpreted by Mr. Massi-Hardman to mean that "a whole gang of critics is necessary to detect a fault or a virtue"—which is quite another thing. Mr. Massi-Hardman evades my real point in the matters of the ill-fitting suit of clothes and the badly-cooked meal. It was concerned not with the wearer or eater being able to decide single-handed as to defects, but with his right to complain unless he could do the job better himself. This was Mr. Massi-Hardman's chief case against the critics, as is shown by my quotation above. He dodges my reply to this, and makes a good deal out of his ability to decide single-handed about that suit. But can he? In my mind's eye I can see him when "trying-on" at the tailor's; even as other men, he will defer somewhat to the fitter: "What do you think about the length of the sleeves? . . . Perhaps a little more room here, eh? [waggishly]. We don't get smaller round the equator as the years pass, do we?" And (having no eyes in the back of his head, and an extra mirror being an imperfect substitute), "How is it between the shoulders?"—what time the attendant artist pats, smooths, makes cryptic chalk-marks, and in the long run has his own way—rightly, too, because he really knows better than his customer, however politic he may be in hiding the fact. Even in the case of the meal the eater may blame the cooking for what is merely a peculiarity in his own palate. However, as I said above, that was not my point. . . . It is easy to answer the question as to the critics' attitude towards an unknown work by Beethoven or Wagner performed under the name of an obscure composer: There are critics good and bad. The good ones wouldn't care twopence about the composer's name; the other sort would. Mr. Massi-Hardman evidently carries his dislike of criticism to the length of never reading it, or he would be aware that there is no lack of outspoken condemnation of the poorer examples of work by the greatest of composers. Mr. Massi-Hardman sets great store by "an authoritative standard." There is no such thing, save in the case of obviously demonstrable facts, such as two and two making four. Things that cannot be demonstrated must remain matters of opinion, and the greater the knowledge and experience behind an opinion, the more nearly it approaches the authoritative. Hence, the critical views of a man who has had years of experience in hearing and comparing performers must in general carry more weight than those of a casual listener. The "censoring" of criticism would make it less, not more authoritative, inasmuch as the result would give us merely the views of the censor—who in most cases would not have heard the performance! As to the present standard of musical criticism, the view of most people capable of judging (including Mr. Bernard Shaw) is that it is an enormous improvement on that of the past. Other points in the letter either call for no notice, or were covered by my August article. I should like to discuss Mr. Massi-Hardman's two questions once more, but he demands that I should answer them with a plain "Yes" or "No." He ought to remember that there are many questions that cannot be answered so simply. Thus (to take a hoary example), if I ask a man whether he has left off beating his wife, and insist on his replying with "Yes" or "No," I shall insist in vain. However, I will do as Mr. Massi-Hardman requests, though I have my doubts as to his being satisfied even then. He asks: (1) "If a gang of critics is necessary to detect a defect or virtue, of what use are critics?" My answer to this is "Yes." (2) "If one critic cannot give an authoritative opinion, why should great publicity be given to his remarks at all?" Here my reply is an emphatic "No."]

SIR,—Your correspondent Mr. Massi-Hardman, who casts doubt on the use of musical critics, has been amply answered by 'Feste' in his September 'Ad Libitum.' Perhaps 'Feste's' remarks will only increase his bitterness, perhaps they will induce him to think again and take a more rational view of the question.

Mr. Jeffrey Mark's article on 'The Critic and the Composer' in the August Musical Times, deals very entertainingly with some aspects of musical criticism, and I should like to recommend to Mr. Massi-Hardman (and the numerous others of the same way of thinking) two excellent little books which will answer the questions raised in his letter, and give him a clear insight into the methods and functions of musical criticism and critics. I refer to Dr. Percy Buck's 'Scope of Music' and M.-D. Calvocoressi's 'Musical Criticism.'—Yours, &c., F. H. B.

ON THE WRONG TACK

SIR,—In your 'Occasional Notes' of the September issue there is a short notice of a novel by Mr. E. F. Benson, which contains a jingle for the subject of Bach's second Fugue of the 'Forty-eight':

'John Sebastian Back
Sat down on a tack,
Sat do-own on a tack, and said, "Wow"!'

This appears to be an imperfect recollection of the late Prof. Prout's far superior version:

'John Sebastian Bach
Sat upon a tack,
But he soon got up again with a howl!'

The few words changed make all the difference. Prout's version trips to the subject—the other labours after it. As your contributor suggests, try it in your bath!

Prout was wonderfully apt in fitting words to Bach's subjects. There is an equally humorous one for the more complex and syncopated theme of the E minor Fugue, No. 10, in Book 2:

'As I went to the Bank on a penny 'bus,
Off came my hat,
Down fell my stick!
All my luggage was tumbled about
On the floor of the rickety thing!'

Some may call this sort of thing irreverence. Perhaps it is; but a great deal depends on the mental attitude of the person using it. There is a difference between the fun of dislike and the fun of love; and I once heard Prout say that Bach was the greatest of all composers, bar none.—Yours, &c.,

H. ERNEST NICHOL.

Northwood, The Park, Hull.

THEMATIC LIST OF ORGAN PIECES

PUBLISHED BY NOVELLO AND COMPANY LIMITED

DIFFICULT

TOCCATA and FUGUE ("The Wanderer")

C. H. H. Parry

Slow

MANUAL mf (Gt) (TOCCATA) più f f

PEDAL mf

(Time of performance about 5 minutes.)

Slow

(FUGUE) p Sw.

(Time of performance about 7 minutes.)

Copyright, 1921, by Novello & Company, Limited

Original Compositions for the Organ (New Series) No. 76. Price 3/6

HOMAGE TO HANDEL

54 Studies in Variation Form on a Ground Bass of Handel

S. Karg-Elert

Lento lugubre ed indeciso ①

MANUAL Sw. ppplugubre ppmistico

PEDAL

Ex. 2 pp Stopped 32', 16' & 8, Sw. coupled

50 Più gravemente (quasi 2)

fff Gt

quasi Pedal glissando

(Time of performance about 14 minutes.)

Copyright, 1922, by Novello & Company, Limited

Original Compositions for the Organ (New Series) No. 89. Price 3/6

MODERATELY DIFFICULT

ADAGIO in E

Frank Bridge

Adagio

MANUAL

Sw. pp pp

PEDAL

Ex. 2

(mf G♯) cresc. f

cresc. f

(Time of performance about 4 minutes.)

Copyright, 1905, by Novello & Company, Limited
Original Compositions for the Organ No. 337. Price 1/6

THREE PSALM PRELUDES

Lento, poco appenato

Nº 1

Herbert Howells

MANUAL

p Sw.

PEDAL

Ex. 2

Ch. p p espress.

G♯ G♯

(Sw.)

16 ft. (G♯ coupled)

(Time of performance about 4½ minutes.)

Copyright, 1921, by Novello & Company, Limited
Original Compositions for the Organ (New Series) No. 82. Price 1/6

MODERATELY EASY

LEGEND

Moderato semplice ♩ = 92
Sw. Reed

Harvey Grace

MANUAL

PEDAL

p p Ch. 8

p soft 16 ft Ch. to Ped.

Ex. 2

Allegro marziale ♩ = 132

f (G<sup>t</sup>)

f

(Time of performance about 5 minutes.)

Copyright, 1913, by Novello & Company, Limited

Original Compositions for the Organ (New Series) No. 15. Price 2/3

THREE CHORAL-PRELUDES

Nº 3 (on the Tune "St Michael")

John E. West

Lento maestoso ♩ = 60

MANUAL

PEDAL

f G<sup>t</sup>

mf Ch. 8 & 4 f!

f

Ex. 2

Poco Allegretto ♩ = 72

mp G<sup>t</sup> soft 8 ft (uncoupled)

mp G<sup>t</sup> to Ped.

(Time of performance about 4 minutes.)

Copyright, 1916, by Novello & Company, Limited

Original Compositions for the Organ (New Series) No. 47. Price 3/6

EASY

FOUR INTERMEZZI

Nº 3. Hush Song

C. V. Stanford

Andante tranquillo

MANUAL p (Sw. 8 ft with Oboe) (Ch.) (Sw.)

PEDAL p (16 & 8 ft uncoupled)

Ex. 2

(♩ = ♩)

p (G♯)

p (add to Ped.) (Time of performance about 5 minutes.)

Copyright, 1923, by Novello & Company, Limited
Original Compositions for the Organ (New Series) No. 93. Price 2/-

THREE SHORT and EASY POSTLUDES

Nº 3

F. W. Wadely

Risoluto

MANUAL mf G♯ Diap.

PEDAL mf 16 ft (G♯ coupled) mp Sw. cresc.

(Time of performance about 3½ minutes)

Copyright, 1917, by Novello & Company, Limited
Original Compositions for the Organ (New Series) No. 49. Price 2/3

No. 1134

EXTRA SUPPLEMENT.

NOVELLO'S OCTAVO ANTHEMS

Price (Ad.)

WRITTEN FOR THE RE-OPENING OF THE ORGAN AT ST. MARK'S CHURCH, PORTSMOUTH

O PRAISE GOD IN HIS HOLINESS

A SHORT ANTHEM FOR FESTIVAL AND GENERAL USE

Psalm cl.

MUSIC BY

CHARLES MACPHERSON

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED; NEW YORK: THE H. W. GRAY CO., SOLE AGENTS FOR THE U.S.A.

Allegro maestoso. ♩ = about 92

ORGAN

f Gt. Ped. legato

Soprano

ALTO

TENOR

BASS

O praise God in His

O praise God in His

O praise God in His

O praise God in His

Ped.

The musical score is written for organ and four vocal parts (Soprano, Alto, Tenor, Bass). The organ part begins with a prelude in 4/4 time, marked 'Allegro maestoso' with a tempo of approximately 92 beats per minute. The prelude features a melody in the right hand and a bass line in the left hand, with a 'Gt.' (Great) registration indicated. The vocal parts enter with the lyrics 'O praise God in His' on a long note. The organ accompaniment continues throughout the vocal phrase. The score is written in G major (one sharp) and 4/4 time. The organ part includes a 'Ped. legato' marking at the end of the phrase.

Copyright, 1924. by Novello and Company, Limited

MADE IN ENGLAND

O PRAISE GOD IN HIS HOLINESS

ho - - - li - ness : praise . . Him in the fir - mament of His ho - - - li - ness : praise . . Him in the fir - ma - ment of His ho - - - li - ness : praise . . Him in the fir - mament of His ho - - - li - ness : praise . . Him in the fir - mament of His power. Praise Him in His no - -

power. Praise Him in His power. Praise Him in His no - -

power. Praise Him in His ble acts : praise . . Him ac - cord - ing to His no - - - ble acts : praise . . Him ac - cord - ing to His

- - - ble acts : praise . . Him ac - cord - ing to His no - - - ble acts : praise . . Him ac - cord - ing to His

Full Sw.

Ped.

EXTRA SUPPLEMENT.
O PRAISE GOD IN HIS HOLINESS

October 1, 1924

ex - cel - lent great - - - ness.

ex - cel - lent great - - - ness.

ex - cel - lent great - - - ness.

ex - cel - lent . . great - - - ness.

Trumpet

Praise Him in the sound of the trump - - - et:

Praise Him in the sound of the trump - - - et:

Praise Him in the sound of the trump - - - et:

Praise Him in the sound of the trump - - - et:

praise Him up - on the lute and praise Him up - on the lute . . and praise Him up - on the lute . . . and praise Him up on the lute . . and

O PRAISE GOD IN HIS HOLINESS

harp.

harp.

harp.

harp.

Sw.

This section contains the introductory music for the harp and piano. It consists of four staves for the harp, each with a treble clef and a key signature of one sharp (F#). The tempo is marked Sw. (Sostenuto). The piano part begins on the fifth staff, with a treble and bass clef, and a key signature of one sharp. The tempo is marked ma poco animato.

ma poco animato

Ch.

This section continues the piano introduction. It features a treble and bass clef with a key signature of one sharp. The tempo is marked ma poco animato. The section is labeled Ch. (Chorus).

mf

Praise Him in the cym - bals and dan - ces :

mf

Praise Him in the

Ped. (Gt. coupler ad lib.)

( 4 )

This section contains the vocal and piano accompaniment. It features a treble and bass clef with a key signature of one sharp. The tempo is marked mf (mezzo-forte). The lyrics are "Praise Him in the cym - bals and dan - ces :". The piano part continues with a treble and bass clef and a key signature of one sharp. The tempo is marked mf. The section is labeled Ped. (Gt. coupler ad lib.). The page number is ( 4 ).

O PRAISE GOD IN HIS HOLINESS

mf

praise Him up-on the strings . . and

mf

Praise Him up-on the cym - bals and danc - es:

pipe . .

strings . . and pipe . .

mf

Praise Him up-on the strings . . and.. pipe...

mf

Praise Him up-on the strings.. and pipe...

f Sw.

senza Ped. Ped.

O PRAISE GOD IN HIS HOLINESS

The musical score is arranged in two systems. The first system consists of four vocal staves (Soprano, Alto, Tenor, Bass) and a piano accompaniment. The vocal parts have the lyrics: "Praise Him .. up-on the well - tun - ed cym - bals: praise Him .. up-on the". The piano accompaniment includes a string section (labeled "Sw.") and a guitar section (labeled "Gt."). The second system continues the vocal parts with the lyrics: "loud . . . cym - - - - bals. O praise". The piano accompaniment continues with the guitar section (labeled "Gt.") and a string section. The score is written in 4/4 time with a key signature of one sharp (F#).

Praise Him .. up-on the well - tun - ed cym - bals: praise Him .. up-on the

Praise Him .. up-on the well - tun - ed cym - bals: praise Him .. up-on the

Praise Him .. up-on the well - tun - ed cym - bals: praise Him .. up-on the

Praise Him .. up-on the well - tun - ed cym - bals: praise Him .. up-on the loud . . . cym - - - - bals. O praise

loud cym - - - - bals. O praise

loud . cym - - - - bals. O praise

loud . . . cym - - - - bals. O praise

O PRAISE GOD IN HIS HOLINESS

poco rit.

God in His ho - - - li - ness, . . . .

poco rit.

God in His ho - - - li - ness, . . . .

poco rit.

God in His ho - - - li - ness, . . . .

poco rit.

God in His ho - - - li - ness, . . . .

poco rit.

Sv.

A little slower

p in . . . . His ho - - - - li - ness. . . . lunga

p in . . . . His ho - - - - li - ness. . . . lunga

p in . . . . His ho - - - - li - ness. . . . lunga

p in . . . . His ho - - - - li - ness. . . . lunga

A little slower

p in . . . . His ho - - - - li - ness. . . . lunga

p in . . . . His ho - - - - li - ness. . . . lunga

O PRAISE GOD IN HIS HOLINESS

Molto maestoso

Let ev - 'ry thing . . . that hath

Let ev - 'ry thing . . . that hath

Let ev - 'ry thing . . . that hath

Let ev - 'ry thing . . . that hath

Molto maestoso

f Gt.

Full Sw.

Gt.

senza Ped.

Ped.

Molto allargando

breath . . . praise, . . . praise . . . the Lord.

breath . . . praise, . . . praise . . . the Lord.

breath . . . praise, . . . praise . . . the Lord.

breath . . . praise, . . . praise . . . the Lord.

Molto allargando

Full Sw. open

ff Gt.

Ped.

* The first Soprano part may be omitted if it is found more convenient.

PRIEST-ORGANISTS : THE HISTORICAL POSITION

SIR,—Much has been said of late of the position of the organist, and lay-organists are complaining that many of the clergy are being chosen as organists just because they are clergy, and are presumably taking the bread out of the mouths of other men who devote their lives to music.

It is a grave question, and one which must be faced with all seriousness and justice. Much depends on the legal position, but more upon the historical. To get at a right and true solution of this question, we must go back to the early ages and trace the position of the men to whom the music of the Church was entrusted, and then, when the historical position has been studied, translate the knowledge of the past into the requirements of the present.

At the outset we notice that the great reformers of Church music, and the men who laid the foundations, were not merely priests but bishops, and men who were known for their sanctity of life. Taking three examples of men who had the highest of ideals, we learn that St. Ignatius (about 100 A.D.) tried to make the music of the Church on earth attain as near as possible to the music of the angel-choir of heaven. For this purpose he formed a double choir, that by a kind of spiritual emulation produced by periodic voice-rest, the singers might be able to raise their voices in fuller tone to God.

St. Ambrose went a step further. Not only did he organize, systematise, and regulate Church music for his clergy, but also divided his congregation into two parts (men and women), so introducing the true form of antiphonal singing. The great ideal of St. Ambrose seems to have been to make the congregation take its part in the music of the Church. This was about the end of the 4th century.

Two hundred years later St. Gregory (whatever critics may say with regard to his supervision of Church music) had at least this great ideal—that wherever the Church's praise arose throughout all the world, there should be the same method of song.

The history of the Church in England during the two hundred years following shows that music was developed under the teaching and influence of the monks of St. Augustine and their followers. Music was in fact looked upon as part of the priest's craft.

Then as we go down the ages of the Church, we find that music was almost entirely in the hands of the clergy for several hundred years. It was part of their duty to teach their flocks how to raise their voices in praise to God.

It may be said that all this refers rather to choirmasters than to organists. Perfectly right—so far as we have gone. Organs appear to have been used in Church worship since the year 660 A.D., but not in England till soon after the Norman Conquest. Most of the organs which existed during the next few hundred years were not only played but built by the monks.

At the time of the Reformation an attempt was made by the ultra-Protestants to get rid of organs. But gradually the music of the Church developed, often by means of the work of lay-musicians, who, as the clergy were not at that time always educated in Church music, were allowed to be responsible for this particular branch of the Church's work as the delegates of the clergy. That is the position at the present day. The organist is in point of fact 'the hands' of the incumbent, so far as the music of the Church is concerned. The Church Assembly has evidently recognised this, for the 'Handbook for Churchwardens and Church-councillors' states that 'the office is not known to common law, and as such the organist has no legal status.' This may not be a very satisfactory state of affairs; certainly it is not, so far as the organist is concerned, and it is for us to find a solution of the difficulty.

First with regard to the number of priests who are becoming priest-organists, the question may well be asked 'Were they organists before they were priests?' If so, where is the objection to carrying on that which is part of the work of a priest, i.e., responsibility for the music of the Church? The present-day organist who is in the forefront of his profession would feel it rather hard if he were not allowed to continue his work as organist if he took Holy Orders. Every one will acknowledge that the work of a Church organist differs from that of other musicians in the one great fact that it is a Holy Vocation. If that is a fact, then it must follow that it is a work which is suitable for a priest to undertake.

So long as Church music is not a recognised part of the training of priests, it will be quite impossible to do without lay-organists. But the position remains that the organist, whether priest or layman, is responsible for Church music under the incumbent. In other words, he translates the wishes of the latter to the keyboard and the choir. These appear then to be two solutions of the present-day difficulty. One is to make Church music part of the training for Holy Orders, so making the clergy capable of carrying out that which is historically part of their work—a work which the present generation of clergy are as a whole incapable of undertaking; and the second is one which appears to many minds to be feasible (though possibly it may not appeal to the minds of some of the bishops), i.e., admit such organists as are suitable to the office of deacon. In the present condition of things in the Church—the shortage of clergy and the difficulty of raising money for the higher stipends of both clergy and organists—this would be a help both ways. What a tremendous advantage it would be to the priest to have an organist capable of assisting with the chalice at an early Eucharist, taking Sunday schools, children's services, clubs, visiting, &c.

There are many organists to-day who, by their love for the Church, their sanctity of life (some rarely omitting their daily Eucharist) and their education, are not only fitted for such work, but have answered the call to become Church-organists because the way did not appear open to them to do work for God in the highest office.—Yours, &c.,

T. FRANCIS FORTH.

---

SIR,—Now that the above subject has aroused discussion, one may perhaps present another aspect of it for the consideration of your readers. A matter that has come to the notice of one of the numerous 'Organists' Associations' may get an impartial survey from your wider circle.

If a very able, highly-trained, and qualified musician takes Holy Orders, and eventually a benefice, is he justified in making use of the numerous opportunities which come to him as a clergyman—denied to ordinary musicians—to take professional work (recitals, conducting, &c.), and also as a teacher to come into active competition with professional musicians who have no benefice to fall back on, and who find that all unwittingly, and in good faith, they have been 'queering their own pitch' by welcoming a 'musical clergyman' into their midst?—Yours, &c.,

September, 1924.

A PROVINCIAL MUSICIAN.

---

SIR,—It is not a question of the musical qualifications of priest-organists, and the number of them in office does not affect the general principle. The real point is that these men, who of their own free will seek ordination and the definite work it implies, turn aside to usurp places which ought to be held by men who have been trained for a specialised branch of the musical profession. I am speaking of priest-organists who aspire to cathedral appointments. I would not acquiesce in the election of any priest to a cathedral organistship, even on ceteris paribus terms. Mr. Samson says the work of a priest is many-sided. That, we may assume, is to some extent an explanation of many ill-prepared sermons. Why add to the side-lines? There is no dearth of competent organists. On the other hand we are constantly being reminded of a shortage of parsons, and this at a time when the spiritual needs of the Church are more urgent than ever before in its history. My cathedral work alone takes up, on an average, twenty-eight hours a week. This does not include time spent on private practice. Is a priest justified in such an expenditure of time on work outside his priestly office? The exacting nature of present-day musical requirements is so different from that obtaining in pre-Reformation days that my contention would appear to be beyond dispute. If the clergy are to perform their own duties adequately there will be no half-timers. Let Mr. Samson take his own advice and think over the question again. May I, in conclusion, remind him that if Church organists were other than 'spiritually minded' they would seek more lucrative fields in which to exercise their gifts. Spirituality is not a monopoly of the clergy.—Yours, &c.,

Ripon.

CHARLES H. MOODY.

September, 1924.

'A COMMENTARY UPON MENDELSSOHN'

SIR,—I appreciate the advice extended to me by 'Peter Piper,' who suggests that I should endeavour to acquire a little of what Wodehouse calls 'the big, broad, flexible outlook,' and I am glad to be able to state that I have already acquired a little, with the result that I am able to appreciate the greatness of the music given through the hand of Mendelssohn.

There is much in 'Peter Piper's' letter with which one can agree, but some points must be challenged; for example, I must put a cross against his little sum reducing my letter to its lowest terms, because the answer is wrong and is based upon illogical reasoning. There is in fact nothing in my letter which could convey the idea that I attacked Mr. Foss's opinion because he found flaws in Mendelssohn's music, neither is there any indication that I don't find flaws, and therefore most certainly neither of these points can be regarded as the reason why I referred to Mr. Foss's sweeping attack as 'pathetic in view of the present condition of music in this country.' My statement that it is not surprising that the deeper aspect of the music in question should be lost in these days of night clubs and jazz, comes out in 'Peter Piper's' sum as 'Mr. Foss's article savours of night clubs and jazz'! (I am sorry I cannot see my way to put Q.E.D. after this.)

I regret to say that I sense a little scorn in the reference to 'pious unction' in Mendelssohn's music, which reminds me of those who scorn all great music because it is what they call 'churchy,' and who, if they had their way, would reduce music from the pinnacle of the greatest art down to the level of a third-rate trade. Surely it is possible to be a broad-minded man of the world without losing sight of the things which really matter; such was the case with Mendelssohn himself.

Returning to the main point, the chief question is whether I was justified in expressing in the way I did my feelings regarding Mr. H. J. Foss's criticism. I submit that if the following newspaper account of Mr. H. J. Foss at Wigmore Hall is fair, and refers to the writer of the article, then my summary criticism is justified.

The Sunday Observer of July 20 announced a smoking concert at Wigmore Hall, accompanist, Mr. Hubert J. Foss, and the Daily Mail critic writes, in the issue of July 23, as follows:

'Mr. John Goss's smoking concert at Wigmore Hall, W., last night, was a gallant departure from hyper-aesthetic music. . . . "Mrs. Dyer, the wretched baby-farmer," styled a "Victorian ballad," had a rowdy success. Mr. Foss vamped the accompaniment in the right tavern-parlour style, and the horrors of the subject caused roars of laughter. The crowded audience was delighted.'

Some of us would be glad to hear that this Mr. Foss and the one who wrote the disparaging article under discussion are not one and the same person; if they are, then may I whisper in friendly confidence to Mr. Foss that it is probably these little adventures into the underworld of music which tend to blind the musical faculty to the greatness of the works of the masters; they will most certainly impair the 'critical judgment' and 'artistic perceptivity' referred to by 'Peter Piper.'—Yours, &c.,

J. WEARHAM.

28, Mount Ephraim Lane, S.W.16.

September, 1924.

STILL ON THE LARYNX!

SIR,—Concerning recent letters on high or low larynx and the laryngoscope. When will this futile, dark, and harmful quest cease? Who shall dogmatise to nature? This poking of the will into automatic processes is presumptuous and fatal. Any attempt to fix the larynx in song is so much local effort, the penalty of which is failure.

Given right bodily conditions, all parts above the chest are let, not made, to sing. Here the law of art is non-interference.

Again, the findings of the laryngoscope during attempted phonation are very misleading, for the simple reason that the artistic voice is necessarily invisible. There is nothing to be said against the laryngoscope in its proper sphere. In the hands of the skilled physician it is a boon and a blessing to men, but in the domain of song its use has exerted a baneful influence.

The same may be said of all anatomical methods. Physiological schools of singing never produced a singer, and never will. On the other hand they have ruined thousands of voices. The vocal profession has yet to learn the grand lesson of Ruskin as to the deleterious effects of importing anatomical conceptions into art. Physiology impinges very obliquely on the practical work of the singing master, whose domain is psychological, not anatomical. He is concerned with feeling, thought, and will, not with bones and meat. There is a right and a wrong use of the will. The only mechanical process legitimately related to the artistic will is right bodily position and action. This, plus non-interference with the parts above the chest, secures an equilibrium of forces and spontaneity of utterance in which the larynx is shut out of mind, because its position and play are automatically and unconsciously correct.

I repeat: Right bodily position and action, plus non-interference above the chest, is the sine qua non of free vocal utterance. Given this, the artist comes to his own. He seems no longer of the flesh. He is soul. His body or medium is tone, and through tonal spontaneity the soul is made manifest. Such, and such alone, is the way—nature, spirit, and meaning—of song.—Yours, &c.,

Corporation Street West, Walsall.

WALTON ABBOTT.

September, 1924.

SIR,—As a vocal student at the G.S.M. in its early days, and one who has all along been keenly interested in the vocal art, I have been highly diverted in reading the articles on the above subject which have appeared in your recent issues.

The assertion not infrequently made that in no department of music teaching is there more quackery practised than in that of singing, receives some support in the two articles where the writers are poles asunder in their views, as every singer knows that in practice the larynx adapts itself naturally and automatically to the note required to be sung.—Yours, &c.,

JAMES O'DOWD.

SIR,—Owing to loose methods of reasoning your correspondent has been attacking Manuel Garcia when she should have attacked those of her living colleagues who, in her opinion, use the laryngoscope wrongly. To state that Manuel Garcia's invention (by which he verified the correctness of his theories concerning the vocal cords by ocular observation) did immense harm to singing, when she really means that people who stretch the throat with it while trying to sing do immense harm to their own singing, is much the same as observing that volumes of vocal exercise do immense harm to singing because the throat would be damaged if you put the volume into your mouth while singing.

Mrs. Aubrey questions the truth of Manuel Garcia's facts and the conclusions drawn! As these were accepted as scientifically proved by the Royal Society in London, the Institute in Paris, and by the scientific world generally sixty years ago, and have never been disputed since that time, Mrs. Aubrey sets herself up as superior to the greatest scientific societies.

Mrs. Aubrey attacks the whole of the members of laryngological societies all over the world as a body of men who have simply made use of the laryngoscope as a means of extracting fees from an unsuspecting public. Mrs. Aubrey is 'the real throat specialist.'

Mrs. Aubrey states that 'the larynx in the highest position it can assume is capable of expressing any emotion.' Evidently Mrs. Aubrey is superior to the science of acoustics and to the observations of physiologists. In regarding certain facts as proved they have been as incapable of understanding logical scientific proof, as in her opinion the scientific world has been for sixty years over Garcia's observed facts and conclusions. The greatest teachers of the past have treated these facts as the foundation of their teaching.—Yours, &c., M. STERLING MACKINLAY.

August, 1924.

[This correspondence must now cease.—EDITOR.]

[A correspondent, whose name it will be kind to suppress, writes complaining of an unfavourable review of his compositions in our columns. He claims 'the right to hit back'—a right that will, of course, be conceded. But there are methods of hitting, and not all are permissible. So, as he begins by describing the offending reviewer as 'a congenital idiot' and a 'low-grade . . .' (the epithet is indecipherable), he adopts a form that at once puts him out of the ring, and we have accordingly diverted his blows to the waste-paper basket.—EDITOR.]

Sixty Years Ago

From the Musical Times of October, 1864:

BIRMINGHAM FESTIVAL.—Nobody knows better than Mr. Costa that such an ovation as he experienced at Birmingham has little to do with the permanent place of his new oratorio in the temple of art. Worse compositions than 'Naaman' have ere now received a similar success, and better ones have been condemned. We can bear testimony, however, to the excessive beauty of many portions of the work. . . . The solo music given to Adah was sung by Mlle. Adelina Patti, who made a most successful début as an oratorio singer on this occasion, in such a manner as to have more than satisfied the composer. . . . 'Naaman' is a work of the highest order of talent, an advance upon 'Eli,' but an advance in that school of writing which, however great may be the temporary success, can never entitle it to a place with those mighty creations of genius, the appreciation of which is only deepened by age.

M. JULLIEN commenced a series of Promenade Concerts at Her Majesty's Theatre on September 19. The programme was made up of the usual mixture of symphonies, overtures, and quadrilles. In spite of the much talked of cultivation of musical taste in England, nobody seems to have the courage to attempt a nightly classical orchestral concert.

Sharps and Flats

The café band and the restaurant orchestra are direct incentives to indigestion.—A. T. Akeroyd.

The suggestion is nothing short of absurd. Music is a distinct aid to digestion. If people get indigestion, would they return time after time? People do not enjoy having indigestion.—Buchanan Taylor, of Messrs. Lyons.

I myself hardly ever read concert notices. It is bad enough to have to write the dreadful stuff; to read it is impossible.—Ernest Newman.

After having been an anti-nationalist all my life, I have come over to the English camp. I have definitely changed my faith. No more cosmopolitanism in music for me!—W. J. Turner.

Mozart, Haydn, and Chopin, were they alive to-day, would write fox-trots as naturally and inevitably as they once composed gavottes, minuets, and mazurkas.—George Vail.

Jazz? I've never heard of it.—Xaver Scharwenka.

If the truth were known about the origin of the word 'jazz' it would never be mentioned in polite society.—Clay Thomas.

I prefer 'Tannhäuser' to 'Lohengrin,' and the latter to the 'Ring.' Weber comes much closer to my temperament than Wagner, though of course I recognise the superiority of the giant of Bayreuth.—Igor Stravinsky.

Blared and blahed in Old World shrines of what is dignified as 'good music,' championed by pedants and quidnuncs in colleges and conservatories, patted on the back by newspaper critics and magazine feuilletonists, imitated and embellished by 'serious' composers, and given respectable place in the orthodox programmes of recitalists and concert organizations, jazz now finds itself without a future.—Oscar Thompson.

The Amateurs' Exchange

Under this heading we insert, free of charge, announcements by amateur musicians who wish to co-operate with others.

St. Simon's Orchestra, Southsea, would welcome amateur instrumentalists (string or wind). Practices, fortnightly, Wednesdays, 6.30 to 9.30.—HON. SECRETARY, 21, Frensham Road, Southsea.

Wanted for small orchestra in North London (easy reach of W.C.2 and N.5 districts), violins, viola, 'cello, clarinet, oboe, and bassoon. Small subscription, excellent library.—SECRETARY, 15, Eleanor Road, Romford Road, E.15.

Trained vocalist (mezzo-contralto) wishes to meet good accompanist for mutual practice.—I. F. W., 83, Standard Road, Bexley Heath, Kent.

The Westminster Choral Society resumes rehearsals on October 7, at the Guildhouse, Eccleston Square, S.W.1. Contralto and male voices wanted.—J. A. TRINDER, 96, Shoe Lane, E.C.4.

A new amateur orchestra, commencing in the autumn in North London, invites applications from all instruments.—SYDNEY ERRATT, 57, Petherton Road, Highbury, N.5.

Will gentlemen (any instruments) give voluntary help in forming a small band to perform at a men's service on Sunday afternoons in the N.7 postal district? Offers of occasional instrumental and vocal solos also wanted. The Organist may be seen on any Sunday afternoon at St. Mary Magdalene Church, Holloway Road, N.7. Service commences at 3.15.

The Butterworth Rembrandt Orchestra (fifty members) has a few vacancies for ladies and gentlemen (all instruments). Small subscription. Rehearsals, Fridays.—SECRETARY, Hughes's Memorial Hall, St. John's Hill, Clapham Junction, S.W.11.

Young gentleman wanted to act as manager to director and conductor of large orchestra. Entirely an honorary post. Applicant need not be a musician, but must have tact and business ability.—Write, stating age and other particulars, to W. C. B., 22, Chivalry Road, S.W.11.

Tenor vocalist wishes to meet accompanist for mutual practice. Sydenham or Beckenham districts, within easy reach of Penge East Station preferred.—P., c/o Musical Times.

Male-Voice Quartet, winner three London festivals, invites another quartet or individual singers to join in forming octet. Wood Green district.—G. H. WHEELER, 198, Lymington Avenue, N.22.

Croydon Symphony Orchestra and Philharmonic Society has vacancies for singers and instrumentalists. Works for this season include 'The Dream of Gerontius,' Beethoven's Symphony in C minor, Borodin's Symphony in B minor, 'Hiawatha,' &c.—All particulars from the hon. secretary, E. NUNNELBY, 20, Heathfield Road, South Croydon.

The Peel Orchestra invites applications for membership for the winter session. Excellent library.—Hon. secretary, G. E. BARBER, 19, John Street, Bedford Row, W.C.1.

Pianist (lady) wishes to meet violinist or vocalist for practice of accompaniments. Birmingham—Kings Norton or Moseley districts, or near.—X. L., c/o Musical Times.

Pianist (gentleman) wishes to meet violinist or 'cellist, residing in or near East Ham district, for mutual practice.—R. N. B., 47, Sibley Grove, East Ham, E.12.

The Leysian Mission Band wishes to hear from reliable cornet players, who would take up voluntary work in this connection.—BANDMASTER, Leysian Mission, City Road, E.C.

Violinist and pianist wish to meet 'cellist for mutual practice in chamber or orchestral trios.—S. E. W., c/o Musical Times.

Tenors and basses required for choral and orchestral society at West Ham. Wood-wind and brass players also wanted.—S. L., 160, Clements Road, East Ham, E.6.

Bowes Park Symphony Orchestra, North London (first-rate music only, with opportunities for solo work), has vacancies for wind (wood and brass) and 'cello.—Hon. secretary, W. PEARSON, 20, Beech Road, Bowes Park, N.

The North London Orchestral Society resumed rehearsals at St. John's Church Hall, Gloucester Road, Finsbury Park, N., on Monday, September 29, at 7.30. Flat pitch used. New members welcomed.—Applications to hon. secretary, Mrs. WALTER SEDGFIELD, 54, Bethune Road, N.16.

A small string orchestra is being formed for the purpose of playing for mutual enjoyment the works of Bach, Byrd, Handel, Purcell, Vaughan Williams, &c. Applications are invited from all instruments. Occasional concerts. Meetings near Victoria.—C. J. BATES, 76, Leighton Road, Ealing, W.13.

The Kensal Rise Orchestra (re-forming for the season 1924-25) has vacancies for good 2nd violins, viola, 'cello, bass, oboes, bassoons, and brass. Rehearsals, Thursdays, 8 p.m., at Kensal Rise Wesleyan Church.—Particulars from the hon. secretary, A. FENTIMAN, 42, Bathurst Gardens, Kensal Rise, N.W.10.

Chiswick and Gunnersbury Philharmonic Society (conductor, Mr. David M. Davis) would especially welcome men's voices for 'Il Trovatore' (concert version) and 'King Olaf.' Vacancy for double-bass, and others in choir and orchestra.—Hon. orchestral secretary, E. LESLIE SIKES, 223a, Hammersmith Road, W.6.

'Cellist and pianist wish to meet violinist for mutual practice of chamber music. Wimbledon.—M. A., c/o Musical Times.

London Shipping Orchestral Society resumes rehearsals at Institute of Marine Engineers, 85, Minories, E.1, on Mondays, at 6 p.m., commencing October 6. First concert of season at Queen's Hall on January 7, 1925. Vacancies in all departments for good instrumentalists.—A. D. WILLIS, c/o Bullard, King & Co., Ltd., 14, St. Mary Axe, E.C.3.

North London Philharmonic Society has vacancies in all departments of the orchestra, especially 'cello, viola, and double-bass. Rehearsals, Tuesday evenings.—SECRETARY, 30, Broke Road, Dalston, E.8.

Timpanist offers services to orchestral society possessing its own instruments. North London preferred.—W. H. H., c/o Musical Times.

Violinist and pianist wish to meet 'cellist for mutual practice.—C. J. HART, 3, St. Peter's Road, N.7.

Young lady pianist (L.R.A.M.) wishes to meet instrumentalist or vocalist for practice in accompaniment. Would join trio, quartet, or orchestra. Torquay district, or within easy reach by train or cycle.—A. V., c/o Musical Times.

St. Stephen's, Bow, Choral Society has vacancies for tenors and basses. Bach's '100th Psalm' and People's Palace Festival music. Rehearsals, Tuesday evenings, commencing October.—W. E. PEPPER, 32, Marlborough Road, E.18.

Soprano wishes to meet accompanist (lady) for mutual practice. West London.—SOPRANO, c/o Musical Times.

Pianist and violinist (gentlemen) wish to meet violinist, 'cellist, flautist, &c., for weekly practice, collective or individual, of duets, trios, quartets, &c.—CHARLES P. COCKS, 'Trenance,' Morland Road, Croydon.

Pianist wishes to meet instrumentalists for chamber music practice. North London district.—A. R. C. M., 11, Albert Road, Dalston, E.8.

Instrumentalists required to form orchestra for St. Philip's Church, Kennington Road, S.E.11. Good choir and organ. In practice, Moore's 'Darkest Hour.'—Write, F. A. EUSTACE, 42, Dawnay Road, S.W.18.

Second violinist and 'cellist required to complete a string quartet. Cricklewood district.—PIANIST, c/o Musical Times.

Good instrumentalists, strings, wood-wind, &c., required for monthly Sunday evening musical service at Whitefield's Tabernacle, Tottenham Court Road, W.1. Rehearsals, Wednesdays, at 8. No subscriptions.—SPENCER SHAW, 112, Tufnell Park Road, N.7.

Grafton Philharmonic Society has vacancies for all voices. Rehearsals are held in the Church Parlour of Clapham Congregational Church, Grafton Square, Old Town, Clapham, on Thursdays, at 8 p.m. The works to be rehearsed are Brahms's 'Requiem,' English madrigals, 'St. Matthew' Passion, &c.—Apply to the hon. musical director, HENRY F. HALL, 'Forest End,' Forest Hill Road, S.E.23.

Viola-player wanted to join string quartet for practice of chamber music. Bolton (Lancashire) district.—L. C., c/o Musical Times.

Good amateur violinists and other instrumentalists required in the orchestra of the West Middlesex Musical Society. Rehearsals, Wednesdays, at Haven Green Hall, Ealing.—Full particulars from the HON. SECRETARY, 20, Fordhook Avenue, Ealing, W.5.

Pianist wishes to accompany violinist or join orchestra. Good reader. Can play second violin.—COOPER SMITH, 2, Franconia Road, Clapham, S.W.4.

Tenor choralist (Handel Festival Choir) wants assistance from pianist in rehearsing the lesser-known works of Handel, &c. One evening a week. London district.—C. F. H., c/o Musical Times.

CHANTING: A SUGGESTION

BY DONALD MACARTHUR

Some years back an eminent plainchant expert and researcher remarked airily that we should never have a really satisfactory pointing for the English Psalms until we had a new translation of the Psalter—an amazing obiter dictum from one with whom the excellent old saw, 'The text the mistress; the note the slave,' was a boasted working principle. No doubt when the Church Assembly has finished its protracted labours on Prayer Book revision, there will be licensed an amended translation, apparently already in existence; but this, while removing a few archaisms and correcting one or two obvious mistranslations, will leave the old rhythms of the current version very much as we now have them, and we shall be no nearer escaping the problems which these rhythms often present us.

The Book of Common Prayer on its title-page informs us that it offers us the Psalms 'pointed as they are to be sung or said in Churches.' This refers to the colon which divides every verse into two sections, and may seem a very large name for a very small matter. But loyalty demands that, whatever further provision is made for ease and fluency in chanting, this division should be scrupulously observed. A sensible pause at the colon point is a tradition of immemorial antiquity, and the suggestion of a median break lingers even in the most modern form of the Anglican chant. In many verses of Psalms and Canticles the existing point of division does not seem particularly happy; there are cases where each of us may perhaps feel that if the business had been left to him he could have done it better. But even in some apparently perverse divisions there is force when the matter is thought out. Anyone who has been used to the Benedictine pause must feel, for example, that in saying the Te Deum there is a dramatic fitness and intensity about 'We believe that Thou shalt come : to be our Judge' that the sentence in one breath lacks. Therefore the temptation to dodge the authoritative colon for our own private ends—either by combining two verses or by breaking up one verse into two or more—should be severely repressed. There is an ill precedent for the first of these courses in the joining of verses 12 and 13 of the Te Deum, a long-standing custom of many choirs. As to the second, many recent pointed Psalters (the 'Barless' most frequently) have not hesitated to do so where it appeared that smoother singing might be facilitated thereby.

Meanwhile if the text is thus beyond liberties, the note, even in the Anglican chant—as is rightly assumed by every worker in the direction of freer and more elastic chanting—is not. And it will bend itself very nicely to meet one awkward case: the final half-verse of a Psalm that has only five syllables or less. Plainsong finds no difficulty with these short ends, being able to suppress the 'dominant' (i.e., reciting note), and even others if necessary. Anglican pointing ordinarily meets the case by giving the reciting note and that which follows to one syllable: e.g., 'and | —re- | prove | me,' an arrangement that gives an awkward cross accent which is felt even in an expert choir's singing, and grows more emphatic the less well-trained the choir is. Some Psalters advise the suppression of the reciting note here after the plain-chant fashion, but the build of the Anglican chant and the equipment of an average choir make this far from a simple matter—unless the chant be on the pattern of those early ones in which the note that precedes the double-bar and that which follows it are identical and rest on the same harmony. With Pelham Humfrey's 'Grand Chant,' for example, in the last verse of Psalm 150, we can cut out the second reciting chord very nicely and obviously escape the cross accent thereby.

But if instead of cutting out that chord we think of it as absorbed into the first section of the chant, thus:

EX. 1.

Let every thing that hath breath : . . Praise . . the Lord.

the door is at once open to a treatment that will fit chants that are without that prescribed limitation. A single syllable precedes the colon, but the harmony changes; well, let it:

EX. 2.

Wherefore shall the heathen say : . . Where is now their God?

Not very difficult to get smooth. There are chants as comparatively old as Crotch's time that have normally two notes in the pre-colon bar which sing quite easily to a single syllable. Easier still if before the colon there are two syllables:

EX. 3.

O praise the Lord of hea - ven: praise Him in the height.
Praise Him, all ye angels of His: . . praise Him, all His host.
Beasts and all cat - tle: worms and feathered fowls.

Having thus started along the line of least resistance it soon becomes plain that even where the absorbed reciting note is not identical with its predecessor it can be used for a single syllable, provided it does not proceed by a leap:

EX. 4.

For mine eyes have seen: . . Thy sal - va - tion.

Where there are two (or three) syllables before the colon, even the leap does not matter; in fact, it is a merit:

EX. 5.

Let his children be fath - er - less: and his wife a widow.

Thy children like the o - live branch - es: round a - bout thy table.

All these examples are from single chants. Many double chants are equally tractable:

EX. 6.

But Thou con - tinu - est ho - ly: O Thou worship of Israel.

EX. 7.

Whoso lea - deth a god - ly life: . . he shall be my servant.

Whoso privily slan - der - eth his neigh - bour: him will I des - troy.

A good free style of chanting is assumed, in which the convention of semibreve and minim is taken for what it is worth: a convention. Apart from this convention, what is suggested here would be much better conveyed—so far as good chanting can be expressed in any notation—by crotchets and quavers. The pointing followed is that of the much-used 'Cathedral Psalter.' The musical examples have not been specially chosen for the purposes of this article. In each case the chant is that assigned to the Psalm in a collection which was made years ago for a small country choir with no object than that of securing flexibility and low reciting pitch. The assigned chants in other collections may not always give such happy results. But what choir adheres strictly to any collection of chants; unless, perhaps, it be one of its own making? Substitution would be an easy matter where the appointed chant happens to be refractory.

The village choir just mentioned grasped the principle after a quarter of an hour's talk, with examples, and has since applied it unhesitatingly to new cases as they arise. A small cautionary mark against each verse requiring this treatment jogs the memory, but is now hardly needed. The method can be applied to any pointing of any Anglican Psalter.

THE WELSH WEEK AT WEMBLEY

The Welsh Musical Festival at Wembley—August 25 to 30—was a gallant attempt to uphold the rights of music in that huge fair. It certainly was a magnificent advertisement for the musical claims of the Welsh. 'Wales sings to the British Empire' was everywhere announced, and if the sightseers in their myriads did not all go to hear, none could help but have it impressed on him that Wales was being true to her vocal traditions.

Historians may say that choral singing is comparatively a new thing in Wales, that there are singularly slight records of any ancient music in Wales, and that the folk-song of Wales is decidedly scanty. No matter: the legend is safely established in England that Wales is and has been through all the ages a great land of music. The visitor to the National Eisteddfod is sometimes inclined to believe that it is the last stronghold of bad music. Nevertheless, there is good in this rather flattering theory that the Welsh are musical beyond most men. It does induce a great number of Welsh folk to take to music, and in the matter of choral singing numbers do count. There are also a great number of composers in Wales, and this is not an unmixed blessing, for any Welsh composer who can put together a more or less grammatical part-song expects to be handsomely performed. At the Eisteddfod and elsewhere, Wales is very generous to these would-be immortals. The most that can be critically said is that when a Welsh musical genius one day comes into being, there will be all the machinery ready to bring him at once into the light. Minor Welsh composers seem to be the most generously treated of creative musicians to-day—except, perhaps, the members of the Paris 'Six.'

A good deal of Welsh music was heard in this Wembley week, but a good deal also of universal music. In fact it was less the native works, and even less the standard of the performances than the excellence of the foreign music chosen, which distinguished the Festival and promised a better future for musical Wales. It was indeed predominantly a week of Bach, with performances of the B minor Mass, the 'St. Matthew' Passion, the cantata, 'Sleepers, wake!' and part of 'O Light Everlasting.' A few years ago Bach was virtually unknown in Wales. Mendelssohn was the musical overlord there. If this new cult of Bach has gone really deep, then there is a new hope for Wales. Music in Wales has for the most part been a great, easy-going democratic affair—much heart and little head. Bach, if his lesson is being well read, will not tolerate that. His lesson inculcates a higher artistic honour.

The moving spirit of the whole week was Sir Walford Davies, the director of the National Council of Music, University of Wales, and his earnest and ardent character helped much to make of it all a truly artistic endeavour. It might so easily have been a mere musical bean-feasting. The difficulties in the way of a calmly uplifting achievement and the atmosphere proper to the making of great music were vast, not to say insuperable. The Conference Hall, where the concerts of the first five days were given, is a convenient room. A hall of that size would be useful near Oxford Circus. But it has a fierce echo. To be made tolerable the hall should have some floor covering, heavy hangings, and a full audience. As it was it was nearly intolerable. The audiences were not very numerous. The Festival had been rather under-advertised, or surely out of the vast and aimlessly wandering hordes in the grounds of Wembley there would have been enough inclined to fill that hall for a couple of hours of noble music. Those that came in were in large part disinclined to listen. There probably have never been such non-listeners at performances of Bach's Mass and 'Passion.' They talked, they smoked, they walked in and out as they saw fit—and all this in a room where the least whisper is magnified. It was unfortunate that the supply of programmes was inadequate. And even when a programme was secured the information it afforded was extremely meagre. It gave no text of any of the works sung, and no sort of explanation. One must assume that the non-listening Wemblers had, poor things, no notion of what was in progress. In the face of all this, the proper dignity of a musical festival could not very well be maintained, and it did not matter very much that programmes had to be greatly modified at the last minute, with attendant explanations. Sir Walford Davies indeed was always having to make explanatory speeches of one sort or another. Before the 'St. Matthew' Passion he 'gave away' that there had been no rehearsal and prophesied a break-down—which too truly occurred. At another concert a Welsh oratorio was interrupted for an oration by an M.P. from the Rhondda Valley, who at some length expressed the thanks of the concert-givers for the presence of the audience while reproaching absentees for the emptiness of many seats—altogether a homely proceeding which persons without a taste for oratory would call a waste of time.

Throughout the week the orchestra was the newly established Welsh Symphony Orchestra, which was reinforced by a number of London specialists. It is not yet a perfect instrument, but it is capital that it should be in existence. It will help all manner of musical enterprises in Wales, where the lack of an orchestra has long been a great handicap.

The Cardiff Musical Society (conductor, Mr. T. E. Aylward) began the Festival with an admirable programme—Palestrina, Gibbons and Wilbye, and Parry, Stanford, and Gerrard Williams. It is a choir that cultivates great delicacy and tenderness of expression. There were exquisite moments in Stanford's 'Heracitus,' Parry's 'There is an Old Belief,' and the cadence of Wilbye's 'Sweet honey-sucking bees.' Rhythmically it was less admirable. Sir Walford Davies took Mr. Aylward's place to conduct 'Sleepers, wake!' Here the alliance between singers and orchestra was felt to be improvised, and although Sir Walford kept it together manfully, this was not full compensation for the missing calm assurance. The soloists had not a good Bach style. They were too concerned with themselves, too expressive.

On the second day the orchestra gave two concerts, with Dvorák's 'New World' Symphony—really well played, the orchestra here evidently being thoroughly at home—and Sir Frederic Cowen's B flat ('Welsh') Symphony, which is certainly faded, yet still possesses elegance and attractiveness up to a point. A 'Celtic Rhapsody' by Cyril Jenkins was a workmanlike and acceptable setting-down of such fine tunes as 'The Rising of the Lark,' 'David of the White Rock,' and 'The Hunting of the Hare.' A Prelude in A minor by Kenneth Harding was a discreet little orchestral sketch, with various influences obviously enough acknowledged. Mr. W. R. Allen sang Dr. J. R. Heath's song, 'Admiral Death,' and Mr. David Ellis a set of Cywyddau by Dr. Vaughan Thomas, which had an engaging and decidedly national flavour. Another Welsh piece which seemed to be exploring a way to a new national style was 'Y Deildy,' by Dr. Lloyd Williams. This was a setting for tenor solo of an amorous ode by the 14th-century poet, Dafydd ap Gwilym, with a softly murmured choral accompaniment (no instruments). The tenor part was chant-like, and was, we were told, closely modelled on the rhythm of the verses. Not knowing Welsh, one missed something, but the effect still was beautifully tender and poetic—a promising departure from ordinary types of part-song. It was encored.

On the third day three Welsh boys' schools gave demonstrations of their musical instruction. These were very jolly. Dolgelly and Barry (Romilly Road) gave concerts, and Hendrefadog sang 'The Mikado.' Dolgelly is evidently a paradise for a music-loving school-boy. Chamber works of Handel, Haydn, Mozart, and Beethoven were played, and the choir tackled Elgar's lovely part-song 'The Snow.' We also heard some of the airs ('Dolgelly tunes') which the lads themselves had written, in pursuance of Sir Walford Davies's policy of setting all musical students on some sort of creative work.

At night the Ammanford Choral Society (conductor, Mr. Gwilym R. Jones) sang a selection from the B minor Mass. The soloists were Miss Katie Griffiths, Miss Rose Myrtil, and Mr. Tom Pickering. Sir Walford Davies played the continuo at the pianoforte. This Ammanford choir had been the first to sing the Bach Mass in Wales two years ago at the Ammanford Eisteddfod. Great credit for this feat redounds to the choirmaster, of whom Ammanford may be proud. The choir is a capital body, and had learnt the work well. The singers should be capable of giving a first-rate performance of the work one day. It is always hard to suggest that a choirmaster should at the last hand over the fruits of his labours to be displayed by another conductor. This Ammanford conductor was able up to a point, but he could not make the most of his forces. Certainly the brilliant choruses were electrifying, but the slow choruses got rather stodgy and dull, and there was altogether too little finesse. The contralto soloist did well, particularly in the upper part of her voice.

'Arch y Cyfamod,' by David Jenkins, was promised by Pontygaith Harmonic Society on the afternoon of August 28—a promise of some vagueness for English wanderers at Wembley. It turned out to be an oratorio ('Ark of the Covenant') by a composer who flourished half-a-century ago, but wrote then in a style of fifty years earlier still. An excellent choir worked hard to lash this music into life. Mr. W. M. Williams conducted. There was a good deal for the tenor soloist to do, and this was uncommonly well done by Mr. Myrddin Lewis, who made the most favourable impression among the soloists of the week. This young man has thoroughly sound technics and a most pleasant, free delivery.

At night, Sir Walford Davies conducted the Passion, with choral contingents from fourteen different places. Above are indicated some of the reasons why this fell short of an ideal performance. One did not respect the endeavours any the less. Miss Dilys Jones was good in the contralto arias. Mr. W. R. Allen sang the part of Jesus with earnest emotion—a degree of restraint would have been to the good. Mr. Owen Bryngwyn (bass) had a good voice, but was insufficiently prepared. The Evangelist was Mr. Pickering, who has decided gifts for this peculiarly exacting music, though there was some amount of backsliding into throaty vowels.

On the fifth day, Pontypool was to have come and repeated its 'Gerontius' performance of the recent Eisteddfod. Instead, we heard the Troedyrhiw Choir sing the test-pieces with which it had carried off first honours at that function. These pieces were the first chorus from Bach's 'O Light Everlasting,' Cyril Jenkins's 'Song of the Silent Land,' and 'Y Delyn Fud,' by Dr. David Evans. Mr. Herbert Llewellyn and Sir Walford Davies conducted. Mr. Jenkins's work had not, as a matter of fact, been heard at the Eisteddfod, owing to mishaps to band parts. It came out well now. It is a short ode, related in form, and to some extent in expression, to such pieces of Brahms as the 'Song of Destiny.' This music did not smite one with any overwhelming power or originality, but its handling of orchestra and chorus was dexterous. The composer seemed to know more surely than some of his compatriots whom we had heard, where he was bound for; and a measure of beauty was yielded. This concert was long and mixed, for though there were such good things as song-cycles by Elgar and Vaughan Williams, the audience prolonged the affair by lionising the singer of an imperfect performance of 'Lo, here the gentle lark,' and such like.

The gigantic concluding concert (three thousand singers in the Stadium) asked for little comment, for it was of the order of a national rather than a musical function. The truth is, there is little or no true musical effect from performances in such conditions, though the eye may all the time be adorning the ear to be properly impressed. The programme consisted of a portion of 'The Messiah,' and a very interesting mixed bag of Welsh and other music. All this is published together in book form, and since it contains a quantity of good things it ought to have a permanent life in musical Wales. The Elizabethan lutenist Robert Jones is included, on the strength of his name, and there are two excerpts from Palestrina. If Wales takes to the 16th century the future will be brighter for all who come in touch with her musical doings. It remains to be said that the Stadium audience was gigantic—a proper reward for the choirs, many of whom had had a night's travel in order to reach Wembley, and were faced with another before they regained home. C.

PROMENADE CONCERTS

One or two impressions stand out now that half the season of Queen's Hall Promenades has gone by. One is that the Haydn and Mozart Symphonies have brightened the programmes very greatly. The audiences at the Tuesday concerts, when these works are down (generally in happy association with something of Bach), have been steadily increasing, so that the last Tuesday of which I can speak here (September 16) brought enough people to pack the hall in every part. That may have been partly because Miss Myra Hess was playing. The artist still 'draws' more than the work. But if that is to be deplored as a rule, admiration of Miss Hess, carried to any length this side of idolatry, is not only excusable but commendable. That great artist, even in the Schumann Concerto, with its half-hearted orchestration, its inability to work up a climax, and its few timid attempts at development, gave genuine pleasure, because Miss Hess was so tender and coaxing with it. In the fifth 'Brandenburg' of Bach, her association with Mr. Charles Woodhouse and Mr. Murchie (violin and flute) provided a beautiful example of perfect felicity and mutual understanding. Than Mr. Murchie's flute playing I know nothing more satisfying to the lover of artistic shading and rhythmic subtlety.

But not all the soloists have been so mature in skill. The second of my impressions—after hearing many performers new to these concerts, and some who are regular visitors—is that imaginative artists are still very rare. Miss Margaret Fairless's Bach, for instance (in the second Violin Concerto in E) never got to the heart of the matter. Her rubato, her 'romantic' phrasing, would have been delicious in Mendelssohn; Bach was quite beyond her. A week later Madame Adila Fachiri was far more finely 'in the spirit,' in the A minor Concerto. Her tendency slightly to hurry was probably the result of an excess of that nervous energy which so distinguishes and graces her pure, virile playing. The slow movement, through her instrumentality, was a noble utterance.

Miss Harriet Cohen's reading of the D minor Pianoforte Concerto was full of emotion keenly controlled, of tonal beauty and rich expressiveness. The two-pianoforte adventure of Messrs. Langrish and Tidmarsh, in the third Concerto for this combination, was an assured success also. These excellently matched partners were so rhythmically alive and resilient that every phrase was a delight. Then we have had the Concerto in C for three pianofortes (Miss Isobel Gray, Miss Jessie Bristol, and Mr. Claude Pollard), with its strikingly dramatic Adagio; and a charmingly urbane, polished performance of the third double Violin Concerto, with strings and organ, by the partners at the orchestra's first desk, Mr. Woodhouse and Mr. Sutherland Mackay, the latter of whom we welcome after some years' absence. These were glorious feasts of Bach.

Only one or two of the singers have made us feel that they have power and personality above the average. Mr. Arthur Cranmer, who has a strong sense of drama, and will, I think, develop still broader vocal foundations on which to support it, stood out; and Madame Tatiana Makushina, too, can pose and 'hold' a song cleanly, and can penetrate below its surface. Messrs. Arthur Jordan and Tudor Davies have sung, the former a little above his former best (in 'Tannhäuser's Pilgrimage' he took a grip of the story and presented it as graphically as his limitations of tone-colour allow), and the other below his best. If only Mr. Davies would cease to strain and tighten his tone, his good long breathing and artistic phrasing would enable us to be at ease when listening to him. At present we are all anxiety, because of the sympathetic (though far from appreciative) feeling of strain that comes to us when he sings throatily, as he almost always does.

A third point about this series of concerts may be mentioned. One would very much like to know why certain works are brought out at all. What possible interest could anyone be expected to take in the rambling third Symphony of Saint-Saëns, for instance; or what nourishment is to be found in the second Symphony of Rachmaninov, that, though it contains dozens of skilful openings, does so little with any of them, works up many bustling climaxes on the too easy plan of sequentially presenting by no means vital themes, and generally spends its substance to surprisingly little profit? These works are distinctly poor. There are others, ancient battle steeds that ought not, if we were to hold to the highest artistic standards, to be trotted out again; but I know there is a public for them, and the organizers of the Proms. must consider the box-office. Without their concern for this side of the enterprise, we should, of course, have no concerts at all.

The complaint about the production of works like those I have mentioned is that if they were left where they ought to lie, on the top shelf, there would be room for more than one Brahms Symphony in the programmes of sixty-one concerts—and perhaps even one of Elgar's might be heard. A grumble about the make-up of the programmes must not, however, be taken as meaning that one does not intensely appreciate the general quality of the fare provided. The Proms. have helped us to face the foreigner in the gate when the quality of British orchestral playing has been raised, and when there has been talk of what good things 'popular' programmes might contain.

There was a curious thing to note on September 1. Miss Austral sang 'Isolde's death-song' very nobly, and with more fully-developed tone in her former weak spots—the middle and lower-middle parts of the voice—than I have heard from her before; and then she made a quite poor attempt at the Waltz Song from 'Tom Jones,' singing it with little sense of style. That was odd. Perhaps she can only do good things well. I hope she may think so, and let the ballads go by. Hers is too fine a voice to waste on trifles. I have found it worth while to stay sometimes for the second part of the programme. They not infrequently reveal another side of singers whose management of the operatic air in the first half may or may not have been adroit. By hearing them in music differing in quality so widely, I have often felt that a surer judgment could be come to. They cannot complain that it is not fair to take their ballad singing into account. As things are, this must, with most of them, represent the greater part of their concert experience, and if they must sing ballads, they ought to be expected to make the most of them. Curiously enough, quite a number seem to do much better in real music. Possibly they are a little awed by the operatic airs, and take fewer liberties with them than they do with the small things. One or two do equally well in either kind of music. Mr. Hubert Eisdell is in this class—but he takes great care to choose something operatic that demands only what he can give—refined, delicate tone and graceful phrasing. The voice wears a little, but Mr. Eisdell will be an idol of his particular public for years to come.

A member of the orchestra, Mr. Granville Britton, played confidently, with good tone and almost complete security in the heights, in Dvorák's 'Cello Concerto. Against the name of Miss Mila Wellerson, an agile young player of the same instrument, I find the pencilled note on my programme, 'This day arrived Jackie Coogan.' There was an air of the 'stunt' about her playing. I think Miss Wellerson has some good stuff in her, but she needs very careful guidance, and must not be allowed to throw off fireworks quite so casually (and sometimes badly) as she did in an arrangement she has made of a Paganini fiddle concerto movement. I do not know what happened to the orchestration of this—maybe it was mislaid in the conversion process.

Moiseivitch played the Tchaikovsky B flat minor Concerto superbly. I use the adverb only as meaning that the work has, I believe, found its ideal interpreter in this player. Both it and he have a touch of the Robot. His interpretation represents only one side of pianoforte playing. I regard his conception of the instrument as singularly limited; but if you like that sort of thing, his glittering, steely playing of the Tchaikovsky is of the sort to attract you, as it did the great crowd of worshippers who came to hear him.

As I noted last month, there are no actual novelties this season. One or two of the works that startled us in recent years are being done. Scriabin's 'Poem of Ecstasy' is one. The startling thing to me was to find how its effect palls now. It used to excite. What has happened? Can it be that the real quality in the music, that underlies all the would-be ecstatic mumbo-jumbo of the thing, is insufficient—that the padding is coming off, and the man beneath is being revealed as, not quite an ordinary man, but not nearly a god?

Re-hearings of one or two native works have been pleasant. Mr. Philip Sainton, who leads the orchestra's violas, conducted again his sketches 'The Sea' and 'The Shipyards.' He has a sure ear for sound-colour, and in the second piece he has done a notable thing in conveying an impression of immense energy and noise, while maintaining a strong flow of really musical ideas.

Dr. Malcolm Sargent's 'Impression of a Windy Day' is one of those bits of clever scoring in which, if you are in the mood to be pleased, you do not probe too deeply for vital themes or close-knit development. 'Here's a rather sporting idea. How does it strike you?' says the composer, and the right answer is, 'Jolly!'

E. J. Moeran's 'Rhapsody' is the kind of music that, in itself arousing no great enthusiasm, makes one hope to hear more from the composer. His use of folk-song-like themes does not quite give us the best chance of estimating his talent. I hope the good things I feel sure he has to say will not be spoiled by his insistence on this folk-song idiom. There is just a little danger in that, I think. His command of colour is already great, but we want to be sure of his constructive power. He may prove a broadening and significant figure when he gets to grips with big things.

A little Suite for strings by Miss Susan Spain-Dunk was just a collection of neat trifles, that amateur orchestras would like to play. She says a small thing cleanly, without waste of words, in a perfectly familiar style.

Finally, a word of warm appreciation of the orchestral playing in general. There have been small lapses, but the brilliancy and breadth of the great majority of the performances, under Sir Henry Wood's sure command, have been notable.

W. R. A.

THE MARGATE FESTIVAL

Margate is fortunate in possessing the chief requisites for a musical festival: (1) A large, bright, and comfortable concert-hall, good for sound; (2) an established orchestra; (3) a conductor worthy of his job. This is Mr. Bainbridge Robinson, whose services are employed by the municipality. Report speaks well of the music which he and the orchestra supply in their daily round. First-hand evidence, gleaned at the Festival of September 13-18, proved that they can rise to a special occasion. The Festival was the fourth at Margate. The scheme of its six concerts ran as follows: Miscellaneous and orchestral; an oratorio; Josef Holbrooke; Eugène Goossens and modern music; light music; ballads.

The miscellaneous selection was far from commonplace—Mancinelli's Overture 'Cleopatra' and the 'Caucasian Sketches' of Ippolitov Ivanov are not everyday music. If the Concerto, Liszt in E flat, was a commonplace affair, Mr. Walter Rummel's playing of it was nothing of the kind. Nor were all of the songs sung by Miss Esther Coleman. Altogether, the concert was suitable for the opening of a Festival, on a Saturday night, at the seaside.

For the second concert, on Sunday evening, everything was felicitously arranged. The London Choral Society, Mr. Arthur Fagge and all, came down and sang 'The Dream of Gerontius.' It was a case for congratulation both on the idea and on the way it was carried out. The choral singers were thoroughly familiar with the work, or sang as if they were, and everything which they and the orchestra contributed to the performance helped to strengthen the impression made by this great music upon an audience largely unfamiliar with it. The solo parts were taken by Miss Sybil Cropper, Mr. Arthur Jordan, and Mr. Walter Saull.

On Monday the audience made full acquaintance with Mr. Josef Holbrooke through his conducting and three of his works—the 'Three Blind Mice' Variations, the Violin Concerto (played by M. Miroslav), and 'The Birds of Rhiannon.' The acquaintance was friendly. The other works in the programme were Tchaikovsky's 'Romeo and Juliet' and Elgar's 'Polonia.'

The best of the orchestral concerts came on the following evening. Miss Beatrice Harrison played the Elgar Violoncello Concerto, and Mr. Goossens conducted the Bach-Elgar Prelude and Fugue, a 'Firebird' Suite, 'L'Après-Midi d'un Faune,' his own 'By the Tarn' and 'Tam o' Shanter,' and—happy selection—the eighth Symphony of Beethoven. Both the Concerto and the Bach transcription made a great impression.

The 'light music' concert owed much to Mr. Norman O'Neill, who conducted several of his fanciful pieces, notably those with which he adorned the productions of 'The Blue Bird' and 'Mary Rose.' Mr. Albert Ketèlbey also conducted his own works. These included a 'Suite Romantique' and an Overture, 'Chal Romano,' which were not appreciably 'lighter' than a good deal that had occurred in previous concerts. A third composer of the evening was Lieut. Walton O'Donnell with two works, 'Theme and Variations' and 'Miniature Suite,' which Mr. Bainbridge Robinson conducted. The ballad concert at the end of the Festival was no doubt a necessary concession. The best part of it was the instrumental music composed and conducted by Mr. Montague Phillips.

CHORAL SOCIETY PROGRAMMES

LONDON DISTRICT

The programme of the Philharmonic Choir will be found in our 'Occasional Note' on p. 905.

THE ROYAL CHORAL SOCIETY will (as usual) give concerts at the Royal Albert Hall on Saturday afternoons. The dates, works, and conductors are as follows: October 18, 'Elijah,' Mr. Albert Coates; November 15, Elgar's 'The Spirit of England' and Dame Ethel Smyth's Mass in D, Dr. Malcolm Sargent; December 20, Carols, Mr. H. L. Balfour; January 3, 'The Messiah,' Mr. H. L. Balfour; January 21, 'Hiawatha,' Mr. Eugène Goossens; February 28, 'The Dream of Gerontius'; March 21, Mass in B minor, Mr. Hamilton Harty. The last concert of the season is the performance of 'The Messiah,' under Dr. E. C. Bairstone, on Good Friday, April 10.

THE CIVIL SERVICE CHOIR, now conducted by Mr. Rutland Boughton, opens on December 4 with Bach's 'Sleepers, wake,' Mr. Boughton's Motet, 'The City,' and a work for female voices by Alec Rowley; the second programme, on February 11, is largely Elizabethan; the third, on April 1, includes Bach's 'Be not afraid' and Bainton's Choral Symphony, 'Before Sunrise.' The scheme is varied in many ways, notably with chamber music—Mozart's Oboe Quartet and Elgar's Pianoforte Quintet.

THE ALEXANDRA PALACE CHORAL AND ORCHESTRAL SOCIETY, conducted by Mr. Allen Gill, has the following programme: October 11, 'Elijah'; November 15, the third Acts of 'Tannhäuser' and 'Lohengrin'; December 6, 'The Song of Hiawatha'; February 7, the Mass in B minor; March 7, 'The Dream of Gerontius'; May 2, 'The Apostles.' The customary Good Friday performance of 'The Messiah' will not be given.

No information is yet to hand from the other leading choral societies. Such particulars as have arrived from suburban and provincial societies will be given next month, when we hope that the list will be representative.

The prospectus of the Strolling Players Amateur Orchestral Society is of remarkable enterprise. The following are among the works to be performed: The 'Eroica' Symphony, Holbrooke's 'The Birds of Rhiannon,' Cowen's 'Concert-stück' for pianoforte and orchestra (these at the first concert, December 11); Dvorák's third Symphony, Goossens's 'Symphonietta' and Frank Bridge's 'Two Tone-Poems.' Mr. Joseph Ivimey is to be congratulated on having amateur players in whom he can place such reliance.

Competition Festival Record

THE BRITISH FEDERATION OF MUSICAL COMPETITION FESTIVALS

The third annual general meeting of the Federation will be held in the Conference Hall, Central Hall, Westminster, at 12 o'clock on Saturday, November 1.

The fourth annual general Conference will be held at 2 o'clock on the same day, at the same place. Discussion is invited on topics of interest to members of the Federation. Any member who wishes to introduce a subject should give notice to the secretary, Mr. H. Fairfax Jones, 3, Central Buildings, Westminster, S.W.1, by October 13.

BLACKPOOL FESTIVAL

The eighteenth Blackpool Festival will be held at the Winter Gardens during the week of October 13-18. It exceeds all previous Festivals in the number of classes (seventy-four), and of entries (seventeen hundred). Choirs, solo singers, and solo players, of course, account for the bulk of the entries. The interesting figures are those contained in the various branches of work which in the competition movement generally have been considered as experimental or even unnecessary. Thus there are thirty folk-dance teams, over thirty vocal quartets and quintets, a hundred and sixty entries for operatic ensemble, and a hundred and fifteen for the scholarship scheme.

The list of test-pieces for vocal soloists deserves quotation as a specimen of competition standards:

Soprano	'O King of kings, Alleluia' ... ..	Handel
	'Aria de Lia' ... ..	Debussy
Mezzo-Soprano	'Phædra' ... ..	Maurice Busby
	'With loving caresses' ... ..	Handel
	'Vergebliches Ständchen' ... ..	Brahms
	'La Fiancée du Timbalier' ... ..	Saint-Saëns

For the choirs this is a Festival of romantic and modern but not over-modern music. Bantock comes largely into the scheme; of Elgar there is the recent male-voice song, 'The Wanderer'; Parry, Stanford, Schumann, and Brahms steady the balance of the programme. Of old music there is Nicolson's 'Sing, shepherds all' for the chief mixed-voice class, and Byrd's 'This sweet and merry month' for the second class. If there are any to claim that the older vocal music should have more scope, they may be reminded that three years ago the mixed-voice choirs sang nothing but Bach's 'Sing ye to the Lord.'

The adjudicatory bench includes many newcomers: Miss Irene Scharrer, Miss Olga Haley, Miss Caroline Hatchard, Mr. George Parker, Mr. Norman Allin, Miss Lucy Pierce, Dr. W. G. Whittaker, Mr. E. Stanley Roper, and Mr. Arnold Bax.

As a result of inquiries received, we are led to ask: Has Southampton begun to think about a musical competition festival? If not, why not? It is one of the most important cities on the South Coast, and the centre of a group of likely small towns. Hampshire has shown its musicality in festival activities and other musical doings of a high order at Portsmouth, Winchester, Petersfield, Bournemouth, &c.; and Southampton itself was (and perhaps still is) the headquarters of a Test Valley Musical Society whose choral and orchestral doings we ourselves had the pleasure of sampling at least twenty years ago. Moreover, it has recently added a musical chair to its University. Presumably there are choral societies at Southampton, but no news of them comes our way. Perhaps Prof. Leake and a few more leaders in the port's music will get together and remove what is really a reproach. A line to the Secretary of the Federation of Musical Competition Festivals, 3, Central Buildings, Westminster, S.W.1, will bring advice and, if necessary, a visit.

Music in the provinces

BIRMINGHAM.—The programme of the City of Birmingham Orchestra includes ten symphony concerts, six popular concerts, and a regular series of Sunday concerts. Among the works to be performed are Armstrong Gibbs's 'A Vision of Night,' Bax's Symphonic Variations for pianoforte and orchestra (Miss Harriet Cohen), Arthur Bliss's 'Colour' Symphony, and John Ireland's Symphonic Rhapsody 'Mai-Dun.' The conductor-in-chief is Mr. Adrian C. Boult, and visiting conductors are Mr. Eugène Goossens, Sir Landon Ronald, and M. Bruno Walter.

GUILDFORD.—The four subscription concerts announced for the present season maintain the standard which Guildford music has recently set up for itself under the guidance of Mr. Claud Powell. The Pirani Trio and Miss Dorothy Helmrich will provide the first programme, on October 8. The second concert, on October 22, will be orchestral, with Franck's Symphony as the biggest feature, and a first performance, by Mr. Maurice Blower, of his Pianoforte Concerto. Mr. Harold Samuel will give a recital for the third concert, on November 12. Finally, on November 19, Mr. Thomas F. Dunhill will conduct his Symphony in A minor, and Dame Ethel Smyth her Overture to 'The Wreckers.' Apart from the subscription series there will be a performance of Walford Davies's 'Everyman' by the Guildford Choral Society and the Symphony Orchestra on December 10, Mr. Claud Powell conducting.

MANCHESTER.—The most heartening sign in the musical life of the coming winter is the establishment, after many set-backs, by the City Council of a series of six good concerts, with the co-operation of Mr. Hamilton Harty and the Hallé Orchestra. The concerts will be given in Free Trade Hall, which for some years has been municipally held and controlled. At each of them five hundred seats for children are to be reserved at 6d. each, and the balance of two thousand five hundred to three thousand will range in price from 8d. to 2s. 4d. for each concert. The cost will be £200 for each engagement of conductor and band, and to this will be added the cost of soloists, advertising, programmes, and so on; but the expectation is that the grant of £1,000 from the rates will not be fully drawn upon. The works which will be played in this experiment include 'William Tell,' 'The Barber of Seville,' 'Figaro,' 'The Merry Wives of Windsor,' 'Lohengrin,' 'Tannhäuser,' and 'Elijah.' This is a good piece of civic work on excellent lines.—The Hallé scheme in its main outlines was indicated in the August number. The works to be heard for the first time during this season are Respighi's second set of 'Ancient Airs and Dances' (October 16); Julius Harrison's recent arrangement for strings of Bach's Prelude and Fugue in G minor and Hunneger's 'Pacific 231' (both on October 23); Harty's new 'Irish' Symphony, Malipiero's 'Impressioni dal Vero,' and de Falla's symphonic impressions for pianoforte and orchestra, 'Nights in the Gardens of Spain,' with Arthur Rubinstein as soloist (all on November 13); Moeran's 'In the Mountain Country' (November 27); Vaughan Williams's 'Norfolk Rhapsody' (December 4); Casella's Rhapsody, 'Italia'—its first performance in England (January 15); Herbert Howells's 'Pastoral Rhapsody' (January 22); Turina's 'Procession du Rocio' (January 29); a new work by Benjamin Dale, specially written for the Hallé concerts, but not yet designated (February 26); Ingelbrecht's poem for orchestra, 'Pour le jour de la première neige au vieux Japon' (March 5). The symphonic substance of the concerts is sufficiently strong, if it does not break much new ground. Brahms's four Symphonies in chronological order; César Franck's D minor; Elgar's A flat; Schubert's C major; Dvorák's No. 4; Tchaikovsky's No. 5; Beethoven's No. 8; Mozart in E flat. Strauss's 'Zarathustra,' and d'Indy's 'Istar' stand out prominently among the larger-scale symphonic poems. The Pension Fund Concert is allotted to March 26, and the customary Good Friday Concert on April 10 will finish the season. It is now many years since purely orchestral concerts figured in a Hallé scheme, but this year the first, seventh, eleventh, and twentieth of the series will contain no solo items. There is a very rational lay-out of choral work, and the intervals between the choral concerts should permit of ample rehearsal.—This year Mr. Brand Lane has hitched his wagons to 'stars' with a vengeance. Orchestral music has rather slipped into the background of both his 'Festival' and his 'Orchestral' schemes. Whether recitals by Galli-Curci, Kreisler, Clara Butt, Frieda Hempel, and Gerhardt will be ample compensation for the orchestral loss can hardly be decided in advance. On February 23 and March 7 Manchester may be indebted to Mr. Lane for two visits of Paderewski; at the time of writing the matter is undecided. Sir Henry Wood will conduct five of the Lane series of orchestral nights, and Sir Dan Godfrey the opening one on October 18 (when Sir Henry Wood is engaged at the London 'Proms.'), at which Rachmaninov will play his third Concerto.—The Edward Isaacs chamber concerts will bring us the Léner Quartet, the English Trio, the Dutch Quartet, the Paris Copelle, and a John Ireland programme, in which the composer will play a prominent part.—The Catterall Quartet series of six performances will bring into our midst Dohnányi and William Murdoch, the former taking part in his second Quintet, which receives its first performance at Manchester. Other novelties at the Catterall concerts will be the 'Lancashire Sketches' of Whittaker, the Rochdale choral conductor-composer, and Steinberg's Quartet in A. The outstanding success of the Brahms evening last spring has led to the decision to give the String Quintet in F and the Clarinet Quintet, on December 17.—In the Hamilton Harty series, the Hallé conductor takes part in recitals for voice and pianoforte by Miss Olga Haley, Miss Florence Austral, Mr. John Coates, and Mr. Plunket Greene; a sonata concert with Mr. Albert Sammons; a sonata and trio concert with the Hallé cello and clarinet principals (Messrs. Twelvetees and Mortimer); a quintet concert with the Brodsky players; and a concert for pianoforte and chamber orchestra, in which, instead of playing, Harty will conduct, and Mr. Maurice Cole will be the pianist—already he is widely known via the Manchester Broadcasting Station.—Apart from 'The Messiah' performances, the solid choral work of the winter will be at the Hallé series, where 'Gerontius,' Berlioz's 'Faust,' and the Bach B minor Mass and the Motet 'Be not afraid' are to be heard.—The now famous Co-operative Wholesale Society Male-Voice Choir (for brevity's sake called C.W.S.) gives its usual four interesting concerts, at which vocalists new to the Free Trade Hall platform will include Miss Constance Willis, Mr. Walter Widdop (a few years ago a prominent competitor at our Lancashire coast festivals), and Miss Gertrude Entwistle. The Choir during the winter will sing between thirty and forty items of miniature choral songs.

PLYMOUTH.—On September 6 the Orpheus Society, of which Mr. David Parkes is conductor, gave a Mendelssohn concert. The principal choral pieces were choruses from the oratorios. Solos were given by small sections of the choir. The orchestra, of strings, organ, and drums, played the 'Athalia' Overture and the slow movement from the 'Italian' Symphony.

A NEW IRISH OPERA: 'SHAUN THE POST'

Although, strictly speaking, Mr. H. R. White's 'Shaun the Post' cannot be described as an 'Irish' opera, as the libretto is in English, yet the music and the whole atmosphere of the production are essentially Irish. At the outset it is a pleasure to state that 'Shaun the Post' is worthy of the school of Balfe, Wallace, Stanford, Sullivan, and Harty, and though some of the music is more or less reminiscent of Puccini, there is fine original scoring with a strong melodic vein running throughout—the orchestration being a dominant factor. Indeed the work may be described as a romantic opera on an Irish subject. No doubt, there is little choral work, but some of the ensembles, notably that of the Finale in Act I, are deserving of unstinted praise. Probably, however, the duet which closes the opera is the finest music, and at once places Mr. White among composers of the first rank.

As is generally known, 'Shaun the Post' is founded on Boucicault's popular drama, 'Arrah na Pogue,' but Mr. R. J. Hughes, the librettist, has given us an adaptation affording some splendid operatic situations, including love-making at Glendalough by moonlight; a rustic wedding and ceilidh; prison scenes; cliff scenes; and the rescue of Shaun's sweetheart, Arrah, from the clutches of the villain, Feeny. Old Irish airs are skilfully interwoven, the so-called 'Derry Air' forming a sort of motif for Shaun, and 'The Wearing of the Green' (which is in the original drama) is deftly introduced.

The opera was given, under the composer's direction, at the Theatre Royal, Dublin, on August 15 and 16, before crowded audiences. The lion's share of the performance fell to Mr. Joseph O'Mara.

With a little cutting down, the work is sure to become popular, and English audiences will no doubt soon have an opportunity for hearing it in the repertoire of the Carl Rosa Opera Company. W. H. G.-F.

Musical Notes from Abroad

NEW YORK

As, for four months, the doors of our concert-halls are locked, and the auditorium of the Metropolitan Opera House is transformed into a huge workshop for the painting of new scenery and the refurbishing of old in anticipation of the annual winter season, all sounds of music would be restricted to that heard in the theatres and picture houses, were it not for the two wonderful organizations that give so many concerts in the Stadium of New York City College and in Central Park. In the Stadium, the Philharmonic Orchestra of a hundred and five has played intact with all its leading men—no substitutes allowed—and the programmes have been fully up to the standard of the winter concerts at Carnegie Hall. These concerts are so enormously expensive that the season lasts only seven weeks. On thirty-five of the forty-nine evenings a Symphony was played, Tchaikovsky, Beethoven, and Brahms heading the list. Fifty-four composers were represented during the seven weeks, Wagner taking the lead, Tchaikovsky coming next. For thirty-four concerts the men played under one of the regular Philharmonic conductors, Willem von Hoogstraten; at fourteen concerts Fritz Reiner, the leader of the Cincinnati Orchestra, appeared as guest-conductor, and one was conducted by Arnold Volpe, who founded the Stadium concerts seven years ago. The audiences, numbering from twelve to fifteen thousand every night, paid from twenty-five cents to a dollar for admission, the majority occupying the fifty cent seats in the amphitheatre.

The Goldman Band of wood-wind and brass played five nights a week for twelve weeks in Central Park, appearing this year in a superb new bandstand, built of Indiana granite at a cost of 100,000 dollars. This was the gift of one of New York's noted music-lovers, Elkan Naumberg. The concerts were free, the audiences numbering from twenty-five to fifty thousand every night, and the acoustic properties of the stand, so perfectly designed and developed, carried the music clearly far beyond the confines of the seated listeners. At these sixty concerts works of a hundred and six composers were heard, Wagner again heading the list, and Tchaikovsky again coming second. A number of classical compositions were played that had never been given before except by a string orchestra. Very clever are Mr. Goldman's arrangements for his band. He does not mean that because he has no violins his listeners shall be deprived of the music of the great masters. Mr. Goldman does not himself claim that he has the finest band in the world, but others claim it for him. For the previous six seasons of these concerts the expenses have been met by popular subscription, the sales of programmes, &c. This year the concerts were presented to the city and every expense paid by four people—Mr. and Mrs. Daniel Guggenheim, and Mr. and Mrs. Murray Guggenheim.

Our interest is now centred on prospective things. Mrs. Coolidge's Berkshire Festival at Pittsfield, Mass., is always the first event of the season. It gives music-lovers a chance to hear the best of the new music in September, as our city concert-halls do not open until about a month later.

M. H. FLINT.

TORONTO

Concerts, of course, are as yet only in mind. But for summer music the Canadian National Exhibition has this year offered a very unusual variety. The main attraction has undoubtedly been the Pageant Chorus, under Dr. H. A. Fricker, of the Mendelssohn Choir, assisted by the Band of the Queen's Own Rifles under Capt. R. B. Hayward (of Kneller Hall, by the way). This body is one of the Exhibition's youngest yet most sturdy children, whose ranks have now swelled to over twenty-two hundred. Its audiences have totalled nearly thirty thousand at four concerts, all but the first evening realising capacity attendances. The programme, prepared in eight rehearsals, included two Handel choruses, 'The heavens are telling,' and the March Chorus from 'Tannhäuser.'

On Music Day, August 28, over ten thousand enthusiasts heard the Band Contests, arranged by the Canadian Band Association. During the afternoon four special programmes were given in the Music Building, one miscellaneous by some of the leading artists of the city, one by the Sternberg Studio dancing pupils, one by pupils from the Toronto Conservatory, and one by pupils of the Hambourg Conservatory.

In addition to these, fourteen groups of Troubadours in costume, including a native Ukrainian Choir, wandered about the beautiful grounds, which are situated along the shores of Lake Ontario, singing, playing, and dancing at various places. At six o'clock a Patriotic Tableau and short programme were given, the participants being Madame Lugin Fahey, two hundred seamen from the visiting British Fleet, the Troubadours, and the Band of the Queen's Own Rifles. Pianoforte recitals were also held in Manufacturers' Building from 10 a.m. to 10 p.m.

At the two permanent bandstands in the grounds, concerts have taken place each day continuously from 1 p.m. to 10 p.m., at which have been heard twenty bands in all, drawn from the whole of the Dominion.

It is pleasing to find that music has now emerged as the main artistic feature of the Exhibition. This is proved not only by the arrangements, but by the crowds which regularly attend each event. H. C. F.

Obituary

We regret to record the following death:

P. F. BATTISHILL, on July 24. Born in 1870, in Devonshire, he joined the Army as a student at fourteen years of age, later going to Kneller Hall, where he won the Shaw Hellier prize for composition. He became a Sub-Professor, and ultimately a Director of the School. For some years Mr. Battishill was bandmaster of the Queen's (West Surreys), he then took charge of the Royal Artillery Band in 1904. During the recent centenary celebrations of the Royal Academy of Music, Mr. Battishill was made Honorary Royal Academician. He was conspicuous as being the only serving bandmaster in the British Army to hold this distinction. For some years he was a member of the Board of Examiners for the L.R.A.M. diploma in Bandmastership, many candidates passing through his hands.

Before deciding on their carol programmes for the coming Christmas, choirmasters should examine the two sets of six carols issued by the National Institute for the Blind. The words are by blind poets, and are set by blind composers. They are excellent, and well worthy of adoption on their merits alone, apart from the fact that their sale helps this most deserving of objects. Copies of the booklets (3d. each) may be had from the National Institute for the Blind, Great Portland Street, or from Messrs. Novello.

Tudor and Elizabethan music is practised at 8.30 p.m. on Tuesdays at the South Western College of Music. Some good sopranos and altos attend, but more basses and tenors are needed, in order that the choir may prove useful for demonstration purposes. The conductor is Mr. Alan May. Full particulars from the Secretary of the South Western College of Music, 298, High Road, Balham, S.W.17.

Answers to Correspondents

Questions must be of general musical interest. They must be stated simply and briefly, and if several are sent, each must be written on a separate slip. We cannot undertake to reply by post.

'WORRIED ONE' asks: 'What is musical appreciation?' As this query is only one of several indications that a good many people new to the power of fine music are in need of information, we will try to answer with a fullness unusual in this column. (As we have no desire to teach grandmothers how to suck eggs, the average reader, to whom the whole matter is simple, should skip the following.) Owing to its having been made the centre of a good deal of somewhat priggish talk, people sometimes pooh-pooh the term 'musical appreciation.' They say that if you enjoy music, there's an end to the matter: what more can one want? But this is to make the mistake of regarding 'enjoy' and 'appreciate' as synonyms. Enjoyment of a piece of music may be a blind, unreasoning sensation; appreciation can exist only as a result of (1) some understanding of the work itself; (2) comparison with other works of the same type. You will see at once that in the case of (say) a symphony, this implies some general knowledge of the form or construction of a symphony; the ability to retain in the mind its chief themes, so that the composer's development and other methods of using them may be followed; and an (at least) elementary knowledge of harmony and orchestration. The ability to make critical comparison between various symphonies is an important element, because appreciation implies judgment; there can be no judgment without a standard, and no standard without comparison. Hence the need for an acquaintance with representative musical works. This acquaintance must extend to all important schools and to various periods so that we may put ourselves in the right mental attitude for a given work. For example, if we know only one type of symphony, and that type is of the modern highly-coloured, even hectic, species, such as Tchaikovsky's 'Pathetic,' and we find ourselves faced with one by Mozart or Haydn, we shall listen to it with what may be called the Tchaikovsky ear, expecting floods of sonorous, highly-coloured music, charged with emotion that at times approaches the hysterical. To the Tchaikovsky ear, Mozart will seem tame, his orchestration insipid, and his emotional power feeble. But the hearer who has the ability to put himself in the right key, so to speak, will probably find in the old work an even keener pleasure than in the modern. One example of the difference between mere enjoyment and appreciation: A good many people who know nothing about fugues (and, indeed, hate the very word 'fugue' as a synonym for 'dryness') can enjoy such an example as the C sharp major in Book I of the '48,' because its tunefulness and animation are such as appeal to the average uninitiated ear. But the qualities that make it a fine Fugue—the invention shown in the delightful subject; the skill in treatment; the achievement of variety without loss of consistency and relevance; and the way in which the interest is not merely kept up, but made cumulative—all these things are perceived and enjoyed only by the hearer who knows a good deal about the construction of a fugue. The latter type of listener gets far more enjoyment out of the work than the former, because he has more sources of enjoyment. This applies to all listening, and the moral is so obvious that you can easily apply it. You will find the whole question discussed very ably and fully, together with a host of other matters, in a little book by J. W. Foxell, called 'Elements of Musical Appreciation' (Novello, 2s. 6d.). In our issue of March we gave a list of books dealing with the subject. We mention this one specially because it goes more fully than any other into the question of such words as 'appreciation,' 'enjoyment,' &c. Anyway, give up being a 'worried one'! You will soon find out what it means to appreciate music (that is, to enjoy it with the understanding as well as with the ear) if you lay yourself out to (1) hear, (2) read about, and (3) take part in as much good music as possible. And in the long run, the greatest of these is (3): there are opportunities everywhere. Join a Church choir, a choral society, brass band, &c., and if you play the pianoforte, find another pianist, and play duet arrangements of chamber and orchestral music. A pair of duettists have the key to a very large proportion of the finest music ever written, and they can unlock the treasure-house and revel in its riches without going outside the front door.

W. H. W. writes: 'I have invented a finger and hand, &c., training apparatus, and want to protect it in some way. I think patenting it too expensive. I notice similar appliances are sometimes registered, so will you kindly give me some information about registering such as: The cost; to whom to apply; the protection it gives; how long to effect a register, &c., &c.'

A.—You may register a 'design,' but an 'apparatus' would need to be protected by a patent. Provisional protection for one year may be secured for a nominal sum. The Comptroller-General of H.M. Patent Office (25, Southampton Buildings, W.C.2) will send, upon application, a pamphlet dealing exhaustively with the subjects of registration and patent. It may be worth your while to explain your needs fully when applying for information. With a benevolence unusual in official dealings, the Comptroller has been known to mark passages that have special reference to the applicant's case.

H. N. C. E. (Georgetown, Demerara).—(1.) You say you know a singer who 'becomes quite husky and hoarse after singing for half an hour,' and you ask us to tell you the cause and advise a remedy. Obviously the singer is working on wrong lines, but without a hearing we cannot say on what particular wrong lines. Our advice is to go to a competent teacher. (2.) 'Sabaoth' is usually sung as 'Sâb-a-ôth.' (3.) Sing 'miserable' as nearly as possible as you speak it. In other words, resist the temptation to sing 'miserable.' (4.) Ellis's 'Pronunciation for Singers' (Curwen) gives lengthy passages in Latin and Italian, with the pronunciation clearly shown.

F. J. E.—(1.) All Sinding's songs are stocked by Novello. (2.) For an oboe instruction book try that of Rod, published by Messrs. Hawkes (20s.). We know of no book on the history and construction of the oboe. The long and apparently exhaustive article in 'Grove,' under 'Oboe,' would, we think, tell you all you need know.

B. L. E.—We doubt if there is any 'complete' edition of the keyboard works of the old English composers. From Novello you can get collections of pieces by Giles Farnaby, Purcell, William Byrd, John Bull, Gibbons, and Dowland. Chesters issue collections of pieces by Byrd, Gibbons, Jeremiah Clarke, Croft, and others. W. Reeves, Charing Cross Road, recently published a selection of Byrd pieces. Augers a long time ago brought out a series of albums of pieces by Bull, Purcell, Gibbons, and others, under the editorship of Ernst Pauer. We think you are mistaken in your apparent dissatisfaction with selections from these old composers. Complete editions of their works would be far from profitable to publisher or purchaser, inasmuch as a great deal of the music is of little more than antiquarian interest.

ELIZABETH.—You do not state the examination for which the pieces are set. In any case, we cannot answer questions as to metronome marks unless a copy of the music is sent, or the pieces are so well known that they can be readily referred to. We can hardly be expected to lay in a stock of examination tests and syllabuses for the purposes of this column.

E. B.—You would probably find what you want in 'English Folk-Song; some Conclusions,' by Cecil Sharp (Barnicott & Pearce, Taunton, 12s. 6d.).

MISS R. B.—There is little organ music of the kind you ask about—pieces short, simple, dignified, and fitting for use in connection with services at which plainsong is the staple. You will find some in 'The Latin Organist' by Gregory Ould (Novello), and in such French collections (mostly on two staves) as Guy Ropartz's 'Au Pied du Autel' and the Gregorian and other albums of short pieces by Eugène Gigout. There are also sets of 'Versets' on Plainsong themes by d'Indy, Chausson, and other French composers published (we think) by the Schola Cantorum. Anyway, they can be seen at Novello's. Chesters recently issued a collection of a hundred pieces by Gigout, in four books, each containing twenty-five. Half of them are modal. These are among the best examples of their kind. César Franck wrote two albums of short pieces, published after his death. They are unequal, but contain many beautiful things (Enoch).

V. K.—The following books are recommended for students preparing for the L.R.A.M. Diploma in Elocution: 'Higher English,' Campbell (Blackie); 'Pronunciation for Singers,' Ellis (Curwen); 'The Art of Singing,' Part I., William Shakespeare (Metzler); 'Voice Production in Singing and Speaking,' Wesley Mills (Curwen); 'The Art of Versification,' R. F. Brewer (Grant, Edinburgh); 'Modern English Metre,' Joseph B. Mayor (Cambridge University Press); 'The Technique of Speech,' by Dora Duty-Jones (Harper).

H. B.—It is impossible to say 'what is the best book on composition,' because the book that is best for one student is not so for another. But you will probably find nothing better than Stanford's work on the subject (Stainer & Bell). Good recent books on counterpoint are those of Dr. Kitson (Oxford University Press), Pearce (Winthrop Rogers), Dunstan's Primer on 'Modal Counterpoint' (Novello), and R. O. Morris's study of the 'Contrapuntal Technique of Elizabethan Composers' (Oxford University Press).

ELMUS.—(1.) An organist is generally supposed to have the right of claiming a fee when his organ is used for a choral wedding and played by a friend of the bride or bridegroom. But we believe that most organists courteously waive such a right. Legally it can hardly stand, because the right of access to the organ is vested in the incumbent, and if he allows the visitor to play, there is nothing useful to be said by his own organist. This is one of the numerous cases in which all concerned should think of courtesy rather than rights and wrongs. (2.) We cannot name the 'best' pianoforte tutor, for reasons given in the answer to 'H. B.' You must examine several and make your own choice, or get a teacher's advice on your particular needs. So many good tutors are available that we can't find room for a list.

OPERA LOVER.—'The Queen of Sheba' is generally reckoned to be Goldmark's best opera. We know of no performance in this country—at all events in recent years. Here are the particulars you want: Goldmark was born May 18, 1830; he died at Vienna, January 2, 1915. He began as a violinist. His most popular works, apart from 'The Queen of Sheba,' were (perhaps still are, on the Continent) his Symphony 'Ländliche Hochzeit' and some concert overtures. The best of the last-named seems to be 'Sakuntala,' which is played fairly often in this country. We have not a copy of 'The Queen of Sheba' to refer to, but from your description of the title-rôle, we should say that it calls for a dramatic soprano rather than a mezzo.

THE CLARINET

Mr. R. H. Whall, 6, Whitehall, Stroud, Glos., writes: 'If you would kindly put me in communication with "J. B." ("Answers to Correspondents," September issue, p. 847), I think I may be able to give him some information, having made a special study of the clarinet for many years.'

We have not kept 'J. B.'s' address, so we hope he will see this, and respond to Mr. Whall's kind offer.

Miscellaneous

The City of London Choral Union (conductor, Dr. Harold Darke) resumed work on September 16, with rehearsals of 'The Dream of Gerontius.' There are a few vacancies in all departments. Rehearsals are held at St. Michael's, Cornhill, on Tuesdays, from 5.30 to 7. Particulars from the hon. secretary, Mr. William Reid, 11, Queen Victoria Street, E.C.4.

The Kingston, Surbiton, and District Musical Society has just started the season's work under its new director, Mr. Leslie Regan. The Society intends to perform 'King Olaf' in January. The Lord Bishop of Kingston succeeds the late Sir Frederick Bridge as President.

CONTENTS.

	PAGE
Thomas Ravenscroft, B.Mus. (c. 1583—c. 1633). By Jeffrey Mark ... ..	881
Accidental Strokes of Genius. By Alexander Brent-Smith ... ..	885
Foot-Notes to Musical History. By William C. Smith	886
Conductors and Conducting.—IV. The Physical Aspect of the Beat. By William Wallace ... ..	891
Song Translation. By Eric Brewerton ... ..	893
New Light on Late Tudor Composers.—III. William Mundy. By W. H. Grattan Flood ... ..	894
The Associated Board Edition of the 'Forty-Eight.' By Harvey Grace ... ..	895
On Getting Back to Work. By Thomas Armstrong	899
A New System of Musical Notation. By Howard Parsons ... ..	900
Occasional Notes ... ..	905
The Hereford Festival. By Herbert Thompson ...	908
Music in the Foreign Press. By M.-D. Calvocoressi	910
New Music ... ..	911
Wagner and Richter. By A. Kalisch ... ..	918
The Musician's Bookshelf ... ..	919
Gramophone Notes. By 'Discus' ... ..	923
Wireless Notes. By 'Caliban' ... ..	925
Church and Organ Music ... ..	927
Royal College of Organists ... ..	927
National Union of Organists' Associations: Newcastle Congress. By W. A. Roberts ... ..	927
Letters to the Editor ... ..	926
Sixty Years Ago ... ..	933
Sharps and Flats ... ..	933
Amateurs' Exchange ... ..	933
Chanting: A Suggestion. By Donald MacArthur ...	934
Whelsh Week at Wembley ... ..	936
Promenade Concerts ... ..	937
The Margate Festival ... ..	938
Choral Society Programmes ... ..	939
Competition Festival Record ... ..	939
Music in the Provinces ... ..	940
A New Irish Opera: 'Shaun the Post' ... ..	940
Musical Notes from Abroad ... ..	941
Obituary ... ..	941
Answers to Correspondents ... ..	942
Miscellaneous ... ..	943

MUSIC.

'Truth.' Unison Song for Massed Voices. By GEOFFREY SHAW ... ..	913
---	-----

EXTRA SUPPLEMENT given with this Number:
"O praise God in His Holiness." A short Anthem for Festival or General use. By Charles Macpherson.

DEGREES IN MUSIC.

EXPERT AND INDIVIDUAL TUITION BY CORRESPONDENCE

FOR

Oxford Preliminary Arts, Durham Matriculation,
A.R.C.O., F.R.C.O., Mus. Bac., Mus. Doc.

Also for B.A. and B.Sc.

The Staff includes highly qualified Graduates in Music, Arts, and Science.

For Terms address:

MR. J. CHARLESTON, B.A. (Hons. Oxon. and Lond.),
14, Elsham Road, Kensington, W.14.

DURING THE LAST MONTH.

Published by NOVELLO &amp; CO., LIMITED.

- ATKINS, IVOR.—"The Year's at the Spring." Song. 2s.
- BOYCE, ETHEL.—"The Maybush." Trios for S.S.A. (No. 496, Novello's Trios, &c., for Female Voices.) 4d.
- "Ye dainty nymphs." Trio for S.S.A. (No. 495, Novello's Trios, &c., for Female Voices.) 4d.
- CAPPS, F.—Hymn of Thanksgiving ("Praise to Thee, O holy Saviour"). 2d.
- COWEN, F. H.—"At dawn of day." Chorus from "Sleeping Beauty," arranged as a two-part chorus. (No. 214, Novello's Two-part Songs for Female Voices.) 4d.
- EDWARDS, RICHARD.—"Wrth fynd i'm gwely bach fy hun" ("In going to my lonely bed"). Madrigal for S.A.T.B. Welsh words by T. Gwynn Jones. (No. 1418, Novello's Part-Song Book.) 3d.
- HAVERGAL, CECILIA.—"God's Harvest Mercies." Harvest Carol. 1d.
- HOLMES-DALLIMORE, A.—"The Setting Sun." Part-Song for A.T.T.B. 3d.
- MACPHERSON, C.—"O praise God in His Holiness." Short Anthem for Festival or General Use. (No. 1134, Novello's Octavo Anthems.) 4d.
- ROWLEY, A.—"Coming through the craigs o' Kyle." Four-part Song. (No. 1422, Novello's Part-Song Book.) 4d.
- SCHOOL MARCHES.—Arranged for Pianoforte Solo. Book 3. 1s. 6d. (For Contents, see p. 880.)
- SCHOOL MUSIC REVIEW, No. 388, contains the following music in both notations.—"Holy Thursday." Two-part Song. Composed by Rutland Boughton. "Vesper Hymn." Adapted from Beethoven, and arranged for Unison Singing. 2d.
- HAW, GEOFFREY.—"Truth." Unison Song for Massed Voices. (No. 980, The Musical Times.) 2d.
- STURMAN, G. W.—"The Lord's Prayer." 4d.
- THOMPSON, H. J.—"Angel voices, ever singing." Hymn and Tune, "Northill." 1½d.

TONIC SOL-FA SERIES:

- No. 2456. "The Waltz." Two-part Song. ETHEL BOYCE 3d.
- No. 2457. "Wrth fynd i'm gwely bach fy hun" ("In going to my lonely bed"). Madrigal for S.A.T.B. Welsh words by T. Gwynn Jones. RICHARD EDWARDS 2d.
- No. 2458. "Y lanaf Oriana" ("The Lady Oriana"). Madrigal for S.S.A.T.T.B. Welsh words by T. Gwynn Jones. JOHN WILBYE 3d.
- No. 2459. "Yn iach, fwyn Amarillis" ("Adieu, sweet Amarillis"). Madrigal for S.S. (or A.) T.B. Welsh words by T. Gwynn Jones. JOHN WILBYE 2d.
- No. 2460. "Lady, lay those frowns aside." Madrigal for S.A.T.B. E. HALSEY 3d.
- No. 2461. "The tide rises, the tide falls." Part-song. Arranged for T.T.B.B. ADAM CARSE 2d.
- No. 2462. "Early one morning." English Folk-Song. Arranged for A.T.B.B. By T. F. DUNHILL 2d.

- WALE, W. H.—"Pater noster" ("The Lord's Prayer"). 6d.
- WILBYE, JOHN.—"Y lanaf Oriana" ("The Lady Oriana"). Madrigal for S.S.A.T.T.B. Welsh words by T. Gwynn Jones. (No. 1419, Novello's Part-Song Book.) 4d.
- "Yn iach, fwyn Amarillis" ("Adieu, sweet Amarillis"). Madrigal for S.S. (or A.) T.B. Welsh words by T. Gwynn Jones. (No. 1421, Novello's Part-Song Book.) 3d.

PUBLISHED FOR
THE H. W. GRAY CO., NEW YORK.

- JAMES, P.—"God be in my head." Anthem. For Mixed or Men's Voices. 10 cents (4d.) each.

NEW PUBLICATIONS

By T. TERTIUS NOBLE.

816. NIGHT. S.A.T.B.
817. TO MY LOVE. T.T.B.B.
818. WHEN I AM DEAD, MY DEAREST. S.A.T.B.
819. SAVE, LORD, OR WE PERISH. S.A.T.B.
820. SAVE, LORD, OR WE PERISH. T.T.B.B.
821. BUT NOW, THUS SAITH THE LORD. S.A.T.B.

Price Fourpence each.

822. MAGNIFICAT AND NUNC DIMITTIS IN B FLAT.
Price Sixpence.

BANKS &amp; SON, MUSIC PUBLISHERS, YORK.

"CONGAUDEAT TURBA FIDELIUM."

XITH CENTURY CAROL.

ACCOMPANIMENT BY

JOHN IVIMEY.

PRICE ... .. FOURPENCE.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

TO CLERGY AND ORGANISTS.

HYMN FOR "ARMISTICE DAY."

"LORD GOD OF HOSTS."

- WORDS BY REV. G. H. MOORE. MUSIC BY W. E. ROBINSON, F.R.C.O.
Words only Music and Words
5d. per dozen, or 1s. 6d. per 50. 1d. per copy.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

ESSAY.—A.R.C.O. (Jan., 1925) on "ENGLISH FOLK-SONG AND DANCE." Excellent Series of Six Model Essays. Valuable hints on writing. Success assured. Send 4s 6d. to "Essays," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour St., W.1.

L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., AURAL TESTS. Special important paper. Success assured. This paper gives details how to work. Send 4s. 6d. to "Aural Tests," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

SINGING.—A long-felt want. Very many lessons saved by SPECIAL NEW PAPER. Students taught how to obtain the full Singing Voice. Enclose P.O. 5s. to "Singing," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

ORGANIST-CHOIRMASTER.—Experienced, Catholic, seeks appointment. S.W. London preferred. "D. F.", 7, Station Approach, Clapham Junction, S.W.11.

S. MICHAEL'S, CHESTER SQUARE.

PUPIL-ASSISTANT REQUIRED.—Free Tuition and Organ Practice. Must have some knowledge of Choir-training. Apply. Reginald Goss Custard, at above address.

TENOR REQUIRED for St. Stephen's, Westminster. Salary £15 p.a.; also voluntary A.T.B. Apply. R. Strutt, 32, Vincent Square, S.W.1.

TENOR WANTED for St. Mark's, Surbiton. Good reader. Salary, £20 to £25. Apply, R. Frederick Tyler, F.R.C.O., 8, Lingfield Avenue, Kingston-on-Thames.

TENOR WANTED.—West-End Church. £20. Only first-class readers apply. Write, Clifford Smith, 56, Red Post Hill, North Dulwich, S.E. 4.

TWO-MANUAL PIPE and PEDAL ORGAN. 11 Stops. Excellent condition. Apply to Lady Haking, Mill Cottage, Bulford, nr. Salisbury.

HENRY M. BYRON, CONCERT DIRECTOR. Established 1890. Address: 75, Church Road, Leyton, London, E.10.

PIANOFORTE TUNING.—Lessons given by Post, by expert Tuner. Little cost. Great Success. Cawson. Bankfield House, 117 Armley Road, Leeds.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

To ensure insertion in their proper positions, Advertisements for the next issue should reach the Office, 160, Wardour Street, London, W.1, not later than WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 22 (FIRST POST).

REEVES' LIST.

(PUBLISHED AT NET PRICES).

WITH THE GREAT COMPOSERS. A Series of Pen Pictures exhibiting in the form of Interviews the Personal Characteristics as Artists of the World's great Tone Poets. Illustrated with portraits. By Gerald Cumberland. Crown 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d.

THEORY OF MUSIC FOR YOUNG MUSICIANS, By M. Sharp, L.L.C.M. Paper, 1s.; limp cloth, 1s. 6d. Just issued.

ART OF VIOLONCELLO PLAYING. Complete Tutor. By E. van der Straeten. Text in French and English. Book 1, 3s.

"THE IMMORTAL NINE."

BEETHOVEN'S NINE SYMPHONIES Fully Described and Analysed. A Series of Chapters giving a complete account of Thematic Material and auxiliary motives: an Analytical Chart of each Movement: full Technical Descriptions of Developments: Particulars of Formal and Rhythmic features: Epitomical Tables, &c. Illustrated by 637 Musical Examples. By Edwin Evans (Senior), Author of "Handbook to the Works of Brahms." &c. Cloth, Vol. I. (Nos. 1 to 5), 10s. 6d. Vol. II., completing the work, 10s. 6d. (in October).

THE BYRD ORGAN BOOK, for Piano or Organ.—A collection of 21 Pieces (Pavans, Galliards, &c.), by William Byrd. 1543-1623, edited from the Virginal MSS. and now published in Modern Notation. By M. H. Glyn, in two books, 3s. each, or complete, 5s.

ABOUT ELIZABETHAN VIRGINAL MUSIC AND ITS COMPOSERS.—By M. H. Glyn, 7s. 6d.

BOW INSTRUMENTS—Their Form and Construction. Practical Detailed Investigation and Experiments regarding Vibration, Sound Results, and Construction. By J. W. Giltay. Englished by the author and E. van der Straeten. With diagrams. 8vo, cloth, 8s. 6d.; paper, 6s. 6d.

HANDEL'S "MESSIAH." The Oratorio and its History.—A Handbook of Hints and Aids to its Public Performance, with Notes on each Movement, and much original Information. By J. Allanson Benson. 2s.

THE VIOLIN, its History and Construction.—Illustrated and described from all Sources List of Tyrolean and Italian Makers. With 29 Illustrations and Folding Plates. Englished by J. Broadhouse, from Abele & Niederheitmann. Cloth, 4s. 6d.; paper, 3s.

PRIMARY COURSE IN THE RUDIMENTS OF MUSIC, with Hints on answering Questions (Written work) for All Examinations in the Primary, Elementary, and Preparatory Grades. By Wilson Manhire, L.R.A.M., &c. 1s.

EXAMINATION CANDIDATE'S GUIDE to Scale and Arpeggio Piano Playing (with Tests).—All that is required for the Various Exams. By Wilson Manhire. 2s.

CANDIDATE'S SCALE AND ARPEGGIO TESTS for the Piano. By Wilson Manhire. 9d.

YOUNG VIOLINIST'S SCALE AND ARPEGGIO MANUAL.—With Directions. By Wilson Manhire. Folio. Text and Music. 2s.

70 PREPARATORY VIOLIN EXERCISES for Beginners, in the First Position.—Carefully Graduated. By Wilson Manhire. 2s.

GUIDE FOR THE YOUNG COMPOSER.—Hints on Composition, with examples of Easy Application. By Rev. E. H. Melling, F.R.C.O. (Author of "Extemporising (Piano) Made Easy"). Cloth, 2s. 8d.; paper, 1s. 6d.

STUDIES IN MODULATION, Practical and Theoretical. By Percy Baker, F.R.C.O., &c. Cloth 3s.; paper, 2s.

OPERA STORIES OF TO-DAY AND YESTERDAY, Retold Act by Act (including Wagner's "The Ring"). By Edmondstone Duncan. Complete, cloth, 4s. 6d.; or in 2 vols., paper, 1s. 6d. each.

THE SPIRIT OF MUSIC FROM EAST TO WEST IN NATURE, ART, AND LEGEND.—Penned in 16 articles for General Reading, with Drawings of Eastern Musical Instruments. By G. P. Green (Author of "Some Aspects of Chinese Music"). Crown 8vo, cloth, 4s. 6d.

HOW TO LISTEN TO GOOD MUSIC and Encourage the Taste in Instrumental and Vocal Music.—For Listener and Executant. By K. Broadley Greene. Cloth, 4s. 6d.; or in 2 Books, paper, 1s. 6d. each.

MODERN ORGAN BUILDING.—A Practical Explanation and Description of Organ Construction. With especial regard to Pneumatic Action and Chapters on Tuning, Voicing, &c. 76 Illustrations drawn to scale and reproduced from Actual Working Drawings, together with diagrams, tables, &c. By W. & T. Lewis. Second Ed., corrected and added to in text and illustrations. 4to, extra gilt, cloth, 17s. 6d.; or cloth, 15s. 6d. Postage 1s.

* * Catalogue B, containing full list of our works on Biography, History, Criticism, Aesthetics, Essays, Organ, Orchestra, Piano, Violin, Vocal, and Wagner. Sent anywhere, post free.

LONDON: 83, CHARING CROSS ROAD, W.C.

F

THE TECHNIQUER
FOR STRETCH, STRENGTH, AND SUPPLENESS.

We have . . . investigated . . . 'THE TECHNIQUER' . . . and it seems to us it entirely meets the needs of an instrumentalist in a scientific and reliable manner. The inventor . . . backs his claims by . . . convincing testimonials from such well-known men as Lamond, Pouishnoff, Dyke, Walenn, and many others. To those who have small stretch or but little time for practice, we advise they should look into the matter for themselves. Mr. Pitcher . . . an L.R.A.M. as a public performer, approaches the matter from a highly scientific and experienced point of view."—Extract from The Strad, March, 1924.

"Hand Development," with numerous photos, 1s. 6d.

Send for full particulars, &c.—

Miss F. J. FITCH, A.R.C.M., A.R.C.O. (Sec.),

21, Boundary Road, N.W.8.

'Phone: Maida Vale 1715.

To PIANISTS, ORGANISTS, VIOLINISTS, ETC.

"SIMPLEXA" Pocket Finger Trainer
(Registered).

A MOST EFFICIENT APPLIANCE FOR INCREASING STRETCH, INDEPENDENCE, FLEXIBILITY, AND STRENGTH OF FINGERS. Improved Model, 2s. 6d. post free.

"SIMPLEXA," 7, YEW VILLAS, THAMES ST., WEYBRIDGE, SURREY.

MUSIC REQUIRES COVERS
TO KEEP IT NICE AND CLEAN.

Now is the time to prepare for the winter season.

Send P.O. for 1s. 3d. and obtain specimen covers for sheet and Choir Music.

R. H. MUDDIMAN,

77, Queen Victoria Street, London, E.C.4.

JUST PUBLISHED.

No. 99.—NOVELLO'S MUSIC PRIMERS.
PIANOFORTE ACCOMPANIMENT
BY

WELTON HICKIN

Fellow and Professor, Royal Academy of Music.

CONTENTS.

Technical Proficiency—Artistic Imagination—Ensemble—Balance of Tone—Phrasing—Vital Notes—Pedalling—Recitations with Music—Reading at Sight—Transposition—Harmonization—Recitative—Modulation—Accompaniment studied in detail, &c.

PRICE . . . FOUR SHILLINGS.

Paper Boards, 5s.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

No. 63.—NOVELLO'S MUSIC PRIMERS.

BREATHING
FOR VOICE-PRODUCTION

(Re-written and brought up to date).

PART I.

OF

EURHYTHM: THOUGHT IN ACTION

BY

H. H. HULBERT,

Capt. R.A.M.C., M.A. Oxford, M.R.C.S., L.R.C.P., &c.

Price . . . Three Shillings.

Paper Boards, 4s.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

FOR SALE.—Musical Opinion. Rare set of 19 bound vols., 1879 to 1904. Also single copies Musical Herald, 1895 to 1903, and 70 recent numbers of The Etude. Offers! to "G. M., c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1."

COMPETITION FESTIVAL MUSIC

PUBLISHED BY NOVELLO & CO., LTD.

VIOLIN SOLOS WITH PIANOFORTE ACCOMPANIMENT.

	s.	d.		s.	d.
BREWER, A. H. Auf Wiedersehen ... ..	3	0	MACCUNN, H. Romance in G ... ..	3	0
CARSE, A. Suite in four movements ... ..	4	0	MACKENZIE, A. C. Benedictus ... ..	3	0
COLERIDGE-TAYLOR, S. Ballade in D minor ... ..	3	0	— Distant Chimes (Op. 89) ... ..	3	0
— Four Characteristic Waltzes (Op. 22) ... ..	4	6	— Saltarello ... ..	3	0
COWEN, F. H. Minuet d'Amour ... ..	3	0	— Zingaresca (Op. 37, No. 1) ... ..	3	0
DAVIES, H. WOLFORD. Solemn Melody ... ..	2	3	MARKS, J. C. Réverie ... ..	3	0
ELGAR, E. Chanson de Matin (Op. 15, No. 1) ... ..	3	0	NESVERA, J. Berceuse Bohémienne ... ..	1	6
— Chanson de Nuit (Op. 15, No. 2) ... ..	2	3	NEWTON, E. Eight Easy Melodies ... ..	4	6
— Mazurka (Op. 10, No. ... ..	3	0	PARRY, C. H. H. Bourrée (Suite in F, Lady Radnor's Suite) ... ..	2	3
GERMAN, E. Bourrée and Gigue (Much Ado About Nothing) ... ..	4	0	— Capriccioso (Suite in D) ... ..	2	3
— Pavane (Romeo and Juliet) ... ..	3	0	— Twelve Short Pieces, in 3 sets ... ..	each set	4	0
— Three Dances (Henry VIII.) ... ..	4	6	RAFF. Cavatina ... ..	1	6
GOUNOD. Julex from "Mors et Vita ... ..	3	0	REED, W. H. A la Campagne ... ..	3	0
HAYNES, BATTISON. Idyll ... ..	3	0	SCHUMANN. Träumerei ... ..	1	6
HOLBROOKE, J. Souvenir de Printemps (Op. 23, No. 6) ... ..	3	0	SITT, H. Bunte Blätter (twelve easy pieces, in 4 books) ... ..	each book	3	0
IRELAND, J. Bagatelle ... ..	3	0	WARNER, H. W. Elegie ... ..	2	3
LEMARE, E. H. Andantino ... ..	3	0	WOLSTENHOLME, W. Allegretto ... ..	2	3
LLOYD, C. H. Six Easy Pieces ... ..	4	6

PIANOFORTE SOLOS.

	s.	d.		s.	d.
ARENSKY, A. Prelude in F minor (Op. 42, No. 1) ...	3	0	LANGE, G. Two Hungarian Dances (Op. 266) ·
— Romance in A flat (Op. 42, No. 2) ... ..	3	0	1. Isteni Czárdás ... ..	2	3
BACH. Bourrée in C ... ..	2	3	2. Rozsabokar Czárdás ... ..	2	3
— Gavotte in B minor from Violin Sonata (Saint-Saëns)	2	0	MENDELSSOHN. Perpetuum mobile (Op. 119) ...	3	0
BEETHOVEN. Andante in F (Klindworth) ... ..	3	0	— Prelude and Fugue in E minor (Klindworth)	3	0
— Two Rondos (Op. 51, No. 1 in C, No. 2 in G) (Klindworth)	3	0	— Scherzo in G minor from Octet (Op. 20) (Kihl)	3	0
COLERIDGE-TAYLOR, S. Valse de la Reine ... ..	2	3	RUBINSTEIN. Barcarolle (Op. 30) ... ..	2	3
DALCROZE, JACQUES-. Four Characteristic Dances	3	0	— Melody in F ... ..	1	6
ESIPOFF, S. Ballade, G minor ... ..	3	0	SAINT-SAËNS. Gavotte in C minor ... ..	2	3
— Cantique d'Amour ... ..	3	0	— Mazurka in G minor ... ..	3	0
FLETCHER, PERCY E. Valse Lyrique ("Smile of Spring")	2	3	SCHUBERT. Impromptu in B flat (Klindworth)	3	0
HANDEL. Aria con Variazioni ("The Harmonious Blacksmith") (Klindworth) ... ..	2	3	SCHUMANN. Arabesque in C major (Op. 18)	1	6
— Fugue in E minor (Klindworth) ... ..	2	3	— Three Rondos (Op. 28) ... ..	1	6
HAYDN. Andante con Variations in F minor (Klindworth)	3	0	SCOTT-BAKER, H. Pantomime ... ..	3	0
HENSELT, A. Si oiseau j'étais, A toi je volerais! (Op. 2, No. 5) (Pachmann) ... ..	2	3	SPINDLER, F. Husarenritt (Op. 140) ... ..	3	0
— Wiegenlied (Op. 45) (Chanson de Berceau) (Pachmann)	2	3	STRELEZKI. Miniature ... ..	2	3
HOFMANN, H. From Golden Days (Op. 34, No. 3) ...	1	6	— Valse Impromptu ... ..	2	3
— Puck (Op. 37, No. 9) ... ..	2	3	TSCHAIKOWSKY. Marche Militaire ... ..	3	0
HUMMEL, J. N. Rondo in E flat (Op. 11) (Klindworth)	3	0	— Valse Scherzo in A major ... ..	3	0
— Rondo in B minor (Op. 109) (Klindworth) ... ..	3	0	WEBER. Rondo brillant (E flat) (Op. 62) (Klindworth)	3	0
			WEBSTER, ERIC. Vignettes (Three Pieces) ...	3	0
			WENDT, T. Cantique d'Amour ... ..	2	3
			WEST, A. H. Toccata ... ..	3	0

SONGS.

SOPRANO.	s.	d.	TENOR.	s.	d.
DVORÁK. Invocation ... ..	2	0	FARRAR, E. O Mistress Mine ... ..	2	0
ELGAR, E. Oh soft was the song ... ..	2	0	MACKENZIE, A. C. While my lady sleepeth ...	1	6
FARRAR, E. Brittany ... ..	1	6	PARRY, C. H. H. God breaketh the battle ...	2	0
MACKENZIE, A. C. Cross and Crown ... ..	2	0	SOMERVILLE, L. Invocation to the Dawn ...	2	0
PURCELL. Evening Hymn ... ..	2	0	WAGNER. Walter's Prize Song ... ..	2	0
CONTRALTO.			BASS.
COLERIDGE-TAYLOR, S. Soul's Expression ... ..	4	0	BENEDICT. Rage, thou angry storm ... ..	2	0
DVORÁK. Inflammatus ... ..	2	0	DALE, B. J. O mistress mine ... ..	2	0
ELGAR, E. A child asleep ... ..	2	0	GREENE, M. Like the young God of wine ...	2	0
GLUCK. Thou art gone, alas, for ever ... ..	2	0	HARTY, HAMILTON. Homeward ... ..	2	0
PARRY, C. H. H. Ballad of Meshullemeth ... ..	2	0	SMYTH, E. M. Chryssilla ... ..	2	0

Specimens of every kind of music will be forwarded on application. To ensure a satisfactory selection, the Syllabus of the last Festival should accompany the request.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

COMPETITION FESTIVAL MUSIC

PUBLISHED BY NOVELLO & CO., LTD.

MIXED VOICES.

BAIRSTOW, E. C. Dawn of Song, The ... ..	4d.	McEWEN, J. B. Let me the canakin clink ... ..	6d.
BANTOCK, GRANVILLE. Awake, awake ... ..	4d.	Links o' love, The... ..	2d.
Grass of Parnassus ... ..	4d.	PARRY, C. H. H. Music, when soft voices die ... ..	3d.
On Himalay... ..	4d.	My delight and thy delight ... ..	4d.
BRAHMS. Dirge of Darthula, The (Op. 42, No. 3) ... ..	6d.	Sweet day, so cool... ..	3d.
COLERIDGE-TAYLOR. Evening Star, The ... ..	2d.	There rolls the deep ... ..	3d.
Lee Shore, The ... ..	4d.	REED, W. H. My lady fell a-sighing ... ..	4d.
CORNELIUS, P. Hero's rest (Op. 19) ... ..	4d.	SHAW, GEOFFREY. Who would true valour see ... ..	4d.
O death! thou art the tranquil night (Op. 11, No. 1) ... ..	6d.	STANFORD, C. V. Corydon, arise ... ..	4d.
ELGAR, E. After many a dusty mile (arr.) ... ..	4d.	Phœbe ... ..	4d.
Death on the hills ... ..	8d.	SULLIVAN, A. When love and beauty ... ..	8d.
Feasting I watch (arr.) ... ..	4d.	WALTHER, R. H. Sleep... ..	2d.
Go, song of mine ... ..	8d.	WEST, JOHN E. How eloquent ... ..	4d.
Shower, The ... ..	6d.	Woodmen, shepherds, come away ... ..	4d.
FLETCHER, PERCY E. Folly's Song ... ..	4d.	WILLIAMS, C. LEE. Song of the Pedlar ... ..	4d.
GARDINER, H. BALFOUR. Cargoes ... ..	4d.	WILLIAMS, R. VAUGHAN. Fain would I change that note ... ..	3d.
Old song resung, An ... ..	6d.	WOOD, CHARLES. Full fathom five ... ..	3d.
GERMAN, E. Chase, The... ..	4d.
London Town ... ..	6d.
My bonnie lass, she smileth ... ..	4d.

ELIZABETHAN MADRIGALS.

BATESON. Hark! hear you not... ..	4d.	MORLEY. Arise, awake, you silly shepherds ... ..	4d.
BENET. All creatures now are merry-minded ... ..	4d.	Shoot, false love, I care not ... ..	4d.
BYRD. I joy not in no earthly bliss ... ..	4d.	TOMKINS. Oyes! has any found a lad... ..	2d.
This sweet and merry month of May... ..	4d.	Weep no more ... ..	2d.
FARMER. I thought my love, that I should overtake you ... ..	4d.	WEELKES. As Vesta was from Latmos' Hill descending ... ..	4d.
GIBBONS, ORLANDO. Ah! dere heart ... ..	2d.	Lady, your eye ... ..	4d.
I tremble not at noise of war ... ..	4d.	WILBYE. Adieu, sweet Amarillis ... ..	3d.
MARSTON. Nymphs and shepherds ... ..	4d.	Alas! what hope of speeding ... ..	3d.
		Lady Oriana, The... ..	4d.

MALE VOICES (T.T.B.B.).

BANTOCK, GRANVILLE. Festival Song ... ..	6d.	FLETCHER, PERCY E. Sailor's Return, The ... ..	6d.
Give a rouse ... ..	4d.	Vision of Belshazzah, The ... ..	4d.
How sleep the brave ... ..	4d.	GARDINER, H. BALFOUR. Sir Eglamore ... ..	4d.
BOYCE, E. Dirge ... ..	3d.	GERMAN, E. O peaceful night ... ..	4d.
CARSE, A. The tide rises, the tide falls ... ..	3d.	Sleeping ... ..	4d.
CORNELIUS, P. Rider's Song, The ... ..	6d.	HEGAR, F. Phantom Host, The ... ..	8d.
DAVIES, H. WALFORD. Hymn before Action ... ..	4d.	LLOYD, C. H. Wet sheet and a flowing sea ... ..	4d.
DUNHILL, T. F. Full fathom five ... ..	4d.	SCHUMANN. Night March. (The Op. 62, No. 1) ... ..	4d.
It was a lover and his lass ... ..	4d.	Song of Freedom (Op. 62, No. 2) ... ..	4d.
Who is Sylvia? ... ..	3d.	SOMERVELL, A. Soldier, rest ... ..	4d.
Wind and the rain... ..	4d.	WEST, JOHN E. John Peel (Old English Song) ... ..	4d.
ELGAR, E. Reveille, The ... ..	8d.	WILLIAMS, R. VAUGHAN. Bushes and briars (Folk-Song) ... ..	3d.
Wanderer, The ... ..	4d.	WOOD, CHARLES. Down in yon summer vale ... ..	3d.
Zut! zut! zut! ... ..	4d.

FEMALE VOICES.

ATKINS, IVOR. Sea Song, A. (S.A.) ... ..	4d.	FLETCHER, PERCY E. *Dream, baby, (S.S.A.) ... ..	4d.
BERLIOZ. Ophelia. (S.A.)... ..	4d.	*Oh the merry May, (S.S.A.) ... ..	4d.
BOUGHTON, RUTLAND. Piper's Song, (S.S.A.)... ..	3d.	GERMAN, E. Beauteous morn. (S.S.A.) ... ..	4d.
BRAHMS. *Barcarolle (Op. 44, No. 3). (S.S.A.A.) ... ..	2d.	O lovely May, (S.S.A.) ... ..	4d.
Gardener, The (Op. 17, No. 3). (S.S.A.) ... ..	4d.	HOLST, G. *Now sleeps the crimson petal. (S.S.A.A.) ... ..	3d.
*Now all the roses (Op. 44, No. 7). (S.S.A.A.) ... ..	4d.	*O swallow, swallow, (S.S.A.) ... ..	3d.
COLERIDGE-TAYLOR, S. Encinctured with a twine of leaves. (S.S.A.) ... ..	4d.	*Splendour falls, The. (S.S.A.A.) ... ..	4d.
From the green heart of the waters. (S.S.A.) ... ..	4d.	*Sweet and low, (S.S.A.A.) ... ..	4d.
DAVIES, H. WALFORD. Cradle Song, A. (S.S.A.) ... ..	4d.	*Tears, idle tears (S.S.A.A.) ... ..	3d.
Lamb, The. (S.S.A.) ... ..	4d.	SHAW, GEOFFREY. Three Hymns from Pan's Anniversary:—
Shepherd, The. (S.S.A.) ... ..	4d.	Of Pan we sing. (S.S.A.)... ..	6d.
ELGAR, E. Christmas greeting, A. (S.A.) ... ..	8d.	Pan is our all. (S.S.A.A.) ... ..	4d.
My love dwelt in a northern land (arr.). (S.S.A.) ... ..	4d.	If yet Pan's orgies. (S.S.A.A.) ... ..	4d.
Stars of the summer night. (S.A.) ... ..	8d.	WILLIAMS, R. VAUGHAN. Sound sleep. (S.S.A.) ... ..	6d.
		WOOD, CHARLES. La Fileuse. (S.A.) ... ..	4d.

ELIZABETHAN MADRIGALS (ARRANGED).

*BATESON. Nightingale, The. (S.S.A.) ... ..	2d.	MORLEY. *My bonny lass she smileth. (S.S.A.A.) ... ..	4d.
*BYRDE. Looke downe, O Lord. (S.S.A.A.) ... ..	3d.	*Now is the month of maying. (S.S.A.A.) ... ..	3d.
*EDWARDS. In going to my lonely bed (S.S.A.A.)... ..	3d.	WEELKES. *Nightingale, The. (S.S.A.) ... ..	3d.
*GIBBONS, ORLANDO. The silver swan. (S.S.A.A.) ... ..	2d.	WILBYE. *Seek sweet content. (S.S.A.) Adapted from the madrigal—"Fly love, to heaven!" ... ..	2d.

* Unaccompanied.

UNISON SONG FOR MASED VOICES.

Words by WHITTIER.

WORSHIP.
PRICE TWOPENCE.

Music by GEOFFREY SHAW.

Specimens of every kind of music will be forwarded on application. To ensure a satisfactory selection, the Syllabus of the last Festival should accompany the request.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

"Such settings as these cannot do otherwise than tend to popularise the Church Service."—Musical Standard, June 6th, 1891.
 "Good, effective, easy, and dignified."—Musical Times, April 1, 1891.
 "Admirably adapted to meet the requirements of the majority of choirs and congregations." "Deserve extensive recognition and use."
 —Musical News, September 4 and 25, 1891.
 Also recommended by the Guardian, Church Times, &c., &c.

POPULAR CHURCH MUSIC

BY

J. H. MAUNDER

CHRISTMAS ANTHEMS.			Staff	Tonic
			Notation.	Sol-fa.
Anthem—Christians, Awake	...	...	4d.	3d.
Carol—Once in Bethlehem	...	...	3d.	2d.
Two Christmas Carols	...	...	4d.	3d.
SERVICES.
SERVICE IN G	...	...	2s.	1s. 4d.
Or, separately:—
Te Deum	...	...	4d.	3d.
Benedicite, omnia Opera	...	...	3d.	3d.
Benedictus	...	...	3d.	3d.
Jubilate	...	...	4d.	3d.
Office for the Holy Communion	...	...	10d.	8d.
Pater Noster from the above	...	...	3d.	3d.
Amen ditto	...	...	1½d.	1½d.
Magnificat and Nunc dimittis	...	...	4d.	3d.
SERVICE IN CHANT FORM (No. 1)	...	...	1s. 4d.	10d.
Or, separately:—
Te Deum, &c., with Kyrie	...	...	4d.	3d.
Office for the Holy Communion	...	...	8d.	6d.
Magnificat and Nunc dimittis	...	...	4d.	3d.
Te Deum in B flat	...	...	4d.	3d.
Magnificat and Nunc dimittis in C (partly Unison)	...	...	4d.	2d.
Magnificat and Nunc dimittis in D	...	...	4d.	3d.
ORGAN.
Voix Seraphique (for Recitals)	...	...	2s. 6d.	—
CHURCH CANTATA.
Penitence, Pardon, and Peace (for general use)	...	...	2s.	1s. 4d.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

ORIGINAL COMPOSITIONS

FOR THE ORGAN.

(NEW SERIES.)

No.	RECENT NUMBERS	s. d.
75.	TOCCATA AND FUGUE ("The Wanderer") C. Hubert H. Parry	3 6
76.	ANDANTE RELIGIOSO ... Alec Rowley	1 6
77.	SCHERZO ... G. J. Bennett	2 3
78.	THREE PRELUDES ... G. J. Bennett	2 3
79.	DÉSPOIR ... Ch. Quef	1 6
80.	CAPRICE IN D FLAT ... J. A. Sowerbutts	2 3
81.	THREE PSALM-PRELUDES, No. 1 ... H. Howells	1 6
82.	" " " " No. 2 ... H. Howells	1 6
83.	" " " " No. 3 ... H. Howells	1 6
84.	THEMA OSTINATA ... C. C. Palmer	1 6
85.	COVENANTERS' MARCH ... R. G. Hailing	1 6
86.	CHORAL MELODY ... C. F. Waters	1 6
87.	CONCERT OVERTURE IN F MINOR ... Alfred Hollins	3 0
88.	HOMAGE TO HANDEL ... S. Karg-Elert	3 6
89.	THREE SHORT AND EASY POSTLUDES (2nd Set) F. W. Wadely	2 3
90.	INTERMEZZI (No. 1, Pastorale) ... C. V. Stanford	2 0
91.	" (No. 2, Marcia Eroica) ... C. V. Stanford	2 0
92.	" (No. 3, Hush Song) ... C. V. Stanford	2 0
93.	" (No. 4, Intermezzo Founded upon an Irish air) ... C. V. Stanford	2 0
94.	CHORAL IMPROVISATION ON "DER HÖLLE PFORTEN SIND ZERSTÖRT" ... S. Karg-Elert	2 0
95.	CHORAL IMPROVISATION ON "GELOBT SEI GOTT IM HÖCHSTEN THRON" ... S. Karg-Elert	2 0
96.	SEVEN PASTELS FROM THE LAKE OF CONSTANCE S. Karg-Elert	5 6
97.	PRELUDE AND FUGUE IN C ... C. V. Stanford	2 0
98.	PRELUDE AND FUGUE IN C MINOR ... C. V. Stanford	2 0
99.	PRELUDE AND FUGUE IN B MINOR ... C. V. Stanford	2 0
100.	VARIATIONS ON AN OLD ENGLISH MELODY ("Heartsease") Geoffrey Shaw	2 0

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

NEW ORGAN COMPOSITIONS

BY

SIGFRID KARG-ELERT.

CHORAL IMPROVISATION

(FESTIVAL PRELUDE)

ON

DER HÖLLE PFORTEN SIND ZERSTÖRT

Price ... Two Shillings.

CHORAL IMPROVISATION

(FESTIVAL PRELUDE)

ON

GELOBT SEI GOTT IM HÖCHSTEN THRON.

Price ... Two Shillings.

SEVEN PASTELS

FROM THE

LAKE OF CONSTANCE.

1. The Soul of the Lake.
2. Landscape in Mist.
3. The Legend of the Mountain.
4. The Reed-grown Waters.
5. The Sun's Evensong.
6. The Mirrored Moon.
7. Hymn to the Stars.

Price ... Five Shillings and Sixpence.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

ORIGINAL COMPOSITIONS

FOR THE

ORGAN

BY

BASIL HARWOOD.

No.		s. d.
1.	DITHYRAMB	2 6
2.	COMMUNION IN F MAJOR	1 0
3.	INTERLUDE IN D MAJOR	1 6
4.	PEAN	3 6
5.	SHORT POSTLUDE FOR ASCENSIONTIDE	1 0
6.	REQUIEM ÆTERNAM	2 3
7.	ANDANTE TRANQUILLO IN E FLAT	1 6
8.	CAPRICCIO	2 6
9.	TWO SKETCHES	1 6
10.	CONCERTO IN D MAJOR	3 0
11.	THREE CATHEDRAL PRELUDES	3 0
12.	SONATA No. 2, IN F SHARP MINOR	3 0
13.	FANTASIA, "CHRISTMASTIDE"	3 6
14.	RHAPSODY	3 0
15.	IN AN OLD ABBEY	2 0

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

THREE ORIGINAL CAROLS.

WORDS AND MUSIC BY

KATE LLOYD.

1. IN BETHLEHEM'S FAIRE CITIE.
2. THE WHOLE WIDE WORLD IN CONCERT SINGS.
3. GENTLE SHEPHERD.

STAINER & BELL, LTD., 58, BERNERS STREET, W.1.

JUST PUBLISHED.

"OUTLINES OF MUSICAL FORM."

BY

ALBERT HAM.

PRICE FIVE SHILLINGS.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

INSTRUCTION BOOKS FOR THE VOICE.

GUSTAV GARCIA
A GUIDE TO SOLO SINGING

Price 3s. ; Paper Boards, 4s.

H. H. HULBERT.
BREATHING FOR VOICE-PRODUCTION

Price 3s. ; Paper Boards, 4s.

AGNES J. LARKCOM
THE SINGER'S ART

Price 1s. 6d.

RICHARD MANN
A MANUAL OF SINGING

Price 1s. 6d.

MARGARET NICHOLLS
SCHOOL CHOIR TRAINING

Price 3s.

ALBERTO RANDEGGER
SINGING

Price 6s. ; Paper Boards, 7s.

J. STOCKHAUSEN
METHOD OF SINGING

Price 6s. ; Paper Boards, 7s.

D. C. TAYLOR
SELF-HELP FOR SINGERS

Price 2s. 6d. ; Paper Boards, 3s. 6d.

VOCAL EXERCISES FOR ALL VOICES

WITH MARKS OF EXPRESSION AND PHRASING

BY

ALBERTO RANDEGGER.

MARCO BORDOGNI
TWENTY-FOUR VOCAL EXERCISES
FOR MEZZO-SOPRANO

Price 2s. 6d.

CONCONE

50 Lessons for the Medium Part of the Voice.
(Cloth, 4s. 6d.)

25 Lessons. A Sequel to the Fifty Lessons for the Medium Part of the Voice.

15 Vocalises. A Sequel to the Twenty-five Lessons
for the Medium Part of the Voice.
Ditto. For Mezzo-Soprano or Contralto.

40 Lessons for Contralto.

40 Lessons for Bass or Baritone.

Price 2s. 6d. each.

AUGUSTE PANSERON
FORTY MELODIC AND PROGRESSIVE VOCAL EXERCISES

FOR SOPRANO AND TENOR

IN TWO PARTS.

Part I. Containing Nos. 1 to 26. Part II. Containing Nos. 27 to 40.

Price 3s. each Part.

FORTY-TWO MELODIC AND PROGRES-SIVE VOCAL EXERCISES

FOR CONTRALTO, BARITONE, OR BASS

IN TWO PARTS.

Part I. Containing Nos. 1 to 29. Part II. Containing Nos. 30 to 42.

Price 3s. each Part.

FIFTY VOCALISES FOR TWO VOICES
SOPRANO AND MEZZO-SOPRANO, OR TENOR AND SOPRANO, OR TENOR AND BARITONE.

IN TWO PARTS.

Part I. Containing Nos. 1 to 30. Part II. Containing Nos. 31 to 50.

Price 3s. each Part.

PROGRESSIVE STUDIES FOR THE VOICE

WITH PIANOFORTE ACCOMPANIMENT

BY

GEORG HENSCHEL.

PART I.

STUDIES IN SUSTAINED SINGING.

PART II.

STUDIES IN FLORAL SINGING.

Each Part published for High, Medium, or Low Voice.

Price 4s. each.

LONDON : NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

NOVELLO'S POPULAR PIANOFORTE ALBUMS FOR YOUNG PERFORMERS.

HUBERT BATH DOLL'S-HOUSE SUITE

Price Three Shillings.

FRANCESCO BERGER EIGHTEEN LITTLE PIECES

Price Two Shillings and Sixpence.

J. D. DAVIS. FOUR LITTLE PIECES

Price Two Shillings and Threepence.

EDMONDSTOUNE DUNCAN HAPPY THOUGHTS

Price Three Shillings.

ARNOLD KRUG TEN LITTLE PIECES

Op. 109.

In two Books. Price Two Shillings and Threepence each.

ARNOLD KRUG SCENES FROM FAIRY-LAND

In two Books. Price Three Shillings each.

TH. KULLAK TWENTY-FOUR PIECES

Op. 62 AND 81.

In four Books. Price One Shilling and Sixpence each.

MAX MAYER BAGATELLES

Price Four Shillings.

MENDELSSOHN SIX CHRISTMAS PIECES

Price One Shilling and Sixpence.

ERNEST NEWTON WOODLAND DANCES

Price Three Shillings.

ERNEST NEWTON ROMANY LIFE

Price Three Shillings.

HUBERT G. OKE THREE PIECES

Price Three Shillings.

SCHUMANN PIECES FOR THE YOUNG

Part I., Price 1s. 6d. ; Part II., Price 1s. 6d.

SCHUMANN THREE PIANOFORTE SONATAS

(Part III. of Pieces for the Young).

Price One Shilling and Sixpence.

CLEMENT M. SPURLING SIX SHORT AND EASY PIECES

Price Three Shillings.

CLEMENT M. SPURLING OUR VILLAGE IN SUMMER

Price Two Shillings and Threepence.

E. A. SYDENHAM SIX SHORT AND EASY PIECES

Price Three Shillings.

TSCHAIKOWSKY CHRISTMAS ALBUM

In three Books. Price One Shilling and Sixpence each.

FRANCESCO BERGER FIRST STEPS AT THE PIANOFORTE

PRICE FOUR SHILLINGS.

LONDON : NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

FOLK-SONGS WHICH ARE CREATING A GREAT SENSATION.

NEGRO SPIRITUALS

BY

HENRY THACKER BURLEIGH.

The plantation songs known as "Spirituals" are the spontaneous outbursts of intense religious fervour, and had their origin chiefly in camp meetings, and other religious exercises.

Over Thirty numbers with pianoforte accompaniment are now issued in keys to suit all voices. Price 2s. net each. Complete List giving the title, key, and compass of each number can be had post free on application. Apply for it now. All the numbers published are being sung; but for those who may not be acquainted with these famous Folk-Songs we recommend the following to begin with.

Solos with Pianoforte Accompaniment. Price 2s. net each.

SWING LOW, SWEET CHARIOT, F (C-D) and A $\flat$ .

I GOT A ROBE ("Heaven, Heaven") A (E-C).

GO DOWN, MOSES. G min. (D-D) and B min.

STEAL AWAY TO JESUS. F (F-D) and A $\flat$ .

OH, DIDN'T IT RAIN. G (D-D) and A $\flat$ , &c.

'TIS ME, O LORD. A $\flat$  (A $\flat$ -E $\flat$ ).

I STOOD ON DE RIBBER OB JERDON. F (C-C) and A $\flat$ .

DEEP RIVER. C (G-E) D, and F.

I WANT TO BE READY. E $\flat$  (B $\flat$ -E $\flat$ ).

O, PETER, GO RING DEM BELLS. F (C-F) and A $\flat$ .

HARD TRIALS. E $\flat$  (E $\flat$ -E $\flat$ ), &c.

LITTLE DAVID, PLAY ON YOUR HARP. F (C-D) and A $\flat$ .

NEGRO SPIRITUALS BY H. T. BURLEIGH.

Arranged as Quartets for Mixed Voices (s.c.t.b.). Price 9d. net each.

COULDN'T HEAR NOBODY PRAY.

GO DOWN, MOSES.

I GOT A ROBE ("Heaven, Heaven").

SINNER, PLEASE DOAN LET DIS HARVES' PASS.

MY LORD, WHAT A MORNIN'!

SWING LOW, SWEET CHARIOT.

NEGRO SPIRITUALS BY H. T. BURLEIGH.

Arranged as Trios for Female Voices (s.s.c.). Price 9d. net each.

BALM IN GILEAD.

BY AN' BY.

DE GOSPEL TRAIN.

DEEP RIVER.

GO DOWN, MOSES.

HARD TRIALS.

I DON'T FEEL NO-WAYS TIRED

I GOT A ROBE ("Heaven, Heaven")

I WANT TO BE READY.

MY WAY'S CLOUDY.

NOBODY KNOWS DE TROUBLE I'VE SEEN.

OH, DIDN'T IT RAIN.

SINNER, PLEASE DOAN LET DIS HARVES' PASS.

SOMETIMES I FEEL LIKE A MOTHERLESS CHILD.

SWING LOW, SWEET CHARIOT.

WEEPIN' MARY.

NEGRO SPIRITUALS BY H. T. BURLEIGH.

Arranged as Quartets for Male Voices (t.t.b.b.). Price 9d. net each.

DEEP RIVER.

DE GOSPEL TRAIN.

GO DOWN, MOSES.

O, PETER, GO RING DEM BELLS.

SWING LOW, SWEET CHARIOT.

I GOT A ROBE ("Heaven, Heaven").

VERDI'S "REQUIEM."

Staff Notation, with Pianoforte Accompaniment. 6s. net. Tonic Sol-fa, 3s. net.

The Chorus parts (Men's and Women's), with Latin words, the Full Score and Orchestral parts of this magnificent work, may be hired from the Publishers.

Duration of performance—One hour and a half.

G. RICORDI & Co., 265, Regent Street, London, W.1.

A MODERN SCHOOL FOR THE VIOLIN

BY

AUGUST WILHELMJ AND JAMES BROWN.

THE purpose of this Work is to provide, in one systematic and comprehensive scheme, all that is necessary for the acquirement of the Art of Modern Violin Playing.

"A Modern School for the Violin" consists of Six Books devoted to Daily Technical Practice, Six Books of Studies for Violin alone, and a number of Pieces with Pianoforte Accompaniment, the Violin parts being specially edited for the purposes of teaching.

SECTION A.—TECHNICAL PRACTICE. IN SIX BOOKS.

The foundation of "A Modern School for the Violin" is laid by means of a series of Six Books dealing exclusively with the important subject of DAILY TECHNICAL PRACTICE. The First Book of Technical Practice (Book 1A) is limited to the 1st Position; the Second Book (2A) to the 1st, 2nd, and 3rd Positions; the Third Book (3A) to the first five Positions; and so on. Bowings and other technical devices are introduced in a similarly progressive manner throughout. Each Book of Technical Practice is divided into "Lessons" (or Chapters), and each Lesson contains a number of short repeating Exercises on some definite point of Violin Technique—as Fingering, Bowing, &c., with the needful explanations. Included in each Book will be found a complete set of Scales and Arpeggi, arranged according to the particular stage of advancement reached.

Taken as a whole, this section is intended to facilitate, and to insist on, a thorough, steady, and continuous progress in the mastery of the Instrument, this being the only possible means of preparing the groundwork for artistic achievement with all its lasting delights.

SECTION B.—STUDIES. IN SIX BOOKS.

Section B is formed of a series of original and selected Studies, in Six Books. Each Book of Studies (Section B) is carefully co-ordinated, in respect of difficulty and range of subject, with the correspondingly numbered Book of Technical Practice (Section A). Thus the First Book of Studies (1B) is written in the 1st Position; the Second Book (2B) in the 1st, 2nd, and 3rd Positions; the 3rd Book (3B) in all Positions up to and including the 5th; and so on. It should further be explained that the two Sections are designed to complement one another, and that the "School" must be practised, not in single Books of Technical Practice and Studies alternately, but in pairs. Thus, Books 1A and 1B are to be taken concurrently, then Books 2A and 2B, 3A and 3B, and so on, and the appropriate pairs are now issued bound together in cloth (see Cloth Bindings below).

	s.	d.		s.	d.
1A. TECHNICAL PRACTICE (1st Position)	3	0	1B. STUDIES ... .. (1st Position)	3	0
2A. DITTO (1st, 2nd, and 3rd Positions)	3	0	2B. DITTO ... (1st, 2nd, and 3rd Positions)	4	0
3A. DITTO ... (1st to 5th Position)	4	6	3B. DITTO ... (1st to 5th Position)	4	6
4A. DITTO ... (all Positions)	4	0	4B. DITTO ... (all Positions)	4	6
5A. DITTO ... Do.	4	0	5B. DITTO ... Do.	4	6
6A. DITTO ... Do.	4	6	6B. DITTO ... Do.	4	6

CLOTH BINDINGS.

	s.	d.
Book 1. (1A and 1B, bound together) in Cloth	7	6
„ 2. (2A and 2B, bound together) Do.	8	6
„ 3. (3A and 3B, bound together) Do.	10	6
„ 4. (4A and 4B, bound together) Do.	10	0
„ 5. (5A and 5B, bound together) Do.	10	0
„ 6. (6A and 6B, bound together) Do.	10	6

PIECES.

In completion of the scheme of "A Modern School" a number of Pieces are published, in a form designed to fulfil the requirements of Violin Teachers and Students. In each number the Violin part is furnished with complete Fingerings and Bowings, besides remarks as to the methods of rendering, &c.

No. 13. TWELVE FOLK DANCES FROM DENMARK. (1st Position)	s. d. 3 0	No. 21. CONCERTO IN A MINOR. J. S. BACH (1st to 6th Position)	s. d. 3 0
No. 14. SONATA IN G MINOR. G. TARTINI (All Positions)	3 0	No. 22. CONCERTO IN A MINOR. PIERRE RODE (Op. 9). (All Positions)	3 6
No. 15. OVERTURE TO SAMSON. G. F. HANDEL (1st, 2nd, and 3rd Positions)	3 0	No. 23. TWELVE CAROLS ... (1st Position)	3 0
No. 16. SONATINA IN D. FRANZ SCHUBERT (1st, 2nd, and 3rd Positions)	3 0	No. 24. SONATA IN A (KÖCHEL, No. 305). W. A. MOZART (1st to 5th Position)	3 0
No. 17. EIGHT HYMN TUNES. VARIOUS COMPOSERS (1st Position)	2 3	No. 25. RÊVERIE. HENRI VIEUXTEMPS (Op. 22, No. 3). (Advanced)	3 0
No. 18. STYRIAN DANCES (LANDLER) (Op. 165). JOSEF LANNER (1st to 5th Position)	3 0	No. 26. FOUR LITTLE PIECES. (From Op. 5) IGNAZ PLEYEL (1st Position)	3 0
No. 19. PRELUDE AND FUGUE IN G MINOR. J. S. BACH (Advanced)	3 0	No. 27. SARABANDE AND TAMBOURIN. JEAN-MARIE LECLAIR (1st to 5th Position)	3 0
No. 20. SONATA IN G (No. 8). JOSEPH HAYDN (1st to 6th Position)	3 0	No. 28. BOURRÉE AND GIGUE. J. S. BACH (1st and 3rd Positions)	2 3
		No. 29. BALLADE AND POLONAISE. HENRI VIEUXTEMPS (Op. 38). (Advanced)	3 0

MUSIC FOR ARMISTICE DAY.

By JOHN FOULDS.

A WORLD REQUIEM.

For Soprano, Contralto, Tenor, and Baritone Soli; Small Chorus of Boys and Youths (or Sopranos and Tenors); Full Chorus (Large or Small); Full or Small Orchestra and Organ. Available for performance by small choirs of 20 voices and upwards with organ; or by larger choirs with small string orchestra and organ (the latter playing from the Vocal Score); or by the average Choral Society of about 200 voices with orchestra of about 60; or by large choruses of 350 voices with orchestra of 80.

For the next annual commemoration performance at the Albert Hall on Armistice Day, November 11, the chorus will number upwards of 1,100, and the orchestra 125.

VOCAL SCORE (complete), Price. O.N. 5s. S.F. (Choruses only), 2s. 6d.

EXCERPTS from the above published separately—

	O.N.	S.F.		O.N.	S.F.
REQUIEM. For Chorus with Baritone Solo ...	6d.	4d.	HYMN OF THE REDEEMED (IN PACE). For Male Chorus ...	6d.	4d.
PRONUNTIATIO. For Chorus with Baritone Solo ...	6d.	4d.	SONG OF THE BLEST (IN PACE). For Soprano Solo (Violin obligato, ad lib. ) ...	2s.	—
ELYSIUM. Duet for S. and T., with small Female Chorus ...	6d.	4d.	BENEDICTIO AND CONSUMMATUS. For Chorus with S., C., T., and B. Soli, and small Chorus of Boys and Youths ...	6d.	4d.

By DR. HUGH BLAIR.

A SHORT FORM OF SERVICE FOR ARMISTICE DAY.

A dignified and comprehensive Memorial Service comprising suitable Hymns, Prayers and Responses, an Anthem, Three-fold Amen, and suggestions for "The Last Post" and "Reveill  ," Benediction, &c., &c.

Complete Edition, Price, 1s.

Anthem, "Rest in Peace Eternal," Price, 3d.

"Last Post and Reveill  ." Arranged for Organ Solo. Price, 1s. 6d.

Words only for Congregation, 1d. each, 3s. per 100.

By CYRIL JENKINS.

LAMENT.

The composer's sub-title to this work—"After a Roll Call in Flanders, 1915"—points at once to its significance. Here is music of deep sincerity.

Arranged for Organ or Violin Solo. Price, 1s. 6d. each.

Of all music dealers, or the publishers:

W. PAXTON & CO., LTD., 22, HIGH ST., NEW OXFORD ST., LONDON, W.C.1.

Send for Complete Catalogues, Vocal, C 201; Instrumental, C 401; Organ, C 501, post free.

PART-SONGS OF POPULAR APPEAL

S.A.T.B.

In these works the publishers have hit upon the unique idea of arranging famous compositions as part-songs for mixed voices. The adaptations of the familiar melodies for part-song purposes are remarkably successful, and will undoubtedly find favour with choisters on the look out for uncommon material.

	O.N.	S.F.		O.N.	S.F.
WEEP NO MORE ...	80023	4d. 2d.	WELCOME TO MAY ...	80032	3d. 2d.
Adapted from Rachmaninoff's "Prelude."			Founded on Mendelssohn's "The Bees' Wedding."
BIRTH OF SPRING ...	80027	3d. 2d.	DREAMING ...	80035	3d. 2d.
Adapted from Engelmann's "Melodie d'Amour."			Founded on Schumann's "Traumerei."
DREAM OF HOME ...	80030	4d. 2d.	AT EVENTIDE ...	80029	4d. 2d.
Waltz Song, Based on Arditi's "Il Bacio."			Founded on Raff's "Cavatina."
MAY-DAY SONG ...	80031	4d. 2d.	LONDONDERRY AIR ...	80028	3d. 2d.
Adapted from Gavotte, "Mignon," by A. Thomas.			Founded on the Traditional Irish Melody.
SOLEMN NIGHT ...	80039	3d. 2d.	SONG OF THE VOLGA BOAT-
Adapted from Beethoven's "Moonlight Sonata."			MEN ...	80033	3d. 2d.
WAKE, MORN OF SPLEN-			Founded on Traditional Russian Folk-Song,
DOUR ...	80040	3d. 2d.	FRUITS OF LOVE ...	80036	3d. 2d.
Adapted from Batiste's "Andante in G."			With Bass Solo, by Leslie Woodgate.

Sample Copies will be sent post free, at half-price, to bona-fide Choirmasters or Conductors sending card.

Send for complete Choral and Vocal List, C 201, post free.

PAXTON'S

(W. PAXTON & Co., LTD.)

22, HIGH STREET,
NEW OXFORD STREET,
- - LONDON, W.C.1.

THE SHAFTS OF CUPID

SONG.

THE WORDS BY

FRED G. BOWLES.

THE MUSIC BY

PERCY E. FLETCHER.

IN THREE KEYS.

PRICE TWO SHILLINGS EACH.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

SONGS

BY

ERNEST FARRAR.

BRITTANY

(Words by E. W. LUCAS).

THREE KEYS.

Price One Shilling and Sixpence each.

O MISTRESS MINE

(Words by SHAKESPEARE).

TWO KEYS.

Price Two Shillings each.

TWO PASTORALS

COME YOU, MARY.

WHO WOULD SHEPHERD PIPES
FORSAKE.

(Words by NORMAN GALE).

TWO KEYS.

Price Two Shillings each.

TWO SONGS

DIAPHENIA.

(Words by H. CONSTABLE).

THE LOVER'S APPEAL.

(Words by Sir F. WYATT).

TWO KEYS.

Price Two Shillings each.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

TWO SONGS

FROM

SHAKESPEARE.

1. O MISTRESS MINE.

2. COME AWAY, DEATH.

SET TO MUSIC BY

B. J. DALE.

Op. 9.

Price Two Shillings each.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

NOVELLO'S EDITIONS

OF THE

FAVOURITE OPERAS

ADAPTED FOR

CONCERT USE.

BALFE.

*THE BOHEMIAN GIRL.

Price 2s. 6d.

DONIZETTI.

*THE DAUGHTER OF THE REGIMENT.

Price 2s. 6d.

FLOTOW.

*MARTHA.

Price 2s. 6d.

GOUNOD

*FAUST.

Price 1s. 6d. Tonic Sol-fa, 1s.

VERDI.

*IL TROVATORE.

Price 2s. 6d. Tonic Sol-fa, 1s. 6d.

WAGNER.

TANNHÄUSER.

Price 2s. 6d.

WALLACE.

*MARITANA.

Price 2s. 6d.

*Orchestral Parts for Reduced Orchestra may be obtained from the Publishers.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

HIAWATHA'S WEDDING-FEAST

AND

THE DEATH OF MINNEHAHA

COMPOSED BY

S. COLERIDGE-TAYLOR.

ARRANGED FOR PIANOFORTE SOLO

BY

JOHN POINTER.

Price, Five Shillings and Sixpence each.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

T. MEE PATTISON'S POPULAR CANTATA

THE ANCIENT MARINER

33rd 1,000.

Vocal Score, 2s. 6d. Choruses only, 1s. 3d.

Band Parts may be hired.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

NOW READY.

FINAL BOOK

OF THE

BREARE VOCAL SERIES,

No. 5.

ENTITLED:

"VOCAL ANALYSES:

SENSITISING BREATH,
EMOTIONAL EVOLUTION."

Price Five Shillings.

PUBLISHERS:

London: SIMPKIN, MARSHALL, HAMILTON,
KENT & CO.

Harrogate: R. ACKRILL.

S. COLERIDGE-TAYLOR'S

INCIDENTAL MUSIC

TO

STEPHEN PHILLIPS'S DRAMA

NERO.

PRELUDE:

s. d.

Pianoforte Solo ... ..	3	0
Violin and Pianoforte ... ..	3	0
String Parts ... ..	4	2
Wind Parts MS.

PROCESSIONAL MARCH:

Pianoforte Solo ... ..	3	0
String Parts ... ..	3	4

FIRST ENTR'ACTE ("NERO"):

Pianoforte Solo ... ..	3	0
Violin and Pianoforte ... ..	3	0
Pianoforte Conductor ... ..	2	3
String Parts ... ..	4	2
Wind Parts ... ..	14	0

SECOND ENTR'ACTE ("POPPÆA"):

Pianoforte Solo ... ..	3	0
Violin and Pianoforte ... ..	3	0
Pianoforte Conductor ... ..	3	0
String Parts ... ..	3	4
Wind Parts ... ..	13	8

INTERMEZZO ("Singing Girls' Chorus"):

Pianoforte Solo ... ..	2	3
Violin and Pianoforte ... ..	3	0
Pianoforte Conductor ... ..	0	8
String Parts ... ..	3	0
Wind Parts ... ..	4	4

EASTERN DANCE:

Pianoforte Solo ... ..	3	0
Violin and Pianoforte ... ..	3	0
Pianoforte Conductor ... ..	1	6
String Parts ... ..	3	4
Wind Parts ... ..	8	4

SUITE OF FOUR PIECES:

Pianoforte Solo ... ..	6	0
String Parts ... ..	12	0
Wind Parts (just published complete)	34	0

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

Save Half the Cost of your Music Library

by buying from Foyles. Call and inspect the exceptionally wide range of second-hand copies (in good condition) of Standard Text-Books at about Half Published Prices.

Including amongst others the Works of STEWART MACPHERSON, MATTHAY, Mrs. CURWEN, OAKEY, PARRY, PEARCE, PETERSON, PROUT, and others.

GROVE'S DICTIONARY OF MUSIC AND MUSICIANS, THE MUSICAL EDUCATOR (5 Vols., 25s.), and CURWEN'S PUBLICATIONS.

If unable to call, write, mentioning requirements or interests. A special quotation and a copy of Foyle's Catalogue 122 will then be sent free of charge.

ORCHESTRAL, STRING, VOCAL, ORATORIO, AND PIANOFORTE MUSIC

Foyles hold a wide range at greatly reduced prices.

NEW MUSIC AND TEXT-BOOKS

Foyles supply on the best terms and guarantee quick delivery.

MUSIC AND BOOKS PURCHASED; BEST PRICES PAID.

FOYLE'S MUSIC DEPT.,

121-125, CHARING CROSS ROAD,
LONDON, W.C.2.OLD ENGLISH
VIOLIN MUSIC

EDITED BY

ALFRED MOFFAT.

PREFATORY NOTE.

Although considerable attention has been given to the resuscitation of Church Music, Gleees and Madrigals, Organ and even Harpsichord Music by the older English composers, very little has been done to make known the large mass of music for the Violin written by English musicians from the time of Purcell to the close of the 18th century. These works for the most part consist of Suites or Sonatas written for a solo violin with a figured bass, or for two violins and violoncello with a figured bass for the harpsichord or organ; another favourite form was the Concerto grosso.

It is with the object of making known to the public a selection of the best of these compositions that the present series has been undertaken.

ALFRED MOFFAT.

No.	1.	SONATA in G major	...	JAMES LATES	s. d.
"	2.	SONATA in D minor	...	HENRY ECCLES	3 0
"	3.	SONATA in B flat major	...	WILLIAM BABELL	3 0
"	4.	SONATA in G minor	...	JOHN STANLEY	3 0
"	5.	SONATA in A major	...	JOHN COLLETT	3 0
"	6.	TRIO-SONATA in E minor	...	THOMAS AUGUSTINE ARNE	4 6
"	7.	SONATA in D major	...	RICHARD JONES	3 0
"	8.	TRIO-SONATA in D minor	...	WILLIAM BOYCE	4 6
"	9.	THREE PIECES	...	WILLIAM BOYCE	3 0
"	10.	SONATA in E major	...	CHARLES MACKLEAN	3 0
"	11.	SONATA in G minor	...	WILLIAM CROFT	3 0
"	12.	SONATA in D minor	...	JOSEPH GIBBS	3 0
"	13.	SONATA in D minor	...	JOHN HUMPHRIES	3 0
"	14.	SONATA in A minor	...	THOMAS VINCENT	3 0

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JOHN SEBASTIAN BACH

48 PRELUDES AND FUGUES

(THE WELL-TEMPERED CLAVICHORD)

A NEW EDITION, EDITED BY HAROLD BROOKE.

IN TWO PARTS.

Price Four Shillings each.

Or, Complete, Cloth, Price Twelve Shillings and Sixpence.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

THE BARLESS PSALTER

POINTED FOR USE WITH ANGLICAN CHANTS

AN EASY BOOK FOR CHOIR AND CONGREGATION

CONTAINING

THE PSALMS OF DAVID.

THE CANTICLES AND PROPER PSALMS,

THE ATHANASIAN CREED

Together with Short Notes on the Text and full Explanatory Preface

EDITED BY

WALTER MARSHALL, M.A.

AND

SEYMOUR PILE, M.A., F.R.C.O.

Imperial 32mo, Price 1s. 6d. net.

Demy 8vo, Large Type, Price 4s. net

THE BARLESS PSALTER CHANTS

Price, Paper, 1s. 6d. net ; Cloth, 2s. 6d. net.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

NOVELLO'S ALBUMS FOR PIANOFORTE AND STRINGED INSTRUMENTS.

(TWO VIOLINS, VIOLA, AND VIOLONCELLO.)

The Pieces in the majority of these Albums are so arranged that if any Part, or combination of Parts, in addition to the First Violin and Pianoforte is used, they will sound complete.

No.	S. D.	No.	S. D.
1. DOLMETSCH, ARNOLD—Suite of Four Pieces ... .. 4 0 Extra String Parts, 8d. each.		17. COWEN, FREDERIC H. — Four English Dances. No. 4. Country Dance ... 4 0 Extra String Parts, 8d. each.
2. PURCELL, HENRY—Suite of Five Pieces ... .. 4 0 Extra String Parts, 8d. each.		18. COLERIDGE-TAYLOR, S. — Four Characteristic Waltzes. No. 1. Valse Bohemienne ... .. 3 0 Extra String Parts, 8d. each.
3. GERMAN, EDWARD — Three Dances, from the Music to "Henry VIII." 7 6 Extra String Parts, 1s. 6d. each.		19. COLERIDGE-TAYLOR, S. — Four Characteristic Waltzes. No. 2. Valse Rustique ... .. 3 0 Extra String Parts, 8d. each.
4. RAMEAU, J. P.—Gavotte in D ... 4 0 Extra String Parts, 8d. each.		20. COLERIDGE-TAYLOR, S. — Four Characteristic Waltzes. No. 3. Valse de la Reine ... .. 3 0 Extra String Parts, 8d. each.
5. HANDEL, G. F.—Six Pieces from the Water Music. 1. Bourrée in F; 2. Air in F; 3. Minuet in F; 4. Hornpipe in F; 5. Aria in G; 6. Allegro in D ... 5 6 Extra String Parts, 8d. each.		21. COLERIDGE-TAYLOR, S. — Four Characteristic Waltzes. No. 4. Valse Mauresque ... .. 3 0 Extra String Parts, 8d. each.
6. HANDEL, G. F.—Two Bourrées ... 3 0 Extra String Parts, 8d. each.		22. SPOHR, L. — Andantino, from the Symphony "The Consecration of Sound"... 4 6 Extra String Parts, 8d. each.
7. MACKENZIE, A. C. — Benedictus from Six Pieces for the Violin ... 4 6 Extra String Parts, 8d. each.		23. LANNER, JOSEF — Five Styrian Dances (Ländler) ... .. 4 6 Extra String Parts, 8d. each.
8. GOUNOD, CHARLES—Judex, from "Mors et Vita" ... .. 4 6 Extra String Parts, 8d. each.		24. TOURS, BERTHOLD—March in G 2 6 Extra String Parts, 4d. each.
9. MENDELSSOHN—Wedding March 4 0 Extra String Parts, 8d. each.		25. MACFARREN, W.—Bourrée in C ... 3 0 Extra String Parts, 8d. each.
10. MENDELSSOHN — War March ("Athalie") ... .. 4 0 Extra String Parts, 8d. each.		26. COWEN, FREDERIC H. — Minuet d'Amour, from A Suite of Old English Dances (Second Set) ... .. 4 0 Extra String Parts, 8d. each.
11. MENDELSSOHN—Cornelius March 4 0 Extra String Parts, 8d. each.		27. WEST, JOHN E.—Intermezzo (from "Seedtime and Harvest") ... .. 4 0 Extra String Parts, 4d. each.
12. MENDELSSOHN—Funeral March ... 4 0 Extra String Parts, 8d. each.		28. HOLST, GUSTAV—Seven Scottish Airs ... .. 4 6 Extra String Parts, 8d. each.
13. ELVEY, GEORGE—Gavotte (à la mode ancienne) ... .. 3 0 Extra String Parts, 8d. each.		29. LEMARE, E. H.—Andantino in D ♯ 4 0 Extra String Parts, 4d. each.
14. COWEN, FREDERIC H. — Four English Dances. No. 1. Stately Dance ... 4 0 Extra String Parts, 8d. each.		30. BREWER, A. H.—Auf Wiedersehen 4 0 Extra String Parts, 8d. each.
15. COWEN, FREDERIC H. — Four English Dances. No. 2. Rustic Dance ... 4 0 Extra String Parts, 8d. each.		31. ELGAR, EDWARD—Wand of Youth, The, Serenade from (First Suite, Op. 1a) ... 4 0 Extra String Parts, 4d. each.
16. COWEN, FREDERIC H. — Four English Dances. No. 3. Graceful Dance... 4 0 Extra String Parts, 8d. each.		32. FARNABY, GILES—Suite of Seven Pieces. Arranged by GRANVILLE BANTOCK 5 6 Separate String Parts, 8d. each.

To be continued.

NOVELLO'S CLASSICAL SONGS.

Voice Parts in Staff and Tonic Sol-fa Notations, with Pianoforte Accompaniment.

VOLUME I.

THIRTY-FIVE CLASSICAL SONGS.

Alone ... ..	Mendelssohn	May-dew ... ..	W. Sterndale Bennett
Autumn Song ... ..	Mendelssohn	May Song ... ..	Mendelssohn
Come, ever-smiling Liberty ... ..	Handel	Mermaid's Song, The ... ..	Haydn
Come, gladsome Spring ... ..	Handel	My mother bids me bind my hair ... ..	Haydn
Come, happy Spring ... ..	Giordani	O for the wings of a dove ... ..	Mendelssohn
Contentment ... ..	Mozart	O sunny beam ... ..	Schumann
Cottage, The ... ..	Schumann	Rose, softly blooming ... ..	Spohr
Creation's Hymn ... ..	Beethoven	Say, ye who borrow ... ..	Mozart
Crusaders ... ..	Schubert	Slumber Song ... ..	Mendelssohn
Evening Song ... ..	Mendelssohn	Song of May, A ... ..	Beethoven
Fairest Isle ... ..	Purcell	Sun of the sleepless ... ..	Mendelssohn
First violet, The ... ..	Mendelssohn	To Chloe (in sickness) ... ..	W. Sterndale Bennett
Fisherman, The ... ..	Schubert	Verdant Meadows ... ..	Handel
Forget me not ... ..	W. Sterndale Bennett	Wandering Miller, The ... ..	Schubert
Greeting ... ..	Mendelssohn	Welcome to Spring ... ..	Mendelssohn
Hark! hark! the lark ... ..	Schubert	Whither ... ..	Schubert
Hear thou my weeping ... ..	Handel	Who is Sylvia? ... ..	Schubert
Hey, Baloo! ... ..	Schumann

VOLUME II.

THIRTY-SIX CLASSICAL SONGS.

Angels, ever bright and fair ... ..	Handel	Lord, at all times I will bless Thee... ..	Mendelssohn
Ave Maria ... ..	Schubert	Lotos Flower, The ... ..	Schumann
Bird is softly calling, A ... ..	Mendelssohn	O star of Eve ... ..	Wagner
Blow, blow, thou winter wind ... ..	Arne	Old German Spring Song (Frühlingslied)... ..	Mendelssohn
By Celia's Arbour (The Garland) ... ..	Mendelssohn	On Wings of Song ... ..	Mendelssohn
Coming of Spring, The ... ..	Schumann	Rose among the heather ... ..	Schubert
Cradle Song ... ..	Schubert	Sailor's Song, The ... ..	Haydn
Evening Star, The ... ..	Schumann	Slumber, beloved ... ..	Bach
Fisher's Song ... ..	Schubert	Smiling dawn of happy days, The ... ..	Handel
Free mind, The ... ..	Schumann	Thou art repose ... ..	Schubert
Garland, The (By Celia's Arbour) ... ..	Mendelssohn	Though far away ... ..	Mendelssohn
Gentle zephyr ... ..	W. Sterndale Bennett	Thou'rt like unto a flower ... ..	Schumann
Holiday on the Rhine, A ... ..	Schumann	To Music ... ..	Schubert
Huntsman, rest ... ..	Schubert	Trust in Spring ... ..	Schubert
I love thee... ..	Beethoven	Two Grenadiers, The ... ..	Schumann
Joy of Spring, The ... ..	Mendelssohn	Wanderer's Night-Song ... ..	Schubert
Know'st thou the land? ... ..	Beethoven	Where'er you walk ... ..	Handel
Lay of the imprisoned huntsman ... ..	Schubert	Where the Bee sucks ... ..	Arne
Litany ... ..	Schubert

VOLUME III.

THIRTY-EIGHT CLASSICAL SONGS.

Art thou troubled (Dove sei) ... ..	Handel	Memory, A ... ..	Brahms
But the Lord is mindful of His own ... ..	Mendelssohn	Morning Song ... ..	Mendelssohn
Butterfly, The ... ..	Cornelius	Nazareth ... ..	Gounod
Courage ... ..	Schubert	Nymphs and Shepherds ... ..	Purcell
Dawn, gentle flower ... ..	W. Sterndale Bennett	O my love's like the red, red rose ... ..	Schumann
Deep treasure'd in my heart ... ..	Schumann	O rest in the Lord ... ..	Mendelssohn
Erlaf-lake ... ..	Schubert	O think of me ... ..	Cornelius
Fishermaiden, The ... ..	Schubert	Ode to joy... ..	Schubert
Full-orbed moon, The ... ..	Schubert	Of in my dreams ... ..	Cornelius
Good-night, my dearest child... ..	Brahms	Oh I had I Jubal's lyre... ..	Handel
Greeting to Spring, A ... ..	Schumann	Over out the Forth ... ..	Schumann
How beautiful are the feet ... ..	Handel	Peace ... ..	Schubert
I will sing of Thy great mercies ... ..	Mendelssohn	Sandman, The ... ..	Schumann
In May ... ..	Schumann	Secrets ... ..	Schubert
Know'st thou the land? ... ..	Schubert	Sing, Maiden, sing ... ..	W. Sterndale Bennett
Lark, The... ..	Rubinstein	Spring advancing (Frühlingsglaube) ... ..	Mendelssohn
Let the bright Seraphim ... ..	Handel	Swallow's flying west, The ... ..	Brahms
Little Sandman, The ... ..	Brahms	Trout, The ... ..	Schubert
Lord of our being (Sorge nel petto)... ..	Handel	Violets ... ..	Cornelius

VOLUME IV.

THIRTY CLASSICAL SONGS.

Cherry Ripe ... ..	Horn	Lullaby ... ..	Brahms
Children at play ... ..	Mozart	My heart ever faithful ... ..	Bach
Come let us all this day ... ..	Bach	Now fades the sun's last lingering ray ... ..	Franz
Flower thou resemblest, A ... ..	Rubinstein	O come, do not delay ("The Marriage of Figaro") ... ..	Mozart
Gentle flowers ("Faust") ... ..	Gounod	Organ-grinder, The ... ..	Schubert
Gentle touch, The ... ..	Goetz	Orpheus with his lute ... ..	Sullivan
Greenwood calls, The ... ..	Schubert	Prepare thyself, Zion ... ..	Bach
Harper's Song, The ... ..	Schubert	Serenade ... ..	Gounod
I attempt from love's sickness ... ..	Purcell	Shepherds, The ... ..	Cornelius
It was a lover ... ..	Morley	Tender wood-dove ... ..	Gounod
Jerusalem ... ..	Mendelssohn	Under the greenwood tree ... ..	Arne
Lass with the delicate air, The ... ..	Arne	Violet, The ... ..	Mozart
Legend ... ..	Tchaikovsky	Walnut-tree, The ... ..	Schumann
Like to a linden tree ... ..	Dvorák	When all was young ("Faust") ... ..	Gounod
Longing ... ..	Schubert	When daisies pied ... ..	Arne

PRICE TWO SHILLINGS AND SIXPENCE EACH VOLUME.

Separate Numbers from 1½d. to 3d. In Books, containing six or eight songs, from 8d. to 1s.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

SOLOS FROM THE SACRED CANTATAS

OF

JOHN SEBASTIAN BACH.

Each Book, One Shilling and Sixpence.

THIRD SET.

JUST PUBLISHED.

SOPRANO.

- Recit. { O Lord, hear me when I call ("Lord, rebuke me not").
 Air { How long, O Lord ("Lord, rebuke me not").
 Air { O praise the Lord ("O praise the Lord").
 Recit. { O Jesu, our Redeemer ("There is nought of soundness").
 Air { Hearken when with trembling accents ("There is nought of soundness").
 Air { Though reviling tongues assail me ("Watch ye, pray ye").

ALTO.

- Air { Be welcome, thou great angel ("O teach me, Lord").
 Air { Ah, tarry yet ("Praise our God").
 Air { God is ever sun and shield ("The Lord is a sun and shield").
 Recit. { Be steadfast in affliction ("Wailing, crying").
 Air { Pain and sorrow work salvation ,, ,,

TENOR.

- Recit. { Lord, why so far away ("Jesus sleeps").
 Air { In billows the rivers of Belial ("Jesus sleeps").
 Recit. { O happy town, O favoured land ("Praise thou the Lord").
 Air { O blest are all that fear Him ("Praise thou the Lord").
 Recit. { Reject it not ("Sages of Sheba").
 Air { Saviour, take me for Thine own ("Sages of Sheba").
 Air { Uplift your heads on high ("Watch ye, pray ye").

BASS.

- Air { God, Whose power never faileth ("Let songs of rejoicing").
 Recit. { Although an host encamp ("Lord, rebuke me not").
 Air { O Lord, thy mercy is in the heavens ("Lord, rebuke me not").
 Air { Fare ye well ("O teach me, Lord").
 Recit. { These things that Isaiah of old ("The Sages of Sheba").
 Air { Gold of Ophir is but vain ("The Sages of Sheba").
 Air { Ah, where shall I succour ("There is nought of soundness").

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

NURSERY SONGS

FROM THE

APPALACHIAN MOUNTAINS

ARRANGED WITH PIANOFORTE ACCOMPANIMENT

BY

CECIL J. SHARP.

ILLUSTRATED IN SILHOUETTE

BY

ESTHER B. MACKINNON.

FIRST AND SECOND SERIES.

Price, Paper Boards, Six Shillings each Series.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

THE SAVOY OPERA SERIES

AN ATTRACTIVE NEW SERIES OF PIANOFORTE ALBUMS containing excerpts from the favourite

GILBERT AND SULLIVAN OPERAS

Simply and artistically arranged, and carefully phrased and fingered by

THOMAS F. DUNHILL.

The following Albums may be obtained at all Music Sellers

THE MIKADO	YEOMEN OF THE GUARD	PATIENCE
GONDOLIERS	PIRATES OF PENZANCE	IOLANTHE
PRICE 2/- NET EACH.

Further additions to the series will be announced in due course.

The Pianoforte Pieces in these volumes have been arranged with a view to giving delight to quite young players and others of modest skill who may desire to familiarise themselves with music which is full of the happiest recollections.

Each excerpt is complete in itself, and while presenting no serious technical difficulties, will be found to preserve faithfully the freshness of the original.

CHAPPELL & CO., LTD., 50, New Bond Street, LONDON, W.1.

NEW YORK AND SYDNEY.

NOW READY.

IGOR STRAWINSKY 'THE SOLDIER'S TALE'

TO BE READ, PLAYED, AND DANCED.

COMPLETE PIANO SCORE

WITH FRENCH, ENGLISH, AND GERMAN TEXT.

Original French Text by C. F. RAMUZ.

English Version by ROSA NEWMARCH.

PRICE 20s. net.

ENGLISH LIBRETTO (ROSA NEWMARCH).

Price ... 2s. net.

PREVIOUSLY PUBLISHED :

GRANDE SUITE FOR PIANO. Arranged by the Composer	...	Price 10s. net.
SUITE FOR CLARINET, VIOLIN AND PIANO.
Arranged by the Composer ... ..	...	Price 20s. net.

J. & W. CHESTER, LTD., 11, Great Marlborough Street, London, W.1.

THE MUSICAL TIMES

AND SINGING-CLASS CIRCULAR

FOUNDED IN 1844

PUBLISHED ON THE FIRST OF EVERY MONTH

No. 981.—Vol. 65

Registered at the General Post
Office for Canadian Postage

NOVEMBER 1 1924

Price 6d.; Postage 2d.

Annual Subscription, post-free, 7s. 6d.

ROYAL CHORAL SOCIETY.

ROYAL ALBERT HALL.

Patron - HIS MAJESTY THE KING.

FIFTY-FOURTH SEASON, 1924-1925.

SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 15, at 2.30 p.m.

MASS IN D - - - - - ETHEL SMYTH
THE SPIRIT OF ENGLAND - - - ELGAR

MISS DORIS VANE.
MISS ASTRA DESMOND.
MR. JOHN ADAMS.
MR. JOSEPH FARRINGTON.

THE ROYAL ALBERT HALL ORCHESTRA.

Conductor - DR. MALCOLM SARGENT.

SATURDAY, DECEMBER 20, at 2.30 p.m.

CAROLS

MISS MEGAN FOSTER.
MISS OLGA HALEY.
MR. PARRY JONES.
MR. PETER DAWSON.

Conductor - MR. H. L. BALFOUR.

At the Organ - MR. R. ARNOLD GREIR.

Stalls, 10s. 6d.; Arena, 7s. 6d.; Balcony (Reserved), 5s.;
Unreserved, 3s. 6d.; Gallery Promenade (1,000 Seats), 2s.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

YORK GATE, MARYLEBONE ROAD, LONDON, N.W.1.

Instituted 1822. Incorporated by Royal Charter, 1830.

Patron: HIS MAJESTY THE KING.

President: H.R.H. THE DUKE OF CONNAUGHT, K.G.

Principal: JOHN B. McEWEN, M.A., F.R.A.M.

MICHAELMAS HALF-TERM commences on Monday,
November 3.

A SPECIAL COURSE FOR THE TRAINING OF CONDUCTORS has been instituted.

A SPECIAL TEACHERS' TRAINING COURSE has been arranged to meet the requirements of The Teachers' Registration Council.

LECTURES by PERCY A. SCHOLES, Esq., on Wednesdays, November 5, 12, and 26, at 3. Subjects: "Those Music Critics—A Confession," "The Composer's Problem—or the History of Music in a Nutshell," and "Music and the Wider Public."

CHAMBER CONCERTS, November 3 and 19, at 3.

FORTNIGHTLY CONCERTS, Saturdays, November 8 and 22, at 3.

L.R.A.M. CHRISTMAS EXAMINATION. Entries will be accepted up to November 12, on payment of a late fee of 5s.

J. A. CREIGHTON, Secretary.

MANCHESTER SCHOOL OF MUSIC.

Principal: ALBERT J. CROSS, A.R.A.M.

FOUNDED 1892.

The oldest Institution in Manchester devoted solely to the interests of music.

All branches of Music taught. Day and Evening Private Lessons.

Opera Class. Full Orchestral Class. Intermediate and Elementary

String Orchestras, Classes for Ensemble Playing, Elocution, Choral

Singing, Harmony, &c.

Single Subjects taught. Prospectus from 16, Albert Square.

THE ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

PRINCE CONSORT ROAD, SOUTH KENSINGTON, S.W.7.

(Incorporated by Royal Charter, 1883.)

Patron: HIS MAJESTY THE KING.

President: H.R.H. THE PRINCE OF WALES, K.G.

Director: SIR HUGH P. ALLEN, M.A., Mus. Doc.

Honorary Secretary: GEORGE A. MACMILLAN, Esq., D.Litt.

Registrar: CLAUDE AVELING, Esq., M.A.

The College offers a Complete Course of Musical Education to pupils of both sexes, both professional and amateur. Upwards of seventy Scholarships and Exhibitions are founded which provide free musical education.

SPECIAL CLASSES for CONDUCTING and TRAINING of TEACHERS have been instituted.

The OPERATIC and BALLET CLASSES have the use of the fully equipped College OPERA THEATRE with SUNKEN ORCHESTRA.

Examinations for the Associateship of the College (A.R.C.M.) in all subjects held three times a year in December, April, and September.

Guildhall School of Music.

(CORPORATION OF LONDON.)

VICTORIA EMBANKMENT, E.C.4.

PRINCIPAL: SIR LONDON RONALD, F.R.A.M., F.R.C.M., &c.

PRIVATE LESSONS in all Musical Subjects, and STAGE TRAINING in Elocution, Gesture, Dancing, Opera.

Complete Musical Education at inclusive fees, £9 9s. and £12 12s. Opera Class, Saturdays. Special Training Course for Teachers (approved by Teachers' Registration Council).

Prospectus and Syllabus of Local Centres and Schools Examinations (open to general public) free.

Telephone: Cent. 4459. H. SAXE WYNDHAM, Secretary.

THE ASSOCIATED BOARD

OF THE R.A.M. AND THE R.C.M.

FOR LOCAL EXAMINATIONS IN MUSIC.

Patron: HIS MAJESTY THE KING.

President: H.R.H. THE PRINCE OF WALES, K.G.

LOCAL CENTRE EXAMINATIONS (SYLLABUS A).

Written Examinations held in March and November at all Centres. Practical Examinations in March-April and November-December at all Centres. Entries for the March-April Examinations close Wednesday, February 11th, 1925.

"SCHOOL" EXAMINATIONS (SYLLABUS B).

Held throughout the British Isles three times a year, viz., March-April, June-July, and October-November. Entries for the March-April Examinations close Wednesday, February 4th, 1925.

ELOCUTION EXAMINATIONS will be held at certain fixed centres in March-April, June-July, and October-November each year. For full particulars see special Elocution Syllabus.

Examination Music and Scales for Pianoforte and for Violin, and Past Written Papers are published officially by the Board, and can be obtained from the Central Office, or through any Music Seller.

The Board offers annually SIX EXHIBITIONS tenable at The R.A.M. or The R.C.M. for Two or Three Years.

Syllabuses A and B, Elocution Syllabus, Entry Forms, and any further information, may be obtained post-free from:

THE SECRETARY, 14 & 15, Bedford Square, London, W.C.1.

The Royal College of Organists.

THE SOLO-PLAYING TESTS for the next F.R.C.O. EXAMINATION are:

Prelude and Fugue in C, 9-8 time, J. S. Bach. (Novello, Book 9, p. 156; Augener, No. 5, p. 69; Peters, Vol. 2, No. 7.)

Fantasia in G major (without Fugue), C. Hubert H. Parry. Original Compositions for the Organ (New Series), No. 22. (Novello.)

Adagio espressivo, from the Symphony in C, Schumann. Stainer's arrangements, No. 5, p. 54. (Novello.) This arrangement only.

The 10 selected pieces and the book set for the Essay for the January, 1925, A.R.C.O. Examination, are the same as those set for July, 1924.

All Candidates for the next Examinations must send in their names for FELLOWSHIP by DECEMBER 11th, for ASSOCIATESHIP by DECEMBER 18th. In the case of NEW MEMBERS proposal forms duly filled up must be sent in before DECEMBER 4th. No names will be entered after the above dates.

Free lectures on Choir-Training will be given at the College on Monday, November 3rd, at 7.30 p.m., by Dr. H. W. Richards, on "The General Principles of Choir-Training." Tuesday, November 4th, at 3 p.m., by Dr. Keighley, on "Mixed Choirs"; at 6 p.m., by Dr. Stanley Marchant, on "Boys' Voices." Members and their friends are cordially invited. No tickets required.

Regulations, list of College Publications, Lectures, &c., may be had on application.

Examples indicating the character and approximate difficulty of the NEW TESTS, set for the first time at the July, 1924, Examinations, may be obtained at the College. Associateship or Fellowship, 6d. each (post free).

The College is open daily from 10 to 4: Saturdays 10 to 1.

H. A. HARDING, Hon. Secretary.

Kensington Gore, S.W.7.

ROYAL MANCHESTER COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

Founded 1893. Incorporated by Royal Charter, 1923.

Patron: HER MAJESTY QUEEN ALEXANDRA.

President: H.R.H. THE DUKE OF YORK, K.G.

Principal: Dr. ADOLPH BRODSKY.

Registrar: STANLEY WITHERS, M.A.

Students are required to enter upon a complete course of Musical instruction, and are not admitted for a shorter period than one year.

Fee for the year, £36. Special fee for Organ Course, £30, and for Wind Instrument Course, £18.

Systematic Course for the Training of Teachers included in the curriculum.

The Prospectus, with Scholarship information, Diploma Regulations, and Entry Forms, on application.

96 and 95, WIMPOLE STREET, W.1.

TOBIAS MATTHAY PIANOFORTE SCHOOL

Instruction under his teachers, and under his own supervision.

Open to Professionals and Amateurs, and also to Children.

The Staff consists of thirty-nine senior Professors of thorough experience and platform reputation, all trained by the founder.

Special Short Courses for Teachers during term and vacation.

LECTURE-LESSON Class by Mr. MATTHAY on the practical teaching of Technique and Interpretation, diagnosis and correction of faults, musical analysis and synthesis, &c., alternate Wednesday evenings.

Mr. FREDERICK MOORE takes alternate Wednesdays.

COMPLETE TRAINING COURSE FOR TEACHERS.

(Approved by the Teachers' Registration Council.)

This ONE-YEAR Course may be joined at the beginning of ANY TERM.

For further particulars please apply, Mrs. MARION COLE, Secretary.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

TEACHERS' TRAINING COURSE.

The Lectures on teaching Singing, in connection with the above Course will be given during Lent term by Madame A. J. LARKCOM, F.R.A.M. For particulars apply, Secretary, R. A. Music, London, N.W.1.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

YORK GATE, MARYLEBONE ROAD, LONDON, N.W.1.

Instituted 1822. Incorporated by Royal Charter 1830.

Patron: HIS MAJESTY THE KING.

President: H.R.H. THE DUKE OF CONNAUGHT, K.G.

Principal: JOHN B. McEWEN, M.A., F.R.A.M.

LICENTIATESHIP EXAMINATION.

SEPTEMBER, 1924.

The following CANDIDATES were SUCCESSFUL:

SINGING.—As TEACHERS: Violet Irene Baker, Margaret E. Bond, Grace Brooks, John Fallon, Alexander Herbert Griffin, Anna Howe, Susannah Melhuish, William Harold Milnes, Rosalia T. Phillips.

As PERFORMERS: Mary Dale, Kathleen Emilie Eager, George Edward Firth, Ida Emily May Gamman, Ida Elizabeth Glossop, Margaret Hale, Christobel C. Hall, Nellie Keighley, Mabel Norton, Lois May Phear, Lorna Bower Tarbat.

EXAMINERS: Ethel Bilsland, Edward Iles, Frederic King, Charles Phillips.

PIANOFORTE.—As TEACHERS: Kathleen Ardron-Jones, Violet Irene Baker, Winifred Mary Beasley, Daisy May Best, Roberta J. Grant Boucher, Marjorie W. Boxwell, Lois Mary Brown, Charles D. Burchall, John George Burnett, Frederick Butlin, Hettie V. M. Carter, Kathleen Carwithen, Gladys M. Castle, Augusta Verena Chandler, Joyce Daniell, Kathleen Mary Dark, Mona Dean, Evelyn Dorothy Devonshire, Edith Mabel Doyle, Marjorie Adelaide Drake, Kathleen Mary Rotherforth Drury, Ernest George Duggan, Alexandra Watson Dunlop, Catherine I. Forster, Ethel Rachel Furness, Jean Margaret Gordon Furness, Hélène Gipps, Ida Gordon, Florence Evelyn Hale, Althor Ernest Barton Hart, Mary Lucy Helliwell, Margery Edith Hill, Dorothy Hinde, Elaline Mary Holmes, Cecil Francis Arthur Holt, Eileen E. Hosken, Dora Irene Hughes, Gladys M. Husbands, Doris Middleton Hyde, Marjorie Jaco, Sidney Johnson, Frida Johnston, Leila Johnston, Marjorie Jones, Nancy Jones, Katharine Helen Kempster, Constance Sybil Kingdon, Linda R. B. Kingsford, Clara Hope Knight, Monica Winter Le Mare, Frances Lewis, Margaret Stanley Little, Mary Long, Sheila C. Macintosh, Bessie MacKellow, Harry Manson, Elsie Marsden, Marjorie Edith Maxwell, Winifred McCarthy, Christina McDonald, Moira Blanche McGillevie, Amelia Meldrum McHattie, Kate McKie, Lydia A. Miller, Katharine Adelaide Molyneux, Beatrix Moore, Constance Morgan, Norah Constance Morley, Elizabeth Joyce Newbold, Constance Nolan, Jessie Oakley, Winifred Violet Parfitt, Rennie Pawson, Jessie Mary Phillips, Evelyn Florence Mary Picken, Lillian Gladys Pyne, Catherine Elizabeth Radloff, Irene Eva Raymond, Edna May Richardson, Philip Edward Richardson, Robert Ritchie, Harry Robinson, Dorothy Roskrug Rosoman, Joyce de Ste. Croix, Katharine Schröder, Agnes Emma Scott, William Henry Shirley, Arthur Reginald Charles Smart, Margaret Smith, Nora Christine Snell, Sheila Stewart, Elsie Stoker, Doris Stringer, Cynthia Sutcliffe, Ida Lillian Thomas, Muriel Edith Tooley, Hilda Mary Tradewell, Lucy Eileen Tudhope, Linda Mary Tyrell, Enid Marion Upward, Louisa Kate Vivian, Ronald Harry Waud, Hilda A. Westall, Amy Whiteley, Gladys May Wilkes, Madge Wilson.

As PERFORMERS: Ruby Ethel Bell, Sara Krein, Dorothy Leatherdale.

EXAMINERS: Cave, Carlo Albanesi, Victor G. Booth, Ambrose Coviello, Harold Craxton, Vivian Langrish, Claude F. Pollard, Charles F. Reddie, Septimus Webbe, Cuthbert Whitmore.

ORCHESTRAL INSTRUMENTS.—VIOLIN.—As Teacher: Kenneth Sullens.

As PERFORMERS: Louise Emmeline Atherton, Irene Hambleton, Rupert George Frederic Sutton, Katharine Stella Wilkinson.

VIOLONCELLO.—As TEACHER: Gwendolen Cupar.

HARP.—As PERFORMER: Ada S. Davies.

OBOE.—As PERFORMER: William Norris Campbell.

EXAMINERS: Adam Carse, Spencer Dyke, Leon Goossens, James T. Lockyer, Gwendolen Mason, W. E. Whitehouse, E. Rowsby Wood.

PIANOFORTE ACCOMPANIMENT: Henry Davison.

EXAMINERS: Harold Craxton, Welton Hickin, Cuthbert Whitmore.

AURAL TRAINING and SIGHT-SINGING: Alice Margaret Good, Edward Allen Forsyth Huntley, Bertha Maude Roberts, Annie Osborne Warburton.

EXAMINERS: Stewart Macpherson, Ernest Read, Frederick G. Shinn, Mus. D., Dunelm.

VOICE CULTURE and CLASS SINGING: Gladys Dunn, Edward Walter Pope, Tom Scott Tickle.

EXAMINERS: A. J. Greenish, Mus. D., Cantab., Stewart Macpherson, H. W. Richards, Mus. D., Dunelm.

ELOCUTION.—As TEACHERS: Gertrude England, Emily Mary English, Mina Gascoigne Furrell, Alexander Black Harley, Dorothy Rachel Horwood, Mary Goldie Mackenzie, Madge Thorne, Gladys Toye.

As PERFORMERS: Dorothy Freshwater, Rosalind Roe, William Norman Stephenson.

EXAMINERS: A. Acton Bond, Wilton Cole, Mrs. Matthay, Constance Newell, Katie Thomas.

J. A. CREIGHTON, Secretary.

GLASGOW ATHENÆUM SCHOOL OF MUSIC.

SESSION 1924-25.

The Session consists of Three Terms: September 8 to November 1, December 1 to March 7, and March 9 to June 5.

Complete Musical Curriculum. Day and Evening Classes.
Single Subjects taught.

Prospectus and further information may be obtained from:

STUART S. FORSYTH, Secretary,
ATHENÆUM BUILDINGS, GLASGOW.

BIRMINGHAM & MIDLAND INSTITUTE SCHOOL OF MUSIC.

Visitor ... Sir EDWARD ELGAR, O.M., Mus.Doc., LL.D.
Director ... GRANVILLE BANTOCK, M.A., D.Mus. (Ed.).

SESSION 1923-1924.

The Session consists of AUTUMN TERM (September 20 to December 18); WINTER TERM (January 19 to April 9); SUMMER TERM (April 11 to July 9).

Instruction in all branches of Music, Students' Choir and Orchestra. Chamber Music, Students' Rehearsals, and Concerts.

Prospectus and further information may be obtained from—
H. M. FRANCIS, Secretary.

Paradise Street, Birmingham.

THE LONDON SCHOOL OF SINGING.

20A, HENRIETTA STREET, CAVENDISH SQUARE, W.1.

President: A. NETTLEFOLD.

Principal ... WARD COWDERY.
Acting Principal ... DAVID GODELL.

The School provides complete instruction and training in all branches of Vocal Art for both Professional and Amateur. Latent talent successfully developed. Public appearances arranged. Students' Concerts monthly. Auditions free.
Particulars from Secretary. Mayfair 3819.

THE LONDON COLLEGE FOR CHORISTERS.

6 and 7, BLOMFIELD CRESCENT, PADDINGTON, W.2.

Founder: Mr. JAMES BATES.

Solo Boys and Chorus Boys supplied at short notice for Church Services, &c. Telephone: Paddington 5990. Sec., ARTHUR G. BATES.

PAPER WORK BY Mus. B., F.R.C.O.

OVER 1100 SPECIMEN WORKINGS.

"Your lessons and ideas splendid."

"Your excellent models make my attempts look cold."

RECENT SUCCESSES.

2s. 6d. per lesson and postage.

"E. B.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

L.R.A.M. AND A.R.C.M.

TEACHING SINGING AND ELOCUTION EXAMINATIONS.

Numerous Successes both in Singing and Elocution Exams. at
L.R.A.M. and A.R.C.M.

Special Correspondence Course and personal tuition.
Complete preparation.

Also Special Short Instructional Courses in Voice-Production and
The Art of Teaching Singing, to meet particular requirements of the General Practitioner in Music.

MR. W. LEE WEBSTER, L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M.

INGLESIDE, PARK ROAD, NOTTINGHAM.

DEGREES IN MUSIC.

Oxford Preliminary Arts and Durham Matriculation.
Also B.A. and B.Sc.

EXPERT TUITION BY CORRESPONDENCE.

For terms, testimonials, &amp;c., address

Mr. J. CHARLESTON, B.A.,

14, ELSHAM ROAD, KENSINGTON, W.14.

An L.R.A.M. A.R.C.M. writes:

"YOUR FIRST LESSON IS WORTH £20."

"I must say I have found the greatest possible benefit. For years I have studied the art of RELAXATION, but never seemed to get the fullest results. I feel now, through your help, I have solved the problem. Your lesson No. 1 is worth £20."

If you are a pianist, are you content to remain merely an "Average" performer?

Would you not grasp the opportunity to attain a high artistic standard, and so increase your standing, if you knew you could do so with ease and at a very moderate outlay? Just ask yourself these questions and answer them honestly:

Are you satisfied you have reached the apex of your technical ability?

Do you understand the REAL use of RELAXATION and its control?

Do you make full use of the possibilities of Weight Touch THROUGHOUT your playing?

Are you satisfied with your FINGER-WORK?

Can you play Octaves for long periods without fatigue and stiffness?

Are you hampered with STIFFNESS and FATIGUE?

Can you memorise with ease?

ARE YOU SATISFIED WITH YOUR TONE PRODUCTION?

No matter whether you are an amateur or professional student, teacher or soloist, the above are VITAL questions.

My CORRESPONDENCE COURSE in Advanced Pianoforte Playing—which also includes POSTAL CONSULTATIONS on every conceivable individual difficulty, will help you to an astonishing degree. It is so supremely practical that you cannot fail to gain lasting benefits.

It embraces the APPLIED TECHNIQUE of ARM BALANCE—RELAXATION—WEIGHT TOUCH—CHORDS—OCTAVES—FINGER-WORK—THUMB-WORK—ROTARY—DOUBLE THIRDS and SIXTHS—WEAK FINGERS—FINGERING—ARPEGGIOS—SKIPS, &c., &c. The Course also treats exhaustively of MEMORISING—SIGHT-READING—PHRASING—PEDALLING—RHYTHM—ACCENTS—METRE—INTERPRETATION.

My teaching is absolutely distinct and unique and is the only one dealing with PURE WEIGHT TOUCH throughout every phase of technique. A special feature is that Weight Touch CAN be employed in all playing, a point which has not been realised hitherto by any other system.

There is a very great deal of the utmost interest and value to you in my CORRESPONDENCE COURSE. Why not write me for full particulars to-day, giving the names of one or two pieces you play and any individual difficulty?

PRIVATE LESSONS AND CONSULTATIONS
DAY AND EVENING.

THE CHARLES A. GILLETT

Pianoforte School,

11, SOUTH MOLTON STREET, W.1.

THE MASTER-METHOD OF MEMORY-PLAYING

which has been used by all the world-famous pianists of the last fifty years, is now offered as a Correspondence Course for the first time by

MR. REGINALD FOORT, F.R.C.O.

If you can play the piano (or organ) at all from the music, Mr. Reginald Foort guarantees to show you how to play from memory with confidence, ease, and certainty.

The Method can be used with equal success by amateur and professional; it requires no knowledge of Harmony or tedious study of Form; repetition is entirely cut out, with the result that staleness is eliminated.

An interesting Booklet, "The Master-Method," giving a full description of the Course, together with a selection of signed and addressed testimonials, will be sent free upon receipt of a P.C. to

MR. REGINALD C. FOORT, F.R.C.O.,

19, BEACON HOUSE, HEMSTAL ROAD, LONDON, N.W.6.

A personal guarantee is given which eliminates all risk and proves that

FAILURE IS IMPOSSIBLE.

Perfect Touch and Technique without Laborious Practice..

The fundamental principles of my System have stood the test of time. Proof of this lies in the enormous number of pupils who have passed through my hands to piano-mastery—who have found in the System the Royal Road to the whole of the practical side of Pianoforte Playing, without any keyboard drudgery.

The results are frequently described by pupils as "miraculous," "magical," &c.

Pianists of every grade of proficiency can benefit from this simple, inexpensive, and unique Postal Course. Many eminent musicians, including the late Sir Frederick Bridge, have used and highly recommended my System—the ORIGINAL POSTAL SYSTEM.

18,000 Successful Pupils of all ages.

"From Brain to Keyboard"

Macdonald Smith's
System of Pianoforte Playing.

Read my Illustrated Book, "Light on Pianoforte Playing."

This explains fully how I teach the System by a Series of Postal Lessons, and gives particulars of the very reasonable fee for tuition. No apparatus or special music necessary—just an easily acquired method with much quicker and BETTER results, based on my important discovery in physiology.

Apply for book to-day, but please do not omit to state whether average or advanced player, or, if a beginner, whether you can or cannot play at sight a simple hymn-tune. The book will be sent free of charge and post free.

M. MACDONALD SMITH, 19, BLOOMSBURY SQUARE,
LONDON, W.C.1.

MENTAL-HEARING

How to acquire it.

By WALTER H. WATSON, F.R.C.O.

THE ability to HEAR MENTALLY seems to be possessed by few students, as the following from a well-known Musical Paper proves:

"Harmony on paper is a dead thing except to those who can hear what they see—the possession of about one student in a thousand."

Mental-hearing will enable the student to hear in his mind the sounds of the notes he is writing on the paper; they will not be mere soundless signs, but each will convey a definite sound to him, and until they do so all written harmony is a waste of time.

The acquisition of Mental-hearing will materially assist the practical work of the pianoforte and organ student, for if the student can hear mentally he will be encouraged to study mentally. Mental-hearing is the key to mental study, and Mental study is the key to more rapid progress. The mastery of this subject will also improve the student's sight-reading, memorising, and transposing.

Mental-hearing is a necessity for candidates for Diplomas such as L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., A.R.C.O., &c., and this work will also be of the greatest help to pupils preparing aural tests for the Associated Board Examinations.

Particulars of Correspondence Course of seven Lessons from

W. H. WATSON, GORDON COTTAGE, ELGIN.

RECENT SUCCESSES ... 54

FEE 25/-

SUCCESS

IN

— January, 1925 —

REVISION COURSES:

A.R.C.O.

F.R.C.O.

L.R.A.M.

A.R.C.M.

A. Mus. T.C.L.

A.T.C.L.

} Any Subject.

Enrolments by November 10, 1924.

(See page 967.)

MODERN (CORR.) COLLEGE.

GAIN YOUR DIPLOMA THIS BETTER WAY

The modern method of qualifying for a Diploma or Degree is to study at home at your own convenience and under the most congenial and encouraging circumstances.

That success is attainable by this method is indisputable, as the many letters of gratitude received from successful students will tell.

Dr. SPRANKLING specialises in

COACHING BY CORRESPONDENCE FOR ALL DEGREES AND DIPLOMAS

and knowing full well that no two students will experience the same difficulties, each course is individually planned to overcome your particular weaknesses.

A further point, and one that will be appreciated by busy students and teachers, is that the work is so arranged that you are quite free to take your own time over each lesson.

Intending candidates and those who have previously failed to qualify are invited to write.

PERSONAL LESSONS ALSO IN BRISTOL AND LONDON.

Full preparation for L.R.A.M. and A.R.C.M. All Paper Work, and questions on Touch, Technique, Fingering, Pedalling, &c. Also for Mus.Bac. and Mus.Doc. and all R.C.O. and Trinity College Diplomas.

NUMEROUS SUCCESSES.

DR. NORMAN SPRANKLING,
Mus. Doc. (Lond.).

46, CLARENDON ROAD, REDLAND, BRISTOL.

'PHONE: 3033.

VOICE TRAINING.

A Special Course of TEN CORRESPONDENCE LESSONS (named the "Simplex" Course), covering the whole range of Voice Production. Interesting, concise, and easy to follow. Invaluable to Teachers and Students alike.

Dame Clara Butt writes: "I advise all would-be Singers and all interested in the Teaching of Singing to take the 'Simplex' Course. They will find it most helpful."

Mr. Ben Davies writes: "The ideas which comprise the 'Simplex' System of Voice Training are most excellent, and I certainly think that all who apply themselves diligently to these Lessons will greatly benefit thereby."

For Full Particulars address: MR. E. H. BIBBY, Mus. Bac.,
Waterloo Buildings, Piccadilly, Manchester.

MR. ALBERT GARCIA

LESSONS IN VOICE PRODUCTION AND SINGING

Special Coaching in Opera, Oratorio, and for Recitals.

Pupils prepared for A.R.C.M. and L.R.A.M. Exams.

"A number of Mr. Albert Garcia's pupils sang excellently at the concert which they gave on Wednesday evening. It was particularly pleasant to hear voices so well placed and well poised, smooth and even in tone from the lowest to the highest notes, showing a control which too few learn to exercise."—Daily Telegraph.

"One takes it that a concert by pupils fulfils its object if it demonstrates—as the one given at Wigmore Hall by singers studying with Mr. Albert Garcia certainly did—the excellence of that master's method."—Era.

"Mr. Garcia—himself a fine artist and the inheritor of a great tradition and a great name—has some most promising pupils, and such singers as Miss Rosa Burn and Mr. Frederick Lippold show in what an excellent school they have been trained."—Daily Telegraph.

For Auditions, Appointments, &c., write,
59, Queen's Road, St. John's Wood, N.W.8.
(Hampstead 4597.)

LONDONDERRY FEIS.

MARCH 10th, 11th, 12th, and 13th, 1925.

COMPOSERS' COMPETITION.

Knockan Perpetual Challenge Cup and Miniature Cup to be retained for Pianoforte Solo.

Particulars from Mrs. A. McC. Stewart, Hon. Secretary, Feis Office, Beethoven House, Londonderry.

CHRIST CHURCH, Westminster Bridge Road.
(North Lambeth Station, Bakerloo.)

ORGAN RECITALS, Tuesday Evenings at 8.15.

November 4.	Mr. W. G. WEBBER.
" 11.	Mr. H. V. SPANNER.
" 18.	Mr. J. STUART ARCHER.
" 25.	Mr. H. F. ELLINGFORD.

Four-Manual Organ, by Willis.

Glasgow Corporation Tramways Choir
(WINNERS INDUSTRIAL TROPHY, GLASGOW FESTIVAL, 1922 and 1923).

Artists of distinction are invited to quote terms for Concerts, St. Andrew's Halls, Glasgow, March 18 and 19.

Apply, W. T. JOHNSTON, Secretary, 46, Bath Street, Glasgow.

THE LONDON CHOIR SCHOOL

(CHAMPION HILL SCHOOL),

GROVE LANE, DENMARK HILL, S.E.5.

(Twelve minutes from Victoria, L.B.S.C. Railway;

L.C.C. Trams 56, 58, 62, and 84 pass the door.)

Director: CARLTON BORROW, A.R.C.O.

Solo and Chorus Boys for Services, Oratorios, Madrigal Societies, Concerts, &c. Solo and Chorus Altos (male), Tenors, and Basses for Temporary Engagements.

Telephone: Brixton 2124.

Apply, Secretary.

JOHN B. WOOD, Mus. Bac.

C. G. WOOD, Mus. Bac., L.R.A.M.

THE IDEAL CORRESPONDENCE SCHOOL OF MUSIC.

EXPERT TUTORS.

THEORY OF MUSIC, HARMONY,
COMPOSITION, ART OF TEACHING,
INTERPRETATION,
FORM AND MEMORY TRAINING
FOR MUSICIANS.

Correspondents from all parts of the world and ex-students of the Principal Musical Institutions have been enrolled as pupils.

Write,

6, BOLTON ROAD, FARNWORTH, BOLTON.

THE SHEFFIELD NONCONFORMIST SUNDAY SCHOOL COUNCIL

invites original TUNES for the Whitsuntide Demonstration of 1925.

The Council will be prepared to pay the copyright fee, but does not bind itself to accept any Tune.

The Compositions to be sent to the Secretary, Montgomery Hall, on or before November 29, 1924.

MR. CHARLES TREE

Birmingham Post, March 8, 1924.—"A great lecturer.—Clarity and patent well-informedness—certainty of opinion. As he developed his subject it was impossible not to be impressed by his clear-cut knowledge of his art. No lecturer or teacher of the subject has impressed me so much. The most lucid and practical exponent of the art I have yet met."

Osselt Observer, Oct. 11, 1924.—"A large attendance to hear the distinguished singer. At intervals he illustrated his points with delightful renderings, demonstrating not only his versatility, but also his theory as to the longevity of the voice both in power and quality."

Daily Telegraph, Oct. 16, 1924, criticising — Festival. "The standard has not been high. Where the voices have been good they have too often been indifferently produced; too much vibrato, and the diction has been negligible to a degree."

Mr. Tree's lectures are intended as a help and guide to these fine young voices. If promoters of these huge competitive meetings will realise that there are not in Great Britain twenty singers (out of 50,000 trained) whose voices have lasted, unimpaired, for 30 years or more, they will see the importance of our young singers having such help. Diction and ease—tone—speech into song—must be the foundation of the physical side of the art.

Battistini says: "The art of teaching the Bel Canto has almost died out."

"HOW TO ACQUIRE EASE OF VOICE-PRODUCTION" AND ITS COMPANION, "BEL CANTO" EXERCISES, 5/2 and 3/7 post free.
(If difficult to obtain, write direct.)

Concerts, &c., address, Bolton Mansions Hotel, S.W.5. Kensington 816.

GOOD SINGING.

A Concise Statement of the Essential Preliminaries.

By JAS. EDMONDSON.

Specially written to assist untrained vocalists.

BREATHING, TONE-PLACING, CHORUS-SINGING, ETC.

20 Printed Pages with Illustrations. Price 3s. 6d.

JAS. EDMONDSON, FELTON'S MUSIC WAREHOUSE,
The Broadway, Harrow.

SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE COURSES

1. L.R.A.M. and A.R.C.M. Paper work.
  2. L.T.C.L. and A.T.C.L. Paper work.
  3. Courses in Rudiments, Harmony, Form, &c., for T.C.L. and Associated Board Candidates.
  4. Ear Training. A Practical Course for all Candidates preparing for Aural Tests. Complete in Ten Lessons.
- Model workings to all questions Highest recommendations. Particulars on application.

CYRIL S. CHRISTOPHER,

c/o W. H. Priestley & Sons, Colmore Row, Birmingham.

A VOICE is—

1. MENTAL APPRECIATION OF TONE.
2. MUSCULAR EFFORT.

A good Teacher will help you with the first.

The Saxby Vocal Calisthenic Course will work wonders with the second.

The Course trains every little muscle used in singing and speaking.

RESULT: Power, Resonance, Brilliancy, Control, in fact all the qualities of a GREAT VOICE.

T. CHURCH SAXBY,

Studio: 3A, SEVEIRG BUILDINGS, LEWES.

MUSICAL COMPOSITIONS REVISED.

LYRICS SET TO MUSIC, MELODIES HARMONIZED, MUSIC TRANSPOSED AND COPIED, BAND PARTS WRITTEN, MSS. PREPARED FOR PUBLICATION BY A MASTER HAND, ACCOMPANIMENTS OF DISTINCTION WRITTEN TO SONGS.

For terms, write, A. CARRINGTON BRIGGS,
Glennholme, The Common, Hesse, E. Yorks.

MISS ETHEL WINDER, L.R.A.M., experienced Accompanist, desires work with Professor, for lessons, in or near London. Rosefield Cottage, Stanwell, Staines

MODERN CORR. COLLEGE

Principal: ARTHUR McALISTER, B.A. (CANTAB.).

MATRIC. - SUCCESSES - 113 July, 1924 - 9

1st M.B. - - - At a recent Examination M.C.C. Students comprised nearly 50% of the entire Pass LIST (1st M.B.).

MUS. BAC. - - - LONDON. For one Fee, which can be paid by instalments, DURHAM. we guarantee to coach a student until the (Guarantee Course) DUBLIN. Degree is gained. Lessons can be sent in at the convenience of the Student.

A.R.C.O. - - - 1921 - - 4 SUCCESS AT FIFTH ATTEMPT.

F.R.C.O. - - - 1922 - - 3 One Student, after failing four times—under 1923 - - 8 other tuition—passed after a four-months'
1924 - - 9 Course with the M.C.C.

A. MUS. T.C.L. -	July, 1924 -	-	2	COUNTERPOINT -	-	94 p.c.
L. MUS. T.C.L. -	July, 1924 -	-	2	HISTORY -	-	93 p.c.
				RUDIMENTS -	-	100 p.c.

L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M. (Pianoforte Teaching). RECENT SUCCESSES - 19

A.T.C.L. - - - - - ART OF TEACHING - 86 p.c.

A.R.C.M. XIII. (Musical Appreciation). Two M.C.C. Students have gained the Diploma. Both at the FIRST ATTEMPT.

Carefully Graduated Courses A.R.C.M. } Singing—Elocution—Bandmastership.
L.R.A.M. }
L.R.A.M. Subjects VIII. and IX.

TUITION IN SINGLE SUBJECTS.

HARMONY.	ESSAY.	FORM.	COURSE OF INSTRUCTION.
COUNTERPOINT.	ORCHESTRATION.	HISTORY.	MEMORY TRAINING.
ART OF TEACHING.	COMPOSITION.	PSYCHOLOGY.	SIGHT READING.

STATE EXAM. INTERESTED IN, and give some particulars of Standard of work, and Examination passed (if any).

FREE ADVICE on a choice of Course.

"ST. MORITZ," 201, ILKESTON ROAD, NOTTINGHAM.

WESTMINSTER CATHEDRAL.

---

ORGAN RECITALS

THURSDAYS. AT 6.30 P.M.

---

RECITALISTS FOR NOVEMBER, 1924.

NOVEMBER 6th. DR. W. G. ALCOCK, M.V.O.

NOVEMBER 13th. H. F. ELLINGFORD, Mus. Bac. (Oxon.) F.R.C.O.

NOVEMBER 20th. G. THALBEN BALL, F.R.C.O., A.R.C.M.

NOVEMBER 27th. PATRICK O'NEILL.

---

THE "DISCUS" REGD. ORGAN BLOWER

THE QUIET EFFICIENCY OF THE "DISCUS"—

Blower is largely responsible for its widespread adoption in Cathedrals and Churches at home and abroad. Nearly a thousand are now in use. Apart from its quietness of working the "Discus" is a very attractive financial proposition. It saves the wages of a blower, and gives the organist the opportunity for rehearsal at all times. Any organ, large or small, can be fitted with the "Discus," and the motive power may be either electric motor, gas, or oil engine. Constructed of metal throughout, well designed and of the best workmanship. Its reliability and efficiency are guaranteed.

AS SUPPLIED TO WESTMINSTER ABBEY, YORK MINSTER, ETC., ETC.

WRITE FOR NEW BOOKLET.

MADE BY

B. WATKINS AND WATSON

ORGAN BLOWING SPECIALISTS FOR THE PAST THIRTY YEARS.

Designers and Manufacturers of all types of Hydraulic Engines, Gears, and Fittings for Organ blowing.

WHITE LION STREET, LONDON, N.I.

ESTIMATES SUBMITTED FREE.

Telegrams: "HYDISBLOW, ISLING, LONDON."

Telephone: NORTH 2039.

LEARN TO MEMORISE THIS WINTER

Turn the cold dark weather to your advantage by taking the Mackinnon Musical Memory Course, and acquiring a thoroughly reliable musical memory.

You can take the Course without disturbing your regular work. It requires only 15-20 minutes practice daily. There is no drudgery of any kind.

The thorough grasp and understanding of music given by the Mackinnon System of Memory Training banishes nervousness and fear of breakdown. Technique is improved. A new sense of freedom results in full artistic self-expression.

If you are not satisfied with your memorising powers—if you feel nervous when playing in public, the Mackinnon Musical Memory Course can enable you to gain certainty and success. Hundreds of apparently hopeless cases have conquered all their memorising difficulties through this course. You can do the same.

Send Coupon below for free booklet, to-day.

MACKINNON'S MUSICAL MEMORY COURSE

EMPIRE HOUSE, 175 PICCADILLY, W.1.

IN SIX POSTAL LESSONS - FEE, £3:3:0

GUARANTEE.

You risk nothing in taking the Course, for under this guarantee your money is returned if you fail to make immediate progress.

If within four weeks of the receipt of the first lesson, and before the receipt of the second, any student should find that no progress has been made as a result of taking the course, Miss Mackinnon will unconditionally refund all fees received from such student.

Read what the Mackinnon Memory Course has done for other musicians:

"I cannot speak too highly of your course which I have recommended to others who like myself had given up all hope of memorising music. Not only has it taught me to memorise everything including fugue, but it has taught me how to work,—and my technical powers have developed in a most gratifying way. I send warmest thanks."

"Before taking Miss Mackinnon's Course I found it impossible to learn anything from memory and was never able to play to any stranger. Now, thanks to her most helpful and delightful lessons, I am able to memorise a piece in a day or two, and can play on any piano and to any public."

You can be equally successful.

..... POST THIS COUPON TO-DAY FOR FREE BOOKLET .....

MISS LILIAS MACKINNON, Empire House, 175, Piccadilly, W.1.

Please send me, free, and post free, your booklet on "MEMORY TRAINING."

Name Mr., Mrs., or Miss) .....

Address.....

BECHSTEIN PIANOS

THE BECHSTEIN PIANO needs little recommendation to cultured tastes. Its beautiful tone and incomparable touch—qualities which have gained for it the esteem of every music-lover, and have set a standard to the world—are as exquisite and as characteristic as ever.

Write or call for Catalogue.

126, NEW BOND STREET
LONDON, W. 1.

TELEPHONE: MAYFAIR 2653.

PIANOS

GRAND and UPRIGHT

By High Grade Makers.

NEW AND SECOND-HAND FOR
SALE OR HIRE PURCHASE.

CHAS. STILES & CO.

74-76, SOUTHAMPTON ROW
LONDON, W.C. 1.

Phone: MUSEUM 439.

STEINWAY

MUSIC LOVERS
CAN OBTAIN
PERFECT RESULTS
ONLY FROM THE PERFECT INSTRUMENT
THE STEINWAY.

115-117, WIGMORE STREET,
LONDON, W. 1.

MOLLENHAUER FLUTES AND PICCOLOS

MESSRS. J. MOLLENHAUER & SONS possess a hundred years' world-wide reputation as makers of first-class Wood-Wind Instruments. Their Flutes and Piccolos are unrivalled in purity of tone, pleasing intonation, and solidity of mechanism, and are consequently used by the leading artists in every land.

Catalogue from—

FAUPEL BROTHERS,

4 & 5, OLD CHANGE, CHEAPSIDE, LONDON, E.C. 4.

Telephone: City 5693.

Far Eastern inquiries to be addressed to our Hong-Kong office,
P.O. Box 631, Hong-Kong.

TO PIANISTS, ORGANISTS, VIOLINISTS, ETC.

"SIMPLEXA" Pocket Finger Trainer
(Registered).

A MOST EFFICIENT APPLIANCE FOR INCREASING STRETCH, INDEPENDENCE, FLEXIBILITY, AND STRENGTH OF FINGERS.
Improved Model, 2s. 6d., post free.

"SIMPLEXA," 7, YEW VILLAS, THAMES ST., WEYBRIDGE, SURREY.

THE TECHNIQUER FOR STRETCH, STRENGTH, AND SUPPLENESS.

CARL WEBER, the renowned teacher says:

"After a trial, I find 'The Techniquer' an admirable means of lessening the drudgery of a pianist's daily gymnastics. The exercises have the effect of strengthening the fingers to a remarkable degree, the result being that confidence and power are greatly increased, while effort is reduced and time saved. I recommend your excellent invention wherever I can, and with every confidence."

"Hand Development," with numerous photos, 1s. 6d.

Send for full particulars, &c.—

Miss F. J. FITCH, A.R.C.M., A.R.C.O. (Sec.),

21, Boundary Road, N.W. 8.

'Phone: Maida Vale 1715.

PIANO PEDALS, with Octave Coupler

This wonderful invention supersedes all Piano Pedals, and is a Master Patent.

St. George's Hall, Liverpool,
9th April, 1921.

"The simplicity of the attachment, and the clever sixteen-feet, eight-feet, or both combined, 'OPTIONAL OCTAVE' contrivance, astonished me.

"I was delighted with the Pedal touch and with the variety in that touch, which your Attachment makes possible. It is very responsive to the movements of the feet, and is reliable."

HERBERT F. ELLINGFORD, Mus. Bac., Oxon., F.R.C.O.

Owing to increased output, we have reduced the price of our Popular Model to 14 guineas cash. Deferred payments if desired.

Write for Lists, Prices, and Clients' Opinions, and References to

THE MALKIN PATENT PEDAL CO., LTD.,
NEWCASTLE-UNDER-LYME.

London address: 11, Ashlake Road, Streatham, S.W. 16.

WIGMORE HALL STUDIOS.—These splendidly appointed Studios are the recognised centre of the best musical activities in London. Forty-five rooms. Grand Piano in every room. Lift, telephone and every comfort and convenience. Low inclusive rates. One morning or afternoon per week the minimum time arranged for. Apply, 38, Wigmore Street, W. 1.

MR. HERBERT HODGE will give an Organ
Recital (1.833rd) at St. Nicholas Cole Abbey, on November 4th, and every Tuesday at 1 p.m.

PROFESSIONAL NOTICES.

MISS LYDIA JOHN

(A.R.A.M., L.R.A.M.), CONTRALTO.

Concerts, Oratorios, Organ Recitals, &c.
 Recital-Lectures of Folk-Songs, Elizabethan Songs, &c.
 Pupils received for Voice-Production and Singing.
 Prepared for L.R.A.M., Associated Board, &c.

15, Albion Road, London, N.W.6. Tel.: Hampstead, N.W.6.

HORACE CURTIS.

TENOR.

CONCERT, ORATORIO, MASS, Etc.
 99, Bedford Hill, Balham, S.W.12.

HAROLD KNOWLTON

TENOR

St. Paul's Cathedral, E.C. 4.
 1, Hatherley Gardens, Crouch End, N. 8.

FRANCIS R. MITCHELL

L.T.C.L. TENOR.

(Late Scholar, Trinity College of Music, London.)
 Oratorios, Choral Works, Recitals, Concerts, &c.
 Open for engagements in West of England.
 15, South Terrace, Camborne, Cornwall.

MOUNTFORD SCOTT (TENOR).

St. Paul's Cathedral, E.C.4.

Please note New Address:

5, Dickenson Road, Crouch Hill, N.8.
 Telephone: Mountview 4816.

VERNON HARRISS,

L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., Gold Medallist. BASS.
 Oratorio, Concerts. Vocal Coach and Adjudicator.
 Senior Music Master, Downside School, near Bath.

ARTHUR LEES

BASS.

Concerts, Recitals, Masonics, Oratorios, &c.
 58, Marmion Road, Hove, Sussex.

EDMUND TELFER (BARITONE)

Verdi's "Requiem," Carlisle, Nov. 6th.
 "Elijah," Mansfield, Dec. 15th.

For vacant dates, and Experts' criticisms,

Apply, Ibbs &amp; Tillet, 124, Wigmore Street, London, W.1.

MR. HERBERT TRACEY

BASS.

8, Cavendish Mansions, E.5.

London Wall 4033.

MISS THELMA DANDRIDGE (A.R.C.M.),

'CELLIST.

Concerts, Pupils, &c., apply to "Inversnaid," Chinbrook Road,
 Grove Park, S.E.12. ('Phone: Lee Green 1707.)

TO CONCERT DIRECTORS.

ARTHUR MANGELSDORFF

(British).

The well-known Pianist is arranging a Recital Tour for the coming season.

Special terms can be quoted for a Recital or part programme if immediate application is made.

Managers of suitable Concert-Halls also please send terms for hiring.

Please address all communications to

ARTHUR ELLARSHAW, 497, Coventry Road, Birmingham.

H. FORSTER RICHARDSON

R.C.M. (Leipzig), A.R.C.M., L.R.A.M.

(Pupil of Tobias Matthay, Plunket Greene, Gregory Hast),
 gives lessons in Pianoforte Playing, Voice-Production and Singing.
 Tuition on the most modern technical principles.

Coaching for Concert Work and Examinations.
 Wigmore Hall Studios, Wigmore Street, W.1., and 390, Upper Richmond Road, East Sheen, S.W.14.

Windsor Castle Royal Harmonists.

F. G. SMITH (Alto), MALCOLM BOYLE (Tenor),
 EATON COOTER (Baritone), L. STAINTON (Bass).

Of St. George's Chapel and H.M. Private Chapel, Windsor Castle.
 London, Provincial, and B.B.C. (2 LO) Concerts.

Specimen Programmes of Old English, Period, or Popular Music.

Bookings and Terms on request to

MR. MALCOLM BOYLE,

'Phone: Windsor 166. 22, The Cloisters, Windsor Castle.

MR. FRANK THISTLETON

(Author of "The Art of Violin Playing" and "Modern Violin Technique") whose Recitals have received the patronage of Her Majesty Queen Alexandra, has vacancies for one or two violin pupils. Special terms to professionals.

"Mr. Frank Thistleton is an expert violin player and teacher."—
Daily Telegraph, March 1, 1924.

For particulars write,

MUSIC STUDIO, 72, HIGH STREET, BAKER STREET, W.1.

DR. F. H. WOOD

(Organist of Blackpool Parish Church),

COACHES FOR UNIVERSITY DEGREES.

Students' recent Successes include:

Durham Mus. D. (1923), Ex. and Final, both in the same year and at the first attempt. Mus. B. Ex. (1924) Also other Universities,
 Mus. D. (1922); Mus. B. (1923) and 1924 (2).

252, HORNBY ROAD, BLACKPOOL.

MISS MARGARET COUPE, L.R.A.M.,

ACCOMPANIST. Recommended by Mr. Welton Hickin, F.R.A.M.
 Address: 18, Upper Gloucester Place, N.W.1.

M.C.C. See our Advt. on page 967.

A.R.C.M. S. XIII.

(MUSICAL APPRECIATION.)

The attention of Students is drawn to this Subject.

Obtain the Latest Syllabus and write to us.

2 Students of the Modern Corr. College have gained the Diploma,

Both at the FIRST ATTEMPT.

MODERN CORR. COLLEGE.

THE TRAINING OF TEACHERS.

CORRESPONDENCE COURSES IN

VOICE-PRODUCTION, covering the whole subject.
 FORM AND TEACHING, TOUCH, ACCOMPANIMENT,
 MUSICAL APPRECIATION, AND AURAL TRAINING.

Nearly 1000 Successes at L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., &amp;c.

MR. R. J. PITCHER, Mus. Bac., F.R.C.O., A.R.C.M.
 (Double Dip. Singing and Piano), L.R.A.M., Class A, Performer
 and Teacher.

Prof. Singing G.S.M., 1905-1915. Special Lect. on Mus. Appreciation
 to L.C.C.

"Recit. and its Rendering," 1s. 6d. "Vade Mecum for Singers," 6d.
 Send for prospectus, 21, Boundary Road, N.W.8.

'Phone: 1715 Maida Vale.

MUSICAL REVISER TO MESSRS. NOVELLO FOR THIRTY-NINE YEARS.

COMPOSERS' MSS.

REVISED AND PREPARED FOR PRINTING

H. ELLIOT BUTTON, "Harewood," Ardwick Road, N.W.2.

*.* The late Sir HUBERT PARRY and Sir FREDERICK BRIDGE
 permitted their names to appear, along with those of the following composers to whom reference is kindly permitted:—Sir EDWARD ELGAR, O.M.; Sir HENRY WALFORD DAVIES, Mus. Doc.

DR. ALLISON instructed by Post Candidates who OBTAINED DEGREES OF MUS. B. and Mus. D. at Oxford,
 Cambridge, Dublin, London, and Durham Universities, Diplomas of
 L.L.C.M. (April, 1924), L.R.A.M., F.R.C.O., L. Mus. L.C.M.,
 A.R.C.M., Gold Medals, Silver Medals, Scholarships, Prizes, Certificates, and valuable professional appointments. Dr. Allison is willing to teach those who neither require nor desire to pass examinations.
 Harmony, Counterpoint, Orchestration, and Analysis of Compositions
 by Post, to correspondents anywhere. Personal instruction in Theory, Singing, and Piano. 24, Park Range, Victoria Park, Manchester.

REVISION OF MUSICAL COMPOSITIONS.

Dr. Horton Allison, 24, Park Range, Victoria Park, Manchester.

MR. J. PERCY BAKER, Mus. B., Dunelm., F.R.A.M., gives Postal Tuition and prepares for Examinations. Personal Lessons (Pianoforte and Theory), at 14, Hanover Square, W.1. Address, 12, Longley Road, Tooting Craveney, S.W.17.

CAPTAIN PERCY BAKER, M.C., F.R.C.O., L. Mus. T.C.L. (Author of "Compend of Musical Knowledge," "Studies in History and Form," &c.). Specialist in Tuition by post for T.C.L. and R.C.O. Essay Models, Sight-Reading Courses. Study Aids, &c. Studies in Modulation, &c.

Send for interesting Pamphlets on Methods.

HAZELDEN, TEWKESBURY.

MISS J. BLAKE, A.R.A.M., A.R.C.M. (Regd.) Teacher of Singing, prepares pupils L.R.A.M. and A.R.C.M. Exams., as Teacher or Performer. Highest recommendations. Studio, 139, New Bond Street, W.1.

SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE COURSES:—

- (1.) L.R.A.M. Paper Work.
- (2.) A.R.C.M. Paper Work.
- (3.) Interesting Courses of Study in Rudiments, Harmony, Form, &c.

L.R.A.M. Exams. 1910-24 ... 250 Correspondence Pupils successful.
A.R.C.M. Exams. 1914-24 ... 69 " " "

MR. E. H. BIBBY, Mus. Bac., L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M.,
Waterloo Buildings, Piccadilly, Manchester.

In response to many requests, Mr. BIBBY begs to announce that he has prepared the following additional CORRESPONDENCE COURSES:—

- (1.) The "Mus. Bac." Degree.
- (2.) A.R.C.O. and F.R.C.O. Paper Work.
- (3.) A.T.C.L. and L.T.C.L. Paper Work.
- (4.) The Associated Board Examinations in Rudiments, Harmony, and Counterpoint.

(Address as above.)

L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M. SPECIAL COACHING by
ARTHUR ELLARSHAW, L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M. Pianist.
Paper-work Postal. Address, 497, Coventry Road, Birmingham.

DR. A. C. PHILLIPS EMBLING, Mus. Doc., Dunelm. (1921), Mus. Bac., Oxon., F.R.C.O. Lessons by post for Diplomas and Degrees. 64, Wokingham Road, Reading.

MISS HILDA FILKINS, A.R.C.M., Professor of Pianoforte and Voice Production, "Marches Method." For particulars, write, Wigmore Hall Studios; or 136, Mellmeadow Road, S.E.6.

FREDERICK GREEN, L.R.A.M., Etc. Voice Specialist, Vocal Coach, and Adjudicator. Preparation for L.R.A.M. c/o Rushworth & Dreaper, 11, Islington, Liverpool.

DR. CUTHBERT HARRIS, Mus. Doc., Dunelm., F.R.C.O. SPECIALIST IN CORRESPONDENCE TUITION. 405 Successes in Mus. D., Mus. B., F.R.C.O., and A.R.C.O., &c. 58, Avondale Road, Gorleston-on-Sea.

DR. HARRIS REVISES AND PREPARES MSS. FOR PUBLICATION. Accompaniments to Songs written.

MISS H. HEALE COACHES for all EXAMINATIONS IN MUSIC (at private residence or at West-End Studio), in Pianoforte, Harmony, Counterpoint, Fugue, Form, Orchestration, "Teaching," Modulation, Transposition, &c. For Terms, &c., apply Dunraven House, 41, Albert Bridge Road, S.W.11.

HERBERT HODGE, F.R.C.O., A.R.C.M., Organist and Choirmaster, St. Nicholas Cole Abbey, Queen Victoria Street, London, has, since 1908, made a speciality of coaching Candidates for the Organ Playing Examinations of the Royal College of Organists, and can arrange a private course of instruction (for single lessons) to organists visiting London, at St. Nicholas Cole Abbey. Many recent F.R.C.O. and A.R.C.O. successes.

5, Streatham Place, S.W.2. Telephone: Streatham 2195.

DR. A. G. IGGULDEN, Mus. Doc. Dunelm., F.R.C.O., SPECIALIST IN CORRESPONDENCE COACHING. Latest Successes: Durham, Sept., 1924—Both Mus. Doc. passes and 3 out of the 5 Final Mus. Bac. passes. Also 2 in 1st Mus. Bac., 2 Mus. Doc., and 5 Mus. Bac. Exercises, all in 1924, after prelim. course in composition. Over 160 Successes at Durham alone. The Durdans, Reigate.

DR. F. J. KARN (Mus. Bac. Cantab.; Mus. Doc. Toronto) continues to give lessons in Harmony and other Theoretical subjects, and prepares for all Musical Examinations. Compositions revised and Analyses written. Candidates prepared by Dr. Karn have gained the Mus. Bac. and Mus. Doc. degrees at the Universities and diplomas from the Musical Colleges.

Address: 106, Haverstock Hill, London, N.W.3.

DR. KNOWLES (Manchester 1919, Durham 1920) specialises in preparing candidates by post for the Paper-work of all examinations in music. Solutions, with methods of working. Address, 45, Churchgate, Bolton, Lancs.

MADAME LARKCOM, F.R.A.M., Prof. Singing, R. A. Music. Private Lessons in Singing at the Wigmore Hall Studios, 40, Wigmore Street, W.1.

J. H. MAKINSON, F.R.C.O., A.R.C.M., A.T.C.L. Correspondence Tuition in Paper Work (T.C.L. and other Diplomas). Terms moderate. Latest success, A.T.C.L., July, 1924. Kent House, Lake Road, Ambleside.

DR. ORLANDO A. MANSFIELD, Mus. Doc., University of Toronto; Mus. Doc., Trinity University, Toronto; F.R.C.O.; F.A.G.O., &c. 15, Sydenham Villas Road, Cheltenham. Correspondence Lessons. Revision of MSS. Scoring, editing, and arranging. Examination pieces analysed and annotated.

MISS F. HELENA MARKS, Author of "The Sonata: Its Form and Meaning," prepares for L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., and all other examinations, Pianoforte, Harmony, "Form and Teaching," &c. Personal or Correspondence Lessons in all Paper-Work subjects, including those for L.R.A.M., Aural Training and Sight-Singing, and A.R.C.M. in "The Teaching of Musical Appreciation," &c. Pupils received and visited for the Pianoforte. Many recent successes L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., &c.

10, Matheson Road, London, W.14.

DR. H. H. L. MIDDLETON, Mus. Doc., F.R.C.O., L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M. Twenty-five years' experience in Private Tuition and Coaching for Degrees. More than 800 of Dr. Middleton's Pupils have obtained Degrees at the Universities, R.A.M., R.C.M., and R.C.O. Address, 60, Berners Street, W.1.

W. J. FREDERICK PUGH, L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., prepares for L.R.A.M. (Aural Culture and Voice Culture Diplomas), A.R.C.M. (Appreciation Diploma). Recent Successes, 34, Wilmington Avenue, Chiswick, W.4.

JOHN ROBERTS has VACANCIES for a few PUPILS IN VOICE PRODUCTION. "R. J.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

DR. TAYLOR'S POSTAL PUPILS HAVE passed Mus. Bac. 1st and final. A.R.C.O.; L.R.A.M.; A.T.C.L. Pupil gained the Stillie Bursary at Glasgow for Counterpoint. Latest success, A.R.C.O. for 1924. Portland Place, Lancaster.

W. G. WEBBER, F.R.C.O. Recitalist, &c. Preparation for Exams. Organ lessons given on new four-manual Willis. Address, Christ Church, Westminster Bridge Road, London, S.E.1.

DR. PERCY WOOD, Mus. Doc. Oxon., F.R.C.O. SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE COURSES:

- (1) Elementary Harmony and Counterpoint.
- (2) F.R.C.O. and A.R.C.O.
- (3) L.R.A.M. and A.R.C.M.
- (4) Mus. Bac. Degree.

Several recent Mus. B. successes at Durham.

R.C.O. EXAMINER says: "Your system is undoubtedly an excellent one."

SUCCESS GUARANTEED—given any pupils with the requisite musical ability for the examination in view.

R.C.O. SUCCESSSES IN PAPER WORK:

6 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1914.	11 A.R.C.O., Jan. 1914.
6 F.R.C.O., July, 1914.	12 A.R.C.O., July, 1914.
4 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1915.	5 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1915.
5 F.R.C.O., July, 1915.	9 A.R.C.O., July, 1915.
2 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1916.	3 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1916.
3 F.R.C.O., July, 1916.	6 A.R.C.O., July, 1916.
2 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1917.	2 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1917.
3 F.R.C.O., July, 1917.	4 A.R.C.O., July, 1917.
2 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1918.	2 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1918.
4 F.R.C.O., July, 1918.	2 A.R.C.O., July, 1918.
1 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1919.	3 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1919.
3 F.R.C.O., July, 1919.	3 A.R.C.O., July, 1919.
4 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1920.	10 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1920.
3 F.R.C.O., July, 1920.	6 A.R.C.O., July, 1920.
3 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1921.	7 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1921.
6 F.R.C.O., July, 1921.	8 A.R.C.O., July, 1921.
5 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1922.	5 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1922.
4 F.R.C.O., July, 1922.	5 A.R.C.O., July, 1922.
8 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1923.	6 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1923.
7 F.R.C.O., July, 1923.	10 A.R.C.O., July, 1923.
7 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1924.	9 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1924.
3 F.R.C.O., July, 1924.	10 A.R.C.O., July, 1924.

"Tralee," Warwick Road, Cliftonville, Margate.

MISS MARGARET YOUNG, L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M. (Pianoforte); A.T.C.L. (Vocal and Pianoforte). Registered Teacher, T.R.C. Postal Tuition for Theoretical, above Diplomas also General Musical Knowledge and Advice. Bawburgh, Norwich.

STRING QUARTET CLASSES.

MR. ERNEST TOMLINSON has a VACANCY for a 'CELLIST. For particulars write, 25, Gloucester Road, Regent's Park, N.W.1.

A MUSIC-LOVER offers a Course of Violin Lessons from good master to earnest student unable to pay. Examination Candidate (male preferred). Highest references required. Write, "H. B.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

EXPERIENCED ACCOMPANIST (LADY).

For Singing or Strings.
A.R.C.M. for Pianoforte Accompaniment.
Apply, "T.," 38, Heathfield Road, Acton, W.3.

EASTBOURNE.

DOWNSMEADE BOARDING SCHOOL FOR BOYS. Modern education with special musical education if desired. Prospectus on application to the Headmaster, F. E. Wilson, F.R.C.O., L.R.A.M.

SOLO and CHORUS BOYS supplied (CITY OF LONDON CHOIR COLLEGE). Apply to Francis Sutton, F.R.C.O., St. Stephen's Walbrook, E.C.4.

LIVERPOOL CATHEDRAL.

CHORAL SCHOLARSHIPS TENABLE AT LIVERPOOL COLLEGE.

A TRIAL OF VOICES will be held in December next. Particulars and forms of application may be obtained from the Rev. R. Brook, M.A., Principal, Liverpool College, Sefton Park Road, Liverpool.

WELLS CATHEDRAL.—SOLO BOY WANTED at once. Age 10-11. Free board and tuition provided at the Cathedral Grammar School. Apply, stating age and experience, to Rev. Canon Davis, The Liberty, Wells, Somerset.

ST. MARY ALDERMARY, Queen Victoria Street, E.C. ALTO (male) and TENOR WANTED. Sunday mornings only. £15 per annum. Good sight-reading essential. Apply by letter, Alan May, The Vestry.

ALTO SINGER REQUIRED for Armagh Cathedral. Salary, £100 per annum. Applications, with copies of testimonials, to be sent to Dr. Chaundy, Cathedral Hill, Armagh, N. Ireland.

ALTO SOLOIST (Male), St. Anne's, Soho. Must read well. Good salary. Albert Orton, 19, Clarendon Gardens, W.9.

TENOR REQUIRED, West-End Church. £20. Write, Clifford Smith, 56, Red Post Hill, S.E.24.

TENOR WANTED (Standard Solos). N.W. District. £30, about. Write, "Precentor," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

WINCHESTER CATHEDRAL. There is a vacancy for BASS LAY-CLERK. Apply to The Precentor.

BASSES (Voluntary) WANTED for the Choir of St. John's, Waterloo Road, S.E.1. Expenses paid up to £5 per annum. Apply, Arthur M. Stacey, F.R.C.O., 18, Eton Villas, Hampstead, N.W.3.

GLOW-WORMS GLEE CLUB (Male). Voices required. Rehearsals in City, Mondays. Apply by letter, William Tarr, 47/51, King William Street, E.C.4.

ORGANIST-CHOIRMASTER REQUIRED after Christmas, for Brixton Independent Church. Fine modern organ. £75. Apply, by letter, with testimonials, "R. S.," c/o Crossley & Co., Ltd., 5, Racquet Court, Fleet Street, E.C.4.

ORGANIST-CHOIRMASTER WANTED for Wallington Presbyterian Church. Apply, giving full particulars and copies of testimonials, to Mr. J. P. Goodsir, 81, Marchmont Road, Wallington, Surrey.

ORGANIST and CHOIRMASTER, male or female, WANTED for Larkhall Parish Church. Salary £60. Applications, with three copies of testimonials, to be lodged not later than Nov. 4th, with John Paterson, Claremont, Montgomery Street, Larkhall, from whom conditions of appointment can be obtained.

ORGANIST WANTED, at Xmas, for Holy Trinity, Ramsgate. £50 a year, with prospect of increase. Choral Eucharist. Good choir-trainer essential.

ORGANIST-CHOIRMASTER desires change. Accomplished recitalist and choir-trainer. London district. First-class testimonials and references. "F.R.C.O.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

WANTED.—A Voluntary Conductor for a Central London Male-Voice Choir. Rehearsals one night a week and Sunday afternoon. Meet by appointment. A. F. Bouchard, c/o Peel Institute, 14a, Clerkenwell Green, E.C.1.

A BACH RECITAL will be given by Mr. Herbert Hodge at St. Stephen's Walbrook on November 13th, at 1.10 p.m.

THE ADVERTISER, an amateur with first-class training (Baritone), would have been in the profession years ago, but for sound business reasons. Things have so arranged themselves that he is now able to gratify a life-long desire, and offers attractive terms (either fees or honorarium or both, which could be decided at an audition or interview) to a really first-class Concert Agent who can give the desired introduction to the public. Apply, "F. B. C.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

EDITORIAL STAFF—POSITION WANTED

by Mus. Bac. (Vict.) A.R.M.C.M. Revision of proofs, catalogues, indexing, invoicing, correspondence, &c. Experienced. Moore, 362, Claremont Road, Moss Side, Manchester.

WANTED, TEACHING CONNECTION, by

L.R.A.M. (Pianoforte). "M. E. M.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

ORGAN, by Holditch, FOR SALE, at Harrow.

3 Manuals, 15 Speaking Stops, usual couplers and accessories. In good condition. Fine appearance, exceptional power and quality. Blown by Hydraulic Engine, or by hand. Suitable for Church or Hall. £350, or near offer. A. P. Charles, 5, Palace Gardens Terrace, W.8.

ESTEY PEDAL REED ORGAN, Student Model,

Two Manuals and concave and radiating pedals, 11 stops, bench. In fumed oak. Five years old. Sell cheap, or exchange for good piano. 211, Spotland Road, Rochdale.

WANTED.—Two-Manual Reed ORGAN Mustel,

Apollo, Holt, or Mason & Hamlin preferred. Full details, first letter to "M. A. H.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

ORGANS (New and Second-hand) for SALE.—

Electric and pneumatic action up-to-date. Built or reconstructed. Bedwell & Son, The Cambridge Organ Works, Cambridge.

CHURCH ORGANS STANDARDISED.—Two

Manuals, Pneumatic Pedals, various sizes; specially built. Five to fifteen stops. Introduced to meet the requirements of the times at minimum of cost. W. E. Richardson & Sons, Central Organ Works, Manchester, S.W.

CHAMBER ORGAN, Pipe, Three-Manual, Discus

Blower, FOR SALE at reduced price. Inspection by appointment. Apply, Organist, 11, Eardley Crescent, S.W.5.

A VERY BEAUTIFUL ORGAN for SALE.

Two Manuals, 16 Stops. By Bishop. Suit Church or Chamber. Price £400. Can be seen by appointment. Eastern counties. Apply to "X. Y. Z.," 20, Upper Gloucester Place, London, N.W.1.

ORGAN PHOTOGRAPHS.—St. George's Hall,

Liverpool, Queen's Hall, Royal Albert Hall, and many others. Any organ specially photographed. Gilbert Benham, Oakmeade, Bells Hill, Barnet.

PIANO PEDALS (Norman &amp; Beard) for SALE.

Good condition. 10 Guineas, or near offer. Lummis, Woodcot, Godshill, Fordingbridge, Hants.

FOR SALE.—VIRGIL Clavier Practice PIANO.

£8. 241, St. Albans Road, Watford, Herts.

WANTED TO PURCHASE.—Good Second-

Hand BRASS BAND SET OF INSTRUMENTS. Full particulars and lowest price to The Secretary, Burgh Band, Dalbeattie.

FOR SALE.—Rummens Piano Pedal Attachment

(Norman & Beard's make), radiating and concave, with bench. Excellent condition. £6 10s. Seowcroft, 25, Crosby Rd., Bolton, Lancs.

ORGAN MUSIC, PIANO MUSIC, VERY CHEAP.

168, Ivydale Road, Peckham.

PALESTRINA. Adaptation to English Words of the famous Motet "Sicut cervus" ("As the hart panteth"), (S.A.T.B.). Specimen copies of anthem gratis to Organists and Choirmasters, from Dr. Smith, St. Margaret's, N.C. Road, Dublin.

WANTED.—Two Copies of the Vocal Score,

"HIS EXCELLENCY" (Gilbert & Sullivan). R. W. Aldridge, Houghton Street, Southport.

BARITONES and BASSES should buy new setting of "THE ERL KING" (Oakley). Compass C to E flat (F optional). Also descriptive song "THE WILD WINDS WALK THE DEEP" (Oakley). Compass G to D. Price 2s. each. Weekes & Co., 14, Hanover Street, W.1.

WANTED.—The Address, or News of, W. Burton

Baldry. Address, "M. S. W. G.," Lydgate Hall, Sheffield.

SCALE-PLANS for Associated Board Examinations. Arranged systematically for weekly practice. Lower and Higher Divisions now ready (price 3d., postage ½d.), from N. Langley, 16, Shrewsbury Road, West Kirby.

A.R.C.O. ACCOMPANIMENT TEST.

Practical paper with helpful hints on the performance of this important test, together with list of 75 suitable and easily accessible solos. Send 3s. to "A.R.C.O. Accompl.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

MUSIC COPYING and Transposition Work WANTED. Neat and accurate. Terms moderate. "M. O.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

MUSIC COPIED neatly and accurately. Transposition, Band-Parts, &c. Gordon Jacob, A.R.C.M., 1, Homefield Road, S.W.19.

MUSIC COPIED, neat work, Transposition and Duplicating. E.W. Cartwright, 17, Belvedere Rd., Bournemouth.

MUSIC COMPOSERS and LYRIC WRITERS. The Cosmos Publishing Co. are open to consider Songs, &c., with a view to publication. Send MSS. with stamp for reply, to Glenholme, The Common, Hessele.

THE UNKNOWN TRUTH ABOUT THE VOICE AND ITS DEVELOPMENT. By E. DAVIDSON PALMER, Mus. Bac., Oxon. Showing the prevailing Error in the Training of Men's Voices, and the primary cause of Voice-Failure in Singers and Public Speakers. Post free, 1s. (Postal Order). Address: 11, Grazebrook Road, Stoke Newington, N.16.

ESSAY.—A.R.C.O. (Jan., 1925) on "ENGLISH FOLK-SONG AND DANCE." Excellent Series of Six Model Essays. Valuable hints on writing. Success assured. Send 4s 6d. to "Essays," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour St., W.1.

L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., AURAL TESTS. Special important paper. Success assured. This paper gives details how to work. Send 4s. 6d. to "Aural Tests," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

MUSIC REQUIRES COVERS

TO KEEP IT NICE AND CLEAN.

Now is the time to prepare for the winter season.

Send P.O. for 1s. 3d. and obtain specimen covers for sheet and Choir Music.

R. H. MUDDIMAN,

77, Queen Victoria Street, London, E.C.4.

No. 63.—NOVELLO'S MUSIC PRIMERS.

BREATHING

FOR

VOICE-PRODUCTION

(Re-written and brought up to date).

PART I.

OF

EURHYTHM: THOUGHT IN ACTION

BY

H. H. HULBERT,

Capt. R.A.M.C., M.A. Oxford, M.R.C.S., L.R.C.P., &c.

Price ... Three Shillings.

Paper Boards, 4s.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

No. 99.—NOVELLO'S MUSIC PRIMERS.

PIANOFORTE ACCOMPANIMENT

BY

WELTON HICKIN

Fellow and Professor, Royal Academy of Music.

CONTENTS.

Technical Proficiency—Artistic Imagination—Ensemble—Balance of Tone—Phrasing—Vital Notes—Pedalling—Recitations with Music—Reading at Sight—Transposition—Harmonization—Recitative—Modulation—Accompaniment studied in detail, &c.

PRICE ... FOUR SHILLINGS.

Paper Boards, 5s.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

A BOOK YOU REALLY OUGHT TO GET.

THE TEACHING OF INTERPRETATION IN SONG

By DAWSON FREER

When you have read this new book through you will read it all over again—if only for the sheer enjoyment that comes through contact with the sensitive mind of a fine artist and charming personality.

It is a book which brims over with the enthusiasm of the vocal teacher who loves his art, and enjoys imparting its secrets to others.

Its practical value to teachers, would-be teachers, and student-artists is immense. It gives, amongst other features, guidance in the choice of suitable songs for various types of pupils, and valuable suggestions in the art of interpreting them.

Send for a Copy now while the matter is fresh in your mind.

To EVANS BROS., LTD., Montague House, Russell Square, London, W.C.1.

Please send me a copy of "The Teaching of Interpretation in Song," by Dawson Freer, for which I enclose 2s. 9d.

Name (Mr., Mrs., or Miss).....

Address.....

BECHSTEIN HOUSE

65, SOUTH MOLTON STREET, W.1.

NOW OPEN.

COMPLETE RANGE OF ALL MODELS NOW ON VIEW.

The BECHSTEIN Piano is pre-eminently the artist's favourite.

BUSONI.

Your pianos are, as regards beauty of tone and evenness, precision, and delicacy of touch, the acme of what can be produced in this art.

D'ALBERT.

It is superfluous to wish to add to the fame of the BECHSTEIN Piano, but it is a delight to me to write what I have for so many years felt and thought. I owe everything to these glorious Grands—my touch, my success; the very character of my touch and playing have been formed and acquired through them. Without them I could never have achieved such a position as a pianist. This is no exaggeration, but is my firm conviction. I cannot play upon any other instrument, for it is only upon a BECHSTEIN that I feel safe. They are for me the only possible medium for the perfect expression of my art, and I shall always use this make. Every pianist must marvel at their incomparable touch, their noble tone, their superb power and depth, as well as their delightful sweetness. I play everywhere on Mr. BECHSTEIN's instruments, because I consider them in every respect the most perfect pianos in the whole world.

GODOWSKY.

The beauty and infinite capacity for modulation of tone, as well as the extremely delightful touch, enable the artist to express what lies at the bottom of his soul. In a word, the BECHSTEIN instrument is, and will remain, the ideal of the artist.

JOSEF HOFMANN.

The BECHSTEIN piano possesses greater poetry of tone and resembles the human voice more than any other instrument. It is the realisation of my ideal of a piano, and the only one on which I can express all I feel.

DE PACHMANN.

There is a mysterious charm in the tone of BECHSTEIN's Pianos; as much power and fulness as unheard-of beauty and delicacy, coupled with a touch so capable of modulation for the player, that an artist could not desire a more ideal instrument. To me it is the height of joy to play on these instruments; then alone can I become one with the piano, and revel in pure music and poetry. The beauty of tone of a BECHSTEIN Piano I can only compare with that of a Stradivarius string quartet.

EMILE SAUER.

The technical perfection of the BECHSTEIN Piano, the evenness of register, beyond all praise, the voice-like tone which the touch allows to be produced in all imaginable shades of colouring, stamps this instrument as the most perfect that has been produced in the art of piano making. The basses are organ toned, the treble like bells.

RACHMANINOW.

The wonderful noble tone, its ideal pliability, together with the incomparable touch of the BECHSTEIN Grand, always inspire me to enthusiasm; on these instruments an artist must be able to reach the height of perfection.

EGON PETRI.

On the BECHSTEIN Piano alone the musician can readily express in resounding reality those glorious tone-pictures which his imagination conceives.

HAROLD BAUER.

Both as regards quality of tone and perfection of mechanism, the BECHSTEIN Piano has never been surpassed.

THEODOR LESCHETIZKY.

The BECHSTEIN Piano is of the same importance to the pianist as a Stradivarius is to the violinist. Nobility and power of tone, warmth and refinement in singing quality, perfection in mechanism, with the utmost capacity for expression and shading, are the great qualities of a BECHSTEIN Piano. The pianist finds in it an intimate friend for his home and a faithful and reliable ally in his battle for public renown.

A. BOROVSKY.

A BECHSTEIN Grand on the concert platform is not only a source of delight for the listener, but much more so for the player.

RICHARD STRAUSS.

I consider the BECHSTEIN instruments the most beautiful and the most refined in the world.

C. BECHSTEIN

PIANO CO., LTD.,

BECHSTEIN HOUSE: 65, SOUTH MOLTON STREET, W.1.

TRINITY COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

President:

THE RT. HON. THE EARL OF SHAFTESBURY, K.P., G.C.V.O.

Director of Studies: C. W. PEARCE, M.A., Mus. D.

Director of Examinations: E. F. HORNER, Mus. D.

November 5th and 19th, at 3 p.m. Students' Concerts.

November 12th, at 3 p.m. Pianoforte recital by Students in Mr. Fred J. Gostelow's Class.

November 26th, at 3 p.m. Pianoforte Recital by Mr. William Lovelock, Mus. B., F.T.C.L.

November 27th, at 5 p.m. Vocal Recital by students in Madame Mary Rosenberg's Class.

December 6th. Last day of entry for the January, 1925, Higher Examinations and the next open competition for Scholarships.

The College provides INSTRUCTION and TRAINING in all Musical Subjects (Instrumental, Vocal, and Theoretical) and Dramatic and Operatic Elocution. The Lessons are arranged to meet the convenience of both day and evening students. Entry may be made for any number of Subjects—from one to the Full Course. The College is open to beginners as well as to the more proficient student; pupils under 16 years of age are received for the Junior School at reduced fees.

The ORCHESTRAL, CHORAL, the OPERATIC, and CHAMBER MUSIC CLASSES are open also to sufficiently competent persons who are not College Students for other subjects.

Tuition in the Rudiments of the Theory of Music, Harmony, Counterpoint, Form, Instrumentation, Composition, and the Art of Teaching is also given by Correspondence.

There are between Forty and Fifty Scholarships tenable at the College and open to all British subjects up to certain age limits, and the Bambridge Pianoforte Scholarship, value £100 per annum; also Eighteen Scholarships which provide complete preparation for the Degree of Bachelor of Music.

Particulars of the Teaching Department, with list of Professors, Fees, Scholarships regulations, &c., and the Syllabuses of the Diploma and Local Examinations, free on application to the undersigned.

C. N. H. RODWELL, Secretary.

Mandeville Place, Manchester Square, London, W.1.

CYRIL SCOTT ORGAN ALBUMS.

VOLUME 1.

(Six pieces transcribed by Dr. A. W. POLLITT.)

- |                          |                          |
|--------------------------|--------------------------|
| 1. Vesperale.            | 4. A Song from the East. |
| 2. Alpine Sketch, No. 2. | 5. Solitude.             |
| 3. Chansonette.          | 6. Berceuse.             |

VOLUME 2.

(Six pieces transcribed by Dr. A. EAGLEFIELD HULL.)

- |                      |                      |
|----------------------|----------------------|
| 1. Ode Héroïque.     | 4. Cavatina.         |
| 2. Over the Prairie. | 5. Evening Idyll.    |
| 3. Diatonic Study.   | 6. Prelude Solennel. |

Price, 3s. 6d. each volume.

ELKIN & CO., LTD.

8 & 10, BEAK STREET, REGENT STREET,
LONDON, W.1.

BROADWOOD PIANOS

BOSWORTH & CO., LTD.

ANTHEMS, MOTETS, ETC.,

FOR ADVENT AND CHRISTMAS.

ADVENT.

MONTEM SMITH (Ed. by E. Stanley Roper).

The night is far spent ... 3d.

CHRISTMAS.

J. FREDERICK BRIDGE—Six Carols:

- |                                |                          |
|--------------------------------|--------------------------|
| 1. Ring out with jocund chime. | 4. Christmas Day.        |
| 2. A Babe ys borne I wys.      | 5. When Christ was born. |
| 3. Welcome, Yule.              | 6. Yonder in Bethlehem.  |
- 3d. each, or in one volume complete, 1s.

J. FREDERICK BRIDGE.

The Star of the East. A Fantasy for Contralto

Solo (ad lib.) and chorus. S.A.T.B. ... 9d.

RICHARD DERING (Ed. by Sir Frederick Bridge).

Whom saw ye, Shepherds? (6 parts) ... 4d.

ORLANDO GIBBONS (Ed. by Sir Frederick Bridge).

Hosanna to the Son of David. (6 parts) ... 4d.

JOHN GOSS.

Behold, I bring you good tidings ... 3d.

JACOB HANDL (Ed. by Sir Frederick Bridge).

Behold, thou shalt conceive ... 4d.

E. J. HOPKINS.

Let us now go even unto Bethlehem ... 3d.

ORLANDO DI LASSO (Ed. by Sir Frederick Bridge).

Let Zion resound. (5 parts) ... 4d.

Whom saw ye, Shepherds? (5 parts) ... 4d.

CHRISTMAS CAROLS ANCIENT AND MODERN.

A collection of favourite Carols ... 1s. 6d.

BOSWORTH & CO., LTD.,

8, HEDDON STREET, REGENT STREET, LONDON, W.1.

JUST PUBLISHED.

SCHOOL MARCHES

FOR PIANOFORTE SOLO

BOOK III.

Price One Shilling and Sixpence.

CONTENTS.

- |  |                   |
|--|-------------------|
| Arrival of the Visitors ...                  | H. Hofmann        |
| Bright and Buxom Lasses, from "Martha" ...   | Flotow            |
| Instrumental Band, The ...                   | Percy E. Fletcher |
| Little March, A ...                          | J. D. Davis       |
| March from "Egmont" ...                      | Beethoven         |
| March from "St. Polycarp" ...                | F. A. G. Onseley  |
| March ...                                    | Th. Kullak        |
| March from "Tannhäuser" ...                  | Wagner            |
| Marching off to Bed ...                      | Myles B. Foster   |
| March of Priests, from "The Magic Flute" ... | Mozart            |
| Soldiers' Chorus, from "Il Trovatore" ...    | Verdi             |
| Toy Soldiers' March ...                      | Tschaiowsky       |

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

The Musical Times

AND SINGING-CLASS CIRCULAR

NOVEMBER I 1924

(FOR LIST OF CONTENTS SEE PAGE 1039.)

THE ENGLISHNESS OF PARRY

BY ALEXANDER BRENT-SMITH

Walter Savage Landor in a well-known line says of the English, 'We are what suns and winds and waters make us,' and to no one is that line more justly applicable than to Sir Hubert Parry. In all that he wrote, in all that he did, we notice the best characteristics of the true Englishman. He might have stood for St. George of Merry England, and we feel that in doing so, our merry England would have had a finer symbol of her national character than she possesses to-day in the ponderous truculence of the mythical John Bull.

If the English character has been moulded by the action of suns, winds, and waters, then that particular type of character which found expression in Parry's work is no less attributable to the action of these three elements upon the appearance and fertility of his own country beneath the Cotswold Hills. Rightly to appreciate the influence of that district upon the mind and music of Parry, let us for a moment consider the characteristics of the Cotswold hills and of the kindly folk who work and live among them.

Anyone who journeys from London to Gloucester may wonder for the greater part of his journey what he is going out into the wilderness to see. The prosperous valley of the Thames? It is pleasing, but nothing more. The distant and featureless ridges of the Chilterns? They are interesting only by contrast with the preceding flatness. But when he has passed through the tunnel at Sapperton he realises that his journey has been leading up slowly and with purpose to this unforgettable and purifying experience. He sees all around him magnificent scenery delicately worked in miniature. The hills, by reason of their beautiful proportion and design, seem as they tower above the valleys like splendid mountains. There is nothing in the Cotswold hills of the stupendous and overwhelming grandeur of the Alps, but they have a charm and friendliness that is lacking in those famous mountains. As we gaze upon the Alps, we cannot but admire, but our admiration is slightly tinged with fear. We know that terror sits upon those peaks, and that behind some grassy boulder lurks the shade of Death. But when we see the Cotswolds how different are our feelings! Again, we cannot but admire, but our admiration is more nearly akin to love, and certainly our admiration is in no way threatened by fear. But the Cotswold hills are more than beautiful; they are kindly and most fruitful. Unlike the Sussex Downs or the Wessex Moors they do not grudge their services to man. Rather they go out to meet him, and to alleviate his toil. What wonder then that the Cotswold folk are friendly and that their arms are strong. That which they have received so bountifully from Nature, they will not churlishly deny to others not so blest. The beggars who go tramping through the Cotswold lanes must surely be the best fed specimens of the vagrant class, for, whereas in other places farmers give them pints of cider, Cotswold yeomen more generously and unwisely give them quarts. Even the cheese they give is known as Double Gloster—a fair testimony to their generosity.

In their ways of thinking and living the Cotswold dwellers differ but little from their fathers. The John Falstaffs, the Justice Shallows, the Slenders and the Fentons still drive about the Gloucester lanes, differing only from their forefathers in the cut of their clothes and their good exchange of cider for sack. Into their picturesque homesteads fashion is very slow to penetrate, and new ideas when they do arrive are not crude, because experimental, but matured and tested by experience. In such a country and among such people Sir Hubert Parry spent the greater portion of his days. We may be sure that at his home at Highnam he lived a true country life, not artificially by wearing untidy clothes in order to convince himself of his love of rusticity, but instinctively by a true understanding of those pleasures and customs that constitute the real village life. Doubtless he knew and appreciated cricket, that strange game half pleasure, half patience, wherein two men with well-sprung bats do nothing with amazing skill for an hour or so at a time. Probably he understood, too, the joy of angling—himself at one end of a rod with a worm at the other. Is it fanciful to discover in the work of Parry the same qualities of Englishness, of busy-trifling, of dainty songs, of refreshing brooks, of shady arbours, of happy thoughts that distinguish the work of Izaak Walton? And when Hazlitt confesses he would have liked to be in the company of that happy, childlike man, watching his ruddy cheek, his laughing eye, the kindness of his heart, and the dexterity of his hand, do we not feel that the description is as applicable to the musician as it is to the literary angler?

Such an influence, then, did his surroundings leave upon Parry, that never for a moment did he forget or despise his natural inheritance. Many composers when they travel abroad return with sketch books iridescent with local colour, just as many holiday-makers at Blackpool or Margate return with locally-coloured cups, the truest testimony to travel. But Parry, the further he got from England, the more he longed for home. In his early days he studied closely the work of the great German masters and showed himself a wise and appreciative admirer of contemporary work (he wrote his 'Studies of Great Composers' when still in his 'teens'), yet while Wolf was beginning to produce his highly sophisticated Lieder, Parry, though equally well versed in contemporary art, was producing such simple English lyrics as 'It was a lover and his lass.' His first big work, 'Prometheus,' though it profited by the example of his foreign contemporaries, is absolutely and unmistakably English. The last section—Shelley's vision of the Millennium—brings together the best English qualities, and fuses them into a choral symphony of surpassing grandeur and beauty. Examine the opening solo: the melody, diatonic and beautiful in its simplicity, the harmony clear and radiant like the sunlight of early April, before the foliage of May has grown dense enough to impede its passage and to soften its glare.

To mention the individual beauties of this music would result in a wearisome catalogue of successive pages, but a special word is due to the final chorus, which shows Parry's choral technique at its best. From a reading of this chorus, it would seem that in performance it should rival, or even surpass in grandeur, the closing pages of 'Blest Pair of Sirens.' But indeed it would be a sluggish imagination which was not stirred by Shelley's words

As the waves of a thousand streams rush by
To an ocean of splendour and harmony.

During the next fifty years of his life, Parry, while keeping his ears open to all that was good upon the Continent, preserved in his work the Spirit of England as he found it among the people, the hills, and the fields of his country home. Of course his music had its defects (it is not now my purpose to attempt a valuation of Parry as composer), and the advanced critics of the time poured scorn upon his works as they appeared. But yet I suspect that the critics who thus mocked at the great man's aberrations did so not because they found in them no conspicuous merit, but because they did not find in them any likeness to the styles of Wagner, Strauss, or Debussy. All around him Englishmen were producing works which were praised in proportion to their approach to the latest Continental fashion; but Parry (like a little boy who wept when he was told he was like his uncle, saying he much preferred to be like himself), in spite of the vogue of Wagner, Brahms, Strauss, and Debussy, preferred to be condemned for being himself, and in doing so he lost his reputation, but retained his own soul. And herein lies the difference between Parry and some of his contemporaries: when they failed, their offence was a failure to be Strauss, but when Parry failed his offence was a failure to be Parry.

But though we may rightly describe Parry's work as English, yet it is difficult to say what exactly constitutes Englishness. From a comparison of styles, however, we can say with certainty that English music is less rhythmic than Italian, less piquant than French, less complex than German; furthermore we can say that the characteristics of English music are solidity, austerity, and beauty that owes nothing to externals. Consider these qualities in detail. English music when compared to foreign music appears to be set much more firmly on its feet than is the music of the Latin races, which is perhaps another side to the Englishman's preference for stout boots rather than delicate patent leather shoes. In solidity, English music resembles German music, but it is less luxurious and rich. We cannot imagine an Englishman harmonizing 'O sacred Head' with Bach's rather excessive warmth; he would prefer something colder and more restrained. For beauty, the Englishman prefers simplicity rather than ornament, despising all those turns, shakes, and pretty devices which frequently give a seeming charm to music which of itself has little claim to beauty.

At his best Parry's inspiration is as fresh and English as that of Henry Purcell. Anyone who plays through such tunes of Purcell as 'What shall I do,' 'The Virgin's Expostulation,' 'Nymphs and Shepherds,' and such tunes of Parry as 'To everything there is a season,' 'O may we soon again renew that song,' will certainly discover a common nationality.

In all his many choral and instrumental works, we can find passages of real natural beauty which prove the truth of the paradox that the part is greater than the whole. What a virile tune is that to the words 'Te gloriosus' from the 'Te Deum'; what charming simplicity there is in 'In the garden' from the 'Shulbrede' tunes; what strength is there in the March from 'War and Peace'; and what an infinity of moods is there in the many part-songs, such as 'There rolls the deep,' 'Come, pretty wag,' 'Music, when soft voices,' 'Out upon it,' each as characteristic of Parry and each as definitely a mood, as the 'Forty-eight' are an expression of the moods and emotions of Bach.

Having practised the writing of unaccompanied songs all his life, he worked up to his masterpieces in this class of composition—'The Songs of Farewell.' Of these songs there may be various preferences, but personally I find the greatest pleasure in 'There is an old belief.' Lockhart's words, which express simply and beautifully the feelings of all mankind about the permanence of individuality after death, must have appealed with peculiar intensity to the composer, already advanced in years and saddened by the sorrows of war and the separation from his dearly loved friends. The opening bars

There is an old belief
That on some solemn shore
Beyond the sphere of grief
Dear friends shall meet once more bring to my mind the vision of the soul climbing from promontory to promontory, until at the word 'Beyond' it soars up into uncharted keys full of mystery and change, returning at the words 'friends shall meet once more' into the safe and familiar tonality of D major. I know not if my hearing is in any way peculiar, but to me the effect of these opening bars when sung is markedly different from that made when they are merely played. Sung, each progression sounds unusual; each chord has something of unexpectedness. But when the chord of D major is reached at the words 'once more,' this feeling of unusualness disappears, and everything subsequently sounds familiar again. The next section contains, at the words 'serene in changeless prime,' one of the most sonorous passages in choral music—a kind of analogy to the passage, 'He was bruised for our iniquities' from 'The Messiah.' In the last portion the poet and the composer are, strictly speaking, at variance. The poet says, 'If I am not to meet my friend after death, then may I sleep never to awake.' In fact he suggests the hateful doctrine of Nirvana, in which the sleep of death is not the thrilling prelude to Life, but a state of eternal annihilation. But Parry's faith refuses even to consider such a creed, and the words 'eternal be the sleep' arouse in him feelings of sublime happiness, because he believes the sleep of death to be a period of joyful expectation. So too he fills the word 'waken' with all the wonder and beauty of dawn. And this simple faith, learnt among the unsophisticated country folk of Gloucestershire, shines clearly in his treatment of each of the 'Songs of Farewell.' It is the unaffected creed of a wise and healthy man. These Songs use the musical phraseology of To-day, but they speak to all men independent of creed, time, or race. They are born of English thoughts, they drew their beauty from our English streams and fields, but the thoughtful listener can hear in these large utterances the voice of Bach, of Beethoven, of Palestrina, and of all great ones who have pondered on the ways of God to man.

THE ART OF ACCOMPANYING SONGS

BY HUBERT J. FOSS

In the graphic arts a division is made between those which are called 'fine' and those which are called 'applied.' However arbitrary this may be, I propose not only to accept it (temporarily) here, but also to extend it to music; the branch of music which I think the second term fits best being accompaniment. An important thing in every musician's life, accompaniment has none the less a smaller share of attention devoted to it than any other branch, for it is always assumed that the accompanist is only an adjunct to the singer, one who completes the picture, but has only a very subsidiary importance. It is my contention that this view is wrong, and I propose to show here that song is no less chamber music than the instrumental sonata, and thus, incidentally, that the fine and applied arts are only distinct in theory. The latter may be more defined in scope and more (perhaps) dependent on their technique, but they are not less artistic on this account than the former.

The amateur pianist loves to accompany, for several reasons. His prowess is as obvious, with less risk of noticeable failures; there is a zest in helping a fellow amateur, and in contributing to the sociability of the occasion—though I am told that broadcasting has curtailed the old desire of the amateur to sing the songs he hears from the lips of the famous. There is less imaginative conception needed before making a satisfactory thing of an accompaniment—more is done for you. And in addition there is the fact that the song as a form is more immediately intelligible to the amateur than the pianoforte piece as a form. It is not therefore uncommon to hear from the lips of the half-equipped player the hackneyed phrase, 'I can't play, but I can accompany'! The second task is considered easier than the first, largely because it demands less complete technical proficiency from the fingers, and because it does not require so high a spiritual intention in the player. The reasons are valid without being sufficient. While in many ways it is easier than pure pianoforte playing, accompaniment is so utterly different as to be more difficult in others. The pianist and the accompanist may therefore laugh at the above somewhat jejune remark, but they are not right, for whatever the idea in the head of the speaker, the words themselves convey a profound truth. Not only is it conceivable, it also frequently happens, that the good accompanist may be a bad pianist; even more conceivable is it that the good pianist may be a bad accompanist.

The amateur's pride is often given up to qualities which, although they belong to the professional accompanist, are neither integral to his art nor unmixed in virtue. The chief of these are unobtrusiveness, and the capacity to 'follow' the singer. It seems to me a negation of the whole conception of ensemble that any member of a combination should be less obtrusive in his performance than another, particularly if the combination contain only two performers. The unobtrusiveness may lie in the part one of them has to play, but that is not his concern. His duty is to perform that with as much art as he can command. The second point simply omits to consider the fact that the accompanist is sometimes soloist for a few bars, perhaps opening the song and almost inevitably joining the verses or phrases. A third virtue that is aimed at is adaptability, of which one can say that it is rated too high, and indeed misunderstood, but cannot be dispensed with.

It is in the qualities that cluster around adaptability (in its accepted sense) that the professional accompanist, as a type, excels, because his profession so frequently brings him into the situation of playing at sight a song for a singer with whom he has not rehearsed. He must indeed be able to read at sight, transpose glibly into any key, follow the vagaries, however erratic, of any and every singer, break without a mental qualm from a Bach aria into a Chappell ballad, play the National Anthem as a solo or for a chorus of a thousand, vamp for a new melody, and care not a whit if the music falls down, or if the middle sheet is left by mistake in the artists' room. His touch must be as infinitely flexible as his mind. He must be tireless, he must be efficient, he must be 'slick.' No one must ever suspect him of an error, an invention, or a transposition.

It is a pity that the amateur should look up to and imitate the practice of this professional type, for though these common demands upon the professional accompanist are indeed a part of his daily life and wage-earning capacity, they have no more to do with the art of accompaniment than the ability to memorise, or to play blindfold, or to play entirely by ear, have to do with a pianist's musical imagination.

Here, of course, I am only discussing the old question of the value of technique, with a view to proving that accompaniment, not being a wholly technical accomplishment, needs more than the mere imitation of other people's principles, particularly if (as frequently happens with the professional accompanist) those principles are based, in my opinion, upon a wrong-headed premiss. Undoubtedly technique is a good assistant, but it must be treated as such. It is valuable not only for efficiency, but, as Mr. John Goss* has pointed out in a letter to me ... because it suggests ideas. An artist [he says] can learn more about things of the spirit from a perfected technique in a week than he can from his inner consciousness in a century. The imaginative artist cannot have too much technique, and the better the technique the better the artist, and he quotes Browning's 'Andrea Del Sarto.' In this of course he is perfectly right, but the artist, and particularly the accompanist, must beware of technique as a master.

It is commonly presumed that the accompanist does not need rehearsal. This is of course a lamentable error, not so much of fact, for often he does not get it, but of attitude. The accompanist, amateur or professional, would be far better advised to think that no performance can be satisfactory without rehearsal, and to demand it on every occasion. If there is anything in ensemble at all, it cannot be improvised, however sympathetic the two performers may be, by the quickness of one of them. A quartet of string players, though they may live together and play together every day, cannot do without rehearsal of even an old, well-known number of their répertoire, and a leaf should be taken from their book.

Accompaniment is, I believe, taught. It must be a hard subject to teach, because as an art it rests upon a kind of adaptability which it is extremely difficult to define or even to understand. The negative adaptability which, for lack of ability to do otherwise, does precisely what the soloist does, is useless; the mechanical adaptability, a sixth sense like that which makes the motor driver mentally shrink from hurting his car with the rapidity induced by the fear of physical pain, is not really what is wanted. Sensitiveness to musical impression alone will do, for accompaniment no less than for any other kind of performance, and it is in this particular that the distinction between the fine and the applied arts seems to fall to the ground, and that the relegation of accompaniment to a low level of artistic endeavour is shown to be mistaken.

The fundamental matter in the art of accompaniment is that so much of it belongs, or should belong, to any good musician. To learn accompaniment is even more of a voyage of discovery than other learning, because its technique depends largely upon the musician's inherent sensitiveness. It needs primarily to be thought about, and not learnt. The function of the accompanist has to be discovered by himself, and applied anew for each work he accompanies; it cannot be communicated in words, because it demands dominant personality combined with subordination. There is of course a technique of accompaniment—that is to say, a short set of rules which can be drawn up for guidance (but only for guidance), and this set of rules or technique can be taught. But the full technique of accompaniment comes only with understanding, and understanding comes only with thought and experience, with grasping the whole music in its essential meaning, with noticing and grading the subtle details, with never missing a point just because the music is live to a live mind—because the point is there to be noticed. Real celerity is needed in accompaniment, but it is not the celerity of turning over pages, transposing at sight, or being ready for an emergency; it is the celerity which can transfer quick musical thought into immediate action. Accompaniment cannot be learnt by heart—it is an art of the brain and understanding.

The accompanist has then first to discover his function, not only in immediate performance, but also in theory and history. On this subject Mr. J. A. Fuller-Maitland has something to say in his 'Consort of Music'* (p. 210):

The conditions of the 'consort' [he says] between the singer and the pianist are not by any means the same as those we have been examining hitherto [which are those of instrumental combination]; for the singer's position (when the two are sounding together) is almost always paramount. . . . The first and chief difference between this and other kinds of ensemble is that the element of personality enters into a very large extent in the solo part and not at all in the accompaniment.

The distinction, it seems to me, is not a just one, for the matter is one wholly of degree and not of kind. So, when I turn to p. 2 of the same book, I find:

Ensemble may perhaps be defined as that kind of co-operation in music in which each performer bears some share of responsibility for the general effect, as well as for the correct execution of the notes set before him.

Is this really less vivid in song accompaniment than elsewhere? I am inclined to think the definition so good that it denies the truth of the statement quoted before it. What the accompanist has to discover, then, is first that his line in the score may have independent beauty, or, at least,

* I have been fortunate in that Mr. John Goss has kindly read my proofs. I have since modified certain suggestions, and have incorporated into this article many points, at his advice, without in any way committing him to the opinions here expressed.

* This book, referred to throughout, is published by the Oxford University Press.

that by contributing to the whole it must be treated with art and not mechanism; secondly, the exact nature of the somewhat subtle means at his disposal; thirdly, his own function—Is it that of a mere harmonic background, is he, in other words, only the subsidiary voices in a series of chords? fourthly, the musical meaning of the part he is playing, and its relations to the musical meaning of the whole—which really embraces his whole activity.

The relations of accompanist and singer are discussed by Mr. Fuller-Maitland (p. 4 et seq.). His statements here regarding the quality of self-abnegation and the application of altruistic virtue to musical ends are largely true, but in the whole passage he does not go far enough. Thus he says:

I have heard Schumann's Dichterliebe accompanied with exquisite delicacy and understanding as long as the singer was occupied, but the effect of the whole cycle was ruined by a kind of shyness and reserve in the instrumental epilogue, no doubt due to the pianist's reluctance to 'take the middle of the stage.'

He then enlarges upon his theatrical metaphor. But surely that metaphor is its own refutation, unless he thinks that the actor finds it easier to take the middle of the stage than not to do so. Surely the test of the good general actor is his ability to play a small part with distinction but without obtrusiveness. His minor part must not mar his ability at characterisation, nor must his technical equipment creak, as it were, when he comes forward to the front of the stage for his one obtrusive moment. So, as I have said before, with the accompanist: he must be no less an artist because he is not the 'leading man,' and if he conceives rightly his relations with his principal he will not need a special frame of mind in order to assume the chief part—that will be inherent in his playing from the beginning to the end.

The self-effacement of the accompanist is, in fact, a line of action too often insisted on without sufficient thought, the accompanist being really a very important person in an ensemble of two. His secondary importance must be made a definite contributory part of the ensemble, not a mere denial of his personality, of which, to be artistically of assistance to the singer, he will need the whole. It must not be forgotten that musically he has the lion's share of the performance, in quantity if not in quality. Often he is the leader, not the follower, in matters of colour and rhythm; and he can mar a song even more easily than the singer if so he will, though the quality of the singer's vocal apparatus and the meaning of the words will always compensate him in the public eye for his intellectual shortcomings. This is of course particularly true of what was at one time called the 'atmospheric' song—with, that is, modern songs of almost any kind.

In practice, as Mr. Goss has pointed out, the personal equation between the singer and his pianist solves itself, probably without hesitation. This, however, does not remove the fact that the accompanist must be as aware of his function as the singer is of his (in somewhat labouring the accompanist's part, I have not forgotten the singer). But there is a further point raised here in our correspondence:

The singer has [my letter runs] in all probability thought more about any given song than the accompanist. He has picked the song out from thousands of others because he likes it, or because it suits him, or for both these reasons. A singer has to breathe; he has a peculiar appui of his own. All questions of pace, of dynamics, of stress and strain, must therefore be decided by him. If an accompanist for musical or other reasons insists on a speed, or a loudness, or a way of phrasing which is at variance with the principal emotional peculiarities of the singer, the song will be ruined. The sensitive singer puts in a special diaphragmatic gear for every song he sings, and this is what matters most.

Some of this point I must reserve to discuss later, but it is also relevant and necessary here. The singer has certainly thought about his song more than the accompanist, but I would strongly urge here that this should only be true in the first instance. As soon as the accompanist is on duty at rehearsal, it is his business to think just as much about the song as the singer (even if he does not choose it) with the added responsibility of having to assist in the ensemble in a way which does not mar the imaginative art of the singer. That this is not done habitually is really the main thesis of this article; precedent must never be quoted. When I say that the accompanist may be the leader and not the follower, I do not mean to assert his right to conceive a loudness, speed, or phraseology, but only his necessity to establish—within the normal relations of the ensemble, and having regard to both his own and his partner's functions—the conditions of the song. With the breathing and vocalism of the singer I propose to deal later.

The accompanist must not omit to consider his effect upon the audience. That is certainly in conflict with the ideals set before him of becoming a capable sleeping partner. The judgment of the audience must depend largely upon the whole noise it hears, and though the singer gives delight by his own individual ways, yet the song must strike the listener as a work, complete as it sounds—at least so the song-writer appears to think. The idiom of the modern song leads one immediately to the view that the relations of singer and pianist are not far removed from those of the chamber combination, or instrumental soloist, and the pianist. I therefore propose cursorily to examine a few passages in chamber work—Arnold Bax's first Violin Sonata, in E major—before passing to songs, to indicate how the song accompanist is just as much a part of the ensemble as the pianist in a pianoforte quartet. It is hoped that the readers of this article will be able to follow these notes with the score of the Sonata, but for those who do not possess it I make a few quotations.

Upon the two opening sixths and the statement of the subject depend the setting of the right atmosphere for the whole Sonata. Not only has the rhythm to be established, but the directions 'Idyllic and serene,' together with Molto tranquillo, have to be indicated in the short space of three bars, and those not full of pianistic material. How much easier it would be to establish the mood of Presto agitato, or Allegretto semplice!

Ex. 1.

Moderato tempo. Idyllic and serene. dolcissimo cantabile.
[Violin tacet.] p

PIANO. molto tranquillo.

6 rit. un poco.

The interaction of both instruments with the melody at the opening of this work is a study in ensemble, and the musing chromatics, so characteristic of the composer, which occur throughout the movement, are a difficult example of the necessity to combine personality with unobtrusiveness. An interesting adjustment of tone-colour is demanded by the thirds in the right hand at più mosso, very simply, and in the next few bars:

Ex. 2.

VIOLIN. Più mosso.

PIANO. Più mosso. Very simply. p

&c.

The second movement provides the pianist with the task of deciding what tone-colour best suits the ensemble, and also what values he is to put on the composer's directions, p, pp, and ppp, in juxtaposition to f and ff. The opening bars are difficult in this way. In such a passage as this:

Ex. 3.

8va Bassa.

the balance of tone must be adjusted to that of the solo instrument in its middle register, and must only sound, not be, forte, while, after six bars, it must be loud, and not only sound loud when the pianoforte has this same forcible tune to itself. A similar juggling with 'values' of actual sound is necessary in the two passages quoted below, which are separated by only fifteen bars:

Ex. 4.

8va

meno forte.

&c.

Ex. 5.

Tempo poco più pesante.

ff molto feroce.

In the first, the pianoforte must only sound loud, in the second, it must be loud, for the violin's figure here cannot be obscured by a mere pianoforte. The whole solo passage before the slow section is difficult to poise (p. 27); the change of key marks a change of mood and rhythm, and however often one plays these opening bars in F sharp minor, he is liable to start too slowly for the melody overleaf. The danger is that of making the whole interlude drag, and it hangs on the thread of the accompanist's initiative.

I quote below another difficult passage (there are many):

Ex. 6.

Ex. 6. Musical score for piano and violin. The piano part is marked pp and the violin part is marked mf. The score consists of two systems of staves.

The pianist must avoid being caught here, for if he play his solo passage pp as marked, it will consort ill with the violin's entrance, since at this altitude the violin's mezzo-forte is shrill. Two pages further on the reverse occurs, for there is a danger of drowning the solo instrument for the two whole pages before the climax.

At the opening of the last movement the pianist must at once recall the atmosphere with which the Sonata began—the violinist cannot. In the matter of rhythmic texture this opening is rather difficult for the production of good ensemble. Already we have had, too, several places where the pianist must initiate, or at least recall, the tone-colour of the violin, whatever that turns out to be. One sometimes hears accompaniment spoken of as 'providing a mere background'; how difficult it is to provide an even-coloured background may be seen from two main appearances of the second subject of this movement:

Ex. 7.

Ex. 7. Musical score for piano and violin. The piano part is marked pp and the violin part is marked cantabile. The score consists of two systems of staves.

Ex. 8. Musical score for piano and violin. The piano part is marked p and the violin part is marked p. The score consists of two systems of staves.

Ex. 8.

Ex. 8. Musical score for piano and violin. The piano part is marked p and the violin part is marked p. The score includes the instruction p Soft and gentle. and like a bell. The score consists of two systems of staves.

It is no simple matter, but one which requires very careful finger work, to keep the musical interest alive without varying the evenness of this patterned background. Another passage where the pianist must be wary is the glissando that introduces the last section of all :

Ex. 9.

The tendency is to reduce the speed of this section in the bar immediately before the quotation; the musical context seems to demand it. But strict time is absolutely necessary, since the glissando is impossible at anything below the normal pace. There are of course a number of other passages which might be discussed would space permit it.

If it is usually acknowledged that in the performance of a violin sonata the pianist has an equal part with the soloist, yet it is not often allowed that he has a part on which so much of the musical effect depends. The random examples analysed above make it clear that in chamber music the leading is largely done by the pianist; and that therefore there must be a musical sympathy between the two players which will demand sometimes as much retirement from the soloist as is commonly expected of the pianist. Now it has yet to be shown in what way the accompanist of songs has a task so markedly inferior to that of the chamber music player. There seems to be no valid reason for gratuitously lowering the ideals of song accompaniment by this unfavourable comparison.

(To be continued.)

STYLE AND STYLISHNESS

BY HARRY FARJEON

The great waste-paper basket, ever a-gape for print as are his smaller brethren for manuscript, must be chock-full of unnecessary dissertations on Style, but perhaps a cranny in the vastness of its oblivion may be found for yet one more. For, besides the many points of view that have been exemplified and deservedly forgotten, there appears to me to be one—equally unworthy of remembrance—which has not been put forward. And that concerns the other points of view themselves.

Two men, back to back, may well argue about what is in the field of vision, and may well both be right: they are not looking at the same thing. So it is with controversialists in this subject: the one word is taken to represent different ideas, and concerning these differences it will be profitable to make inquiry.

George Meredith is said to have a fine literary style; the Duke of Bond Street one sartorially perfect. Yet the essence of George Meredith is that he writes unlike anybody else, while the essence of the Duke of Bond Street is that he dresses exactly like the Prince of Piccadilly. We want two words to express these two conceptions. Shall we, for present purposes, designate the Meredithian ideal as Style, and the Ducal one as Stylishness?

Now, having accepted these terms (or having, if you will, adopted others which will stand for the same two conceptions), we must ask ourselves: Wherein lies their common ancestry? In this: they both embody the method of expression—not the thing to be expressed. Meredith's same story could have been told in another style; the Duke's same body could have been clothed according to a different stylishness. There is, besides idea, a method of expression, of presentation, and it is with this method alone that we have to deal.

But method may be original or it may be reproductive. It may scintillate with creation (just as does the idea it presents), or it may stereotype an invention already made. And, in the latter case, the pattern set may be good or bad; if good, too, it may be of a kind which duplicates successfully or unsuccessfully.

Original method is what I have termed Style. Here we have Meredith and Max Beerbohm; here we have Wagner and Debussy; here we have Botticelli and Aubrey Beardsley. Style remains style, though the stylishness which it engenders may become out of fashion. Thus it was stylishness once to copy Wagner's style: it is so no longer. Our present-day musical dukes prefer Stravinsky.

Unoriginal method, which follows an accepted and bepedestalled model, is what I have termed Stylishness. The pattern set, as has been already said, may be good or bad. The Prince of Piccadilly may really dress well: he (or his by-Royal-warrant tailor) may be inspired in the direction of novel trouser-creasings really illuminating in their effect. But even in this case such creases may not suit our Duke. His shorter leg may require a manipulation he (or his tailor-to-the-aristocracy) will entirely fail to concede. He dare not be un-princely, unstylish—he dare not be himself. Perhaps he has no self to be. If so, the blame is less, but though there is little blame, there is less credit. Why admire Nobody, whose only excuse for doing Something is that it is done by Somebody?

And if the Prince doesn't dress well—if he doesn't care a pin or two figs about wearing gloves out-of-doors in Liverpool on Tuesday, and not wearing gloves indoors in Warwick on Wednesday—what then is the case of poor Bond Street? A perpetual flutter after an ideal which doesn't admit itself.

No: you who aim at Style (and at last I descend from the planes of art and drapery in general, and come to grips with the subject as it affects musicians)—you composers who aim at Style, be sure that the word implies for you your own creative way of doing your own creative thing. It is useful exercise and experience to imitate the methods of others (especially the methods which have proved not to be flash-in-the-pan), but in your actual work do not adopt the stylishness of Mendelssohn, of Stravinsky, or of that now so very stylish ultra-modern, Byrd. By doing so, you will clog your Idea (if you have one), and will be avoiding true Style, or creative method. If, on the other hand, you have no Idea, don't dress up the empty vacuum (poor thing!) according to this Prince or that; but leave the void alone till the day when something will grow there. And when the first bud shows, don't give it to anyone else to wear.

And you listeners, too: Refrain from springing up in hysterical transport (or the reverse) when you hear a modern chord. Refrain from kneeling down in solemn rapture (or the opposite) when confronted by pure four-part harmony with all the leading-notes resolved. No; these are the outward signs, and mean nothing. Beneath them lies the actual message; the tender thing cannot be presented naked to the day, but as its wrappings reveal or disguise its own true form so it will enter, or fail to enter, your heart.

CONDUCTORS AND CONDUCTING

By WILLIAM WALLACE

(Continued from October number, page 892)

V.—THE REHEARSAL

The wise conductor leaves nothing to chance. He has no belief in the tag, 'A bad rehearsal—a good performance.' Things wrong at rehearsal are sometimes 'all right on the night' with an experienced conductor who, for lack of time at rehearsal, has made a note of points missed—points which, with the greater concentration of the orchestra during the concert, will be brought out. The orchestra must be as experienced as he.

It goes without saying that he has studied the score beforehand. Doubtless he is already familiar with those in the répertoire, either from having conducted them repeatedly or from having heard them at orchestral concerts in the past. He may have determined his own readings and marked his score with nuances, slight modifications of tempi or expression which strike him as justified.

When the work is in manuscript he should not fail to take the precaution of seeing that the band-parts correspond with the full score in every detail. This is important financially as well as artistically, for a stop to correct a clerical error means loss of time, and as every minute at a rehearsal has a monetary value, an effort towards economy is imperative. At the same time, band-parts that are note-perfect give the conductor confidence, especially in post-Wagnerian music, when neighbours in the orchestra furtively look at one another's parts during a rest to see if they are really occupied with the same composition.*

With reference to the financial aspect of music, it may be pointed out here that it is only by the most stringent supervision that orchestral concerts of the highest class can make both ends meet. Again and again time has been frittered away at rehearsals over details which ought to have been mastered in the study; and in this respect the greatest offenders have been foreigners.

A conductor who has the reputation—and in musical matters fama volat celerime—of always providing carefully marked band-parts can be assured of a painstaking reading, for the orchestra willingly credits him with anxiety to give every help. Interruptions owing to misunderstandings or doubtful notes then become reduced to a minimum. The confidence of the band, moreover, is gained when the players know that they are right with the score, no matter how strange or ineffectual the sound may appear to them. On the other hand, constant stoppages owing to wrong notes in the parts, bars missed by the copyist, pauses or 'commas' marked in some parts, left out in others, and general evidence of carelessness, will goad the band to impatience and lead to a wavering and half-hearted performance.

It must not be thought that too much has been made of the accuracy of the parts. The conductor is an organizer, and his generalship depends upon his having made out every detail beforehand. It will not do for him to exclaim, 'If we are going to bother about wrong notes we shall be here all day.' Much of the music of to-day is of so complex a pattern that even the composer thereof would be hard put to it to say whether a C sharp in the first and third horns was right or wrong when colliding with a C natural in the third trumpet. To argue over such a nicety might appear an unnecessary splitting of hairs.

It is better, however, to be practical and not pedantic. In music of an older period a wrong note always sounded wrong, and could penetrate the mass of sound. But in the latest developments of orchestration there are bound to be moments when the player hesitates, or approaches his part with diffidence, uncertain whether his notes are part of the design or an oversight.

There have been conductors who have confessed frankly that they have not wasted time over discordances, as opposed to discords. There have been composers, too, whose knowledge of their own works has been so remote, so detached, that they have been at a loss to rescue an instrumentalist astray in a tangle of accidentals. Worst of all is the composer who, when conducting his own work, turns over two pages at once, and then stops the orchestra, not because he has heard anything unusual, but because the page, to his eye, does not look like what is being played. Whether a composer should conduct his own work or not is a large question, but when he does, he might at least study what he has written, if only out of courtesy to the band.

* One is sometimes reminded of the drawing in Punch of a string quartet. After a hectic moment, the leader says: 'Now we will run through Czaj in A flat.' 'But,' exclaims the distracted 'cellist, I've just played that.'

Some years ago a mild sensation was created by the cancelling of a work by a composer—a foreigner—who was also a distinguished instrumentalist. It was not an original composition, but the transcription of a work by a dead composer. When the composer appeared at the conductor's desk, it was clear to every one present that he did not know the score. He began to make alterations in the orchestration, adding phrases for horns, making clarinets change places with oboes, and so forth. These disarrangements multiplied to such an extent that by the end of the rehearsal of nearly an hour and a half the score had been entirely recast, and practically every band-part was so rubricated that fresh copies would have had to be made. It was impossible to carry out the corrections in time for the last rehearsal on the following day, and the work accordingly was withdrawn. It was then discovered that the orchestration was by another hand, arranged from a pianoforte score. In an earlier season another composition, also by a foreigner, met a similar fate, because of the innumerable mistakes in the band-parts.

But we need not go abroad for such instances. There have been composers of a stamp of mind so far sublimated beyond all worldly concerns that they have not troubled to indicate such elementary trifles as marks of expression, slurs or bowings, or tempi, leaving these to be discovered by the conductor and orchestra by some occult system of intuition. Discrepancies have been known to exist between a printed vocal score and the MS. full score, discovered at the last moment, at the only rehearsal with the orchestra.

With a work belonging to the répertoire the conductor may presume that all errors and misunderstandings have been eliminated, but in the case of a new work still in manuscript, and more especially if it is by the conductor himself, there are little observances which are worthy of note. Whatever his ability, he can always conciliate the orchestra by a word or two: he can state his intentions and give his personal assurance that the parts are correct. It saves time and patience to tell the orchestra what will be done at certain points and passages. If this is seen to before a note is played, it will give the players an interest in the work which they cannot show when they are stopped constantly. A straight run through to begin with in the case of a new work has a double advantage: it tests the efficiency of the orchestra, and gives the players an opportunity not only for grasping the part which they as individuals will play, but also for testing the efficiency of the conductor. But if, at the first rehearsal, there is a stop at every dozen bars, the conductor will disturb the equanimity of seventy-five people or more, who, in varying degrees, are at any rate artists like himself.

When the work is known to all, and time presses, it may not be possible to do more than indicate special points of departure from the conventional reading. It is safer to decide the question of repeats beforehand, than to hold up two fingers of the left hand during the concert performance.

Such rhythms as  $\frac{5}{4}$  and  $\frac{7}{4}$  have become almost commonplace, but the method of beating them is not yet standardized. There can be no misunderstanding when the composer has kept to their components throughout, viz.,  $\frac{2}{4}$  plus  $\frac{3}{4}$  or the reverse, and  $\frac{3}{4}$  plus  $\frac{4}{4}$  or the reverse. But when no such analysis is possible, and the rhythm is purely  $\frac{5}{4}$  or  $\frac{7}{4}$ , the beat should be demonstrated beforehand, and adhered to.

Points that have been overlooked in a silent reading or a reading at the pianoforte will strike the conductor when he hears the work for the first time, and these he will keep in mind when he comes to 'pull the music to pieces.' But it is not every conductor who enjoys the luxury of sectional rehearsals, in which he can take the fiddles or all the strings alone, and indicate the desired phrasing and breathings of the wood-wind. As things stand at present, rehearsing sections, with the rest of the orchestra present and listening, is to be preferred to rehearsing each section by itself. The others are thus able to study their own parts in relation to the particular section that is playing, and gain a clear idea of the extent and value of their co-operation.

When a beginner faces his school orchestra he has everything in his favour. He is among his fellow-students, who are bound to sympathise with his efforts, as he does with theirs. Besides, they are not at all likely to be so critical as a professional orchestra would be. But with a strange orchestra, and an array of strange faces, it is a different matter. The players may have heard of him as a composer or performer, but he appears before them as an unknown quantity, as a personality that has yet to be disclosed and estimated. For all he knows, they may be as nervous as he is.

So far we have been considering the conducting of an orchestra of the first rank, complete in all essentials. But if the conductor has to deal with a small band of twenty-four or thirty, without English horn, bass-clarinets, or harp, and weak in horns, how is he to proceed? If he is ambitious, naturally he will wish to do modern works of large dimensions, resorting to a great deal of 'cueing-in,' upsetting the wind parts, and giving a performance with maimed rites. There are numbers of works in the modern répertoire which can be played without material alteration of their character. But when a composer asks for a particular tone-colour it should be given him, if it is at hand: if it is not, then it would be better not to attempt a substitute. May we not have a shrewd idea that some works have been deliberately scored for large orchestras so as to be performed only by highly-organized bodies of musicians, or not at all? Are we wrong in presuming that the composer employs a large orchestral force so as to prevent the possibility of a bowerlized version, content to have his work neglected rather than have it offered up to the public with some one else's amendments? Although societies may inveigh against composers choosing to write for gargantuan orchestras, they may be doing just what the composer desired when they pass over his work rather than offend him by mishandling his score.

In small orchestras, and particularly in wind bands whose constitution is not established on conventional lines like those of the modern orchestra, there is of necessity a good deal of ad libitum work. In brass instruments there is not always that sharp differentiation of tone-colour that exists in the wood-wind. Parts can be exchanged, dependent upon the capacity of individual players. A complicated inner part, with no call for prominence, can be simplified, or two of the tenor or bass instruments can change places without imperilling the texture of the music, and demanding nothing but execration from the arranger, who has to write in the treble clef—such are the vagaries of notation for brass instruments—what he hears in the bass.

This part of the conductor's work has to be considered in connection with orchestras of small dimensions and often of heterogeneous elements, and consequently he has to make the most of his materials. Accustomed to large and well-equipped orchestras, he may find himself in a more or less permanent post where he is restricted to an odd collection of instruments. He may have to take in hand a band composed of enthusiastic but determined volunteers, each with his own pet instrument. He may have something like this—three cornets, three tenor horns, a euphonium, a tenor trombone, a baritone, a bass tuba, and one B flat clarinet! This may be enlarged for special occasions to six cornets, four tenor horns, two euphoniums, four trombones, two baritones, two tubas, and still the one clarinet. Obviously the balance of tone of such a band is wrong, and can be redressed only by delicate re-arrangement. A practice or two, with available published parts, generally of music long forgotten, will bring out the weak points. The lonely clarinet must not be defrauded of his cadenza, and it may be diplomatic to unearth an opportunity for him in some long-buried cornet solo, or even to score from memory the quasi-Lost-Chord cornet solo from the 'Trompeter von Säkkingen,' and flatter him that his performance was 'schön gewesen.'*

Not in general, but specially, what is required at rehearsal is profound appreciation of, and artistic sympathy with, the orchestra on its individualistic and co-operative sides. Alertness and a clear beat need not be dwelt upon. They are taken for granted. But a right sense of pitch, the knowledge of a pitfall ahead, and the due warning that it is 'F sharp this time,' when formerly it was F natural, a sure and calm demeanour, generous recognition of effort, even when that well-meant effort is faulty, will win friendship and gain loyal support.

But never must a conductor single out an instrumentalist for reprimand in the presence of the rest of the orchestra, unless there has been an exhibition of conduct distasteful to the others. The wrong note calls for the right repartee, but foreigners are none too well versed in the subtleties of native jargon possessed by our own conductors, and thereby they go astray.

The conductor is one-thing—the orchestra is everything.

(To be concluded.)

ABSOLUTE AND PROGRAMME MUSIC

By L. N. HIGGINS

One of the most curious changes in the meanings of words is that attached to the word 'realism.' I understand that the realist in the Middle Ages was one who believed in the reality of the 'Universal' as such, in opposition to the Nominalist, who held that the only reality lay in the 'Particular,' and that the so-called Universal was merely a name given to Particulars, and possessing no intrinsic reality. Nowadays, however, the word 'realism' has changed not only its meaning, but its connection, being used as an Art term and not as a metaphysical one. The Realist in Art, I suppose, is one who depicts the Particular with unerring accuracy in any form of art—one who 'shows us life as it really is,' in contrast to the idealist in art, whose aim is not necessarily to show us life as it really isn't, but to reveal some deeper reality and beauty underlying it.

Now, it has always seemed to me to be the great glory of music that it is incapable of being used as a medium for sheer realism, for directly the attempt is made it ceases to be music and becomes imitative sound. This may be begging the question, but on no reasonable definition of music can we include the mere imitation of natural sounds, unless those natural sounds are themselves music under our definition. Painting, sculpture, and literature, on the other hand, can in their own media represent particular objects. A portrait, a dialogue, need not be, but can be, mere imitation with no claims to anything else. Music is not by its very nature an imitative art; it is, I believe, the modern analogy to architecture. What the Classic and Middle Ages accomplished in bricks and mortar—their temples, cathedrals, their palaces and castles—the modern world (from the 17th century) has, and is, accomplishing through the medium of sound. For music and architecture possess this in common—that they are the creation of beautiful form, embodying and symbolising some spiritual conception. Poetry and prose can present the spiritual conception, but they do so directly through the mind without embodying it in a form which can be perceived in itself apart from the conception. Painting, on the other hand, is and must be limited to the appearances of the visible world, if it is to be comprehensible, however much it may transform and idealise these appearances.

* It was with an augmented band referred to above, recruited from the ships' companies of two of the First Light Cruiser Squadron, that the writer was invited to give a concert at Helsingfors in the autumn of 1922.

I do not mean in any way to exalt music as a 'higher' art above the others, but I do mean to name music as the most comprehensive of all arts, because it is capable of performing the ideal functions both of architecture, painting, and literature. In other words, there is 'absolute' music and 'programme' music, both of which terms are very misleading. May I suggest as possible alternatives, 'formal' and 'representative' music? Music may be called formal when it is analogous to architecture, and representative when it is performing the ideal functions either of literature or painting.

In giving these substitutes of words, I am in a way defeating my own ends, for my aim is to try and point out that all these distinctions are purely arbitrary and superficial, and do not correspond to two distinct types of music. It is only because music is so comprehensive, and capable of embodying such a diversity of spirit, that these distinctions have forced themselves upon us as boundary lines. On looking at a map of England, we see the counties as quite distinct wholes, but as we travel through them they merge into one another, and the distinctions, as counties, are non-existent.

The most we can say, as regards these two 'types' of music, is that in formal or absolute music we are more conscious of the form than of the underlying meaning or conception, whereas in representative or programme music we are more conscious of the idea represented than of the form. (I am not here using 'form' in the technical sense of 'Sonata' or 'Symphonic' form, but the musical form itself—melodic, harmonic, and rhythmic.) But why is this so? Does it mean that formal music is form alone without spirit, idea, feeling, or meaning, and that representative music is realism? Are we confronted with the dread alternatives of a spiritless body and a disembodied spirit—a meaningless sound-pattern, and a mere imitation of the already obvious?

The function of art, I take it, is to try and present reality, for reality must be beautiful. This is the direct antithesis to the aims of realism, which presents reality only as it appears to the unimaginative, visionless man. Art presents things, ideas, feelings, in their true essence—beauty. Realism can only represent things, ideas, and feelings nude, and out of all true relation to the universe.

Now, I think we are only saved from condemning all representative music as realism, if we cease to regard it as distinct from formal music. They are not different in kind, but only in degree. All we can say is that formal music embodies feelings, ideas, and spirit which are not expressed or perceived by us under any other form than that of music; and that representative music re-presents ideas, feelings, and spirit which are already expressed or perceived by us in forms other than music, be they Art forms or Nature forms. The reason, then, why such works as Elgar's two Symphonies or a Bach Fugue are so difficult to 'interpret' (in the sense of attaching a definite meaning or idea), is because we cannot recognise what they have to say under any other form; whereas the substance of a Strauss tone-poem comes to us as something familiar, but now perceived in its true and ultimate setting of beauty.

Still, it seems to me vitally important, if we are to get a true view of the matter, to remember that all these distinctions are purely arbitrary; we can place them wherever we choose, and make headings ad lib. If we press the distinctions of absolute and programme, or formal and representative, we shall very soon find ourselves in difficulties. Where, for instance, are we to place the Choral Symphony, or the 'Pathetic,' or Scriabin's 'Poem of Ecstasy'? They each present some very definite train of thought and feeling, yet we cannot call them representative in the same sense as we do 'Till Eulenspiegel,' nor formal in the sense of a Bach Fugue or a César Franck Choral.

Surely, the point is that all true music is both formal and representative, absolute and programme, because, although the musical form and the idea expressed are one, yet we can consider them apart. It is, I suppose, the problem of body and soul in another form. All true music must express something, and nothing can be expressed without form. The only really ultimate distinctions are between music and realism on the one hand, and between music and a meaningless progression of notes on the other. And these two apparently opposite extremes of realism and a meaningless string of notes are the same thing in that they are both sound lacking musical form. Again, the apparently opposite extremes within music—the symphonic poem or the song, and the symphony or the fugue—are in reality the same, in that they are spirit embodied in musical form, and any distinctions and headings can be placed wherever any one chooses to place them: the boundary line is hardly worth arguing about, nor the names we call them by, for that matter.

---

The Croydon Symphony Orchestra and Philharmonic Society give their first concert on November 22, at 8, in the Baths Hall, Scarbrook Road, Croydon, when 'The Dream of Gerontius' will be performed, with Miss Margaret Balfour, Mr. John Coates, and Mr. Harold Williams as soloists.

NEW LIGHT ON LATE TUDOR COMPOSERS

BY W. H. GRATTAN FLOOD

IV.—RICHARD FARRANT

Farrant claims notice not only as the composer of some beautiful anthems and incidental music for plays, but also as one who helped considerably to develop the English drama, and who founded the first Blackfriars Theatre, in 1576, for the Queen's Children of the Revels—that is, the Children of Windsor Chapel. He also can claim the credit of having been the first to compose verse-anthems.

Like so many composers of the mid-16th century, the biography of Farrant is very scanty. In fact, all that has hitherto been known of him is to be found in Henry Davey's terse notice: 'In 1564 he became Master of the Children at Windsor, returned to the Chapel Royal in 1569, and died, November 30, 1580.'

Richard Farrant was born about the year 1526, and in 1545 was appointed one of the Gentlemen of the Chapel Royal, under Edward VI. There is a record of his fee being paid in 1552 (Stowe MSS. 571). He was continued in office under Queen Mary from 1553 to 1559, but in the latter year he married, and subsequently became one of the chaplains to Queen Elizabeth. His son, Richard, was born in 1560, and matriculated at Magdalen College on December 9, 1579, aged nineteen.

On April 4, 1564, Farrant resigned his post in the Chapel Royal, owing to his promotion as Master of the Children of St. George's Chapel, Windsor, being also Minor-Canon and organist. Two years later he formed a company of boy players from the choristers, and at Shrovetide, 1566 (February 9-11), presented a play for the delectation of Queen Elizabeth, receiving payment for same of £6 13s. 4d. This play was so successful that Farrant produced another before her Majesty at Shrovetide of the year 1568, for which he was paid the customary £6 13s. 4d. On the death of Thomas Causton he was reappointed to the Chapel Royal (November 5, 1569), and yearly until New Year's Day, 1572, he gave Court performances by his boys. In the latter year the play was 'Ajax and Ulysses,' for which Farrant wrote the incidental music as well as the libretto. 'Quintus Fabius' was produced on January 6, 1574, and another play in 1575. At length, in December, 1576, Farrant opened Blackfriars Theatre—the first private theatre of London—with the combined company of the Windsor Children and the Chapel Royal Children. On Twelfth Night (January 6), 1579, he presented 'The History of Mutius Scevola' before the Queen, receiving a special reward of £10, in addition to the usual amount of £6 13s. 4d.

Not all the names of the plays performed under Farrant's direction have come down to us, but in addition to 'Xerxes' (January, 1575) and 'Mutius Scevola' (1577), we know that 'The History of Loyaltie and Bewtie' (March 2, 1579), and 'A History of Alucius' (December 27, 1579), were played before the Court. Prof. Wallace is of opinion that the 'History of Alucius' was the play which Farrant presented with his boys at Lincoln's Inn in February, 1580. It is the last recorded performance by Farrant, who made his will on November 30, 1580, and died the same day at Windsor, leaving his house in East Greenwich to his wife, Ann Farrant. He had a goodly salary at Windsor, namely, £81 6s. 8d., for the board and education of the children, and resided in the Castle in a house called 'Old Commons.'

Most musicians are familiar with Farrant's two anthems, 'Call to remembrance' and 'Hide not Thou Thy face,' while the authorship of 'Lord, for Thy tender mercy's sake,' though claimed for John Hilton, has been traditionally ascribed to Farrant.

The well-known Shakespearean song quoted by Sir Toby in 'Twelfth Night,' 'There dwelt a man in Babylon, lady, lady,' was introduced by Farrant into his play of 'Orestes,' performed at Court in February, 1568. Another stage-song by Farrant is 'O Jove, from stately throne,' taken from his play 'Xerxes,' presented at the Court in January, 1574; while a third, 'Alas! ye salt sea gods,' is from his play of 'Panthea and Abradatas,' the score of which, in five parts, for treble voice and instruments, is in Christ Church Library, Oxford. Mr. Arkwright says that in the British Museum copy of this last song it is assigned to Robert Parsons, but he has no hesitation in accepting its ascription to Farrant, 'as the Christ Church copy is the earlier and better of the two.'

As regards instrumental music, Farrant composed several pieces for the organ, two of which ('Felix namque' and 'Voluntarie') are in the Mulliner MS. (Add. 30,513).

AD LIBITUM

BY 'FESTE'

The Editor asks me to deal with a long letter he has received from Mr. Massi-Hardman. First, I am glad to find my opponent writing in an amicable strain; I can assure him that I have no wish for the discussion to be on any other than a good-tempered basis.

Among the few new points in the letter are (1) a slip of a musical critic who spoke of an oboist's playing when the instrument happened to be silent, and (2) the case of a dramatic critic who wrote a damning notice of a play he had not seen. But these instances do not affect our argument. The first was a slip that is less inexcusable than Mr. Massi-Hardman thinks; the unscrupulous dramatic critic ought to have been sacked, and no doubt would have been had his editor known of the occurrence. But such cases are isolated, and do not affect the value of criticism or the reputation of critics as a body. The main point in Mr. Massi-Hardman's letter, however, is a kind of challenge. He says:

In order that I, and others like me, may learn, I ask 'Feste' to criticise in detail some songs which I send him, stating his reasons for his criticisms, so that I may follow them in detail. 'Feste' said, in effect, in his September comments, that I had nothing to criticise, and therefore no use for criticism, so the pieces I send him are some of my 'nothings'—(of which 'nothings,' however, as well as of others, one of the world's foremost publishing firms thought fit to acquire the copyright, and in some of which 'nothings' the McGill University, Canada, took marked interest for curriculum purposes)—my object in sending these particular pieces being that, as I am inviting criticism, I offer the target.

He goes on to point out that, lest it should be thought that his aim in asking for such criticism is to advertise his pieces, I am at liberty to suppress titles and publishers' names. I have no wish to do that.

I am always glad of an opportunity for bringing good music to the notice of readers; if I have to discuss music that is bad I always do so in the hope that no words of mine will increase its sale. Mr. Massi-Hardman ends by asking me to 'hit straight from the shoulder,' as he looks at the matter from an impersonal standpoint.

This is a sporting offer, and although I had made other plans for this month's article, I feel that a refusal on my part would be liable to misconstruction. On Mr. Massi-Hardman's head be it, then. I have gone through his compositions carefully, and will set down my honest opinion.

(1) Song, 'The Vow.' Words from the Russian.

The three bars of prelude are ambiguous in key, suggesting both G major and E minor:

Ex. 1. Leggieramente Andantino.

The

This is an allowable procedure, but there should be some point in its adoption. As the material of the prelude is not used in the song itself, and as the words do not show it to be significant, the song starts badly because its introduction has nothing to do with the business in hand. The composer will not deny that every bar in a work should be a vital part of the scheme.

As a matter of detail, I suggest that the first two D sharps would be better noted as E flats; an accidental would be saved, and the key better defined. I do not like the simultaneous use of D sharp and D natural in the third bar. I do not say that these notes should never be used together; but there are ways of using them, and a cadence in E minor is not a very good choice. Even accidentally, however, they might be justified by the context, or by some special needs of the words being set. But the rest of this song is quite conventional in every way, and the text calls for nothing unusual.

Coming to the song itself, the rhythmic scheme strikes me as very monotonous. The song is short, it is true, but that does not save the situation. On the contrary, it makes it worse, for a rhythm that becomes dull in a mere couple of pages, must be poor indeed. Every phrase but the last is practically the same pattern:

The melody is just fair; with a better harmonization and accompaniment it might be made to sound far less ordinary than it does as treated here. The harmony is quite lacking in freshness, and the composer's key-scheme and tonality are weak. I do not object to the song starting in G major and ending in E minor. No doubt the composer had an idea that as the words were from the Russian there should be a touch of the barbaric in the music, and therefore ordinary cadences would be out of place. (There is not much in this, as the words, despite their origin, are very ordinary jog-trot English, with no Russian references or feeling.) But if the ordinary cadence would be out of place, even more so would be the idiom of the British ballad at its most saponaceous. Here is the close:

Ex. 2.

tab - let and pro - mise a-way.

The harmony of the word 'promise' makes a bad join on to the next bar, besides being out of the general scheme. Does Mr. Massi-Hardman like his accentuation of 'away'? He has not really avoided the stress on the weak syllable by putting an accent over the second, because the first coincides with the emphatic E in the bass. He would have done better to treat the word in either of the two following ways:

Ex. 3. (a) (b)

Prom - ise a - way. Prom - ise a - way.

The accompaniment consists of very obvious arpeggio figures, on these lines throughout until the closing bars:

Ex. 4.

The writing generally shows a lack of skill and finish, but this is a matter of detail that would take far too much space to set forth and illustrate. I trust, however, that the examples quoted will prove my assertion that this is not a good song.

(2) Song, 'To the Nightingale.' Words from the Russian.

I do not hesitate to say right away that this song is bad. Being a good deal longer than its companion, the composer's weakness in dealing with his material is more apparent. Again there is a lame start with a feeble introduction that has no connection with the rest of the work :

Ex. 5.

The poverty of this qua music needs no discussion. It could justify itself only by proving to be the germ of something significant later; which it doesn't.

One of the chief weaknesses is the composer's inability to keep things going. Thus when the voice pulls up, the bottom drops out of the music; the pianoforte merely marks time with such trite paddings as :

Ex. 6 (a)

(b)

(c)

There is also a lack of homogeneity about the pianoforte part. The words call for very little change of manner, but the second half of the song gives us at least half-a-dozen different styles of accompaniment in about twenty bars. As in the other song, the rhythm of the voice part is poor. When it moves, the motion is usually a jog-trot, and often it simply hangs fire. Of the numerous crudities in the harmonization and in the keyboard writing I have not room to speak, because it is impossible to discuss them intelligibly without a prohibitive amount of music-type. The verbal accentuation is again a weak point—e.g., the word 'echoing' in the last phrase :

Ex. 7. rallent. mo'to.

rallent. sempre.

Incidentally, this quotation shows some of the combined poverty and pretentiousness of the pianoforte writing, though I could have cited far worse cases did space permit. Is the G flat in the penultimate bar a misprint for G natural? It may be, but throughout the composer indulges in naive attempts at modernity (see, for example, the closing bar in this last example), and it is probable that the G flat is one of them. Anyway, its ugliness is incontestable.

On the whole, then, with regret, I can find nothing good to say of Mr. Massi-Hardman's songs. The fact that they were accepted by a famous publishing house, and that the McGill University has adopted some of the composer's works for teaching purposes, doesn't weigh with me. If it did, I should be even as one of the critics whom Mr. Massi-Hardman last month accused of being influenced by such extra-musical considerations as the mere names of the composers. I have judged the music as impartially as if the composer were my dearest friend—more so, in fact—and I am sorry to have to say that if it had been brought to me by a pupil, I should have been moved to decorate it with lavish blue pencillings and suggestions. The composer bade me 'hit right out from the shoulder'; I dislike that way of putting it, because it implies an attack, whereas I have merely given a quite impersonal opinion on his music. In his letter Mr. Massi-Hardman suggests that after I have commented on his songs he will 'comment on my comments.' I think not; no useful purpose will be served by discussion. All the comments in the world will not make the examples I have quoted other than bad. Better drop the subject. I have plenty of other matters waiting attention, and if Mr. Massi-Hardman has any spare time he will be well advised to spend it with a good teacher of composition.

It is often said that the cause of good music suffers from a lack of energy and appeal on the advertisement side. (I hope the reader will give me due credit for refraining from the use of the terms 'vim' and 'pep.') Certainly, the publishers of good music (or music which is at least not bad) appear to advertise in too piano a strain. The note of all advertising to-day is high in pitch and brazen in quality, but so far the only music that has the benefit of modern methods is the baser kind of song and dance. A reader signing himself 'Disgusted Musician' sends me a leaflet issued by a well-known dance-music publisher; he asks me to share his indignation, and to express it ad lib. Although I like to accommodate readers, I can't work up any temper about the leaflet. It has amused me, and I laid it aside wishing that somehow those responsible for the sale of good music could devise a publicity method that would be as telling, though minus its ungrammatical and slangy style. One of the secrets of good advertising is the button-holing of the prospective customer. Somehow every reader of the announcement ought to be made to feel that the wares concerned are just what he has so far been lacking. It is, of course, far easier to effect this when dealing with such articles as (say) soap, because soap is a necessity (or at all events a desirable extra) in most people's daily routine. Music and books are on a different footing, but much can be done in the way of personally interesting the reader, as can be seen in some book publishers' announcements, and above all in the little heart-to-heart talk which Mr. Grant Richards holds weekly with the readers of The Times Literary Supplement. If I were a music publisher I should take the public into my confidence in the same way, discussing forthcoming novelties, reporting progress on recently issued works, quoting reviews, being quite frank about my hopes and disappointments, and, above all, taking good care that the reader was never in any doubt as to the prices of as many works as I could drag in. As a result, many hundreds of folk would read what I had to say, whereas a plain list or announcement is often passed by. To those who objected that my methods were lacking in dignity, I should reply that I was a music publisher, not a professor of deportment. My one object in life would be to sell music, and the greater the sale the better for (1) the composers whose wares had been entrusted to me, (2) myself and my fellow shareholders, and (3) the cause of music generally—for I ask you to assume that I should not publish tosh.

The leaflet sent to me by 'Disgusted Musician' is of a type that would not be likely to come in the way of the readers of this journal, so I propose to pass it on to them. Some will be amused, others irritated, but as both feelings are possible only when active interest is aroused, I can at least be sure that the leaflet will not bore them. I have no wish to advertise either the publisher concerned, or his dance music, so names and titles will be altered.

The circular at once strikes the intimate, personal note by being addressed to the reader—not, observe, a number of them, but just the one. 'Ladies and gentlemen' is public-speechy and promiscuous; 'Dear brothers and sisters' suggests that somebody wants to improve you; 'Comrades' is now earmarked by the red tie and soap-box brigade. But this publisher regards you as a person, not as one of a crowd, and hails you as 'Dear Friend.' The familiar note thus struck is kept up:—

DEAR FRIEND,—September! The start of the Season. And let's hope it's going to be a record Season for all of us. We shan't worry while we can send you numbers like the enclosed. We are sending these specially early because there's just one colossal furore we want you to play at once:

'YOU'RE IN ALABAMA SURE AS YOU'RE BORN'

(Fox-trot). Half of our Subscribers have asked us for it, and the other half knew we'd send it as soon as we could. It is the greatest thing America has given us, bar nothing. Flora Blaze is 'cleaning-up' wonderful with it. Jack Stilton and his marvellous Band makes 'em yell for it. And it's the famous Savoy Orpheans' Broadcast Broadside Wildfire Radio Tune! And then you ain't heard half! Start in now, and let it go.

'CLEMENTINE'

is coupled with the above. Here's London Society's pet tune. A rhythm you've never heard before, and harmonies that would have made Debussy and some of those Classic guys give up writing and start a Jazz band!

'MURPHY'S PIGSTYE.'

Everybody's been asking for a new comedy singing fox-trot. Here it is! Not since 'Pyjamas' have we had anything to equal it—already the rage of Blackpool, Douglas, Scarborough, &c. Get your Singer to chant the chorus whilst the other boys shout the—'Who? When? How? Why? Where?' Backed on this is:

'SO THIS IS TOOTING.'

The number that Paul Whiteman recorded on H.M.V. Records—this is another sure-fire singing number.

The biggest numbers from previous parcels are:

'Venetian Rose' (The Valse Rage of the Season); 'Dream Mammy' (The Radio craze song); 'Hullo! Lulu!' (The biggest fox-trot ever).

Be popular, and play them.

Yours for success,

P.S.—Send for new American numbers, all red-hot. 2s. each, F.O. only.

(Most of us would have put that final tip the other way round—'Play them and be popular.' But that is a detail.)

Some publishers of the better type of music are now adopting a personal type of advertisement, as can be seen in most of the musical journals. Here is a quotation from one such announcement:

My song advertisement of last month has been instructive to me. In it I endeavoured to express my personal opinion regarding the present and prospective positions of the ballad—the scrapegrace that has of late upset a good many calculations of publishers and the trade. I find that my opinion has been warmly welcomed by music-dealers, and has happily resulted in quite a flutter of business. My optimism as to the future appears to be widely shared by my customers. The days are past when I was in active and personal touch with them, but I like in my advertisements to be frank and outspoken on matters that mutually interest us. One cannot have business without enthusiasm and preparation; and as a Publisher, I like to air my views, and to be useful to myself and others.

And he proceeds to air them.

Unfortunately, the music concerned is of the feeble ballad type. I want to see a musical advertisement that shall be the equivalent to Mr. Grant Richards's weekly letter; such an analogy will be possible only when the musical standard of the works concerned is as good as the literary quality of his books. But the fact that such methods are being adopted by music publishers other than jazz merchants leads one to hope that sooner or later publishers of symphonies, chamber works, and other music of first-rate importance, will come down off their perch and announce their wares in such a way that the advertisement pages of a musical journal will be as interesting as its literary side. There need be no sacrifice of principle, and no concessions to bad taste. Slang, Americanisms, and doubtful grammar can be left to the publishers of jazz. All that need be adopted is their knack of somehow making the reader take in what they have to say from start to finish.

'Subscriber' writes from Ipswich, Queensland, on the question of programme charges, discussed in this column a few months ago. He encloses a programme which is so bad a sixpennyworth that we in London may consider ourselves to be well treated in comparison. The programme was of a concert given by the Cherniavsky Brothers. It consists of four large pages, a little less in acreage than those formidable sheets with which we wrestle at the 'Proms.' Page 1 is headed by a large advertisement of 'HEENZO, the Famous Money-Saving Treatment for COLDS and INFLUENZA,' consisting chiefly of a lengthy letter from the Cherniavsky Brothers to the Proprietor, testifying to the efficacy of Heenzo. ('We have toured the world, and were in several countries while their principal cities were being scourged by influenza, as protection against which we relied upon the regular use of Heenzo,' &c.) The rest of this first page is made up with the names of the Brothers in large type, with additional information as to the pronunciation of the name, and an intimation that 'Latest Photographs (1s.) can be obtained from the Ushers.'

Clearly the Trio, though rolling stones, mean to gather their share of any moss that happens to be lying round loose.

Two-thirds of the inside of the sheet are taken up by advertisements, the place of honour being occupied by four portraits of 'Beautiful Operatic and Concert Celebrities' as 'Dainty Advocates of Mercolized Wax for the Skin,' also 'Orange Blossom Hair Shampoo, Rose-Tinted Cheek Bloom, Efficient Hair Waving Fluid, Grey Hair Restorer,' &c. The greater part of the remaining third of the middle of the sheet is filled by an article on 'The Cherniavskys as a Trio,' from which we learn (with some surprise after reading that very commercial front page) that the three 'revere their life-work as a beautiful and hallowed thing.' So far, as you will see, there is nothing about the concert for which 'Subscriber' had bought a seat. But the matter had not been overlooked; in the remaining corner of this square yard of paper is 'To-night's Programme.' Even then, however, the information is scanty. Thus, the audience was told that brother Jan would play a Nocturne and a Mazurka of Chopin, but which of the many Nocturnes and Mazurkas was known only to Jan himself. There are some misprints—fusco appears as fusco, and Boccherini as Boccharini. The family instinct for turning an honest penny in the way of advertisement is shown by the insertion of 'Played for the Columbia Records' at the foot of this beggarly list. There remains the fourth page of the broadsheet, and we turn to it, thinking that perhaps it may give something in the way of musical return for that sixpence. But no; under the heading 'Cherniavsky's World Travel' we have flamboyant and barely grammatical descriptions of 'The Paradise of the Pacific,' 'The Land of the Garden of Eden,' 'The Cherniavskys' Impressions of Rio de Janeiro,' 'A joyous time in Cairo,' &c. My correspondent tells me that the perpetrators of this disgraceful imposition were advertised as 'The Three Big Men of the Musical World,' and that among the works played was 'The Waters of Minnetonka,' than which there is surely no feeblér thing extant. He adds that this sixpennyworth, coming on the top of a charge of 5s. 5d. for a seat (7s. 6d. at Brisbane, plus tax), was the last straw, and really something to write home about.

An American musical journal tells us about yet one more type of dancing that is being developed in Atlanta, Ga. The founder of the school is Blanche Potter-Spiker, who claims that it is possible to teach 'the entire body the translation of musical notation,' and so join up the arts of music and dancing with a completeness never before achieved. The exponents are called not dancers, nor musicians, but 'Players':

Upon entering the home of the Spiker Players, one is impressed by the atmosphere of supreme relaxation and by orderly and artistic movement of body and speech. It is truly a laboratory where mind and body are tuned for collaboration. One might venture to give this school of music, this art and science of motion, a new name—psycho-eurhythmics.

(When I began to read the article I knew we should not get far before meeting that blessed word 'psycho'; and I shouldn't be surprised if 'complexes' were also lying around.) The training is on the drastic side, as you will see. First your body has to be 'rebuilt' and 'tuned,' likewise 'treated according to a generalised system.' I suppose most of us who are well past our first youth have occasional reminders that our body could do with a bit of rebuilding. The proportions have somehow gone astray, the graceful curves of yesteryear have become generous protuberances; there is a disinclination to stoop, and stairs are an infliction. But I fear the Potter-Spiker 'rebuilding' is not for the likes of us. We must be content with touching our toes twenty times per day, and backing up that undignified operation by sternly practising self-control at the table. But even in the case of those whose bodies are sufficiently tractable, the Potter-Spiker regime is no catch. After the 'treatment according to a generalised system' has been suffered:

... the speciality, the dramatic expression or interpretative motion is taken up. 'First,' says Mrs. Potter-Spiker, 'there is a breaking up of the body [wow!], finding the complexes [What did I tell you?]; then begins the work, bit by bit, of tuning the instrument. It must be fully realised that most bodies are untuned. This tuning is done by testing the colour-pitch of the hands, feet, and shoulders; in fact, every part of the body has the power of expression.'

This last fact no doubt accounts for the scanty amount of clothing worn by the Players shown in the illustration accompanying the article.

I am not quite clear as to what the 'colour-pitch' of one's hands, &c., may be. At first sight it seems to be a condition calling for soap and water, but we know that it is really something subtle left for Atlanta, Ga., to discover.

The pitch of the various parts of the body having been ascertained, 'next follows the study of technic':

The school teaches a literal translation of musical notation. The body is taught the expression of note- and rest-values, scales, arpeggios, octaves, trills, dramatic and coloratura qualities.

Most of us can manage to deal with any amount of rest-values, but we are sceptical about the 'literal' translation of anything else in notation. However:

The body is now ready to translate or perform a composition. This is done, not by a series of tableaux or pantomimes, but each note is 'played' by hand, head, shoulders, feet, arms, legs, or body. It is a literal translation. Not a phrase is slurred; it must be clear-cut technic. Every composition is analysed before the dance is built. The nationality of the composer is studied in order to give an authoritative interpretation. Rhythm is taught just as it is in instrumental work, not as a physical gymnastic. The musical sound is translated into bodily movement and not a mechanical exercise taken to musical sound.

All this talk about 'literal translation' is nonsense—unless the word 'literal' has lost its meaning. Neither words nor musical notation can be 'literally' expressed by bodily motions. The nearest you can get (which is not very near, after all) is to tell the spectator what emotion, idea, or story you are going to express, and then adopt such postures and go through such movements as are most suitable. That seems to be what the Players in the picture are doing with Debussy's 'Reflets dans l'Eau.' Indeed, the text tells us that they are 'translating' the work 'into living pictures,' and, lest the spectator be slow in the uptake, the 'translation' takes place on the margin of a pond, so that we see the reflets in the eau. (But even so, unless the spectator knows the title of the piece he might as easily believe it to be Ethelbert Nevin's 'Narcissus,' for the Players are gazing into the pond with every sign of approval at what they see there. In fairness, I add that the approval is justified, for a more attractive bevy . . . however, that is neither here nor there.)

But Mrs. Potter-Spiker will not have us believe that she is merely doing what Pavlova and others have done. She claims that the art is a kind of silent music. Her scholars begin with small, simple pieces, studying form and composition, and 'just as a pianist or violinist is taught to read at sight, the Spiker Players are taught to feel and express at hearing.' Moreover, when the business in hand is orchestration, the Spiker Players take up positions on the stage corresponding to those of the players in an orchestra. 'Each section is given its score, and dances by literal translation':

For example [says Mrs. Potter-Spiker], in Schubert's 'Unfinished' Symphony, the string section uses the full body; the flute, the head and arms; piccolo, the arms and feet; French horn and other brasses, the full body; cymbals, the arms and hands; timpani, the feet.

I imagine that a real orchestra plays the music itself while all this is going on. This is not made clear in the article, so perhaps the various Potter-Spikerites have the band parts before them, and, in a rich, impressive silence, go through such bodily motions as seem to be called for by the music. If this is the case, it would be interesting to see what would happen if the audience (or, rather, the spectators) were kept in ignorance of the title of the work that was being 'literally translated.' A liberal prize might safely be offered for a successful guess.

On the whole there does not seem to be much of a future for this kind of music-making outside Atlanta, Ga. But one never knows, does one? You and I may yet be joining amateur Potter-Spiker orchestras and engaging in these dumb antics. But some of us will want to choose our instrument. We shall make a bee-line for those that seem likely to call for the minimum of preliminary 'breaking-up of the body.' A hasty glance at the colour-pitch of my hands and shoulders convinces me that I should make a poor show in the brass department, where 'the full body' is to be used. You must let me take the cymbals, or I shan't play.

'THE SEAL WOMAN.'

A Celtic opera by Marjorie Kennedy Fraser and Granville Bantock.

The Cattleach (an old crone) ...	M. Kennedy Fraser
The Isleman ...	Geoffrey Dams
First Fisher ...	Bertram Newstead
Second Fisher ...	Leslie Bennett
The Seal Woman ...	Denne Parker
The Seal Sister ...	Alice Moxon
The Water Kelpie ...	William Bennett
First Swan Maiden ...	L. Pearson
Second Swan Maiden ...	D. McKenna
Third Swan Maiden ...	E. Napier
The Oyster-Catcher ...	M. Martin Harvey
Moreg (child of the Seal Woman)	Madeleine Webb

Conductor—Adrian C. Boulton.

A Celtic opera? Celtic, yes; but unfortunately not opera. This is the point which of all others needs to be stressed and made clear if English opera is to hold its own, as it certainly should, against the modern operas of France, Italy, and Germany. Let me say at once that English opera to-day shows a marked advance on 'The Children of Don' and 'The Legend of Arthur.' It is no longer imitative. 'The Perfect Fool,' 'Hugh the Drover,' 'The Boatswain's Mate,' and 'The Immortal Hour,' whatever their merits or demerits, owe nothing to Wagner, Puccini, or Debussy. Text and music are original—and this is the first step towards national opera. The next step is to discover how to combine originality of invention with the requirements of the theatre. 'The Seal Woman' is a wholly original work; it also ignores completely the needs of the theatre, and that is why, in spite of the delightful music of Bantock and of a good central dramatic interest, it fails to convince.

When all allowance is made for different views we may hold as to the function of a theatre and the construction of a play, certain bed-rock facts remain which are common to all good theatrical art—drama or opera. I have no desire to bring in Schlegel's theories or Victor Hugo's preface to 'Cromwell.' Yet these writers' conception of the theatre has a bearing on opera which a good librettist ignores to his cost. A drama must be dramatic in the telling and not only in its climaxes. There must be a connection between its episodes. The folk who appear on the stage must influence in some degree or other the chief characters. We may have a play of action, real and physical; or we may have a play of psychological developments. What is inadmissible is the play of inaction. Something must happen on the stage if the theatre is to justify its conventions. If the actors' only task is to tell a story, or a chain of stories, they can do it far more effectively on the concert platform. Mrs. Kennedy Fraser had a good story to tell in the 'Seal Woman'; but instead of making it live she just gives us the bare bones of it, filling in her scenes with stories, legends, and ballads whose connection with the central episode is exceedingly remote. Indeed, to know the characters of the story we should require a 'Who's Who.' They all spring from Celtic legend, but not all have much to do with the plot of the opera. To begin with, the Seal Woman herself requires some explanation; she must be humanized if she is to be the heroine of something more than a fishy tale. The Seal Women, we are told in the programme, are the daughters of a king by his first wife. They were so lovely, so brave, and so virtuous, that their step-mother became jealous of their power, and by an intrigue with a magician succeeded in turning them into seals. This may be called legend No. 1. Their life as seals is the subject of another legend—No. 2. The sea-ladies wear a garb (presumably a seal-skin, although the garment that was tossed about on the stage at Birmingham looked like anything but a seal-skin), and once this magic coat is taken from them they become mortals again. Plain, unimaginative people may ask why they should stick to their sea and their seal-skins instead of going back to the king's palace to confront their stepmother. But let that pass. Legend No. 3 concerns a Water Kelpie whose story, I was told by a kindly mentor, is really the most touching of all. As, however, there was no word about it in the programme, and as it has nothing to do with the Seal Woman, it is best ignored for the present. Legend No. 4 gives us the real plot, which is of a fisherman who, left alone on a lonely island (which is not Pile des Pingouins), saw and fell in love with the sea lady and persuaded her to marry him by holding back her seal-skin. Family life with the sea lady goes smoothly, and a child is born in wedlock. Legend No. 5 tells of the love of the sea that seal women have in their blood, and how once in seven years it flames up into passionate longing. As ill-luck would have it, just at the critical moment in the seven years the child discovers the seal-skin under the peat-stack, and hands its over innocently to her mother, who promptly dons it and, presumably, flops into the sea, as perfect seals are wont to do. Anyhow, she disappears; the sailorman's home is wrecked, and he is left to bemoan his fate. Moral: if you will marry sea-ladies you must find a better place than a peat-stack to hide their furs in, even if peat (according to the advertisements) does keep away moths and other vermin.

Now, there is clearly good opera stuff in these legends; as raw material they are admirable. The bare legend is only a peg on which the dramatist must hang his ideas; it is something that gives scope to his imagination in creating characters, to his skill in contrasting them, in bringing out in the clash of human wills and passions those artistic forms and expressions which are the breath of life of dramatic or epic poetry. The dramatist will deal with it at length, and the writer for opera briefly, so as to allow for the enlarging and expanding influence of music. But the issue must be clear. He must ask our sympathy for his characters, and they must deserve it. Who could feel deeply either for the Seal Woman, apparently quite contented both as a seal and as a woman, or for the fisherman who, knowing the trick, could divorce a wife and get another one every seven years? The story could have been handled in many ways. There might

'The Flying Dutchman.' There might have been the desperate love of a mortal for an immortal being, as in 'The Immortal Hour.' Or there might have been some grim humour if the story had been treated in Mr. Wells's way; and when the Water Kelpie appeared suddenly from nowhere with a babe in his arms we did think for a moment that there was going to be a dash of naughtiness in this sea legend. Mrs. Kennedy Fraser kept to the letter rather than to the spirit of her legendary material—for legends are valuable only in so far as they affect us and appeal to our senses—and the result is an entertainment which, in spite of many excellent things, just misses fire.

It is an infinite pity that this should be so. The music of Bantock is both masterly and charming. Given a good story that will stir him profoundly, he can certainly write first-class opera. The production reflected considerable credit on the authorities and on the performers of the Birmingham Repertory Theatre. But it is no use pretending that opera with such a libretto is opera. The history of music is strewn with the wreckage of operas which failed owing to inadequate libretti. Even the art of Beethoven and Weber could not instil real life into the stories of Fidelio and Freischütz. Let us learn from the mistakes of others, and give to the theatre that which is its due. Above all, let us get rid of the idea that anything is good enough for opera, that music alone matters, that plot and construction are of no importance. 'Tosca' is a bad play, and a bad opera, yet the cleverness of the construction has drawn endless people to hear it. It should be added that the production, which owed much to Mrs. Kennedy Fraser, was admirable, and that she herself acted with great distinction the part of the old crone who dreams it all. Bantock, moreover, has employed only a small orchestra with the greatest felicity and skill. F. B.

SIR HUGH ALLEN ON CHORAL SINGING

Sir Hugh Allen attended the opening meeting of the fifth season of the Islington Choral Society, of which he is Patron. He gave a breezy little address, saying in a simple, homely way so many of the things about choral singing that are either not said at all, or are said hazily or pompously, that we are glad to be able to reproduce his remarks:

I see that the object of your Society is to attain proficiency in the performance of sacred and secular music for the recreation of its members, and also, it is hoped, that of the general public. I should like to suggest that one of the aims of the Society might be to make the public musical, and the performers enthusiasts who are to become so. In regard to singing itself, why do you sing? It is a curious thing that you all give up a lot of time in all weathers through the darkest days of the year, to come to be talked to very strictly, and probably abused, by your conductor. There must be something behind it all. You may say that it is a discipline which enables you to live a more virtuous life. There is a great deal of discipline in it—none better. Choral singing has all the advantages of games, all the co-operation and all the 'playing for the side' that you get in games, without the roughnesses—except on the part of the conductor! I suppose one may say that it is a game that is played by more people than all other games. What does choral singing teach us? I suppose the first is the idea of co-operation to which I have just referred. The singer, as a rule, is not a modest person. The more exalted the singer, the more immodest (laughter)—you know what I mean. . . . The restraining influence of part-singing, in which the most important qualities are blend and balance, is the same thing as team work in games. Choral singers have at once to submit themselves to sinking their individualities into a co-operate plan. The process of becoming subdued is a fairly strenuous one, as you know. You probably have often been checked by your conductor for exuberance, and more often, perhaps, for lack of energy; both of which are qualities exhibited in games. I believe that there is hardly any situation so upsetting to the tenor as when he sees a high note and is not allowed to sing it as though it were his last. Another indisputable fact about choral singing is that all members are equal; there is no more democratic thing than a choral society. It does not matter who you are, so long as the voice is there. Singing teaches the power to develop courage. It is a form of cowardice to listen to the person 'next door.' A person who has once been made to sing by himself is seldom guilty of this particular form of cowardice. Another thing that singing gives is the power of endurance. Singing is exhausting, but when the breathing is properly done, it is extremely healthy. One remarkable fact about choral singing which does not always appear is the good fellowship engendered by it. The goodwill brought about by choral singing has a most extraordinary effect not only on the singing itself, but on the lives of the singers also. Many centuries ago St. Augustine, in his 'Confessions,' spoke of the effect the beautiful music in a church had on him. He felt so carried away, so enraptured by it, that he thought it must be sent to him as a temptation of the Devil. Nowadays, perhaps, we are wiser. Do you find that one of the most stimulating things in the world is a long, rolling crescendo, or a long diminuendo? I do not know of anything from the conductor's point of view that carries one off one's feet quite like that. You cannot do anything in music without thinking: you sing just as much with your brain as with your voice. What do you find when you start singing something you do not know? You take a sort of dislike to it; but as you get to know it better, your liking for it grows until, finally, you come to love it. Some of you may understand what the music is about, and all of you understand the words. Has it ever dawned on you why you can read words so easily, and write letters so easily, and even remember complete and lengthy sentences? Can you do the same with your music? Can you take a book of music home to-night, read it, and find yourself whistling the tune in the street to-morrow? You can read words because you actually know the sounds. It should be the same with music. You will not mind if I emphasise this, for it is so tremendously important. When you are learning something fresh, your conductor has to translate it, and play it upon the pianoforte, and perhaps even sing it to you. What you should do is to sing it first, and then see if the pianoforte is right. If you go to the Parrot House at the Zoo and whistle the same tune long enough, you will in time hear the tune whistled by a parrot. But that is not learning music. You can learn to read music in exactly the same way as you learn to read or write. You all know the words of 'Auld Lang Syne': do you know the notes? Instead of singing 'Pom, pom, pom, pom,' sing the notes as they are on the pianoforte. If you practise that with all the tunes you know, there is hardly a tune in the world that you could not read at sight. Of course, membership of a choral society involves responsibilities of other kinds, too. Punctuality is part of the discipline of music. Be there at the right time, and in the right place. It is remarkable to me to see the keenness, the real enthusiasm, with which people properly handled will respond to the wishes of their conductor. It does not matter what the music, or what the size of the choir, provided always the spirit is there.

Mrs. Robert Benson's 'The Maid of Orleans' will be performed at the Guildhall School of Music on November 6, 7, and 8, by the Royal Exchange Assurance Players, with incidental music by Harold Rawlinson, scored for double string quintet, solo wood-wind, horn, trumpet, and percussion, and a hidden chorus.

New Music

NEW MUSIC FOR STRINGS

The first place in the month's catalogue of novelties goes by right to the new edition of Bach's Concerto in G minor (Augener). Students of Bach will remember how Spitta, in writing of the Violin Concertos, laments that in spite of the scarcity of solo violin music of sterling worth, the Bach Concertos are not as popular as they should be. The times have changed considerably in this respect, and there is no serious violinist nowadays who has not played some time or other either the E major or the A minor Concerto. Both are as popular as they can be, and indeed more popular than the true lover of Bach quite likes, for, thanks to the fashion, they are often played by young people who lack the necessary qualifications. But it is worth remembering that these Concertos undoubtedly owe their present popularity to the inspiring influence of great performers. The A minor Concerto was practically revealed by Brodsky's interpretation at Leipsic, and the E major Concerto was to most terra incognita until Ysaye discovered it anew. The G minor, however, has not profited by the boom as have the other two, and the reason is not far to seek. The Adagio, beautiful as it is, does not quite rise to the level of the corresponding movements of the E major and A minor. In these we get Bach at his best; in the G minor it is still Bach that speaks to us in his serene, olympic fashion; but this lovely discourse appeals by virtue of its beauty, not because of its profound intimacy. And if it is right that the first place should go to the three Concertos already familiar (E major, A minor, and D minor for two violins), even a 'second best' Bach should kindle ambition in young, talented violinists, and it is to be hoped that it will not be long before a worthy exponent makes the G minor Concerto his own, as Ysaye made the E major and Brodsky the A minor.

In 'Prince Charlie: A Scottish Rhapsody,' for violin and pianoforte, John B. McEwen (Joseph Williams) appeals to something that is as old as music—and possibly older. When men lived in caves, I presume, they boasted about them and loved them even before they sang about them. The trouble is that patriotism and good art seldom go together. Even Wagner's ponderous 'Kaisermarsch' was forgotten outside Germany long before the war made Kaiserism repugnant. One may find good patriotic tunes without great difficulty in most countries. But their locus is the public square, not the concert-room. 'Charlie is my darling' is, in its way, a capital tune, but the most deft accompaniment cannot easily add something vital to it, or detract from its essentially open-air quality. At best it suggests the tramping of legions of Highlandmen, and however much we may admire the lion-hearted supporters of the Stuart, we should not like to hear them tramping in Wigmore Hall, and still less in our drawing-rooms. This Scottish Rhapsody is almost too good for an open-air piece, yet not quite good enough for a concert solo. Perhaps the resources of colour which the orchestra can provide would make all the difference. Incidentally it is worth noticing that in the Andante espressivo, the composer has two kinds of slur—one for the phrase, the other for bowing. The idea is excellent, and should be more extensively used. But it is essential to make quite clear to the player which is which, and the plan, once adopted, should be used consistently to the end.

Herbert Howells's Sonata for pianoforte and violin, in E major (Winthrop Rogers), is the work of a man who, as the saying is, 'knows his job'—knows it, in fact, too well: for if this music leaves you a little perplexed, if it does not ring true everywhere, if there are moments in which the interest flags, your impressions will not find support in the actual notes. If, after ascertaining, so far as possible, the composer's intention, you should conclude that the Agitato is agitato in name rather than in action, that the contrast with the first quasi-pastoral strains is not clearly established—if you feel this, and try to find the cause of it in the notes, you will probably conclude that if the passage does not, it ought to sound agitato, or inquieta, as the composer determined. On the whole, the impression is that of a charming, friendly, and amiable, rather than of a strong, sharply-defined individuality; of an able and competent, rather than an inspired worker.

In arranging Gustav Holst's 'Jig' (from the 'St. Paul's' Suite), for pianoforte and violin (Curwen Edition), Vally Lasker has done a good piece of work which fails only where failure was inevitable. Only those who have tried it know the difficulties of arranging string orchestra music for any other combination of instruments—and especially for pianoforte and violin. In one case there is a quartet of perfectly homogeneous instruments, any one of which might be merged into the other in such a way that the ear hardly detects the change. In the other we have two instruments whose tones mix as oil mixes with water. 'Arrangement' will be stamped in large characters on every bar. But the object of such work is not the appeal of an original, but rather to recapture so far as possible the rapture of the original. If we cannot possibly have the orchestra, let us have the arrangement for pianoforte and violin—and the present arrangement is probably as good as it could be. An Adagio from Raff's Trio for pianoforte, violin, and violoncello, has also been issued lately (Paxton), and may go some way to prove to the new generation that Raff had a talent which somehow never came to full maturity. Such things as the Cavatina, the Fileuse, and the Adagio, endure amongst the innocuous morceaux de salon of the last generation. Of all his Sonatas, not one survives. Sic transit.

The Twelve Novellettes and Caprices of E. Jaques-Dalcroze (Augener) have some fairly modern harmonies, and are also fairly difficult—but on the whole they belong to the age of innocence. The same (minus the modern harmonies) applies to E. T. Haigh's 'Rêve Angelique' (Paxton) and (minus modern harmonies and difficulties) to Reissiger's 'Romance' for pianoforte, violin, and violoncello (idem).

In spite of the needs of competitive festivals throughout the country, there is a great scarcity of arrangements or original compositions for string orchestra. This is one more reason for welcoming Julius Harrison's arrangement for string orchestra (or quartet) of Bach's Prelude and Fugue in G minor, from Book 2 of the 'Forty-Eight' (Novello). The neglect of the string orchestra on the part of modern composers is not easily explained. It is true, of course, that the general trend is for colour, dazzling and extravagant. The string orchestra in this respect suffers, of course, well-defined limitations. Yet within those limits the variety and range are enormous. From the low, open string of the double-basses to the high harmonics of the violins, from the sonority of a well-balanced chord for the full quartet to the soft, thin pizzicati of any one of the four instruments, there is surely as rich a choice as anyone could desire. Elgar, of course, with his genius for all orchestral instruments and combinations of instruments, has paid a glorious tribute to the string orchestra with his Introduction and Allegro. But this is not a work which can be tackled with hope of success by the players who usually compete at festivals. Its purpose is not, nor was it meant to be, educative. Now this is precisely what Mr. Harrison has achieved. It is true enough that only the best players can do perfect justice to Bach. And in this respect Mr. Harrison's arrangement is no exception. At the same time, no other composer offers so much to the student. Without touching upon the pianoforte and the organ, which are beyond our field, the violinist cannot find anywhere a better school of bowing than is contained in the Bach Sonatas, and an amateur orchestra would learn more about ensemble, colour, accent, and rhythm from the close study of this Bach Fugue than from any other work in existence. Mr. Harrison has done his share with scrupulous regard for accuracy and tradition. He doubles his bass, but he never attempts to give brilliance to the upper parts by sending his violins an octave higher, as a less faithful editor might have been tempted to do. The result is a finished piece of work which ought to find a place in the programmes of both symphony concerts and the more modest entertainments of amateurs.

B. V.

The Musician's Bookshelf

'Claude Le Jeune—Octonaires de la Vanité et inconsistency du monde' (i.-viii.), publiés par Henry Expert.

[Fondation Negib Sursock, Senart, Paris.]

Very welcome is the news that M. Henry Expert has been enabled to resume, after many years, the publication of his discoveries and studies in the realm of old French music. The 'Monuments de la Musique Française au temps de la Renaissance' are a collection whose discontinuance would have been deplorable. The munificence of M. Negib Sursock has provided for the issue of three volumes per annum, the bulk of the editions to be distributed as gifts among the public libraries of all countries.

This first volume contains the last sets of part-songs composed by Claude le Jeune. The music is in many respects remarkable: for the historian and scientist, because it affords one of the earliest known instances of progress in the use of the secular modes; and for music-lovers, because of its freshness, thoughtfulness, and beauty of texture.

M. Expert does not rest content with publishing old masterpieces. He has formed, trained, and conducts a group, 'Les Chanteurs de la Renaissance,' which specialises in their interpretation, and is actively engaged in making them known to the concert-going public of France.

M.-D. C.

'The Scope of Music.' (Ten Lectures on the broader aspect of Musical Education.) By Percy C. Buck.

[Oxford University Press, 6s.]

These are the Cramb Lectures—delivered last year at Glasgow University—here somewhat modified in deference to book-form, but retaining, on the whole, the air of the spoken word.

The reader is conscious of the lecture-room clock relentlessly approaching the appointed term, leaving the speaker with so much of interest unsaid. Out of that well-stored brain he could well have trebled each chapter and kept us engrossed. But this drastic conciseness is our one grievance against the book. It is beautifully lucid, persuasive, and generally readable, and, narrow as the space is, it by no means treads the beaten track all the time. We should say that the tone of it is capitally suited to an audience of intelligent persons, not cultivated musicians, but ready to be attracted by a presentation of some of the intellectual aspects of the art.

At heart, this is a book of musical æsthetics, and such chapters as 'The Origin of Music as an Art' and 'The Nature of Beauty' will come most freshly to the musical reader, notwithstanding that the chapters on the more hackneyed subjects—acoustics, form, and so on—have plenty of original thought. For musical persons are commonly quite innocent of interest in the æsthetics of their art, and, indeed, one ventures to harbour a suspicion that Dr. Buck himself holds a rather perverse view on the nature of that interest. In his first chapter he reproaches æstheticians for having 'filled our shelves with interminable volumes of abstract discussions, no one of which has ever helped a single soul to enjoy any work of art one whit the better.'

But why should æsthetics be asked to assist souls in the enjoyment of art? Why, any more than that physics should help us to enjoy nature? If art is not capable of being enjoyed in itself, what amount of theorising can help? Surely æsthetics and physics are simply themselves sources of enjoyment, the one playing with the problems of art, the other with the problems of nature.

We cannot even agree with Dr. Buck that his engaging chapter on acoustics ought to render the student's 'appreciation of music itself a little more intelligent in quality.' Acoustics is a question which has left some of the best musicians entirely cold. It often may be found fascinating by those who are uninterested in the art of music. Most of us like to know something about acoustics, and if life were longer would make a point of mastering it. It is simply one of the fields of human knowledge—those countless fields, all so charming if only one had a hundred lives in order to go into them all! The subject and chapter are of course entirely in place in this book; only one suggests that Dr. Buck has offered the wrong excuse for them. Is not knowledge a good in itself, without its being called on to 'help' at all?

The chapter, 'The Nature of Beauty,' will probably strike musical people as particularly fresh and suggestive. The ordinary listener to music ought to have a compartment in his mind for such æsthetic questions, while one quite understands that a creative musician, his hands full of practical work, is usually impatient of them. For every listener may be within his means a musical critic, and these æsthetic whys and wherefores are the counters in the game of criticism. It is, of course, possible to enjoy music without criticism. But criticism is a pleasant game for the intelligence, provided one is not busy with the practical job of music-making. The actual composer, sweating at his forge, has not as a rule bothered to think what or why music is. With Mr. Heseltine, he utters a curt 'Music's a rum go!' and returns to the more serious question of making it. A Heseltine-composer is more than justified in letting the æsthetic question go—one cannot play all games. A Heseltine-critic ought to have an answer to it. Dr. Buck's 'Nature of Beauty' is of course not meant to assist composers to write beautifully, or even to assist listeners to recognise beauty, but it will succeed in stimulating readers towards the interesting habit of analysing their reception and recognition of things beautiful.

In a conclusion in one of the later chapters ('The Place of Music among the Arts'), we think Dr. Buck is to be caught in an inconsistency when he speaks of 'the less fortunate arts' other than music. For only a moment before he had deprecated the belief in the hegemony of music, and had, much earlier, properly put out of court fatuous arguments on the inherent superiority of this or that form (fugue, symphony). Music is, by grace of fortune, 'entirely subjective,' and in the other arts 'all creators,' he says, 'chafe against the objective necessity from which music is free, and they try to be quit of it.'

But truly, do they? Well, only, we should say, in a period of decadence, and if Rodin's sculpture is an attempt to elude the very conditions of his art, the less sculptor he. Perhaps other artists may observe an attempt at the present time, among composers to elude the divine subjectivity of music, and perhaps they are right; and this would only go to support those who detect in the musical art of to-day the signs of the beginning of a decline—a decline such as has made it impossible in the modern world for a man to paint as well as Titian or Velasquez. An art is surely not in itself good or bad, superior or 'less fortunate,' but good purely in virtue of the particular manifestation of the human spirit in a given work of art.

Other pages tempt us to linger. Dr. Buck explains the interval of the fourth of early Organum. It comes from the fall from tonic to dominant being the most obvious of all intervals, and the proof that it is the most obvious is that all babies—all, at least, that Dr. Buck has known—sing it at their first attempts at music. 'They do not, even by accident, hit on the note above or below, or a third above or below, but invariably, in my experience, a downward fourth.'

In 'Melody,' the principal example analysed is the beautiful old English air, 'Flowers of the Valley.' Is it not an omission that the words are not given? Dr. Buck discusses it as though it were a melody composed deliberately instrumentally. Surely the grace of its proportions ought, in part, to be attributed to the verses which no doubt it was originally invented to fit?

Dr. Buck (on p. 115) rather unfortunately associates 'Ornstein and Stravinsky' when he wants a couple of modern names. But Stravinsky is a very remarkable and unnegligible man, whereas of the former we recall nothing save a few impertinences one afternoon.

'Peculiarities of Russian Folk-Music.' By P. Kastalsky (in Russian).

[State Edition: Moscow-Petrograd.]

This is a very useful, clear, and sober little book, in which the materials accumulated by the best collectors of Russian folk-tunes—including important unpublished collections by Melgunov, Gribiniuk, Tchumakov, and Maslov—are carefully considered from the point of view of texture.

Readers of Mrs. E. Lineva's excellent books on Russian folk-music—available in an English edition, but not so widely known as they deserve to be—are aware that in Russia part-singing (polyphonic, not purely harmonic) is a common practice; and that, for this reason, Russia's folk-songs should never be considered apart from the harmonizations which tradition provides. Kastalsky gives a good deal of additional information and elucidations on this matter.

What will come as a surprise is the fact that, in his own words, 'Russian art-music hardly ever provides examples of harmonization conforming to folk-tradition.' The sole exception, he states, is Borodin's.

Here is one of the many comparative examples he quotes (the comparison is instructive quite apart from any question of melodic variants).

Balakirev's song collection, Nos. 8, 9.

Rimsky-Korsakov's collection, No. 48.

Genuine traditional setting in Paltchikov's collection, No. 12.

Only a few of the points noted and discussed can be mentioned here. One is the total lack of chromatic notes, harmonic or ornamental, with the one exception noted hereafter. Unisons, octaves, and fifths are freely resorted to. The harmony of the subdominant hardly ever occurs, but those of the second and sixth degrees are prominent. Modulation in the course of a song is achieved by simple, telling methods. Chords in fourths are not uncommon:

At times a tune is found to contain both the major and the minor form of an interval alternately:

Sometimes the natural and the raised note follow each other, creating a momentary effect of chromaticism.

Comparing the traditional settings with those which, according to him, the theoretical rules would provide, Kastalsky shows that the latter are less suitable, and adduces instances that are both clumsy and ugly. One might think he overstates his case, did not one remember certain atrocities perpetrated by harmonizers intent on reducing African or Asiatic tunes to the tonic-dominant-subdominant system.

As regards artistic fitness, even Russian composers at times seem at a loss. Glazounov has provided two harmonizations of the Volga boatmen's song. One, in the tone poem 'Stenka Razin,' is most effective. The other—a choral setting—is a trifle stolid, and even Balakirev's harmonization (in his book of folk-tunes) is far less satisfactory than that in 'Stenka Razin.'

The one point left untouched by Kastalsky is that of intonation. By now most students of folk-music feel that it is imperative to know whether the intervals of noted tunes are exactly as represented by notation. Reading the book, one is naturally led to assume that they are. But it would be useful to have Kastalsky's assurance in positive terms.

M.-D. C.

CHOIR-TRAINING: THE RESPONSIBILITY OF THE CLERGY

Complaints as to the shortcomings of the organist in the matter of choir-training have for many years been so common that one would expect all concerned to make an eager response to any effort in the direction of improvement. The Royal College of Organists was blamed a few years ago for not including in its examinations a thorough test as to candidates' abilities to train a choir. It was urged that the College should extend its present syllabus so as to include such a test, or, as an alternative, found a special examination in choir-training. As was pointed out in our issue of April, 1923, p. 258, there were serious obstacles in the way of the first of these courses, and after long and patient discussion the Council decided on the latter, preparing a scheme which went even farther than the grumblers had demanded, in that it embraced not only the skilled player who held the College diplomas, but also the amateur or semi-professional whose technical attainments were necessarily on the modest side. There are now two examinations—one for each type of organist, and both syllabuses cover the ground in as thorough a manner as can well be. The College having thus done its part, it remains for the clergy and others who complained so loudly to do theirs. How are they to do it?

Not much is asked of them. When faced with the task of choosing an organist they have but to make it a sine qua non that candidates shall possess unexceptionable credentials in regard to choir-training. There is hardly likely to be anything better than the R.C.O. Choir-training Diploma (for which only Associates and Fellows are eligible) or Certificate (obtainable by others). These R.C.O. Examinations have now been established for a year, at a cost which the College can ill afford, but which it gladly meets if the venture proves to be of service to the cause of Church music. Unfortunately the response at present is so slight that the Council naturally wonders whether the loud complaints of a few years ago were genuine. As was shown in a discussion of the scheme in the Musical Times of July, 1923, the success of the examinations, and all that such success means to Church services, depends in the long run on the clergy. If organists find that incumbents, churchwardens, church councils, and others who have a voice in the appointment of organists, inquire as to the applicant's possession of the College diploma or certificate, there will be no lack of examinees. On the other hand, if the authorities are indifferent they can hardly be surprised if organists are disinclined to spend time and money in obtaining credentials which the Church authorities apparently do not value.

A more critical attitude and more knowledge on the part of congregations will be a help in effecting a reform. We are therefore glad to hear that the College is throwing open to the public the lectures which have been arranged for the benefit of would-be entrants for the examination. The next series of lectures takes place at the College (situated in Kensington Gore, close to the Albert Hall) on November 3, at 7.30 p.m.; November 4, at 3 p.m., and on the same day at 5.30 p.m. The speakers and subjects will be respectively: Dr. H. W. Richards, 'The Singing of Psalms and Hymns'; Dr. Keighley, Lecturer of Manchester University, 'Mixed Choirs'; and Dr. Stanley Marchant, of St. Paul's Cathedral, 'Boys' Voices.' All interested are invited, and no tickets are necessary. Can the College do more than this? It is now 'up to' the clergy and church-folk generally. If the examinations have to be discontinued for want of support, let there never be another grumble, either from the incumbent's stall or from the pew!

GALLI-CURCI-ITIS

A few years ago Mr. Edwin Evans wrote an article entitled 'The passing of the top E flat,' in which he said:

The days of the flamboyant soprano are over. Her roulades and fioriture no longer interest anybody but herself, her trainer, and perhaps her press-agent. At the time there seemed good grounds for so happy a pronouncement. Debarred for various reasons from hearing vocal stars of the florid type, the general public really seemed to be turning itself in the direction of music instead of fireworks. But events have proved Mr. Evans to be wrong, unfortunately. Recent opera seasons have given signs that 'a flamboyant soprano' can still attract attention out of all proportion to her musical value; and during the past few weeks the Galli-Curci craze has shown that the public is, after all, pretty much where it was twenty-five years ago. We do not propose to enter into a discussion of the lady's singing, or of her programmes. Both have been, and will be, discussed in the critical notices of this and other journals. We concern ourselves rather with one or two features of the furore that seem to us to be new. First, one is surprised to find so many thousands rush to go and hear the singer. After all, the very flower of her art is to be got from the pick of her gramophone records. She could not possibly sing better at the Albert Hall than she has done in the recording room; she may conceivably sing less well—and in fact, she seems to have done so. Second, we are struck by the fact that editors of all sorts of papers and magazines found it worth while to commission from the singer—or at all events to accept from her—articles on a variety of subjects. We do not know how the struggling journalist viewed this phenomenon, but we can imagine him asking why a singer who was assured of about a thousand pounds for each concert during an extensive tour should find it worth her while to bother about a few odd guineas that could come to her only by being diverted from the pockets of journalists. If Madame had anything of importance to impart, plus the ability to say it to the best advantage, the case might be different, though we should still hold the view that she ought to leave journalism to those who earn their living by it. But the fact is, Madame's literary efforts are no more successful than would be the vocal efforts of a journalist. Funnily enough, one of the first articles she wrote—if not the very first—was entitled, 'The importance of being silent.' On seeing the title our first reflection was that if we were able to command £25,000 for twenty-five concerts we should think it far more important to go on lifting up our voice at a thousand a time than to remain silent. But a reading of the article showed that what Madame was really driving at was the importance of being uncommunicative in regard to her art and personality, and accordingly we had hopes that she would contrive to get through the tour with none of the fatuous interviews that have been inflicted on the public in connection with Chaliapin and other singers. But our hopes were dashed by a string of articles and interviews in which the lady seems to have given her opinion on everything that matters and a good many things that don't. Here are a few specimen Great Thoughts:

'Ah, you thought I was fat . . . Singers have need to be fat. . . . Many singers eat too much. . . . Hard work is the surest road to success.'

Looking at the grey skies, Madame remarked rather wistfully, 'The weather is very unkind.' . . . &c., &c.

But perhaps the limit of banal gush was reached in the episode of the Music Club's 'Wireless Dialogue with Prima Donna in Mid-Atlantic'—to use the heading of the report that lies before us. Now, the Music Club is an organization of standing in the musical world; and we should like to know what some of its members thought on finding that the following message of welcome had been sent in their name to Galli-Curci on board the s.s. 'Paris':

It is difficult to express and convey to you the exquisite expectation with which England awaits your coming. You have never been in our midst to sing to us, and yet your voice has thrilled the heart of England, and your name is associated in our minds with the sweetness of the nightingale and the limpid song of the lark, with all that is great and glorious and matchless in the music of the human voice. Great indeed will the pleasure and honour be for us, who have hitherto been enchanted by listening to your voice on the gramophone, to have you among us in living presence. We hope your visit to our Island will bring you great happiness. Our weather, which is changeable, is not reflected in our tempers or our hearts, and though you may find our country cold, you will find our audiences cordial, and through the gramophone your voice is known in the households of Britain whether of high or lowly estate. To forewarn and prepare you for the welcome that awaits you is the pleasant purpose of this letter. Musical England is re-awakening. Long ago 'Merrie England' was called 'a nest of singing birds,' and it shall earn the name again. Who knows but that your voice, the greatest in our generation, may be the instrument to lead us anew into the deep emotions of life. 'All deep things are song,' says Carlyle, and you will bring gladness to the gladness of the welcome that awaiteth you.

The cream of the above is the writer's bracketing the 'country's awakening' with the activities of a prima donna. We should put it the other way round, and say that there were signs of such an awakening until the Galli-Curci craze proved the reverse. The Music Club humorist scores again in talking of England being 'a nest of singing birds' once more, as a result of Madame's honouring her with a visit. A 'nest of listeners' is nearer the mark. And the likelihood of the prima donna's voice 'leading us anew into the deep emotions of life' is remote, seeing the type of music she sang.

But not only the Music Club dithyrambists lost their heads and sense of proportion over Galli-Curci's visit. In the Star appeared an interview with her agent, Mr. Lionel Powell, on the question of broadcasting the singer. Incidentally the interview taught the public that although great—or at all events well-paid—singers are called Queens of Song, there is a mightier power behind the Throne. Madame Galli-Curci may or may not have wished to give the wireless audience a chance of hearing her; Mr. Lionel Powell put his foot down, and it was clear from the first that what Mr. Powell says in this matter 'goes.'

If he had stopped at prohibition there would have been little cause for complaint, save on the ground that as every concert of the tour was reputed to be sold out, there could be no question of financial loss as a result of broadcasting; indeed, there would have been a further addition to the £25,000 and to the guineas earned by journalism, as the Broadcasting Company would, of course, have paid a fee. But Mr. Powell was not content with putting his foot down; he went on and put his foot in it by his comments on some of the best performers in the country:

A successful performer will never broadcast [he said], and I shall certainly not consider the matter. Broadcasting is all right for the unsuccessful artist and for hyenas at the Zoo, or nightingales, or things like that. No front rank artist has ever sung from the studio of the B.B.C., and none ever will, and retain the power to draw an audience.

This staggering assertion naturally made the interviewer remind Mr. Powell that John Coates, Albert Sammons, Dorothy Silk, and others, who are indisputably front-rank artists, have been broadcast. But Mr. Powell merely repeated his statement, and left it at that. He added:

I have met a representative of the B.B.C. and discussed the whole question with him, but I have always refused and always shall refuse, to allow any of my artists to perform for them. I have been told the B.B.C. were prepared to pay for songs by Madame Galli-Curci, but how could they hope to do so? Why, she has only to sing for a gramophone record to receive from £10,000 to £15,000. . . .

'MY' artists losing their power to draw an audience, but merely a matter of the size of the fee. Evidently if the B.B.C. were prepared to pay £10,000 or £15,000, Mr. Powell would forget that risk of Madame's losing 'the power to draw an audience.' From start to finish—from the public speculation in Albert Hall tickets that yielded five hundred per cent. profit, down to this pontifical talk about 'MY' artists and £15,000 gramophone records—the whole affair has the minimum of musical significance. The labourer is worthy of his hire, and nobody grudges him (or even her) as substantial a hire as can be got fairly; but there should be only detestation for a method of publicity which concerns itself so much with the fatness of the fees and so mighty little with the music.

(What a blend of childishness and materialism these singers are! In the middle of the Galli-Curci boom, Chaliapin dashed across from Paris to London in order to get some clothes—a mere twenty suits—and in a press already overcrowded with Galli-Curci drivel there was yet room for a grinning snap-shot of the bass, with a long interview, the clou of which was the news that he was just off on an American tour at £800 a night: a statement that was followed by a final gloat over the fact that the highest fee Caruso ever received was about £550. On a Music Club basis of calculation this means that America is 'awakening musically' at the rate of £250 every decade.)

Reverting to the 'awakening of musical England,' we have recently had conversations with musicians in certain provincial centres where orchestral and other activities are having a hard struggle. These towns are included in the Galli-Curci tour, and the Music Club prose-poet will perhaps be surprised to hear that local musicians fear that after the lady has collected her thousand pounds the 'awakening' will be found to have given a nasty jar—perhaps in some cases a knock-out blow—to enterprises that concern themselves with real music. For the public—especially in these hard times—has only a limited amount to spend on concerts and other musical doings. If the amateurs of a district raise a thousand pounds and hand it over to a star singer, they have nothing to show for it and precious little left for the support of local enterprise. When one realises what that thousand pounds could do for the town's orchestral, choral, and operatic societies, or for the district's competition festival, the pronouncement about England's 'musical awakening' as a result of a prima donna's tour visit rings hollowly in the ear.

On one account only are we glad that Galli-Curci is here. She will, we hope, show budding singers that a wobbling scream is not good singing, or even singing at all. She will give them a badly-needed lesson in effortless production and pure musical tone. Those who, as competition festival adjudicators, listen to many hundreds of young singers every year, agree that it is a rare experience to find voices of real musical beauty unspoiled by tenth-rate professional tricks—wobble, strain, overdone portamento, slovenly phrasing, and distorted rhythm. If only a few hundred of these misguided young folk—especially sopranos—will aim at the delightful ease and purity of Galli-Curci's singing, and proceed to apply it to good music, the country will after all have got some slight return for that £25,000. But here again a good gramophone record of her singing would have been a better investment.

So we see that after all it is not a question of

Occasional Notes

For some time past we have felt that the anti-Victorian drum was being beaten for a good deal more than it was worth, and we were therefore very glad to see in the Daily Telegraph of September 26 a leading article in which the question was discussed with admirable commonsense. The writer pointed out that there is justification for the complaint that the Victorian musicians touched-up such old music as happened to come their way, but that fact ought not to make us ignore the good work they did in various directions. And even that touching-up was in many cases probably due not so much to the so-called 'smug complacency' of the culprits as to the (at that time) excusable ignorance of the problems involved. There was an abundance of musical scholarship, but for several good reasons it didn't run much in the direction of editing 15th century polyphonic music. Moreover, before we start throwing stones at our grandfathers for their neglect or ill-treatment of old English music, we should remember, as the Daily Telegraph article showed, that the same tale has to be told in regard to other European countries. To hear the more rabid anti-Victorians one would suppose that in England alone was it possible for a great composer to be nearly forgotten. Said the Daily Telegraph writer:

... Verdi, in a letter to Bülow, laments the neglect of Italian national art which acknowledged Palestrina as its founder, and envies the German's attachment to Bach. But Bach himself was ignored for long in Germany, and in fact till Mendelssohn (one of the Victorians' heroes) revived the 'St. Matthew' Passion. Yet Germany had greater resources and wider musical culture than any other country.

And he goes on to add another point that musicians overlook:

As regards the extravagant vagaries of editors, other arts have suffered from them at least not less than music. If Dr. Johnson believed that 'English poetry properly began with Waller and had gone on improving ever since,' there is little to be wondered at if other and lesser men fell into the same error in respect of music.

On the side of actual musical achievement the Victorians make a better show than is hastily supposed. Although the Royal Academy of Music and the Philharmonic Society were founded before Victoria came to the throne, they were not solidly established until her reign. The Royal College of Music, the Crystal Palace Concerts (which under Manns gave such an impetus to orchestral music), the Sacred Harmonic Society, and the innumerable small local bodies which laid the foundation of the choralism of which the country is so justly proud, the competition festival movement, the Hallé Concerts—all these fruitful activities date from the period which we are asked to believe was the dullest and most barren in our musical history. In the matter of composition the account is by no means lean. Parry, Stanford, Cowen, Mackenzie, Sullivan, and even Elgar, did much of their best work during the period, and a crowd of smaller men such as Sterndale Bennett, Pearsall, S. S. Wesley, Walmisley, Ouseley, and others, turned out plenty of good stuff that would be performed to-day but for its having been labelled Victorian, and so damned. But, after all, if not a note of the best of the Victorian music were ever heard again, the fact would remain that its composers builded better than they knew in clearing the ground, and so making possible the subsequent development of English music. Our enthusiasm for the newly-discovered Tudor and Elizabethan music should not prevent us from giving the Victorians credit for what they did—often in the face of that deadliest of obstacles, indifference. Above all, let us get rid of the snobbishness that makes musicians shy of saying a good word for the Victorians, and that leads too many lecturers and writers to speak as if the Elizabethans could do no wrong and the Victorians no right. There is plenty of dull Elizabethan music—indeed, a good proportion of it is being issued and performed with so little discrimination that there is the risk of a speedy reaction against the whole school. Some of the enthusiasts need to be reminded that a by no means negligible section of the musical public is likely to be irritated rather than converted by a method of propaganda that consists largely of inexpensive sneers at a group of men who, following on a really bad patch in English music, yet managed to leave present-day musicians cause for gratitude in almost every department of the art. Theirs was a solid rather than a showy achievement, of a type that will never evoke loud and prolonged applause. But the least we can give them is fair play. There are few easier and cheaper ways of making an audience laugh than by poking fun at the Victorians, and calling them 'smug' and 'stuffy.' To run the risk of being thought 'stuffy' oneself by saying a good word for them evidently calls for more courage than most lecturers can screw up.

Not many years ago the Royal Philharmonic Society was wont to be sniffed at for lack of enterprise. Its programmes for the present season show our oldest musical organization to be far more adventurous than any other London concert-giving body—though, on the face of it, that may not be saying much. At the series of seven concerts announced to begin on November 20, no fewer than ten works by British composers will be heard, among them being Elgar's first Symphony, movements from Holst's 'Planets,' Bax's 'Garden of Fand,' Harty's 'Eastern' Suite, Berners's Fantaisie Espagnole, Vaughan Williams's 'Pastoral' Symphony, and a new Pianoforte Concerto by Herbert Howells. Delius's 'Mass of Life' will be performed on April 2, with the Philharmonic Choir co-operating. The last programme of the season will be made up of five modern and unfamiliar British works—not wisely, we venture to think. Experience has shown that the public is not attracted by such schemes. One-man or one-nationality programmes draw only when the music is well-known. We hope the Philharmonic experiment will prove us to be wrong, but we hold that the best way of giving our native composers a show is to include one or two of their works in every programme, side by side with one or two 'safe cards' from the regular orchestral repertory. The claims of British soloists have not been overlooked; in fact, they number ten, whereas the visitors are two only—Jeanne Jouve and Stravinsky. The latter will be heard in his Pianoforte Concerto. The conductors are Furtwängler, Bruno Walter, Eugène Goossens, Ansermet, Weingartner, Klenau, and Hamilton Harty. Everybody wishes the lively old Society a prosperous season.

Our readers will remember that the Newcastle Bach Choir recently gave a performance of Byrd's 'Great' Service—a performance which, save for that given, we believe, at St. Michael's College, Tenbury, last year, was almost certainly the first heard since Byrd's death. The discovery of this MS., by Dr. E. H. Fellowes, a few years ago, has been not unfairly described as one of the romances of musical history. So far only the lucky people round Tenbury and Newcastle have had an opportunity of hearing this masterpiece. It is good news, therefore, that Dr. W. G. Whittaker will bring his fine choir to London and sing the Service in St. Margaret's Church, Westminster, on November 25 and 26, at 6 p.m. We understand that this visit is made possible by the generous help of the Carnegie Trustees. Admission will be free, by ticket, for which application should be made to Mr. Hubert J. Foss, at the Oxford University Press, Warwick Square, E.C.4. The proceeds from donations and collections will be divided between St. Margaret's Organ Fund and the Newcastle Infirmary. The Church should be crowded on both occasions, for there must be many hundreds of musicians in London anxious to hear both the choir and the work.

From St. Helens there comes a syllabus and programme that make us wish St. Helens were nearer London or London nearer St. Helens. There is evidently something very much alive about Dr. S. Bertram Siddall and his Glee Club. We know from reliable friends that their singing is good, and here we have evidence that the programme is worthy of the singing. On October 8 they started off with mediæval music (Festa and others); then came John Coates with Tudor songs and the like; then the choir again, in modern settings of old poems; then more John Coates, in Shakespeare songs; a bit of Bantock finished off the first half. The second half kept up the same see-saw in more modern music. All of it was no doubt a first-class musical entertainment. But what we like most occurs as a foot-note to a 'Descriptive chorus, The Rising Storm,' by Neumann. The note says:

This number is introduced, by request, as a good example of the so-called 'dramatic chorus,' beloved of the Continental and Welsh male-voice choirs. The music is of the obvious 'penny plain, tuppence coloured' type—and the words are not worthy of inclusion in this book.

An excellent way with those who 'request'! As a rule, for one who requests there are dozens who object, but friends who request are sometimes very awkward to deal with. The Glee Club is to give another concert next March, this time with Dorothy Silk instead of John Coates. St. Helens is happy in possessing a musician who knows so well how to provide, and it might very well 'request' Dr. Siddall to give it more than two concerts a season.

Music at the Crystal Palace suggests to most people Handel Festivals, Brass Band contests, and similar large-scale doings. The report and prospectus of the Crystal Palace Choral and Orchestral Society reminds us of a more modest but more sustained type of activity. The Society is one of the oldest in London, and has to its credit a long list of excellent performances of first-class works. Last season, for example, choir and orchestra combined in Grieg's 'Olaf Trygvason,' 'Hiawatha's Wedding-Feast,' and Dvorák's 'The Spectre's Bride'; the orchestra played about a dozen works by Handel, Tchaikovsky, Grieg, Glinka, Schubert, &c.; and the choir was heard in short unaccompanied pieces by Holst, Vaughan Williams, and Grainger. Three concerts are promised for the coming season, at which the chief items will be 'Blest Pair of Sirens,' 'The Black Knight' and 'From the Bavarian Highlands,' 'A Tale of Old Japan,' a liberal selection from 'Prince Igor,' a concert version of 'Merrie England,' the 'Pathetic' Symphony, Saint-Saëns's 'Algerian' Suite, and short works by Délibes, Messager, Bizet, and Tchaikovsky. There are vacancies for performing members. Rehearsals are held at the School of Art (South Wing, Crystal Palace), on Mondays (orchestra) and Wednesdays (choir) at 7.30. The hon. secretaries are (orchestra) Mr. Charles R. Bayley, 8, Elmbourne Road, S.W.17; and (choir) Mr. Fred H. While, 5, Victoria Street, S.W.1. Mr. Walter Hedgcock is, of course, the conductor. We are frequently asked for particulars of such societies. Here is one that should meet the needs of a large number of amateurs in the southern suburbs, and we hope they will make the most of the opportunity.

We have received the Report of the thirty-eighth season of the South Place Sunday Popular Concerts. It is, as usual, a fine record of activity. Almost every type of music seems to have been represented, from symphonies to vocal solos, with chamber music as the strong suit. The performers included practically everybody who is anybody in the singing and playing world; only prima donnas seem to have been overlooked. Audiences were even larger than usual, and the season was so successful that it was extended. The financial statement shows a modest balance on the side where a balance looks best. The present season opened on October 5—the nine hundred and thirtieth concert, by the way—with a Stanford Memorial programme. Though there are few London readers unaware of these excellent concerts, we think it worth while adding that they take place on Sundays, at 6.30, at South Place Institute, which is in Moorgate Street, and close to Moorgate Street, Broad Street, Liverpool Street, and various Tube stations. Particulars as to transferable reserved seat tickets, &c., may be had from the hon. treasurer, Mr. F. A. Hawkins, 13, Thurlow Park, S.E.21.

A new and kindred organization that has also favoured us with its Report is the Sunday Evening Concert Society, which holds its meetings at the Working Men's College, Crowndale Road, N.W. Here, too, chamber music is the principal fare, and both in regard to music and performers the South Place concerts seem to have been taken as the model, with excellent results. The balance-sheet is healthy, and large audiences are the rule. Here are some figures concerning the works performed last season: Pianoforte quintets, seven; string quintets, two; pianoforte quartets, three; string quartets, twenty; oboe quartet, one; pianoforte trios, seven; pianoforte and violin sonatas, six; works for pianoforte and violoncello, four; for pianoforte and oboe, one; for two pianofortes, two; pianoforte solos, ten; violin solos, one; miscellaneous vocal and instrumental works, two. Mozart (eleven), Beethoven (ten), and Brahms (seven), headed the list. The concerts are at 6.30, and admission is free (but of course there is a collection). The College is easy to get at, being one minute from Mornington Crescent Station, and within touch of tram and bus routes. We add that at the same place a series of lectures on 'Music and its Makers' is now being given by Mr. David Cooper (weekly until next June), on Fridays, at 8.30, at a fee which works out at a copper or two per lecture. The synopsis shows the lectures to be just what some of our 'musical appreciation' inquirers need.

A Bach Festival by City workers is a project that well deserves a paragraph. Such a Festival will be held at St. Michael's, Cornhill, on November 3-6, by the St. Michael's Singers (conductor, Dr. Harold Darke). They will be heard in a half-dozen cantatas and the B minor Mass. Here is a sketch of the Festival: Organ recitals by Drs. Henry Ley, William H. Harris, Harold Darke, and Mr. E. T. Cook, on each day at 1 p.m.; cantatas, suites, &c., on the first three days at 6 p.m., with Miss Dorothy Silk, Messrs. Leon Goossens, Albert Fransella, &c., as soloists; and the B minor Mass on November 6, at 7.15 p.m. In regard to this last item, note that, as St. Michael's is on the small side, the performance will take place at St. Martin-in-the-Fields. The soloists will be Miss Elsie Suddaby, Miss Margaret Balfour, Mr. John Adams, and Mr. Stuart Robertson. The full programme and book of words may be had from the Secretary, St. Michael's Singers, St. Michael's Vestry, Cornhill, E.C.3, for 6d. (postage, 2d.). We trust that this capital enterprise by a go-ahead lot of City musicians will be supported as it deserves. No tickets are required; hearers are therefore advised to be early on the spot.

A new terror in the way of street sounds is foreshadowed in a letter to The Times, from a correspondent at the Junior Carlton Club:

An extremely irritating street noise is produced when two or more motor horns, with notes pitched within a tone or semitone of each other, are sounded together. If some central authority would induce manufacturers to make all future horns to sound one of three notes—C, E, or G—this discord would eventually resolve into a musical chord which would be the least irritating form of a necessary evil.

We hope all the central authorities concerned will leave well alone. The thought of London's streets being filled with a prolonged snorting of the chord of C major is bad enough; but worse will remain. For, the triad established, another sensitive soul will write—this time from the Athenæum—saying that monotony should be avoided by the adoption of the dominant or subdominant chord. We may yet do our traffic-dodging to the sound of a grand Amen.

It is commonly said that, owing to the popularity of the gramophone, broadcasting, and, in a lesser degree, the vogue of the picture-theatres, there is a falling-off in the amount of music-making on the part of the general public. We do not agree with this view, and for evidence we draw readers' attention to two features in the present issue. First, there is the 'Amateurs' Exchange,' which monthly throughout the year bears witness to a great deal of enthusiastic work, chiefly in the chamber music and orchestral lines. Second, readers should run their eye down the columns in which we have condensed the 1924-25 prospectuses of musical organizations throughout the country. The list—though by no means complete—is so formidable that we can ill spare the space for it; but we think it justifies its inclusion—first, for purposes of reference and as a kind of bird's-eye view of musical Britain; and second, as a proof that there is an enormous amount of enthusiasm showing itself in the most practical fashion.

Will Mr. J. A. Westrup, the writer of an article entitled 'Mysticism and Music,' in our September issue, kindly send his address?

Music in the Foreign Press

ANDRÉ CAPLET

In the Monde Musical (August-September), André Caplet's activities as composer and conductor are carefully and judiciously described by Yves Marc, who lays stress upon the beauty and deep significance of Caplet's religious music, and upon his skilful and original treatment of the human voice.

BRUCKNER

Bruckner's centenary is adequately commemorated in most German papers. Die Musik (September) contains articles on his individuality by Ernst Kurth, on his organ music by Max Auer, and on the dynamic principle of his music by Gotthold Frotscher. In the Neue Musik-Zeitung (September 1) there are a general article by Erich Schwabach; one on 'Bruckner and the Moderns,' by Ernst Kurth; one on 'Chromaticism and Tonality in Bruckner's Music,' by A. Halm; and one on the themes of Bruckner's symphonies considered as expressing his individuality, by Emil Petschnig.

In the Zeitschrift für Musik (September), Siegfried Kallenberg reminds us of the unfair treatment meted out to Bruckner's works:

The F minor Mass, written in 1868, was first performed in 1893; the E minor Mass, written in 1866, was never performed until 1899, three years after Bruckner's death. The second Symphony awaited performance twenty-five years; the fifth Symphony, sixteen; the sixth Symphony, ready in 1881, was first performed in 1899.

Dr. Alfred Heuss points out that Bruckner is comparatively unknown in his own country, and practically unknown abroad.

SCHÖNBERG

A special issue of the Musikblätter des Anbruch (August-September) appears on the occasion of Schönberg's fiftieth birthday. Schönberg himself has written the introduction, which begins thus:

I had often been told, in strict confidence, that on my fiftieth birthday I was to have the surprise of a special Anbruch number. Now I am asked to write an article that is to be part of this surprise.

He then states that he is preparing various theoretical works—on counterpoint, form, instrumentation—and has planned another on composition in the duodecuple system. Twenty-nine original contributions follow. One of the most interesting is Alban Berg's little essay, 'Why is Schönberg's music so difficult to understand?'

The reply is plain enough. The difficulty is due to the asymmetrical, free structure of the themes, and to the corresponding freedom and subtlety of their variations, whose speed is at times such that a listener fails to realise the connection between them and the original ideas. Then we must take into account the wealth of ceaselessly differentiated rhythms and harmonies, and the rich polyphonic texture in which every detail is logical and significant. This is demonstrated by the analysis of the first ten bars of the D minor Quartet, but applies with equal force to the later atonal works.

In Die Musik (September), Franz Wohlfahrt considers Schönberg's position among contemporary composers:

Schönberg has perfectly realised the portent of his time. For the dreams and rhapsodies of yesterday he substitutes the impetus of a mechanically organizing mind.

With him, scientific analytic knowledge becomes part and parcel of music in its primitive functions. He strove to explain music in terms of music's material, sounds. Hardly any other creative musician possesses so deep a knowledge of the very essence of music: but this knowledge has obscured the creative instinct, the unconscious power to dispose and achieve. The living face has become a rigid mask. To breathe new life into this mask will be the task of a more fertile and less baffled generation.

THE FUTURE OF THE PIANOFORTE

In the same issue of Die Musik, Kurt Luethge writes:

The pianoforte does not appear to suit the requirements of to-day's composers particularly well. It does not lend itself to the present tendency to exploit the essential element of music, viz., melody, and its capacity for expression, any more than it can be adapted in practical fashion to quarter-tone music. Nowadays, music aims at depth, rather than at expansion in other directions. There is something ascetic and archaic in to-day's methods of expression. Bowed instruments and the human voice are best capable of rendering the rhythms, tones, and themes, in which the modern musical soul expresses itself, with all their differentiations. The pianoforte is too stiff, too objective, to bend itself to the particular will of one generation. It will come to its own again only when the tendency of a period will be to adapt itself more closely to the character of the instrument. This conceivably may occur, but will be for musical art a deviation from its natural and essential tendency towards greater directness and freedom.

TCHAIKOVSKY'S MARRIAGE

In Die Musik (October), O. von Riesenmann publishes details, taken from an article by Kashkin which appeared at Petrograd in 1920, on Tchaikovsky's unhappy marriage—a topic hardly touched upon up to the present time.

Kashkin got his information from Tchaikovsky himself, whose long narrative [reproduced, we are told, word for word] makes painful and often bewildering reading. Tchaikovsky, apparently, received love-letters from an unknown girl student at the Moscow Conservatoire. A threat of suicide persuaded him to meet her—because, he said, he was at the time engaged in composing 'Onegin,' and could not help comparing the situation of his correspondent with that of Tatiana. Eventually, he told her that he did not love her, and could never love her, but was ready to marry her if she wished. Soon after the marriage, he realised that they had nothing in common; he contemplated suicide, and eventually fled to Petrograd, where he had a nervous breakdown, as mentioned in his biography by his brother Modest.

A NEW RUSSIAN PERIODICAL

The first number of Muzykalnaya Kultura, whose editors are Victor Belaief, Vladimir Derjanowski, and Leonid Sabaneief, appears at Moscow. It contains an essay by Igor Glibof on the duties and methods of contemporary musical criticism.

A UKRAINIAN COMPOSER

In the Kief Musika (July), V. Gadzinsky devotes an article to Denis Sichinsky (ob. 1909), whom he terms 'the Baudelaire of Ukrainian music,' and whose music he describes as worthy of close attention. Unfortunately, no catalogue of Sichinsky's output is given, nor is there any indication as to where his music is procurable.

IMPRISONED VIOLINS

Le Ménestrel (September 26) quotes an article by Alberto Gasco in La Tribuna, protesting against the situation created by certain collectors of old violins:

Instruments which would be invaluable to musicians are withdrawn from circulation or sold for absurd prices. The last Stradivarius sold to a violinist fetched 33,000 dollars. A Mr. Gillot, of Birmingham, is alleged so have accumulated about five hundred instruments by Stradivarius, Amati, and others. Violins are made to be played, not to be stored in cupboards, or exhibited under glass, like stuffed birds.

ADVERTISING THAT PAYS

The August Monde Musical reproduces a circular addressed to artists by the business manager of the Orchestre de Paris, with a view to obtaining advertisements in this Association's programmes. A manuscript note, we are told, adds the information that 'artists who advertise are entitled to appear at one of the concerts.'

A CATALONIAN POET-COMPOSER

The July issue of the Revista Musical Catalana is devoted to commemorating the centenary of Joseph Anselm Clavé (1824-1874), whom Luis Millet Joan Llongueras, Josep Subira, and other writers, describe as an interesting and lovable precursor. His output consists chiefly of songs and choral works.

M.-D. CALVOCORESSI.

Gramophone Notes

By 'DISCUS'

ÆOLIAN VOCALION

The remaining two movements of Mozart's G minor Symphony are well up to the excellent standard set by last month's couple. The Minuet—surely the best, strongest, and most interesting musically of all the classical symphony minuets—and Finale fill three sides of two 12-in. d.-s., the remaining side being happily given to the Rigaudon from Rameau's 'Dardanus'—a delightful piece, that one is surprised to find recorded here for the first time, apparently. The performance and reproduction in each record are first-rate. Every detail in the Mozart is clearness itself. I count these Æolian-Vocalions of the G minor Symphony as among the best known to me. I add that the orchestra is the Æolian, and the conductor Mr. H. Greenbaum.

Equally successful is the 12-in. d.-s. of H.M. Life Guards Band, conducted by Lieut. Eldridge, in the Suite de Ballet, 'Les Deux Pigeons,' by Messager. This is capital light music, and the playing is brilliant.

A pity recording artists follow-my-leader so much! Several violinists have already given us transcriptions of Chopin's well-worn Nocturne in E flat; here is yet one more record, with Albert Sammons in a version of his own—delightfully played, of course, but we would rather have heard him in something else. Is it good business to be recorded in pieces already well represented on the gramophone? I should have thought not. Having (say) a Heifetz record of this piece, I should not want to buy another. Still, I believe that there are queer folk who collect different performers' versions of a work for the sake of comparison, so perhaps duplicating is wise. But for those of us who hold that the music matters more than the performer, repetition is vexatious. On the other side of this record is a Slavonic Dance of Dvorák, as arranged by Kreisler.

Vocal records are of Elena Gerhardt in Schubert's 'Der Musensohn' and Strauss's 'Morgen,' 10-in. d.-s. (enjoyable chiefly because of a kind of pleasant coolness; I prefer them to the previous records of this singer; a good and not too frequent merit is the excellence of the balance between voice and accompaniment—played by Harold Craxton); Clara Butterworth, in three neatly-turned songs by Montague Phillips, 10-in. d.-s. (but scarcely a word is audible, and as the record reveals no compensating merit on the purely vocal side, the songs get a poorish show); Frank Titterton in a couple of Hebridean songs, with harp accompaniment by Marie Goossens, 10-in. d.-s. (expressive, but with more tremolo than ought to be necessary); Giacomo Rimini in excerpts from the 'Ballo in Maschera' and 'Fédora,' 10-in. d.-s. (a strident, bullying voice, with persistent wobble); Malcolm McEachern in de Koven's 'The Armourer's Song' (with anvil) and Victor Herbert's 'Gipsy Love Song,' 12-in. d.-s. (songs of no importance, finely sung by this splendid bass; I wish he would lavish that magnificent voice on better material); Eva Scotney in 'Charmant Oiseau' and the 'Jewel Song' from 'Faust,' 12-in. d.-s.; and Kathleen Destournel in 'Ah! Suicide,' from 'La Gioconda,' and 'Scarcely could I believe thee,' from 'La Sonnambula,' 12-in. d.-s. (both good records, with the orchestral accompaniment as a conspicuously good feature).

COLUMBIA

It is odd to reflect that Franck's Symphony was practically unknown in this country until the war caused our orchestras to transfer a good deal of their operations from modern German music to French and Belgian. It soon became one of the most popular of symphonies, and its addition to the gramophone repertory was to be expected. Here it is, on four 12-in. d.-s., played by the Queen's Hall Orchestra under Sir Henry Wood.

The first record was somehow left out of my parcel, so I can speak only of the close of the opening movement and the remaining two. The Finale strikes me as being the most successful part, the brass especially being above the average. A few of the quieter moments are a little vague. In the slow movement the cor Anglais comes off well, and the delightful rapid whisper of the strings at the end is well reproduced. A good all-round bit of recording, though I do not feel that it is the best the Columbia Company has yet given us.

I am somewhat disappointed with the 12-in. d.-s. of the Symphony Orchestra playing the Prelude to Moussorgsky's 'Khovanchchina,' and Hamilton Harty's string arrangement of 'The Londonderry Air,' conducted by Mr. Harty. There is a lack of clarity, and the arrangement of the Air is less good than one expects from a composer of Mr. Harty's calibre.

We get, however, as near perfection as can be asked, both as to performance and reproduction, in a 12-in. d.-s. of the Léner Quartet playing the Adagio and Finale of Haydn's D major Quartet—the so-called 'Hornpipe.' The Adagio is beautiful, and the bubbling life of the Finale makes it a tonic.

The B.B.C. Wireless Orchestra, conducted by Mr. Percy Pitt, is recorded in Grieg's 'Lyric Suite' (two 12-in. d.-s.). This is a good bit of work, especially in the loud, bright portions—e.g., 'The March of the Dwarfs.'

For Sullivanites there are selections from 'Princess Ida' and 'H.M.S. Pinafore,' played by the Court Symphony Orchestra, each on 12-in. d.-s.

A couple of extracts from 'The Mastersingers' ('By silent hearth' and 'Now begin'), sung by Frank Mullings, are on a 12-in. d.-s. His method strikes me as being far too strenuous for these particular songs.

A coloratura singer new to most of us is Elvira de Hidalgo. At first her singing reminds one curiously of Galli-Curci, but there is not quite the same ease in production. In very soft singing, however, she is superior to Galli-Curci, I venture to think. One need ask for nothing better in the way of delicacy than the pianissimos in this record—a 12-in. d.-s. of the Shadow Song from 'Dinorah.'

H.M.V.

The chief instrumental work this month—at all events in respect of size—is the Liszt E flat Concerto, played by Arthur de Greef and the Albert Hall Orchestra, conducted by Sir Landon Ronald. As usual, M. de Greef over-hits occasionally, but there is less ground for complaint on this score than in some other records of his concerto-playing. The orchestral part is excellent, and the showy, easily-followed work makes a very attractive addition to the gramophonist's repertory (three 12-in. d.-s.).

Here is the B.B.C. Orchestra again, this time conducted by Sir Landon Ronald, in the Overture to 'Rosamunde' (12-in. d.-s.). A capital, clear-cut performance of this old favourite.

An unusually good instrumental record is that of Isolde Menges and William Primrose playing Purcell's 'Golden' Sonata for two violins, with H. Y. Templeman at the pianoforte (12-in. d.-s.). This truly delightful music ought to be warmly welcomed, not only for its own sake, but as one of the very earliest examples of a work of its kind. The playing and balance are first-rate.

Another excellent violin record is that of Marjorie Hayward's performance of Frank Bridge's Serenade and a couple of short pieces by Quilter—'Rosamund' and 'Fairy Frolic,' from 'Where the Rainbow ends' (10-in. d.-s.).

It is notable that while our British violinists are playing such music as this, Kreisler descends to the sheerest commonplace—'Paradise,' his own arrangement of a poorish Viennese waltz tune by Krakauer. The companion piece is a melody by Gen. Charles G. Dawes—he of the world-famous Dawes Report. The H.M.V. bulletin says that 'in the midst of grappling with the problems of European politics he can still find time, it seems, for musical composition.' Nobody grudges the General his hobby so long as he confines the results to his domestic circle. But we are not pleased when the amateurish effort is thrust on us by Kreisler. It is surely high time that critics generally were frank, even to brutality, in regard to Kreisler's choice of music. In lesser men such bad taste would receive its deserts. The 'king can do no wrong' policy is unfair to so many of our British players who, like those mentioned above, refuse to descend to clap-trap.

Wilhelm Backhaus is heard to advantage in a 12-in. d.-s., playing Chopin's A flat Waltz, Op. 42, and the tremendous Polonaise in A flat, Op. 53.

Both are excellent, especially the Polonaise, in which the performer gives us that heroic virility which is found in Chopin more often than most people imagine. Over-insistence on a few of the more sentimental Nocturnes makes him out to be a far smaller man than he really was.

A huge undertaking has been successfully carried through in the recording of 'Madame Butterfly' on fourteen 12-in. d.-s. Goossens conducts, and there is a strong team of soloists, including Rosina Buckman, Frederick Ranalow, Sydney Coltham, Tudor Davies, Edward Halland, &c. The singing varies a good deal in quality, as is inevitable. On the whole, however, it is well up to the average, and a good level of clearness in enunciation is achieved. The orchestral reproduction is the most completely successful part of the enterprise—so much so, that one is inclined at times to switch the attention on to the accompaniment and interludes. The fourteen records are issued in a handsome album, on the inside cover of which is the story of the opera clearly told. One is helped to follow the progress of the work by the marginal numbers indicating the record that is concerned with that particular point in the story. The whole thing is carried out in capital style.

A new 10-in. d.-s. record of Galli-Curci is fully up to the standard we expect. Here she sings two Massenet excerpts—the Gavotte from 'Manon,' and 'Sevillina,' from 'Don César de Bazan.' In the second of these we have all the ease and brilliance we expect from the lady.

Other vocal records are of Joseph Hislop, singing very expressively in a couple of pieces from 'Lucia di Lammermoor,' 12-in. d.-s.; Clarence Whitehill in 'Wahn! wahn!' from 'The Mastersingers,' and 'Der Augen Leuchtendes Paar,' from the 'Valkyrie,' 12-in. d.-s. (fine singing, far above the average in manly dignity and expressiveness); John McCormack in Schertzing's 'Love Song of Old Mexico' and Jones's 'Indiana Moon,' 12-in. d.-s. (terribly commonplace music, sung with a sentimentality that really deserves the epithet 'snivelling'; it is difficult to believe that the singer is the undoubted artist who has been acclaimed lately at Queen's Hall. The H.M.V. bulletin says that 'there is probably no other singer who can render these songs in the manner of John McCormack.' It is a pity that any singer of his standing should render them at all!); Selma Kurz in Taubert's 'Vogel im Walde' with flute obbligato by John Amadio, and the familiar Bird Song from Handel's 'Il Penseroso,' with Saint-Saëns's cadenza, 12-in. d.-s. (two typical pieces of coloratura singing of the rather obvious bird-cum-flute type); Elsie Suddaby in two Purcell pieces—'Hark the echoing air' and 'When I am laid in earth,' 10-in. d.-s. (with much of the right brilliance in the first, but too little ease in the second); and George Baker in Elgar's 'Pipes of Pan' and Eric Coates's 'Pepita,' with orchestral accompaniment, 10-in. d.-s. (excellent, manly singing, some of the best baritone recording I have heard lately). The only serious fault with most of the above records is in the matter of articulation. The words come through in most cases only fitfully, and as I have said before in this column, I cannot be persuaded that there is any real excuse for the defect, seeing that so many humorous singers somehow contrive to let us hear every syllable.

In the way of choral singing there is a 10-in. d.-s. of the de Reszke Singers in 'Adoration,' by Beethoven (an arrangement by H. Johnson of the well-known 'Creation's Hymn'), and 'On Wings of Song' (a transcription of Mendelssohn's song, by van der Stucken). The music is not particularly interesting in this form, and I suggest that (at all events for the English market) these accomplished singers should find better material.

Presumably the record of funny Ben Lawes, in 'My Marriage,' was sent for review on the ground of its containing some musical references, including a skit on a quartet sung by the church choir at the ceremony. This amusing record gives a good illustration of what I said above of comedians' ability to let us hear the words. It is just the thing to put by for the family circle at Christmas (12-in. d.-s.).

Church and Organ Music

ROYAL COLLEGE OF ORGANISTS

Free lectures on Choir-Training will be given at the College on Monday, November 3, at 7.30 p.m., by Dr. H. W. Richards, on 'The General Principles of Choir-Training.'

Tuesday, November 4, at 3 p.m., by Dr. Keighley, on 'Mixed Chords'; at 6 p.m., by Dr. Stanley Marchant, on 'Boys' Voices.'

Members and their friends are cordially invited. No tickets required.

H. A. HARDING, Hon. Secretary.

Dr. H. W. Richards has been elected President of the Royal College of Organists—a capital choice, for the Doctor has had a distinguished career as organist and choirmaster, and is, moreover, a sound and progressive educationist. As Warden of the Royal Academy of Music, he may be counted on to develop still further the relations already existing between the R.A.M. and R.C.O.

LIVERPOOL CHURCH CHOIR ASSOCIATION

The Liverpool Church Choir Association entered upon a new phase of its existence, and commenced what is hoped will be a new period of extended usefulness to Church choirs and Church music, in its sixteenth Festival, which took the form of a choral service held in the new Liverpool Cathedral on Friday, October 17. Inaugurated in 1900, chiefly on the initiative of the late Ralph Hindle Baker, the Association has held fifteen Festivals in St. George's Hall—a secular building unsuited in various ways. The Festivals were suspended during 1914-21, owing to the war and its aftermath. The first Festival to be held in the new Cathedral was thus an event of special importance and hopefulness.

Since the war the support of Church people has been noticeably and regrettably on the wane. But the Association is not alone in this respect, and it has kept struggling on, despite financial ups and downs (principally the latter), in the hope that better days will dawn with the building of the Cathedral. It has been sustained chiefly by legacies; without these, its present deficiency of £118 would no doubt have been much greater. The expenses connected with a secular building were crippling, year after year, and it was difficult to draw up a sufficiently attractive programme of sacred music for which the public would rush to high-priced seats.

The Association has done other public service, notably in providing huge choirs for the foundation-stone-laying of the Cathedral by King Edward in 1904, and for the Gladstone Dock opening by King George in 1913. In fact, it has been found an organized force ever ready when called upon to take a part in making the choral music of great occasions worthy the 'second city of the Empire.' Eminent guest-conductors have included Sir George Martin, Sir Frederick Bridge, Sir Hubert Parry, Dr. Varley Roberts, Dr. G. J. Bennett, Mr. Tertius Noble, and Dr. Charles Macpherson.

The Association has certainly no reason to be ashamed of its record, however short it may have fallen in reaching its ideals. It has found a new incentive in the immensely helpful and encouraging approval of the Lord Bishop of Liverpool, Dr. David, and of the Cathedral authorities. At its first Festival in the Cathedral the Association brought together a body of four hundred and thirty singers—men, women, and boys—selected from the choirs of twenty-three churches, including Warrington and Wigan Parish Church choirs. Sectional rehearsals were held in St. Nicholas Parish Church, and a final rehearsal in the Cathedral. As regards the music-book, the Committee had been influenced by the desire to choose easy and singable service-music—King Hall's Magnificat and Nunc dimittis in B flat and Sir George Martin's fine anthem, 'Magnify His Name,' written for the London Gregorian Association. It must be conceded that this music does not possess any special distinction, but after the experience of previous Festivals, when some ordinary Church choirs had been frightened by imaginary difficulties which had seemed to them insurmountable, it was thought wiser to play for safety under conditions in the Cathedral which were found to be entirely new and bewildering to Church singers unaccustomed to sing to a conductor's beat. Placed in long lines on either side of the vast Choir, they stretched away from the Choir steps to the sanctuary, and the conductor, Mr. Branscombe, took his stand half-way along the Choir. It was extremely difficult to obtain absolute unanimity, and the resonance of the great building—in its immense length and height—may have contributed at times to what appeared to be some choral obscurity. It was really wonderful that the singing, on the whole, was so extremely effective. Of course, if the singers' seats had been placed in rows across the chancel, it would have been better for projecting direct tone into the central space. But it was a service, not a performance, and as a musical service on ordinary Cathedral lines the occasion was one of dignified, devotional, and uplifting character. Commencing with the hymn, 'O what the joy' ('O quanta qualia'), sung processional, the singers moved from the south aisle four abreast into the Choir, and the General Confession and Lord's Prayer were said. Psalm lxxv. followed, sung full to a chant in E (perhaps not the best specimen of familiar chants), by William Russell (1799-1813)—the fine musician who was organist of the Foundling. (His organ music, by the way, was the first by an English organist to be published on three staves.) King Hall's Service in B flat may not be greatly above the commonplace, but, as in the Martin anthem, there are frequent opportunities for choral points, and especially for some effective 'verse,' which was excellently taken by a quartet from the Cathedral choir. Including Stanford's vigorous setting of Psalm cl., there really was no reason to find serious fault with the selection as unworthily typical of English Church music. This fault was found, however. There may be something in it of course, as in the modern tilting at 'Elijah,' and there are ideals which the Association has not yet reached. That so much has been achieved is surely to the good, and it should not be forgotten that the Association has performances on festival scale of Wesley's 'Wilderness,' as well as Church music by Purcell and Tallis, to its credit. Now that the more serene and suitable atmosphere of the Cathedral is available, probably something will be found in future festivals to suit the taste of even the most exacting mediævalists. The Tallis Responses were extremely well-sung and well-intoned by the Rev. H. Dams, Vicar of Knowsley, and formerly Precentor of Carlisle. The pains bestowed in the rehearsal of the Responses had not been thrown away. And this is a specially commendable feature of the work in preparation. Handel's chorus, 'Then round about the starry throne,' hardly justified its choice, probably owing to the acoustic properties of the building and the disposition of the choral forces.

The experiences of this Festival will no doubt be found helpful on future occasions, and it may be better to group the singers differently. The immense size of the building prevents any overwhelming sense of choral power, no matter how many singers are assembled. They would give a depth and fulness of tone, but it was unmistakable that the pianos were greatly more effective than the fortes, as shown by the blending voices of the four Cathedral choristers in the 'verse.' The acoustics of the building will have to be very carefully studied, especially by preachers.

Generally speaking, the choral ensemble was one of imposing grandeur, and the occasional exultant outbursts of tone produced by two hundred and fifty trebles and two hundred tenors and basses will not readily be forgotten. And it was tone of real beauty—generally sweet, suave, and unforced, of the type for which English-trained choirs are famous. This was exemplified not only in the onward sweep of the Magnificat and Anthem, but also in well-balanced precision and accuracy of the pointing in the Psalm. It is a matter for regret that no opportunity was given for a piece to be sung unaccompanied, although at least the possibilities of a cappella singing were revealed in the little three-fold Amen by the late Mr. Burstall, the first organist of the Lady Chapel. The choice of this really beautiful conception was influenced also by a desire to pay tribute to his memory, which is kept green at Liverpool. It proved the 'dynamic' gem of the evening, in the lights and shades of tone which were so enhanced by the vaulting of the great Choir.

The Lord Bishop, Dr. David, who spoke from the Bishop's Throne, said the most timely and encouraging words to the singers it has ever been our privilege to hear from a Bishop. He welcomed them to the Cathedral, and praised their efforts in making the Service one of devotion, dignity, and musical beauty. In the ministry of music, Dr. David said, their voices were instruments in the sacrament of sound and music. Man made organs, but God made voices. He thought congregations often took too much for granted in recognizing the labours of their choirs, for which he himself offered a word of gratitude as well as formal acknowledgment. Their singing at this great Service was worthy of the magnificence of its setting. It is hoped that the Bishop will have his address printed and sent out broadcast. It would give congregations as well as choirs something to think about, and there is need for an awakening in Church music such as the Cathedral itself has brought about in spiritual matters at Liverpool.

It is the Bishop's hope and intention to make the Cathedral a centre and school for the best in Church music. He recognised, as did most of the vast congregation, that the Festival should be primarily regarded as a Service, and not as a performance given under really difficult conditions. The Committee of the Association may well take heart and courageously continue its useful work. The experiences of the first Choral Festival in the new Cathedral should hold an incentive to improve on the next occasion. The organ accompaniments, played by Mr. H. Goss Custard, were models of restraint. Of course he was not able to use the Great organ diapasons, which are not yet sounding; but at the next Festival we shall no doubt hear them, as well as the heavy-pressure tubas which are to excel in tone anything previously associated with the master-hand of Willis. To the conductor, Mr. Branscombe, and to the choirmasters concerned, due acknowledgment should be rendered, as also to the Cathedral authorities for the arrangements made for the carrying out of the most imposing and notable choral service yet held at Liverpool.

There was a vast congregation, which included the Lord Mayor of Liverpool, and the Mayors of Birkenhead, Southport, and Wallasey. W. A. ROBERTS.

ST. MICHAEL'S COLLEGE, TENBURY

At the Commemoration Festival, on October 2, the music at the choral celebration was Ponsonby in D minor. Mr. Sydney H. Nicholson was at the organ, and Dr. Heathcote D. Statham conducted from the stalls. In the afternoon, Mr. Noel Ponsonby, from Ely Cathedral, gave an organ recital. His programme included the 'Wedge' Prelude and Fugue, Byrd's 'Walsingham' Variations, the second and third movements from Bach's sixth Sonata, and Harwood's 'Pæan.' The choristers sang Purcell's 'Evening Hymn.' At evensong, Charles Wood's eight-part Service in F, Ouseley's 'From the rising of the sun,' Bach's 'Blessing, glory,' and Shaw's 'Worship' were sung.

Three doughty Knights

FOUR-PART SONG

Words and Music by ALCO ROWLEY

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED; NEW YORK: THE H. W. GRAY CO., SOLE AGENTS FOR THE U.S.A.

Valiantly

SOPRANO
Three dough - ty knights set forth one day, (With a hey, der - ry, der - ry

ALTO
(With a hey, der - ry

TENOR
Three dough - ty knights set forth one day, (With a hey, der - ry

BASS
(With a hey, der - ry

(For practice only)
Valiantly, ♩ = 160

down - a.) Their names were Wil - liam, James, and John, (With a hey, der - ry, der - ry down - a.) (With a hey, der - ry down - a.) Their names were Wil - liam, James, and John, (With a hey, der - ry

down - a.) (With a hey, der - ry

Copyright, 1924, by Novello and Company, Limited

mf down - a.) They were as brave as brave could be, Un - til they met a

mf down - a.) They were as brave could be, Un - til they met a

mf

down - a.) They were as brave could be, Un - til they met a

mf

down - a.) They were as brave as brave could be, Un - til they met a

timidly p

drag - on. So Wil - liam went in - to an inn, And drained a . . great big

timidly p

drag - on. So Wil - liam went in - to an inn, And drained a great big

timidly p

drag - on. So Wil - liam went in - to an inn, And drained a great big

timidly p

drag - on. So Wil - liam went in - to an inn, And drained a great big flag - on. Now James he'd left his flag - on.

timidly p

flag - on.

retard f

flag - on. and drained a . . great big flag - on.

retard p

lance be - hind, (With a hey, der - ry, der - ry down - a.) And he turned back that

(With a hey, der - ry down - a.)

(With a hey, der - ry down - a.)

(With a hey, der - ry down - a.)

pp p

lance to . . find. (With a hey, der - ry, der - ry down - a.) But John, who was both

(With a hey, der - ry down - a.) But John, both

(With a hey, der - ry down - a.) But John, both

(With a hey, der - ry down - a.) But John, who was both

pp f Valiantly

big and strong, Did fight the drag - on hard and long, And slew it, and big and strong, Did fight the drag - on hard and long, And slew it, and big and strong, Did fight the drag - on hard and long, And slew it, and big and strong, Did fight the drag - on hard and long, And slew it, and

ff p ff p

slew it, and slew it with a . . might - y . . blow, and slew it with a slew it, and slew it, and slew it with a slew it, and slew it, slew it with a . . might - y . . blow, and slew it, and slew it with a might - - y night - y . . blow, (For this is the end of the tale, hey ho, hey . . . ho, might - y blow, (For this is the end of the tale, hey ho, . . .
 slew it, (For this is the end of the tale, hey ho, . . . blow, . . . and slew it, and slew it, (For this is the end of the hey ho, the end of the tale.) With a der - ry down, a der - ry, der - ry hey ho, the end of the tale.) With a der - ry, a hey ho, the end of the tale.) With a der - ry down, a . . tale, hey ho, the end of the tale.)
 hey ho, the end of the tale.) With a der - ry down, a . .

f mf pp mf pp f p retard cheerfully mf p retard cheerfully mf p retard cheerfully mf p retard cheerfully down - a, with a der - ry down-a, der-ry down - a, with a der - ry down, with a der - - - ry down - a, with a der - ry . . down, with a der - - - ry down - a, with a cheerfully With a der - ry . . down, a . . down - a, with a der - ry down - a, der - ry . . down - a, down - a!

der - ry, a der - - ry . . down - a, down - a!

der - ry, der - ry, der - ry . . down - - a, down - a!

der - - ry, a der - - - - - ry . . down - a!

(Continued from page 1008.)

MUSIC AT THE CHURCH CONGRESS

There was no paper or discussion on Church music at the Church Congress held at Oxford recently; indeed, we think the subject has been shelved for some years, whereas formerly no Congress was complete without its Church Music session. We have heard regrets expressed at the change of policy, but are inclined to think that far more practical work is being done by the numerous lectures and demonstrations that now take place at widely-distributed centres. The Congress debates usually led to little more than warm discussions, from which the combatants emerged 'of the same opinion still.' At the Oxford gatherings there were a few incidental references to the topic, mainly in the way of pleas for better hymns and more congregational singing. Church musicians, however, were provided with ample object-lessons at Christ Church Cathedral, where a fine list of service music and organ recitals had been arranged for the week by Dr. Ley. The choral works included Charles Wood's Morning, Evening, and Communion Services, Weelkes's 'Gloria in Excelsis,' Martin Shaw's Te Deum in C, Stanford's Magnificat and Nunc dimittis in A, Blow's 'Salvator Mundi,' Stanford's 'When the Lord turned,' &c. A capital programme of unaccompanied music was sung on the Hall staircase by the Cathedral choir—Weelkes's 'Hosanna to the Son of David,' Byrd's 'Agnus Dei' (four-part Mass), S. S. Wesley's 'Cast me not away,' Stanford's 'O Living Will,' and 'O Strength and Stay,' to an arrangement by Dr. W. H. Harris of a Bourgeois melody, and 'Round me falls the night,' to a tune by Drese, arranged by Dr. Ley. There was also a concert of madrigals and part-songs given by the Elizabethan Singers. The organ recitals contained a good proportion of British works, and a happy idea was the inclusion of several well-known hymns to be sung by the audience, each followed by an organ-piece based on the tune. As practical points of the type too often overlooked, we mention that the programmes for the week were printed in full in the Congress handbook, and that, in the case of some of the less-familiar Church music, the name of the publisher was given.

SOUTHWARK CATHEDRAL

The programme of musical services at Southwark Cathedral for the 1924-25 season is as interesting and enterprising as usual: November 3: the Larghetto from Elgar's second Symphony, Brahms's 'Requiem,' and Elgar's 'For the Fallen'; December 13: Bach's 'Sleepers, wake,' Mozart's G minor Symphony, Bax's 'Of a rose I sing,' and Vaughan Williams's Fantasia on Christmas Carols; December 27: Christmas Carols; February 28: Stanford's 'Stabat Mater'—a welcome revival—Vaughan Williams's Fantasia on a Theme by Tallis and Mystical Songs, and Holst's 'Hymn of Jesus'; March 28: the 'St. Matthew' Passion; April 18: Easter Carols and Motets, and the Grail music from 'Parsifal.' The services take place at 3 o'clock, and no tickets are necessary. A note on the programme says that larger collections must be forthcoming if the high standard of the music is to be maintained. At present the average individual contribution is rather under a shilling. If it could be raised above that modest amount there would be no cause for anxiety. These services have taken an important place in London's music. They bring fine music within the reach of many who are unable to afford the cost of admission to concert-halls, and in many cases the works are of a type that is not often performed at concerts; some, indeed, are heard to full advantage only in a Cathedral. We hope that the large audiences which attend these excellent music-makings will do their part when the bag comes round. Better still, they may send a contribution in advance to the Precentor, The Rectory, Sumner Street, S.E.1.

DUPRÉ AT WESTMINSTER CATHEDRAL

M. Marcel Dupré played to a huge audience on October 9. He led off with Bach's A minor Prelude and Fugue, played with beautiful clarity, and with so little changes in registration that the grand unfolding of the music suffered from no distractions. At some of the chordal passages he held up the rhythm rather badly, it seemed. Franck's 'Pièce Héroïque' was finely played, save for a slickness that robbed the main theme of its troubled, ominous character. After Parry's 'Melcombe,' and a delightful Noël with variations, by d'Aquin, Dupré gave the first performance of his new Passion-Symphonic, discussion of which had better be deferred till the work is published, which will be soon. He ended with an improvisation—a double fugue. I was sorry to have to leave before this came off, the more so as I had the privilege of providing the first subject. Report says that he was in splendid form. The players for November are W. G. Alcock, H. F. Ellingford, G. Thalben Ball, and Patrick O'Neill (Thursdays, at 6.30). H. G.

ETON COLLEGE

The new organ built by Messrs. Henry Willis & Sons and Lewis & Co. was opened on October 4. Mr. Bernard Johnson gave a recital, his programme including Bach's Prelude in B minor (from the '48,' Book 1) and Toccata and Fugue in D minor, the Fugue from Rheinberger's Sonata in F, Meyerbeer's 'Coronation March,' a Pavane by Byrd, and a Sonata by Arne. The three last-named pieces were played on stops that belonged to the old Rotterdam organ given to the College some years ago, and incorporated in the new instrument. The organ now consists of four manuals, fifty-five speaking stops, and about forty combination pistons and pedals. The audience sang 'The March of the Men of Harlech,' 'The old folks at home,' and 'Bound for the Rio Grande.' On October 11 M. Marcel Dupré gave a recital, playing Bach's Prelude and Fugue in A minor, Franck's 'Pièce Héroïque,' Widor's Toccata in F, and his own 'Slumber Song' and 'Spinning Song,' and 'Variations on an old Christmas Carol.' He also improvised upon 'Down among the dead men,' which song was sung by the audience in addition to 'Here's a health unto His Majesty,' 'Loch Lomond,' and 'Twankydllo.'

CHOIRBOYS AND WIRELESS

Boys of the choir of St. Margaret's Episcopal Church, Newlands, are giving short song-recitals through the Glasgow Station of the B.B.C., descriptive comments being added by their choirmaster, Mr. W. H. Stocks. Some of the boys' programmes are being broadcast to all stations in the British Isles. The scheme comprises two programmes each of English and Scottish national songs; selections of Irish, Welsh, Manx, and Navy and Army songs; carols; and examples by Bach, Handel, Schubert, Mendelssohn, Schumann, and Brahms. We must take an early opportunity of hearing these youngsters. Judging from report their efforts give pleasure to huge and widespread audiences.

Among the many excellent organ recitals now being given in London, a high place should be taken by those at Christ Church, Westminster, by Mr. W. O. Minay, who was appointed to the Church at the beginning of the year. Properly speaking there are two series, on Mondays at 12.5, and on Fridays at 1.5. The programmes at the former are miscellaneous, and contain a well-chosen blend of old and new; on Fridays, only Bach is played. The present schemes run until the end of the year, so that no fewer than twelve Bach recitals will have been given between October 3 and December 19. Over sixty of the Chorale Preludes are included, all the Trio-Sonatas, and about thirty other works. Among the latter we note one that is rarely heard (being, in fact, not one of the organ works proper), the six-voiced 'Fuga Ricercata' in C minor, that Bach wrote as an offering to Frederick the Great. Mr. Minay, who, we understand, is only just twenty years old, held an Organ Scholarship at the Royal College of Music, where he was a pupil of Parratt and Dr. H. G. Ley, and of Dr. Vaughan Williams for composition. Not many organists have begun their professional career with so searching a test as these twice-weekly recitals. We hope the project will be as well supported as it deserves. It may be useful to add that Christ Church is easily accessible, being in Victoria Street, hard by the Army & Navy Stores.

Mr. Francis J. Hill, music-master of Marlborough College, is doing a capital bit of propaganda for good music by arranging a tour of organ and violoncello recitals in Norfolk, Leicestershire, and Lincolnshire, for the forthcoming Christmas holidays. Mr. Hill himself plays the violoncello, and Mr. J. Barham Johnson, of Oakham School, the organ. The programmes will be designed to show the development of instrumental Church music. A short descriptive leaflet may be had for distribution among the audience, or for printing in the parish magazine, or for reading aloud at the recital. Any clergy in the districts named who wish to avail themselves of the scheme should write to Mr. Hill, at Marlborough College, Wilts.

We are glad to see that in the series of recitals being given at Wretham Road Church, Handsworth, by Mr. Cyril S. Christopher, two are devoted to British organ music—November 17 and February 16. At the first of these recitals the programme will inculcate Harwood's first Sonata, Bairstow's 'Evening Song,' Battison Haynes's Introduction and Variations on a ground-bass (a fine work that has been too long neglected), Felton's Concerto in E flat, Chorale Preludes by Parry, and Hollins's 'Concert Rondo.'

Holst's Two Psalms were sung at Clapham Congregational Church on September 28. The music at this Church is usually of a high order, as has been shown in this column from time to time. We note that a recital of Old Church Music was announced for October 22, the programme consisting of anthems and Motets by Byrd, Tallis, Purcell, Dowland, Philips, Weelkes, and Eccard, with Mr. Henry F. Hall directing, and Mr. Reginald Redman at the organ.

The enlarged organ at Kingsway Hall was opened, on September 27, by Mr. Gatty Sellars, the organist of the Hall. The instrument, originally built by J. J. Binns, of Leeds, in 1912, and now enlarged by Messrs. Hill & Sons and Norman & Beard, consists of four manuals, some forty stops, and about the same number of pistons and couplers. There are also sets of bells and timpani.

Mr. Sydney H. Nicholson will conduct a special service at St. Paul's, Onslow Square, on November 13, at 8 p.m., and will also speak on the Archbishops' Report on Church Music. His address will be illustrated by the Special Demonstration Choir, which Mr. Nicholson has organized with a view to such occasions.

Messrs. Rushworth & Dreaper have just erected in the residence of Mr. E. Blackburn, at Glan Conway, North Wales, a three-manual organ of thirty-five stops and numerous accessories. The specification was drawn up by Dr. Alfred Hollins.

In connection with the forty-first annual meeting of the North Midland section of the I.S.M., at Nottingham, on October 11, a musical service took place at High Pavement Chapel, when the programme consisted of works by members of the Society.

Dr. G. R. Woodward will lecture on Carols at St. Mary Aldermay, Queen Victoria Street, E.C., on November 29, at 3, with illustrations by a small choir. His newly-published collection, 'The Cambridge Carol Book,' will be drawn upon.

The 'Christmas' Oratorio (Parts 1 and 2) and 'Blest Pair of Sirens' will be sung, with full orchestra, by the St. Alban's Bach Choir, in St. Alban's Abbey, on the evening of December 16.

Messrs. Rushworth & Dreaper have reconstructed the organ at St. Athanasius Church, Liverpool. The instrument is a two-manual, with eighteen speaking stops.

A fine record of service is that of M. E. van Kerschaever, organist of St. Saviour's Cathedral, Bruges; November 1 is the fortieth anniversary of his appointment.

RECITALS

Mr. Joseph Soar, St. David's Cathedral—Sonata No. 4, Mendelssohn; Prelude and Fugue in C, Saint-Saëns; Symphony No. 2, Widor; Prelude and Fugue in D, Bach; Pastorale and Intermezzo, Stanford; Marche Pontificale (Symphony No. 1), Widor.

Mr. Herbert Hodge, St. Nicholas Cole Abbey, E.C.—Chaconne in E minor, Buxtehude; Sonata No. 4, Mendelssohn; Air with Variations and Finale Fugato, Smart; Chorale Sonata in E minor, Merkel; Fantasia and Fugue in G, Parry; Prelude and Fugue in C, Bach.

Mr. Herbert Walton, Glasgow Cathedral—Sonata No. 5, Rheinberger; Fantasia and Fugue, Parry; Pièce Héroïque, Frank; Pastorale and Finale (Sonata No. 1), Guilmant; Toccata in F, Bach; Sonata No. 4, Mendelssohn.

Mr. Connell, Town Hall, Johannesburg—Prelude and Fugue in C minor, Toccata and Fugue in C, and Prelude and Fugue in B minor, Bach; Liebestraum, Liszt.

Mr. W. J. Lancaster, Bolton Parish Church—Toccata and Fugue in D minor, Bach; Prelude, 'Hanover,' Parry; Finale in F sharp, Rheinberger; Evening Song, Bairstow; Grand Pièce Symphonique, Frank.

Mr. Philip Miles, St. Alban-the-Martyr, Westcliff-on-Sea—Meditation in Ancient Tonality, Harvey Grace; Canon in B minor, Schumann; Rhapsody No. 1, Herbert Howells; Trio-Sonata No. 5 (first movement), Bach; Fugue (Pastoral Sonata), Rheinberger.

Mr. J. Albert Sowerbutts, St. Lawrence Jewry—Prelude and Fugue in B minor, Healey Willan; Andante in B flat, Dupré; Variations (from Suite in D minor), J. A. Sowerbutts; Toccata in F, Bach; Finale (from Sonata), Reubke.

Mrs. Rees-Pedlar, Woolwich Congregational Church—Prelude in G, Wolstenholme; Sonata No. 3, Mendelssohn; Meditation in F sharp minor, Guilmant; Andante moderato in C minor, Frank Bridge.

Mr. A. M. Hawkins, St. Andrew-by-the-Wardrobe, E.C.—Passacaglia, Rheinberger; Scherzo in B minor, Healey Willan; Prelude in D minor, Stanford. St. Stephen's Walbrook—Chorale Preludes, 'Praise thou the Lord, O my soul' and 'Adorn thyself with gladness,' Karg-Elert; Four Sketches, Schumann; Solemn Festival, Rheinberger.

Mr. H. W. Chuter, Andover Parish Church—Sonata No. 17, Rheinberger; Intermezzo in E flat, Brahms; Prelude and Fugue in A minor, Bach; Legend, Harvey Grace; Imperial March, Elgar.

Dr. C. F. Waters, St. Lawrence Jewry—Voluntary on the Old Hundredth, Purcell; Preludes on 'Martyrdom' and 'St. Thomas,' Parry; Choral Song and Fugue, S. S. Wesley; Sonata in E minor (first movement), James Lyon.

Mr. Charles Stott, Cromer Parish Church—Overture in C minor, Alfred Hollins; Nocturne in D flat, Bairstow; Introduction and Fugue, Healey Willan.

Dr. M. P. Conway, All Saints, Eastbourne—Introduction, Passacaglia, and Fugue, Healey Willan; Sonata No. 4 (slow movement), Rheinberger; third Prelude on the Kyrie, Bach; Sonata No. 3 ('Romantica'), P. A. Von.

Mr. Wilfrid Greenhouse Allt, St. Giles's Cathedral, Edinburgh—Recitals of works by J. S. Bach, César Frank, Mozart, Sigfrid Karg-Elert, and Harvey Grace. We give the Bach programme: Prelude and Fugue in E minor; Chorale Prelude, 'An Wasserflüssen Babylon'; Fantasia in C minor; slow movement from Violin Sonata; Prelude and Fugue in C. Inverallan Parish Church—Two Bourrées, Purcell; Prelude on 'St. Michael,' West; Prelude on 'Rhosymedre,' Vaughan Williams; Réverie on 'University,' Harvey Grace; Fugue in E flat, Bach.

Mr. W. C. H. Pearce, All Saints' Parish Church, Binfield—Sonata No. 1, Adagio (Sonata No. 3), Largo and Allegro (Sonata No. 2), Prelude and Fugue in C, all by Bach. (Violin solos by Miss F. Shirley: Andantino, Martini; Aria, Tenaglia; Sonata in D, Handel.)

Mr. John Pullett, St. Mary's Cathedral, Glasgow—Prelude and Fugue in D, Glazounov; Trio in C minor, Bach; Sempre Semplice and Quasi Marcia, Karg-Elert; Thème Varié, Ropartz; Tuba Tune, Norman Cocker.

Mr. Cyril Pearce, Baptist Church, Lowestoft—Fantasia in F minor, Mozart; Rhapsody No. 1, Herbert Howells; Introduction and Fugue, Reubke; Evening Song, Bairdston; Toccata (Sonata No. 14), Rheinberger.

Mr. Robert A. Hodgson, St. Cuthbert's, Hawick—An Elgar programme: Meditation; Prelude and 'Angel's Farewell'; Slow movement (Violin Concerto); 'Canto Popolare'; 'Salut d'Amour'; Elegy; 'Sursum Corda.'

Mr. Godfrey Uren, Wesley Chapel, Camborne—Prelude and Fugue in C, Chorale Prelude, 'I give to thee farewell,' and Fantasia and Fugue in G minor, Bach; Minuet ('Berenice'), Handel.

Mr. J. T. Horne, St. Fin Barre's Cathedral, Cork—Sonata in F minor (first movement), W. H. Speer; Idyll, 'The Sea,' H. A. Smith; Rhapsody on Breton Airs, Saint-Saëns; Finale Jubilante and Fantasia, John E. West; Psalm-Prelude No. 2, Howells; Fantasia in E flat, Saint-Saëns.

Prof. George Leake, St. Luke's, Southampton—Con moto in D, H. Smart; Allegro in D, Stanford; Adagio in D, E. J. Hopkins; Andante in D, A. Hollins.

Mr. Fred Gostelow, Luton Parish Church—Fugue in G minor, Chorale Prelude, 'Schmücke dich, O liebe Seele,' Allegro (Trio-Sonata in C), Bourrée in B minor, Bach; Toccata in C, d'Evry.

Dr. Walker Robson, Christ Church, Crouch End—Fantasia in F minor, Mozart; Final in B flat, Franck; Ronde des Princess, Stravinsky; Fugue, Reubke; Prelude on 'Lobe den Herren,' Karg-Elert.

Miss E. Salisbury, Fairford Parish Church—Prelude 'Ein feste Burg,' Bach; Concerto in B flat, Handel; Agitato (Sonata in D minor), Rheinberger; Choral No. 2, Franck. (Violoncello solos by Mr. Francis J. Hill: Concerto in E minor, Elgar; Sonatas by Marcello and Boccherini.)

APPOINTMENTS

Mr. E. C. Edwards, choirmaster and organist, Christ Church, Lee.

Mr. Cedric H. U. Embury, choirmaster and organist, All Saints, North Peckham.

Mr. Hugh Fowler, choirmaster and organist, Parish Church, Crewkerne; and music-master, Crewkerne School.

Mr. G. H. Harvey, choirmaster and organist, Cathedral of the Holy Trinity, Quebec.

Mr. A. G. Hazeldine, choirmaster and organist, St. Paul's Church, Finchley, N.

Mr. Arthur K. Putland, choirmaster and organist, Wesley Church, Fort William, Ontario.

Mr. Frank Stendal Todd, choirmaster and organist, St. Nicholas Parish Church, Carrickfergus, Co. Antrim.

Mr. Charles R. Willis, choirmaster and organist, St. John's Presbyterian Church, Kensington.

Letters to the Editor

HANDEL AND THE EARL OF EGMONT

SIR,—As a sort of pendant to Mr. W. C. Smith's interesting article (Musical Times, September, 1924) on 'George III., Handel, and Mainwaring,' the following extracts from the 'Diary of the first Earl of Egmont,' an Irish peer, and a great admirer of Handel's music, may make an appeal to the lovers of that great composer. This Diary covers the years 1734 to 1747, and has recently been published by the Historical Manuscripts Commission.

Under date of January 29, 1734, the Earl writes:

'Dined at home, and then went to Handel's opera called "Ariadne." [He paid a second visit to hear this opera on April 23.]

On February 16 he attended the rehearsal of Handel's 'Te Deum' (at the Crown Tavern), and the other music to be performed at St. Paul's Cathedral on the following Tuesday. On March 23, he writes:

'After dinner I went to the Opera House in the Haymarket to hear Handel's Serenade composed in honour of the marriage, called "Apollo and Daphne." The Royal Family was all there, the Prince of Wales excepted.'

On April 2, there is an entry:

'I dined at home, and in the evening went to Handel's oratorio called "Deborah."'

An interesting item appears under date of October 21, in connection with Cannons:

'The Duke of Chandos having invited the Indians to Cannons to dinner, Mr. Oglethorpe asked the King what he liked best there. He answered politely, "The Duke's countenance."'

On November 5, the Earl went to hear Farinelli:

'I dined at home, and in the evening went to the opera, where I heard the finest voice that Europe affords, Farinelli, lately come over.'

'Ariodante,' Handel's new opera, was produced on January 8, 1735. A week later the Earl writes:

'I dined at home, and afterwards went to Handel's opera.'

On February 28, 1735, the Earl went to one of Handel's oratorios; and on March 12 and 19 he enjoyed 'Esther,' or 'Hester' as he writes it.

'Alcina' was produced on April 16, 1735, and the Earl notes having heard it on May 14.

Handel's magnificent setting of Dryden's 'Alexander's Feast' was produced on February 19, 1736, and the Earl of Egmont was present the first night, as we learn from the following entry on that date:

'In the evening I went to Mr. Handel's entertainment, who has set Dryden's famous Ode on the Cecilia Feast to very fine music.'

On March 24, 1736, the Earl renewed his acquaintance with Handel's 'Acis and Galatea,' and again went to hear it on March 31. He notes under date of April 14 a visit to hear 'Handel's oratorio called "Hester."'

The marriage of the Prince of Wales naturally demanded something from Handel, and he composed a 'Wedding Anthem,' in regard to which the Earl writes as follows, on April 27:

'The chapel was finely adorned. . . . Over the altar was placed the organ, and a gallery made for the musicians. An Anthem composed by Handel for the occasion was wretchedly sung by Abbot, Gates, Lee, Beard, and a boy.'

We get a glimpse of Handel's opera 'Giustino,' under date of February 7, 1737, an entry in the Diary supplying the information that the Earl's son Hanmer was present on that day at the rehearsal of it.

Nothing of Handelian interest is noted in the Diary during the remainder of the year 1737, but on March 28, 1738, the Earl went to Handel's benefit concert, regarding which he makes the following entry:

'In the evening I went to Handel's oratorio, where I counted near a thousand three hundred persons besides the gallery and upper gallery. I suppose he got this night £1,000.'

On April 7, 1738, the Earl notes having attended a benefit concert for Bertholdi. Nothing else of a musical nature is to be found in the Diary for the remaining months of the year 1738.

Under date of January 16, 1739, the Earl attended a performance of Handel's 'Saul'; and on the 18th the Gentlemen of the Vocal Music Club presented 'Alexander's Feast,' which he describes as 'the famous Oratorio of Handel.' On February 3, he went to hear an unspecified oratorio by Handel, and on April 4 he writes:

'I went in the evening to Handel's new oratorio "The Israelites' flight out of Egypt,"' and on February 28, 1741, we read:

'Went after dinner to hear Handel's mask of "Acis and Galatea," with Dryden's "Ode."'

An interesting entry appears under date of March 14, 1741, from which we learn that the Earl attended the concert for the 'Society of Decayed Musicians':

'Went to the Haymarket, to a music in favour of poor musicians' widows.'

Now once again

COMPOSED BY

PERCY E. FLETCHER.

- 953 A charge to keep I have ... King 4d.
884 A crown of grace for man Brahms 6d.
478 A few more years shall roll H. Blair 4d.
597 A prayer for peace ... Crotch 4d.
801 A solemn prayer ... A. H. Brewer 3d.
935 A song of joy ... John E. West 4d.
917 Abide with me ... Ivor Atkins 4d.
424 Ditto ... R. Dunstan 4d.
805 Adeste Fideles ... H. Hofmann 6d.
927 All go unto one place ... Wesley 4d.
247 All nations whom B. Luard-Selby 6d.
113 All they that trust ... Hiller 1s.
1033 All Thy works ... T. Adams 4d.
475 Ditto ... J. Barnby 6d.
503 Ditto ... G. H. Ely 6d.
30 Ditto ... E. H. Thorne 4d.
719 All ye who seek ... H. M. Higgs 4d.
9 All ye who weep ... Gounod 4d.
592 Alleluia! now is Christ T. Adams 4d.
729 Alleluia! the Lord liveth C. Harris 4d.
548 Almighty Father ... B. Steane 4d.
937 Almighty God, give us ... Wesley 4d.
261 And all the people saw J. Stainer 8d.
699 And God shall wipe Greenish 4d.
1055 And in that day F. R. Rickman 4d.
229 And it was the third hour Elvey 6d.
485 And Jacob was left alone J. Stainer 8d.
658 And Jesus entered H. W. Davies 6d.
732 And suddenly there came H. J. Wood 4d.
1089 And the earth was repeated
- 675 And the Lord said T. W. Stephenson 4d.
357 And the wall of the city Oliver King 4d.
778 And there shall be signs Naylor 6d.
402 And when the day ... C. W. Smith 4d.
861 Angel Spirits P. Tchaikovsky 3d.
642 Angel voices, ever singing E. V. Hall 6d.
611 Angels from the realms C. Cowen 4d.
749 Ditto ... P. E. Fletcher 4d.
751 Ditto ... E. V. Hall 4d.
107 Arise, shine ... T. Adams 4d.
1093 Ditto ... H. A. Chambers 4d.
1112 Ditto ... Ed. Bunnett 4d.
923 Ditto ... G. F. Cobb 6d.
228 Art thou weary ... C. H. Lloyd 8d.
948 As Christ was raised Wareing 4d.
311 As I live, saith the Lord E. T. Chipp 4d.
33 As it began to dawn Ch. Vincent 4d.
498 As Moses lifted up F. Gostelow 4d.
643 As the earth bringeth A. H. Brewer 6d.
24 As the hart pants (s.s.t.b.) Gounod 4d.
147 Ascribe unto the Lord Travers 8d.
109 Ditto ... S. S. Wesley 4d.
399 At the Lamb's High E. V. Hall 4d.
456 At the Sepulchre H. W. Wareing 6d.
957 Author of Life Divine Button 3d.
1091 Ditto ... H. A. Chambers 4d.
660 Awake, awake ... John E. West 4d.
700 Awake, awake, put on Greenish 5d.
56 Ditto ... J. Stainer 8d.
759 Ditto ... Stephenson 6d.
149 Ditto ... M. Wise 6d.
955 Awake! O Zion ... C. Forrester 4d.
199 Awake, thou that sleepest Stainer 8d.
150 Awake up, my glory M. Wise 4d.
744 Be glad and rejoice M. B. Foster 4d.
578 Ditto ... B. Steane 4d.
212 Be glad, O ye righteous H. Smart 6d.
989 Be glad then, ye ... A. Hollins 4d.
143 Be merciful ... H. Purcell 4d.
257 Ditto ... E. A. Sydenham 4d.
597 Be peace on earth ... Crotch 4d.
567 Be Thou exalted ... C. Bayley 4d.
583 Be ye all of one mind A. E. Godfrey 4d.
471 Be ye therefore ... A. S. Baker 4d.
440 Before the heavens H. W. Parker 4d.
651 Behold, all the earth G. F. Huntley 6d.
598 Behold, God is great E. W. Naylor 4d.
865 Behold, God is my John E. West 4d.
636 Ditto ... F. C. Woods 4d.
1035 Behold, how good J. Battisbill 4d.
349 Ditto (Male) ... Caldicott 4d.
349* Ditto (S.A.T.B.) Caldicott 4d.
119 Ditto ... Hamilton Clarke 6d.
89 Behold, I bring you J. Barnby 4d.
348 Ditto ... J. Maude Crament 6d.
1113 Ditto ... Ed. Bunnett 3d.
- 296 Behold, I bring you E. V. Hall 4d.
810 Behold, I come quickly Ivor Atkins 3d.
713 Behold, I have given you C. Harris 4d.
554 Behold, I send ... J. V. Roberts 6d.
587 Behold My servant J. F. Bridge 4d.
65 Behold now, praise J. B. Calkin 4d.
631 Ditto ... F. Iliffe 4d.
912 Ditto ... John E. West 4d.
315 Behold, O God ... F. W. Hird 6d.
524 Behold, the days come Woodward 6d.
1045 Behold the Heaven A. R. Gaul 4d.
652 Behold the Name ... Percy Pitt 6d.
501 Behold, two blind men J. Stainer 4d.
938 Bethlehem ... Ch. Gounod 2d.
378 Bless the Lord ... M. Kingston 6d.
796 Bless the Lord, O my soul Hailing 4d.
855 Bless the Lord thy God Roberts 4d.
450 Bless thou the Lord C. Bayley 4d.
374 Ditto ... Oliver King 3d.
593 Blessed are the dead B. L. Selby 3d.
667 Blessed are the pure A. D. Arnott 4d.
390 Blessed are they ... A. W. Batson 4d.
616 Ditto ... H. H. Blair 4d.
77 Ditto ... W. H. Monk 4d.
112 Ditto ... Arthur Page 3d.
15 Blessed be the God S. S. Wesley 3d.
756 Blessed be the Lord J. Barnby 4d.
570 Ditto ... J. F. Bridge 8d.
895 Ditto ... O. Gibbons 3d.
876 Ditto ... E. V. Hall 8d.
183 Ditto ... Heap 8d.
770 Ditto ... Markham Lee 6d.
331 Ditto ... C. Lee Williams 6d.
1006 Blessed be the Name Macfarren 6d.
724 Blessed be Thou E. C. Bairstow 6d.
1120 Ditto ... Ed. Bunnett 4d.
838 Ditto ... J. Kent 6d.
400 Blessed City ... A. C. Fisher 6d.
284 Blessed is He F. E. Gladstone 3d.
262 Ditto ... C. H. Lloyd 1s.
292 Ditto ... A. C. Mackenzie 6d.
206 Blessed is the man Clarke-Whitfield 4d.
64 Ditto ... John Goss 6d.
760 Ditto ... H. W. Wareing 4d.
1004 Blessed is the soul (s.b.) Macfarren 4d.
286 Blessed Jesu (Stabat Mater) Dvorak 8d.
943 Blessed Lord ... S. S. Wesley 3d.
5 Blessing, glory, wisdom B. Tours 6d.
950 Ditto ... A. H. Brewer 4d.
652 Blow up the trumpet F. Iliffe 4d.
97 Blow ye the trumpet Henry Leslie 4d.
961 Born to-day ... J. P. Sweelinck 4d.
118 Bow Thine ear ... W. Bird 4d.
939 Bread of Heaven ... E. German 4d.
1082 Bread of the world H. A. Chambers 4d.
1024 Break forth into joy W. G. Alcock 4d.
774 Ditto ... H. E. Button 4d.
415 Ditto ... S. Coleridge-Taylor 4d.
798 Ditto ... H. A. Matthews 8d.
92 Ditto ... R. Prentice 8d.
491 Ditto ... B. Steane 4d.
323 Brightest and best ... E. V. Hall 6d.
340 Bring unto the Lord Gladstone 6d.
98 Brother, thou art gone J. Goss 6d.
279 By Babylon's wave Gounod 3d.
107 By the rivers of Babylon L. Samson 6d.
121 By the waters of Babylon Boyce 6d.
644 Ditto ... S. Coleridge-Taylor 4d.
511 Ditto ... H. Clarke 6d.
853 Ditto ... H. M. Higgs 4d.
1074 Ditto ... Palestrina 4d.
1076 Ditto ... H. Goetz 4d.
742 By Thy glorious death A. Dvorak 4d.
116 Call to remembrance J. Battisbill 4d.
952 Ditto ... J. V. Roberts 4d.
680 Calm on the list'ning ear Parker 4d.
841 Cast me not away C. Lee Williams 3d.
975 Ditto ... S. S. Wesley 4d.
497 Christ both died ... E. W. Naylor 4d.
454 Christ is risen G. B. J. Aitken 4d.
368 Ditto ... J. M. Crament 4d.
666 Ditto ... W. Jordan 6d.
533 Ditto ... J. V. Roberts 4d.
814 Ditto ... E. A. Sydenham 4d.
307 Christ our Passover E. V. Hall 4d.
783 Christ the Lord is risen again 6d.
370 Christ the Lord is risen to-day 4d.
- 458 Christians, awake ... J. Barnby 4d.
648 Ditto ... H. M. Higgs 6d.
983 Christmas Day ... G. Holst 6d.
445 Cleanse me, Lord G. F. Wrigley 4d.
989 Come and let us ... A. Hollins 4d.
52 Come, and let us return J. Goss 4d.
95 Ditto ... W. Jackson 4d.
1106 Come, come, help, O God W. Byrd 4d.
805 Come hither, ye faithful Hofmann 6d.
283 Come, Holy Ghost G. Elvey 6d.
201 Ditto ... J. L. Hutton 6d.
829 Ditto ... Palestrina 3d.
4717 Ditto ... C. Lee Williams 3d.
881 Come, let us join our E. V. Hall 4d.
293 Come, my soul ... G. C. Martin 6d.
314 Come now, and let us H. W. Wareing 6d.
1 Come unto Him ... Gounod 3d.
946 Ditto ... H. Leslie 4d.
256 Come unto Me H. R. Coudrey 4d.
635 Ditto ... G. J. Elvey 4d.
103 Ditto (Bach) J. Stainer 4d.
922 Come with high and holy Blair 4d.
1005 Come ye, and let us Macfarren 4d.
748 Come, ye children and J. Booth 4d.
924 Ditto ... H. J. King 4d.
334 Come, ye faithful ... E. V. Hall 4d.
921 Come, ye faithful, raise the strain 4d.
1019 Come, ye Saints ... H. E. Button 4d.
951 Come, ye sin-defiled J. Stainer 3d.
931 Come, ye thankful ... B. Steane 4d.
914 Comes at times ... Woodward 4d.
1008 Ditto ... H. Oakeley 3d.
994 Coronation Offertorium Elgar 3d.
622 Create in me a clean heart P. J. Fry 4d.
688 Crown Him the B. Luard-Selby 3d.
356 Daughters of Jerusalem H. J. King 4d.
449 Dawns the day ... R. H. Legge 4d.
213 Day of Anger (Requiem) Mozart 8d.
682 Day of wrath ... J. Stainer 3d.
252 Death and life ... Walter Parratt 1s.
968 Death is swallowed up in Hollins 4d.
849 Deliver us, O Lord ... Gibbons 4d.
90 Distracted with care ... Haydn 6d.
887 Do not I fill heaven ... H. H. Blair 4d.
737 Doth not wisdom cry D. S. Smith 4d.
703 Drop down, ye heavens Stainer 6d.
277 Enter not into Judgment Clarke 3d.
362 Eternal source ... F. Brandeis 4d.
1008 Evening and Morning Oakeley 3d.
854 Exalt ye the Lord H. Elliot Button 4d.
704 Except the Lord build Edwards 4d.
771 Ditto ... Eaton Faning 6d.
628 Ditto ... H. Gadsby 6d.
470 Eye hath not seen (S.A.) Foster 4d.
584 Ditto (S.A.T.B.) M. B. Foster 4d.
625 Far be sorrow ... E. V. Hall 4d.
672 Far from the world H. W. Parker 4d.
329 Far from their home Woodward 4d.
364 Father, hear the prayer F. Brandeis 3d.
703 Father, now Thy grace W. Coenen 4d.
46 Father of Heaven Walmisley 4d.
384 Father of Life ... S. J. Gilbert 4d.
768 Father of mercies E. V. Hall 4d.
1065 Ditto ... S. P. Waddington 4d.
671 Ditto ... John E. West 4d.
1050 Fear not, O land ... E. Elgar 4d.
28 Ditto ... John Goss 4d.
916 Ditto ... W. Jordan 4d.
872 Fear Thou not, for I am J. Booth 2d.
446 Flee from evil ... W. J. Clarke 4d.
553 For a small moment J. Stainer 3d.
254 For ever blessed Mendelssohn 4d.
198 For the mountains L. Samson 4d.
901 For this mortal ... S. S. Wesley 4d.
728 Forsake me not ... J. Goss 6d.
273 From the deep I called ... Spohr 8d.
227 Give ear, O Lord T. M. Pattison 3d.
433 Give ear, O Shepherd A. Whiting 4d.
88 Give ear, O ye heavens Armes 4d.
956 Ditto ... W. G. Alcock 4d.
604 Give thanks, O Israel Ouseley 6d.
741 Give the King thy W. G. Alcock 8d.
990 Ditto ... A. H. Brewer 4d.
309 Give the Lord ... C. H. Lloyd 1s.
383 Give unto the Lord H. W. Parker 6d.
933 Glorious and powerful God Gibbons 4d.
1039 Glorious in Heaven Vittoria 4d.

NOW ONCE AGAIN

CAROL-ANTHEM FOR CHRISTMAS

WORDS BY W. H. LESLIE AND H. R. BRAMLEY

MUSIC BY

PERCY E. FLETCHER

(FOUNDED ON THE MELODY "LASST UNS ERFREUEN," 1623)

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED; NEW YORK: THE H. W. GRAY CO., SOLE AGENTS FOR THE U.S.A.

With joyful animation.  $\text{♩} = 80$

ORGAN

f Sw. Reeds Full Sw.

Sw. to Ped.

SOPRANO

Now once a - gain our hearts we raise In hymns of thank-ful-ness and

ALTO

Now once a - gain our hearts we raise In hymns of . . thankful-ness and

TENOR

Now once a - gain our hearts we raise . . In hymns of thank-ful-ness and

BASS

Now once a - gain our hearts we raise In hymns of thank-ful-ness and

mf Gt. Sw. coupl.

Gt. to Sw.

Copyright, 1924, by Novello and Company, Limited

NOW ONCE AGAIN

praise. Al - le - lu - ia, Al - le - lu - ia. Give praise to God this joy - ful praise. Al - le - lu - ia, Al - le - lu - ia. Give praise to God this joy - ful praise. . . . Al - le - lu - ia, Al - le - lu - ia. Give praise. Al - le - lu - ia, Al - le - lu - ia. Give praise to God this joy - ful

mf f mf f mf f

Sw. Gt.

morn, On which the King of Kings was born. Al - le - morn, . . . On . . . which the King of Kings was born. . . . Al - le - praise to God this joy - ful morn, The King was born. Al - le - morn, On which the King of Kings was born. Al - le -

mf cres. f

- lu - ia, Al - le - lu - ia, Al - le - lu - ia, Al - le -

mf cres. f

- lu - ia, Al - le - lu - ia, Al - le - lu - ia, Al - le -

mf cres. f

- lu - ia, Al - le - lu - ia, Al - le - lu - ia, Al - le -

mf cres. f

- lu - ia, Al - le - lu - ia, Al - le - lu - ia, . . . Al - le -

mf Sw. cres. Gt. f

Ped.

NOW ONCE AGAIN

lu - ia, Al - le - lu - ia.

lu - ia, Al - le - lu - ia.

lu - ia, Al - le - lu - ia.

lu - ia, Al - le - lu - ia.

mf For

mf For

mf Gt.

Sv. to Ped.

mf For un - to us . . this day, He . . was born. Al - le mf For un - to us . . this day, He . . was born. Al - le - un - to us was born this day, He who shall wipe all tears a - way. Al - le - un - to us was born this day, He who shall wipe all tears a - way. Al - le - mf Sv.

mf lu - ia. Give thanks to God this joy - ful mf lu - ia, Al - le - lu - ia. Give thanks to God this mf lu - ia, Al - le - lu - ia. Give thanks to God this joy - ful morn, On mf lu - ia. Give thanks to God this joy - ful morn, On

Sv. Gt.

NOW ONCE AGAIN

morn, Give thanks to God. Al - le - lu - ia, Al - le - morn, Give thanks to God. Al - le - lu - ia, Al - le - which the King of Kings was born. Al - le - lu - ia, Al - le - lu - ia, Al - le - which the King of Kings was born. Al - le - lu - ia, Al - le -
 - lu - ia, Al - le - lu - ia, Al - le - lu - ia.
 - lu - ia, Al - le - lu - ia, Al - le - lu - ia.
 - lu - ia, Al - le - lu - ia, Al - le - lu - ia.
 - lu - ia, Al - le - lu - ia, Al - le - lu - ia.
 Gt. f
 Gt. f
 Gt. to Ped.
 SOLO (or a few voices)
mp
 To you this day is born a
dim.
mp Sw.
 Sw. to Ped.

NOW ONCE AGAIN

Child, Of Ma-ry, cho-sen Vir-gin mild: Al-le-lu-ia, Al-le-

Al-le-

Al-le-

Al-le-

Al-le-

Solo cres.
 lu - ia. That bless-ed Child, so sweet and kind, Shall give you joy and peace of lu - ia.
 lu - ia.
 lu - ia.
mp cres.

mind.

FULL

mf

Al - le - lu - ia, Al - le - lu - ia. f 'Tis

mf

Al - le - lu - ia, Al - le - lu - ia. f 'Tis

mf

Al - le - lu - ia, Al - le - lu - ia. f 'Tis

mf

Al - le - lu - ia. f 'Tis

f Gt.

Gt. to Ped.

( 6 )

THEMATIC LIST OF ORGAN PIECES

PUBLISHED BY NOVELLO AND COMPANY LIMITED

DIFFICULT

CHORAL SONG and FUGUE

CHORAL SONG

♩ = 100

S. S. Wesley

MANUAL f G♯ etc.

PEDAL G♯ to Ped.

FUGUE

♩ = 112

MANUAL mf G♯ etc.

(Time of performance about 7 minutes.)

Original Compositions for the Organ by S. S. Wesley. Edited by G. M. Garrett, N<sup>o</sup> 6. Price 2/3

DIFFICULT

INTRODUCTION and VARIATIONS

on a Ground Bass

INTRODUCTION

Andante maestoso

Battison Haynes

MANUAL Full Organ ff Sw. p etc.

PEDAL ff

VARIATIONS

Ground Bass

Moderato

PEDAL p 16 & 8 ft. etc.

Last Variation

MANUAL ff Full Organ ten. ten. ten. ten. etc.

PEDAL ten. ten.

(Time of performance about 9 minutes.)

Original Compositions for the Organ No. 109. Price 3/-

MODERATELY DIFFICULT

PRELUDE on "RORATE CÆLI"

Anthony Bernard

Andantino

MANUAL

Sw.

pp

etc.

PEDAL

p

with 32 f!

pp

2nd Extract

a tempo!

Sw. add Oboe

p

etc.

(Time of performance about 5 minutes.)

Copyright, 1916, by Novello & Company, Limited

Original Compositions for the Organ (New Series) No. 46. Price 1/6

MODERATELY DIFFICULT

FANTASIA on OLD CHRISTMAS CAROLS

William Faulkes

Allegro moderato

MANUAL

G! (coup. to Sw.)

f

mf Sw.

etc.

PEDAL

f

("What Child is this?")

2nd Extract

Moderato

Ch. Fl. 8 f!

mp

G! Gamba

f

p Sw. Vox Humana (Trem.)

G!

etc.

("The moon shines bright")

(Time of performance about 5 minutes.)

Copyright, 1907, by Novello & Company, Limited

Original Compositions for the Organ No. 378. Price 2/3

MODERATELY EASY

A CHRISTMAS PASTORAL

On the Introit "Hodie Christus natus est" and the Hymns "Corde natus," and "Adeste Fideles"

Poco Allegretto ♩ = 100

B. Luard-Selby

MANUAL

pp Sw. sempre legato etc.

PEDAL

2nd Extract

Poco più lento

Ch. soft Flute

Sw

Ch.

Sw. Voix Celeste & 8 ft. stop

Ch.

Sw

etc.

(Time of performance about 6 minutes.)

Copyright, 1899, by Novello & Company, Limited

Original Compositions for the Organ No. 282. Price 2/3

MODERATELY EASY

BERCEUSE

E. H. Lemare

Larghetto ♩ = 60

III

MANUAL

I pp p espress. etc.

PEDAL

2nd Extract

pp

a tempo

III (Celeste only)

cresc.

dim. e rit.

etc.

soft 32 ft

(Time of performance about 5 minutes.)

Copyright, 1901, by Novello & Company, Limited

Lemare Original Compositions No. 13. Price 2/3

EASY

SURSUM CORDA

Andante ♩ = 76

J. Ireland

MANUAL

Sw.

PEDAL

etc.

(Time of performance about 4 minutes.)

Copyright, 1911, by Novello & Company, Limited

Original Compositions for the Organ No. 421. Price 1/6

EASY

TWELVE MONOLOGUES

Nº 1.

Con moto ♩ = 116

J. Rheinberger

MANUAL

ff

PEDAL

ff

etc.

(Time of performance about 3 minutes.)

Original Compositions for the Organ No. 133. Price 1/6

NOW ONCE AGAIN

Christ our Lord and God in - deed, Your help and stay in ev - 'ry need: Him-self your

Christ our Lord and God in - deed, Your help and stay in ev - 'ry need: Him-self your

Christ our Lord and God in - deed, Your help and stay in ev - 'ry need: Him-self your

Christ our Lord and God in - deed, Your help and stay in ev - 'ry need: Him-self your

dim.
Sa - viour He will be, . . From sin and death to set you free. . .

dim.
Sa - viour He will be, . . From sin and death to set you free. . .

dim.
Sa - viour He will be, . . From sin and death to set you free. . .

dim.
Sa - viour He will be, . . From sin and death to set you free. . .

dim. mp Ch. Sw. coupd.
Ch. to Ped.

NOW ONCE AGAIN

With simple grace

QUARTET OR SEMI-CHORUS *

With simple grace. ♩. = 63

* Where the Choir is divided, one verse of this movement may be sung by the Decani and the other by the Cantoris.

NOW ONCE AGAIN

The World Up-holds and Made. . . Then let us all our

The World Up-holds and Made. . . Then let us all our

The World Up-holds and Made. . . Then let us all our

The World Up-holds and Made. . . Then let us all our

p Sw.

glad - ness shew, And with the joy - ful shep - herds go, . . . To see what God for glad - ness shew, And with the joy - ful shep - herds go, . . . To see what God for glad - ness shew, And with the joy - ful shep - herds go, . . . To see what God for glad - ness shew, And with the joy - ful shep - herds go, . . . To see what God for [illegible]

NOW ONCE AGAIN

p Ch.

The piano introduction consists of two staves. The right hand plays a series of eighth and sixteenth notes, while the left hand plays a steady eighth-note accompaniment. The key signature has two flats (B-flat and E-flat), and the time signature is 3/2.

Original time

Full mf

A-round His throne thus may we sing, mf

A-round His throne thus may we

A-round His throne thus may we sing, mf

A-round His throne thus may we

The first system contains four vocal staves. The first three staves have lyrics, and the fourth staff is a continuation of the previous line. The dynamics are marked mf (mezzo-forte).

Original time

mf Sw.

Sw. to Ped.

The piano accompaniment for the first system consists of two staves. The right hand plays a series of eighth and sixteenth notes, while the left hand plays a steady eighth-note accompaniment. The dynamics are marked mf Sw. (mezzo-forte, Swell) and Sw. to Ped. (Swell to Pedal).

When all Cre - a - tion owns Him King, . . . Praise to sing, . . . When all Cre - a - tion owns Him King, . .

When all Cre - a - tion owns Him King, . . Praise, . .

sing, . . When all Cre - a - tion owns Him King, . .

The second system contains four vocal staves and two piano staves. The vocal staves have lyrics, and the piano staves provide accompaniment. The dynamics are marked cres. (crescendo) and f (forte).

NOW ONCE AGAIN
broadening out

God this joy - ful morn, . . Al - le - lu - ia.

Praise to God this joy - ful morn, . . Al - le - lu - ia.

praise to God this joy - ful morn, . . Al - le - lu - ia.

Praise to God this joy - ful morn, . . Al - le - lu - ia.

Slower, and with dignity

So once a - gain our hearts we raise . . In hymns of

So once a - gain our hearts we raise . . In hymns of

So once a - gain our hearts we raise . . In hymns of

So once a - gain our hearts we raise . . In hymns of Slower, and with dignity.  $\text{♩} = 72$

f Gt.

Gt. to Ped.

thank-ful-ness and praise, . . Al - le - lu - ia, Al - le - lu - ia. Give thank-ful-ness and praise, . . Al - le - lu - ia, Al - le - lu - ia. . . Give thank-ful-ness and praise, . . Al - le - lu - ia, Al - le - lu - ia. . . Give thank-ful-ness and praise, . . Al - le - lu - ia, Al - le - lu - ia. Give

NOW ONCE AGAIN

praise to God this joy - ful morn, On which the King of Kings was born. mf Al - le - praise to God this joy - ful morn, . . . On which the King of Kings was born. . . . mf Al - le - praise to God this joy - ful morn, . . . On which the King of Kings was born. mf Al - le - praise to God this joy - ful morn, . . . On which the King of Kings was born. . . . mf Al - le -

cres. very broadly ff

- lu - ia, Al - le - lu - ia, Al - le - lu - ia, Al - le -

cres. ff

- lu - ia, Al - le - lu - ia, Al - le - lu - ia, Al - le -

cres. ff

- lu - ia, Al - le - lu - ia, Al - le - lu - ia, Al - le -

cres. ff

- lu - ia, Al - le - lu - ia, Al - le - lu - ia, Al - le -

cres. ff very broadly

- lu - ia, Al - le - lu - ia.

- lu - ia, Al - le - lu - ia.

- lu - ia, Al - le - lu - ia.

- lu - ia, Al - le - lu - ia.

ff

From other sources we learn that at the concert Handel performed his Serenata of 'Parnasso in Festa,' while other artists included San Martini, Weidemann, Clegg, Miller, and Caporale.

So much obscurity attaches to Handel's movements from April 1 to September, 1741, that the following entry from the Diary under date of April 8 is of importance:

'After dinner I went into Lincoln's Inn Playhouse to hear Handel's music for the last time, he intending to go to Spa in Germany.'

No other Handelian reference occurs until February 10, 1744, when the Earl went to hear Handel's secular oratorio 'Semele,' which he describes as an 'opera.' Five days later he again went to hear 'the opera of "Semele."' On March 2, the Earl was present at the first performance of 'Joseph':

'In the evening went to hear Handel's oratorio called, "Joseph in Egypt," an inimitable composition.'

So pleased was he that he paid a second visit to hear it on March 7. His partiality for 'Semele' is evidenced by a third visit on December 8. However, in the Diary, on this date, the Earl correctly describes it as an 'oratorio.'

Handel's new oratorio of 'Hercules' was first given on January 7, 1745, and the Earl notes a visit to hear it on January 12. He went to hear 'Samson' on March 8, and he was at the first production in England (it had previously been performed in Ireland) of Arne's oratorio 'Alfred,' on March 20.

Although the Diary is continued to August, 1747, no further Handelian references occur. The Earl died less than a year later, on May 1, 1748.—Yours, &c.,

W. H. GRATTAN-FLOOD.

HANDEL AND KERL

SIR,—Mr. William C. Smith's interesting article in the October Musical Times, 'Foot-Notes to Musical History,' with its account of some early printed music at the British Museum, has a special interest, as throwing some light on a disputed question, viz., whether Handel's use of foreign material was concealed, or, on the contrary, perfectly open.

One of the items which has been most frequently criticised is the adaptation, with little alteration, of a Canzona, by J. C. Kerl, for the chorus 'Egypt was glad' in 'Israel in Egypt' (1738). This Canzona appears, as Mr. Smith has noted, in the British Museum copy of a collection of organ and harpsichord pieces by Pasquini and others, published by Walsh in London. This edition, which was a reprint (with some additions, I believe) of a collection published by Roger, 1704, at Amsterdam, bears—like a similar reprint by Mortier, at Amsterdam—no date, so that conceivably Walsh's reprint might have been at some date later than 1738.

However, the British Museum copy removes this possibility, for in it the name of Hare is added to that of Walsh, as publisher. Now John Hare died in 1725, and his son, Joseph Hare, in 1733 (see 'Grove's Dictionary,' 2nd ed., s.v. Hare), so that the date was certainly earlier than 1738, and probably the conjectural dating of the British Museum copy, 1715, is not far wrong.

Here, then, we have a piece popular enough to be included in a collection of popular pieces at Amsterdam in 1704, which collection was popular enough to be reprinted by Walsh, a man highly unlikely to publish without expectation of a considerable sale. This Canzona must have been well-known to London organists and harpsichord players about 1715. There is no reason whatever to suppose it was not well-known in 1738. On the other hand, seeing that musicians live as long as other people, and have equally good memories, it is practically impossible that some at least should not have still remembered it. Dr. Pepusch, for instance, who preceded Handel as organist to the Duke of Chandos, was alive and vigorous in 1738. He was the founder and head of the Academy of Antient Musick, and is credited with a fondness for music written, like this Canzona, in one of the old modes. As it happened, the Academy gave several performances of part of 'Israel' a few weeks after its production.

The theory, then, that Handel introduced this adaptation secretly is monstrously improbable. And the 'secrecy' theory is equally gratuitous when applied to borrowings by Handel, or any other early composer. To take an example: some twenty years ago it was asserted (see International Musical Society's Journal, vol. vii., p. 35), that the favourite melody of Bach's 'Mein gläubiges Herze' ('My heart ever faithful') comes from a work by Christian Ritter. Supposing this to be true, and that now no proof could be given that Ritter's work was known to anyone else at Leipzig in Bach's time, the imputation of secrecy to Bach would be quite unjustifiable.—Yours, &c.,

Manchester.

P. ROBINSON.

October, 1924.

'A COMMENTARY UPON MENDELSSOHN'

SIR,—I have not hitherto thought it necessary to intrude upon the interesting correspondence that has arisen over my 'Commentary upon Mendelssohn'—not even so far as to thank Mr. Peter Piper for his defence of my point of view. But Mr. Wearham's insinuations I cannot pass without a reply. Let me assure Mr. Wearham that I am indeed he who accompanied Mr. Goss's Smoking Concert, which, however, in no way 'justifies his summary criticism.' At least I have heard and studied Mendelssohn's music, while Mr. Wearham has not had the courtesy to consult even the programme, and so see that this accompaniment was not written by me, nor yet to attend 'the little adventure into the underworld of music' which he so fluently condemns. Thus at best his is a cavilling comment. But it is worse. He has not devoted a moment's thought to the human, artistic, or antiquarian interest of that song and that concert; he condemns me on words quoted from the news-page of the Daily Mail; he confuses the solemn with the serious, a fault against which I warned your readers in my recent articles; and finally, he is guilty of a complete non sequitur. I would suggest to Mr. Wearham that his loudly whispered advice would be more welcome and more valuable if he would give some sign that he had considered my inexplicable activities with a trifle more interest and care.—Yours, &c.,

Oxford University Press,
Amen House, E.C.4.

HUBERT J. FOSS.

October, 1924.

CHANTING

SIR,—With reference to the article on 'Chanting' by the Rev. Donald MacArthur in the October issue of the Musical Times, it is unfortunate that he should take the Te Deum as an example, when discussing the chanting of the Psalms. The Te Deum was never meant for chanting to a psalm-chant, and is not constructed on the same lines as the Psalms. It is not Hebrew poetry at all. It was never 'pointed' for chanting psalm-wise in the Prayer Book before the 17th century. For centuries it never had any but its own proper melody.

These facts are freely brought home to one in a church where the practice is adopted of reading the Psalms in alternate half-verses. Sometimes this practice is extended to the Te Deum, when the result is simply grotesque.

I do not want to enter into the question whether it is lawful to ignore the 'the authoritative colon' in chanting the Te Deum, but it is notorious that this is almost invariably done, without protest, when the Te Deum is sung to a specially-composed, elaborate melody.—Yours, &c.,

Rustington,
Littlehampton.

F. G. P. WYATT.

October, 1924.

TRAYHERNE'S 'MAZEPPA' GALOP

SIR,—If any reader possesses a copy of this work, published in the 'sixties, I should be glad if he would write to me with a view to its sale or loan.—Yours, &c.,

99, Edith Road, Kensington, W.14. J. H. MOORE.
October, 1924.

THOMAS RAVENSCROFT

SIR,—I have read Mr. Jeffrey Mark's article on Ravenscroft, in your October issue, with great interest. I think, however, that it should be pointed out that he has given a quite incorrect version of the canon 'Hey hoe, what shall I say?' To begin with, it is a nine-part canon, not an eight-part canon. Then, it is not in C major, but in the Dorian mode. Substitute the C clef for the G clef, and the canon will read more or less correctly, beginning thus:

Mr. Mark's ending is, however, wrong. It should be:

I have recently made a careful copy of all the Ravenscroft rounds from the original edition in the British Museum, and it is from this copy that I furnish these corrections.

'Wee be souldiers three' is also incorrect. Using Mr. Mark's barring, bar 6 should read:

(no slur is given), and bar 14:

In bar 9 there should be no flat (unless my copying is at fault).

I do not understand what Mr. Mark means by saying of the version of 'Three Blind Mice,' in 'Deuteromalia,' that 'the tune does not bear any resemblance to that sung to-day.' The old tune is obviously the father, or the grandfather, of the tune with which we are all familiar. I give it in full:

The original is a fourth lower, with the C clef.—Yours, &c.,

St. Michael's College, HEATHCOTE D. STATHAM.

Tenbury.

October, 1924.

[We sent the above to Mr. Mark, who replies:

SIR,—In the case of 'Hey hoe, what shall I say?' and 'Wee be souldiers three,' I ought to have said that I was quoting from memory. Since the time that I first saw them (also in the British Museum copy) I have been in the habit of singing them to myself from time to time. In this way I must somehow have managed to corrupt the first into a C major tune. I am obliged to Mr. Statham for quoting the authentic text, and can promise him that when next I vocalise on this subject I will certainly stray back to the Dorian mode.

With regard to the tune which Mr. Statham gives for 'Three Blind Mice,' I quite agree with what he says. It was careless of me not to notice what now seems to be a very obvious resemblance.—Yours, &c.,

JEFFREY MARK.]

SIR,—In 'The Euterpe Round Book,' edited by Mr. Charles Kennedy Scott, and published by Breitkopf & Härtel in 1913, I find that Ravenscroft's Canon, 'Hey hoe, what shall I say?' is given as follows:

This is obviously a minor tune, just as certainly as the one quoted in the interesting article on Ravenscroft in the October Musical Times by your contributor, Mr. Jeffrey Mark, is a major tune.

What is the reason for this difference? Perhaps one of your readers, well-versed in the subject (or Mr. Mark himself), can throw some light on the matter?—Yours, &c.,

28, Hilldrop Crescent, N.7.

FELIX WHITE.

October, 1924.

NOTATION OF THE HORN: SOME ALTERED MEANINGS

SIR,—Mr. Wotton, in his interesting article in the September number of the Musical Times, has drawn attention to the supposed change that has taken place in the meaning of the familiar French term 'cuivré.' But in laying down that it has, now or at any time, become a mere equivalent of 'bouché,' he slips, in that he fails to perceive the inadequacy of the evidence he furnishes in support of so remarkable a statement.

As yet he has not managed, from the bonded warehouse of his knowledge, to unearth one example from any French composition in which 'cuivré' alone, without any indication express or implied, of hand-stopping, means that a closed note is to be forced; even his examples dated after 1904, the date of publication of Widor's 'Technique de l'Orchestre Moderne,' conform with Berlioz's not very precise definition. Widor's book is, in fact, his only material evidence; for it seems hardly the point to show that certain kind Italians, who presumably had studied their Widor, have taken up the neglected 'bouché,' dressed it in Italian costume, and sent it out as 'chiuso' to do the work of 'cuivré.' In the absence of support from scores, one looks, and looks in vain, for some information on the present practice of horn-players in France. After all, it is the player with whom such terms usually originate, and on whom rests the responsibility of converting them into something more than abstract expressions. May I supply the deficiency? Some time ago I consulted a friend—who resides and has played the horn professionally in Paris, and is fully acquainted with the current methods there—on the exact meaning of 'cuivré.' His reply confirmed my belief that Berlioz's definition alone holds the field; but he emphasised more clearly than did Berlioz the necessity for a strong sforzando on the note, followed by a well-marked diminuendo. It is, in fact, the explosive attack, if one may so term it, that produces the desired brassy or strident effect by strengthening the upper partials; and it is applicable to open and closed sounds alike.

'Cuivrer les sons,' then, relates entirely to the method of sound generation, and has nothing to do with such an effect as stopping, which modifies the sounds after their generation. To neglect this distinction is comparable to confusing the light with the lamp-shade.

The æsthetic effect of the open 'sons cuivrés,' as the quotations from Bizet and Massenet show, resides in the imitation of the clang produced by striking a bell or other metallic object, and is precisely hit off in the words of Puncto himself: 'En frappant fort avec la langue et diminuant le son en sorte qu'il produise le même effet que le tintement d'une cloche' ('Méthode . . . des 1er et 2nd Cors,' Paris, c. 1795). It cannot be proved, but I strongly suspect, that it was this resemblance to the clang of striking metal that originated the term. The French language is surely incapable of anything so banal as directing a brass instrument to play like a brass instrument!

It can hardly have escaped Mr. Wotton's attention that, if composers were to restrict the term 'cuivré' to stopped notes, they would be depriving themselves of any means of indicating those open sounds, as in 'L'Arlésienne,' that have hitherto been familiar as 'sons cuivrés,' until some new term should arise to take its place.

It looks, therefore, as if we had to do with a simple piece of carelessness on the part of Widor. In a treatise on modern orchestral technique, a writer's duty is to record existing practice, and he has no moral justification for making alterations or innovations in the accepted meaning of technical terms. So far as can be made out from the English translation of Widor's book, which is all that I have at hand, this is what he has done. But in his final directions (p. 60 of the translation) he says, in a passage to which Mr. Wotton does not appear to refer:

'In order to avoid all chance of misunderstanding, we must in future confine ourselves to the two following formulæ—Con Sordini for all pianissimo effects; Cuivré (with a +) for stopped effects forte.'

No exception can be taken to this, which does not conflict with previous practice; but the fact of his not permitting 'cuivré' to stand without + in these, his final directions, suggests that he was conscious all the time that the word is also applicable to open sounds, and greatly weakens the force of the passages on which Mr. Wotton relies.

Adequately to discuss the remainder of Mr. Wotton's article would be beyond the scope of a letter; in any case it would be unprofitable to deal with his instances seriatim. Possibly I may find an opportunity some day of treating the general subject of hand-stopping, which, as the article shows, is of more than merely antiquarian interest. In that event, any points raised by Mr. Wotton that call for comment will fall into their proper places.

As, however, he contends that notes marked with + have different values in 'Tristan' and 'Die Meistersinger' respectively, may I again appeal to authority? On this point the late Adolph Borsdorf informed me a few months before his death (and illustrated his information by playing relevant passages) that under Richter, whose principal horn in England he was for many years, no distinction was made in the manner of stopping these notes between the works in question. Having regard to Richter's career as a horn-player, and his relations with Wagner, it is difficult to see what more authoritative statement can be made on the point, unless some further memorandum by Wagner himself be unearthed.—Yours, &c., W. F. H. BLANDFORD.
Isleworth.

SIR,—After carefully reading Mr. Wotton's article in the Musical Times, I fail to follow the writer's point. Is he trying to elucidate or create a mystery? There is no doubt in the mind of the orchestral player—in this country, at any rate—as to what he has to do under any of the following circumstances:

- (a) The part is marked 'Bouché,' or +.
- (b) " " " 'Sourdine.'
- (c) " " " 'Cuivrez.'

(N.B.—+ is seldom used in modern French scores except to indicate exactly how many notes are covered by the term 'bouché' placed at the beginning of a phrase.)

Before going on to explain what these terms mean to a horn-player—but not necessarily to the score reader (and each has a very definite and special meaning), I must beg leave to disagree with Mr. Wotton when he says, 'the mechanical part does not concern us.' It does. Ignorance of the complex and, by the layman, little understood technique of the horn is, undoubtedly, the main cause of altered meanings such as those to which Mr. Wotton refers. It is therefore necessary to explain the means by which the various tone-qualities are produced.

(a) 'Bouché' (Anglice, 'stopped').—Its literal and only meaning is that the bell is to be occluded by means of the hand. In these days, when the hand horn is no longer taught, the majority of horn-players employ but one method of stopping, and that is the maximum degree of occlusion possible with the hand. It was superfluous in the days of the valveless horn to mark a note 'stopped,' as it was necessarily either stopped or open according to its position in the scale (the rare exceptions which were obtainable by more than one degree of stopping need not be mentioned: they varied with different players, always, in practice, with the same result). Consequently a note marked 'bouché' cannot mean anything but a fully stopped note, which can be played ppp or fff, and though while forte the tone becomes 'cuivré' of necessity, it may be made 'cuivré' if required when played piano.

(b) 'Sourdine,' or mute.—This is an external contrivance which simply serves to alter the tone-colour, the latter being quite different from that obtained by stopping. Again it can be used for piano or forte effects, while the tone may be brassy or not as desired. In either case the tone-quality differs entirely from that produced by hand stopping. It also differs considerably according to whether a metal, wooden, or paper-mache mute is used, a fact that seems to have been overlooked alike by composers and writers on instrumentation. The metal mute holds the day in England, and the wooden mute in France. Low notes are generally bad with the wooden mute, and 'cuivré' effects are difficult to obtain. Notes played with a mute are less 'stuffy' in quality than hand-stopped notes.

(c) 'Cuivré,' or brassy.—This tone-quality is solely dependent upon the method of attacking the notes. It requires an experienced horn-player to do it piano, and is to a certain extent dependent on the length of the crook used and on the bore of the instrument (e.g., it is easier on the Trompe de chasse—in D, with a narrower bore than the orchestral horn—than on the French horn in F). In forte passages it is easy, and is even difficult to avoid with some of the old French instruments modernised which are so popular in England. Mr. Wotton mentions a passage in Debussy's 'Jeux' for horns piano, légèrement cuivré. In marking that passage Debussy calls neither for the mute nor for hand stopping, and a player who attempted either in the orchestra would at once be hauled over the coals. It is true that very slight stopping (not enough to alter the pitch a semitone) does help to produce the brassy tone—no doubt on account of the slight lengthening of the air-column—but if this method is employed the pitch must be corrected by the tuning-slide.

The brassy tone is produced by putting a sufficient amount of viciousness into the attack, followed up in piano passages by a small volume of air, and in forte passages by a large volume, the sound generally being allowed to die away more or less rapidly after the manner of a bell. There is always a strong accent on the original attack. Widor, in his 'Technique de l'Orchestre Moderne' (2nd ed., 1904, p. 68), says of sons cuivrés: 'Dans la grande force, les virtuoses cuivent les sons ouverts eux-mêmes, sans le secours de la main' ('In fortissimo passages players "brass" open notes without the help of the hand'). This passage seems to have been overlooked by Mr. Wotton, an omission which is likely to mislead in the light of the remainder of Widor's remarks. This explains the example quoted from Berlioz's 'Damnation de Faust,' and bears out my point that the 'cuivré' effect is quite feasible either open or stopped.

The marking of the 'Carillon' of 'L'Arlésienne' as Chiuso is obviously a blunder, but cujusvis hominis est errare. The proper term to have employed was Metallico, according to an Italian horn-player now in Paris, and formerly of the Scala at Milan.

As to the example from the 'Capriccio Espagnole,' we have already seen that in these days there is but one method of stopping, and that of course is the one employed. Notes are not necessarily 'brassed' because they are stopped, and the passage is always played in France with a slight alteration of the nuances marked, namely, f instead of mf for the first half, and mf instead of p for the second, but without any 'brassing'.—Yours, &c.,

Paris.

R. MORLEY PEGGE.

October, 1924.

PRIEST-ORGANISTS

SIR,—Dr. Moody is fond of his gibe, but unconvincing in argument. He asserts, giving no reasons, that the position and duties of a priest-organist are outside the priestly office. I differ, and I gave my reasons last month. I suppose we shall each continue to hold our own opinion, for this is the fundamental point. This will be my last letter to you on the matter.

Dr. Moody wishes absolutely to exclude priests as Cathedral organists, because the position of organist, he says, should be held by men who have been trained for a specialised branch of the musical profession. It is good to find that he has now limited his argument, and no longer supports the original condemnation of all priest-organists as such, for the acceptance of that principle would rule out three-quarters of the Church organists in existence. Every one knows that the full-time trained professional organist is by comparison a rara avis even in large towns. Most organists are half-timers, so Dr. Moody's gibe about ill-prepared sermons recoils upon his own profession, for I make no doubt he knows how frequent are thoughtless accompaniments and ill-prepared voluntaries! The average Church organist gets his living in business or professional work, and adds from £10 per annum upwards to his income by his work as organist. There is no valid reason why, under present conditions, he should not do so, nor why a priest should not do the same.

With regard to Cathedral priest-organists, those few holding this office at present are, I believe, qualified under Dr. Moody's own requirement. The amount of time which each priest-organist spends on the different sides of his work is his own affair, and is measured by results, both spiritual and material. I leave this point for them to fight out with Dr. Moody! But I think there is no need for jealousy. There are never likely to be very many priests who by reason of training and experience are capable of filling Cathedral posts. Nevertheless, the doors of the organ-lofts can never be bolted and barred to priests until all professional organists form themselves into a trade union and admit none but whole-timers.

But I think that there is a side to this question which has never fully been faced and thought out. It is this: Why, in some cases, is a priest-organist sought for or appointed? Dr. Moody suggests 'backstairs' considerations. Now I certainly do not wish to claim for clergy any spiritual monopoly. But, with very great respect to lay-organists, of whom I myself was formerly one, and with many of whom I am in fairly close touch now, I venture to suggest a possible answer. First, there is abundant need in some cases for the subordination of self and technical work in service accompaniment to the fuller expression of the true spirit of the words sung; and for a more real endeavour to give both congregation and choir every chance adequately to express their worship in song. Again, many organists are either indifferent or opposed to the great revival in real Church music now taking place, while many priests are very interested in it. How many Church organists have read the 'Archbishops' Report' on Music in Worship, issued last year? Fifty per cent., I wonder? How many organists are really studying to make use of plainsong in the light of recent research, or singing to Anglican chants in speech-rhythm? Once more, some simple knowledge of liturgical studies is essential, but often lacking. The need for all this can be traced right through many services, from the beginning of the introductory voluntary to the close of the concluding one.

The theological studies of a priest do now, in several colleges, include a certain amount of Church music, and there is always the study of liturgies. Musical priests are keenly interested in the musical and liturgical researches and work of such men as the Rev. Dr. Woodward, the Rev. Dr. Fellowes, the Bishop of Truro, the Bishop of Ripon, the Rev. G. Palmer, Sir Richard Terry, Prof. Charles Wood, and others, because they know that they are making contributions of real value to Divine worship.

In fact, many clergy to-day often know much more about what is really good and fitting in Church worship and about music generally than they did even a few years ago. May I dare to ask that some organists, for their part, will study more deeply the liturgical and devotional aspects of the worship of the Church?—Yours, &c.,

(REV.) A. M. SAMSON.

P.S.—Will Mr. T. Francis Forth kindly accept my thanks for his helpful letter?

SIR,—Mr. Forth has put a great case for the priest-organist, and makes one very good suggestion—admit such organists as are suitable to the office of deacon. No one can deny that the organist is a very important minister in the Church service; at least, a bad organist would do far more damage to the congregation's feelings than a bad priest, let the priest preach or sing the service never so badly. Admitting organists to Holy Orders would give some recognition to them which is generally lacking, and since they could then be admitted as assistant-curates (for musical duties), possibly their salaries could be augmented from curate funds and other sources which supply grants for curates. There would also follow an improvement in the vexed question of security. Curates discharged on the whim of a vicar have a right of appeal to the bishop. A year or two ago the R.C.O. asked that a similar right of appeal might also be allowed to organists, but nothing happened.

As to the parochial duties of such a deacon-organist, I think they should be confined to music, and there is plenty that could be done. There is a great movement on foot to establish in all villages musicians who can lead the village clubs in the ways of good music, establish community singing, village orchestras, and so on. Could any better parochial work be found for anyone than this? It is parochial, and needs a musician.

I also think this way out (deacon-organists) would achieve the purpose of Mr. John Newton. I think I am right in saying that he does not object, in the abstract, to organists taking Orders; but he fears a certain few take orders as a backstairs way to high positions. If all were in Orders this would be obviated.—Yours, &c.,

'VENTA BELGARUM.'

SIR,—Dr. Moody's letters are interesting—most of all in their ingenious begging of the question:

'When a man presents himself for Holy Orders [he writes], he devotes his life, or ought to do so, to a work which has no concern with the highly-specialised and exacting duties of a Cathedral organist.'

If this means anything, it implies that every clergyman ought to be a parish priest, and must be regarded as a renegade if he be not that and nothing else. But why? Dr. Moody gives no reason. The Bishops, certainly, do not agree with him. According to immemorial custom they continue to ordain as Priests of the Church schoolmasters, Fellows of Colleges, and other learned men, entirely independent of the parochial system of the Church. Some of themselves, indeed, have never been assistant-curates or vicars.

Are other professions to be judged by the same standard? Ought every medical man to be a general practitioner? Is a barrister betraying his class when he takes up journalism, or a solicitor when he becomes clerk to a County Council? And the professionally-qualified musician: What ought he to be, I wonder, if the principle be applied to him?

No. We have travelled far from the state of society in which every clerk found it advisable to be a Clerk in Orders. It is improbable that any future Bishop will be also Lord Chancellor of England, but priesthood is not a bar to any learned profession, and its value in many walks of life is becoming increasingly apparent.

There is another point of view which demands consideration. Some callings seem of themselves to be distinct calls to the ministry. Such are those already mentioned of the schoolmaster and college don, but none more clearly so than that of a Cathedral organist. For centuries his office has been growing in importance, as the science of organ-building has advanced, until he now occupies what is often the most prominent position in the conduct of divine service, and, to some minds, it must appear unseemly to find the organ-stool occupied by a layman. His 'highly-specialised and exacting duties' are largely theological. Unless religion is to take second place to music in our Cathedrals, how can he be regarded as fully qualified to discharge them, if he be not a priest as well as a musician?—Yours, &c.,

SACERDOS·MUSICUS.

SIR,—The letter from 'A Provincial Organist' shows how important it is for musicians to band together locally, and by their united efforts counteract the effect of such unfair competition, which enables a clergyman to obtain an additional source of income at the expense of the well-qualified musicians who confine themselves to one profession. I would suggest that such a case as your correspondent brings to our notice should be referred to the Bishop of the diocese and to the patron of the benefice, for surely those in authority would agree that this mercenary conduct is not in keeping with the high calling of a priest.—Yours, &c.,

October, 1924.

L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M.

[This correspondence must now cease.—EDITOR.]

THE ALTO DIFFICULTY

SIR,—In the average Church choir of men and boys the alto part is represented (!) either by a couple of boys with broken or breaking voices, or by a baritone or two singing false alto. The balance is bad, and the tone either feeble or over-aggressive. The responsibility for the part being thrown on one or two singers it is inevitable that frequent contretemps should occur through the absence of a singer: the part is either missing or less adequately represented than usual. A choirmaster who has arranged to sing an unaccompanied service or anthem often has, at the eleventh hour, to substitute another work, or if there are no important leads, to supply the missing part on a quiet organ stop. I have often wondered why composers and publishers do not meet the case of hundreds of such choirs by bringing out simple anthems and services for S.T.B. These need not necessarily be new; many well-known works of the simpler sort (especially those with organ accompaniment) could be arranged easily and effectively for three voices. Unless I am mistaken, a great deal of Franck's Church music, as well as the choral parts of his 'Psyche,' were written for S.T.B.; and I believe a great deal of other Church music in France is laid out in the same way, obviously in order to get over this alto difficulty. The advantages of such arrangements would be many. Chief among them would be the saving of time at rehearsal, the strengthening of bass and treble parts (as no singers would have to be withdrawn to supply the alto), the removal of uncertainty in making plans for unaccompanied singing, &c., &c. Perhaps an even greater gain would be the ending of the fetish of four-part writing. Anybody who has to do with our old glee composers will testify to the delightful effect obtainable from good three-part unaccompanied singing.

Another way out of the difficulty would be the dropping of the alto part in favour of an extra bass part. Most choirs are fairly strong in the bass department, and could without difficulty provide a first bass part. (I do not suggest dividing the tenor part, on account of the scarcity of real tenors. Moreover, if there were no alto part the importance of the higher tenor register would of course be increased.) Is there a hymn-tune book, or a selection of tunes, issued for S.T.B.? If not, I suggest that a well-arranged and inexpensive book of the kind would be widely appreciated. Perhaps some of your readers struggling with this particular difficulty in male-voice Church choirs will let us know what they think of the above suggestions.—Yours, &c.,

CHOIRMASTER.

Streatham Hill, S.W.2.

October, 1924.

GOLDMARK'S 'THE QUEEN OF SHEBA'

SIR,—With reference to the query by 'Opera Lover' in the last issue of the Musical Times, re Goldmark's opera 'The Queen of Sheba,' I may say that I was present at a performance of this opera by the Carl Rosa Opera Company about fifteen years ago, and I believe Miss Doris Woodall was 'the Queen.' I have a copy of the vocal score (published by F. Lucca, now Ricordi, of Milan), and it is clear that the part of 'the Queen' is scored for mezzo-soprano.—Yours, &c.,

2, Bradmore Road,
Wolverhampton,

H. S. BAYLISS.

October, 1924.

18TH CENTURY 'SOCIETIES OF SINGERS'

SIR,—I have lately acquired Boyce's Cathedral Music in score, published in 1788.

In the first four pages is given a list of subscribers, among whom is mentioned 'The Society of Singers of Kingstone.' From the same list one gathers that comparatively few towns of England had their Society of Singers, so that the Royal Borough of Kingston was important musically at that time.

I should be glad if you, or any reader, are able to throw further light on these 'Societies of Singers' which flourished in those days.—Yours, &c.,

GEORGE J. FREEMAN.

45, Chatham Road,
Kingston-on-Thames.

October, 1924.

'A NEW SYSTEM OF MUSICAL NOTATION'

SIR,—Having submitted the highly-ingenuous 'Parson's Notation' to several tests, I am convinced it is worthy of more than passing notice, and sincerely hope it may meet with enough approval to make its adoption possible. It would undoubtedly be easier, and of greater value, than Tonic Sol-fa, and after sufficient practice the figures would convey pitch and intervals. Its great merit is its simplicity, and the merest tyro learns the notes without the least trouble.

It is no easy thing to launch, but with sufficient support, and a publisher who would take the matter up, it could be done. As Mr. Parsons says, there is no need to unlearn the present notation. My own feeling is, it would supersede the present system. I find myself in disagreement with the inventor only over his remarks on memory-playing. One plays from memory not because of the difficulty of watching the notation, but because it undoubtedly engenders a better and more individual performance.—Yours, &c.,

21, Boundary Road, N.W.8.

R. J. PITCHER.

October, 1924.

MUSIC AT SOUTHAMPTON

SIR,—I trust you will allow me to comment on the statement in the Musical Times that it is a reproach to Southampton that we have not held a Musical Competition Festival.

During the past four years one who is now recognised as belonging to the front rank of violinists has been associated with other artists in over fifty concerts and recitals in our town, with an average attendance of about sixty persons! Last week Madame d'Alvarez sang to an audience of about four hundred! Surely one might consider this an even greater reproach to the musicians of Southampton than the fact that we do not hold a competition festival. There seems such a spirit of apathy and prejudice, and in our narrow provincialism we become fearful that perhaps another can do things better than we can. We lack the real fire of enthusiasm for music and, regarding our art as a mere commercial enterprise, we turn aside from high and noble sentiment. Is it the craze for examinations that has contributed to the present conditions?

Plans are already laid for a great Beethoven Festival in 1927. Shall we rise to the occasion?—Yours, &c.,

10, Westwood Road,
Southampton.

FRANZ SOMERS.

October, 1924.

NEW ORGAN AT SHANGHAI CATHEDRAL: A CORRECTION

SIR,—Under 'Church and Organ Music' in your July issue, the announcement is made that the new organ for Holy Trinity Cathedral, Shanghai, had been recently erected, and opening recitals given by me. As many former residents of Shanghai, now scattered in various parts of the world, who regularly read the Musical Times, are interested in this matter, I shall greatly appreciate a correction of this statement.

The new organ is not yet installed, but is in course of construction by Messrs. Harrison & Harrison. The instrument is expected to arrive at Shanghai next March, and it is hoped that the dedication and opening will take place during September.

The recitals announced as having been given were, of course, upon the present instrument.—Yours, &c.,

Holy Trinity Cathedral, R. C. YOUNG
Shanghai. (Organist and Choirmaster).

August, 1924.

'BY SPECIAL REQUEST'

SIR,—Unscrupulous profiteers, 'road-hogs,' concert-room magpies, and other unpleasant people have had their biographers, who have described with extreme minuteness their imperfections, their behaviour in this world, and their probable abode in a world to come. But no one seems to have adequately sung the demerits of those selfish creatures who 'request' the substitution of one piece for another in a programme already advertised.

At a recently forthcoming Promenade Concert, Berlioz's 'Fantastic' Symphony was down for performance. But on the day, the Press informed us that 'by special request' the 'Pathetic' had been substituted. Who are these persons, and whence their power to over-ride a management? Why should they desire to spoil the enjoyment of a large number of music-lovers? That it is a large number is apparent to anyone who has attended a performance of the 'Fantastic' at the 'Proms.'

That these dogs in the manger possess exceedingly restricted musical ideas is obvious from their choice of substituted works. Some one who would 'request' Spohr's 'Consecration of Sound,' or a Symphony by Raff, Goetz, or Gouvy, in the place of some threadbare item, would have my secret sympathy, even though I disapproved his principles. But no! It is these threadbare works that they invariably select. When they have objected to a Symphony by Berlioz or Schumann, they must at times be puzzled as to which to choose out of the six or seven orchestral works they know by name.

Unfortunately, these kill-joys, in order to achieve their selfish ends, write to the management, whereas the trusting innocents who pay the management the compliment of believing in its good faith, do not. If this be so, the innocents must write too, pointing out that they are looking forward to hearing some particular work.

But what I want to know is, why these monkey tricks (the slang seems appropriate) are confined to the musical world? If I book a seat for the New Theatre, I do not expect to find that 'by special request' Somebody's Performing Geese will fill the programme instead of Bernard Shaw's 'Saint Joan.' If I go to a scientific lecture on Cro-Magnon man, or the Einstein theory, I run no risk of being presented with a slip, stating that 'by special request' Madame Istar's 'Cheery Chats with Congenital Idiots' will be given instead of the lecture. No! It is merely in the musical world that these things happen, and it is not to the credit of the musical world.

I may have written warmly, but I am not vindictive. I conclude with the sincere hope that the 'Pathetic' did not interfere unduly with the conversation of the Special-Requesters.—Yours, &c., TOM S. WOTTON.

St. Leonard's-on-Sea.

October, 1924.

RAG-TIME

SIR,—With reference to Harry Farjeon's interesting article in the September issue of the Musical Times on 'Rag-Time,' surely he has overlooked what Coleridge-Taylor has done for negro music? I need scarcely remind you of his Op. 63, 'Symphonic Variations on an African Air,' produced by the Philharmonic Society in 1906, the subsequent neglect of which moved Mr. Herbert Antcliffe to write a special article in Musical Opinion a few months back, and also to deal with it at length in an article he wrote on Coleridge-Taylor for one of the leading American musical quarterlies. Then, again, Coleridge-Taylor's Op. 75, 'The Bamboula,' a rhapsodic dance for orchestra—first produced at the Norfolk Festival, U.S.A., in 1911, and frequently heard here (it was recently broadcast from London)—is based on a West-Indian negro theme, and the Overture to the 'Song of Hiawatha,' Op. 30, No. 3, has an African air as its principal subject. In addition, at the request of the Oliver Ditson Co., he wrote his Op. 59, 'Twenty-Four Negro Melodies.' These were transcribed for the pianoforte, and five of them appeared also as Trios and exist in full orchestral garb, but still in MS.

One of the 'Four African Dances,' Op. 58, is based on a negro melody, and there remain (at present in MS.) a slow movement for violin and pianoforte on 'Deep River,' and a slow movement for violin and orchestra on 'Keep me from sinking down,' which was played by Miss Maud Powell at the Norfolk Festival, U.S.A., in 1913.—Yours, &c.,

53, Hunter Road, J. H. SMITHER JACKSON.
Thornton Heath, Surrey.

October, 1924.

THE WRONG BUS

SIR,—Your correspondent, Mr. Nichol, gives a correct version of Prout's words for the Fugue in C minor. But is his version right for the E minor (Book 2)? Some years ago the Organist and Choirmaster gave this Fugue in full score as a supplement, with Prout's words as follows:

'As I rode in a penny bus, going to the Mansion House,
Off came the wheel,
Down went the bus,
All of the passengers fell in a heap
On the floor of the rickety thing.'

This fits much better than the Bank bus, no slurs being necessary.—Yours, &c., C. F.

SIR,—Your correspondent, Mr. Nichol, has quoted Prof. Prout's words to the second Fugue correctly. The words—which were given to us at an I.S.M. Conference—for Fugue 10, Book 2, are slightly different from those quoted by Mr. Nichol in the Musical Times for October:

'As I rode in a penny bus, going to the Mansion House, off came a wheel, down went the bus; all the passengers fell in a heap on the floor of the rickety thing.'

We have the words to all of the forty-eight Fugues, and have heard Prof. Prout play them at various I.S.M. Conferences. He was, indeed, a true Bach-lover.—Yours, &c.,

A LIVERPOOL TEACHER.

October, 1924.

SIR,—Mr. Ernest Nichol's recollections of Prof. Prout's words to the E minor ('Forty-Eight,' Book 2), of Bach are different from mine. As this is one of the very best, may I give my version (which has the advantage over Mr. Nichol's in that it has one syllable to one note)?:

'As I sat on a penny bus
Going to the Man-sion House,
Off came a wheel,
Down went the bus,
All of the passengers fell in a heap
On the floor of the rickety thing.'

—Yours, &c.,

E. MARKHAM LEE.

[Some letters are held over for want of space.—EDITOR.]

Barclay's Bank Musical Society opens its season at Queen's Hall in December with Félicien David's 'The Desert,' and a selection of part-songs to be sung by the choir. The list of works proposed for the orchestra alone includes Moussorgsky's 'Une Nuit sur le Mont Chauve,' the 'Tannhäuser' Overture, Tchaikovsky's 'Pathetic' Symphony, and Coleridge-Taylor's Ballade in A minor.

Sixty Years Ago

From the Musical Times of November, 1864:

At the Bristol Church Congress, on October 15, Mr. John Hullah read an interesting paper on 'Church Music,' in which he commented very ably upon the manner in which the choral services were conducted in the present day, and pointed out the many difficulties which beset a new incumbent who desires that the music in his Church should be efficiently performed. The principal portion of his address, however, was directed against the employment of boys in the choirs of Cathedrals; and this question he considered not only in relation to the music, but with reference to the boys themselves. 'A choir boy,' he said—'I mean now a boy called upon to assist at one, or more often two, services every day—has, in comparison with other boys, his chances of receiving a good education seriously diminished. A large portion of his time, and more of his energy, are consumed not merely in the all but exclusive study of one difficult and engrossing art, but in the exercise of that art as a profession.' To remedy this evil he proposed the employment of women in place of boys; and urged as a strong reason for so doing that the second parts in the great choral works of Haydn, Mozart, Beethoven, Spohr, and even Mendelssohn, are uniformly written for the contralto, or lower female voice. The address was listened to with the greatest attention.

Sharps and Flats

Band: 'Entry of the Goods' (Wagner).—B.B.C. programme in Evening News.

A successful performer will never broadcast . . . Broadcasting is all right for unsuccessful artists and for hyenas at the Zoo, and things like that.—Lionel Powell.

The time has gone by to treat jazz with contempt. It is a new musical development.—A. B. Walkley.

Ah, you thought I was fat! It is all wrong; singers have no need to be fat.—Galli-Curci.

I have adhered to formal morning dress—swallow-tails—for the Cathedral functions, and I would like to see this general, especially as such costume is at once graceful and dignified.—Leigh Henry.

Many hymns make the singer describe himself as a worm.—Speaker at the Church Congress.

I thank God there is not a single worm in our Hymnal.—The Chairman of the Congregational Union.

I am a farmer. Yes; my farm is at Catskills, my home in Minneapolis. Of course I don't go out ploughing or anything like that, but I love to be among my animals.—Galli-Curci.

. . . the worst and infinitely larger body of journalists, its parasitic lick-spittles and toadies, who remind one of nothing so much as the descriptions which occultists give one of the unimaginably foul and loathsome elementals which they declare gather round the besotted carcass of a man in the infra-bestial coma of helpless blind drunkenness, drawn to him by the vile emanations, and feeding and drawing sustenance, vampire-like, from his abject beastliness.—Kaikhosru Sorabji.

The Amateurs' Exchange

Under this heading we insert, free of charge, announcements by amateur musicians who wish to co-operate with others.

Wanted a good accompanist (lady) for mutual practice. One or two evenings a week. Western district.—V. K. C., c/o Musical Times.

Brotherhood Orchestra, Oakley Place, Old Kent Road, S.E., has vacancies for lady and gentlemen instrumentalists. Good library.—A. PEARSON, 30, Wrigglesworth Street, Monson Road, New Cross, S.E. 14; or Sunday afternoon, at 3 p.m.

Lady violin and viola player wishes to know of an orchestra or chamber music combination meeting for rehearsal in W. or S.W. London. Morning or afternoon.—Mrs. CRONIN, 119, Ribblesdale Road, Streatham, S.W. 16.

There are vacancies for new members in the East Finchley Orchestra.—Hon. secretary, Miss CALLARD, 24, Southwood Lawn Road, Highgate, N.6 (tele.: Hornsey 502).

Viola players, second violins, and 'cellist, capable of playing principal and solo in good orchestral music, are invited to apply for membership in the Dorian Symphony Orchestra, Westminster, S.W. Rehearsals, Mondays, 7.30.—Prospectus post free from the SECRETARY, 30, The Green, Twickenham.

Lady pianist, experienced in quartet playing, wishes to meet instrumentalists for mutual practice, or would accompany vocalist. Good sight-reader. Any time, day or evening. S.W. district.—N. E. E., c/o Musical Times.

Wanted good amateur instrumentalists wishing to gain orchestral experience. Practice, Sunday mornings.—4, Fairland Road, Romford Road, E.15.

Lady viola player wants practice in chamber and orchestral music. London or S.W. suburbs.—OMEGA, c/o Musical Times.

The Battersea Polytechnic Choral Society has resumed rehearsals. Mondays, 8 to 9.30. Vacancies for all voices.

Wanted for Brotherhood Orchestra in West Ham, first and second violins, clarinet, trombone, and side-drum and effects. Trombone and side-drum found.—A. E. K., 12, Sussex Street, Barking Road, E.13.

Bass vocalist wishes to meet other singers for trios and quartets.—C. DAWSON, 'Aysgarth,' Shirley Road, Croydon.

Applications are invited from orchestral players to join the newly-formed Insurance Orchestral Society of London. Rehearsals in the City, Tuesdays, 5.45 to 7.30 p.m. Works by Elgar, Holst, Bantock, Grainger, and Vaughan Williams will be rehearsed. Conductor, Mr. Harold Rawlinson.—Communications, &c., to Mr. THOMAS WALLACE, 60, Watling Street, E.C.4.

Instrumentalist wishes to meet pianist (gentleman) for mutual practice.—V., c/o Musical Times.

'Cellist wishes to meet moderately good players of the violin and pianoforte, with view to practice of easy trios, &c. East Dulwich.—C. S., c/o Musical Times.

Organist (young), commencing study of orchestral conducting, offers services (voluntary) as sub-conductor to any good London amateur orchestra. State time and day.—C. L., c/o Musical Times.

Pianist (lady) wishes to meet vocalist, violinist, or 'cellist for mutual practice; or would form trio. S.E. district.—M. G., c/o Musical Times.

Vacancies for first tenors in Wood Green Adult School Male-Voice Prize Choir. Write, CONDUCTOR, 48, Upper Park Road, New Southgate, N.11; or call, Tuesdays, at 8.30, at Practice Hall, 341, High Road, Wood Green, N.22.

Trained vocalist (lady) wishes to meet accompanist weekly for study. S. London.—M. S., c/o Musical Times.

Chiswick and Gunnersbury Philharmonic Society (conductor, Mr. David M. Davis) would especially welcome men's voices for 'Il Trovatore' (concert version) and 'King Olaf.' Vacancy for double-bass, and others in choir and orchestra. Practices at Chiswick Town Hall, Mondays (orchestra) and Thursdays (choir).—Hon. orchestral secretary, E. LESLIE SIKES, 223a, Hammersmith Road, W.6.

Accompanist wishes to meet vocalists and instrumentalists with extensive repertoires of the classics.—37, Palace Square, Upper Norwood, S.E. 19.

Davenport Musical Club, Stockport, has vacancies for amateur instrumentalists for small orchestra. Also vocalists.—Hon. secretary, Miss TETLOW, 137, Buxton Road, Stockport.

Soprano wishes to meet accompanist for mutual practice. N.W. London.—J. G., 22, Hillfield Road, W. Hampstead, N.W. 6.

Lady pianist (L.R.A.M.) wishes to meet vocalist or instrumentalist for mutual practice.—A. Z., c/o Musical Times. Sunbury Choral and Orchestral Society would welcome amateur instrumentalists (strings and wind). Practices Tuesdays, at 7.30, in St. Mary's Parish Room, Sunbury-on-Thames.—Hon. conductor, Mr. H. POOLE, 7, Littleton Cottages, Shepperton.

'Cellist required to join violinist and pianist for weekly practice in West-End studio.—Miss L. KAY, Belmont Hotel, Highbury New Park, N.5.

A few more strings are required for the Tudor String Players, meeting at Victoria every Thursday. Good reading and regularity essential. Byrd, Bach, Handel, &c.—C. J. BATES, 76, Leighton Road, Ealing, W.13.

The Tudor Singers require a tenor and bass. Good reading and regularity essential. Meetings on Fridays at Victoria. Byrd, Morley, Palestrina, &c.—C. J. BATES, 76, Leighton Road, Ealing, W.13.

Tenors and basses in East London are invited to join St. Stephen's, Bow, Choral Society. Tuesday evenings. Bach's '100th Psalm' and the People's Palace Festival Competition Music.—CONDUCTOR, 32, Marlborough Road, E.18.

Amateur instrumentalists, must be good readers, wanted to assist in Disabled Soldiers' Orchestra. S.W. district. Rehearsals, Thursdays, 7.30.—Musical Director, JOHN MASON, 2, Wardo Avenue, Fulham, S.W.6.

Lady violinist wishes to meet pianist and 'cellist for mutual practice. Two evenings a week. S.W. district preferred.—B. S., c/o Musical Times.

Vocalist (soprano) wishes to meet lady accompanist for mutual practice. One evening a week. Near Clapham.—L., 197, Elmhurst Mansions, Clapham, S.W.4.

Highgate Village Orchestra. Practices every Tuesday evening at North Hill Hall (33, North Hill), Highgate, N.6. Vacancies for good strings, flute, oboe, bassoon, and horn. Programme includes Beethoven's fifth Symphony and 'Prometheus' Overture, 'Ballet Egyptien,' 'Reine de Saba,' Butterworth's 'Shropshire Lad,' and German's 'Merrie England.'—Applications to Mr. PETER FARQUHARSON, 'Heather Hill,' Bloomfield Road, Highgate, N.6.

Brotherhood Orchestra, North Hill Hall (33, North Hill), Highgate, N.6, has vacancies for new members, ladies and gentlemen. Tuesday evenings.—Conductor, Mr. PETER FARQUHARSON, 'Heather Hill,' Bloomfield Road, Highgate, N.6.

Enthusiastic amateur players, violin, viola, 'cello, bass, and wood-wind, urgently wanted to complete small orchestra in Highgate district. Weekly.—CONDUCTOR, 27, Anson Road, Tufnell Park, N.7.

Amateur viola and 'cello players required for Civil Service Orchestra. Rehearsals, Thursdays, 5.30 to 7.30.—HON. SECRETARY, 50, High Road, Chiswick, W.4 (Tel.: Chiswick 1824).

The Kensington Orchestra has vacancies for good amateur 'cello, brass, and wood-wind players. Thursdays, 8 to 9.45. Symphonies, overtures, suites, &c., are being practised with a view to a concert in the New Year. Orchestra plays on the first Sunday in each month in Lancaster Road Church, Ladbroke Grove, W.—Hon. secretary, S. H. KESSELS, 57, Kempe Road, Kensal Rise, N.W.6.

Trebles, altos, tenors, and basses desirous of assisting at the fortnightly evening services at St. Paul's Church, Aldgate, E., are asked to communicate with F.R.C.O., 22, Shelley Avenue, Manor Park, Essex. Good music.

Besides assisting the choral performances of the Croydon Philharmonic Society, the Croydon Symphony Orchestra has chosen the following works for its season's programme: Borodin's Symphony in B minor; Beethoven's fifth Symphony; d'Erlanger's Piano-forte Concerto (Pouishnoff); Holst's 'Perfect Fool' Ballet; 'Italian Serenade' and 'Willow the Wisp,' by W. H. Reed; Borodin's 'Prince Igor' Overture and Dances; and 'Phæton,' by Saint-Saëns.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC

The Academy re-opened for the new academical year on September 22, with a large number of new pupils for the ordinary curriculum, the teachers' training course, and the special course for conductors.

One important change in the course of study takes place this term with the introduction for the first time of the 'Review week.' This is a week near the end of each term in which the regular lessons cease, their place being taken by courses of special lecture-lessons, lectures, recitals, and concerts. The Review week for the present term begins on December 1, and the lecturers announced include Sir Johnston Forbes-Robertson, Prof. T. P. Nunn, Professor of Education in the London University, Mr. F. Roscoe, of the Teachers' Registration Council, and Mr. Leonard E. Hill, of the National Institute for Medical Research, all of whom will lecture upon subjects on which they are leading experts, and which will be of interest and value to serious music students. The recitals include a viola recital by Mr. Lionel Tertis and a piano-forte recital by Miss Katharine Goodson. On Wednesday afternoons, November, 5, 12, and 26, lectures will be given in Duke's Hall by Mr. Percy Scholes.

The following scholarships have been awarded: Josephine Troup Scholarship (composition) to Gladys M. Cohen (London), Olive M. Pull being commended. Goring Thomas Scholarship (composition) to Godfrey Sampson (Gloucester). Sir Michael Costa Scholarship (composition) to William Alwyn (Northampton), Clifford M. Curzon being highly commended. Elizabeth Stokes Scholarship (piano-forte) to Dorothy Phillips (Glasgow), the following being highly commended: Ellen E. McCartney, Kathleen E. Fenton, Enid M. Stacy, Constance A. Cox, and Mary W. Walter. Elizabeth Stokes Open Scholarship (piano-forte) to Doris Hibbert (Nottingham), Clifford M. Curzon being very highly commended. Thalberg Scholarship (piano-forte) to Clifford M. Curzon (London). Ross Scholarship (female vocalists) to Margaret Hale (Bedwas, Mon.), Grace Reynolds and Jessie Hewson being very highly commended, and the following commended: Margaret Wilkinson, Stella Browne, Vera Kneebone, and Mary Fuller. John Stokes Scholarship (baritones) to Ian B. Anderson (Southport), Walter J. Burchell being commended. John Stokes Open Scholarship (baritones) to Glyndwr T. Jones (Llanely). Broughton Packer Bath Scholarship (violin) to Edna M. Moore (Grays, Essex), Michael Yager being very highly commended, and Cyril H. Hellier highly commended. Henry Smart Scholarship (organ and composition) to Owen le P. Franklin (London). Maud Mary Gooch Scholarship (organ) to Montague T. Matthews (Watford). Ross Scholarship (wind instrumentalists) to Helen Gaskell (Twickenham), for oboe playing. Ada Lewis Scholarships have been awarded as follows: Singing, to Irene G. Morden (Ilford), Margaret T. Godley being very highly commended, and Irene K. Hitch and Muriel D. Sargent commended; piano-forte, to Hilda Bor (London), Marion G. J. McTurk being very highly commended, and the following commended: Dorothy B. Tichbon, Mary W. Walter, Constance A. Cox, and Hilda M. W. Noble; violoncello, to Stanley E. Tizzard (London), Kathleen J. Jacobs being highly commended. Alexander Roller Prize (piano-forte) to Gerard Moorat (Boulogne-sur-Mer).

ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC

The Christmas term marks the opening of a new College year. Sir Hugh Allen, the Director, gave his terminal address to a gathering of students and friends that could barely find room in the concert hall. The summer vacation, so far from acting as a soporific to a strenuous life, seems to have sent the students back to the College more insatiable than ever, and by the time these lines are in print the first half of the term will have produced six concerts (two being orchestral), a Patron's Fund rehearsal for executive artists, and a dress rehearsal of extracts from 'Faust,' 'Pagliacci,' and 'Cavalleria Rusticana,' with scenery and full orchestra, under the direction of Mr. Cairns James and Mr. Grünebaum. The operatic class is paying tribute to the late Sir Charles Stanford, who directed the class for over thirty years, and has in rehearsal, under the direction of Mr. James and Mr. Waddington, the composer's 'Shamus O'Brien,' one of his most brilliant and characteristic achievements in the domain of light opera. It is hoped that this will be ready for performance in December.

The ballet class is giving its attention to works by College composers, and has in preparation a new mime-play by Gavin Gordon-Brown, who has not only written the music but has devised the choreography, with the aid of Lady George Cholmondeley and Miss Penelope Spencer.

Once more the generosity of Mr. W. W. Cobbett has to be recorded, this upholder of chamber music having offered prizes to the amount of fifty guineas for the best performance at the College concerts of the current term, preference being given to works by British composers, especially prize works of former Cobbett competitions.

A competition for operatic exhibitions for men singers was held at the beginning of the term, when the following were the successful candidates: Albert Stanley Digney, Charles Draper, Karl Melene, Arthur Robert Poole, and Edgar Williams.

TRINITY COLLEGE OF MUSIC

The term opened auspiciously, for in the first few days it was seen that not only would the number of students show an advance on any previous term, but that the average number of subjects taken by individual students would also be greater.

Then, too, Sir Richard Terry's inaugural address on 'Tudor Instrumental Music' proved most popular to the students, and deservedly attracted a goodly number of the outside public. Moreover, not to be too insistent, an added sense of its merit may be gathered from the fact that Sir Richard's remarks were made the subject of an informative leading article in one of the important London daily newspapers.

Three concerts were given during the past month by professors of the College, as well as two 'special' concerts by students—the success of which afforded further proof of the live nature of the work carried on by the College.

At the recent distribution by the Bishop of London to Ordination candidates, three of the four prizes awarded for Elocution, &c., were won by members of Dr. Oldroyd's Clergy Voice-Training Class.

The alterations and considerable improvements to the College Library are nearing completion, and it is hoped to hold the dedication ceremony to the memory of the late Sir Frederick Bridge sometime in November.

Several distributions of certificates gained in provincial Centres in connection with the College scheme of Local Examinations were held recently. Dr. E. F. Horner attended as the representative of the College.

THE COMING SEASON

ORCHESTRAL CONCERTS IN LONDON

ROYAL PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY.—Seven evening concerts at Queen's Hall, the first six on Thursdays. Dates and conductors: November 20, Wilhelm Furtwängler; December 4, Bruno Walter; January 29, Eugène Goossens; February 26, Ernest Ansermet; March 19, Felix Weingartner; April 2, Paul Klenau; April 27 (a British programme), Hamilton Harty (see p. 1002).

QUEEN'S HALL SYMPHONY CONCERTS.—Twelve Saturday afternoon concerts at Queen's Hall, conducted by Sir Henry Wood. Dates: (October 11 and 28), November 8 and 22, January 10 and 24, February 7 and 21, March 7 and 21, April 25, and May 9.

LONDON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.—Twelve Monday evening concerts at Queen's Hall. Dates and conductors: (October 20, Albert Coates); November 3, Albert Coates; November 24, Wilhelm Furtwängler; December 8, Bruno Walter; January 12, Vladimir Shavitch; February 9 and 16, Furtwängler; March 9 and 23, Felix Weingartner; April 6, Georg Schneevogt; May 11 and 25 (the 'Choral' Symphony with the Philharmonic Choir), Serge Kusewitzky.

STROLLING PLAYERS' AMATEUR ORCHESTRAL SOCIETY.—Concerts at Queen's Hall, under Mr. Joseph Ivimey, on December 11, February 19, and April 23. The programmes include Holbrooke's 'The Birds of Rhiannon,' Cowen's 'Concertstücke' for pianoforte and orchestra, Goossens's 'Symphonietta,' and two Tone-Poems by Frank Bridge.

AMATEUR ORCHESTRA OF LONDON.—Concerts at Kingsway Hall on January 19 and May 4, under Mr. Wynn Reeves. Symphonies, Concertos, &c.; Moussorgsky's 'Une Nuit sur le Mont Chauve.'

BARCLAY'S BANK MUSICAL SOCIETY (AMATEUR).—Concerts at Queen's Hall on December 12 and April 9. The 'Pathetic' Symphony, Coleridge-Taylor's Ballade in A minor, Moussorgsky's 'Une Nuit sur le Mont Chauve,' &c., under Mr. Herbert Rouse. Also choral music under Mr. H. W. Pierce.

THE CIVIL SERVICE ORCHESTRA announces a concert at Queen's Hall on November 27, under Mr. B. Patterson Parker. Haydn's 'London' Symphony, Beethoven's fourth Pianoforte Concerto (Miss Irene Scharrer), and Handel's 'Water Music.'

CHORAL CONCERTS IN LONDON AND SUBURBS

ROYAL CHORAL SOCIETY.—Eight concerts at the Royal Albert Hall on Saturday afternoons. Dates, works, and conductors: (October 18, 'Elijah,' Mr. Albert Coates); November 15, Elgar's 'The Spirit of England' and Dame Ethel Smyth's Mass in D, Dr. Malcolm Sargent; December 20, Carols, Mr. H. L. Balfour; January 3, 'The Messiah,' Mr. H. L. Balfour; January 31, 'Hiawatha,' Mr. Eugene Goossens; February 28, 'The Dream of Gerontius'; March 21, Mass in B minor, Mr. Hamilton Harty. The last concert of the season is the performance of 'The Messiah,' under Dr. E. C. Bairstow, on Good Friday, April 10.

ALEXANDRA PALACE CHORAL AND ORCHESTRAL SOCIETY (Mr. Allen Gill).—(October 11, 'Elijah'); November 15, the third Acts of 'Tannhäuser' and 'Lohengrin'; December 6, 'The Song of Hiawatha'; February 7, the Mass in B minor; March 7, 'The Dream of Gerontius'; May 2, 'The Apostles.' The customary Good Friday performance of 'The Messiah' will not be given.

BACH CHOIR (Dr. Vaughan Williams).—'Stabat Mater' (Stanford); 'God's time is the best'; 'St. Matthew' Passion.

BATTERSEA AND WANDSWORTH CHORAL UNION (Mr. D. Ritson Smith).—'Phaëdra Crohoore'; 'The Wreck of the Hesperus' (Anderton); 'The Mountebanks' (Easthope Martin); part-songs.

BROMLEY CHORAL SOCIETY (Mr. Frederic Fertel).—'Merrie England'; selections from operas.

CENTRAL CROYDON MUSICAL SOCIETY (Mr. H. Leslie-Smith).—'Meg Blane' (Coleridge-Taylor); 'Tom Jones'; Brahms's 'Requiem'; 'The Messiah.'

CHISWICK AND GUNNERSBURY PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY (Mr. David M. Davis).—'Il Trovatore'; 'King Olaf.'

CIVIL SERVICE CHOIR (Mr. Rutland Boughton).—December 4, Bach's 'Sleepers, wake' and Boughton's 'The City'; February 4, Elizabethan music; April 1, Bach's 'Be not afraid' and Bainton's Choral Symphony, 'Before Sunrise.' Programmes are long and varied, and include chamber music.

CITY TEMPLE CHORAL SOCIETY (Mr. Allan Brown).—'Elijah'; 'The Messiah'; 'Christmas Oratorio'; 'The Creation'; 'Requiem' (Verdi); 'The Crucifixion.'

CROYDON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA AND PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY (Mr. W. H. Reed and Mr. Alan J. Kirby).—'The Dream of Gerontius'; 'Hiawatha,' Parts 1 and 2; 'A Song of Destiny' (Brahms); part-songs.

CRYSTAL PALACE CHORAL AND ORCHESTRAL SOCIETY (Mr. Walter Hedgcock).—'Merrie England'; 'The Black Knight'; 'A Tale of Old Japan'; 'Blest Fair of Sirens.'

EALING CHORAL AND ORCHESTRAL SOCIETY (Mr. A. C. Praeger).—'Ave atque vale' (Stanford); 'Walpurgis Night'; 'The Desert'; 'The Spectre's Bride'; 'Hero and Leander.'

EALING PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY (Mr. E. Victor Williams).—‘Athalie’; ‘The Dream of Gerontius’; ‘Carmen.’

ELTHAM CHORAL SOCIETY (Mr. Ernest Leeds).—‘The Rebel Maid’ (Montague Phillips).

FINCHLEY MUSICAL SOCIETY (Mr. A. C. Cundell).—‘A Tale of Old Japan.’

HARROW AND GREENHILL CHORAL SOCIETY (Mr. F. W. Belchamber).—‘Stabat Mater’ (Rossini); ‘The Wedding of Shon Maclean’; ‘Les Cloches de Corneville.’

HIGHGATE CHORAL SOCIETY (Mr. F. Cunningham Woods).—‘John Gilpin’ (Cowen).

L.N.E.R. MUSICAL SOCIETY (Col. W. Johnson Galloway).—‘Christmas Eve’ (Dr. Stanley Marchant).

LONDON CHORAL SOCIETY (Mr. Arthur Fagge).—Mass in D (Beethoven); ‘The Kingdom’; miscellaneous.

LOUGHTON CHORAL SOCIETY AND ORCHESTRA (Mr. Henry Riding).—‘The Last Judgment’; ‘The Rebel Maid’ (Montague Phillips).

MILL HILL MUSICAL SOCIETY (Mr. L. A. Cane).—‘The Messiah.’

ORPINGTON AND ST. MARY CRAY CHORAL AND ORCHESTRAL SOCIETY (Mr. Sydney Smith).—‘The Pied Piper of Hamelin’ (Walthew); ‘Christmas Day’ (Holst); ‘Fantasia on Christmas Carols’ (Vaughan Williams); ‘Passion Music’ (Haydn).

PENGE AND DISTRICT CHORAL AND ORCHESTRAL SOCIETY (Mr. Alfred B. Choat).—Three concerts at the Crystal Palace. ‘A Princess of Kensington’; ‘Tom Jones’; ‘King Olaf.’

PEOPLE’S PALACE CHORAL SOCIETY AND ORCHESTRAL SOCIETY (Mr. Frank Idle).—‘Elijah’; ‘Cavalleria Rusticana’; ‘The Pied Piper of Hamelin’ (Parry); ‘Faust’ (Berlioz); ‘The Messiah.’

PHILHARMONIC CHOIR (Mr. C. Kennedy Scott).—Concerts at Queen’s Hall on November 13, the B minor Mass; May 21, Henschel’s ‘Requiem’; Brahms’s ‘Alto Rhapsody,’ and ‘St. Patrick’s Breastplate,’ by Arnold Bax; performance of the B minor Mass for children on November 29; Delius’s ‘Mass of Life’ for the Royal Philharmonic Society on April 2; the ‘Choral’ Symphony for the London Symphony Orchestra on May 25.

PLUMSTEAD CENTRAL HALL CHOIR AND ORCHESTRAL SOCIETY (Mr. W. Wilson).—‘Hiawatha’; ‘For the Fallen’; ‘Cavalleria Rusticana’; ‘Tom Jones’; ‘The Messiah.’

PURLEY CHORAL UNION (Mr. Harold Macpherson).—‘Blest Pair of Sirens’; ‘The Golden Legend’; ‘Requiem’ (Brahms).

ST. JAMES’S CHORAL SOCIETY, EDMONTON (Mr. J. W. Barran).—‘The May Queen’; ‘Olivet to Calvary.’

SOUTH LONDON PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY (Mr. William H. Kerridge).—‘Elijah’; ‘Stabat Mater’ (Dvorák); ‘Hymn of Jesus’ (Holst); ‘Hymn to Dionysus’ (Holst); ‘The Pied Piper of Hamelin’ (Parry); part-songs and madrigals.

SOUTH-WEST CHORAL SOCIETY (Mr. Arthur R. Saunders).—‘Fantasia on Christmas Carols’ (Vaughan Williams); cantata choruses by Elgar; folk-songs arranged by Holst; part-songs and madrigals.

SUTTON MUSICAL SOCIETY (Mr. H. L. Balfour).—‘Tom Jones’; ‘St. Cecilia’s Day’ (Handel); ‘Bon-bon Suite’ (Coleridge-Taylor).

TWICKENHAM MUSICAL SOCIETY (Mr. E. Thornton Lofthouse).—‘Song of Destiny’; Three Carols with orchestra (Warlock).

WEST LONDON CHORAL AND ORCHESTRAL SOCIETY (Mr. William Holmes).—‘Hiawatha’s Wedding-Feast’; ‘Kubla Khan’ (Coleridge-Taylor); oratorio choruses.

WEST LONDON CHORAL UNION (Mr. Fred A. Simpson).—‘Melusina’ (Hofmann); ‘The Mystic Trumpeter’; ‘King Olaf’; ‘King Estmere’ (Holst).

WEST MIDDLESEX MUSICAL SOCIETY (Mr. C. Stanley Smallman).—‘Faust’ (Gounod); ‘The Revenge’; ‘The Seasons.’

WESTMINSTER CHORAL SOCIETY (Mr. Vincent Thomas).—‘Be not afraid,’ ‘I wrestle and pray,’ ‘Blessing, glory, and wisdom,’ and ‘God so loved the world’ (Bach); ‘Cum sancto spiritu’ (Mozart); ‘The Princess’ (Stanford); ‘St. Cecilia’s Day’ and ‘Acis and Galatea’ (Handel); ‘Liebeslieder Walzer’ (Brahms).

WILLESDEN GREEN AND CRICKLEWOOD CHORAL SOCIETY (Mr. F. W. Belchamber).—‘Merrie England’; ‘The Redemption.’

WIMBLEDON CHORAL SOCIETY (Mr. Kenneth A. Brown).—‘Hiawatha’; ‘The Golden Legend.’

WIMBLEDON PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY (Mr. F. Wilment Bates).—‘A Tale of Old Japan’; ‘The Wedding of Shon Maclean’; part-songs.

WOODSIDE CHORAL SOCIETY (Mr. N. Appleton).—‘The Bard of Avon’ (Gaul); ‘The Wedding of Shon Maclean’; ‘Phaudrig Crohoore.’

PROVINCIAL SOCIETIES

BARNESLEY ST. CECILIA SOCIETY.—‘Acis and Galatea’; part-songs; ‘The Messiah’; ‘The Apostles.’

BATH CHORAL AND ORCHESTRAL SOCIETY (Mr. H. T. Sims).—‘The Spectre’s Bride.’

BELFAST PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY (Mr. E. Godfrey Brown).—‘Elijah’; ‘Toward the Unknown Region’ (Vaughan Williams); ‘To Wonder’ (Norman Hay); ‘The Dream of Gerontius’ (conducted by Sir Henry Wood).

BIRMINGHAM BACH SOCIETY (Mr. J. Bernard Jackson).—‘Praise the Lord, all ye heathen,’ ‘If thou but sufferest God to guide thee,’ ‘King of Heaven, be Thou welcome’ (Bach); ‘King Arthur’ (Parcell); ‘Whatso’er ye do’ (Buxtehude).

BIRMINGHAM FESTIVAL CHORAL SOCIETY (Mr. Adrian C. Boulton).—‘The Dream of Gerontius’; ‘Sea’ Symphony (Vaughan Williams); ‘Blake’ (Graham Godfrey); Mass in B minor; ‘The Messiah.’

BOLTON CHORAL UNION (Mr. Thomas Booth and Mr. Hamilton Harty).—‘The Rebel Maid’ (Montague Phillips); ‘The Messiah’; ‘At the Eastern Gate’ (Maclean); ‘Kubla Khan’ (Coleridge-Taylor); ‘Elijah.’

BOSTON CHORAL SOCIETY (Dr. Gordon A. Slater).—‘The Messiah’; ‘St. Matthew’ Passion. Monthly chamber concerts and song recitals.

BRADFORD FESTIVAL CHORAL SOCIETY (Dr. E. C. Bairstow).—‘A Vision of Life’ (Parry); ‘The Pied Piper of Hamelin’; ‘Elijah’; ‘Stabat Mater’ (Stanford); ‘Mystical Songs’ (Vaughan Williams).

BRADFORD OLD CHORAL SOCIETY (Mr. Wilfrid Knight).—‘Requiem’ (Verdi); ‘The Messiah’; ‘Samson and Delilah.’

BRIGHTON CHORAL SOCIETY (Mr. W. Singleton).—‘The Sun-Worshippers’ (Bantock); ‘Ode to the North-East Wind’ (Cliffe).

BRIGHTON AND HOVE HARMONIC SOCIETY (Mr. Percy Taylor).—‘The Ancient Mariner’; ‘Tannhäuser,’ Act 3; ‘The Dream of Gerontius’; ‘The Golden Legend.’

BUDLEIGH SALTERN TON MUSICAL SOCIETY (Mr. Hugh Fowler).—‘The Song of Hiawatha.’

CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY MUSICAL SOCIETY (Dr. C. B. Rootham).—‘Magnificat’ (Bach); ‘Requiem’ (Mozart); ‘Falmouth’ (R. F. Woodman).

CARDIFF BLUE RIBBON CHOIR (Mr. Jenkyn Morris).—‘The Revenge’; ‘Requiem’ (Mozart); ‘The Messiah.’

CLECKHEATON PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY (Mr. Charles Stott).—‘Songs of the Fleet’ (Stanford), and miscellaneous.

CLEVELAND HARMONIC MALE-VOICE CHOIR AND CECILIAN GLEE SOCIETY (Mr. Gavin Kay).—‘Lucifer in Starlight,’ Ballade, ‘War Song of the Saracens,’ and other part-songs of Bantock.

COCKERMOUTH HARMONIC SOCIETY (Mr. W. L. Parkin).—‘The Bohemian Girl.’

COLCHESTER AND DISTRICT MUSICAL SOCIETY (Mr. W. F. Kingdon).—‘Elijah’; ‘The Black Knight’; ‘Ode to Music’ (Parry); ‘Songs of the Fleet’ (Stanford); madrigals.

COVENTRY PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY (Mr. C. Matthews).—‘Hiawatha’s Wedding-Feast’; ‘The Mystic Trumpeter’; ‘The Messiah’; ‘Requiem’ (Brahms); ‘God’s time is the best.’

CRIEFF CHORAL AND OPERATIC SOCIETY (Mr. J. D. Turner).—‘Les Cloches de Corneville.’

DERBY CHORAL UNION.—‘A Tale of Old Japan’; ‘Blest Pair of Sirens’; ‘The Apostles.’

DUNDEE AMATEUR CHORAL UNION (Mr. C. M. Cowe).—‘Requiem’ (Brahms); ‘Wachet auf’ (Bach).

FALKIRK AND DISTRICT CHORAL UNION (Mr. James Love).—‘The Banner of St. George’; ‘Songs of the Fleet’ (Stanford); ‘Blest Pair of Sirens.’

FAVERSHAM PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY (Mr. W. J. Keech).—‘King Olaf’; ‘The Rose of Persia’ (Sullivan).

GAINSBOROUGH MUSICAL SOCIETY.—‘The Mystic Trumpeter’ (Harty); ‘Songs of the Fleet’ (Stanford); ‘Ode to the West Wind’ (Jenkins).

GLASGOW CHORAL AND ORCHESTRAL UNION (Mr. Wilfrid Senior).—The ‘Choral’ Symphony (conducted by Felix Weingartner); ‘The Creation’; ‘The Messiah’; ‘Sea-Drift’ (Delius); Magnificat (Bach); ‘The Music-Makers.’

GUILDFORD CHORAL SOCIETY (Mr. Claud Powell).—‘Everyman’ (Walford Davies).

HALIFAX CHORAL SOCIETY (Dr. A. C. Tysoe).—‘Requiem’ (Verdi); ‘The Messiah’; ‘The Music-Makers.’

HUDDERSFIELD CHORAL SOCIETY (Dr. Henry Coward).—‘Omar Khayyám’; ‘The Messiah’; ‘Elijah.’

HULL HARMONIC SOCIETY (Mr. Walter Porter).—‘Faust’ (Gounod); ‘The Messiah’; ‘Elijah.’

HULL VOCAL SOCIETY (Dr. Henry Coward).—‘The Golden Legend’; ‘The Annunciation’ (Maclean); ‘The Messiah’; ‘The Dream of Gerontius’; ‘Ode to the North-East Wind’ (Cliffe).

ISLINGTON CHORAL SOCIETY (Mr. Ronald Chamberlain).—‘Hiawatha’; ‘The Creation’; ‘A Tale of Old Japan’; ‘The Inchcape Rock’ (Bridge); ‘Romance of Spain’ (Vincent Thomas).

KESWICK CHORAL SOCIETY (Mr. H. W. Brown).—‘The Revenge.’

KIDDERMINSTER CHORAL SOCIETY (Mr. J. Irving Glover).—‘Elijah’; ‘Everyman’ (Walford Davies).

LAUNCESTON CHORAL SOCIETY (Mr. C. Stanley Parsonson).—‘The Messiah’; ‘Hiawatha,’ Parts 1 and 2.

LEEDS CHORAL UNION (Dr. Henry Coward).—‘The Flying Dutchman’; ‘The Messiah’; ‘Faust’ (Berlioz); Mass in D (Beethoven); ‘Blest Pair of Sirens.’

LEEDS PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY (Dr. E. C. Bairstow).—‘Sea’ Symphony (Vaughan Williams); ‘The Messiah’; ‘Requiem’ (Verdi).

LEICESTER CHORAL UNION.—‘The Kingdom’; ‘Song of Destiny’ (Brahms); ‘Choral Fantasia’ (Beethoven).

LEICESTER MUSICAL SOCIETY (Mr. C. Hancock).—‘Elijah’; ‘St. Matthew’ Passion.

LEICESTER PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY (Sir Henry Wood).—‘Faust’ (Berlioz); ‘The Messiah’; Mass in B minor.

LINCOLN MUSICAL SOCIETY (Dr. G. J. Bennett).—‘The Flying Dutchman’; ‘Christmas Oratorio’ (Parts 1 and 2).

LIVERPOOL WELSH CHORAL UNION (Mr. Hopkin Evans).—‘Kynon’ (Evans); ‘Blest Pair of Sirens’; ‘The Messiah’; ‘Sea’ Symphony (Vaughan Williams); ‘The Dream of Gerontius.’

LOCHGELLY CHORAL UNION.—‘Song of the Bell’ (T. Mee Pattison); part-songs.

LONG EATON CHORAL SOCIETY (Mr. C. E. Riley).—‘Merrie England’; ‘A Tale of Old Japan’; ‘The Wedding of Shon Maclean.’

MANCHESTER VOCAL SOCIETY (Mr. Harold M. Dawber).—Part-songs by Cornelius and Stanford; madrigals; ‘Drum Taps’ (Ernest Bryson); ‘Songs of the Open Air’ (J. R. Dear); ‘Jesu, Priceless Treasure’; ‘In exitu Israel.’

MIDDLESBROUGH MUSICAL UNION (Mr. Gavin Kay).—‘The Pied Piper of Hamelin’ (Walthew); ‘Hiawatha’s Wedding-Feast’; ‘The Messiah’; ‘The Dream of Gerontius.’

NELSON CLEF CLUB (Mr. Cecil H. Bateson).—‘The Fair Maid of Perth’ (Bizet); madrigals and part-songs; Blackpool Festival Music.

NEWPORT CHORAL SOCIETY (Mr. Arthur E. Sims).—‘The Dream of Gerontius’; Mass in B minor (with the Bristol Choral Society).

NORTH STAFFS DISTRICT CHORAL SOCIETY (Mr. John James).—‘The Messiah’; ‘The Apostles.’

NORWICH PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY (Dr. Frank Bates).—‘Ode on St. Cecilia’s Day’; Mass in B minor; ‘Choral’ Symphony; two orchestral concerts.

NOTTINGHAM SACRED HARMONIC SOCIETY (Mr. Allen Gill).—‘The Light of Life’ (Elgar); ‘The Battle of the Baltic’ (Stanford); ‘Toward the Unknown Region’ (Vaughan Williams); ‘The Messiah’; ‘Hiawatha’; Mass in B minor.

PERTH CHORAL SOCIETY (Mr. Stephen Richardson).—‘Hiawatha’s Departure’; ‘The Messiah’; ‘Elijah.’

POTTERIES CHORAL SOCIETY (Mr. Carl Oliver).—‘Elijah.’

PUDSEY CHORAL UNION (Mr. H. H. Pickard).—‘The Golden Legend’; ‘The Messiah’; ‘Phauidrig Crohoore’ and ‘Songs of the Fleet’ (Stanford).

RICHMOND (YORKS) CHORAL SOCIETY (Mr. Arthur Fountain).—Fantasia on Christmas Carols (Vaughan Williams); folk-song arrangements; ‘Requiem’ (Brahms).

RIPON CHORAL SOCIETY (Mr. P. R. Pfaff).—‘Cavalleria Rusticana’; Choral Fantasia on Rossini’s ‘William Tell.’

ROCHDALE PHILHARMONIC ORCHESTRAL AND CHORAL SOCIETY (Mr. F. Leach).—‘The Banner of St. George’; ‘Requiem’ (Brahms).

ST. HELEN’S GLEE CLUB (see p. 1003).

SCUNTHORPE CHORAL AND ORCHESTRAL SOCIETY (Mr. H. C. Burgess).—‘Hiawatha’; ‘Elijah.’

SHEFFIELD MUSICAL UNION (Dr. Henry Coward).—Mass in D (Beethoven); ‘Sleepers, wake’ (Bach); ‘The Messiah’; ‘Samson and Delilah.’

SITTINGBOURNE AND DISTRICT MUSICAL SOCIETY (Mr. W. J. Keech).—‘St. Paul’; ‘The Mikado.’

SOUTHAMPTON PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY (Mr. G. Leake).—‘Samson’; Cantata No. 207 (Bach); ‘John Gilpin’; (Dunhill); ‘Songs of the Sea’ (Stanford); ‘A Tale of Old Japan’; ‘Blest Pair of Sirens.’

SOUTHPORT UNITED CHOIR (Mr. C. Kingsley Killip).—‘Merrie England’; ‘Hiawatha’; ‘The Messiah.’

STOCKPORT VOCAL UNION (Dr. Thomas Keighley).—‘Faust’ (Berlioz); ‘The Creation.’

STOKE-ON-TRENT CHORAL SOCIETY (Mr. Ernest C. Redfern).—‘A Song of Freedom and Joy’ (Bainton); ‘The Messiah’; ‘Hiawatha.’

TABERNACLE CHORAL SOCIETY, PONTYPRIDD (Mr. Alun Dummer).—‘The Messiah’; ‘The Dream of Gerontius.’

TWYNHAM MUSICAL SOCIETY (Mr. F. J. Lord).—‘The Revenge’; selection from ‘The Bavarian Highlands’; part-songs, &c.

UCKFIELD AND DISTRICT MUSICAL SOCIETY (Mr. H. R. Revelly).—‘Judas Maccabæus.’

WEST BRIDGFORD CHORAL SOCIETY (Mr. W. Moulton Hughes).—‘The Messiah’; ‘Elijah’; ‘A Tale of Old Japan.’

WEST BROMWICH CHORAL SOCIETY (Mr. G. W. Shephard).—‘The Dream of Jubal’; ‘The Voyage of Maeldune’ (Stanford); ‘News from Whydah’ (Balfour Gardiner).

WESTON-SUPER-MARE CHORAL SOCIETY (Mr. F. G. Cooper).—‘Hiawatha.’

WINDSOR AND ETON CHORAL SOCIETY (Mr. B. C. S. Everett).—‘Hiawatha,’ Parts 1 and 2; ‘Requiem’ (Brahms); ‘The Dream of Gerontius.’

WOLVERHAMPTON CHORAL SOCIETY (Dr. Ernest Darby).—‘The Mystic Trumpeter’; ‘The Revenge’; part-songs.

The three years’ scholarship offered for children under fifteen by the London Violoncello School was won by David Ffrangcon Thomas, of Swansea. Mr. Herbert Walenn was the adjudicator.

THE BRUCKNER CENTENARY

By JOHN F. PORTE

The centenary of Anton Bruckner has come and gone in silence. To many musicians he is now but a name, while to the younger generation he is probably quite unknown. Yet Bruckner was a composer esteemed by Wagner (who accepted the dedication of the third Symphony) and was championed not only by his distinguished pupils, Nikisch, Mottl, and Mahler, but also by Richter and, later on, by Richard Strauss. At the first general rehearsal of Bruckner's second Symphony the remark was made, 'If Brahms were capable of writing such a Symphony the hall would totter with a storm of applause.' Of course that was in partisan days, for Bruckner was a Wagnerian. Posterity has decided the relative merits of Brahms and Bruckner, and there is no appeal against its decision.

Born at Ansfelden in Upper Austria on September 4, 1824, Anton Bruckner early began to experience the poverty and hardship which were to dog his footsteps for much of his bitter career. The son of a poorly paid teacher, he was the first of a family of twelve. At the age of twelve he lost his father, who had taught him a little music, and was taken into the Jesuit College of St. Florian at Kalksburg, where he was soon put in the choir. Eventually he became organist at the Cathedral at Linz, and it was here that his happiest days were spent. As a choral conductor he must have been esteemed, for Wagner sent him the final chorus of 'Die Meistersinger,' which he performed with the Frohsinn chorus before the work was given as a whole. The friendship between Wagner and Bruckner was a great influence on the latter. Always at heart a child, he adored the master and often wept over the poignant passages in the music dramas, even at the narration in Act 3 of 'Tannhäuser.' The friendship brought him the lasting enmity of the anti-Wagnerian critic at Vienna, Hanslick, who had previously been well-disposed toward his music.

As an organist, Bruckner was universally acclaimed. In 1869 he attended a congress at Nancy. There his playing was so outstanding that he was immediately invited to Paris, where he gave a highly successful series of recitals. He returned to Vienna, and later, in 1871, accepted an invitation to give a series of recitals on the new Albert Hall organ in London. Owing, it is said, to an injudicious advertising of his powers as an improviser, he was not at once successful with the London musical critics of the period. Some people blamed the now familiarly curious acoustics of the hall. Bruckner used to become so absorbed in his organ improvisations as to be oblivious to all else. At the Crystal Palace he was so lost in his playing that the organ blowers became exhausted, thus bringing the performance to an abrupt conclusion.

Bruckner's music reflects the same trait as did his organ playing. His nine Symphonies are of inordinate length, some of them requiring an hour and a half for performance. He was a pioneer of the 'colossal' in Teutonic music. London heard the third Symphony for the first time in 1891, and the seventh in 1887, both under Richter. The works were not so enthusiastically received as in Germany and Austria. Vienna gave Bruckner an honorary degree of Doctor, the occasion being an imposing fête in his honour. He died in the same city on October 11, 1896, leaving instructions for his 'Te Deum' of 1844 to be used as the Finale of his ninth and last Symphony.

Bruckner was a ponderous kind of worker, his output being small in number but bulky in form. Besides the Symphonies, there are a few Masses, a String Quintet, and some detached pieces. He was a man of extremely simple heart and outlook. In conversation he was said to be unable to sustain any subject but music. He never married, because, he said, his own childhood had been so wretched that he could not accept the responsibility of founding a family until it was too late for his consideration. A monument to his memory was erected in the Vienna Stadtpark in 1899. Bruckner Festivals were held at Linz, where he was organist to the Cathedral, in 1902 and 1904. The city voted a fund for annual performances of his works for twenty years after 1904. A Festival at Munich in 1909 consisted entirely of Beethoven and Bruckner Symphonies. Miniature scores of some of Bruckner's works, also symphony pianoforte transcriptions, are obtainable, and probably will receive the attention of those interested in a composer whose music was once pitted against that of Brahms and which shared a whole Festival with Beethoven.

London Concerts

PROMENADE CONCERTS

The attendance of the King and Queen at one of the last Promenade Concerts of the season was a token of goodwill that everybody appreciated, the more so because it was entirely spontaneous. There is, surely, no possibility of the cessation of the 'Proms.' They have become part of the Londoner's bundle of life—a very happy possession, one of the best signs of his musical health, and a token of the value of the democratic spirit in art. Sir Henry Wood and Mr. Robert Newman have seen the fat years and the lean together. The concerts simply must continue. It is good to have the official declaration, in the sheet summarising the season's work that is always put into the last programme, that 'the change in the character of the Tuesday programmes has been a success on the whole,' and that 'the attendance compares favourably with that of last year.' There is, too, a word of good omen about the public's evident delight in Bach, whose name appeared twenty-six times during the series. Next year, then, we may hope for a repetition of the plans that, experimentally put into action this year, have been fully justified. Novelities will probably appear again, after a season's absence; we ought to hear what is going on in composition, and a reasonable leaven of new things will not drive away the new 'Prom' public. Only one thing remains to be desired—that a larger public than that now able to attend may be enabled to hear these programmes. They are of fine educational value and artistic worth. May we not hope for a scheme that will give Sir Henry an audience, not of thousands, but of millions?

One or two people of distinct personality were heard in the last few weeks of the season. Mr. Victor Schiöler played the Reger Pianoforte Concerto to which we were introduced last year. It is heavy weather most of the time—austere, rugged, unamiable music that yet has power, and makes one feel sure that the composer knows where he is going, even if we cannot always follow his somewhat tortuous thought. His harmonic idiom is often attractive in its spare, stark way. I liked Mr. Schiöler very much. His is clean, clever playing, highly intellectual. 'He would be fine in Brahms,' I thought—and he was, for the rule about 'no encores in the first part of the programme' was waived for him (a tribute to his playing, rather than to the Reger), and we had a distinguished performance, splendidly broad and dignified, of a Brahms Rhapsody.

M. Solito de Solis has played several times, but always he has chosen showy things. I find him brilliant but not deep, and scarcely an ideal concerto player. His last performance, of Liszt's 'Todtentanz,' brought down the house, and thrust home in my mind the impression that the average man likes noisy foolishness just as well as lovely sanity in music; he has no conscience—no artistic conscience—at all.

Miss Jelly d'Aranyi touched noble heights of emotion in the slow movement of the Beethoven Violin Concerto on the Royal night. The last movement seems to me one of those in which Beethoven was not at his best; but many will doubtless differ about that.

Miss Anna Hegner is another extremely capable violinist—the kind of player with whom you feel perfectly safe. Her work in the Mozart A major Concerto (K. 219) was exceedingly resourceful.

Among memorable orchestral performances I would name those of Bax's Variations (with Miss Cohen as the soloist—clever, but to my mind rather hard on this occasion); of the three-pianoforte Bach Concerto (Messrs. Clifford Curzon, Norman Franklin, and Reginald King), a perfect bit of teamwork by all hands; of the Tchaikovsky Variations in G, and of the 'Casse Noisette,' that Sir Henry does with such delicious effortlessness; and of many other things, such as the two Brahms Hungarian Dances, the 'Manfred' Overture, and the three 'Planets' on September 18, amazingly powerfully presented. In such highly-finished performances we savour in essence some of the many choice qualities in this orchestra. With a few exceptions, its playing of the hundreds of works in the ten-weeks' season has been notably fine. The strain of sixty-one consecutive nights' playing and conducting must be very great.

In the demonstrations of affection, warm and prolonged, on the last night of the season, Sir Henry and his players had their reward for endless pains, and a renewed assurance of the public's gratitude for the devotion of its old friends. W. R. A.

GALLI-CURCI

Madame Galli-Curci's concerts at the Albert Hall were preceded by fanfares and flourishes. The lady had zealous friends, and they rather overdid the preliminary trumpeting. What mortal creature could have lived up to it? True, the Albert Hall was filled for the first appearance of a singer known only by tales of her American vogue and by her gramophone records.

She was not the first of these gramophone lions, and the truth was again established that a gramophone reputation has its dangers. Madame Galli-Curci sang very beautifully and had a great success. But we felt at both concerts that there was a slight—oh, ever such a slight—disillusionment, and it was not one which could be put down to any shortcoming of the singer. These folk had probably said, 'If on a mere machine that voice sounds so admirable, must not the reality be something divine?' Well, it is too much to require a mortal, however exceptional, to be 'divine' to order. Madame Galli-Curci is a singer of the first rank—only the ingenuous public seems to have expected that trees and the mountain tops that freeze would bow themselves when she did sing.

Music should not be asked to work mythological wonders. It is at a certain peril to music, indeed, that it is asked to enchant, by the means of a single exponent, an Albert-Hall-full of people. Perhaps at the present day only a pianist could do it without any declension from a good musical level. Pianists to-day have the advantage over all other music-makers in addressing an audience more or less instructed in the technics of the performance. The pianoforte-playing public is so much vaster than the singing or fiddling public, and the pianist consequently never has to descend from the level of the best he can do, for the sake of a big audience. The better he does, the bigger his public.

This accomplished Madame Galli-Curci cannot count on crowds capable of appreciating the fine points of her art, as a Cortôt or a Hofmann can. A Hofmann may have in his audience one barbarian butting in with clapping hands in the wrong place in the F minor Ballade, but the rest are connoisseurs. At Madame Galli-Curci's concerts one felt there was a large proportion of barbarians. However little sympathy may be called for by a young lady lucky enough to earn a thousand guineas a day, one ventured to feel a little sorry for Madame Galli-Curci. The appreciation of the fine points of vocal technics is not the fashion. Let us hint that it is sometimes not cultivated even by the professional commentators. Madame Galli-Curci probably felt as though she were singing, like Orpheus, to the beasts of the field.

On the strength of her singing of the things she does best she could not command a full Albert Hall. The things she did best passed generally unnoticed by the mass, which was waiting for something more thrilling or more affecting. At the same time it is not in the nature of the ambitious prima donna to be satisfied with a small select circle of listening connoisseurs. This prima donna comes from the land par excellence of big crowds, and she has learnt to adapt herself. Hence the curiously mixed effect of her concerts.

Any music written on or for the Mediterranean shores she sings exquisitely. But those are not the lands of affecting music, but of music that is formal and ornate. She is a lovely singer of classical Italian music. The middle of her voice is a ravishing instrument, warm and flexible. Her florid singing was only a shade less delightful. We had expected a coloratura singer, but found that fireworks above the stave were not her principal art. The beautifully drawn line of her pure cantabile style was her true achievement. It touched the ideal, and we did not want her to put into it any poetry or feeling. It was poetry as it was. Her selections included 'Se tu m'ami' (Pergolesi), 'Pur dicesti' (Lotti), and operatic pieces of Bellini, Meyerbeer ('Ombra Leggera' and the Berceuse from the same opera), Donizetti, Verdi, Thomas, and so on. Several of these composers are little considered nowadays, but it must be admitted that, executed on this instrument, they all sounded delicately musical, and one had heart searchings. Compared with some of their neighbours on the programmes, Donizetti and Meyerbeer seemed positively aristocratic.

Madame Galli-Curci also sang some songs of Bishop, who sounded jejune but not objectionable. But like most Italian singers, she has only sketchy notions of foreign languages. Her broken English was quaint enough, and of course pleased the simple, but really the application of this elaborate vocal art to such things as 'Robin Adair' was in the long run tasteless and absurd. She also essayed German, but was ill advised, for she has not the least feeling for the romantic quality of 'Who is Sylvia?' or Schumann's 'Mondnacht,' and simply courts damaging comparison with Madame Frieda Hempel. There is no need to go into the sad story of her modern ballads, mostly American, and all unpalatable. The reason for them was made clear by the audience's attitude. Here was something to which it could immediately take! Family reasons no doubt dictated the choice of compositions by Mr. Homer Samuels, her accompanist and husband. But—to go back to our comparative remarks on singers and pianists—all this activity was of an order to which no instrumentalist of any standing would have descended. The things were not even well sung.

Let us say that the new singer's personal attractiveness is something which the gramophonists must add by imagination to her discs. Why not be frank, and admit that the looks of a performer, and the impression gained from attitude and behaviour count enormously in the winning of the public? Is not something of Kreisler's vogue to be put down to his air of distinguished, romantic melancholy? Madame Galli-Curci is a Mediterranean beauty, graceful and exotic in a way that makes you think of Naples or Seville. C.

SINGERS OF THE MONTH

JOHN MCCORMACK

Mr. John McCormack, singing here after more than ten years' absence, had an audience entirely prepared to idolise him. His concert was the first of the Sunday afternoon series at Queen's Hall. The audience was, one gathered, largely Irish, and no singer could have had a heartier reception. The programme was of good music. Mr. McCormack began with some Scarlatti and Handel. His second group included Schubert, Brahms, and Wolf. There were the inevitable Irish folk-songs, and at the end a mixed bag. Mr. McCormack chose a beautiful song of Frank Bridge, and a poorish one by Chadwick.

Mr. McCormack is an altogether finer artist than of old—he is, in fact, transformed. It was curious how he imparted to everything he sang a wistful, tears-at-the-heart-of-things expression, whether obviously called for or no. Together with admirable technics, this expression gave a peculiar attraction to the Scarlatti piece ('Caldo Sangue') with which he began. But it did not suit Handel particularly, and we wished the singer were a little heartier. But Mr. McCormack has evidently specialized. And, indeed, it is something to do one thing perfectly. The studied expression of a fascinating melancholy is this clever artist's speciality.

He has developed an excellent platform manner. He stands with an artless and submissive look, and he sings in a way that to the layman looks effortless and almost thoughtless. We who know, know that every inflection of such singing has been prepared in years of training. In Scarlatti, his style was more Italian than that of any contemporary Italian. The critical ear was quite delighted. Later on the limitations of this singer became obvious, but one must allow that he continued to charm. There were enough shades in his sentiment to keep interest alive.

Mr. McCormack's power lies primarily in his faultless diction, and in his complete control of breath. He has perfected his sense of the amount of breath required for a given phrase. He uses this sense with acute fineness. The only thing to be said against his diction is that it is too consciously good, and this perhaps was the reason why his rustic Irish songs were less satisfying than other things. There was an opposition between this rather 'precious' utterance of the preened, self-conscious troubadour and the idle spontaneity of such songs. But needless to say, the audience was all feeding from his hand. It did not mind the rather stereotyped pathos of this ingratiating Hibernian—that pathos of Irish woe which has become so lucrative an asset of many artistic businesses the world over.

At the end of the concert one could imagine Mr. McCormack carefully packing up his precious voice, as a woman her pearl necklace. Less than with the truly supreme artists did one feel with him that the man was the song, the song the man. Mr. McCormack one felt to be standing outside the song, carefully regulating the works, and with a hand all ready to readjust whatever should go wrong with the beautifully prepared effects.

OTHER SINGERS

Mr. John Barclay gave a concert better than the usual at Æolian Hall. He is a baritone, with free, loose, low notes such as a bass desires. He started better than he finished. By the end of the programme his voice had begun to wear. The young man had tackled a great—a too great—variety of songs, from Debussy at his lightest to sea-chanties. At his best we had a good, manly resonance, and bright consonants and shapely vowels. In Brahms, Mr. Barclay was best in 'Nicht mehr zu dir zu gehen.' In Debussy's 'Sentimental Colloquy' he used a quasi-parlando tone to good effect. An agreeable 'Tarantella' by Francis Toye was the best of the novelties.

Mr. Bertram Ayrton's singing won a decided measure of admiration at the same hall. Sometimes his tone was on the dull side, but he often managed to retrieve a position by a vivid splash. His range is not great, or at least he was not easy all through his compass. About the high E flat he was often uncertain whether to open or shut his tone. In his delivery there was a touch of Mr. Plunket Greene's nonchalance, and one was reminded of the same singer by the programme itself. This ranged from an air from Bach's 'Phœbus and Pan' to Parry ('Follow a Shadow' and 'Nightfall in Winter') and Stanford ('Fairy Lough').

Miss Jeanne Jouve sang at Wigmore Hall. There is such a volume of tone in her performance that mere words were mostly drowned. After a while it became very pleasant to catch sight of just one or two on the surface—they broke the monotony. Miss Jouve has an uncommonly fine voice, and well managed, too, considering its size. But she tried to make it do inappropriate tricks, and sang nursery songs, just as Dame Clara Butt will persist in telling us about pansies. Perhaps her 'Widmung' (Schumann) was as effective as anything she sang. If Miss Jouve could cultivate a brighter quality, we should say that the operatic stage was her place.

Miss Joan Muirella, at Wigmore Hall, sang with a pretty soprano voice, but did not really justify her appearance there. She is immature. When she has entirely eliminated the quality of caricatureishness from her words she may return.

Miss Perla Siedle was one of the first arrivals of the new season. Her soprano voice was appealing, and she managed it well as a rule. But she used it without much imagination, or perhaps it was that she was so nervous that she could do no more than get through her songs. This nervousness spoilt many of her vowels. In Bach's 'Echo' Song, the phrase 'Das macht der Wind' recurs frequently, and every time she failed to give the last word its due singing space. She sang Durante's 'Danza, danza' really well, but was bothered by the breadth of Cesti's 'Intorno all' idol mio.'

Miss Isobel McLaren sang at Wigmore Hall. She was styled a contralto, but her voice was a mezzo-soprano inclining to full soprano, notwithstanding that her present top notes are not good. They might be good if the voice were more lightly poised. In slender tones Miss McLaren's voice was often beautiful. She showed the temperament of a singer, and with soundly-based technics might do well. She was best in Brahms. But she slowed down some of her songs into dirges—Wolf's 'Verborgenheit,' for instance. There was no sense in such a snail's pace.

Mr. Augustus Milner has an admirable voice. This is not to say that he always uses it admirably. He did not keep to the standard he had set himself in Berlioz's 'Villanelle,' and Busoni's 'Flea' Song. These, by the way, were songs which might have betrayed him badly if his technics had not been firmly established. But elsewhere in the programme Mr. Milner insisted on putting more into his singing than the music could conveniently bear. He overwrought the details; he gave an exaggerated nasal quality to certain vowels, and his way of arrival to several high crescendos was painfully obvious. On the whole he was too lachrymose, even considering the melancholy character of a proportion of his songs. Is he a fine singer in the making? We should say 'Yes,' if he could know the effect of his singing on the ears of others. Obviously he is eagerly intelligent, and we look forward to his curing his defects, which, after all, are not radical.

At her interesting recital at Wigmore Hall Miss Sarah Fischer did not allow her operatic experience to interfere unduly with her lyrical singing. Her voice seemed fuller and more flexible than when we heard her at Covent Garden. Only Miss Fischer must pay more attention to her high notes. In taking wide intervals she was not always self-assured, and the result was often a kind of rash, experimental upward thrust, instead of a calm and clean flow at the middle of a note.

H. J. K.

DELIUS'S VIOLIN SONATA

'The Music Society' is rather a little Society for such a big name. Such a name seems to embrace much. The little Society which meets at St. John's Institute (just behind Westminster Abbey) has a restricted embrace, but what it gets hold of is usually good.

The concerts are between tea-time and dinner-time. One sits in a deck-chair, and smokes. The hall is crypt-like, and rather too resonant. At the first meeting this winter there was a programme of modern English chamber music—and everyone there (Mr. W. J. Turner, of course, excepted—if he were there), seemed to like it.

Indeed, such English chamber-music as we heard—Vaughan Williams's Phantasy Quintet, Bax's Oboe Quintet, and a new Violin Sonata of Delius—might reasonably expect a welcome. But we live in days of strange music-lovers. One might say that many are in truth music-haters (I have just been reading Mr. Turner's book!), and only endure music in this life in hopes of a remittance of purgatory.

And none of these three pieces would succeed in beguiling those others who can take to nothing between the extremely archaic and the purest of atonality. Mr. Albert Sammons and Mr. Howard-Jones played Delius's Violin Sonata, called, like its predecessor, 'No. 2.' It is a brief work, to the point. The composer has deigned to come outside his wood. He tells you that there was all the time a real human being amidst all those thick silvan shadows. The violin sings with an eagerness that is almost naïf. There are mercifully few notes for the pianoforte. (The fewer notes are always the better on that instrument; and that is a truth which is just dawning on the human race.) There is one movement, or rather, three short linked movements, and no sonata-form arguments—just a lyrical expansion.

And surely (if only I could forget Mr. Turner's native predisposition against music!) Bax's Oboe Quintet is, too, recognisable by all as truly beautiful music? This composer, indeed, cannot or will not clinch his statements firmly. Heaven forbid an excess of full-closes, but Bax's style does sometimes seem to disclose a failure to affirm quite cheerily and decisively.

The Quintet has an abundance of free and affecting melody. The actual sound is lovely. And the dreamy monody (the oboe is protagonist, and the strings are its reflections) is brief. This is one of Bax's works with which the listener could fancy an intimacy. The oboe was Mr. Leon Goossens's. C.

CHORAL CONCERTS

'Elijah' has opened the season of London's two major choral societies—at the Alexandra Palace, on October II, Mr. Allen Gill conducting, and at the Royal Albert Hall a week later, Mr. Albert Coates conducting. This is routine work, and quite salutary in practice, for although 'Elijah' may be the milk pudding of oratorios, it is well cooked—that is to say, its choral music is well written for the chorus. We expect the Royal Choral Society and the Alexandra Palace Choir to sing it well, and they both did. The matter most worth noting in each case was the singing of Elijah's music by Mr. Horace Stevens.

At the other end of the scale—numerically only—October 18 gave us the Oriana Singers, twenty strong, at Æolian Hall. This is not a commentary of Mr. C. Kennedy Scott's on the quality of his larger Oriana Choir. Twenty or sixty, well-trained singers give us the same satisfaction in our beloved Tudor music, and if this device of inner selection—a sort of sub-committee—has the effect of giving us more concerts of this kind, so much the better. X.

QUEEN'S HALL SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

The Saturday afternoon Symphony Concerts of the New Queen's Hall Orchestra began on October II. Sir Henry Wood conducted three representative works of the showy and exuberant 19th century in Berlioz's 'Fantastic' Symphony, Tchaikovsky's 'Francesca da Rimini,' and Strauss's 'Don Juan'—a pretty, historical sequence, but one that was rather lacking in moments of serenity. To judge from this programme and that of the first L.S.O. concert, our art began with Berlioz's magnificent motley. But symphony concerts exclusively on these lines become a strain on the senses—such a glare of scarlet and gold.

Rachmaninov played in his own Concerto (No. 3) in D—more 19th century, though it may be dated 20th. We take it as we take a novel of its time, a novel once read for its story, a palpitating novelty, but now interesting for its associations, or as a manifestation of an era—'Ah, so this was 1897!'

Rachmaninov remains, personally, one of the most appreciated of musicians in the London of 1924, and he had a fine tussle with the applauders—over the bone of an encore. He won. C.

OPERA AT BRISTOL

BRISTOL, October 15

Mr. P. Napier Miles began a week of opera in Victoria Rooms, Clifton, on Monday. It was one of those enterprises which seek to break away from the conventional forms of music-making usual in the English provinces. In some ways—for instance, in the 'æsthetic' fashions adopted in Purcell's 'Dido and Æneas'—it resembled the neighbouring Festival of Glastonbury. And, as at Glastonbury, the principal promoter's own work had the leading place in the scheme.

But Bristol naturally boasts a more convenient hall than the cramped little upper chamber at Glastonbury, and, moreover, it has an orchestra—the Bristol Symphony Orchestra. This name has a grand and reassuring sound; the reality is a little less impressive. When you look round the size and obvious wealth of Bristol, you are surprised that the Symphony Orchestra of such a city should be so poor a thing. On Monday night the players did not shine, and in fact in one piece—Mr. Napier Miles's 'Fireflies'—they were superseded by a pianoforte. On Tuesday night it was a relief to see some reinforcements from London on the scene.

Mr. Napier Miles had collected a number of good singers to perform in the six pieces of the repertory, and he staging gave evidence of intelligence and taste. The programmes comprised the following: 'Dido and Æneas'

(Purcell), 'The Shepherds of the Delectable Mountains' (Vaughan Williams), 'Markheim,' 'Fireflies,' and 'Music Comes' (Napier Miles), and 'Master Peter's Puppet Show' (Manuel de Falla). Whether Bristol people are going to retrieve their reputation before the end of the week I cannot say, but the sight of the hall on Monday and Tuesday was a deplorable reflection on the lack here of intelligent musical curiosity and of recognition of a public-spirited enterprise.

Dr. Malcolm Sargent conducted all these pieces, and enhanced his reputation, which seems to grow month by month. He is an extraordinarily gifted young man, and is certainly destined to play a big part in English musical doings. At present he is not a finished opera conductor, because he lacks a special sympathy with singers. After all, in opera—or in most operas—singers are soloists, and ought not to be unduly dragooned. In 'Dido,' Dr. Sargent ruled every one like a martinet, and gave no more latitude to the voices than if they had had merely subsidiary parts in the texture. This point seems to me worth dwelling on, for it is not peculiar to Dr. Sargent. Three present-day conductors out of four are ruthless towards their singers (we have even known Sir Henry Wood to incline that way). It is a pity they do not go in for singing themselves.

Miss Astra Desmond was a stately Dido, though not in her best voice. Mr. Johnstone-Douglas delivered well that wonderful piece of recitative of Æneas. The other singers were Misses Muriel Tannahill, Génée Andrews, Doris Kinghorn, Kathleen Beer, and Messrs. John Russell, Tom Goodey, and John Dean.

But though the performance gave sincere pleasure, and it was good to see this recognition of an English classic that should be universally known, the impression cannot pass that we had ideal singing of Purcell. Purcell himself would probably have considered it not nearly musical enough, and would further have been surprised that so few of the words—to exhibit which clearly he had taken such delicate pains—came through.

Cloudy diction was indeed a common fault in this company of singers, and so grave was it that any of them who take their art seriously should examine themselves to find where is the flaw in their technics. To the listener it seemed that with some it was a radically unsound production, and in others a lack of vitality. A buoyantly vital singer would surely wish to impress and convince his hearers more than these. Mere tone is not the whole of singing, or certainly not the whole of operatic singing.

From the words which came over the orchestra in this comparatively small hall, one could not have guessed the drift of any of Mr. Napier Miles's compositions. All three of these were the product of a skilled pen and a refined taste. 'Markheim' seemed most to possess the elements of effectiveness. This little opera struck me as the composition of a musician irresistibly impelled towards operatic writing, but at the same time recognising the disheartening operatic conditions in England. Abroad, he would have made three Acts of 'Markheim,' and probably a success. This one Act is a sort of sketch of an eventual work. The sudden murder of the antiquary by Markheim would then have room to be prepared. The arrival of the sinister 'visitor' makes a moment of capital theatrical horror, and his tempting of the murderer is truly dramatic. It all calls to be expanded, but the composer (and how naturally!) has said to himself, 'Of what use?' and he cuts it down to an anecdote. 'Markheim' was well sung by Messrs. Stuart Wilson, Arthur Cranmer, and Tom Goodey. We think the piece deserves the consideration of the B.N.O.C.

'Fireflies,' in spite of some exceedingly graceful music, was rather farther from the mark. To be frank, we never had a notion of what was the argument between this Columbine and Harlequin (Miss Muriel Tannahill and Mr. Stuart Wilson). Its dimensions were so much beyond any ordinary operatic duet that there must have been some body to the argument. The libretto was by Julian Sturgis. Perhaps if the singing had possessed more sensuous charm the piece would have remained more safe from the danger of becoming tiresome.

'Music Comes' is a Choral Ballet (text by John Freeman), which has frequently been seen at Glastonbury and elsewhere. The score well exemplifies Mr. Napier Miles's pleasant talent, with less ambitious music. It is rather pale music, but it falls gratefully on the ear, for while it essays no audacity it does possess a certain gentle character and independence of its own.

Dr. Vaughan Williams's beautiful scene from 'Pilgrim's Progress' is curiously little known. One recalls only a performance or two at the R.C.M. It is very characteristic. Who else knows how to diffuse this sense of a high stillness and a deep-breathing awe? The singers were Messrs. T. D. Alexander, Tom Goodey, Arthur Cranmer, Johnstone-Douglas, and J. Dean.

The last piece—Manuel de Falla's 'Puppet Show,' a scene from 'Don Quixote'—was a bonne bouche. It is said that nowhere had this brilliant trifle before been given in public. We witness, along with Don Quixote, a puppet show, nearly related to Punch and Judy, telling of the Princess Melisendra's rescue from the Moors by a Knight of Charlemagne. The showman's boy narrates the ballad in a high-pitched recitative. We take as much delight in the gay and droll puppets as the simplest of Don Quixote's contemporaries; and all the while there is a curious, lively, brightly-painted music going on—open-air music of fair-ground noises, nasal voices, rustlings, and occasionally recognisably Spanish turns of phrase and rhythm. It is an extraordinarily witty and engaging little score. It ends, of course, with Don Quixote, excited to madness by the artful story, laying about him with his sword to the damage of the puppets and the terrifying of the audience.

Mr. J. B. Trend's translation was used. Miss Tannahill sang the narrative cleverly, though we did not hear her words. Mr. Arthur Cranmer was Don Quixote. The conducting was a brilliant feat of Dr. Sargent—the little piece is full of queer places. Mr. Cuthbert Smith's puppets were capitally right and jolly. Londoners will relish de Falla's 'Puppet Show' when it reaches them. C.

Competition Festival Record

BLACKPOOL FESTIVAL

The outstanding features of this week of music (in the order of their occurrence) were the Tudor music on the opening day; the chamber music and orchestral work on the second; the operatic classes on the third; the vocal solo work occupying the third and fourth days; and the choral singing on the closing day. Reference to aspects of the juvenile competitions will be found in the School Music Review. It is just two years since the introduction at this Festival (Sir Richard Terry said 'for the first time at any festival') of an attempt to cultivate interest in the solo writing of the Elizabethan lutenist poet-musicians—an interest which it was hoped would develop along as serious lines as it had done gradually in the ordinary vocal solo classes. Its study was introduced in the two-fold hope that it would, e.g., do for England what the cultivation of national folk-tune has done in Scotland, and also that this Tudor-study would purify the too-prevalent style of solo singing, just in the same way that madrigal work has purged choral singing of many impurities—in short, that it would contribute materially to the elevation of a finer musical style. Of course these ideals cannot be accomplished in one year, or in five. The growth may seem almost imperceptible, but it is showing—showing to the extent that Sir Richard Terry this year chose to make some comment analogous to that of pruning, in the interests of the later musical life of the plant. The problems of the orchestra and chamber music have baffled the Northern festivals for years; progress in these two branches of musical activity has seemed so slow in comparison with the rapid advance in choral art. Why?—and, How can it be remedied? have been the all-important questions. It was difficult enough in pre-war days, and the obstacles to progress seemed to multiply after the peace. And then came one of those amazing transformations which for two years has meant the allocation of one hall for two sessions to chamber-music entrants alone, and, what was much more encouraging, a big crowd of attentive listeners. So in the orchestras; last year a 'Marching Song' of Holst, and five or six bands on a night—in mid-week too, which meant men and women getting leave of absence from business. This year Mendelssohn's 'Ruy Blas' Overture brought five bands, two approximating reasonably to the description 'full orchestras,' and those two able to give really good performances. The others, not so strong numerically, resorted to the device of 'cueing in,' some instruments making shift for a missing (say) wind part. Although here full sonority was lacking, and some themes fell strangely on the ear in their new colouring, yet there was abundant evidence of true musicianly feeling. Possibly the use of 'Carmen' (as against 'Fidelio' last year) was responsible for the rather embarrassing entry in the operatic classes. No fewer than three songs, two duets, one trio (the 'Card Scene'), and the great quintet were heard in competitive classes all the afternoon and evening of the third day. The Blackpool audience must know its 'Card Scene' by heart, for it heard ten performances in succession. The difficulty ahead of the selection committee will be to find an opera of which such a condensed or (in 'Co-optimist' parlance) 'potted' version can be provided. Soloists who desire to excel at Blackpool have to cultivate great versatility in addition to much hard vocal work. Gone are the days when you could, by singing 'Who is Sylvia?' 'Aufenthalt,' or 'Les Divinités du Styx' very well at this Festival, get your foot on the ladder of success, as did Miss Clara Butterworth or Miss Lucy Nuttall (just to instance a couple of notable Blackpool winners). Now a bass must do Haydn, Schubert, and Moussorgsky; a tenor Bach, Bax, and Borodin, and do them all well, before he can merit distinction here. This encouragement of all-round competence has been carried to extraordinary lengths. The baritone (from Bedford) and the bass (a butcher at Bradford) were two instances of the sort of thing which it is possible to hear only at this Festival. The performers go through the hurly-burly of the preliminary competitions, which constitute a kind of refining process, are proved again and again, sixty voices being reduced to ten, and then to five, and narrowed down gradually, to the ultimate victor. You need nerve and staying-power, as well as uncommonly good vocal equipment to win through. Distinguished members of the Carl Rosa, Moody-Manners, and latterly of the B.N.O.C., know something of the 'Rose Bowl' classes at Blackpool; their experiences there must have been of incalculable value to them in their later careers. On its choral side, we had the experience of hearing in one day more good choirs than have ever before been gathered together in one place; and, for the most part, the music was worth all the pains expended on its preparation. C. H.

MENBOROUGH.—The seventh Festival occupied three halls for two days (October 3 and 4), and was highly successful in every way. The singing of the Birdwell Working Men's Club Male-Voice Choir was one of the features of the Festival. The tests were 'The Siege of Kazan,' by C. M. Edmunds, and Bantock's 'The Fond Lover.' An orchestra from Barmboro' Colliery, conducted by Mr. W. Williams, did excellently in Holst's 'St. Paul's' Suite for strings and in Beethoven's 'Coriolanus' Overture.

Six entries=six first prizes: surely this must be a record. The feat was achieved at Blackpool by Mr. Percy M. Dayman, who carried off the Daily News Challenge Shield for full orchestras (fifty players) for the third year in succession; the Hargreaves Rose Bowl for church choirs (twenty-four voices); the Duckworth Cup for church choirs (thirty-five voices); the Stansfield Trophy and Smith Rose Bowl for ladies' choirs (an open class in which were twenty entries); the Franceys Trophy for mixed-voice choirs (sixty voices); and the first prize for string orchestras. Mr. Dayman is an insurance manager, who manages to spare time to conduct the Blackpool Amateur Symphony Orchestra, the Blackpool Lyric Choir, the Lytham St. Anne's Orchestral Society, the Blackpool Choral and Orchestral Society, and a church choir. On Sundays he plays the organ! As a combination of business man and successful musical enthusiast, Mr. Dayman will be hard to beat.

We have received the syllabus of the third Elizabethan Music Competition Festival (February 23, 25, 27, and 28, at Kingsway Hall). It is, as usual, a fine list of delightful old music of great variety. There are classes for large and small choirs (church and otherwise), girls' clubs, schools, &c., and a particularly attractive section for vocal duet, trio, quartet, and quintet, for male, female, and mixed voices. The instrumental side is of course strongest in the string department, with works for three, four, five, and six players. Copies of the Syllabus are to be had from the hon. secretary, Mr. A. H. M. Kempe, 36, Connaught Square, W.2.

Music in the Provinces

ABERDEEN.—Sketch programmes have been issued of the Aberdeen choral and orchestral concerts. They run as follows: November 19, the Scottish Orchestra under Weingartner; December 11, 'The Hymn of Jesus,' 'Blest Pair of Sirens,' selections from 'Parsifal' and the B minor Mass; February 5, Berlioz's 'Faust.' Mr. Willan Swainson conducts the last two concerts. A new 'Aberdeen Junior Choir' is being formed by Mr. Swainson.

ALNWICK.—A branch of the B.M.S. has recently been started, and within a few weeks forty-seven members had been enrolled.

BANGOR.—At the first concert of the season, on October 2, the works performed included Brahms's Trio in C, Mozart's Trio in E, and Handel's Violin Sonata in A. Mr. E. T. Davies lectured on 'Music Appreciation.'—At the second concert on October 9, the Prelude from 'Sleepers, wake' (Bach), Tchaikovsky's String Quartet, Op. 11, a 'Cello Sonata by de Fesch, a Trio, 'Celtic Prelude,' by Rutland Boughton, and Mozart's String Quartet in D minor were performed.—The Choral Society is preparing the 'St. Matthew' Passion.

BATH.—The winter season opened on October 7, with Mr. Jan Hurst and his orchestra of fifteen players—the acquisition of the orchestra being a new venture. Weekly symphony concerts will be given.

BIRMINGHAM.—The City of Birmingham Orchestra opened its season with a Symphony Concert on October 8. Taking his place for the first time as permanent conductor, Mr. Adrian C. Boult drew from his players no more than a passable performance of Brahms's Symphony in C minor. There was too little light and shade in the playing, and it lacked the imaginative qualities without which Brahms is dull and grey. Strauss's 'Don Juan' was hardly eager enough, but in 'The Flying Dutchman' Overture the Orchestra was heard to great advantage. The novelty of the concert was Armstrong Gibbs's 'Vision of Night.'—A series of nine Saturday afternoon children's concerts has been arranged. At the first of these Mr. Boult explained each piece before it was played, and showed a real understanding of the child-mind. An audience of school-children crowded the hall.—At the first popular Saturday night concert the third 'Leonore' Overture of Beethoven and the second 'Arlésienne' Suite of Bizet were included in the programme. Miss Winifred Browne, whose technique improves at every hearing, played Rimsky-Korsakov's Piano Concerto.—At the Sunday concert at the Futurist Theatre the orchestra gave some really fine playing in Beethoven's second Symphony and the 'Shropshire Lad' Rhapsody of Butterworth. Mr. Samuel Saul sang a 'Fidelio' Aria and some Dvorák songs.—The Midland Musical Society gave Mendelssohn's 'Hymn of Praise' on October 6. In order to offer seats at cheap prices the orchestra was dispensed with, and Mr. G. D. Cunningham substituted on the organ.—At one of the Mid-day concert series the Elizabeth Trio gave some charming madrigals.

BOURNEMOUTH.—Sir Dan Godfrey opened the thirteenth season of symphony concerts at the Winter Gardens on October 9, with a programme typical of Bournemouth music: Beethoven's seventh Symphony, de Falla's 'Three-Cornered Hat' Suite, Rachmaninov's D minor Concerto (played by Miss Maud Agnes Winter), and Chabrier's 'Gwendoline' Overture. A feature of the season is to be a series of appreciation lectures for children, given by Sir Dan Godfrey.

BRISTOL.—The choir and orchestra formed by members of the staff of Messrs. Frys' works gave the major part of the programme of the first concert in Central Hall on October 4. The organization has been rearranged with a view to undertaking work of wider variety than the Cecilian Choral Society did. Mr. Charles Read is the conductor.—On October 8 the Symphony Orchestra's season opened with Mr. Albert Coates as guest-conductor. Brahms's Symphony in C minor, Tchaikovsky's 'Romeo and Juliet' symphonic poem, and Borodin's 'Danses Poloviennes' were the orchestral programme, and songs were given by Miss Pauline Pastore.

BURNLEY.—An excellent series of Municipal concerts has been arranged, at prices from 3s. 6d. to 6d. The first, on September 28, brought the Habersham Glee Union and the Manchester Wind Trio, and the second, on October 5, the Municipal Symphony Orchestra, Miss Miriam Licette, and Miss Beatrice Harrison. 'Hiawatha' was the feature of the programme arranged for October 26. The concert of November 23 is for children. The Hallé Orchestra comes on November 30, to play under Mr. Hamilton Harty. The Municipal Choir gives 'The Messiah' on December 28, and Verdi's 'Requiem' on March 29. Concerts on January 25 and February 22 will be given by the Municipal Symphony Orchestra, of which Mr. Fred Myers is conductor.—The Burnley Clef Club, which is a branch of the British Music Society, has an unusually varied and enterprising programme of thirteen concerts. For November the scheme is a concert of Blackpool Festival Competition music on the 14th, and a lecture-recital by Mr. Rutland Boughton on the 28th.

BURY ST. EDMUND'S.—On October 7 Miss Dorothy Sexton, a local violinist, gave a recital, assisted by Miss Dorothy Callender (pianoforte) and Miss Myrtle Stewart (vocalist). Brahms's Violin Sonata in D minor was the chief item.

CARDIFF.—The Council of University College of South Wales and Monmouthshire has decided that the chamber concerts given on Saturday evenings, which have hitherto been carried on with the voluntary help of members of the College staff, shall in future be regarded as a necessary part of the work of the musical department. The members of the instrumental trio also undertake concert work in towns and villages in the area served by the College. The concerts during the coming winter will number twenty-five.

CHACEWATER.—A musical society has been formed for general instruction in music, under the direction of Mr. D. Behenna, organist of St. Agnes' Parish Church.

DUNFERMLINE.—The Choral Union has been resuscitated, and Mr. A. M. Henderson, organist at Glasgow University, has been appointed conductor.

EXETER.—The season opened on September 29 with two concerts, given by the London String Quartet, at one of Messrs. Paish's series.

HARROGATE.—Mr. Basil Cameron and the Municipal Orchestra are making Harrogate a musical centre of some importance. The weekly Symphony Concerts maintain a high standard in their programmes of classical and modern works. The following have been recently given: Glazounov's sixth Symphony, Franck's 'Symphonic Variations' for pianoforte and orchestra (Miss Olive Bloom), Cowen's 'The Butterfly's Ball,' the 'Jupiter' Symphony, a Harp Concerto by Pierné (Miss Hilda Atkinson), Arensky's variations on a theme by Tchaikovsky, Delius's 'On Hearing the First Cuckoo in Spring' and 'Summer Night,' Mozart's 'Ein kleine Nachtmusik,' and Beethoven's first and third Symphonies.

IPSWICH.—The season of municipal music opened on October 8, when the Conservatoire Ensemble Class, conducted by Mr. Sydney Robjohns, played movements from Purcell's 'Golden' Sonata, Mr. Noel Ponsonby played Bach organ music, and the Ipswich Male Choir sang Walford Davies's 'Hymn before Action' and Grieg's 'Landerkennung.' Mr. A. H. Welburn gave short explanations of the music.

LINLITHGOW.—Mr. Thomas Peterson Lamb, organist of St. Serf's Parish Church, Edinburgh, has been appointed conductor of the Choral Society, in succession to Mr. Archibald Russell, resigned.

LIVERPOOL.—The new music season shows no diminution in activities. Many departures include band concerts at Philharmonic Hall and New Brighton Tower, for which the Grenadier, Welsh, Scots, and Coldstream Guards are engaged, with prominent singers.—The Rushworth Orchestral series will again include children's concerts.—Mr. Tobin has a scheme for repertory opera at the David Lewis Theatre.—The Philharmonic Society's syllabus announces that a foreign guest-conductor, M. Monteux, will conduct a modern British work—Vaughan Williams's 'Tallis' Fantasy. Other conductors will be Weingartner, Sir Landon Ronald, Sir Henry Wood, Mr. Eugène Goossens, and Prof. Granville Bantock (who will conduct 'Omar Khayyam.')—The Mossel concerts, which opened on October 11, will include an appearance of the English Singers.—Mr. Sam Vickers announces 'celebrity' concerts, and chamber music will be catered for by the Rodewald Society, the B.M.S., and Mr. John Tobin's Informal concerts. The B.M.S. has instituted a contemporary music circle which will give four concerts of modern works, played by professional artists. Mr. Tobin has also arranged four concerts of modern music.—The Welsh Choral Union, Liverpool Choral Society, and the P.O. Choral Society, are already preparing oratorio, the first-named being engaged on 'Gerontius' and Vaughan Williams's 'Sea' Symphony.—At Sandon Studios, on October 10, Mr. George Hill, with Mr. Norman Peterkin, gave a recital of modern song, representing Stanford, Delius, Holst, Howells, Bliss, Warlock, Peterkin, and Gibbs. Some songs by Miss Muriel Herbert, a Liverpool composer, were included.—A concert comprising sea shanties was given by a male quartet on October 12, the 'Shipmates' being Mr. Courtenay Bickley (skipper), Mr. Edwin C. Titherington (mate), Mr. Minns Cowley (reefer), Mr. Douglas Munro (bos'n), and Mr. Tom Smith (donkeyman, and accompanist). 'Hog's eye man' and 'Rio Grande' were the shanties, and Elgar's 'Inside the bar' and the 'Song of the Volga boatmen' were also sung.—The Euterpean Ladies' Orchestra, conducted by Miss Greta Scott, played music by Beethoven and Wagner in Rushworth Hall on October 15.—In Crane Hall, on the same date, Mr. Frank Bernand (pianoforte), Mr. Louis Cohen (violin), and Miss Ethel Penhall (vocalist) gave a recital.—Visiting artists have included Rachmaninov, Moiseiwitsch, and Madame Galli-Curci.

MANCHESTER.—Appropriately enough, the opening concert of the winter season was the first concert of the Municipal series, in which the Hallé Orchestra, under Mr. Hamilton Harty, played to an audience such as has never before been seen at an orchestral evening at Manchester.—The fortnight of the B.N.O.C. has done sufficiently well to ensure a longer visit in the spring.—The opening Hallé concert was the first of the four purely orchestral evenings, and had as its main interest Brahms's Symphony No. 1.—Three of the chamber music series are now well under way, the Hamilton Harty evenings having been devoted in the first instance to works for chamber-orchestra, most notable being the 'Siegfried Idyll,' played by a band of the size for which it was written. The second, on October 20, was a recital of music for voice and pianoforte which gave Manchester its first true impression of the range of Miss Olga Haley's art. I have frequently written of the interpretative power of the Catterall Quartet in the latest Beethoven Quartets. On October 15 the players were even more convincing in the C sharp minor. Four 'Lancashire Sketches' by George Whittaker, of Rochdale, had a genuine Lancashire melody as the basis of the opening number—'Bowton's Yard,' a Scherzo styled, 'From a Cotton Town,' which gives a curious impression of the smoke and grime of this birthplace of John Bright, an atmosphere in which the tart humour and high spirits so typical of self-made Lancashiremen seem to thrive. The annotations in these Catterall programmes over the well-known initials of Mr. Samuel Langford add very appreciably to the interest of the audience. Mr. Charles Neville continues his Hugo Wolf recitals, giving seventeen of the Moerike songs at a mid-day recital on October 17, Mr. R. J. Forbes being at the pianoforte. At the opening Brand Lane concert, Rachmaninov played his third Concerto, and Sir Dan Godfrey made his (I think) first appearance here. C. H.

NEWCASTLE.—The Chamber Music Society's hundred and ninety-second concert, on October 17, was provided by the Léner Quartet, who played Dohnányi's Quartet in D flat, Haydn's F major, and Beethoven's F major.—The local branch of the B.M.S. listened to a lecture on October 11, given by Mr. Hubert J. Foss, on the music of Peter Warlock (Philip Heseltine). The membership of the branch is sixty-five.

PLYMOUTH.—On September 27 Mr. David Parkes's Orpheus Society, consisting of three hundred voices, and the Royal Marine Band, conducted by Mr. P. S. G. O'Donnell, gave an operatic concert, with selections from 'Paradise and the Peri,' 'A Life for the Czar,' and 'Faust.'

SOUTHPORT.—Three orchestral subscription concerts are to be given on November 28, February 26, and March 27, under the direction of Mr. J. E. Matthews. The principal artists are Miss Myra Hess, Miss Sylvia Nelis, and Mr. Albert Sammons.—Four concerts are announced by the Southport United Choir.

SOUTHAMPTON.—At University College, on October 15, Beethoven's second Sonata for violin and pianoforte, pianoforte music by MacDowell, and songs by Baumer, Walthew, and Sinding were performed.—On October 14 Shirley Parish Choir sang sea chancies, including 'Rio Grande' and 'Shenandoah.' A Trio for clarinet, 'cello, and pianoforte, by Mr. A. P. McDonell, was played, with the composer at the pianoforte.—A choir of three hundred senior children from the Central Schools, conducted by Mr. F. Permain, sang in the Coliseum on October 16. The items included 'The lark's awake,' 'Lift thine eyes,' and 'The Viking Song.'

TETBURY.—A choral society has been organized, with Mr. L. Webb as conductor. Hitherto Tetbury has had no musical organization.

THAME.—The Choral Society, suspended during recent seasons, has been revived, and 'Hiawatha's Wedding-Feast' is in rehearsal.

IRELAND

A fine new organ was opened at the Jesuit Church, Limerick, on September 18. Organ recitals were given by Mr. W. O'Shaughnessy (the organist of the Church) and Mr. T. H. Weaving, organist of Christ Church Cathedral, Dublin, and vocal solos were contributed by Mr. Joseph O'Mara. The organ was built by Messrs. Telford & Telford, of Dublin, and is a fine three-manual instrument, well voiced, and thoroughly up-to-date.

Miss Jean Nolan gave a song recital at the Abbey Theatre, Dublin, on September 19, and displayed her rare vocal charms in groups of songs representing the various Continental schools, as well as some of Purcell's ever-fresh melodies. Miss Nolan is now en route for America, where she has been engaged for an extended tour.

The Sunday Afternoon Concerts were inaugurated at La Scala Theatre, Dublin, on September 28, when the famous Glasgow Orpheus Choir, under Mr. Hugh S. Robertson, drew a crowded house. A varied programme was presented, and delightfully sung. On the following night, an almost similar programme was given at Belfast, at the Assembly Hall (Fisherwick Place), before a thronged audience. The final choral item, the 'Old 124th' Psalm, was lustily sung, and the audience joined in vigorously.

Mr. Joseph Mary Crofts was awarded first prize by the Feis Ceoil committee for the best unpublished collection of old Irish airs.

Mr. W. J. Moneyppenny, the accomplished organist of Newry R.C. Cathedral, died recently, after twenty-five years' service.

Dr. Larchet resumed his lectures on Music at University College, Dublin, on October 14. These lectures will be continued on Tuesdays and Fridays in Michaelmas term.

Mr. Arthur de Meulemeester, organist at Clonard R.C. Church, has been honoured by the King of the Belgians with the title of 'Chevalier,' on account of his services to music, and his good work on behalf of Belgian refugees during the war. His Church was one of the earliest to introduce Gregorian chant (on the Solesmes tradition) in Ireland a quarter of a century ago. He also edited a Catholic hymn-book now in use, and has composed Masses, songs, and pianoforte music.

Mr. J. Vine, organist of St. Jude's Church, Belfast, conductor of the Queen's Island and Ulster Male-Voice Choirs, has been appointed conductor of Lisburn Choral and Orchestral Society.

The Ministry of Education (Northern Ireland) has refused to sanction the holding of a music-class in Strabane Technical School.

Mr. E. Godfrey Brown, conductor of Belfast Philharmonic Society, has been appointed musical director of the Broadcasting wireless station at Belfast. The station is to commence operations shortly, and programmes and artists are already arranged for.

During the summer season just closing many excellent military and brass bands have played at Bellevue, the plateau overlooking Belfast Lough, a resort easily reached by tramcar from the city. The parks were also the resort of music-lovers in the summer evenings to hear band music. A feature of these was the playing of bands of flutes in four and more parts—a form of band music specially cultivated in Northern Ireland.

Belfast Philharmonic Society has opened its season with a performance of 'Elijah,' under Mr. E. Godfrey Brown. The first part of the work was broadcast.

THE CANADIAN COLLEGE OF ORGANISTS

The annual Convention of the C.C.O. was held at Ottawa on September 1 and 2. The C.C.O. from small beginnings has become an institution representative of the best organ talent in Canada. Members from Montreal, Toronto, Ottawa, Winnipeg, London, St. Thomas, and other points were present, and interesting reports of activities in these various centres were read. The president, Mr. Charles E. Wheeler, presided over the meetings, and spoke of his recent visit to England and the Continent, and his pleasure in meeting church and cathedral organists there, who expressed much interest and goodwill towards the C.C.O.

Special features of the open meeting were the papers read by the Rev. Dr. Voorhis, formerly head of the choir-training school at the Cathedral of St. John the Divine, New York, Dr. Albert Ham, Toronto, Dr. J. Percival Illsley, Montreal, and Mr. J. D. Gilchrist, St. Thomas, Ont., all of whose remarks prompted a spirited general discussion.

At the annual dinner, held at the Château Laurier, the president presented the diplomas to those successful in passing the Associateship and Fellowship degrees of the College. The Convention closed with an organ recital in St. Andrew's Presbyterian Church, at which the following programme was played:

Introduction, Passacaglia, and Fugue in E flat minor Healey Willan
MR. HARVEY ROBB (Westminster Presbyterian Church, Toronto).

(a) Fantasia ..... C. H. H. Parry
(b) Song of Symeon ..... Charles Wood
(c) Prelude, Improvisation on an Advent theme ... Arthur Egerton
MR. ARTHUR EGERTON (All Saints' Anglican Church, Winnipeg).

Intermezzo and Fugue from Sonata in E flat (Op. 161) Rheinberger
MR. THOMAS J. CRAWFORD (St. Paul's Anglican Church, Toronto).

Prelude and Fugue in E minor ..... Bach
DR. ALFRED E. WHITEHEAD (Christ Church Cathedral, Toronto).

'Cello Solo'—'Kol Nidrei' ..... Max Bruch
MISS HELEN LANGDON.

(a) Choral in A minor ..... César Franck
(b) Prelude Solennelle ..... T. Tertius Noble
MR. HAROLD GLEASON (Director of the Organ Department, Eastman School of Music, Rochester, New York).

(a) Scherzo Caprice ..... Purcell J. Mansfield
(b) Ariel ..... J. Bonnet
(c) Allegro from first Symphony ..... Maquiré
MR. J. E. F. MARTIN (Church of St. James the Apostle, Montreal).

Next year the Convention will be held at Toronto.

Among the officers elected for the coming year are: Sir Hugh Allen, patron; Dr. Albert Ham, hon. president; Mr. Charles E. Wheeler, president; Dr. H. A. Fricker, Mr. W. H. Hewlett, Mr. Richard Tattersall, and Dr. Healey Willan, vice-presidents.

Musical Notes from Abroad

GERMANY

The general aspect of musical affairs has considerably changed owing to the return of normal conditions. The number of orchestral concerts announced for the season is very large, but their quality will not satisfy those who are tired of always hearing the same works. Many foreign artists who had avoided Germany on account of the bad economic situation are again available, but they are not bringing anything new with them. Ossip Gabrilowitsch, remembered as a pianist who had been particularly in favour with the public, made his reappearance as conductor of the Berlin Philharmonic Orchestra, giving good interpretations of some classical and fairly modern works.

The death of Busoni has struck deep. The public considered him a great virtuoso, and musical circles acknowledged him as composer. His musical legacy is important. What will become of his 'Faust,' which he did not live to finish? Busoni was one of those problematic artists who, proceeding from one experiment to another, leave the great mass of music-lovers behind them. His mind was never at a standstill; but it is the definite quality of stability which after all affords the public enjoyment. It is curious to see how this man, in his first period, wrote music that was striking in its freshness, and how at a certain moment his spontaneity became undermined by intellectual processes which never came to finality. At a Busoni commemoration held by one of his pupils, the pianist Edward Weiss, the Roth Quartet gave a very animated performance of the String Quartet, Op. 19, a work full of the vitality and gaiety of Busoni's earlier manner. It was very well received. In the 'Geharnischte' Suite, a symphonic work of four movements, performed at the first Philharmonic concert of the season under Furtwängler, we see the process of Busoni's creative mind much more developed. This Suite was written at Helsingfors, when the composer came under the influence of northern men and countries. Though martial rhythms are predominant, the local landscape is reflected in the music. Finnish and Russian composers had undoubtedly impressed their characteristics on Busoni. At this time colour became personal to him, and with it thoughtfulness without sentimentality. On the whole the Suite produced a rather unexpected effect upon the visitors at the Philharmonic concert. Like subscribers in general, they do not, however, want to be troubled by problematic works, and remain attached to their Beethoven and Brahms.

On this occasion we heard three songs by Richard Strauss, thin in substance but very melodious. Their melody has nothing to do with the poetic words by Hölderlin, which serve only as a pretext. The orchestral colour leaves nothing to be desired, but its wealth constantly threatens the singer's voice, which, on this occasion, had difficulty in making itself heard. In this connection it may be remarked that Strauss has just published a long preface to his new 'Intermezzo,' preparatory to its performance at Dresden. It is some time since the famous composer has resorted to words before proceeding to deeds. He chooses this way of approach to the public for fear of misunderstandings which might be provoked by his work. He says that since the plot has been taken from every-day life the melodious substance of the music is necessarily little, and that he has aimed at a new departure in transforming speech into the language of music. He confesses himself guilty in the past of overloading his orchestral parts and overwhelming his singers, but he adds that conductors and artists might reasonably have cloaked this fault with the mantle of Christian charity. What he aims at now, and what he begs conductors to observe, is the perfect clarity and distinctness of the verbal text, this being the sole means of securing the effect which the new work is designed to express.

Schönberg's fiftieth birthday was celebrated all over Germany and Austria. His new pianoforte pieces, Op. 23, were heard for the first time, and upset most of the hearers. They are an attempt to write polyphonic atonality for the pianoforte, with complete disregard of the instrument. Those who expected effects of sonority were disappointed, and probably those who could take an interest in theoretical experiments performed on the keyboard enjoyed it very much. At all events the pieces as played by Heinz Jolles—a pianist whose programmes are of unusual interest—were not well received, even by the numerous sympathetic hearers who had come to pay Schönberg their tribute of devotion. For the present, the Schönberg of 'Pierrot Lunaire' seems to be the most attractive.

ADOLF WEISSMANN.

NEW YORK

When A. D. Juilliard died and left his millions for the aid of music and musicians, the trustees were long at sea as to the best ways of using the money. There was so much of it that the difficulties seemed rather to be increased instead of lessened. The fund received the somewhat vague cognomen of the 'Juilliard Foundation,' and some of it has been spent on rather doubtful projects, but the plan of giving a hundred native students of ability a musical education has taken definite shape, and promises to give them a real 'foundation' for their musical life. Applications for the free fellowships have closed, and, at the date of writing, the competitive examinations are beginning. Among the judges are Richard Aldrich, Henry Hadley, Lawrence Gilman, Charles M. Loeffler, and Ernest Schelling—a rare combination of critics and composers. The teachers are competent and famous, and the trustees have announced that 'Probably no organization of music-teachers containing so many recognised leaders has been brought together in this country up to this time.' Marcella Sembrich heads the list of vocal instructors. The pianoforte teachers' names are led by Ernest Hutcheson, Josef Lhevinne, and Dohnányi. The instructors for the stringed instruments will be César Thompson (of the Ithaca Conservatory), Paul Kochanski, Georges Enesco, and Felix Salmond. The American composer, Rubin Goldmark, will instruct in composition. If the judges restrict the fellowships only to those who are exceptionally gifted, such a formidable professorial array should be able to develop their talents to the benefit of the musical world.

Often a storm is presaged by a deathly stillness. This is always the musical situation in the early Fall. After the summer concerts are over there is an interval of blankness, and then comes the deluge. By the time this appears in print we shall be listening to five orchestras, and every afternoon and evening the smaller halls will afford a generous list of recitals. Of course the orchestral concerts are pre-eminent, and perhaps the most important item concerning them is a change in conductors. While our local organizations have made no great changes, the Boston Symphony Society, which each winter comes to New York for a series of concerts, brings this year a new conductor, Serge Koussevitzky. In his five years at the head of the Orchestra, Mr. Monteux has wrought the players to such a high state of efficiency that Koussevitzky can ask for no better instrument to play upon; his degree of success depends entirely on himself.

Mr. Gatti-Casazza announces two novelties for the Metropolitan opera season, viz., 'Jenufa,' by the Czechoslovak composer, Janacek, and 'Giovanni Galurese,' by the better-known Italian composer, Montemezzi.

M. H. FLINT.

PARIS

A two-month Wagner season, given at the Champs-Élysées Theatre by the Dutch National Opera of the Hague, is rather an unexpected event at this time of the year. October is, indeed, a month of preparatory work. Artists and public, hardly back from summer resorts, spend a fortnight or so looking about themselves. A full-swing of Wagner galas, beginning as early as October 7, could but startle the Parisian public. Good audiences came, however, and applauded with convinced enthusiasm Madame Poolman-Meissner, an admirable Isolde, and Mr. Albert Van Raalte, the well-known Dutch conductor, whose reading of 'Die Meistersinger' Overture may be ranked as a masterpiece of the art of conducting.

Madame Marguerite d'Alvarez is, I understand, a favourite London singer. Her English admirers came in great numbers to cheer her at a recital given at the Salle Gaveau on October 14. The Parisian public had to content itself with what seats had been left unpurchased by the visitors. The programme, rather incongruous in its composition, was sung with musical comprehension and sufficiency of voice that were certainly above the average. Madame d'Alvarez was at her best in the charming melody 'La Zagalina,' by I. Tabuyo, and the 'Water-Boy,' a negro song which, though a naive and, for us, a novel thing, won unanimity of praise.

Genuine Spanish music was rather poorly represented in this programme. Some of the best de Falla, Turina, Salazar, Torroba, might have been advantageously included instead of third-rate works that so poorly depicted Spanish sensibility. But it is never too late to do better, and we hope that Madame d'Alvarez will visit us again with a better programme, and with the same deep, warm, and sympathetic voice we were pleased to listen to.

PETRO J. PETRIDIS.

TORONTO

The season here seems to be commencing cautiously. No concerts were announced before October, when we were promised the Paul Whiteman Orchestra, Schumann-Heink, Maria Jeritsa, and Geraldine Farrar. The New Symphony Orchestra has managed to secure sufficient funds to launch ten concerts, only half the number we enjoyed last year. But even this is gratifying, in view of the fact that the scheme has been only indifferently supported by the people with money and influence. Unfortunately music and business in Toronto are not on as intimate terms as they might be.

At last we have a permanent string quartet, organized under the auspices of the Hart House Syndicate at the University. Five concerts have been planned, and the announcements show a rather unusual (for this country) mixture of classical and modern works. The members of this promising venture, who have been practising steadily every day throughout the summer, are Geza de Kresz, Harry Adaskin, Milton Blackstone, and Boris Hambourg.

H. C. F.

VIENNA

THE MUNICIPAL MUSIC FESTIVAL

The new musical season is governed so far by the second Municipal Music Festival. The first, in 1920, was on a more moderate scale, owing to post-war economic difficulties. The official opening this year was one of the most impressive manifestations ever connected with the cause of music in the history of Vienna. Thirty thousand people assembled for the opening speech by Mayor Seitz from the steps of the City Hall, and heard the first performance of Richard Strauss's very latest composition, a 'Fanfare' especially composed for the occasion. This sweeping piece of festive music was performed in the tower of the City Hall. A salient feature of the scheme was the announcement that the Municipal government had determined to inaugurate the Festival as the first of an annual series. The design is not to uphold the much-vaunted Viennese 'tradition,' or to revive memories of the great Austrian classics, but to encourage modern composers, and to give their works a prominent place in the concert schedule. The first to be honoured was the most significant contemporary Viennese composer, and the one most persistently misunderstood and belittled by his countrymen—Arnold Schönberg. The recent celebration of his fiftieth birthday brought him, for the first time, official recognition from the government of his native city. Occasion was taken to give the first performance anywhere of his chorus 'Friede auf Erden.' It was sung by the chorus of the Staatsoper, under the baton of Felix Greissle, Schönberg's son-in-law and disciple. Several other Schönberg premières were promised for the Festival, among them a production of his hitherto unperformed mime-drama 'Die glückliche Hand,' at the Volksoper.

A NOTABLE MUSICAL EXPOSITION

While Schönberg has been neglected at home and honoured abroad the very reverse has been true of Anton Bruckner. The centenary of Bruckner's birth coincided with the Municipal Music Festival. Austria's love for this man was voiced in an unprecedented manner in Parliament recently, when all deputies arose as one man to pay homage to his memory. A memorial tablet has been unveiled on the house where Bruckner dwelled for two decades, and where most of his great Symphonies and Masses were written. Preparations are now in hand for a particularly suitable monument to the master. It is planned to rebuild and modernise the historical organ at St. Florian's Convent—Bruckner's favourite instrument, and, at the same time, the landmark of his sepulchre, as, at the composer's wish, his mortal remains were interred under the console.

Bruckner and Schönberg were both prominent in the exposition assembled for the Festival, and displayed in the Municipal Museum under the collective title, 'From Bruckner to the Present Generation.' One room was completely occupied by rare and interesting manuscripts of Bruckner, ranging from his school-books to the autographs of his great composition. Another room peacefully united Johannes Brahms and his great opposite, Hugo Wolf, and another was dedicated to Gustav Mahler. Schönberg and his pupils—Alban Berg, Anton Webern, Paul A. Pisk, Hans Eisler, Egon Wellesz, and Rudolf Réti—occupied a special room, and among noteworthy objects were a portrait of Schönberg, by Oscar Komoschka, and one of Berg, painted by Schönberg himself.

TWO STRAUSS PREMIÈRES

The Staatsoper's share in the Music Festival consisted of a few performances of Richard Strauss's older works and of operas by various Austrian composers. These productions of frequently-heard works were designated 'festival performances,' but they differed in nothing from the ordinary répertoire interpretations. The same is true of what the Staatsoper ambitiously termed a 'complete Mozart cycle,' in which a 'restudied' 'Magic Flute' was no better, scenically and musically, than the usual Staatsoper standard. There have been two novelties at the Staatsoper so far, both staged for the Festival, and both, significantly enough, works of Richard Strauss.

One of these was a re-shaping of 'Le bourgeois gentilhomme,' the Prelude to 'Ariadne auf Naxos.' Theatres would not produce a play-opera which called for a double cast, so Strauss has made it all opera, using and expanding the original incidental music of 'Le bourgeois gentilhomme.' The music proved of very light weight, hampered in fact by the rather obsolete and poorly-adapted Molière play. Some delicate instrumental colour and graceful rhythm proved, however, as is customary with Strauss, a redeeming feature; but it must be said that by far the best passages were those which Strauss frankly borrowed from the music which Jean Baptiste Lully once wrote for Molière's comedy—e.g., the Minuet in G major which furnishes the Prelude for the second Act. Undeniably this Strauss première was a failure, which assumed such forms as to cause visible discomfiture of the composer, who presided at the conductor's desk.

The second Strauss novelty was a ballet entitled 'Die Ruinen von Athen,' with music based on Beethoven's work of that name, and on the same composer's 'Die Geschöpfe des Prometheus.' Hofmannsthal, Strauss's librettist, had written a scenario designed to combine the music of both ballets, and Strauss arranged the music—much on the lines of modern musical comedies hashed up from the immortals. The feature of the entire piece is the splendid opportunity it affords for the display of fine groupings and choregraphic art, and Heinrich Kröllner, the ballet-master, made the best of his chances. Even better in the same respect was Gluck's 'Don Juan' ballet. This is one of the four 'tragic ballets' of Gluck, and is based on a scenario by Gasparo Angiolini. It consists of no less than thirty-one short pieces, to which Kröllner has added a piece from Gluck's 'Alceste'; this furnishes the accompaniment for a sort of explanatory prelude which aims at offering a psychological insight into the character of the hero, Don Juan. Gluck's music sounded beautifully, and the ballet carried great historical interest, aside from its purely æsthetic qualities, as the forerunner of the school of 'psychological' and tragic ballets which found its sequel in Strauss's 'Legend of Joseph.' Richard Strauss himself conducted both works, and the orchestra played brilliantly.

PAUL BECHERT.

Obituary

We regret to record the following deaths:

JOHN BROWNING LOTT, organist at Lichfield Cathedral, at Buxton on September 29. He was born at Faversham in 1849, and was a chorister at Canterbury Cathedral. He held posts in that city at St. Dunstan's and St. Paul's, and became assistant at the Cathedral in 1873. His long term of office at Lichfield began in 1881. He conducted the Lichfield Musical Society for twenty-five years.

[Dr. W. H. Harris, a former assistant of Mr. Lott, writes: Mr. J. B. Lott's long and faithful service as organist of Lichfield Cathedral calls for something more than a passing reference. He belonged to that august body of English Cathedral organists of a past generation, whose quiet, retiring personalities were reflected in their organ playing and especially in their accompaniment of the Cathedral services. I remember how frequently he astonished even his best friends by a masterly accompaniment of such things as Wesley's 'Wilderness' and the various movements of the Brahms 'Requiem'—a work which he loved, and himself introduced into the Cathedral repertoire. His work as conductor of the Lichfield Diocesan Festivals and the Lichfield Choral Society must be recorded; but it is as an organist that he will be best remembered. A man of singular modesty and kindness of heart, his memory will long be cherished by old choristers, pupils, and friends.]

ANNA WILLIAMS, at the age of seventy-nine. From her first appearance at the Crystal Palace in 1874, to her retirement in 1897, Anna Williams was one of the leading sopranos of her day. She sang regularly at all the principal festivals, and it fell to her to create the soprano part in many new works, among them Parry's 'Judith.' She was the first to sing in the Albert Hall, for she was invited to test its acoustics before it was completed. From 1897 to 1904 she was a professor at the Royal College of Music.

Answers to Correspondents

Questions must be of general musical interest. They must be stated simply and briefly, and if several are sent, each must be written on a separate slip. We cannot undertake to reply by post.

STAR.—(1.) You ask: 'Is it a generally agreed fact that sentimental songs and composers are not "the" thing?' There are few 'generally agreed facts' about music, and this is not one of them. Much depends, first, on what we mean by a sentimental song, and, second, on the songs themselves. With many musicians, 'sentimental' is a term of reproach; with the general public, it merely distinguishes the 'ballad' from comic songs on the one hand and classical songs on the other. The average musician would define a sentimental song as one in which emotion is expressed without restraint, and by conventional and superficial means. Therefore, among musicians such songs are not 'the' thing. But it should be added that, of the above-mentioned two objections to sentimental songs, only the second is fatal so far as musicians are concerned. Thus, there are countless songs by great composers in which emotion is expressed without restraint; but as the medium, both as to text and music, is not conventional or superficial, they are prized while the other sort of sentimental song is taboo. So you see that it is not, after all, a question of sentimentality, but of music, and thus your question can be answered only in this roundabout way. (2.) If you set words to music with a view to publication, you must get permission from the author or publisher, save in cases where copyright no longer exists. (3.) An opus number may comprise several works, and as a rule such works are all of a type. Thus it would be unusual to include under one number a violin sonata and a choral work. There is no thematic connection between the various works comprised in an opus number. You ask why, in that case, they are grouped. The answer is merely that a composer may feel that one work is too small to be dignified by an opus number, so he makes up a set. Beethoven was given to grouping works in threes, e.g., his Op. 1 consists of three Trios; his Op. 2, three Pianoforte Sonatas; Op. 9, three Trios; Op. 12, three Sonatas for violin and pianoforte—and there are other examples in his list of works.

DAW B.—You say you live in the country, are fond of music, cannot practise much or take lessons, 'intend to make a thorough study of the real big branches of the theory of music,' and wish to know how to set about it 'without the aid of Correspondence College or teacher.' Frankly we do not hold out hopes of your being able to get very far in such studies unaided. The 'big branches of the theory of music' are not to be taken in hand lightly. But why need you be so ambitious? If a course of instruction is out of the question, we advise you to (1) hear all the music you can, via the gramophone and wireless, and (2) read as much as possible about it. Keep in touch with current developments by means of the musical press, and map out a course of musical literature. Make a start with Scholes's 'Listener's Guide to Music' and 'The First Book of the Gramophone' (both published by the Oxford University Press). Then go on to something a little tougher—Foxell's 'Musical Appreciation' (Novello), Parry's 'The Art of Music' (Kegan Paul, Trench), Colles's 'The Growth of Music,' and Buck's 'The Scope of Music.' The last two are issued by the Oxford University Press. Watch the review columns of the musical journals for any likely new books, but the above-named (which are only a few of the large and growing number of such works) ought to keep you well employed for some time. Supplement them by the biographies of such composers as you happen to be specially interested in from time to time. (The bibliographies in some of the books suggested above will help you here.) If you can join a choir do so; get in touch with any other musicians in your neighbourhood, and talk and argue and play and sing together as much as possible. After a year or two of this you may still be unable to work out even the simplest of harmony exercises, or to pass an elementary examination in playing an instrument, but you will know a great deal about music—which is far better. Write to us again in six months' time, and report progress.

A. E. S.—We don't know the composer or publisher of the quartets entitled 'Life is but a melancholy flower—Life is butter, melon, cauliflower,' or 'He'll catch the flee-ting shadow.' (Can a reader help our inquirer to trace these elementarily-humorous numbers?) You don't say whether your party is S.A.T.B., A.T.B.B., or T.T.B.B. If the first, see the answer to 'B. H. J.'; if A. (or T.) T.B.B. there is a capital choice. Any of the following by Brewer: 'Alexander,' 'The Boy,' 'Marriage of the Frog and Mouse,' 'Only a pin,' 'There was an old man'; or these by Bridge: 'Bold Turpin,' 'The Flirt,' 'The Goose,' 'The Goslings,' 'John Barleycorn,' 'Peace'; or others from the same pen; and Prendergast's 'Phyllis dyes her tresses black' (all published by Novello). Everybody's old friend 'Jenks's Vegetable Compound' may be had from Curwen's, who also issue 'Quibbles's Cocoa' and other amusing efforts. It is impossible to give an exhaustive list of music of this type. Go to any publisher of part-songs and look some out, or ask them to send you a selection on approval.

ORIANA.—There are good facilities in London for hearing Elizabethan madrigals well sung. Chief among them are the concerts given by the Oriana Choir, the Oriana Singers, and the English Singers. Many choral concerts given in or near London by local societies include a few madrigals. At the Elizabethan Festival, to be held next February, there will be ample opportunities for hearing such works sung with varying degrees of excellence. There are plenty of reprints of the best English madrigals published by Novello, Stainer & Bell, Joseph Williams, the Oxford University Press, &c. You ask for reprints that are 'exact,' not modified. But no reprint of an old work can escape some modification, however slight, so we advise you not to attach too much importance to this point. Any recent editions of madrigals published by the above-named firms can be depended upon. We emphasise the 'recent' because undoubtedly many of the earlier editions, though prepared by good musicians and published by firms of high repute, were not reliable in the matter of text.

M. E.—An odd query for this column, but as you are worried we cannot find it in our heart to refuse a reply. If the toast of musical director is drunk, of course you must respond. Equally of course you will be nervous, as you say. Fortunately there is no need for more than very few words: As thus: 'Mr. Chairman, Ladies and Gentlemen, I thank you for so kindly drinking my health, and am grateful to Mr. — [the proposer of the toast] for the flattering way in which he has spoken of my efforts. It has given me great pleasure to do what I have done, and the pleasure is doubled by your warm appreciation.' Learn these words by heart, stand up like a man (the more so as you happen to be a woman), say them as if you had just thought of them, and then sit down before you can be tempted to add anything and so get involved. If your audience is likely to include readers of this journal, you had better paraphrase the above. But whatever you say, let it be no more than a few sentences, and memorised.

E. (Kenya, Africa).—Try the following biographies: 'Mendelssohn,' by Stephen S. Stratton (Dent); 'Life of Mozart,' by Edward Holmes (Dent); 'The Life of Robert Schumann, told in his Letters,' by Jensen, translated by May Herbert; 'Schumann,' by Annie Pattersop (Dent); 'Schubert,' by H. F. Frost; also by Edmondstone Duncan (Dent); 'Life of Johannes Brahms,' by Florence May (Arnold)—very full on the biographical side; 'Brahms,' by J. A. Fuller-Maitland (Methuen)—the most thorough on the critical side; 'Brahms,' by H. C. Colles, deals briefly with all his chief works; 'Mozart,' by Otto Jahn (Novello); for Haydn, see 'A Croatian Composer,' W. H. Hadow; also Daniel Gregory Mason's 'Beethoven and his Forerunners'; 'Handel,' by Streatfeild; and 'George Frideric Handel,' by Newman Flower—a recent book that contains a great deal of fresh matter, illustrations, facsimiles, &c. We do not know the publishers of some of the above. The books may be obtained, however, through Novello.

DUET.—For effective and not difficult duet arrangements of chamber works, try the Haydn Trios, in the Peters Edition; for a difficult modern chamber work, the Ravel Quartet; for moderately difficult orchestral transcriptions, Haydn's and Mozart's Symphonies; for difficult orchestral works, Franck's Symphony, Elgar's 'Enigma' Variations, Elgar's Symphonies Nos. 1 and 2, also the same composer's Introduction and Allegro; and Edward German's 'Theme and Six Diversions.' All these are published by, or are obtainable through, Novello. In next month's Musical Times our contributor 'Feste' will be discussing the pianoforte duet in general, and will no doubt mention other duets likely to be useful to readers like yourself who are anxious to explore this delightful form of musical activity.

H. S.—Pergolesi was born January 3, 1710, at Jesi, near Ancon; began with study of violin, and is reputed to have excelled in improvising on that instrument; first appeared as composer with sacred drama 'La Conversione di San Guglielmo d'Aquitania'; wrote many works for stage, the most famous being 'La Serva Padrona'; also Masses and other Church music, of which his 'Stabat Mater' is perhaps the best-known to-day; died March 17, 1736; buried in Pozzuoli Cathedral. It is now generally held that his early death attracted interest to his compositions, and caused them to be valued beyond their deserts. Paisiello, who flourished a little later, shrewdly remarked that Pergolesi would have been less esteemed had he lived longer.

B. H. J.—Here are a few humorous quartets for S.A.T.B. that will, we think, suit your purpose: 'Alexander,' 'The Marriage of the Frog and the Mouse,' A. H. Brewer; 'I loved a lass,' W. H. Bell; 'The Goslings,' Bridge; 'Maiden fair, O deign to tell,' Haydn; 'John Ball,' Carse (all published by Novello). There are also innumerable part-songs which, though not labelled 'humorous,' are of a light character, and would fit well into your scheme—e.g., Hatton's 'He that hath a pleasant face'; German's 'My bonnie lass' and 'London Town,' &c. (all published by Novello).

H. A. C.—We do not know of any books on musical appreciation 'at a somewhat deeper level than those given in the March Musical Times.' In M.-D. Calvocoressi's 'Musical Criticism' (Oxford University Press) mention is made of, and extracts given from, several books that would give you what you want. Books definitely on musical appreciation are necessarily designed for more or less elementary students. Most standard biographies of composers and books on music generally contain plenty of incidental writing of the 'critical and philosophical' type you ask for.

ORGANUM.—We dislike committing ourselves to Metronome marks in the case of organ works, because so much depends upon the size of the organ and the building, and also the quality of the organ in regard to promptness of speech. Moreover, the work about which you inquire—Harwood's first Sonata—calls for a good deal of freedom and variation in tempo, so the Metronome is less of a guide than usual. With diffidence we suggest the following: Allegro Appassionata, ♩ = 84; Con fuoco, ♩ = 104; Andante, ♩ = 60; Maestoso, ♩ = 60; Con moto, ♩ = 80.

B. V.—Julius Fučík is an Austrian composer, born at Frauenthal, Styria, on February 15, 1847. He studied at Vienna Conservatory; was organist at the Imperial Chapel; and Professor of composition at the Conservatory. Among his many pupils were Mahler and Schreker. Fučík was a friend of Brahms, who admired his Serenades. His compositions include chamber works, a Mass, two Symphonies, five Sonatas, and two operas—'Die Königsbraut' and 'Die Teufelslocken.'

SUSSEX.—(1) The pace of Schubert's 'Moment Musical' No. 4 should be a moderately fast two in a bar, say ♩ = 104-112. (2) Schubert makes no change of pace for the middle of the piece, nor does such a change seem to be desirable; we should therefore keep the same pace throughout. (3) The first and third portions of this piece are harmonic rather than melodic. Play as marked, legato in the right hand, staccato in the left, and the effect the composer wants cannot but come out.

DE FACTO.—Books recommended for those preparing for the L.R.A.M. diploma (pianoforte teaching) are: on Touch, 'First Principles of Pianoforte Playing,' Matthey (Longmans); the section on Fingering from 'Exercises for Fingering,' Albanesi (Ricordi); on Phrasing and Teaching from 'Musical Interpretation,' Matthey (J. Williams); 'Exercises on Phrasing in Pianoforte Playing,' McEwen (Ricordi); Studies in Phrasing and Form, Stewart Macpherson (J. Williams).

DANCER.—You ask for a 'test as to whether the room in which a pianoforte stands is damp.' You add that the action of the instrument is sluggish; there is your test, surely. You need not wait to see the damp standing on the keys. As a fire in the room is possible only on the 'day that comes 'twixt Saturday and Monday' you should keep the temperature from falling very low by means of an oil-stove or some such handy means of heating.

H. K. W. has been told by a pianoforte-tuner that a gas-stove ruins the pianoforte. Do we agree? We don't. Provided the two be a reasonable distance apart, and the heat regulated, we fail to see how a gas-stove can do any damage. But we may be wrong, so perhaps readers who have proved by experience that the tuner is right will kindly send us a line, and so save the pianoforte of 'H. K. W.' and others.

P. S. B.—The question of singing by girls aged from 14-16 was fully discussed in the Musical Times of January, and we cannot go into it here. The committee appointed by the Federation of Musical Competition Festivals to consider solo singing by adolescents meets shortly, and there may then be some public statement on the matter.

N. C.—The following books deal with the modern organ from a structural point of view: 'Modern Organ-Building,' W. and T. Lewis (Reeves); 'The Recent Revolution in Organ-Building,' George L. Miller (Charles Francis Press, New York); 'Organs and Tuning,' Thomas Elliston (Weekes).

L. C.—A pianoforte with two manuals and pedals, for the use of organ students, was brought out some years ago by Messrs. Vincent (now Rogers & Co.). We understand that its manufacture ceased during the war. An advertisement might bring you in touch with a second-hand example.

N. C.—Your question is not clear. Do you ask for a book about playing the organ with orchestra, or for one on making organ transcriptions of orchestral music?

G.—We do not know what text-books are in use at the R.A.M. and R.C.M. Why not write direct to those institutions?

GUIDA.—Play the L.-H. chords arpeggiando, with the top note coming on the beat.

CONTENTS.

	PAGE
The Englishness of Parry. By Alexander Brent-Smith	977
The Art of Accompanying Songs. By Hubert J. Foss	979
Style and Stylishness. By Harry Farjeon	984
Conductors and Conducting.—V. The Rehearsal.
By William Wallace	985
Absolute and Programme Music. By L. N. Higgins	987
New Light on Late Tudor Composers.—IV. Richard
Farrant. By W. H. Grattan Flood	989
Ad Libitum. By 'Feste'	989
'The Seal Woman'	994
Sir Hugh Allen on Choral Singing	995
New Music	996
The Musician's Bookshelf	997
Choir-Training: The Responsibility of the Clergy	999
Galli-Curci-itis	1000
Occasional Notes	1002
Music in the Foreign Press. By M.-D. Calvocoressi	1004
Gramophone Notes. By 'Discus'	1005
Church and Organ Music	1007
Royal College of Organists	1007
Liverpool Church Choir Association	1007
Letters to the Editor	1016
Sixty Years Ago	1023
Sharps and Flats	1023
Amateurs' Exchange	1023
Royal Academy of Music	1024
Royal College of Music	1024
Trinity College of Music	1025
The Coming Season	1025
The Bruckner Centenary. By John F. Porte	1028
London Concerts	1028
Opera at Bristol	1031
Competition Festival Record	1032
Blackpool Festival	1032
Music in the Provinces	1033
Music in Ireland	1034
Canadian College of Organists	935
Musical Notes from Abroad	1035
Obituary	1037
Answers to Correspondents	1037

MUSIC.

'Three Doughty Knights.' Four-Part Song. By ALEC ROWLEY ... 1009

TWO EXTRA SUPPLEMENTS are given with this Number:

1. 'Now once again.' Carol-Anthem for Christmas. By Percy E. Fletcher.
2. 'Dear Lord and Father of Mankind.' Hymn. By C. H. H. Parry.

DURING THE LAST MONTH.

Published by NOVELLO &amp; CO., LIMITED.

BACH, J. S.—"My heart ever faithful." Air from the Cantata "God so loved the world." In F. Is. 6d.

— Solos from the Sacred Cantatas. Set 3. For Soprano, Alto, Tenor, and Bass. Is. 6d. each. For contents see page 1050.

BANTOCK, GRANVILLE.—"O can ye sew cushions?" (Lullaby). Arranged for S.S.A. (No. 498, Novello's Trios, &c., for Female Voices.) 4d.

FLETCHER, P. E.—"Now once again." Carol-Anthem for Christmas, founded on the melody "Lasst uns erfreuen." (No. 1136, Novello's Octavo Anthems.) 4d.

PALESTRINA.—"Exaltabo Te, Domine." Motet. Edited by H. Elliot Button. (No. 1135, Novello's Octavo Anthems.) 4d.

RICHARDSON, A. D.—"Baronial March." Piano-forte Solo. 2s.

ROWLEY, ALEC.—"Three doughty knights." Four-part Song. (No. 981, The Musical Times.) 2d.

SCHOOL MUSIC REVIEW, No. 389, contains the following music in both notations.—"The Christ-child" (a Carol). Unison Song. Composed by George Rathbone. "The Centipede." Unison Song. Composed by Alec Rowley. Three Traditional Nursery Rhymes. 2d.

THOMAS, REV. J. I.—"Happy Child." A Memorial Hymn. 2d.

TONIC SOL-FA SERIES:

No. 2463. "A Lullaby of Love." Part-Song for T.T.B.B. P. E. FLETCHER 2d.

No. 2464. "Who would true valour see." Four-part Song. GEOFFREY SHAW 3d.

WEBBER, A.—"Now is the month of maying." Song, with Chorus for Boys' or Women's Voices. (No. 497, Novello's Trios, &c., for Female Voices.) 4d.

PUBLISHED FOR

THE H. W. GRAY CO., NEW YORK.

BANKS, C. O.—Epilogue. (No. 4 from Suite for Organ, "Evangeline.") 75 cents (3s.).

CANDLYN, T. F. H.—"In the bleak mid-winter." Carol-Anthem. 15 cents (6d.).

FRY, H. S.—Two Chorale Preludes for Organ. 75 cents (3s.).

JAMES, P.—Dithyramb. For Organ. 75 cents (3s.).

LESTER, W.—"Cradle Hymn" ("Carols of the Christ-Child," No. 8). 12 cents (4d.).

MACKINNON, H. A.—"On a winter's night." Carol-Anthem. 15 cents (6d.).

MASON, H. L.—"Our Christ." Hymn and Tune, "Exeter."

SANDERS, H.—"Joy." For Organ. 75 cents (3s.).

VIBBARD, H.—"Legend." For Organ. 75 cents (3s.).

VOYNICH, E. L.—"I saw three ships." Part-song for S.S.A.A. 12 cents (4d.).

WEBBE, W. Y.—Pastorale. For Organ. 75 cents (3s.).

— "Te Deum Laudamus." 25 cents (1s.).

FAMOUS HYMN TUNES

With Descants, Varied Accompaniments, &amp;c.

THREE GREAT CHRISTMAS HYMNS

1. "CORDE NATUS" (Divinum Mysterium). Suitable also for Eucharistic use and for Festivals of B.V.M.
2. "ADESTE FIDELES." The complete eight verses.
3. "WHILE SHEPHERDS WATCHED."

Also SIX FAVOURITE EVENING HYMNS similarly treated.

Also "HANOVER," "OLD 104TH," and "YORK" ("The Stilt")

WILLIAM CLOWES &amp; SONS, LTD., 94, Jermyn Street, S.W.1.

NEW PUBLICATIONS

By T. TERTIUS NOBLE.

816. NIGHT. S.A.T.B.
 817. TO MY LOVE. T.T.B.B.
 818. WHEN I AM DEAD, MY DEAREST. S.A.T.B.
 819. SAVE, LORD, OR WE PERISH. S.A.T.B.
 820. SAVE, LORD, OR WE PERISH. T.T.B.B.
 821. BUT NOW, THUS SAITH THE LORD. S.A.T.B.

Price Fourpence each.

822. MAGNIFICAT AND NUNC DIMITTIS IN B FLAT.
 Price Sixpence.

BANKS &amp; SON, MUSIC PUBLISHERS, YORK.

URGENT.—VOLUNTEERS WANTED, for Choir: treble (Women), bass and tenor (Men). Two Services, one practice. Rector, 27, John Street, Bedford Row, W.C.1.

VOLUNTEERS WANTED.—Violins, 'cello, clarinet, for orchestra. Evening Service. Please volunteer (to above address).

PPIPE ORGANS Enlarged, Re-voiced, Repaired, and Tuned. Attractive Terms. Henry Morgan & Son, Church Organ Builders, 19, Cowdrey Road, Wimbledon, London. Est. 1896.

PIANOFORTE ACCOMPANIST.—Orchestral or Private. Apply, Miss Lee, 4A, East Gardens, S.W.17.

EXPERIENCED ORGANIST-CHOIRMASTER, A.R.C.O., &c., desires appointment. Excellent Testimonials. Mr. N. A. Sayers, 4, Grosvenor Avenue, East Sheen, S.W.14.

WANTED.—An ORGANIST and CHOIRMASTER, for Birr Parish Church. Salary, £50 per annum. Apply, with copies of testimonials, to Capt C. B. Hackett, Riverstown, Birr.

FOR SALE.—A PLAYER PIANO (Sterling), 45-note. Equal to new. Chamberlain, London Street, Faringdon, Berks.

THE MUSICAL TIMES

CHARGES FOR ADVERTISEMENTS:—

	£	s.	d.
Two Lines ... ..	0	3	0
Three Lines ... ..	0	3	4
For every additional Line ... ..	0	0	10
One inch (displayed) ... ..	0	10	0
Half a Column ... ..	2	0	0
A Column ... ..	4	0	0
A Page ... ..	7	10	0

Special Pages (Cover, &amp;c.) by arrangement.

A remittance should be sent with every Advertisement.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

To ensure insertion in their proper positions, Advertisements for the next issue should reach the Office, 160, Wardour Street, London, W.1, not later than WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 19 (FIRST POST).

NEW TEXT-BOOKS

BY

ALBERT HAM, MUS. DOC., F.R.C.O.

OUTLINES OF MUSICAL FORM

WITH ANALYSES FROM

WELL-KNOWN CLASSICAL WORKS.

Price ... Five Shillings.

"In all respects this is an admirable little work, with no waste, no hiatus of a serious nature, handy in size, and with a practical scheme well carried through."

DR. C. W. PEARCE, in alluding to the above work, says:

"Quite the best I have ever seen, and I shall lose no opportunity for recommending it."

THE RUDIMENTS OF MUSIC AND ELEMENTARY HARMONY.

THIRD EDITION.

Price ... Five Shillings.

"As a result the Chapters on Time and Intervals will be found especially helpful. An Addendum gives some useful hints and suggestions on adding bar-lines and time- and key-signatures to a given melody. The section of Harmony takes the student as far as the dominant seventh, and includes chapters on modulation and the harmonization of simple melodies. Some useful test-papers are also provided. Dr. Ham's admirable little work may be cordially recommended."—Musical Times.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

WILL BE PUBLISHED ON NOVEMBER 5.

How far is it to Bethlehem

WORDS BY

FRANCES CHESTERTON.

MUSIC BY

GEOFFREY SHAW.

ARRANGED FOR S.S.A. WITH PIANOFORTE ACCOMPANIMENT.

Price ... Threepence.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

COMMUNION SERVICE
IN F MAJOR.

BY

A. H. ALLEN.

This service may be sung without organ.

Price, One Shilling and Sixpence.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

OXFORD BOOKS AND SONGS

A SURVEY OF CONTEMPORARY MUSIC. By CECIL GRAY.

The frank statement of a well-informed musician, supported by originality of outlook, learning, and an admirable prose style. 7s. 6d. net.

SONGS IN THE OXFORD EDITION

By PETER WARLOCK

"BALULALOW "

"REST, SWEET NYMPHS "

"TYRLEY TRYLOW "

"SLEEP "

By DR. MAURICE GREENE (edited by E. STANLEY ROPER)

"THE EYES OF ALL WAIT UPON THEE "

"SALVATION BELONGETH UNTO THE LORD "

"O GIVE ME COMFORT "

"PRAISED BE THE LORD "

"MY LIPS SHALL SPEAK THE PRAISE "

By EDGAR BAINTON

"RING OUT, WILD BELLS "

By DR. W. G. WHITTAKER

"STAY IN TOWN " and "SPRING "

By C. ARMSTRONG GIBBS

"SLOW, HORSES, SLOW "

By HUBERT J. FOSS

"AS I WALKED FORTH " and "INFANT JOY "

OXFORD UNIVERSITY PRESS.

CANTATAS FOR CHRISTMAS.

THE HOLY CHILD

FOR SOPRANO, TENOR, AND BASS SOLI,
CHORUS, AND ORGAN

THE MUSIC BY

T. ADAMS.

Price One Shilling and Sixpence ;
Tonic Sol-fa, Eightpence.
Words only, 9s. 6d. per 100.

THE NATIVITY

FOR SOPRANO, TENOR, AND BASS SOLI AND CHORUS

With Hymns to be sung by the Congregation

(THE WORDS AND HYMNS SELECTED)

THE MUSIC BY

T. ADAMS.

Price One Shilling and Sixpence ;
Tonic Sol-fa, One Shilling.
Words only, 9s. 6d. per 100.

†CHRISTMAS ORATORIO

THE MUSIC BY

J. S. BACH.

Divided into six sections, intended originally for separate performance on the three days of Christmas, New Year's Day, New Year's Sunday,
and the Festival of the Epiphany.

Price, Paper Cover, Three Shillings.
Boards, 4s. ; Cloth, 6s.

Vocal Parts, One Shilling and Sixpence each.
Parts 1 and 2, 1s. 6d. ; Parts 3 and 4, 1s. 6d. ;
Parts 5 and 6, 1s. 6d.

Tonic Sol-fa (Parts 1 and 2), 8d.
Book of Words, complete (per 100), 12s. 6d.
Books of Words, Parts 1 and 2 (per 100), 6s. 6d.

†CHRISTIANS, GRAVE YE THIS GLAD DAY

(CHRISTEN ÄTZET DIESEN TAG !)

A Christmas-Day Cantata (S.A.T.B. Soli)

Edited by J. E. WEST. English Words by C. AVELING.

THE MUSIC BY

J. S. BACH.

Price One Shilling and Sixpence.

†BEFORE THE PALING OF THE STARS

A CHRISTMAS HYMN
(FOR VOICES AND ORCHESTRA)

THE WORDS BY

C. ROSSETTI.

THE MUSIC BY

B. J. DALE.

Price One Shilling and Sixpence ;
Tonic Sol-fa, One Shilling.

THE COMING OF THE KING

CANTATA FOR FEMALE VOICES

THE WORDS BY

H. M. BURNSIDE.

THE MUSIC BY

M. B. FOSTER

Price Two Shillings and Sixpence ;
Tonic Sol-fa, One Shilling.
Words only, 6s. 6d. per 100.

†CHRISTMAS EVE

FOR CONTRALTO SOLO, CHORUS, AND ORCHESTRA

THE MUSIC BY

N. W. GADE.

Price, Paper Cover, One Shilling and Sixpence ;
Boards, Two Shillings and Sixpence ;
Tonic Sol-fa, Sixpence.

CHRISTMAS CANTATA

FOR SOLI AND CHORUS

THE WORDS BY

R. D. BETJEMANN.

THE MUSIC BY

J. HARRISON.

Price One Shilling and Sixpence.
Words only, 6s. 6d. per 100.

†FIRST CHRISTMAS MORN

THE WORDS BY

S. J. STONE.

THE MUSIC BY

H. LESLIE.

Price, Vocal Score, Four Shillings.
Vocal Parts, Eightpence each.
Words only, 9s. 6d. per 100.

BETHLEHEM

FOR FOUR SOLO VOICES AND CHORUS

Interspersed with Hymns to be sung by the Congregation

THE WORDS WRITTEN AND ARRANGED BY

E. C. NUNN.

THE MUSIC BY

J. H. MAUNDER.

Price Three Shillings ;
Tonic Sol-fa, One Shilling and Sixpence.
Words only, 9s. 6d. per 100.

†THE STORY OF BETHLEHEM

FOR SOPRANO, TENOR, AND BASS SOLI, CHORUS,
AND ORGAN.

THE WORDS BY
S. WENSLEY.

THE MUSIC BY

J. E. WEST.

Price Two Shillings and Sixpence ;
Tonic Sol-fa, One Shilling.
Words only, 9s. 6d. per 100.

† Full Score and Orchestral Parts may be had.

LONDON : NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

ANTHEMS, &c., FOR CHRISTMAS.

RECENTLY PUBLISHED.

G. RATHBONE.
AND WE BEHELD HIS GLORY

Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Threepence.

C. V. STANFORD.
WHILE SHEPHERDS WATCHED

Price Fourpence.

SELECTED LIST.

A. ADAM.
O HOLY NIGHT

ARRANGED AS ANTHEM FOR SOPRANO (OR TENOR)
SOLO AND CHORUS.

Price Threepence; Tonic Sol-fa, Three-Halfpence.

T. ADAMS.
ARISE, SHINE, O JERUSALEM

Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

T. ADAMS.
THOU ART MY SON

Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

W. G. ALCOCK.
BREAK FORTH INTO JOY

Price Fourpence.

E. C. BAIRSTOW.
OF THE FATHER'S LOVE BEGOTTEN

Price Fourpence.

C. BAYLEY.
GLORY TO GOD IN THE HIGHEST

Price Twopence; Tonic Sol-fa, Three-Halfpence.

J. F. BRIDGE.
IN THAT DAY

Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

E. BUNNETT.
ARISE, SHINE, FOR THY LIGHT
IS COME

Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

E. BUNNETT.
BEHOLD, I BRING GOOD TIDINGS

Price Threepence.

E. BUNNETT.
IN THE BEGINNING WAS THE
WORD

Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

H. A. CHAMBERS.
ARISE, SHINE, FOR THY LIGHT
IS COME

Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Threepence.

P. E. FLETCHER.
RING OUT, WILD BELLS
FESTIVAL CAROL

Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Fourpence.

Ditto, T.T.B.B., Fourpence.

M. B. FOSTER.
CHRIST'S INCARNATION

Price Twopence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

CH. GOUNOD.
NAZARETH

ARRANGED FOR BARITONE SOLO AND CHORUS.

Price Threepence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

E. V. HALL.
WHILE SHEPHERDS WATCHED

Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

A. HOLLINS.
SING, O HEAVENS

Price Twopence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

C. H. LLOYD.
REJOICE GREATLY, O DAUGHTER
OF ZION

Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

A. W. MARCHANT.
O COME, REDEEMER OF MANKIND

Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

J. H. MAUNDER.
SING, O HEAVENS

Price Twopence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

B. L. SELBY.
IN THE BEGINNING WAS THE WORD

Price Twopence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

G. SHAW.
HOW FAR IS IT TO BETHLEHEM

Price Threepence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

Ditto, Unison Setting, Twopence.

B. STEANE.
LET US NOW GO EVEN UNTO
BETHLEHEM

Price Twopence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

B. STEANE.
SING, O HEAVENS

Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

A. S. SULLIVAN.
SING, O HEAVENS

Price Threepence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

J. E. WEST.
A SONG OF JOY

Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

A. W. WILSON.
WITH ALL THY HOSTS

Price Twopence.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

MUSIC FOR CHRISTMAS.

SECULAR CANTATAS.

† YULE-TIDE

THE MUSIC BY

T. ANDERTON.

Price Two Shillings and Sixpence.
Paper boards, 3s. 6d.; cloth, gilt, 4s. 6d.

CHRISTMAS SCENES FOR FEMALE VOICES

THE MUSIC BY

F. H. COWEN.

Price Three Shillings; Tonic Sol-fa, One Shilling.
Words only, 3d. each.

AROUND THE WINTER FIRE

FOR FEMALE VOICES

THE MUSIC BY

A. R. GAUL.

Price One Shilling and Sixpence;
Tonic Sol-fa, One Shilling.
Words only, 12s. 6d. per 100.

† SANTA CLAUS AND HIS COMRADES

FOR CHILDREN (WITH ACTION)

THE MUSIC BY

E. O. GILBERT.

Price, Vocal Score (in both Notations), Three Shillings;
Tonic Sol-fa, One Shilling.
Words only, 3d.

A CHRISTMAS DREAM FOR CHILDREN (WITH ACTION)

THE MUSIC BY

A. MOFFAT.

Price, Vocal Score (in both Notations),
One Shilling and Sixpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Sixpence.
Words only, 3d.

CHRISTMAS HOLIDAYS SHORT MUSICAL SKETCH

(Suitable for the breaking-up of Schools)

THE MUSIC BY

H. W. SCHARTAU.

Price, Vocal Score (in both Notations), Eightpence.
† Full Score and Orchestral Parts may be had.

ORGAN MUSIC.

ALBUMS FOR THE ORGAN, No. 8.

CONTENTS.

1. CHORALE PRELUDE, "In dulci Jubilo" ... J. S. Bach
2. PASTORAL SYMPHONY ("Christmas Oratorio") J. S. Bach
3. QUEM VIDISTIS, PASTORES ... W. T. Best
4. VENITE IN BETHLEHEM ... W. T. Best
5. DECEMBER—Christmas Morn ... F. H. Cowen
6. FANTASIA ON OLD CHRISTMAS CAROLS W. Faulkes
7. FOR UNTO US A CHILD IS BORN ("Messiah") Handel
8. PASTORALE ... T. Kullak
9. CHORUS OF SHEPHERDS ... J. Lemmens
10. CHRISTMAS PASTORALE ... G. Merkel
11. A CHRISTMAS PASTORAL ... B. L. Selby
12. FANTASY ON TWO CHRISTMAS CAROLS ... J. E. West

Price 5s. 6d.; Cloth, 7s. 6d.

THE VILLAGE ORGANIST.

Book 48.

CONTENTS.

1. FANTASY on Old Christmas Carols... H. Blair
2. PASTORAL SYMPHONY ("The Messiah") Handel
3. "IN DULCI JUBILO"—Ancient Carol ... Pearsall
4. PASTORALE (8th Concerto) ... Corelli
5. CHRISTMAS (Op. 205, No. 1) ... M. Oesten
6. CHORAL ("Christmas Oratorio") ... J. S. Bach

PRICE ONE SHILLING AND SIXPENCE.

SEPARATE PIECES.

- |  |       |
|--|-------|
| CARAVAN OF THE MAGI, THE (Approach and Departure).March from the Cantata "Bethlehem" (J. H. Maunder)                                 | s. d. |
| Arranged by E. C. Nunn   | 2 3   |
| CHORAL IMPROVISATION on "In dulci Jubilo"  |       |
| S. Karg-Elert  | 3 0   |
| CHORAL PRELUDES, TWO: 1. In dulci Jubilo; 2. PuerNatus est in Bethlehem ... D. Buxtehude   | 1 0   |
| CHRISTMAS BELLS ... G. J. Elvey  | 1 6   |
| CHRISTMAS CAROL (In dulci Jubilo). (Young Organist,No. 5) ... Pearsall   | 1 6   |
| CHRISTMAS PASTORALE, A, on the Introit "HodieChristus Natus est" and the Hymns "Corde Natus" and"Adeste Fideles" ... B. L. Selby | 2 3   |
| CHRISTMAS PASTORALE (Op. 56) ... G. Merkel   | 1 6   |
| CHRISTMAS SONATA, No. 4, in D (Op. 32) ... O. Dienel   | 5 0   |
| FANTASIA on "In dulci Jubilo" ... J. Matthews  | 3 6   |
| FANTASIA on Old English Carols ... W. Faulkes  | 2 3   |
| FANTASY (on two well-known Christmas Carols) J. E. West  | 3 0   |
| OFFERTOIRE for Christmas Day (Church Organist,Book 8) ... C. Collin  | 3 6   |
| OFFERTOIRE (Modern Organist, No. 9) ... Wély   | 3 6   |
| OFFERTORIUM (Four Pieces, No. 2) ... J. Lemmens  | 2 3   |
| PHANTASIE on "Adeste Fideles" (Violin, Bells, and Organ)T. L. Southgate  | 2 3   |
| PIECES, SIX (Book 5 of Collection of Pieces) W. T. Best  | 3 0   |
| "Sit laus plena, sit sonora." Allegro con brio.  |       |
| "Quem vidistis, Pastores?" Andante con moto.   |       |
| "Psallite, omnes Angeli." Allegro vivace.  |       |
| "Venite in Bethlehem." Andantino.  |       |
| Pastorale, Allegretto.   |       |
| "O magnum Mysterium Andante."  |       |
| POSTLUDE ("Good King Wenceslas") ... G. M. Garrett   | 2 3   |
| POSTLUDIUM FESTIVUM ... C. W. Pearce   | 1 6   |
| RHAPSODIE on an Ancient Christmas Carol ... W. Faulkes   | 3 0   |
| VOLUNTARY for Christmas-tide ... F. Ouseley  | 1 6   |

"Such settings as these cannot do otherwise than tend to popularise the Church Service."—Musical Standard, June 6th, 1891.
 "Good, effective, easy, and dignified."—Musical Times, April 1, 1891.
 "Admirably adapted to meet the requirements of the majority of choirs and congregations." "Deserve extensive recognition and use."—Musical News, September 4 and 25, 1891.
 Also recommended by the Guardian, Church Times, &c., &c.

POPULAR CHURCH MUSIC

BY

J. H. MAUNDER

CHRISTMAS ANTHEMS.

Staff Tonic
Notation. Sol-fa.

Anthem—Christians, Awake ... ..	4d.	3d.
Carol—Once in Bethlehem ... ..	3d.	2d.
Two Christmas Carols ... ..	4d.	3d.

SERVICES.

SERVICE IN G ... ..	2s.	1s. 4d.
Or, separately:—
Te Deum ... ..	4d.	3d.
Benedicite, omnia Opera ... ..	3d.	3d.
Benedictus ... ..	3d.	3d.
Ubi laus ... ..	4d.	3d.
Office for the Holy Communion ... ..	10d.	8d.
Pater Noster from the above ... ..	3d.	3d.
Amen ditto ... ..	12d.	12d.
Magnificat and Nunc dimittis ... ..	4d.	3d.
SERVICE IN CHANT FORM (No. 1) ... ..	1s. 4d.	10d.
Or, separately:—
Te Deum, &c., with Kyrie ... ..	4d.	3d.
Office for the Holy Communion ... ..	8d.	6d.
Magnificat and Nunc dimittis ... ..	4d.	3d.
Te Deum in B flat ... ..	4d.	3d.
Magnificat and Nunc dimittis in C (partly Unison) ... ..	4d.	2d.
Magnificat and Nunc dimittis in D ... ..	4d.	3d.

ORGAN.

Voix Seraphique (for Recitals) ... ..	2s. 6d.	—
CHURCH CANTATA.
Penitence, Pardon, and Peace (for general use) ... ..	2s.	1s. 4d.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

The Composer, "Kilbirnie," Barnstaple, will send Organists a specimen set of these Christmas Anthems and Carols for 1s.

NEW CHRISTMAS ANTHEMS, Etc.

COMPOSED BY CALEB SIMPER.

*PEACE AND GOODWILL ... ..	7th Edit.	4d.
Inspiring, melodious, interesting.
*A SON IS GIVEN, New ... ..	9th Edit.	4d.
Contains imitative parts and rich modulations.
*THE PRINCE OF PEACE ... ..	6th 1000	4d.
*AND ON EARTH PEACE ... ..	5th 1000	4d.

NEW CAROLS.

*STAR OF THE MORNING. THE SONG OF LOVE ... ..	each	12d.
*O SOFTLY TREAD. JOYFUL CAROLS SINGING ... ..	each	12d.
*HEarken to the CHRISTMAS BELLS ... ..	each	12d.
*LET BELLS OF NOËL RING ... ..	each	12d.
*GOODWILL AND PEACE. O CAROL EXULTANT ... ..	each	12d.
GOD IS OUR REFUGE ... ..	5th Edit.	8d.
Short Work. Solos and Choruses. Occupies about 18 minutes.
NEW NO. 12 VOLUNTARY BOOK. 28. Seventeen Pieces written on Two Staves with Pedal-part indicated. 4th Edition.

Those marked * are also issued in Tonic Sol-fa.

London: A. WEEKES & Co., 14, Hanover Street, Regent Street, W.1.
 Chicago, U.S.A.: CLAYTON F. SUMMY Co., 429, S. Wabash Ave.

These Compositions are exceptionally Melodious, Interesting, and Effective. Have attained world-wide appreciation.

POPULAR CHRISTMAS ANTHEMS

COMPOSED BY EDWYN A. CLARE.

*BEHOLD, I BRING ... ..	31st 1000	4d.
*SING, O HEAVENS ... ..	23rd 1000	4d.
*CHOIRS OF ANGELS ... ..	12th 1000	4d.
*GOODWILL TO MEN ... ..	21st 1000	4d.
*WE HAVE SEEN HIS STAR ... ..	24th 1000	4d.
*BLESSÉD BE THE KING ... ..	8th 1000	4d.
A SAVIOUR, CHRIST THE LORD ... ..	7th 1000	4d.
THE PRINCE OF PEACE ... ..	19th 1000	4d.

Favourite MAGNIFICAT and NUNC DIMITTIS in D. 31st 1000 6d.

Full of flowing melody and effect. Sung at a Choir Festival.

Those marked * may also be had in Tonic Sol-fa.

London: NOVELLO &amp; COMPANY, Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

New York: THE H. W. GRAY Co., Sole Agents for the U.S.A.

DR. RALPH DUNSTAN'S
BOOK OF CAROLS.

The finest collection of Christmas Carols published.

Paper Bound, 2s. net; Cloth, Gilt, 3s. 6d. net.

Outline of Carol Lecture, 6d.

REID BROS., LTD., 26, EASTCASTLE STREET,
LONDON, W.1.

CHRISTMAS CAROLS

BY

EDWIN A. CRUSHA, F.R.C.O., F.T.C.L.

BELLS ACROSS THE SNOW } 2d.
 O KING OF GLORY }
 THE RISING OF THE STAR } 2d.
 SONG OF PEACE }

W. PAXTON & CO., 22, High Street, W.C.2.;
 or Composer, 19, Church Street, Edmonton.

THREE ORIGINAL CAROLS.

WORDS AND MUSIC BY

KATE LLOYD.

1. IN BETHLEHEM'S FAIRE CITIE.
2. THE WHOLE WIDE WORLD IN CONCERT SINGS.
3. GENTLE SHEPHERD.

STAINER &amp; BELL, LTD., 58, Berners Street, W.1.

IMPORTANT ANNOUNCEMENT.

First Publication of

BACH CANTATAS

IN MINIATURE SCORE FORM.

"The Passion of our Lord" (St. John).

With English words. With Bach's portrait, four woodcuts after Durer's "Small Passion." Introduction by Hermann Roth. 8s.

"Now shall the grace" (Cant. 50).

With English words. With two woodcuts after Durer's "Apocalypse," and Introduction by W. Fischer. 2s.

"Strike, thou hour" (Cant. 53).

With English words. With Bach's portrait by Gebel, and Introduction by W. Fischer. 1s.

"Ich will den Kreuzstab gerne tragen" (Cant. 56).

With Bach's portrait, and Introduction by W. Fischer. 1s. 6d.

"Be silent all" (Coffee Cantata 211).

With English words. With view of St. Thomas's Church in Leipzig, and Introduction by W. Fischer. 2s. 6d.

Magnificat.

With Bach's portrait by G. Haussmann, 1746. Introduction by Hermann Roth. 3s.

The above and many other interesting classic and modern works are published in the PHILHARMONIA EDITION.

Send for Catalogue:

HAWKES & SON, LONDON,
DENMAN STREET, PICCADILLY, W.1.T. MEE PATTISON'S POPULAR CANTATA
THE ANCIENT MARINER
33rd 1,000.

Vocal Score, 2s. 6d. Choruses only, 1s. 3d.

Band Parts may be hired.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

THE BARLESS PSALTER

POINTED FOR USE WITH ANGLICAN CHANTS

AN EASY BOOK FOR CHOIR AND CONGREGATION

CONTAINING

THE PSALMS OF DAVID,
THE CANTICLES AND PROPER PSALMS,
THE ATHANASIAN CREED,

Together with Short Notes on the Text and a full Explanatory Preface

EDITED BY

WALTER MARSHALL, M.A.

AND

SEYMOUR PILE, M.A., F.R.C.O.

Imperial 32mo, Price 1s. 6d. net.

Demy 8vo, Large Type, Price 4s. net.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

THE TIMES.

Congregational singing of the Psalms is difficult to accomplish; the rhythm is neither that of bars nor of musical phrase, but of the literary accent of the verse. The Barless Psalter has been framed with this in view, rejecting as false the idea that an Anglican chant sets the Psalms partly to free recitation and partly to a strict musical measure. Practically it revises Anglican chanting upon the basis of plainsong chanting, holding that the value of the notes must be considered as relative to the value of the syllables. Very few markings, therefore, are required to show the relation between the words and the music, and anyone may quickly master its principles without technical knowledge. From that point of view it should help congregations to join intelligently in Psalms and Canticles.

THE MORNING POST.

In the matter of Church Music there is a notable issue in the form of a "Barless Psalter." The system is simple and the marking clear.

THE DAILY TELEGRAPH.

The Barless Psalter is likely to prove a boon to those interested in congregational singing of the Psalms in church, and anxious to improve it. The congregational singing in our Anglican churches is not a feature to be proud of, and a careful study of this capital little book may lead to a better state of affairs. The detailed instructions are comprehensive and simple.

THE GUARDIAN.

The Anglican Church has had to pay heavily during some two centuries or more for the hard and mechanical treatment of Psalms and Canticles brought about by the introduction of the barred music of Anglican Chants . . . in place of the older and more flexible rhythm of unbarred plainsong. The result was . . . to destroy congregational singing . . . and to murder the magnificent prose rhythms of the Psalter. . . . It has been demonstrated that the Anglican Chant can be adequately handled by subordinating the musical accent strictly to the words, and by the selection of appropriate chants. . . . Mr. Marshall . . . makes a more practical suggestion in eliminating the bars from the Anglican Chant, and setting free the rhythm to keep pace with the words. This has certainly much to be said for it,—it is indeed a step forward, if not the last word. He admits stresses on words to mark meaning, but not to harden the time. His book, which has been prepared with the assistance of his capable organist, Mr. Seymour Pile, may be commended to all who are interested in this important feature of our worship.

THE CHURCH TIMES.

A little book has just been published which demands, and deserves, more than passing notice. Published in much the same format as The Cathedral Psalter, it proclaims itself to be The Barless Psalter, pointed for use with Anglican Chants: an Easy Book for Choir and Congregation. Note the last word. . . . The Barless Psalter (in spite of, or because of, its lack of bars) is simplicity itself, and could be rendered with ease by any average village choir and congregation. . . . If I were in the position of a choirmaster and had a free hand, I should scrap my existing stock of Psalters—by this time probably fairly worn-out and meet for destruction—and I should, without doubt, experiment upon this extremely sensible book.

THE ORGANIST AND CHOIRMASTER.

This is quite the best Psalter for Anglican Chants we ever remember to have seen. . . . With the suppression of accents during the chant inflexion, it has become possible to avoid to a very large extent the usual objectionable "clatter" on such final words as "righteousness," "testimonies," &c. This fact alone ought to commend the book to the notice of choirmasters who desire to secure smoothness and fluency in their Psalmody. . . . The Barless Psalter seems to us to be the ne plus ultra of the Anglican chanting system.

MUSICAL OPINION.

In the work now under notice, we see nothing of editorial peculiarities: the whole book is the exposition of a principle,—a sound, reasonable, and intelligible principle such as has been enunciated time after time in theory and almost always missed in practice. The editors certainly are justified when they say in conclusion that they have no apology to offer for this book. It certainly needs none, nor will its use need any justification. It really does seem to succeed where so many other books have failed.

MUSICAL NEWS.

The Barless Psalter is a thoughtful contribution towards the solution of the problem of chanting. It is simple in principle, the pointing is dignified, and as the editors have favoured trochaic endings, the "chattering finals" have been eliminated.

THE CHOIR.

If a suitable system can be devised, there is no reason why the chanting of a psalm should not be almost as easy to the ordinary congregation as the singing of a metrical hymn; and the nearest approach to the required simplicity will, we think, be found in the Barless Psalter. . . . The Barless Psalter clearly foreshadows a better state of things, and with its help the day should not be far distant when the chanting of the psalms is as easy an exercise as the singing of a hymn.

THE BARLESS PSALTER CHANTS

Price, Paper, 1s. 6d. net; Cloth, 2s. 6d. net.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

COMPOSITIONS BY EDWARD ELGAR.

INSTRUMENTAL.

ORCHESTRA.

CONCERTO (for Violin and Orchestra) (Op. 61).

Full Score, 42s. ; Miniature Score, Paper, 7s. 6d., Cloth, 11s. 6d. ;
String Parts, 21s. 6d. ; Wind Parts, 57s. 6d.

CONCERTO in E minor (for Violoncello and Orchestra) (Op. 85).

Full Score, 42s. Orchestral Parts on hire only.

CORONATION MARCH (1911) (Op. 65).

Full Score, 11s. 6d. ; String Parts, 6s. 8d. ; Wind Parts, 21s. 6d.

FALSTAFF ("King Henry IV." and "King Henry V.," Shakespeare). Symphonic Study in C minor, with two Interludes in A minor (Op. 68).

Full Score, 52s. 6d. ; Miniature Full Score, 11s. 6d. ; Cloth, 16s.
Orchestral Parts on hire only.

FALSTAFF. Two Interludes (from) (Op. 68): 1. Jack Falstaff, Page to the Duke of Norfolk. 2. Gloucestershire: Shallow's Orchard.

Full Score, 7s. ; String Parts, 3s. ; Wind Parts, 4s. 4d.

FROISSART, Concert-Overture (Op. 19).

Full Score, 11s. 6d. ; String Parts, 6s. 9d. ; Wind Parts, &c., 13s. 1d.

FUNERAL MARCH WITH INCIDENTAL MUSIC ("Grania and Diarmid") (Op. 42).

Full Score, 9s. String Parts, 3s. 4d. ; Wind Parts, &c., 8s. 8d.

IMPERIAL MARCH (Op. 32).

Full Score, 5s. 6d. ; String Parts, 2s. 8d. ; Wind Parts, &c., 9s. 4d.

IN THE SOUTH ("Alassio"). Concert - Overture (Op. 50).

Full Score, 31s. 6d. ; String Parts, 13s. 6d. ; Wind Parts, &c., 45s. 7d.

MEDITATION ("The Light of Life") (Op. 29).

Full Score, 7s. 6d. ; String Parts, 2s. 8d. ; Wind Parts, &c., 7s. 4d.

PRELUDE AND ANGEL'S FAREWELL ("Gerontius") (Op. 38).

Full Score, 9s. ; String Parts, 5s. ; Wind Parts, &c., 18s.

ROMANCE (for Bassoon and Orchestra) (Op. 62).

Full Score, 7s. 6d. ; String Parts, 3s. 4d. ; Wind Parts, 6s.

SYMPHONY in A flat, No. 1 (for full Orchestra) (Op. 55).

Full Score, 63s. ; Miniature Score, 11s. 6d. ; Cloth, 16s.
Orchestral Parts on hire only.

SYMPHONY in E flat, No. 2 (for full Orchestra) (Op. 63).

Full Score, 63s. ; Miniature Score, 11s. 6d. ; Cloth, 16s.
Orchestral Parts on hire only.

TRIUMPHAL MARCH ("Caractacus") (Op. 35).

Full Score, 9s. ; String Parts, 3s. 6d. ; Wind Parts, &c., 14s. 8d.

VARIATIONS ON AN ORIGINAL THEME (Op. 36).

Full Score, 25s. ; Miniature Score, 7s. 6d. ; String Parts, 14s. 9d. ;
Wind Parts, &c., 32s. 3d.

WAND OF YOUTH, THE, First Suite (Op. 1A).

Full Score, 26s. 6d. ; String Parts, 7s. 6d. ; Wind Parts, 17s. 8d.

Ditto, Second Suite (Op. 1B).

Full Score, 26s. 6d. ; String Parts, 10s. 6d. ; Wind Parts, 23s. 4d.

FANTASIA AND FUGUE in C minor, by J. S. Bach. Transcribed for Full Orchestra by Edward Elgar.

FANTASIA. Full Score, 6s. Orchestral Parts on hire only.
FUGUE. Full Score, 8s. 6d. Orchestral Parts on hire only.

OVERTURE in D minor, by G. F. Handel. Arranged for Full Orchestra by Edward Elgar.

Full Score, 7s. 6d. Orchestral Parts on hire only.

SMALL ORCHESTRA.

STRING ORCHESTRA, AND CHAMBER MUSIC.

CANTO POPOLARE (In Moonlight), arranged from the Concert-Overture "In the South" (Op. 50).

Score, 4s. 6d. ; String Parts, 2s. 4d. ; Wind Parts, &c., 4s.

CHANSON DE NUIT (Op. 15, No. 1).

Score, 4s. ; String Parts, 1s. 8d. ; Wind Parts, &c., 2s. ;
Pianoforte Conductor Part, 8d.

CHANSON DE MATIN (Op. 15, No. 2).

Score, 4s. ; String Parts, 2s. ; Wind Parts, &c., 2s. ;
Pianoforte Conductor Part, 8d.

ELEGY (for String Orchestra) (Op. 58).

Score, 2s. 6d. ; String Parts, 1s. 8d.

INTERMEZZO ("Dorabella" from the Variations) (Op. 36), for Strings, Wood-wind, and Drums.

Score, 4s. 6d. ; String Parts, 3s. 2d. ; Wood-wind and Drum Parts, 2s.

INTRODUCTION AND ALLEGRO for Strings (Quartet and Orchestra) (Op. 47).

Full Score, 16s. ; Quartet Parts, 6s. ; Orchestral Parts, 10s. 6d.

PLEADING (Op. 48, No. 1). Song, arranged for small orchestra with Harp or Pianoforte.

Solo Violin, Flute, or Oboe, 4d. ; Solo Cornet or Clarinet, 4d. ;
String Parts, 1s. 4d. ; Wind Parts, 1s. 4d. ; Harp or Pianoforte, 8d.

QUARTET in E minor, for Strings (Op. 83).

Score, 7s. 6d. ; Parts, 12s.

QUINTET in A minor, for Pianoforte and Strings (Op. 84).

20s.

SERENADE (Wand of Youth, First Suite) (Op. 1A).

String Parts, 1s. 8d. ; Flute and Clarinet, 4d. each ;
Short Score, Harp or Pianoforte Conductor, 1s. 6d.

DITTO. For Pianoforte and Stringed Instruments, 4s.

Separate String Parts, 4d. each.

THREE PIECES (Op. 10) :—

1. MAZURKA.

Full Score, 7s. 6d. ; String Parts, 3s. 4d. ; Wind Parts, &c., 6s. 8d.

2. SÉRÉNADE MAURESQUE.

Full Score, 7s. 6d. ; String Parts, 3s. 4d. ; Wind Parts &c., 5s. 8d.

3. CONTRASTS (THE GAVOTTE, A.D. 1700 AND 1900).

Full Score, 7s. 6d. ; String Parts, 3s. 4d. ; Wind Parts, &c., 7s.

NOTE.—These Pieces may be effectively performed by an orchestra consisting of 1 Flute, 1 Oboe, 1 Clarinet, 1 Bassoon, 2 Horns, 1 Trumpet (Cornet), Drums, and Strings. Any other instrument in the Score may be added with corresponding gain in effect.

MILITARY BAND.

	s.	d.
CHANSON DE MATIN (Op. 15, No. 2) ...	5	0
CHANSON DE NUIT (Op. 15, No. 1) ...	5	0
FOLLOW THE COLOURS ...	5	0
IMPERIAL MARCH (Op. 32) ...	13	6
MEDITATION, from "The Light of Life" (Op. 29)	7	6
PLEADING (Op. 48, No. 1) ...	5	0
THREE PIECES (Op. 10) ...	each	7 6

1. Mazurka. 2. Sérénade Mauresque.

3. Contrasts (The Gavotte, A.D. 1700 & 1900).

WAND OF YOUTH, THE, Second Suite (Op. 1B)	19	0
WITH PROUD THANKSGIVING (Military Band Accompaniment to the Vocal Score only) ...	9	0
Brass Band Ditto ...	6	0

NEW MUSIC.

THEORY.

MUSICAL THEORY WITHOUT TEARS—

Three Copy Books

by ERNEST NEWTON.

A new idea for teaching or learning the rudiments of music and harmony. The various progressive details are simply stated and are immediately followed by actual examples, with blank staves for the student to copy. The writing and copying of the music exercises should help to fix the notes and symbols in the pupil's mind. Model exercises and examination papers are also given.

Theory of Music Copy Books. In Three Books. Book I, Musical Elements; Book II, Scales and Intervals; Book III, Elementary Harmony. Price 1/6 each.

PIANOFORTE.

THREE PIECES FOR EDUCATION OR RECREATION—

'Moto Perpetuo,' 'Berceuse,' and 'Dancing Leaves.'

As a vehicle for facilitating rapid fingering agility, J. Stuart Archer's vivacious 'Moto Perpetuo' is to be recommended, the right hand throughout, with the exception of a short legato section, consisting of a running staccato melody in semiquavers, played allegro molto. 'Berceuse' is a piece of uncommon appeal, characterised by those features which make Mr. Stuart Archer's music invariably acceptable—well-turned phrases and melodic qualities distinctly above the average. A great point about Mr. Archer's pianoforte music is that he makes the left hand as interesting as the right, and as important. 'Dancing Leaves' by H. Gibson Butler, is another piece that gives scope for rapid and delicate fingering. The subject of the title is suggested by a succession of semiquaver groups of three, which pursue each other with the airy abandon one associates with dancing leaves.

'Moto Perpetuo,' Price 2/-, 'Berceuse,' Price 1/6. 'Dancing Leaves,' Caprice Grade: Moderately difficult. Price 2/-.

USEFUL EASY PIANOFORTE DUETS—

'Old King Cole' and other Nursery Songs
Arranged by ERNEST NEWTON.

The idea of setting nursery rhymes to music in the form of simple duets is a distinctly good one, and in this series of modern settings the composer has made the most of it. The words of the rhymes are given with the music, which is designed to attract as well as instruct the elementary player.

Contents: Old King Cole, Three Blind Mice, Jerry and James and John, Sing a Song of Sixpence, Little Bo-Peep, There was a Little Man, I Saw a Ship A-Sailing, When Good King Arthur Ruled. Grade: Very Easy. Price 2/-.

SYMPHONY IN B MINOR—

New Edition of Schubert's
'Unfinished' Symphony.

Of all the long list of symphonies that the great composers have given us, probably only one can be called popular in the sense that it is known to thousands who do not know any other, and that is Schubert's immortal 'Unfinished.' The Symphony is here transcribed for pianoforte in a clear and easily readable form that will appeal to all pianists.

Transcribed for Pianoforte by Edric Cundell. Grade: Moderately Difficult. Price 1/6

'CELTIC SUITE'—

Characteristic Album
by JOSEPH HOLBROOKE.

Folk tunes are always attractive, and when they are taken in hand by a master of contemporary composition such as Joseph Holbrooke, and embroidered with modern harmonies and ingenious rhythmic touches they become quite fascinating. This suite comprises music of Scotland, Wales, and the Isle of Man. Scotland is represented by a series of Strathspeys, to which Mr. Holbrooke adds a thematic dressing that is delightfully unconventional.

Contents: I, Ulliam Dhoan (Isle of Man); II, All thro' the Night (Wels); III, 'Song of the Bottle' (Wels); IV, Strathspeys. Grade: Moderately Difficult. Price 3/-

VOCAL.

HOW TO SING.

As an instance of how large an amount of useful advice can be got into a comparatively small space, this book is distinctly commendable. It covers all practical points that arise in the study of singing from the earliest stages, the chapters comprising—'Description of the Vocal Organs,' 'Voice and Voice Culture,' 'Breathing,' 'Pronunciation,' 'Explanation of Terms Used in Teaching Singing,' 'Hints to Singers,' 'Singing in Public,' 'The Song and its Interpretation,' 'Health,' 'Open Scholarships—Awards and Prizes,' 'List of Songs and Solos,' 'List of Useful Text-Books, Primers, and Books of Reference.' W. H. Griffiths is recognised as a vocal authority of the front rank, and the fruits of his ripe experience are crystallised in this volume.

A Complete Treatise by W. H. Griffiths. Price 2/-

THE 'LONDONDERRY AIR'—

Arranged as a Song.

Here we have the well-known Irish folk tune, arranged as a song in three keys. The words are in keeping with the haunting nature of the air, and the graceful harmonies are retained in the accompaniment.

Published in three keys, F (C<sub>1</sub> to A<sup>1</sup>), E<sup>2</sup> (B<sub>1</sub> to G<sup>1</sup>), D (A<sub>1</sub> to F<sup>1</sup>). Price 1/4

STUDIES IN SINGING—

New Edition of Concone's 50 Lessons for the Medium Registers.

The exercises that Concone devised more than half a century ago have been followed by the most eminent teachers down to the present day. The feature that makes this new edition particularly useful is the fact that it is vocalised throughout, that is to say, the exercises are sung to all the vowels. In this it marks a great improvement on other editions which advocated that these lessons should be sung only to the open vowel AH. Mr. W. H. Griffiths rightly points out in the preface to his earliest editions that Concone clearly indicated that the exercises should be vocalised throughout. In vocalising this new edition, therefore, Mr. Griffiths has been led to follow more strictly the original intentions and instructions of one of the greatest teachers of his day.

'Fifty Lessons in Singing,' by Concone. Edited by W. H. Griffiths in three books. Complete, 2/6. Books 1 and 2, price 1/6 each.

SHORT SONGS—

Six Good Examples
by Young British Composers.

In this interesting series of short encore songs one finds an admirable exposition of the varied styles of young British composers. Each song has an individual charm, with moreover the rare merit of being thoroughly original in conception and execution. All have that touch of modernity in harmonic design that imparts freshness and is such an improvement on the old ballad form. 'When that I was and a Tiny Little Boy' and 'O Mistress Mine' are two settings of Shakespeare by Gerrard Williams, a brilliant young composer with unconventional ideas. He is particularly happy in his treatment of 'O Mistress Mine.' In 'Daughter of Dawn' the same composer has a distinctly impressionistic subject. 'Fairy Rings,' by Ernest Howard, is a delightfully melodious little song. 'Child of the Moon,' by Lewis Anthony, shows the modern spirit rather more to the fore than in the other songs, but here again the effect is well in keeping with the nature of the lyric. 'Phyllis,' by Charles Sampson, is a dainty and tuneful song of summertime.

'When that I was and a Tiny Little Boy,' Key G (D—E<sup>1</sup>), and 'O Mistress Mine,' Key F (C—F<sup>1</sup>), 'Daughter of Dawn,' Key F (F—F<sup>1</sup>), 'Fairy Rings,' Key G (D—G<sup>1</sup>), 'Child of the Moon,' Key A (E—F<sup>1</sup>), 'Phyllis,' in two keys D (D—F<sup>1</sup>), and B<sup>7</sup>. Each of the above songs, price 1/6

NEW MUSIC—continued.

ORGAN.

VARIATIONS OF DISTINCTION—

Two Sets by J. STUART ARCHER.

Dedicated to the famous French organist, Marcel Dupré, and played by him at the opening of the Westminster Cathedral organ, 'Five Short Variations on a Scots Air' are at once scholarly and musically attractive. The composer, who is well known for this type of work, has taken the familiar tune 'Gala Water,' and draped around it a decorative dressing admirable in form and development, and showing a fund of inventive resource.

In 'Six Short Variations on an Irish Air' the theme employed is the traditional tune to which the hymn 'At the marriage feast in Cana' is sung in the Decies part of the province of Munster. The original air which the composer gives out in his introduction is an appealing lento theme. This is next developed in an Andante, which gives place to a Duet, followed by a Scherzino and Fughetta. The original theme is then re-stated in the form of a Romance, with added beauty in chordal development, ending in a spirited Finale in toccata form.

'Five Short Variations on a Scots Air' ('Gala Water'). Price 2/-
'Six Short Variations on an Irish Air.' Price 2/6. Of Moderate Difficulty.

TWO ORGAN WORKS OF MERIT—

'Carillon' and 'Cradle Song.'

By PURCELL J. MANSFIELD.

Mr. Purcell J. Mansfield enjoys an enviable reputation as organist and composer, and he has produced a considerable number of popular organ works of good style. These two works are in his happiest vein. In 'Carillon,' a toccata theme, the bell impression is cleverly suggested, an effective touch being lent by a re-statement of the opening Allegro in maestoso tempo as a Finale. 'Cradle Song' is a melodious inspiration in which notable use is made of the flute and oboe stops.

'Carillon.' Grade: Moderate. Price 2/- 'Cradle Song.' Grade: Moderately Easy. Price 1/6

EIGHT USEFUL TRANSCRIPTIONS—

By well-known Organist Composers.

There is a widespread call for organ arrangements of popular classics that have been brought up to date with a view to meeting the requirements of the player of the modern organ. The organist of average ability can get good results from works which, though perhaps not originally intended for the organ, lend themselves admirably to effective playing on that instrument. The eight famous works enumerated below have been arranged with care and artistic insight by eminent composer-organists of the day in such a manner as to obtain the best results whether played on large or small organs.

Arranged by J. Stuart Archer: 'Londonderry Air,' price 1/-; 'Slow Movement from 'Moonlight Sonata,' Beethoven, price 1/-; 'Aria from Suite in D,' Bach, price 9d.; 'Largo,' Handel, price 9d.; 'Marche aux Flambeaux,' Scotson-Clark, price 1/-; 'Minuet from ED Symphony,' Mozart, price 1/- Arranged by H. J. Ellingford: 'Fingal's Cave' Overture, Mendelssohn, price 2/- Arranged by Dr. Walker Robson: 'Minuet in G minor,' Handel, price 1/- Grade: Easy to Moderately Difficult.

A MODERN WORK OF CHARACTER—

'Elegie Héroïque.'

Harry Farjeon is a composer with a progressive spirit and a refreshing harmonic outlook. In this short organ work his desire to depart from the beaten track is manifest, and organists will observe with pleasure that though so strikingly original, his harmonic scheme and melodic outline are consistent with the soundest principles of form.

Grade: Moderate. Price 2/-

DR. DAVAN WETTON'S LATEST ORGAN COMPOSITION—

The high level of musicianship that marks Dr. Davan Wetton's works is widely known and admired, and has earned for him a fine reputation among organist-composers. His 'Postlude in E♭,' just published, is a spirited work with light and rhythmic effects.

Grade: Moderate. Price 2/-

MORE USEFUL TRANSCRIPTIONS—

By DR. C. PEARCE.

The organ transcriptions of Dr. Pearce are of a solid and eminently useful order, and they have a host of adherents. Whether dealing with works of a sacred or secular nature, Dr. Pearce's style is invariably workmanlike and shows sound musicianship, while evincing sympathetic appreciation of the limitations of the average organist. This varied list of transcriptions comprises some of Dr. Pearce's best work, and can be thoroughly recommended to the attention of all organists requiring straightforward numbers.

'Bridal Chorus' from 'Lohengrin,' Moderately Easy. Price 6d.
'Wedding March,' Mendelssohn, Moderately Easy. Price 9d.
'March of the Israelites' from 'Eli,' by Sir Michael Costa, Moderately Easy. Price 1/-
'Marche Funèbre,' Chopin, Op. 25 Moderate. Price 6d.
'Marcia Funèbre' from 'Pianoforte Sonata in A♭,' Beethoven, Op. 26, Moderately Difficult. Price 9d.
'Dend March' in 'Saul,' Handel, Moderate. Price 6d.
'Alleluia Chorus' from 'Messiah,' Handel, Moderate. Price 1/-

VIOLIN AND PIANOFORTE

"THREE IRISH FOLK-TUNES"—

Arranged by HENRY TOLHURST.

The wistful charm which is so characteristic of Irish folk melodies is well preserved in these arrangements. The three airs are each beautiful in their different ways, and are particularly well adapted for expressive violin playing.

Grade: Moderately Easy. Price 2/6. Contents: 'Gentle Maiden,' 'I shall leave this country,' 'Mary Asthore.'

A VIOLIN SOLO WORTHY OF NOTE—

'Rêve Angelique.'

By T. HAIGH.

Though this solo calls for smooth playing and a certain degree of technique it cannot be classed as more than moderately difficult. Apart from its melodic appeal, which is considerable, the chief value lies in the fact that the composer has written largely in the higher positions, on all four strings, and the work is therefore to be commended as an interesting aid to acquiring correct intonation in the higher positions from the G string upwards. The work is adequately fingered, and the phrasing is remarkably clear.

Grade: Moderately Difficult. Price 2/-

SEVEN USEFUL TRANSCRIPTIONS

AND NEW EDITIONS—

An interesting variety of standard violin pieces ranging from moderately easy to difficult, these works have been carefully edited, and provide satisfying material both for study and pleasure.

'Bees' Wedding,' Mendelssohn (Difficult), 1/-; 'Berceuse,' Ilmsky (Moderately Easy), 1/-; 'Chant Sans Paroles,' Pachulski (Moderately Easy), 9d.; 'L'Adieu,' Beethoven (Moderately Easy), 1/-; 'Sérénade Melancolique,' Tchaikowsky (Difficult), 1/6; 'Military March,' Schubert (Moderately Easy), 1/-; 'Marionettes Espagnoles,' Cui (Moderately Easy), 9d.; 'Il Trovatore' Fantasia, Verdi—Singelée (Moderate), 1/6.

A SUITE OF SIX VERY EASY PIECES

FOR THE VIOLIN—

'Stray Memories.'

By ROBERT CLAYTON.

This is a Suite of six tuneful and delightful pieces intended for violinists of very moderate capabilities. The pieces are all in the first position and lie easily under the hand. Although comparatively simple, each piece sounds extremely effective with the pianoforte accompaniment.

Grade: Easy. Price 2/6. Contents: 'Do you remember?' 'Joy of Life,' 'At Sunset,' 'Spring's Awakening,' 'A Stray Thought,' 'Fireside Dreams.'

Any of these publications may be obtained of all Music Dealers, or the Publishers:

PAXTON'S

(W. PAXTON &amp; Co., LTD.).

22, HIGH STREET, NEW OXFORD STREET,
LONDON, W.C.1.

Send for complete Catalogues, Vocal, C 201; Pianoforte, C 301; Instrumental, C 401; Organ, C 501, post free.

SOLOS FROM THE SACRED CANTATAS

OF

JOHN SEBASTIAN BACH.

In Twelve Books—each Book, One Shilling and Sixpence.

FIRST SET.

SOPRANO.

Air WITHIN MY HEART OF HEARTS ("A Stronghold Sure").
 Air OUR JESUS HATH FOR AYE ("God goeth up").
 Air MY HEART EVER TRUSTING ("God so loved the world").
 Air O GRANT US, MIGHTY LORD ("Jesus, now will we praise Thee").
 Air SIGHING, WEEPING ("My spirit was in heaviness").

TENOR.

Air LORD, TO US THYSELF BE SHOWING ("Bide with us").
 Recit. { WHY HAST THOU THEN ("My Spirit was in heaviness").
 Air FAST MY BITTER TEARS " " "
 Air REJOICE, O MY SPIRIT " " "
 Recit. { THE MIGHTY GUARDIAN ("Thou Guide of Israel").
 Air HIS FACE MY SHEPHERD " " "
 Air AND WHY ART THOU, MY SOUL ("When will God recall").

ALTO.

Air THOU, WHOSE PRAISES NEVER END ("Bide with us").
 Recit. { THE FATHER HATH APPOINTED HIM ("God goeth up").
 Air { MY SPIRIT HIM DESCRIBES ("God goeth up").
 Air INTO THY HANDS ("God's time is best").
 Air REJOICE, YE SOULS, ELECT AND HOLY ("O Light Everlasting").

BASS.

Recit. { HE COMES, THE LORD OF LORDS ("God goeth up")
 Air 'TIS HE, WHO ALL ALONE ("God goeth up").
 Recit. { IT IS NOT MINE ("God so loved the world").
 Air ON MY BEHALF " " "
 Recit. { YEA, THIS THY WORD ("Thou Guide of Israel").
 Air WHOM JESUS DEIGNS " " "
 Air YET SILENCE ("When will God recall").

SECOND SET.

SOPRANO.

Air OPEN WIDE, MY HEART ("Come, Redeemer").
 Air FATHER, WHAT I PROFFER ("Give the hungry man thy bread").
 Air COME, VISIT, YE GLOWING ("How brightly shines").
 Air I HAVE WAITED FOR THE LORD ("If thou but sufferest").

TENOR.

Recit. { THE SAVIOUR NOW APPEARETH ("Come, Redeemer").
 Air COME, JESU, COME ("Come, Redeemer").
 Air WHAT VOICE IS WITH THE TEMPEST ("From depths of woe").
 Air TUNEFUL HARPS AND VOICES ("How brightly shines").
 Air THOU ART MY GOD ("Lord, rebuke me not").

ALTO.

Air GOD'S ENSAMPLE THUS TO FOLLOW ("Give the hungry man thy bread").
 Air JESUS SLEEPS ("Jesus sleeps, what hope remaineth").
 Recit. { INCLINE THINE EAR ("Lord, rebuke me not").
 Air { THE LORD HATH HEARD ("Lord, rebuke me not").
 Air ALL EARTHLY POWERS FROM GOD INHERIT ("Praise thou the Lord").

BASS.

Air THE PASCHAL VICTIM HERE WE SEE ("Christ lay in death's dark prison").
 Air DO THINE ALMS ("Give the hungry man thy bread").
 Air WITH JESUS WILL I GO ("Wailing, crying").
 Recit. { AH, WHEN ON THAT GREAT DAY ("Watch ye, pray ye")
 Air { BLESSED RESURRECTION DAY " "

THIRD SET.

JUST PUBLISHED.

SOPRANO.

Recit. { O LORD, HEAR ME WHEN I CALL ("Lord, rebuke me not").
 Air { HOW LONG, O LORD " "
 Air O PRAISE THE LORD ("O praise the Lord").
 Recit. { O JESU, OUR REDEEMER ("There is nought of soundness").
 Air { HEARKEN WHEN WITH TREMBLING ACCENTS " "
 Air THOUGH REVILING TONGUES ASSAIL ME ("Watch ye, pray ye").

TENOR.

Recit. { LORD, WHY SO FAR AWAY ("Jesus sleeps").
 Air { IN BILLOWS THE RIVERS OF BELIAL ("Jesus sleeps").
 Recit. { O HAPPY TOWN, O FAVOURED LAND ("Praise thou the Lord").
 Air { O BLEST ARE ALL THAT FEAR HIM " "
 Recit. { REJECT IT NOT ("Sages of Sheba").
 Air { SAVIOUR, TAKE ME FOR THINE NOW ("Sages of Sheba").
 Air UPLIFT YOUR HEADS ON HIGH ("Watch ye, pray ye")

ALTO.

Air BE WELCOME, THOU GREAT ANGEL ("O teach me, Lord").
 Air AH, TARRY YET ("Praise our God").
 Air GOD IS EVER SUN AND SHIELD ("The Lord is a sun and shield").
 Recit. { BE STEADFAST IN AFFLICTION ("Wailing, crying").
 Air { PAIN AND SORROW WORK SALVATION " "

BASS.

Air GOD, WHOSE POWER ("Let songs of rejoicing").
 Recit. { ALTHOUGH AN HOST ENCAMP ("Lord, rebuke me not")
 Air O LORD, THY MERCY " "
 Air FARE YE WELL ("O teach me, Lord").
 Recit. { THESE THINGS THAT ISAIAH OF OLD ("The Sages of Sheba").
 Air GOLD OF OPHIR IS BUT VAIN " "
 Air AH, WHERE SHALL I SUCCOUR ("There is nought of soundness").

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

NOVELLO'S CLASSICAL SONGS.

Voice Parts in Staff and Tonic Sol-fa Notations, with Pianoforte Accompaniment.

VOLUME I.

THIRTY-FIVE CLASSICAL SONGS.

Alone ... ..	Mendelssohn	May-dew ... ..	W. Sterndale Bennett
Autumn Song ... ..	Mendelssohn	May Song ... ..	Mendelssohn
Come, ever-smiling Liberty ... ..	Handel	Mermaid's Song, The ... ..	Haydn
Come, gladsome Spring ... ..	Handel	My mother bids me bind my hair ... ..	Haydn
Come, happy Spring ... ..	Giordani	O for the wings of a dove ... ..	Mendelssohn
Contentment ... ..	Mozart	O sunny beam ... ..	Schumann
Cottage, The ... ..	Schumann	Rose, softly blooming ... ..	Spohr
Creation's Hymn ... ..	Beethoven	Say, ye who borrow ... ..	Mozart
Crusaders ... ..	Schubert	Slumber Song ... ..	Mendelssohn
Evening Song ... ..	Mendelssohn	Song of May, A ... ..	Beethoven
Fairest Isle ... ..	Purcell	Sun of the sleepless ... ..	Mendelssohn
First violet, The ... ..	Mendelssohn	To Chloe (in sickness) ... ..	W. Sterndale Bennett
Fisherman, The ... ..	Schubert	Verdant Meadows ... ..	Handel
Forget me not ... ..	W. Sterndale Bennett	Wandering Miller, The ... ..	Schubert
Greeting ... ..	Mendelssohn	Welcome to Spring ... ..	Mendelssohn
Hark! hark! the lark ... ..	Schubert	Whither ... ..	Schubert
Hear thou my weeping ... ..	Handel	Who is Sylvia? ... ..	Schubert
Hey, Baloo! ... ..	Schumann

VOLUME II.

THIRTY-SIX CLASSICAL SONGS.

Angels, ever bright and fair ... ..	Handel	Lord, at all times I will bless Thee... ..	Mendelssohn
Ave Maria ... ..	Schubert	Lotos Flower, The ... ..	Schumann
Bird is softly calling, A ... ..	Mendelssohn	O star of Eve ... ..	Wagner
Blow, blow, thou winter wind ... ..	Arne	Old German Spring Song (Frühlingslied)... ..	Mendelssohn
By Celia's Arbour (The Garland) ... ..	Mendelssohn	On Wings of Song ... ..	Mendelssohn
Coming of Spring, The ... ..	Schumann	Rose among the heather ... ..	Schubert
Cradle Song ... ..	Schubert	Sailor's Song, The ... ..	Haydn
Evening Star, The ... ..	Schumann	Slumber, beloved ... ..	Bach
Fisher's Song ... ..	Schubert	Smiling dawn of happy days, The ... ..	Handel
Free mind, The ... ..	Schumann	Thou art repose ... ..	Schubert
Garland, The (By Celia's Arbour) ... ..	Mendelssohn	Though far away ... ..	Mendelssohn
Gentle zephyr ... ..	W. Sterndale Bennett	Thou'rt like unto a flower ... ..	Schumann
Holiday on the Rhine, A ... ..	Schumann	To Music ... ..	Schubert
Huntsman, rest ... ..	Schubert	Trust in Spring ... ..	Schubert
I love thee... ..	Beethoven	Two Grenadiers, The ... ..	Schumann
Joy of Spring, The ... ..	Mendelssohn	Wanderer's Night-Song ... ..	Schubert
Know'st thou the land? ... ..	Beethoven	Where'er you walk ... ..	Handel
Lay of the imprisoned huntsman ... ..	Schubert	Where the Bee sucks ... ..	Arne
Litany ... ..	Schubert

VOLUME III.

THIRTY-EIGHT CLASSICAL SONGS.

Art thou troubled (Dove sei) ... ..	Handel	Memory, A ... ..	Brahms
But the Lord is mindful of His own ... ..	Mendelssohn	Morning Song ... ..	Mendelssohn
Butterfly, The ... ..	Cornelius	Nazareth ... ..	Gounod
Courage ... ..	Schubert	Nymphs and Shepherds ... ..	Purcell
Dawn, gentle flower ... ..	W. Sterndale Bennett	O my love's like the red, red rose ... ..	Schumann
Deep treasur'd in my heart ... ..	Schumann	O rest in the Lord ... ..	Mendelssohn
Erlaf-lake ... ..	Schubert	O think of me ... ..	Cornelius
Fishermaiden, The ... ..	Schubert	Ode to joy... ..	Schubert
Full-orbed moon, The ... ..	Schubert	Of in my dreams ... ..	Cornelius
Good-night, my dearest child... ..	Brahms	Oh! had I Jubal's lyre... ..	Handel
Greeting to Spring, A ... ..	Schumann	Out over the Forth ... ..	Schumann
How beautiful are the feet ... ..	Handel	Peace ... ..	Schubert
I will sing of Thy great mercies ... ..	Mendelssohn	Sandman, The ... ..	Schumann
In May ... ..	Schumann	Secrets ... ..	Schubert
Know'st thou the land? ... ..	Schubert	Sing, Maiden, sing ... ..	W. Sterndale Bennett
Lark, The... ..	Rubinstein	Spring advancing (Frühlingsglaube) ... ..	Mendelssohn
Let the bright Seraphim ... ..	Handel	Swallow's flying west, The ... ..	Brahms
Little Sandman, The ... ..	Brahms	Trout, The ... ..	Schubert
Lord of our being (Sorge nel petto)... ..	Handel	Violets ... ..	Cornelius

VOLUME IV.

THIRTY CLASSICAL SONGS.

Cherry Ripe ... ..	Horn	Lullaby ... ..	Brahms
Children at play ... ..	Mozart	My heart ever faithful ... ..	Bach
Come let us all this day ... ..	Bach	Now fades the sun's last lingering ray ... ..	Franz
Flower thou resemblest, A ... ..	Rubinstein	O come, do not delay ("The Marriage of Figaro") ... ..	Mozart
Gentle flowers ("Faust") ... ..	Gounod	Organ-grinder, The ... ..	Schubert
Gentle touch, The ... ..	Goetz	Orpheus with his lute ... ..	Sullivan
Greenwood calls, The ... ..	Schubert	Prepare thyself, Zion ... ..	Bach
Harper's Song, The ... ..	Schubert	Serenade ... ..	Gounod
I attempt from love's sickness ... ..	Purcell	Shepherds, The ... ..	Cornelius
It was a lover ... ..	Morley	Tender wood-dove ... ..	Gounod
Jerusalem ... ..	Mendelssohn	Under the greenwood tree ... ..	Arne
Lass with the delicate air, The ... ..	Arne	Violet, The ... ..	Mozart
Legend ... ..	Tchaikovsky	Walnut-tree, The ... ..	Schumann
Like to a linden tree ... ..	Dvorák	When all was young ("Faust") ... ..	Gounod
Longing ... ..	Schubert	When daisies pied ... ..	Arne

PRICE TWO SHILLINGS AND SIXPENCE EACH VOLUME.

Separate Numbers from 1½d. to 3d. In Books, containing six or eight songs, from 8d. to 1s.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

INSTRUCTION BOOKS FOR THE VOICE.

GUSTAV GARCIA A GUIDE TO SOLO SINGING

Price 3s. ; Paper Boards, 4s.

H. H. HULBERT. BREATHING FOR VOICE- PRODUCTION

Price 3s. ; Paper Boards, 4s.

AGNES J. LARKCOM THE SINGER'S ART

Price 1s. 6d.

RICHARD MANN A MANUAL OF SINGING

Price 1s. 6d.

MARGARET NICHOLLS SCHOOL CHOIR TRAINING

Price 3s.

ALBERTO RANDEGGER SINGING

Price 6s. ; Paper Boards, 7s.

J. STOCKHAUSEN METHOD OF SINGING

Price 6s. ; Paper Boards, 7s.

D. C. TAYLOR SELF-HELP FOR SINGERS

Price 2s. 6d. ; Paper Boards, 3s. 6d.

VOCAL EXERCISES FOR ALL VOICES

WITH MARKS OF EXPRESSION AND PHRASING

BY

ALBERTO RANDEGGER.

MARCO BORDOGNI TWENTY-FOUR VOCAL EXERCISES FOR MEZZO-SOPRANO

Price 2s. 6d.

CONCONE

50 Lessons for the Medium Part of the Voice.

25 Lessons. A Sequel to the Fifty Lessons for the Medium Part of the Voice.

15 Vocalises. A Sequel to the Twenty-five Lessons for the Medium Part of the Voice.

Ditto. For Mezzo-Soprano or Contralto.

40 Lessons for Contralto.

40 Lessons for Bass or Baritone.

Price 2s. 6d. each.

AUGUSTE PANSERON FORTY MELODIC AND PROGRESSIVE VOCAL EXERCISES

FOR SOPRANO AND TENOR

IN TWO PARTS.

Part I. Containing Nos. 1 to 26. Part II. Containing Nos. 27 to 40.

Price 3s. each Part.

FORTY-TWO MELODIC AND PROGRES- SIVE VOCAL EXERCISES

FOR CONTRALTO, BARITONE, OR BASS

IN TWO PARTS.

Part I. Containing Nos. 1 to 29. Part II. Containing Nos. 30 to 42.

Price 3s. each Part.

FIFTY VOCALISES FOR TWO VOICES SOPRANO AND MEZZO-SOPRANO, OR TENOR AND SOPRANO, OR TENOR AND BARITONE.

IN TWO PARTS.

Part I. Containing Nos. 1 to 30. Part II. Containing Nos. 31 to 50.

Price 3s. each Part.

PROGRESSIVE STUDIES FOR THE VOICE

WITH PIANOFORTE ACCOMPANIMENT

BY

GEORG HENSCHEL.

PART I.

STUDIES IN SUSTAINED SINGING.

PART II.

STUDIES IN FLORAL SINGING.

Each Part published for High, Medium, or Low Voice.

Price 4s. each.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

NEW ORGAN COMPOSITIONS

BY

SIGFRID KARG-ELERT.

CHORAL IMPROVISATION

(FESTIVAL PRELUDE)

ON

DER HÖLLE PFORTEN SIND ZERSTÖRT

Price ... Two Shillings.

CHORAL IMPROVISATION

(FESTIVAL PRELUDE)

ON

GELOBT SEI GOTT IM HÖCHSTEN THRON.

Price ... Two Shillings.

SEVEN PASTELS

FROM THE

LAKE OF CONSTANCE.

- |                                |                           |
|--------------------------------|---------------------------|
| 1. The Soul of the Lake.       | 4. The Reed-grown Waters. |
| 2. Landscape in Mist.          | 5. The Sun's Evensong.    |
| 3. The Legend of the Mountain. | 6. The Mirrored Moon.     |
|                                | 7. Hymn to the Stars.     |

Price ... Five Shillings and Sixpence.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

SOLO ORGANIST SERIES No. 5.

WEDDING MUSIC

1. EPITHALAMIUM.
2. BENEDICTION NUPTIALE.
3. THE BRIDAL MARCH.

E. CUTHBERT NUNN, F.R.C.O.

Price 2s. net complete; postage, 2d.

LONDON:

REID BROS., LTD., 26, EASTCASTLE STREET, W.I.

ORIGINAL COMPOSITIONS

FOR THE

ORGAN

BY

BASIL HARWOOD.

No.		s	d.
1.	DITHYRAMB ... ..	2	6
2.	COMMUNION IN F MAJOR ... ..	1	0
3.	INTERLUDE IN D MAJOR ... ..	1	6
4.	PEAN ... ..	3	6
5.	SHORT POSTLUDE FOR ASCENSIONTIDE ... ..	1	0
6.	REQUIEM ÆTERNAM ... ..	2	3
7.	ANDANTE TRANQUILLO IN E FLAT ... ..	1	6
8.	CAPRICCIO ... ..	2	6
9.	TWO SKETCHES ... ..	1	6
10.	CONCERTO IN D MAJOR ... ..	3	0
11.	THREE CATHEDRAL PRELUDES ... ..	3	0
12.	SONATA No. 2, IN F SHARP MINOR ... ..	3	0
13.	FANTASIA, "CHRISTMASTIDE" ... ..	3	6
14.	RHAPSODY ... ..	3	0
15.	IN AN OLD ABBEY ... ..	2	0

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

A TREATISE ON CONDUCTING.

(12,000 words).

Price ... One Shilling and Sixpence.

A very useful CHRISTMAS PRESENT.

Bandmaster M. T. COOPER.

23, Beech Avenue, Blackpool, Lancashire.

JUST PUBLISHED.

THE NEW ENCYCLOPEDIA
OF
MUSIC AND MUSICIANS.

Edited by WALDO SELDEN PRATT,

Hartford Seminary Foundation. Author of "A History of Music," &amp;c. Illustrated. 8vo. 31s. 6d. net.

Daily Mail: "A volume of nearly 1,000 pages, and packs more facts between two covers than any other musical book in English."A BOOK OF OPERAS: THEIR HISTORIES, THEIR PLOTS, AND THEIR MUSIC.

By H. E. KREHBIEL.

Two Vols. in one, combining "A Book of Operas" and "A Second Book of Operas." New Edition. Illustrated. Crown 8vo, 12s. net.

Deals with over thirty Operas, including most of those commonly performed.

** Send for Macmillan's New List of Books on Music and Musicians.

MACMILLAN &amp; CO., LTD., LONDON, W.C.2.

Music and Books.

FOYLES have an immense range of second-hand copies of standard text-books, orchestral, string, vocal, oratorio, and pianoforte music, in good condition, which are supplied at greatly reduced prices. New Music and Books are supplied on the best terms, and quick delivery guaranteed. Send for Catalogue 122, mentioning requirements.

Violin and 'Cello Music.

Foyles have recently purchased from the Music Library of an Eminent Violinist a large assortment of music by the best composers (classical and modern) which they offer at remarkable reductions. Call and examine the contents of this notable purchase, or write stating requirements.

Music and Books purchased. Best prices.

FOYLE'S MUSIC DEPT.,

121-125, CHARING CROSS ROAD, LONDON, W.C.2.

NOVELLO'S EDITIONS

OF THE

FAVOURITE OPERAS

ADAPTED FOR

CONCERT USE.

BALFE. *THE BOHEMIAN GIRL.
Price 2s. 6d.DONIZETTI. *THE DAUGHTER OF THE REGIMENT.
Price 2s. 6d.FLOTOW *MARTHA.
Price 2s. 6d.GOUNOD. *FAUST.
Price 1s. 6d. Tonic Sol-fa, 1s.VERDI. *IL TROVATORE.
Price 2s. 6d. Tonic Sol-fa, 1s. 6d.WAGNER. TANNHÄUSER.
Price 2s. 6d.WALLACE. *MARITANA.
Price 2s. 6d.*Orchestral Parts for Reduced Orchestra may be obtained from the Publishers.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

NOVELLO'S ALBUMS FOR PIANOFORTE AND STRINGED INSTRUMENTS.

(TWO VIOLINS, VIOLA, AND VIOLONCELLO.)

The Pieces in the majority of these Albums are so arranged that if any Part, or combination of Parts, in addition to the First Violin and Pianoforte is used, they will sound complete.

No.		S. D.	No.		S. D.
1.	DOLMETSCH, ARNOLD—Suite of Four Pieces ... .. Extra String Parts, 8d. each.	4 0	17.	COWEN, FREDERIC H. — Four English Dances. No. 4. Country Dance ... Extra String Parts, 8d. each.	4 0
2.	PURCELL, HENRY—Suite of Five Pieces ... .. Extra String Parts, 8d. each.	4 0	18.	COLERIDGE-TAYLOR, S. — Four Characteristic Waltzes. No. 1. Valse Bohemienne ... .. Extra String Parts, 8d. each.	3 0
3.	GERMAN, EDWARD — Three Dances, from the Music to "Henry VIII." Extra String Parts, 1s. 6d. each.	7 6	19.	COLERIDGE-TAYLOR, S. — Four Characteristic Waltzes. No. 2. Valse Rustique ... .. Extra String Parts, 8d. each.	3 0
4.	RAMEAU, J. P.—Gavotte in D ... Extra String Parts, 8d. each.	4 0	20.	COLERIDGE-TAYLOR, S. — Four Characteristic Waltzes. No. 3. Valse de la Reine ... .. Extra String Parts, 8d. each.	3 0
5.	HANDEL, G. F.—Six Pieces from the Water Music. 1. Bourrée in F; 2. Air in F; 3. Minuet in F; 4. Hornpipe in F; 5. Aria in G; 6. Allegro in D ... .. Extra String Parts, 8d. each.	5 6	21.	COLERIDGE-TAYLOR, S. — Four Characteristic Waltzes. No. 4. Valse Mauresque ... .. Extra String Parts, 8d. each.	3 0
6.	HANDEL, G. F.—Two Bourrées ... Extra String Parts, 8d. each.	3 0	22.	SPOHR, L. — Andantino, from the Symphony "The Consecration of Sound"... Extra String Parts, 8d. each.	4 6
7.	MACKENZIE, A. C. — Benedictus from Six Pieces for the Violin ... .. Extra String Parts, 8d. each.	4 6	23.	LANNER, JOSEF — Five Styrian Dances (Ländler) ... .. Extra String Parts, 8d. each.	4 6
8.	GOUNOD, CHARLES—Judex, from "Mors et Vita" ... .. Extra String Parts, 8d. each.	4 6	24.	TOURS, BERTHOLD—March in G Extra String Parts, 4d. each.	2 6
9.	MENDELSSOHN—Wedding March Extra String Parts, 8d. each.	4 0	25.	MACFARREN, W.—Bourrée in C ... Extra String Parts, 8d. each.	3 0
10.	MENDELSSOHN — War March ("Athalie") ... .. Extra String Parts, 8d. each.	4 0	26.	COWEN, FREDERIC H. — Minuet d'Amour, from A Suite of Old English Dances (Second Set) ... .. Extra String Parts, 8d. each.	4 0
11.	MENDELSSOHN—Cornelius March Extra String Parts, 8d. each.	4 0	27.	WEST, JOHN E.—Intermezzo (from "Seedtime and Harvest") ... .. Extra String Parts, 4d. each.	4 0
12.	MENDELSSOHN—Funeral March ... Extra String Parts, 8d. each.	4 0	28.	HOLST, GUSTAV—Seven Scottish Airs ... .. Extra String Parts, 8d. each.	4 6
13.	ELVEY, GEORGE — Gavotte (à la mode ancienne) ... .. Extra String Parts, 8d. each.	3 0	29.	LEMARE, E. H.—Andantino in D ... Extra String Parts, 4d. each.	4 0
14.	COWEN, FREDERIC H. — Four English Dances. No. 1. Stately Dance ... Extra String Parts, 8d. each.	4 0	30.	BREWER, A. H.—Auf Wiedersehen Extra String Parts, 8d. each.	4 0
15.	COWEN, FREDERIC H. — Four English Dances. No. 2. Rustic Dance ... Extra String Parts, 8d. each.	4 0	31.	ELGAR, EDWARD—Wand of Youth, The, Serenade from (First Suite, Op. 1a) ... Extra String Parts, 4d. each.	4 0
16.	COWEN, FREDERIC H. — Four English Dances. No. 3. Graceful Dance... Extra String Parts, 8d. each.	4 0	32.	FARNABY, GILES—Suite of Seven Pieces. Arranged by GRANVILLE BANTOCK Separate String Parts, 8d. each.	5

To be continued.

THE SHAFTS OF CUPID

SONG.

THE WORDS BY

FRED G. BOWLES.

THE MUSIC BY

PERCY E. FLETCHER.

IN THREE KEYS.

PRICE TWO SHILLINGS EACH.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

SONGS

BY

ERNEST FARRAR.

BRITTANY

(Words by E. V. LUCAS).

THREE KEYS.

Price One Shilling and Sixpence each.

O MISTRESS MINE

(Words by SHAKESPEARE).

TWO KEYS.

Price Two Shillings each.

TWO PASTORALS

COME YOU, MARY.

WHO WOULD SHEPHERD PIPES
FORSAKE.

(Words by NORMAN GALE).

TWO KEYS.

Price Two Shillings each.

TWO SONGS

DIAPHENIA.

(Words by H. CONSTABLE).

THE LOVER'S APPEAL.

(Words by Sir F. WYATT).

TWO KEYS.

Price Two Shillings each.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

TWO SONGS

FROM

SHAKESPEARE.

1. O MISTRESS MINE.

2. COME AWAY, DEATH.

SET TO MUSIC BY

B. J. DALE.

Op. 9.

Price Two Shillings each.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

NOW READY.

FINAL BOOK

OF THE

BREARE VOCAL SERIES,

No. 5.

ENTITLED:

"VOCAL ANALYSES:

SENSITISING BREATH,
EMOTIONAL EVOLUTION."

Price Five Shillings.

PUBLISHERS:

London: SIMPKIN, MARSHALL, HAMILTON,
KENT & Co.

Harrogate: R. ACKRILL.

MUSIC

FOR

STRING ORCHESTRA.

JUST PUBLISHED.

J. S. BACH. PRELUDE AND FUGUE IN G MINOR.

Part II., No. 16, of the "Forty-Eight."
Arranged for String Orchestra (or Quartet) by

JULIUS HARRISON.

Score, 2s. 6d. Parts, 3s. 4d.

ERNEST AUSTIN. THE VICAR OF BRAY. Variations.
Score, 9s. Parts, 9s.ADAM CARSE. BARBARA ALLEN. Variations.
Piano Conductor, 2s. 3d. String Parts, 6s.

J. D. DAVIS. SONG OF EVENING.

Score, 4s. Parts, 3s. 4d.

T. F. DUNHILL. THE CHIDDINGFOLD SUITE.

Score, 7s. 6d. Parts, 9s. 9d.

EDWARD ELGAR. ELEGY.

Score, 2s. 6d. Parts, 1s. 8d.

INTRODUCTION AND ALLEGRO (Op. 47). Quartet
and Orchestra.

Score, 16s.; Quartet Parts, 6s.; Orchestral Parts, 10s. 6d.

PERCY FLETCHER. TWO BAGATELLES.

Parts, 3s. 6d.

C. H. H. PARRY. SUITE IN F (Lady Radnor's Suite).

Score, 7s. Parts, 7s. 6d.

PERCY PITT. AIR DE BALLET.

Score, 3s. Parts, 3s. 4d.

HENRY PURCELL. SUITE FROM DRAMATIC MUSIC.

Edited by ALBERT COATES.

Score, 1s. 6d. Parts, 2s. 8d.

TWO SUITES FROM "THE GORDIAN KNOT UNTIED."

Edited by GUSTAV HOLST.

(With additional wind and drum parts ad lib.

MS. on hire.)

No. 1. Score, 4s. Parts, 2s. 8d.

No. 2. Score, 4s. Parts, 2s. 8d.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

---

JOHN SEBASTIAN BACH

---

48 PRELUDES AND FUGUES

(THE WELL-TEMPERED CLAVICHORD)

---

A NEW EDITION, EDITED BY HAROLD BROOKE.

---

IN TWO PARTS.

Price Four Shillings each.

Or, Complete, Cloth, Price Twelve Shillings and Sixpence.

---

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

---

MANUEL DE FALLA

---

EL RETABLO DE MAESE PEDRO

(MASTER PETER'S PUPPET SHOW)

AN EPISODE FROM "DON QUIXOTE" IN ONE ACT.

Vocal Score, 15s. net.

English Version by J. B. TREND, based on Shelton's translation of 1620.

French Version by G. JEAN-AUBRY.

---

English Libretto by J. B. TREND.

---

Price 6d. net.

---

This long-expected new work, by the greatest living Spanish composer, based on a chapter from "Don Quixote," has already aroused great curiosity by the performances given in Spain and elsewhere. It was fully discussed in No. 34 of "The Chesterian" (October, 1923), and now that the Vocal Score and Libretto are available, this very curious and characteristic work, which for its humour and its human truth is worthy of Cervantes, will once more reveal to the whole musical world a new side of Manuel de Falla's inexhaustibly versatile personality.

---

J. & W. CHESTER, LTD., 11, Great Marlborough St., London, W.1.

---

London: Printed by NOVELLO & COMPANY, Limited, at Novello Works, Soho, and published at 160, Wardour Street, Soho, W.1.
Saturday, November 1, 1924.

THE MUSICAL TIMES

AND SINGING-CLASS CIRCULAR

FOUNDED IN 1844

PUBLISHED ON THE FIRST OF EVERY MONTH

No. 982.—Vol. 65
Registered at the General Post
Office for Canadian Postage

DECEMBER 1 1924

Price 6d.; Postage 2d.
Annual Subscription, post-free, 7s. 6d.

ROYAL CHORAL SOCIETY.

ROYAL ALBERT HALL.

Patron - HIS MAJESTY THE KING.

FIFTY-FOURTH SEASON, 1924-1925.

SATURDAY, DECEMBER 20, at 2.30 p.m.

CAROLS

MISS MEGAN FOSTER.
MISS OLGA HALEY.
MR. JOHN ADAMS.
MR. PETER DAWSON.

Conductor - MR. H. L. BALFOUR.

SATURDAY, JANUARY 3, 1925, at 2.30 p.m.

MESSIAH - - - - - HANDEL

MISS FLORA WOODMAN.
MISS PHYLLIS LETT.
MR. BEN DAVIES.
MR. ROBERT RADFORD.

Conductor - MR. H. L. BALFOUR.

At the Organ - MR. R. ARNOLD GREIR.

THE ROYAL ALBERT HALL ORCHESTRA.

Stalls, 10s. 6d.; Arena, 7s. 6d.; Balcony (Reserved), 5s.;
Unreserved, 3s. 6d.; Gallery Promenade (1,000 Seats), 2s.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

YORK GATE, MARLEYBONE ROAD, LONDON, N.W.1.

Instituted 1822. Incorporated by Royal Charter, 1830.

Patron: HIS MAJESTY THE KING.

President: H.R.H. THE DUKE OF CONNAUGHT, K.G.

Principal: JOHN B. McEWEN, M.A., F.R.A.M.

A SPECIAL COURSE FOR THE TRAINING OF CONDUCTORS has been instituted.

A SPECIAL TEACHERS' TRAINING COURSE has been arranged to meet the requirements of the Teachers' Registration Council.

PERFORMANCES of Sheridan's "The Rivals" will be given by members of the Dramatic Class, under the direction of Mr. ACTON BOND, on Monday and Tuesday, December 1 and 2, at 8 p.m.

ORCHESTRAL CONCERT, Queen's Hall, Tuesday, December 9, at 3 p.m.

EMMA LEVY SCHOLARSHIP, open to Jewish Pianists. Last day for entry, December 29.

LENT TERM will begin on Monday January 12, 1925.

ENTRANCE EXAMINATION on or about January 8.

J. A. CREIGHTON, Secretary.

MANCHESTER SCHOOL OF MUSIC.

Principal: ALBERT J. CROSS, A.R.A.M.

FOUNDED 1892.

The oldest Institution in Manchester devoted solely to the interests of music.

All branches of Music taught. Day and Evening Private Lessons. Opera Class. Full Orchestral Class. Intermediate and Elementary String Orchestras, Classes for Ensemble Playing, Elocution, Choral Singing, Harmony, &c.
Single Subjects taught. Prospectus from 16, Albert Square.

A WAGNER RECITAL will be given by Mr. HERBERT HODGE, at St. Stephen's Walbrook, on December 11th, at 1.10 p.m.

THE ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

PRINCE CONSORT ROAD, SOUTH KENSINGTON, S.W.7.

(Incorporated by Royal Charter, 1883.)

Patron: HIS MAJESTY THE KING.

President: H.R.H. THE PRINCE OF WALES, K.G.

Director: SIR HUGH P. ALLEN, M.A., Mus. Doc.

Honorary Secretary: GEORGE A. MACMILLAN, Esq., D.Litt.

Registrar: CLAUDE AVELING, Esq., M.A.

The College offers a Complete Course of Musical Education to pupils of both sexes, both professional and amateur. Upwards of seventy Scholarships and Exhibitions are founded which provide free musical education.

SPECIAL CLASSES for CONDUCTING and TRAINING of TEACHERS have been instituted.

The OPERATIC and BALLET CLASSES have the use of the fully equipped College OPERA THEATRE with SUNKEN ORCHESTRA.

Examinations for the Associateship of the College (A.R.C.M.) in all subjects held three times a year in December, April, and September.

Guildhall School of Music.

(CORPORATION OF LONDON.)

VICTORIA EMBANKMENT, E.C.4.

PRINCIPAL: SIR LANDON RONALD, F.R.A.M., F.R.C.M., &c.

PRIVATE LESSONS in all Musical Subjects, and STAGE TRAINING in Elocution, Gesture, Dancing, Opera.

Complete Musical Education at inclusive fees, £9 9s. and £12 12s. Opera Class, Saturdays. Special Training Course for Teachers (approved by Teachers' Registration Council).

Prospectus and Syllabus of Local Centres and Schools Examinations (open to general public) free.

Telephone: Cent. 4459. H. SAXE WYNDHAM, Secretary.

The Royal College of Organists.

THE SOLO-PLAYING TESTS for the next F.R.C.O. EXAMINATION are:

Prelude and Fugue in C, 9-8 time, J. S. Bach. (Novello, Book 9, p. 156; Augener, p. 69; Peters, Vol. 2, No. 7.)

Fantasia in G major (without Fugue), C. Hubert H. Parry. Original Compositions for the Organ (New Series), No. 22. (Novello.)

Adagio espressivo, from the Symphony in C, Schumann. Stainer's arrangements, No. 5, p. 54. (Novello.) This arrangement only.

The 10 selected pieces and the book set for the Essay for the January, 1925, A.R.C.O. Examination, are the same as those set for July, 1924.

All Candidates for the next Examinations must send in their names for FELLOWSHIP by DECEMBER 11th, for ASSOCIATESHIP by DECEMBER 18th. In the case of NEW MEMBERS proposal forms duly filled up must be sent in before DECEMBER 4th. No names will be entered after the above dates.

Regulations, list of College Publications, Lectures, &c., may be had on application.

Examples indicating the character and approximate difficulty of the NEW TESTS, set for the first time at the July, 1924, Examinations, may be obtained at the College. Associateship or Fellowship, 6d. each (post free).

The College is open daily from 10 to 4: Saturdays 10 to 1.

H. A. HARDING, Hon. Secretary.
Kensington Gore, S.W.7.

THE ASSOCIATED BOARD OF THE R.A.M. AND THE R.C.M. FOR LOCAL EXAMINATIONS IN MUSIC.

Patron: HIS MAJESTY THE KING.
President: H.R.H. THE PRINCE OF WALES, K.G.

LOCAL CENTRE EXAMINATIONS (SYLLABUS A).
Written Examinations held in March and November at all Centres.
Practical Examinations in March-April and November-December at all Centres. Entries for the March-April Examinations close Wednesday, February 11th, 1925.

"SCHOOL" EXAMINATIONS (SYLLABUS B).

Held throughout the British Isles three times a year, viz., March-April, June-July, and October-November. Entries for the March-April Examinations close Wednesday, February 4th, 1925.

ELOCUTION EXAMINATIONS will be held at certain fixed centres in March-April, June-July, and October-November each year.
For full particulars see special Elocution Syllabus.

The Board offers annually SIX EXHIBITIONS tenable at The R.A.M. or The R.C.M. for Two or Three Years.

Syllabuses A and B, Elocution Syllabus, Entry Forms, and any further information, may be obtained post-free from:

THE SECRETARY, 14 & 15, Bedford Square, London, W.C.1.

ROYAL MANCHESTER COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

Founded 1893. Incorporated by Royal Charter, 1923.

Patron: HER MAJESTY QUEEN ALEXANDRA.
President: H.R.H. THE DUKE OF YORK, K.G.
Principal: Dr. ADOLPH BRODSKY.
Registrar: STANLEY WITHERS, M.A.

Students are required to enter upon a complete course of Musical instruction, and are not admitted for a shorter period than one year.

Fee for the year, £36. Special fee for Organ Course, £30, and for Wind Instrument Course, £18.

Systematic Course for the Training of Teachers included in the curriculum.

The Prospectus, with Scholarship information, Diploma Regulations, and Entry Forms, on application.

96 and 95, WIMPOLE STREET, W.1.

TOBIAS MATTHAY PIANOFORTE SCHOOL

Instruction under his teachers, and under his own supervision.

Open to Professionals and Amateurs, and also to Children.

The Staff consists of thirty-nine senior Professors of thorough experience and platform reputation, all trained by the founder.

Special Short Courses for Teachers during term and vacation.

LECTURE-LESSON Class by Mr. MATTHAY on the practical teaching of Technique and Interpretation, diagnosis and correction of faults, musical analysis and synthesis, &c., alternate Wednesday evenings.

Mr. FREDERICK MOORE takes alternate Wednesdays.

COMPLETE TRAINING COURSE FOR TEACHERS.
(Approved by the Teachers' Registration Council.)

This ONE-YEAR Course may be joined at the beginning of ANY TERM.
For further particulars please apply, Mrs. MARION COLE, Secretary.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC. TEACHERS' TRAINING COURSE.

The Lectures on teaching Singing, in connection with the above
Course will be given during Lent term by Madame A. J. LARKCOM, F.R.A.M. For particulars apply, Secretary, R. A. Music, London, N.W.1.

LONDON SOCIETY OF ORGANISTS. FOUNDED 1913.

PRESIDENT FOR 1924: JOHN E. BORLAND, Mus. D.

Organists, Assistant-Organists, and Choirmasters of all denominations are eligible. Register of vacant appointments.

Particulars and application to the Hon. Sec., Dr. J. WARRINER, De Crespigny House, Denmark Hill, S.E.5.

GLASGOW ATHENÆUM SCHOOL OF MUSIC.

SESSION 1924-25.

The Session consists of Three Terms: September 8 to November 1, December 1 to March 7, and March 9 to June 5.

Complete Musical Curriculum. Day and Evening Classes.
Single Subjects taught.

Prospectus and further information may be obtained from:

STUART S. FORSYTH, Secretary,

ATHENÆUM BUILDINGS, GLASGOW.

BIRMINGHAM & MIDLAND INSTITUTE SCHOOL OF MUSIC.

Visitor ... Sir EDWARD ELGAR, O.M., Mus.Doc., LL.D.
Director ... GRANVILLE BANTOCK, M.A., D.Mus. (Ed.).

SESSION 1923-1924.

The Session consists of AUTUMN TERM (September 20 to December 18); WINTER TERM (January 19 to April 9); SUMMER TERM (April 11 to July 9).

Instruction in all branches of Music, Students' Choir and Orchestra, Chamber Music, Students' Rehearsals, and Concerts.

Prospectus and further information may be obtained from—

H. M. FRANCIS, Secretary.

Paradise Street, Birmingham.

THE LONDON SCHOOL OF SINGING.

20A, HENRIETTA STREET, CAVENTISH SQUARE, W.1.

President: A. NETTLEFOLD.

Principal ... WARD COWDERY.
Acting Principal ... DAVID GODELL.

The School provides complete instruction and training in all branches of Vocal Art for both Professional and Amateur.
Latent talent successfully developed. Public appearances arranged.
Students' Concerts monthly. Auditions free.
Particulars from Secretary. Mayfair 3819.

THE LONDON COLLEGE FOR CHORISTERS.

6 and 7, BLOMFIELD CRESCENT, PADDINGTON, W.2.

Founder: Mr. JAMES BATES.

Solo Boys and Chorus Boys supplied at short notice for Church Services, &c. Telephone: Paddington 5990. Sec., ARTHUR G. BATES.

Battersea Polytechnic, London, S.W.11.

Principal: ROBERT H. PICKARD, D.Sc., F.R.S.
Head of Music Department: H. DAVAN WETTON, Mus. D., F.R.C.O.

CLASSES IN THEORY OF MUSIC, HARMONY, AND COUNTERPOINT.
UNIVERSITY COURSES FOR DEGREES AND HIGHER
EXAMINATIONS IN MUSIC, L.R.A.M. and A.R.C.M.,
ASSOCIATED BOARD OF THE R.A.M. and R.C.M.,
CLASS AND PRIVATE LESSONS IN AURAL TRAINING,
SOLO SINGING, PIANOFORTE, VIOLIN, AND VIOLA.
CHORAL SOCIETY. ORCHESTRA AND ORCHESTRAL CLASS.
LESSONS ON CONCERT ORGAN (Reconstructed and Modernized).
PREPARATION FOR R.C.O. EXAMINATIONS.
SPECIAL CLASSES FOR TEACHERS (Recognised by the L.C.C.).

Next Term begins Monday, January 12, 1925.

Particulars of all Classes on application to the Principal.

PAPER WORK BY MUS. B., F.R.C.O.

OVER 1100 SPECIMEN WORKINGS.

"Your lessons and ideas splendid."
"Your excellent models make my attempts look cold."

RECENT SUCCESSES.

2s. 6d. per lesson and postage.

"E. B.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

THE GILBERT AND SULLIVAN OPERATIC SCHOOL.

21A, SLOANE STREET, S.W.1. Tel.: Kensington 927.

Principal - Miss MARGUERITE D'EGVILLE, A.R.C.M.

For the study of Gilbert and Sullivan Opera under expert tuition.
Choral Classes, Solo Singing, Diction, Acting and Elocution,
Dancing and Deportment, Orchestral Classes.
For Prospectus, apply, The Principal.
Term begins Monday, January 12, 1925.

PIANO PLAYING KEPT UP without keyboard practising

NOT the least of the many benefits which the use of my System confers upon pianists is that of being able to keep "in practice" without keyboard practising.

Even when circumstances make keyboard work impossible for several months, definite progress is often made in touch, increased powers of execution, and in general command over the keyboard.

This is one of the many reasons why pianists of all grades of proficiency take my Postal Course.

Many eminent musicians, including the late SIR FREDERICK BRIDGE, have used and highly recommended my System—the ORIGINAL POSTAL SYSTEM. More than 18,000 Successful Pupils of all ages add their testimony.

"From Brain to Keyboard" Macdonald Smith's System of Pianoforte Playing.

My illustrated book, "Light on Pianoforte Playing," will be gladly sent to any pianist. It fully explains the principles and advantages of the methods used in the System. When applying, please do not omit to state whether comparative beginner, average, or advanced pianist. The book will be sent free of charge, and post free.

M. MACDONALD SMITH, 19, BLOOMSBURY SQ., LONDON, W.C.1.

CORRESPONDENCE LESSONS IN MODERN PIANOFORTE TECHNIQUE

PERSONAL LESSONS AND CONSULTATIONS.

COACHING FOR ALL RECOGNISED EXAMINATIONS.

An Organist writes:

"I had thirteen of my pupils in for the Associated Board Exams., and I was struck with the increase of marks gained—only one failed—and I certainly think the better results came entirely from the fact that I adopted as many of the principles of your method as possible."

Write for particulars to-day, stating your individual difficulties.

THE CHARLES A. GILLETT

Pianoforte School,

11, SOUTH MOLTON STREET, NEW BOND STREET,
LONDON, W.1.

THE MASTER-METHOD OF MEMORY-PLAYING

which originated in the most famous school of piano-technique in Europe, and has been used by all the greatest pianists of the past fifty years, is

Totally different from any other System for Memorising Music

inasmuch as no technical terms whatever are used in the course, and no knowledge of Harmony is required; it is only necessary that you should be able to play the piano (or organ) from the music, and I guarantee to teach you—in the first lesson—how to play from memory.

An interesting Booklet, "The Master-Method," giving a full description of the course, together with a selection of signed and addressed testimonials, will be sent free upon receipt of a P.C. to

MR. REGINALD C. FOORT, F.R.C.O.,

19, BEACON HOUSE, HEMSTAL ROAD, LONDON, N.W.6.

Even if you have never been able to play from memory before, and although you have tried, failure is impossible and all risk eliminated by

MY PERSONAL GUARANTEE.

JOHN B. WOOD, MUS. BAC.
C. G. WOOD, MUS. BAC., L.R.A.M.

THE IDEAL CORRESPONDENCE SCHOOL OF MUSIC.

EXPERT TUTORS.

THEORY OF MUSIC, HARMONY,
COMPOSITION, ART OF TEACHING,
INTERPRETATION,
FORM AND MEMORY TRAINING
FOR MUSICIANS.

Correspondents from all parts of the world and ex-students of the Principal Musical Institutions have been enrolled as pupils.

Write,

6, BOLTON ROAD, FARNWORTH, BOLTON.

GOOD SINGING.

A Concise Statement of the Essential Preliminaries.

By JAS. EDMONDSON.

Specially written to assist untrained vocalists.

BREATHING, TONE-PLACING, CHORUS-SINGING, ETC.
20 Printed Pages with Illustrations. Price 3s. 6d.

JAS. EDMONDSON, FELTON'S MUSIC WAREHOUSE,
The Broadway, Harrow.

MODERN CORR. COLLEGE

Principal: ARTHUR McALISTER, B.A. (CANTAB.).

IMPORTANT NOTICE

To PAST, PRESENT, and PROSPECTIVE Students of the M.C.C.

CHANGE OF ADDRESS (See below).

— GUARANTEE COURSES. —

MATRIC.

1st M.B.

EXERCISE.

FINAL MUS. BAC.

A.R.C.O.

F.R.C.O.

L.R.A.M.

A.R.C.M.

A.T.C.L.

} Any Subject.

A. MUS. T.C.L.

L. MUS. T.C.L.

STATE EXAM. interested in, and give some particulars of Standard of Work.

— FREE ADVICE. —

20, SHERWIN ROAD, NOTTINGHAM.

SPECIALISED POSTAL COACHING FOR EXAMINATIONS.

DR. NORMAN SPRANKLING

Mus.Doc. (Lond.).

Full Preparation for L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., Mus. B., Mus. D., and Diplomas of T.C.L. and R.C.O.

THIS MONTH'S SPECIAL COURSES.

1. L.R.A.M. and A.R.C.M.
Full Preparation in all Paper Work, and in the viva voce portion of these Examinations.
NUMEROUS SUCCESSES at L.R.A.M. and A.R.C.M.
2. Durham "First" Mus. Bac. next March.
NUMEROUS SUCCESSES at Mus. Bac. and Mus. Doc.

Full Preparation may now be commenced for

L.R.A.M. (April, 1925).

A. and F.R.C.O. (July, 1925).

A.R.C.M. (April, 1925).

Durham 1st and Final Mus. Bac. (Sept., 1925).

PRACTICAL WORK—PERSONAL LESSONS IN LONDON AND BRISTOL.
NUMEROUS SUCCESSES.

Candidates who are entering for the first time, and also those who have previously failed to pass any examination, should communicate with

Telephone: Bristol 3033.

DR. NORMAN SPRANKLING,
46, CLARENDON ROAD, REDLAND, BRISTOL.

WESTMINSTER CATHEDRAL.

ORGAN RECITALS

THURSDAYS, AT 6.30 P.M.

RECITALISTS FOR DECEMBER, 1924.

DECEMBER 4th. JOHN CONNELL, F.R.C.O.

DECEMBER 11th. W. H. HARRIS, Mus. Doc.

DECEMBER 18th. G. D. CUNNINGHAM, F.R.A.M., F.R.C.O.

SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE COURSES

1. L.R.A.M. and A.R.C.M. Paper work.
  2. L.T.C.L. and A.T.C.L. Paper work.
  3. Courses in Rudiments, Harmony, Form, &c., for T.C.L. and Associated Board Candidates.
  4. Ear Training. A Practical Course for all Candidates preparing for Aural Tests. Complete in Ten Lessons.
- Model workings to all questions. Highest recommendations. Particulars on application.

CYRIL S. CHRISTOPHER,

c/o W. H. Priestley &amp; Sons, Colmore Row, Birmingham.

The Training of Teachers of Singing.

LECTURE-LESSONS IN CLASS MONTHLY IN LONDON.
Individual Training Course for L.R.A.M. and A.R.C.M. as Teachers or Performers in Singing.

MR. W. LEE WEBSTER, L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M.
(Teaching Singing),
INGLESIDE, PARK ROAD, NOTTINGHAM.

MR. ALBERT GARCIA

LESSONS IN VOICE PRODUCTION AND SINGING
Special Coaching in Opera, Oratorio, and for Recitals.
Pupils prepared for A.R.C.M. and L.R.A.M. Exams.

"A number of Mr. Albert Garcia's pupils sang excellently at the concert which they gave on Wednesday evening. It was particularly pleasant to hear voices so well placed and well poised, smooth and even in tone from the lowest to the highest notes, showing a control which too few learn to exercise."—Daily Telegraph.

"One takes it that a concert by pupils fulfils its object if it demonstrates—as the one given at Wigmore Hall by singers studying with Mr. Albert Garcia certainly did—the excellence of that master's method."—Eva.

"Mr. Garcia—himself a fine artist and the inheritor of a great tradition and a great name—has some most promising pupils, and such singers as Miss Rosa Burn and Mr. Frederick Lippold show in what an excellent school they have been trained."—Daily Telegraph.

For Auditions, Appointments, &c., write,
59, Queen's Road, St. John's Wood, N.W.8.
(Hampstead 4597.)

BEDFORDSHIRE EISTEDDFOD Competitive Musical Festival.

MARCH 2nd to MARCH 13th, 1925.

COMPETITIONS IN

VOCAL AND INSTRUMENTAL SOLOS, DUETS, ETC.

CHOIRS AND ORCHESTRAS,

ELOCUTION, DRAMATIC SCENES,

AND COUNTRY DANCES.

CLASSES OPEN TO UNITED KINGDOM.

Official Syllabus containing full particulars, post free, 6d.

Director of Music: H. A. HARDING, Esq., Mus. Doc.

Hon. Secretary: Capt. D. V. GEDGE, M.B.E.,

109, High Street, Bedford.

ORGAN RECITALS.

CHRIST CHURCH, Westminster Bridge Road
(N. Lambeth Station, Bakerloo).

TUESDAY EVENINGS, 8.15.

DECEMBER 2nd. DR. DARKE.

DECEMBER 5th. WILLIAM WOLSTENHOLME.

DECEMBER 16th. FRANCIS W. SUTTON.

(Four-Manual by Willis.)

MR. CHARLES TREE

LECTURES ON THE ART OF "BEL CANTO."

Newcastle Journal, Nov. 10, 1924.—"A huge audience (about 2,000). He indicated unmistakably that although he has been singing publicly for thirty-five years, he is still one of Britain's foremost baritones. He delighted the audience."

Halifax Courier, Nov. 3, 1924.—"The hall was crowded to hear the famous baritone. He is an accomplished lecturer—remarkably breezy, yet polished style, with the gift of lucidity and clarity. Many local choirs were present. His remarks were not merely theoretical ideas—he gave practical illustration by singing songs of various types."

Leeds, Nov. 5, 1924.—"The points he made in placement, nasal resonance, vocal colour, breathing, enunciation, &c., were of great interest."—Yorkshire Post.

"HOW TO ACQUIRE EASE OF VOICE-PRODUCTION" AND ITS COMPANION, "BEL CANTO" EXERCISES, 5/2 and 3/7 post free.
(If difficult to obtain, write direct.)

Concerts, &amp;c., address, Bolton Mansions Hotel, S.W.5. Kensington 916.

DR. NORMAN SPRANKLING.

See Page 1061.

A VOICE is—

1. MENTAL APPRECIATION OF TONE.
2. MUSCULAR EFFORT.

A good Teacher will help you with the first.

The Saxby Vocal Calisthenic Course will work wonders with the second.

The Course trains every little muscle used in singing and speaking.

RESULT: Power, Resonance, Brilliance, Control, in fact all the qualities of a GREAT VOICE.

T. CHURCH SAXBY,

Studio: 3A, SEVEIRG BUILDINGS, LEWES.

LONDON

Musical Competition Festival.

President: H.H. PRINCESS HELENA VICTORIA.

Chairman: ERNEST READ, Esq., F.R.A.M., F.R.C.O.

TWENTIETH ANNUAL FESTIVAL,

CENTRAL HALL, WESTMINSTER,

MARCH 17th to 21st, and 23rd to 28th, 1925.

Choral, Vocal, and Instrumental Classes, many Open Events.

H.R.H. Princess Mary's Standard, H.H. Princess Helena Victoria's Shield, Daily Telegraph Shield, Dawnay Shield,
Huntley Shield, Musicians' Company Shield, Kimber Shield, Lancaster Shield and Cup, Federation of British Music Industries Cup.

AN EIGHTY-GUINEA CHAPPELL PIANOFORTE.

Two Trinity College Exhibitions, Gold and Silver Medals, £10 for Composition (Madrigal). Many new Subjects and Classes.

ADJUDICATORS:

J. PERCY BAKER, MRS. ACTON BOND, E. T. COOK,
HAROLD CRAXTON, B. J. DALE, SPENCER DYKE,
ERNEST FOWLES, HERBERT FRYER, HARVEY GRACE,
MRS. EDITH HANDS, JULIUS HARRISON,
WELTON HICKIN, DR. E. F. HORNER, DR. MARCHANT,
DAN PRICE, ERNEST READ, W. H. REED,
DR. WALKER ROBSON, A. R. SAUNDERS, DR. S. SCOTT,
GEOFFREY SHAW, DR. F. G. SHINN, REV. H. T. SPENCER, MARCUS THOMSON, DR. J. WARRINER, and Miss MARY WILSON.

Subject to future confirmation, Prizes distributed by

H.H. PRINCESS HELENA VICTORIA, VISCOUNTESS TERRINGTON, DAME CLARA BUTT,
and MRS. ERNEST READ.

Syllabus on application to the Hon. Secretary,

T. LESTER JONES, 130, Belgrave Road, Wanstead, London, E.11.

LEARN TO MEMORISE THIS WINTER

Turn the cold dark weather to your advantage by taking the Mackinnon Musical Memory Course, and acquiring a thoroughly reliable musical memory.

You can take the Course without disturbing your regular work. It requires only 15-20 minutes practice daily. There is no drudgery of any kind.

The thorough grasp and understanding of music given by the Mackinnon System of Memory Training banishes nervousness and fear of breakdown. Technique is improved. A new sense of freedom results in full artistic self-expression.

If you are not satisfied with your memorising powers—if you feel nervous when playing in public, the Mackinnon Musical Memory Course can enable you to gain certainty and success. Hundreds of apparently hopeless cases have conquered all their memorising difficulties through this course. You can do the same.

Send Coupon below for free booklet, to-day.

MACKINNON'S MUSICAL MEMORY COURSE

EMPIRE HOUSE, 175 PICCADILLY, W.1.

IN SIX POSTAL LESSONS - FEE, £3:3:0

GUARANTEE.

You risk nothing in taking the Course, for under this guarantee your money is returned if you fail to make immediate progress.

If within four weeks of the receipt of the first lesson, and before the receipt of the second, any student should find that no progress has been made as a result of taking the course, Miss Mackinnon will unconditionally refund all fees received from such student.

Read what the Mackinnon Memory Course has done for other musicians:

"I cannot speak too highly of your course which I have recommended to others who like myself had given up all hope of memorising music. Not only has it taught me to memorise everything including fugue, but it has taught me how to work,—and my technical powers have developed in a most gratifying way. I send warmest thanks."

"Before taking Miss Mackinnon's Course I found it impossible to learn anything from memory and was never able to play to any stranger. Now, thanks to her most helpful and delightful lessons, I am able to memorise a piece in a day or two, and can play on any piano and to any public."

You can be equally successful.

..... POST THIS COUPON TO-DAY FOR FREE BOOKLET .....

MISS LILIAS MACKINNON, Empire House, 175, Piccadilly, W.1.

Please send me, free, and post free, your booklet on "MEMORY TRAINING."

Name (Mr., Mrs., or Miss) .....

Address .....

PROFESSIONAL NOTICES.

MISS LYDIA JOHN

(A.R.A.M., L.R.A.M.), CONTRALTO.

Concerts, Oratorios, Organ Recitals, &c.
 Recital-Lectures of Folk-Songs, Elizabethan Songs, &c.
 Pupils received for Voice-Production and Singing.
 Prepared for L.R.A.M., Associated Board, &c.

15, Albion Road, London, N.W.6. Tel.: Hampstead, N.W.6.

NOTICE OF REMOVAL.

MR. ALBERT EDWARDS

ALTO.

(Late Deputy Westminster Abbey and St. Paul's Cathedral).
 66, Fonthill Road, Hove. Telephone: Hove 8951.

HORACE CURTIS

TENOR.

CONCERT, ORATORIO, MASS, Etc.
 99, Bedford Hill, Balham, S.W.12.

EDWARD FIFER (TENOR).

"Messiah," Stainer's "Crucifixion," &c.
 Concerts.

"Oakleigh," Taylor Road, Wallington, Surrey.

HAROLD KNOWLTON

TENOR

St. Paul's Cathedral, E.C. 4.
 1, Hatherley Gardens, Crouch End, N. 8.

VERNON HARRISS,

L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., Gold Medallist. BASS.
 Oratorio, Concerts, Vocal Coach and Adjudicator.
 Senior Music Master, Downside School, near Bath.

ARTHUR LEES

BASS.

Concerts, Recitals, Masonics, Oratorios, &c.
 58, Marmion Road, Hove, Sussex.

EDMUND TELFER (BARITONE)

Verdi's "Requiem," Barrow-in-Furness, Dec. 11th.
 "Elijah," Mansfield, Dec. 15th.

For vacant dates, and Experts' criticisms,
 Apply, Ibbs & Tillett, 124, Wigmore Street, London, W.1.

MR. HERBERT TRACEY

BASS.

8, Cavendish Mansions, E.5. London Wall 4033.

MISS THELMA DANDRIDGE (A.R.C.M.),

'CELLIST.

Concerts, Pupils, &c., apply to "Inversnaid," Chinbrook Road,
 Grove Park, S.E.12. (Phone: Lee Green 1707.)

TO CONCERT DIRECTORS.

ARTHUR MANGELSDORFF

(British).

The well-known Pianist is arranging a Recital Tour for the coming season.

Special terms can be quoted for a Recital or part programme if immediate application is made.

Managers of suitable Concert-Halls also please send terms for hiring.

Please address all communications to
 ARTHUR ELLARSHAW, 497, Coventry Road, Birmingham.

H. FORSTER RICHARDSON

R.C.M. (Leipzig), A.R.C.M., L.R.A.M.

(Pupil of Tobias Matthay, Plunket Greene, Gregory Hast),
 gives lessons in Pianoforte Playing, Voice-Production and Singing.

Tuition on the most modern technical principles.

Coaching for Concert Work and Examinations.

Wigmore Hall Studios, Wigmore Street, W.1., and 390, Upper Richmond Road, East Sheen, S.W.14.

MR. FRANK THISTLETON

(Author of "The Art of Violin Playing" and "Modern Violin Technique") whose Recitals have received the patronage of Her Majesty Queen Alexandra, has vacancies for one or two violin pupils. Special terms to professionals.

"Mr. Frank Thistleton is an expert violin player and teacher."—
Daily Telegraph, March 1, 1924.

For particulars write,
 MUSIC STUDIO, 72, HIGH STREET, BAKER STREET, W.1.

DR. F. H. WOOD

(Organist of Blackpool Parish Church),

COACHES FOR UNIVERSITY DEGREES.

Students' recent Successes include:

Durham Mus. D. (1923), Ex. and Final, both in the same year and at the first attempt. Mus. B. Ex. (1924) Also other Universities,
 Mus. D. (1922); Mus. B. (1923) and 1924 (2).

252, HORNBURY ROAD, BLACKPOOL.

Windsor Castle Royal Harmonists.

F. G. SMITH (Alto), MALCOLM BOYLE (Tenor),
 EATON COOTER (Baritone), L. STANTON (Bass).

Of St. George's Chapel and H.M. Private Chapel, Windsor Castle.
 London, Provincial, and B.B.C. (2 LO) Concerts.

Specimen Programmes of Old English, Period, or Popular Music.

Bookings and Terms on request to

MR. MALCOLM BOYLE.

'Phone: Windsor 166. 22, The Cloisters, Windsor Castle.

MISS MARGARET COUPE, L.R.A.M.,

ACCOMPANIST. Recommended by Mr. Welton Hickin, F.R.A.M.
 Address: 18, Upper Gloucester Place, N.W.1.

THE TRAINING OF TEACHERS.

CORRESPONDENCE COURSES IN

VOICE-PRODUCTION, covering the whole subject.
 FORM AND TEACHING, TOUCH, ACCOMPANIMENT,
 MUSICAL APPRECIATION, AND AURAL TRAINING.
 Nearly 1,000 Successes at L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., &c.

MR. R. J. PITCHER, Mus. Bac., F.R.C.O., A.R.C.M.
 (Double Dip. Singing and Piano), L.R.A.M., Class A, Performer
 and Teacher.

Prof. Singing G.S.M., 1905-1915. Special Lect. on Mus. Appreciation
 to L.C.C.

"Recit. and its Rendering," 1s. 6d. "Vade Mecum for Singers," 6d.
 Send for prospectus, 21, Boundary Road, N.W.8.

'Phone: 1715 Maida Vale.

MUSICAL REVISER TO MESSRS. NOVELLO FOR THIRTY-NINE YEARS.

COMPOSERS' MSS.

REVISED AND PREPARED FOR PRINTING

H. ELLIOT BUTTON, "Harewood," Ardwick Road, N.W.2.

* * * The late Sir HUBERT PARRY and Sir FREDERICK BRIDGE
 permitted their names to appear, along with those of the following composers to whom reference is kindly permitted:—Sir EDWARD ELGAR, O.M.; Sir HENRY WALFORD DAVIES, Mus. Doc.

DR. ALLISON instructed by Post Candidates who OBTAINED DEGREES OF MUS. B. and Mus. D. at Oxford,
 Cambridge, Dublin, London, and Durham Universities, Diplomas of
 L.L.C.M. (April, 1924), L.R.A.M., F.R.C.O., L. Mus. L.C.M.,
 A.R.C.M., Gold Medals, Silver Medals, Scholarships, Prizes, Certificates, and valuable professional appointments. Dr. Allison is willing to teach those who neither require nor desire to pass examinations.
 Harmony, Counterpoint, Orchestration, and Analysis of Compositions
 by Post, to correspondents anywhere. Personal instruction in Theory, Singing, and Piano. 24, Park Range, Victoria Park, Manchester.

REVISION OF MUSICAL COMPOSITIONS.

Dr. Horton Allison, 24, Park Range, Victoria Park, Manchester.

MR. J. PERCY BAKER, Mus. B., Dunelm.,
 F.R.A.M., gives Postal Tuition and prepares for Examinations.

Personal Lessons (Pianoforte and Theory), at 14, Hanover Square, W.1.
 Address, 12, Longley Road, Tooting Graveney, S.W.17.

CAPTAIN PERCY BAKER, M.C., F.R.C.O.,
 L. Mus. T.C.L. (Author of "Compend of Musical Knowledge,"
 "Studies in History and Form," &c.). Specialist in Tuition by post for T.C.L. and R.C.O. Essay Models, Sight-Reading Courses.

Study Aids, 9d. Studies in Modulation, 3s.
 Send for interesting Pamphlets on Methods.

HAZELDENE, TEWKESBURY.

MISS J. BLAKE, A.R.A.M., A.R.C.M. (Regd.
 Teacher of Singing), prepares pupils L.R.A.M. and A.R.C.M.

Exams., as Teacher or Performer. Highest recommendations.—
 Studio, 139, New Bond Street, W.1.

L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M. SPECIAL COACHING by
 ARTHUR ELLARSHAW, L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M. Pianist.

Paper-work Postal. Address, 497, Coventry Road, Birmingham.

DR. A. C. PHILLIPS EMBLING, Mus. Doc.,
 Dunelm. (1921), Mus. Bac., Oxon., F.R.C.O. Lessons by post
 for Diplomas and Degrees. 64, Wokingham Road, Reading.

FREDERICK GREEN, L.R.A.M., Etc. Voice
 Specialist, Vocal Coach, and Adjudicator. Preparation for
 L.R.A.M. c/o Rushworth & Dreaper, 11, Islington, Liverpool.

SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE COURSES:—

- (1.) L.R.A.M. Paper Work.
- (2.) A.R.C.M. Paper Work.
- (3.) Interesting Courses of Study in Rudiments, Harmony, Form, &c.

L.R.A.M. Exams. 1910-24 ... 250 Correspondence Pupils successful.
A.R.C.M. Exams. 1914-24 ... 69 " " "

MR. E. H. BIBBY, Mus. Bac., L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M.,
Waterloo Buildings, Piccadilly, Manchester.

In response to many requests, Mr. BIBBY begs to announce that he has prepared the following additional CORRESPONDENCE COURSES:

- (1.) The "Mus. Bac." Degree.
- (2.) A.R.C.O. and F.R.C.O. Paper Work.
- (3.) A.T.C.L. and L.T.C.L. Paper Work.
- (4.) The Associated Board Examinations in Rudiments, Harmony, and Counterpoint.

(Address as above.)

DR. CUTHBERT HARRIS, Mus. Doc., Dunelm.,
F.R.C.O. SPECIALIST IN CORRESPONDENCE
TUITION. 405 Successes in Mus. D., Mus. B., F.R.C.O., and
A.R.C.O., &c. 58, Avondale Road, Gorleston-on-Sea.

DR. HARRIS REVISES and PREPARES MSS.
FOR PUBLICATION. Accompaniments to Songs written.

MISS H. HEALE COACHES for all EXAM-
INATIONS IN MUSIC (at private residence or at West-End Studio), in Pianoforte, Harmony, Counterpoint, Fugue, Form,
Orchestration, "Teaching," Modulation, Transposition, &c. For
Terms, &c., apply, Dunraven House, 41, Albert Bridge Road, S.W.11.

DR. CHASTEY HECTOR, D. Mus. Oxon., 1922,
L.R.A.M., instructs Candidates, personally or by post, for Degrees and Diplomas in Music. "The Downs," Old Shoreham Road, Hove, Sussex.

HERBERT HODGE, F.R.C.O., A.R.C.M.,
Organist and Choirmaster, St. Nicholas Cole Abbey, Queen
Victoria Street, London, has, since 1908, made a speciality of coaching Candidates for the Organ Playing Examinations of the Royal College of Organists, and can arrange a private course of instruction
(or single lessons) to organists visiting London, at St. Nicholas
Cole Abbey. Many recent F.R.C.O. and A.R.C.O. successes.
5, Streatham Place, S.W.2. Telephone: Streatham 2195.

DR. A. G. IGGULDEN, Mus. Doc. Dunelm., F.R.C.O.,
SPECIALIST IN CORRESPONDENCE COACHING.
Latest Successes: Durham, Sept., 1924—Both Mus. Doc. passes and 3 out of the 5 Final Mus. Bac. passes. Also 2 in 1st Mus. Bac., 2 Mus. Doc., and 5 Mus. Bac. Exercises, all in 1924, after prelim. course in composition. Over 160 Successes at Durham alone. The Durdans, Reigate.

DR. F. J. KARN (Mus. Bac. Cantab.; Mus. Doc.
Toronto) continues to give lessons in Harmony and other
Theoretical subjects, and prepares for all Musical Examinations.
Compositions revised and Analyses written. Candidates prepared by
Dr. Karn have gained the Mus. Bac. and Mus. Doc. degrees at the Universities and diplomas from the Musical Colleges.
Address: 106, Haverstock Hill, London, N.W.3.

DR. KNOWLES (Manchester 1919, Durham 1920)
specialises in preparing candidates by post for the Paper-work of all examinations in music. Solutions, with methods of working,
Address, 45, Churchgate, Bolton, Lancs.

MADAME LARKCOM, F.R.A.M., Prof. Singing,
R. A. Music. Private Lessons in Singing at the Wigmore
Hall Studios, 40, Wigmore Street, W.1.

J. H. MAKINSON, F.R.C.O., A.R.C.M., A.T.C.L.
Correspondence Tuition in Paper Work (T.C.L. and other Diplomas). Terms moderate. Latest success, A.T.C.L., July, 1924.
Kent House, Lake Road, Ambleside.

DR. ORLANDO A. MANSFIELD, Mus. Doc.,
University of Toronto; Mus. Doc., Trinity University, Toronto;
F.R.C.O.; F.A.G.O., &c. 15, Sydenham Villas Road, Cheltenham.
Correspondence Lessons. Revision of MSS. Scoring, editing, and arranging. Examination pieces analysed and annotated.

MISS F. HELENA MARKS, Author of "The Sonata: Its Form and Meaning," prepares for L.R.A.M.,
A.R.C.M., and all other examinations, Pianoforte, Harmony, "Form
and Teaching," &c. Personal or Correspondence Lessons in all Paper-Work subjects, including those for L.R.A.M., "Aural Training
and Sight-Singing," and A.R.C.M. in "The Teaching of Musical Appreciation," &c. Pupils received and visited for the Pianoforte.
Many recent successes L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., &c.
10, Matheson Road, London, W.14.

DR. H. H. L. MIDDLETON, Mus. Doc., F.R.C.O.,
L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M. Twenty-five years' experience in Private
Tuition and Coaching for Degrees. More than 800 of Dr. Middleton's Pupils have obtained Degrees at the Universities, R.A.M., R.C.M.,
and R.C.O. Address, 60, Berners Street, W.1.

W. J. FREDERICK PUGH, L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M.,
prepares for L.R.A.M. (Aural Culture and Voice Culture Diplomas), A.R.C.M. (Appreciation Diploma). Recent Successes.
34, Wilmington Avenue, Chiswick, W.4.

DR. TAYLOR'S POSTAL PUPILS HAVE passed Mus. Bac. 1st and final. A.R.C.O.; L.R.A.M.;
A.T.C.L. Pupil gained the Stillie Bursary at Glasgow for Counterpoint. Latest success, A.R.C.O. for 1924. Portland
Place, Lancaster.

W. G. WEBBER, F.R.C.O. Recitalist, &c.
Preparation for Exams. Organ lessons given on new four-manual Willis. Address, Christ Church, Westminster Bridge Road,
London, S.E.1.

DR. PERCY WOOD, Mus. Doc. Oxon., F.R.C.O.
SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE COURSES:
(1) Elementary Harmony and Counterpoint.
(2) F.R.C.O. and A.R.C.O.
(3) L.R.A.M. and A.R.C.M.
(4) Mus. Bac. Degree.

Several recent Mus. B. successes at Durham.

R.C.O. EXAMINER says: "Your system is undoubtedly an excellent one."

SUCCESS GUARANTEED—given any pupils with the requisite musical ability for the examination in view.

R.C.O. SUCCESSES IN PAPER WORK:

6 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1914.	11 A.R.C.O., Jan. 1914.
6 F.R.C.O., July, 1914.	12 A.R.C.O., July, 1914.
4 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1915.	5 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1915.
5 F.R.C.O., July, 1915.	9 A.R.C.O., July, 1915.
2 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1916.	3 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1916.
3 F.R.C.O., July, 1916.	5 A.R.C.O., July, 1916.
2 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1917.	2 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1917.
3 F.R.C.O., July, 1917.	4 A.R.C.O., July, 1917.
2 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1918.	2 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1918.
4 F.R.C.O., July, 1918.	2 A.R.C.O., July, 1918.
1 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1919.	3 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1919.
3 F.R.C.O., July, 1919.	3 A.R.C.O., July, 1919.
4 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1920.	10 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1920.
3 F.R.C.O., July, 1920.	6 A.R.C.O., July, 1920.
3 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1921.	7 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1921.
6 F.R.C.O., July, 1921.	8 A.R.C.O., July, 1921.
5 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1922.	5 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1922.
4 F.R.C.O., July, 1922.	5 A.R.C.O., July, 1922.
8 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1923.	6 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1923.
7 F.R.C.O., July, 1923.	10 A.R.C.O., July, 1923.
7 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1924.	9 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1924.
3 F.R.C.O., July, 1924.	10 A.R.C.O., July, 1924.

"Tralee," Warwick Road, Cliftonville, Margate.

MUSICAL DIRECTOR, well-known, disengaged shortly, requires POST. Excellent musician. Large library.
Highest references. Apply, "E. E." c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

HENRY M. BYRON, MANAGING DIRECTOR.
CONCERT, RECITAL, and STAGE. Established 1890.
Address: 75, Church Road, Leyton, London, E.10.

EASTBOURNE.

DOWNSMOADE BOARDING SCHOOL FOR BOYS.
Modern education with special musical education if desired. Prospectus on application to the Headmaster, F. E. Wilson, F.R.C.O., L.R.A.M.

SOLO and CHORUS BOYS supplied (CITY OF LONDON CHOIR COLLEGE). Apply to Francis Sutton,
F.R.C.O., St. Stephen's Walbrook, E.C.4.

ALTO, with considerable Choir and Male-Voice Quartet experience, is desirous of obtaining temporary or permanent engagement. Excellent testimonials. "Masonic," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

BASS WANTED, St. Paul's, Camden Sq., N.W.
Communicant. £16. Musical Services. Write, "A.R.C.O.," 157, Archway Road, N.6.

ST. MICHAEL'S, CHESTER SQUARE, W.

There are VACANCIES in the Choir for voluntary Bases. Application, by letter only, to Reginald Goss Custard, at the above Church.

R.C.O. EXAMINATIONS.

SINGLE LESSONS (covering all the requirements) and PRACTICE on facsimile R.C.O. instrument. Pieces registered Many recent successes in F.R.C.O. and A.R.C.O.

ALLAN BROWN, F.R.C.O., 298, High Road, Balham, S.W.17

CHRISTMAS ORATORIO (Bach). Parts I., II., and IV., with full Orchestra and Organ, at ST. ANNE'S, SOHO, on SATURDAYS, Dec. 13, 20, and Jan. 3, at 3.30 p.m. For tickets send stamped addressed envelope to Rector, 28, Soho Square, W.1. (North and South Galleries are Free and unappropriated.)

YOUNG LADY WANTED to lead singing at a Small Service, Saturday afternoons. Sankey's Hymns. 15s. quarter. 104, Tollington Park, N.4.

ORGANIST and CHOIRMASTER WANTED for St. Peter's Parish, Athlone. Salary, £60. There is a good opening for tuitions and schools. Last two vacancies on promotion. Apply, Rev. J. F. Anderson, St. Peter's, Athlone.

ORGANIST and CHOIRMASTER WANTED for Nonconformist Church in South West London district. Applicants must be fully competent in both capacities. Apply by letter, enclosing any references, and stating amount of honorarium, to Secretary, 57, Calbourne Road, Balham, S.W.12.

ORGANIST-CHOIRMASTER REQUIRES APPOINTMENT. Good Choir-Trainer. Anglican Music. Recitalist. Scope for teaching in Country Town. Good testimonials and references. Denny, 71, Dooey, Stafford.

ORGANIST, having relinquished appointment, requires practice on good mechanically blown instrument in City. Would give occasional recitals or deputise. Able and experienced. Reply, "H.", 38, Cranbourne Road, Muswell Hill, N.10.

ORGANIST and CHOIRMASTER of great experience, F.R.C.O., wishes post where the best Plain-song is principally sung, and where the Choral Eucharist is the chief service. Loyal and educated Churchman, specialising in Choir-training and accompaniment. Write, No. 396, Keith & Co., Advertising Agents, Edinburgh.

EXPERIENCED ORGANIST-CHOIRMASTER, A.R.C.O., &c., desires appointment. Excellent Testimonials. Mr. N. A. Sayers, 4, Grosvenor Avenue, East Sheen, S.W.14.

MR. HERBERT HODGE will give an Organ Recital (1.837th), at St. Nicholas Cole Abbey, on December 2, and every Tuesday at 1 p.m.

REQUIRED, by old-established firm in North of England, an experienced Male Sheet-Music Assistant as first sales. Good position assured right man who has a thorough knowledge of the catalogues. Apply, Box No. 20, c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

WANTED, SHEET-MUSIC ASSISTANT to take control. Applications entertained only from men of long experience of the Sheet-Music business. Age 35-40 years. Permanent and comfortable berth. Liberal salary and commission. Particulars to Box No. 30, c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

ASSISTANT WANTED (for abroad), Sheet Music and Small Goods (Single Gentleman). Stock keeper with good knowledge of Catalogues. Pianist not necessary. Write stating age and experience. Apply, "H. S. C.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

ORGANS (New and Second-hand) for SALE.—Electric and pneumatic action up-to-date. Built or reconstructed. Bedwell & Son, The Cambridge Organ Works, Cambridge.

CHURCH ORGAN STANDARDISED.—Two Manuals, Pneumatic Pedals, various sizes; specially built. Five to fifteen stops. Introduced to meet the requirements of the times at minimum of cost. W. E. Richardson & Sons, Central Organ Works, Manchester, S.W.

FOR SALE.—Mason & Hamlin Two-Manual REED ORGAN. Excellent condition, recently completely overhauled. Write, Bomford, Elmshurst, Bromsgrove.

CHURCH ORGAN for SALE. Two Manuals, Pedals, radiating and concave. 18 Stops, 3 Couplers, 2 Double-acting Composition Pedals, Tremulant. Excellent full Swell and general tone. Apply, T. Hatley, 46, Oxford Avenue, South Shields.

ORGAN (Bell), 2 Manuals, R.C.O. Pedals. What offers? Parkins, 85, Belmont Hill, S.E.13.

ESTEY ORGAN FOR SALE.—14 Stops; sweet tone; excellent condition. Hand or foot blown. Handsome case. Suitable for small Chapel or Hall. £30. S. E. Brown, Victoria Nurseries, Horley, Surrey.

FOUR-MANUAL Reed ORGAN. 44 Stops. Fine workmanship. Stamp for reply. 37, Richmond Terrace, Darwen.

SPECIAL BARGAINS.—Mustel Organ, 24 Stops; and Apollo, two Manuals and Pedals. Both like new. Also Collard Boudoir Grand. All near London. "M. A. C.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

TWO-MANUAL ORGAN by Mustel, Paris. 25 Stops. Also One-manual, Mustel, low pitch. Bargains. Also Two Organs by Trayser & Alexandre, Paris. 22 Stops. Two Manuals. What offers? "J. G.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour St., W.1.

MUSTEL ORGAN for SALE or HIRE. Malkin, 11, Ashlake Road, S.W.16.

FOR SALE.—ORGAN PEDALS (pneumatic) for pianoforte practice. 2½ Octaves, in first-class condition. Cost £12 10s., for quick sale take £3. Culbard, 14, Piershill Place, Edinburgh.

GRAMOPHONE (H.M.V.); mahogany cabinet; auto stopper. Cost £45. Nearly new. Accept offer. 8, Granville Mansions, Shepherd's Bush Green.

THE OWNER OF BRITISH PATENT, No. 175078, for "Improvements in and relating to Grand Pianos," desires to license or sell the patent rights in Great Britain. Address, E. P. Alexander & Son, 306, High Holborn, London, W.C.1.

MUSIC COPIED, neatly and accurately. Trans-position, &c. Frank White, 6, The Crescent, Spalding, Lincs.

MUSIC COPIED neatly and accurately. Transposition, Band-Parts, &c. Gordon Jacob, A.R.C.M., 1, Homefield Road, S.W.19.

MUSIC COPIED, neat work, Transposition and Duplicating. E.W. Cartwright, 17, Belvedere Rd., Bournemouth.

MUSIC COMPOSERS and LYRIC WRITERS. The Cosmos Publishing Co. are open to consider Songs, &c., with a view to publication. Send MSS. with stamp for reply, to Glenholme, The Common, Hessele.

THE UNKNOWN TRUTH ABOUT THE VOICE AND ITS DEVELOPMENT. By E. DAVIDSON PALMER, Mus. Bac., Oxon. Showing the prevailing Error in the Training of Men's Voices, and the primary cause of Voice-Failure in Singers and Public Speakers. Post free, 1s. (Postal Order). Address: 11, Grazebrook Road, Stoke Newington, N.16.

BARITONES and BASSES should buy new Setting of "THE ERL KING" (Oakley). Compass C to E flat (F optional). Also new Song, "BEAUTY'S DAUGHTER" (Oakley). Compass B♭ to E♭. Price 2s. each. Weekes & Co., 14, Hanover St., W.1.

BOOKS on Theory, Singing, Violin, Organ, Full Scores. List free. Albert Ingham, Park Road, Dungannon, Tyrone.

MOLLENHAUER FLUTES AND PICCOLOS

MESSRS. J. MOLLENHAUER & SONS possess a hundred years' world-wide reputation as makers of first-class Wood-Wind Instruments. Their Flutes and Piccolos are unrivalled in purity of tone, pleasing intonation, and solidity of mechanism, and are consequently used by the leading artists in every land.

Catalogue from—

FAUPEL BROTHERS,

4 & 5, OLD CHANGE, CHEAPSIDE, LONDON, E.C.4.
Telephone: City 5693.

Far Eastern inquiries to be addressed to our Hong-Kong office, P.O. Box 631, Hong-Kong.

THE TECHNIQUER FOR STRETCH, STRENGTH, AND SUPPLENESS.

CARL WEBER, the renowned teacher says:

"After a trial, I find 'The Techniquer' an admirable means of lessening the drudgery of a pianist's daily gymnastics. The exercises have the effect of strengthening the fingers to a remarkable degree, the result being that confidence and power are greatly increased while effort is reduced and time saved. I recommend your excellent invention wherever I can, and with every confidence."

"Hand Development," with numerous photos, 1s. 6d.

Send for full particulars, &c.—

Miss F. J. FITCH, A.R.C.M., A.R.C.O. (Sec.),

21, Boundary Road, N.W.8.

'Phone: Maida Vale 1715.

STEINWAY

MUSIC LOVERS
CAN OBTAIN
PERFECT RESULTS
ONLY FROM THE PERFECT INSTRUMENT
THE STEINWAY.

1 & 2, GEORGE STREET, CONDUIT STREET,
LONDON, W.1.

BECHSTEIN PIANOS

THE BECHSTEIN PIANO needs little recommendation to cultured tastes. Its beautiful tone and incomparable touch—qualities which have gained for it the esteem of every music-lover, and have set a standard to the world—are as exquisite and as characteristic as ever.

Write or call for Catalogue.

126, NEW BOND STREET,
LONDON, W.1.
TELEPHONE: MAYFAIR 2653.

PIANOS

GRAND and UPRIGHT

By High Grade Makers.

NEW AND SECOND-HAND FOR SALE OR HIRE PURCHASE.

CHAS. STILES & CO.
74-76, SOUTHAMPTON ROW
LONDON, W.C.1.

Phone: MUSEUM 439.

WIGMORE HALL STUDIOS.—These splendidly appointed Studios are the recognised centre of the best musical activities in London. Forty-five rooms. Grand Piano in every room. Lift, telephone and every comfort and convenience. Low inclusive rates. One morning or afternoon per week the minimum time arranged for. Apply, 38, Wigmore Street, W.1.

PIANO PEDALS, with Octave Coupler

This wonderful invention supersedes all Piano Pedals, and is a Master Patent.

St. George's Hall, Liverpool,
9th April, 1921.

"The simplicity of the attachment, and the clever sixteen-feet, eight-feet, or both combined, 'OPTIONAL OCTAVE' contrivance, astonished me.

"I was delighted with the Pedal touch and with the variety in that touch, which your Attachment makes possible. It is very responsive to the movements of the feet, and is reliable."

HERBERT F. ELLINGFORD, Mus. Bac., Oxon., F.R.C.O.

Owing to increased output, we have reduced the price of our Popular Model to 14 guineas cash. Deferred payments if desired.

Write for Lists, Prices, and Clients' Opinions, and References to

THE MALKIN PATENT PEDAL CO., LTD.,
NEWCASTLE-UNDER-LYME.

London address: 11, Ashlake Road, Streatham, S.W.16.

BERLINER PIANOFORTE U. FLÜGELFABRIK "RHEINGOLD"

delivering Pianos and Grands to all countries.

ONE FIRST-CLASS "B" PIANO AT PRICES WHICH EXCLUDE COMPETITION.

Apply to BERLIN, O.27, BLUMENSTR. 70.

MUSIC REQUIRES COVERS TO KEEP IT NICE AND CLEAN.

Now is the time to prepare for the winter season.

Send P.O. for 1s. 3d. and obtain specimen covers for sheet and Choir Music.

R. H. MUDDIMAN,

77, Queen Victoria Street, London, E.C.4.

CHAMBER MUSIC.

Piano and Instrumental Sonatas, and Works for various combinations from Duets to Octets at exceptional prices. Send for list which incorporates the Classics and Important Moderns. Over 1,000 different numbers, including many Continental publications now unobtainable.

ALEXANIAN-CASALS WONDERFUL VIOLONCELLO METHOD.

The finest Tutor ever produced: for the beginner as also the advanced player. Descriptive leaflet on application.

PAUL JUON BOOKLET FREE:

"THE MAN AND HIS ART."

A large number of magnificent compositions for solos and practically every ensemble.

EDWARD WILLIAM ORGAN (Import and Export),
8, MAYFIELD ROAD, ACOCKS GREEN, BIRMINGHAM.

MUSICAL COMPOSITIONS REVISED.

LYRICS SET TO MUSIC, MELODIES HARMONIZED, MUSIC TRANSPOSED AND COPIED, BAND PARTS WRITTEN, MSS. PREPARED FOR PUBLICATION BY A MASTER HAND, ACCOMPANIMENTS OF DISTINCTION WRITTEN TO SONGS.

For terms, write, A. CARRINGTON BRIGGS,
Glennholme, The Common, Hessele, E. Yorks.

THE "DISCUS" ORGAN BLOWER

Is installed and giving complete satisfaction in over a thousand Cathedrals, Churches, Theatres, and Cinemas in Great Britain alone. This fact is eloquent, as well as convincing testimony, to its efficiency and durability. It is the most satisfactory method of mechanical organ blowing, and as the motive power may be oil, gas, or electric motor, the "Discus" is suitable for churches in any locality. The application of a "Discus" equipment to an organ ensures a steady supply of wind being instantly available, and enables the organist to obtain the best possible effects from the instrument. The "Discus" blower is the most scientifically designed machine for organ blowing purposes on the market. It is made of metal throughout, of the best quality combined with high grade workmanship. Being entirely free of complicated mechanism, a minimum of attention is required, and very many years of satisfactory services ensured. Efficiency and reliability are fully guaranteed with each "Discus" equipment we instal.

AS SUPPLIED TO WESTMINSTER ABBEY, YORK MINSTER, ETC., ETC.

WRITE FOR NEW BOOKLET.

*Sole Makers, Watkins & Watson, Organ Blowing Specialists for the past thirty years.
Designers and Manufacturers of all types of Hydraulic Engines, Gears, and Fittings for Organ Blowing.*

ESTIMATES SUBMITTED FREE.

WRITE TO

B. WATKINS AND WATSON
WHITE LION STREET, LONDON, N. 1.

Telegrams: "HYDISBLOW, ISLING, LONDON."

Telephone: NORTH 2039.

NEW TEXT-BOOKS

BY

ALBERT HAM, MUS. DOC., F.R.C.O.

OUTLINES OF MUSICAL FORM

WITH ANALYSES FROM

WELL-KNOWN CLASSICAL WORKS.

Price ... Five Shillings.

"In all respects this is an admirable little work, with no waste, no hiatus of a serious nature, handy in size, and with a practical scheme well carried through."

DR. C. W. PEARCE, in alluding to the above work, says:

"Quite the best I have ever seen, and I shall lose no opportunity for recommending it."

THE RUDIMENTS OF MUSIC AND ELEMENTARY HARMONY.

THIRD EDITION.

Price ... Five Shillings.

'As a result the Chapters on Time and Intervals will be found especially helpful. An Addendum gives some useful hints and suggestions on adding bar-lines and time- and key-signatures to a given melody. The section of Harmony takes the student as far as the dominant seventh, and includes chapters on modulation and the harmonization of simple melodies. Some useful test-papers are also provided. Dr. Ham's admirable little work may be cordially recommended.'—Musical Times.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

No. 63.—NOVELLO'S MUSIC PRIMERS.

BREATHING FOR VOICE-PRODUCTION

(Re-written and brought up to date).

PART I.

OF

EURHYTHM: THOUGHT IN ACTION

BY

H. H. HULBERT,

Capt. R.A.M.C., M.A. Oxford, M.R.C.S., L.R.C.P., &c.

Price ... Three Shillings.

Paper Boards, 4s.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

No. 99.—NOVELLO'S MUSIC PRIMERS.

PIANOFORTE ACCOMPANIMENT

BY

WELTON HICKIN

Fellow and Professor, Royal Academy of Music.

CONTENTS.

Technical Proficiency—Artistic Imagination—Ensemble—
Balance of Tone—Phrasing—Vital Notes—Pedalling—
Recitations with Music—Reading at Sight—Transposition—
Harmonization—Recitative—Modulation—Accompaniment
studied in detail, &c.

PRICE ... FOUR SHILLINGS.

Paper Boards, 5s.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

BECHSTEIN HOUSE

65, SOUTH MOLTON STREET. W.1.

NOW OPEN.

COMPLETE RANGE OF ALL MODELS NOW ON VIEW.

The BECHSTEIN Piano is pre-eminently the artist's favourite.

BUSONI.

Your pianos are, as regards beauty of tone and evenness, precision, and delicacy of touch, the acme of what can be produced in this art.

D'ALBERT.

It is superfluous to wish to add to the fame of the BECHSTEIN Piano, but it is a delight to me to write what I have for so many years felt and thought. I owe everything to these glorious Grands—my touch, my success; the very character of my touch and playing have been formed and acquired through them. Without them I could never have achieved such a position as a pianist. This is no exaggeration, but is my firm conviction. I cannot play upon any other instrument, for it is only upon a BECHSTEIN that I feel safe. They are for me the only possible medium for the perfect expression of my art, and I shall always use this make. Every pianist must marvel at their incomparable touch, their noble tone, their superb power and depth, as well as their delightful sweetness. I play everywhere on Mr. BECHSTEIN's instruments, because I consider them in every respect the most perfect pianos in the whole world.

GODOWSKY.

The beauty and infinite capacity for modulation of tone, as well as the extremely delightful touch, enable the artist to express what lies at the bottom of his soul. In a word, the BECHSTEIN instrument is, and will remain, the ideal of the artist.

JOSEF HOFMANN.

The BECHSTEIN piano possesses greater poetry of tone and resembles the human voice more than any other instrument. It is the realisation of my ideal of a piano, and the only one on which I can express all I feel.

DE PACHMANN.

There is a mysterious charm in the tone of BECHSTEIN's Pianos; as much power and fulness as unheard-of beauty and delicacy, coupled with a touch so capable of modulation for the player, that an artist could not desire a more ideal instrument. To me it is the height of joy to play on these instruments; then alone can I become one with the piano, and revel in pure music and poetry. The beauty of tone of a BECHSTEIN Piano I can only compare with that of a Stradivarius string quartet.

EMILE SAUER.

The technical perfection of the BECHSTEIN Piano, the evenness of register, beyond all praise, the voice-like tone which the touch allows to be produced in all imaginable shades of colouring, stamps this instrument as the most perfect that has been produced in the art of piano making. The basses are organ toned, the treble like bells.

RACHMANINOW.

The wonderful noble tone, its ideal pliability, together with the incomparable touch of the BECHSTEIN Grand, always inspire me to enthusiasm; on these instruments an artist must be able to reach the height of perfection.

EGON PETRI.

On the BECHSTEIN Piano alone the musician can readily express in resounding reality those glorious tone-pictures which his imagination conceives.

HAROLD BAUER.

Both as regards quality of tone and perfection of mechanism, the BECHSTEIN Piano has never been surpassed.

THEODOR LESCHETIZKY.

The BECHSTEIN Piano is of the same importance to the pianist as a Stradivarius is to the violinist. Nobility and power of tone, warmth and refinement in singing quality, perfection in mechanism, with the utmost capacity for expression and shading, are the great qualities of a BECHSTEIN Piano. The pianist finds in it an intimate friend for his home and a faithful and reliable ally in his battle for public renown.

A. BOROVSKY.

A BECHSTEIN Grand on the concert platform is not only a source of delight for the listener, but much more so for the player.

RICHARD STRAUSS.

I consider the BECHSTEIN instruments the most beautiful and the most refined in the world.

C. BECHSTEIN

PIANO CO., LTD.,

BECHSTEIN HOUSE: 65, SOUTH MOLTON STREET, W.1.

CHORALES

HARMONIZED BY

JOHANN SEBASTIAN BACH

COLLECTED AND ARRANGED IN MELODIC ORDER

BY

H. ELLIOT BUTTON.

This Collection of Chorales harmonized by Bach contains, it is believed, all those that he arranged for voices. It includes also an Index by means of which any Chorale can easily be found if the first few notes of the melody are known.

Price ... .. Cloth, Ten Shillings and Sixpence.

SOME PRESS OPINIONS.

DAILY TELEGRAPH.

"The task of making this noble collection has been undertaken by Mr. H. Elliot Button, who has made the volume particularly useful to organists and choirmasters by arranging the chorales in melodic order and providing an ingenious Melodic Index by means of which a particular Chorale may be found in a moment. Organists, indeed, may find themselves in clover by exploring the latest publications of this house."

BIRMINGHAM POST.

"The compiler of this volume is H. Elliot Button, who has made an ingenious musical index based on the first note of each melody. The system also allows of all the harmonizations of a melody being kept together, and the student of Bach will find this an extremely interesting volume."

DAILY MAIL.

"Mr. H. Elliot Button is a hard and conscientious worker on behalf of music. His research work is invaluable, and his latest work of compilation has resulted in the collection of 'Chorales Harmonized by Johann Sebastian Bach' which appears to be the first complete and comprehensive edition in one volume . . . . The Melodic Index which Mr. Button has introduced, in addition to the usual indices, shows remarkable ingenuity. By recourse to this unique invention no difficulty is experienced in immediately satisfying one's requirements . . . . There is evidence of great painstaking labour in this work, and apart from its value as a work of reference, the collection is redolent of melodic and harmonic wealth which will be found useful by pianists and organists for many and varied purposes."

YORKSHIRE POST.

"The chorales are most clearly printed on good paper, and the book is one that will commend itself to all church organists."

ABERDEEN PRESS AND JOURNAL.

"A complete and reliable collection of chorales harmonized by Bach has long been needed. It now appears in a handsome edition published by Novello. No longer need the student laboriously plough through the oratorios, the cantatas, and the motets in search of the various harmonizations of this or that chorale. He will find them all in Mr. Button's book, together with those chorales used by Bach in works no longer extant, but which have been accepted as authentic upon the evidence of Bach's greatest son . . . . The present volume is invaluable; to the student a real boon, and a source of endless pleasure."

SUNDAY MERCURY.

Messrs. Novello have given to the world a wonderful book. J. S. Bach was, is, and ever will remain the most wonderful of all the great masters. The book is collected and arranged in melodic order by H. Elliot Button, who has indeed done the work with competence and amazing thoroughness."

YORKSHIRE HERALD.

"The collection is admirably arranged; a chronological index of titles, an ingenious melodic index, invented by the author, combined with excellent type and binding make it a handsome volume."

TABLET.

"Mr. Elliot Button has become our benefactor in giving us a fine folio edition of the Bach chorales on a very convenient plan. The melodic index is so contrived that even when you have completely forgotten the words of a particular chorale it is soon hunted down. This well-printed volume is handsomely bound in cloth gilt."

CHURCH TIMES.

"The Bach lover will be delighted to add this fine compilation to his music library."

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

EURHYTHM: THOUGHT IN ACTION

The Principles and Practice of Vocal and Physical Therapy.

DESIGNED FOR THE USE OF TEACHERS AND STUDENTS OF VOCAL AND PHYSICAL EDUCATION

By H. H. HULBERT

CAPT. R.A.M.C., M.A. OXFORD, M.R.C.S., L.R.C.P., ETC.

176 Pages, Octavo Size, Cloth, Gilt Lettered - - - - PRICE SEVEN SHILLINGS NET.

SHORT SYNOPSIS OF CHAPTERS.

I.—DEFINITION OF EURHYTHM. II.—THE ENGLISH PHYSIQUE AND ARTISTIC MOVEMENT. Science and games of skill—Movements of novice and master-man—Co-ordination in movement—Discipline of games. III.—THE POISE OF THE BODY AND TONICITY. Common deformities—Correct poise—Correct figure—Lumbar curve the centre of balance—Degrees of tonic—Position of attention—Special exercises. IV.—THE SCIENCE OF APPRECIATION AND THE CONCEPTION OF THE BEAUTIFUL. Power of imagery—Knowledge of self—Kinds of appreciation—The five senses and experience—Sense of touch in music and games. V.—THE ART OF EXPRESSION AND CONTROL. Three nervous levels—Will and movement—The guiding sensation of movement—feeling—Self-control of the actor and public speaker—Euphonics. VI.—THE CENTRAL APPARATUS OF SPEECH. VII.—THE SOUNDS OF THE ENGLISH LANGUAGE. VIII.—BREATHING FOR VOICE. Diagrammatic sketch of apparatus—Different kinds of breathing—Effects of types of breathing on voice hygiene and figure. IX.—THE ARTICULATORY APPARATUS X.—THE LARYNX. XI.—HYGIENE FOR VOICE-USERS AND ORDINARY HEALTH EXERCISES. Voice-user's throat—Physiological congestion of throat—Voice-training prevents voice-user's throat—Loss of health through civilization—Physical exercises for health—Positions: movements of arms, head, body, and legs; balance exercises, jumping, and marching. XII.—EURHYTHMICS.—THE PRACTICE OF EURHYTHMICS.

"It was very much wanted, and now that it has arrived it proves to be the best book on the subject we have ever seen. . . . One would like to dwell lovingly on every stage of this monumental work did space permit, but it will only allow of a general commendation of every word from the beginning . . . to the end, which consists of music to accompany the rhythmic physical exercises."—The Morning Post, February 17, 1922.

"No teacher of singing should be without this wonderful book."—Musical Opinion.

"This is a thoughtful and thought-compelling book which touches life at most points. Eurhythm the author defines as perfect harmony, and discusses with a fine enthusiasm the practical means of bringing about in the individual this desirable condition. The book should be of great value to teachers of singing and physical education, while the intelligent student can also derive great benefit from a careful reading."—Glasgow Herald.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

BYRD'S Great Service

as performed on November 25 and 26, at St. Margaret's, Westminster, is published at 6s. in the

TUDOR CHURCH MUSIC EDITION

on behalf of the Carnegie United Kingdom Trust, by the

OXFORD University Press.

CHARLES KNOWLES

BARITONE.

CHORAL BOOKINGS INCLUDE:

ROYAL CHORAL SOCIETY	... ..	"Gerontius."
LEEDS	... ..	"Faust," Berlioz.
ABERDEEN	... ..	"Faust," Berlioz.
LEICESTER	... ..	"Elijah."
NORTHAMPTON	... ..	"Caractacus."
LEEDS	... ..	"Messiah."
WALLASEY	... ..	"Messiah."
BOSTON	... ..	"Messiah."
ROTHERHAM	... ..	"Messiah."
GUERNSEY	... ..	"Creation."
HANLEY	... ..	"Apostles" (Judas).
GOOLE	... ..	"A Tale of Old Japan."
COVENTRY	... ..	"Mystic Trumpeter."
BROMLEY	... ..	... Opera.

For terms, Press notices, address:

87, ALEXANDRA ROAD, ST. JOHN'S WOOD, N.W.8;
or MESSRS. IBBS & TILLET, 124, WIGMORE STREET, W.1.

TRINITY COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

President :

THE RT. HON. THE EARL OF SHAFTESBURY, K.P., G.C.V.O.

Director of Studies : C. W. PEARCE, M.A., Mus. D.

Director of Examinations : E. F. HORNER, Mus. D.

December 3rd, at 3 p.m. Students' Concert.

December 6th. Last day of entry for open competitions for Scholarships and the Diploma Examinations.

December 10th, at 3 p.m. Orchestral Concert at Queen's Hall.

The College provides INSTRUCTION and TRAINING in all Musical Subjects (Instrumental, Vocal, and Theoretical) and Dramatic and Operatic Elocution. The Lessons are arranged to meet the convenience of both day and evening students. Entry may be made for any number of Subjects—from one to the Full Course. The College is open to beginners as well as to the more proficient student; pupils under 16 years of age are received for the Junior School at reduced fees.

The ORCHESTRAL, CHORAL, the OPERATIC, and CHAMBER MUSIC CLASSES are open also to sufficiently competent persons who are not College Students for other subjects.

Tuition in the Rudiments of the Theory of Music, Harmony, Counterpoint, Form, Instrumentation, Composition, and the Art of Teaching is also given by Correspondence.

The Clergy Voice-Training Class is conducted by Dr. George Oldroyd, and the Class for Scoring for Brass and Military Bands and Theatre Orchestra, by Mr. Henry Geehl.

There are between Forty and Fifty Scholarships tenable at the College and open to all British subjects up to certain age limits, and the Cambridge Pianoforte Scholarship, value £100 per annum; also Eighteen Scholarships which provide complete preparation for the Degree of Bachelor of Music.

Particulars of the Teaching Department, with list of Professors, Fees, Scholarships regulations, &c., and the Syllabuses of the Diploma and Local Examinations, free on application to the undersigned.

C. N. H. RODWELL, Secretary.

Mandeville Place, Manchester Square, London, W.1.

CYRIL SCOTT ORGAN ALBUMS.

VOLUME 1.

(Six pieces transcribed by Dr. A. W. POLLITT.)

- |                          |                          |
|--------------------------|--------------------------|
| 1. Vespérale.            | 4. A Song from the East. |
| 2. Alpine Sketch, No. 2. | 5. Solitude.             |
| 3. Chansonette.          | 6. Berceuse.             |

VOLUME 2.

(Six pieces transcribed by Dr. A. EAGLEFIELD HULL.)

- |                      |                      |
|----------------------|----------------------|
| 1. Ode Héroïque.     | 4. Cavatina.         |
| 2. Over the Prairie. | 5. Evening Idyll.    |
| 3. Diatonic Study.   | 6. Prelude Solennel. |

Price, 3s. 6d. each volume.

ELKIN & CO., LTD.,

8 & 10, BEAK STREET, REGENT STREET,
LONDON, W.1.

BROADWOOD PIANOS

BOSWORTH & CO., LTD.

ANTHEMS, MOTETS, &c., for CHRISTMAS

THOMAS ADAMS—Six Christmas Carols.

- |                               |                                 |
|-------------------------------|---------------------------------|
| 1. 'Tis at Christmas Time.    | 4. Born is the Babe.            |
| 2. No more sadness now.       | 5. Christmas Bells are ringing. |
| 3. Into this world, this day, | 6. How bright was the glory.    | did come.

3d. each, or in one volume complete, 9d.

J. FREDERICK BRIDGE—Six Carols.

- |                                |                          |
|--------------------------------|--------------------------|
| 1. Ring out with jocund chime. | 4. Christmas Day.        |
| 2. A Babe ys borne I wys.      | 5. When Christ was born. |
| 3. Welcome, Yule.              | 6. Yonder in Bethlehem.  |

3d. each, or in one volume complete, 1s.

J. FREDERICK BRIDGE.

The Star of the East. A Fantasy for Contralto Solo (ad lib.) and chorus. S.A.T.B. ... 9d.

RICHARD DERING (Ed. by Sir Frederick Bridge).

Whom saw ye, Shepherds? (6 parts) ... 4d.

ORLANDO GIBBONS (Ed. by Sir Frederick Bridge).

Hosanna to the Son of David. (6 parts) ... 4d.

JOHN GOSS.

Behold, I bring you good tidings ... 3d.

JACOB HANDL (Ed. by Sir Frederick Bridge).

Behold, thou shalt conceive ... 4d.

E. J. HOPKINS.

Let us now go even unto Bethlehem ... 3d.

ORLANDO DI LASSO (Ed. by Sir Frederick Bridge).

Let Zion resound. (5 parts) ... 4d.

Whom saw ye, Shepherds? (5 parts) ... 4d.

CHRISTMAS CAROLS ANCIENT AND MODERN.

A collection of favourite Carols, arranged for four voices ... 1s. 6d.

BOSWORTH & CO., LTD.

8, HEDDON STREET, REGENT STREET, LONDON, W.1.

JUST PUBLISHED.

The Pied Piper of Hamelin

BY

ROBERT BROWNING.

SET TO MUSIC FOR

TENOR AND BASS SOLI, CHORUS, AND ORCHESTRA.

BY

C. HUBERT H. PARRY.

FULL SCORE.

Price ... Two Guineas.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

The Musical Times

AND SINGING-CLASS CIRCULAR

DECEMBER 1 1924

(FOR LIST OF CONTENTS SEE PAGE 1136.)

THE ART OF ACCOMPANYING SONGS

BY HUBERT J. FOSS

(Continued from November number, page 984.)

Ought not one to seek in the accompanist of songs qualities which one admires in the chamber pianist? I therefore suggest that it is the duty of whoever undertakes to play for a singer to regard the song quite definitely as chamber music. For it is not a form for an artist and a workman, a person and a cipher; the more he does his allotted job with personality, the more the accompanist will be contributing to the ensemble. Therefore every accompanist must have wide experience of chamber music, and no more valuable tuition can be given him than that which he derives from this practice. Only in the range of technique and emotion is his task different in song, and even so there are compensating difficulties—such as the unrhythmical and unmechanical nature of the human voice—that make the two tasks of almost equal weight.

It is one of the disadvantages of the inductive method of argument that occasionally it is necessary, in the interests of truth, to make a statement that is not wholly true. Were this not so, I should be in a more uncomfortable position than actually I am here, for I should have unequivocally to deny that the statements in the foregoing paragraphs were true. As it is, I can without a blush claim that what I have just written is not only necessary, but nearly true. For while it is true in my opinion that song is a form of chamber music, it is also true that it is a very special form; and so, having pointed out the similarities between what are normally considered wholly different arts, I must proceed to add to their relationship by pointing out the differences between them.

The principles of singing are not [my correspondent reminds me—though I would add the word 'wholly'], the same as those of chamber music. The raison d'être of chamber music is musical. The raison d'être of song is poetical. I am not saying here that the words are the most important thing in a song, or the most interesting. I am saying, what is more to the point, that but for the words the song would never have been. The poem inspires the music—was its starting-point. To play the melody of a song on a flute, or even to sing it on Ah, is artistically a silly thing to do, and rarely attempted until a song is so well-known that the words are borne in mind by the listener. This introduces a consideration that is not inherent in chamber music.

The voice of the singer must always be in the foreground, even though only just in the foreground, so that the poem he is singing can be distinctly heard and understood. This is not so in chamber music. The instruments, be they two or more, must gracefully give place to each other as the centre of musical interest shifts from one to the other. Even in those cases, which are common in Mozart, where the song patters along on one low note while the accompaniment weaves a melody above it, the accompaniment must not be so much 'down-stage' as it would be if its partner were a 'cello or violin.

If we examine this, we shall, I hope, be able, with some further precision than I have hitherto attempted, to arrive at the function of the song-accompanist in relation to the singer, his partner. The essence of Mr. Goss's plea that song is conceptionally poetical is true, and constitutes the great, almost the only, difference between song and chamber music. So far as I am concerned in this examination of song from the accompanist's point of view, this means that the accompanist must, in addition to his other points of technique, remember the original poetic intention of song, and in playing his part in the ensemble allow for the announcement of the words (words both as sense and as music, I mean) to be heard. But this is not the topical precursor of the statement that the voice must always be in the foreground. Under the suggested scheme for an accompanist's activity, which I put forward here, the voice nearly always will be in the foreground, first because the ensemble will be so contributed to by the accompanist that the tone-colour (more penetrating, remember, than that of the pianoforte) will be audible among that of the instrument, and secondly because songs are nearly always written in such a way that the singer, even if he has the lesser part, has acoustically the most prominent. Analogously, it comes to this: because Wagner's voice-parts are not always the centre of musical interest, it does not follow that the words to which they are set are not audible and prominent. Even the voice-parts may be prominent, while being, so to speak, an accompaniment to the accompaniment. Further, it is thus arguable that the accompanist may regard song as chamber music in precisely this way: that even if he has the musical interest, the voice often has simultaneously the poetical interest, and therefore he must arrange his musical performance in such a manner that the two interests are observable together—which is by no means impossible. I cannot, therefore, concede that the voice must always be in the foreground, if this idea is regarded from the accompanist's point of view. It introduces at once that element of obligatory retirement which I have denied.

At this point it is convenient to consider once again the question of the relations of singer and accompanist with regard to the leading of the ensemble. Undoubtedly the conception of the performance belongs no less to the singer, as a prerogative and duty, than the conception of the original music belongs to the composer. The latter, however, in planning his song, has not only to secure the co-operation of the performers before his work is heard, has not only to rely upon their talents for an effectual performance (even if we identify in the same man these two functioning features—composer and performer), but he has also to conceive his work in such terms that it is reasonably performable. His song will fail if the voice is compelled to perform a 'cello's part and the pianoforte an organ's. In exactly the same way, the singer, in conceiving his ultimate action, must allow for the accompanist, or his performance will fail for similar reasons. Therefore, ideally, the accompanist will be present at this act of conception, and will even assist in it. At least, he will be able to derive from a rehearsal or a description the exact musical intent of this conception. His potential importance in the ensemble commences here, but even if it did not, it would begin at the moment of performance. I would almost demand as an essential of the accompanist's and of the singer's equipment this capacity for pure co-operation. But I cannot fail to demand that in practical execution the accompanist should be always prepared—as necessity will so often compel him—to give original incarnation to the ideas, whencesoever they come, which inform the performance of a song. Upon him will lie at least some of the leading of the immediate song. He should, therefore, make it his business to assume some of the responsibility of the conception of the performance of that song.

In examining the details of technique in this light, we come first of all upon the whole question of tone; and it is this indeed that first must be considered by the accompanist when he is discovering his relations with the singer—for upon what he decides is his own importance depends his general level of loudness or softness. It is evident that this must vary with the vocal quality of each singer, as in chamber music it must vary with the tonal values of different instruments. But considered as relative to the ensemble it is a fundamental point. It is a question of how much the pianist thinks it is his duty to be heard. Personally (and my view is no more than personal) I think that the prevalent view rates too low the necessary amount of tone, and that a greater general allowance is essential to successful ensemble. Naturally this applies with particular force to modern song, but it also applies to the older type of accompaniment which punctuated the voice with chords or short figurations. The accompaniment, in other words, must always 'come through,' and must rely upon its differing tone-colour, not upon its softness, to allow the voice full freedom and sound. It must not be forgotten, for instance, that the sharp, metallic sforzando chord of a quaver's length is ineffective unless played genuinely loud, and cannot drown an ordinary voice. I am here again slightly in disagreement with 'The Consort of Music,' in the discussions of 'dead tone' on pp. 212 and 213. Too much latitude is given to this

'inexpressiveness' of touch, which is an admirable servant—a valuable implement in the accompanist's armoury—but a bad master. Nor can I see how this tone is expressly suitable for figured bass accompaniments, which give scope for an imaginative texture that may easily be heard without being dominant. It must be remembered, however, that loudness or softness of tone is never heard absolutely, or in relation to itself, but only in relation to the voice of the singer, so that with a heavy singer mezzo-forte may sound soft, and with a light one loud. There is also vocal register to be considered, and thus the accompanist may have to vary the strength of his tone throughout the two octaves of his singer's voice. He may have to make a rule of playing louder when the voice is low (or high) in order to sound soft. This again may be learnt from instrumental music, where the registers differ considerably in tonal strength, and where matters like open strings, harmonics, and overblown notes have to be remembered. Then there is the question of support. The singer is seldom in a position to judge what amount of tone is necessary to reach the audience through his own note, and his advice on this is not always sound; the decision ought to be left to the accompanist, or at least to a third party at the back of the room. But the singer may need 'support,' and, particularly if his voice is resonant and full, he will often have difficulty in hearing the pianoforte even when it can be heard too clearly by the audience. The trouble may not be so much one of pitch as of rhythm. If the pianist is allowed to leave the singer alone and unsupported, then he is fortunate in having his own responsibilities dependent on himself; if not, then he must compromise, and hope no one will be sensitive enough to notice. Finally, there are the devices for avoiding deadness of tone without making it too alive, some of which will be considered under the headings below. The one that concerns us here is that which varies the tonal texture of the pianoforte part by minute emphasis on an inner part, a special chord, or a phrase, or by altering the tone-colour delicately for different phrases, registers, and dispositions. Much can be done in this way—which, it must be said, is only capable of good use by the hands of a sensitive musician—to keep the background, however dull, vivid in just that proportion which I have tried to define as that of the pianist to the singer.

The rhythmic scheme of a song having been agreed upon by the two parties, it more often than not falls to the lot of the accompanist to establish the pace and swing of a song, sometimes so definitely that the singer must follow willy-nilly. This does not mean that the accompanist has not often to take his cue from the singer, but that his responsibility is in many songs paramount.

For instance, in Hugo Wolf's 'Wand'lich in dem Morgentau,' any failure to create the right motion in the few introductory bars will mar the whole song, and there are several other interludes where the temptation of rallentando must be resisted. The same applies to 'Die Nussbaum,' and many other obvious examples.

Ex. 10.

An nützige Bewegung. p

Wandl' - i h in dem

p p

mor - gen - tau durch die duf - ter fäll - te sehr cart.

du! muss ich schämen mi h - so sehr vor den

Blum - lein rings um - her!

Taub - lein

p p &c.

the audibility of the pianoforte, must be on the watch for any breaks in the pulse that may occur, not hesitating to suggest this point to the singer if it is needed. A separate but similar difficulty occurs when a rhythmic phrase lies half with one and half with the other of the duettists. In, e.g., Grieg's 'An das Vaterland,' after the vocal phrase 'O Mutter du' there comes a strong accent for the pianoforte before the voice continues 'ich liebe dich!' and this is a difficult note for which to gauge tone, accentuation, and rhythm. For the singer it is the opening note of his second phrase, and he must co-operate with his partner to prevent an awkward break.

Ex. 11. Molto andante ed espressivo.

p

O mut - ter du, ich lie be dich

p

was kann ich mehr noch sa - gen.

&c.

The swing of a song should never be broken, as Mr. Plunket Greene has pointed out. Only mutual agreement can maintain it, and the accompanist must be on the look out for the rubato which makes his own part expressive but spoils the song.

One comes then to that other type of song, where voice and pianoforte open simultaneously, and where neither performer can easily take up the cue from the other—like 'Mourn, Marcus, mourn,' by Michael Cavendish, where the figure in the accompaniment is underneath a long, sustained note—a difficult opening. The accompanist must also beware of the song in which he may tend, for the sake of self-expression, to emphasise the characteristic of the opening bars; this is particularly dangerous in a lively song, where a natural exuberance in establishing the pace often leads to a rushing of the voice part, or else a sudden general ritardando at its entrance. Much ado is made by kindly advisers of the difficulty of 'following' turns, shakes, retarded long notes over broken chords, and the other normal irregularities; this is a mechanical business; not difficult to perform, but it must be remembered that the pianoforte part is no less continuous than the voice part. There are little ways that experience easily discovers of avoiding abruptness and a break in the musical sense. In no other part of song ensemble is there such

This brings us to a further point, that the singer must be prepared to take up the rhythmic interpretation of the pianist at the end of his soliloquy with no less deference and obedience than is usually expected of the accompanist, and the latter, bearing in mind the points raised above regarding need as in rhythm for mutual understanding and (which is more important) mutual deference, and attention cannot be too vividly directed towards it.

A certain amount of trickery is always necessary to induce the effect of good phrasing out of the pianoforte, and particularly with the limited range of the tone and technical devices at the accompanist's command. In Vaughan Williams's 'The infinite shining heavens,' from the 'Songs of Travel,' the symphony, however it may look, needs skilful playing if it is to produce the smooth, moonlit atmosphere against which the voice may fitly enter, and which must be continued all through the song. The notes are easy enough, the proper effect difficult to achieve:

Ex. 12.

Ex. 12. Musical score for piano accompaniment. The tempo is marked 'Andante sostenuto.' The key signature is one flat (B-flat). The time signature is 3/4. The score consists of three systems. The first system shows the piano introduction with a 'p' dynamic marking. The second system shows the piano accompaniment for the vocal line 'in - fi - nite shi - ning heavens.' The third system shows the piano accompaniment continuing with a '&c.' marking.

A few bars further on a different tone-colour is suddenly demanded, which may seem to belie the composer's direction pianissimo, but is really only a matter of timbre; the atmosphere remains the same:

Ex. 13.

Ex. 13. Musical score for piano accompaniment. The tempo is marked 'Andante sostenuto.' The key signature is one flat (B-flat). The time signature is 3/4. The score consists of two systems. The first system shows the piano accompaniment for the vocal line '[sor]-row and light.' The second system shows the piano accompaniment continuing with a '&c.' marking.

This phrasing is a part of the general equipment that will be greatly helped by a good, purely pianistic technique, and even more by a continual attendance at pianoforte recitals. It is an almost universal stumbling-block of pianists, this phrasing of inner melodies and quiet emphasis of counterpoint, and nothing is better than playing fugues, except hearing them. I almost venture beyond my province into ordinary pianism when I continue, but I ought perhaps to mention the value of such devices as short pauses, not marked by the composer, deliberate retardation of one hand behind the other, late notes, staccatos, and judicious pedalling, as ways of producing the effect of a phrase without emphasising its notes. For example, in Liszt's 'Der du von dem Himmel bist,' the pianoforte interludes contain a melody which must be played just as quietly (absolutely and not relatively) as all the remainder of the song, and yet with 'cello-like tone and smoothness. Emphasis will kill it; but a slight pause on the C natural before the right hand comes in subito molto pianissimo will have a proper effect. The F#-B phrase of the cadence should be smoothly attempting to regain the pace, and another point to observe is the rough but unexcited timbre demanded by the G minor inverted triad in this context, just before the voice enters at *:

Ex. 14.

Ex. 14. Musical score for piano accompaniment. The tempo is marked 'a tempo.' The key signature is two sharps (D major). The time signature is 3/4. The score consists of two systems. The first system shows the piano accompaniment for the vocal line 'Der du von dem Himmel bist.' The second system shows the piano accompaniment continuing with a '&c.' marking.

The whole of classical song abounds in examples of phrasing that have to be overcome in some such ways as this; but I am assuming throughout as a matter of course that the accompanist will continually turn to the Lied in all its periods as his special practice ground.

Of another point the omission has been remedied by Mr. Goss. The accompanist must never forget that the singer is singing. This is of course not peculiar to song ensemble, except in the matter of technique, for the chamber music player has equally, though not so subtly, to suit his playing to the capabilities and idiosyncrasies of whatever instrument he is accompanying. In all respects the playing of the song accompanist must be as delicately adjusted to the singer as if he himself were singing the song. He must fall on the singer's 'attacked' notes with all the fresh verve of the human voice; he must enjoy another's best notes as if they were his own; his pianissimo must never be 'breathy'; his phrasing must never be too long. Fundamentally, though in practice not perhaps wholly, the matter turns on breathing. The accompanist must virtually breathe with the singer, just as he must mentally dance to the limited rhythm of the human voice, while all the time he is helping it along as a separate action. He must, as Mr. Goss says :

... play as if the notes were supported on his diaphragm just as surely as the singer's are on his. Only so can he transfer the legato of the sustained voice to the recalcitrant percussion of the pianoforte.

The meaning of this is, really, that his body must be no less attuned to the song and the process of its sung performance than the singer's, and if it is, his digital performance will be regulated in a subtle and indescribable way to express the pianoforte part with the same æsthetic conception as his partner. It is an impossible demand, but one asks only for an effort, and no more.

There is a reason why it has become difficult to talk of colour without rousing suspicion; it is that the term is so often abused by being credited with a violence of exaggeration which wholly despoils its original meaning. What one means by colour in connection with song ensemble is simpler to define than to produce, the definition being that part of the technique of interpretation which attempts by means of minute variation from the normal or expected tone, or sometimes even by rhythmic and other means, to suggest the musical atmosphere of the song. In songs where the technical range is comparatively small, colour must be a thing of great subtlety, and it is difficult to understand how it can have been confused with that kind of dramatic performance which, however bad, seems to find admiration from the public. Thus some one said to me the other day of a singer whom I had not heard, 'Oh, you ought to hear her! She's very good—she seems to be acting the song the whole time.' The importance of colour to the accompanist is that nothing else can so much help him to explain the full meaning, the inner heart, of a song. One instantly turns to the 'Erl King' as the best example of the meaning of colour, and no better explanation exists than Mr. Fuller-Maitland's on pp. 217, 218 of his 'Consort of Music,' which I quote:

The chief difficulty of the song is for the singer, in spite of the trying accompaniment. Shall it be a kind of ventriloquial entertainment with imitations of three characters, or a mere recitation to music of Goethe's poem? My own feeling is that Goethe and Schubert have done so much to differentiate the three characters that the latter is a far smaller fault than the former. In interpretations that have been greatly admired, I have had suggestions of a bluff English farmer, a rickety boy with a man's voice, and an 'old-clothes-man' of strongly Semitic physiognomy. I cannot think that this is right, even though the singer, or rather the 'entertainer,' got much applauded for his work. It is clear to all thoughtful people that the ideal interpretation is somewhere between the two extremes. Considering the changes in the style of the music, the merest suggestion of the different characters should be enough to enable ordinary hearers to realise that there are three different persons in the story, and nothing more is wanted. The one channel through which the ideas reach the listeners must always be, and be felt to be, the same, namely, the single voice of the singer. To attempt so to colour the voice that it is felt to be several different voices is only a poor effort in the direction of those remarkable performers who some years ago used to delight music-hall audiences by enacting a whole play by themselves, with rapid changes during their transit from one side of the stage to the other. In such surroundings tricks of this sort are perfectly allowable and even amusing; but when the system is applied to one of the masterpieces of literature and music, it is like a performance of 'Hamlet' undertaken by Fregoli single-handed. The tendency to exaggerate 'colour' has not as yet been as marked in England as in Germany, but it is bad enough among ourselves; I have heard the end of Schumann's 'Frühlingsnacht' shouted in a way which implied that the nightingale uttered not the words 'Sie ist dein' but 'Extra Special: all the Winners.'

We have to-day of course come to a different frame of mind regarding colour, knowing it to be a matter of much greater subtlety than the histrionic adjuncts referred to by Mr. Fuller-Maitland. It is a real enough thing. Consider three modern English songs which any accompanist might be asked to play at any concert; one can already find almost infinite variety of colour; imagine Vaughan Williams's 'Silent Noon,' Arnold Bax's 'Beg Innish,' and Peter Warlock's 'Chop Cherry' played or sung with the same timbre, or quality of tone. Colour is of course more than a question of tone, but if it were only that, the player would have to produce with his fingers the heavy beat of the first, with the contrasted section well marked, the wild irresponsibility of the second, with the piping tune in contradistinction, and the resilience of the third. The notes alone, however skilfully placed by the composer, will give him but little to what he can give himself. Cornelius's 'Ein Ton' is another good example where variety of colour is needed within the song, both from voice and pianoforte, and where no substitute will in the least produce the proper effect. And two outstanding instances at once occur—the Spanish songs of De Falla, where the excellently written pianoforte score must be charged with bright colours before it is wholly effective: and the songs of the English Lutenists—a certain crisp, light, and firm touch, with occasional shortening of long notes, can suggest not only their lyrical feeling but also the contrast between voice and instrument that originally was in the composers' minds. To imagine that I mean imitation of plucked strings is to fall into the old error of exaggeration. But a particular tone of crisp flavour should be the basis from which variations according to the sentiment of the music and words may be made. There is little that can ever be said about colour, but that is because it is a subtle musical matter which must be tried with the instruments themselves. Here, again, the two parties to the ensemble must play into each other's hands, not only one into the other's.

It seems to me of the utmost importance that the accompanist should have a musical sense of the notes he is destined to play. This is quite apart from the necessity laid upon him to study the song for interpretative reasons, no less than for the correct playing of the notes. It is a truism that he must do this, though I fancy that many accompanists are not well acquainted with the true meaning of the word study as applied to music. The study, for example, must not be confined to practising the song on the pianoforte, but must include a knowledge of the score (as well as of the words) attained by reading. What I mean by a musical sense of the notes, is that he must understand the separate musical significance of his part, however dull it may be, for it cannot be so dull, except in a vile song, as to have none. He must certainly know how his part sounds alone as well as when performed with the singer. He can then play it with its best musical interpretation, and not only in sympathy with the singer, and he will find that from separate performance of the accompaniment he will often discover points that he can make which will contribute to the whole precisely because they are individual. That is symbolic of the accompanist's whole task. Mr. Fuller-Maitland hints vaguely at this on p. 38 of his book, and in his remarks regarding 'Litanei' on p. 213; but here he is talking of dead tone, and the 'Alberti' bass, a form of accompaniment whose notes can be played with distinction although they are dull. The accompanist will never find it a mistake to practise every song many times alone, for by this means he will find passages in his part which may appear to be outside the main interpretation of the song. Certain purely pianistic phrases, passages where the significance of the part is only made clear by special playing, jingles, and subsidiary rhythms, will stand clearly out of the pattern of his part, though he might miss them when the singer's voice is sounding most dominantly in his ears.

After what I have already postulated of the word accompanist, it will come as no surprise that Mr. Goss asks even more. And I am substantially in agreement with him. The accompanist, he says :

... must be a person of infinite culture. He must know all music, and have an enthusiasm for all music. He must have no predilections. Brahms must fire him no less than Bach, and his sense of style and period must be impeccable. He must have a working knowledge of seven languages, and an intimate knowledge of four. Nothing in European literature of the last five centuries must be strange to him. He must know enough about Mörike and Eichendorff not to make the mistake of playing Wolf settings of these poets as if they were only Wolf. He must know that to play Debussy on Verlaine is a very different matter from playing Debussy on de Musset. Apart from these stupendous literary and intellectual qualifications he must be as sensitive as an aspen and as strong as a rock; as soft as blanc-mange and as virile and flexible as a Damascus blade. If he respects his singer, he must never presume to lead the combination, but he must be its guardian, its dry-nurse. He must know clairvoyantly at any moment during a song or a recital just how to change his feeling, and he must respond immediately to the slightest change in his master's barometric pressure and thermometric intensity.

With the one half-sentence, and the other sentence with which I do not agree, I have not the heart to quarrel; and, in addition, I am graceless enough to suggest that this paragraph be compared with the third, fourth, and fifth paragraphs of the first instalment* of this essay. Can anyone deny that this ideal is more worthy of attainment than the common one of agility, adaptability, and retirement? Finally, if the ideal appears impossibly exalted, at least it cannot be urged that these attainments would do anything but help the accompanist towards the achievement of the proper ensemble.

However much more there is that might be said, to say it would come perilously near to denying my own creed, that the technique of accompaniment cannot be only taught, but must be discovered, first by thought, then by a continual celerity of observation, and thirdly by experience. If I seem by some to have put too high a responsibility on the accompanist—and there are always those who dissent from high ideals—the answer exists in the mould-made accompanist himself. No more wooden performer may be found, and surely no more wooden profession.

Ad Libitum

By 'FESTE'

FOUR-HANDED ADVENTURES

Not long ago I saw a casual statement somewhat to the effect that pianoforte duet playing is gradually dying out. I hope and believe that the writer was mistaken. After all, a pretty safe guide in such matters is the publisher: and when we find (as we do) that duet arrangements of important new orchestral works are put forth almost as soon as the full scores, we may be certain that there must be a market worth considering. On both sides of the Channel there has been since the war a steady issue of such arrangements, many of them so lengthy and complex that the cost of transcription and publication would be far too heavy an undertaking unless a reasonable sale be assured. This is a good sign, for duet playing is not only one of the jolliest forms of music-making; it is also an invaluable aid to technique and general musical culture.

The pianoforte duet is a comparatively recent thing, for the modest compass of the clavichord and harpsichord gave too little scope for four hands. Mr. Benjamin Dale, lecturing on this subject some time ago, said that Burney seemed to have been the first to publish a work in duet form—a set of four Sonatas which appeared in 1777. Grove tells us, however, that E. W. Wolf, of Weimar, had, in 1761, written Sonatas for two performers, which were not published till after his death. It would be interesting to know if they actually appeared before those of Burney; perhaps England was first in the field here, as in some other musical matters. (As a kindred instance, it seems clear that the first work for two keyboard instruments was written by our own Giles Farnaby.) After this Burney-Wolf kick-off the duet seems to have languished, for little was done by any composer of note until Schubert weighed in a good stock of works of all shapes and sizes, from full blown Sonatas to little country dances.

* See November number, pp. 979-80.

It would be difficult to over-estimate the part played by the duet in spreading a knowledge of fine music. Mr. Dale, in the lecture alluded to, mentioned that he himself had become a fervent admirer of Brahms after he had got to know the four Symphonies by means of duet arrangements. Similarly, when a very small boy, I had got well inside the best Symphonies of Haydn and Mozart by the same means. (Just lately I have been playing those same duets again, and with not less pleasure—rather more.) Incidentally, I recall that my very earliest memories of listening to music in public are of a pianoforte duet, when, scarcely beyond the infant stage, I sat perched on a hard form at some parochial gathering in a small country town while two elderly maiden ladies played the Overture to Boieldieu's 'Caliph of Bagdad.' The pair were a kind of standing dish at such events, and although they no doubt played other duets I can only say that whenever they played to that small boy it was always the 'Caliph.' By the same token, when I read in Prof. Tovey's Preface to the 'Forty-eight' a remark about 'an elegant hen-like staccato,' the old ladies came at once to my mind. It was just their style, helped out by constant little sideways darting movements of the head. I remember thinking, as I sat on my hard form, watching rather than listening, that they looked like a couple of elderly hens pecking their way through the music. Peace to them! They gave me my first experience as a listener, and also the only taste of Boieldieu that has ever come my way.

At the head of this article I have called duets 'four-handed adventures,' because it seems to me that in order to get the utmost enjoyment out of the game, one has to use it as a means of exploring all sorts of musical paths that would otherwise remain closed. A couple of kindred spirits, with fair technique, good reading facility, and plenty of enthusiasm, can scrape acquaintance with the very latest Stravinsky, Delius, Schmitt, Roussel, Ravel, Casella, Malipiero, Berners, &c. There is more than a spice of adventure about the tackling of such music, though it must be admitted that the thorny progress is not always well repaid. The fact is, so much of the dissonance that is passable—even effective—on the orchestra, is hideous on the pianoforte. Here again, however, time is sometimes well and interestingly spent in experimenting with balance and colour in order to tone down the worst asperities. And anyway, one has so few opportunities for hearing most of these works in the original form, that it is a duty to get at least a rough working knowledge of them by means of transcriptions.

The technical profit to be obtained from duet playing is so great that it ought to be a regular part of the young pianist's training. Time-keeping and rhythm are benefited at once, as in any other form of ensemble work; ledger lines lose their terrors for the assiduous duettist, whereas many an experienced soloist is apt to become a bit speculative when faced with more than half-a-dozen. In the matter of resource the hardened four-hander—that is, the omnivorous devourer of transcriptions of new music—becomes equipped above the ordinary. In his adventures he meets with many a technical hard nut. Does he hold up the march of events while he tries to crack it? He does not. He sails along and adapts the passage—a legitimate proceeding, especially in the case of arrangements, for he is merely substituting a bit of his own transcription for that of the official transcriber, and it may well be that there is little loss. There may even be gain. Nevertheless, like most duettists of the ranging, avid sort, I blush when I think of the shameful dodges to which I have been reduced at times, especially when playing secondo, where of course an unscrupulous adapter has plenty of scope. With the left hand kept to its job of carrying on a firm bass, the right can reduce awkward passage-work to its elements, and fill up the gap so that the average hearer is none the wiser. This facility in boiling down and simplifying is well worth cultivating for its own sake. It calls for a ready co-ordination of eye, hand, ear, and brain, and develops a knack of thinking harmonically. But somehow one doesn't want a keen observer looking over one's shoulder at such moments. The resourcefulness is apt to remain unnoticed, whereas the fact that you have dodged a difficulty cries aloud to heaven.

Not everybody wants to keep in touch with the music of to-day and to-morrow; for the unadventurous there are the great things of the past that yield an inexhaustible store of pleasure and profit. Has any musician yet reached a stage when there was nothing left for him in the 'Forty-eight,' or the best of the classical chamber music of all periods? Hardly. But we may have few opportunities of hearing them at first hand, and even the gramophone, boon and blessing as it is, can never (or should never) take the place of performance off our own bat. If there be two of us living in amity under the same roof and unable to deal with the 'Forty-eight' single-handed, there is the duet arrangement made by Dubois—a simple proposition, and one of the best examples of difficult solos becoming easy duets. Less simple, but not forbidding to average players, are the Haydn, Mozart, and earlier Beethoven chamber works; tougher propositions are the later Quartets of Beethoven. (How many pairs of you have managed to 'stick it' right through the 'Grosse Fuge'?) Only once have self and partner reached the bitter end, and we shall never get there again. There are some journeys for which life is not long enough.) The Beethoven Symphonies seem to make less satisfactory duets than those of Haydn and Mozart. The slender lines of the older men make for clearness, and there is less tonic and dominant brass and drum.

If we are fond of organ music, and get few chances of hearing it (as is the case with thousands of music-lovers who live in centres where there is no good organ or player), we ought not to despise the simple expedient of sharing it with another on the pianoforte. Practically all Bach's organ works can be managed in this way, the secondo player delivering the pedal-part in octaves—a humble rôle, apparently, but in the case of the more difficult and rapid pieces not to be sniffed at. Most of Rheinberger can be played in the same way, and, in fact, all organ music that does not call for the independent use of two or more manuals, or for elaborate registration. (It is worth noting that Rheinberger himself arranged all his Sonatas for pianoforte duet. The only one in this form that I have practical knowledge of is the E minor, which—especially the fine Passacaglia—has given us many an enjoyable twenty minutes).

I have forgotten the name of the old harpsichord virtuoso whose girth increased with his years to such an extent that his youthful feats in the way of crossing hands became more and more irksome, until at last they ceased. A kindred difficulty arises in duet playing when one of the parties. . . . However, it is fortunate that Festina happens to be on the willowy side. A duet by an obese couple would be well worth watching, especially in its early stages, when positions have to be adjusted. ('I'm sure you're poaching!') 'Not a bit of it; look! here's middle C. One can't get away from that!' 'Apparently not; I wish you could.' Not a fat duettist among you but has wrangled thus.) Among the minor casualties of life are to be counted those that result from a duet-player not keeping the nail of the little finger of his inner hand cut very close. I have given and taken many a scratch in this way, leading sometimes to effusion of blood. Reger's arrangements of Bach's Orchestral Suites are the worst things I know in the matter of colliding hands. Nothing if not thorough, Reger seems to have transferred to the keyboard every one of the notes in the score, keeping them all in their original positions. The result is a frequent crossing of the parts, hands getting mixed, notes running into one another, and such fidgety bits as this for the primo player's left hand:

where the effect would be better with the quavers omitted.

Reger might well have recast the passage, giving the quaver part to the secondo right hand an octave lower, instead of confining that player to the bass in octaves. This is Reger's chief weakness as a duet arranger; he gives the secondo pages octaves, and leaves the primo with three (sometimes four) closely-woven parts—an absurdly unfair distribution of the difficulty in quick movements. Here is a typical example of three-part playing, quite difficult at the right speed:

The primo has to deal with this, while his partner is ambling along with a simple bass in octaves. A lesser man, Ernst Naumann, has done the job better in his version of the 'Brandenburg' Concertos, the secondo right hand taking over a good deal of the middle of the texture, leaving the primo generally with clear two-part writing. These Concertos are a constant joy to the duettist, especially the lovely first movement of No. 5 in D, and the bustling No. 3.

Too many arrangers of modern orchestral works crowd in overmuch of the instrumental detail, copying rather than transcribing. They forget that musical transcription is to a considerable extent analogous to literary translation. Lots of typical string passages are ineffective, and (in the case of very rapid ones) almost impossible to play when transferred literally to the keyboard. It is a pity that arrangers as a rule show so little courage in adapting such passages. One wonders how many of them have read the article 'Arrangement' in Grove, where they would see what Bach, Beethoven, and Mendelssohn have done in the way of modifying string passages when transcribing for the pianoforte.

An excellent move in some recent duet arrangements of orchestral works, is the indication of the scoring. This is not only a help in the matter of suggestions for tone, &c., but also an interesting aid to the study of orchestration. For fullness in such indications I know nothing to equal Philip Heseltine's transcriptions of Delius's 'Dance Rhapsody' and 'North Country Sketches.' Everything seems to be shown, and there are also notes giving further information, e.g., 'Strings and W.-W. have the theme in octaves from here to bar 237'; 'Violins (harmonics) sustain two bars,' &c. No instrumental detail seems to be too small to be noticed and the setting-out is clear. Here, for example, is a brief extract from the primo of 'Autumn,' with a touch of wood-wind on the last quaver of each bar plainly indicated :

Ex. 3.

Fl.

Str. (& W.W.) Str. (& W.W.) &c

Str. (& W.W.) Str. (& W.W.)

For care and skill combined, these transcriptions would be hard to beat, and one readily forgives Mr. Heseltine a few passages where the result seems unnecessarily difficult.

The duet in excelsis is, of course, the two-pianoforte affair. But that is not for humble folk like you and me. Yet when one thinks of it, there are plenty of us who with great effort (amounting even to overdrafts) have taken to ourselves a grand, when we might have laid out the money to better purpose on a couple of uprights. They would have taken up rather less space; either of them in an ordinary drawing-room would have sounded as well as a grand; and we should have had at hand the means of making excursions among the Bach Concertos for two claviers, Brahms's own two-pianoforte versions of some of his most important works, as well as practically all the standard concertos, which are to be had with the orchestral part arranged for a second pianoforte. This is the very luxury of duet playing, with the added comfort of being seated in the middle of the keyboard instead of being bounded on one side by middle C. Our diameter ceases to be a nuisance to our partner, and that little finger-nail is no longer a weapon.

Duet-playing on the organ is rare, and it is easy to see why. With all the ample resources at his command in the way of manuals, pedals, and means of duplicating in octaves above and below, one player can do all that is required—even more, sometimes. Moreover, in adjusting oneself to the keyboard, there are the pedals to complicate matters. I once stood by and turned the pages for a couple of players in Merkel's Duet Sonata, and I am sure there was a good deal of ankle-tapping, and some execution among the corns. With a stoutly-shod, clumsy pedallist for partner, organ-duetting may be an ordeal. Are those three Organ Duets by Samuel Wesley still get-at-able? 'Grove' mentions them, and also tells us that Julius André wrote twenty-four such pieces, and that one Höpner and the industrious Hesse also tried their hand in this field. But no mention is made of the Merkel Sonata, which is the only organ duet fairly well-known to-day. The composer rearranged it for solo, in which form its native dryness (saved somewhat by the novelty of the duet version) is manifest.

My experiences with long strings of youthful solo pianists at competition festivals makes me suggest that young players should do far more duet-playing from the very earliest stages. Apart from the advantages on technical grounds there is the moral effect of team work taking the place of the solo. The duet classes at festivals ought really to be larger than the solo. I have found audiences generally much attracted by the sight and sound of a couple of youngsters playing together. Moreover, the musical effect obtainable by two players still in the elementary stage is considerable, whereas singly they make but a poor show. And—a point not to be overlooked—the nervous strain is very slight in a duet, whereas many child soloists clearly suffer tortures.

Coming to well-known examples of duets I suppose the Brahms 'Hungarian Dances' are among the most popular. Yet, good as they are, I always feel they would be even better were the secondo part lightened somewhat; there are too many of Brahms's thick, low chords. Why do not more players discover Dvorák's 'Slavonic Dances'? I am inclined to put them above the Brahms for all-round brilliance and effectiveness. Again, for twenty pairs of duettists who revel (as they should) in Moszkowski's 'From Foreign Parts,' not more than one knows the composer's 'German Rounds,' which are among the most delightful of his works. Among recent examples honourable place is taken by the charming little Suite, 'Pages Intimes,' of Joseph Jongen, and, in a more brilliant and less subtle way, by the two Suites of York Bowen, especially No. 1, which winds up with one of the jolliest dance movements imaginable. In the classical field the numerous Schumann pieces are hardly to be beaten: players who know only the 'Oriental Tone-Pictures' should look at Schumann's three other sets, Opp. 85, 109, and 130.

A recent and welcome innovation is the printing of primo and secondo parts on the same page. Probably the plan would have been adopted long ago but for the convention that duet music should always be oblong in shape. An upright page lies well within the focus of both players' eyes, and there is the very great convenience of knowing one's partner's whereabouts as well as one's own. So far the upright form, with both parts on the same page, has been adopted by no English publisher save Chester—a surprising fact, seeing how great is the improvement in comfort. In the case of transcriptions of orchestral works, this method of laying-out, plus information as to the scoring, may be of more practical use than a full score. An average musician would be able to study the orchestration, and, if no partner were available, he could take in the music itself, either mentally or by reducing it at sight to a sketch in solo form. Best of all, however, the two-parts-on-one-page form enables us to avoid the delays and irritation brought about by the wretched time-keeping of one's partner. Many precious seconds that seem like minutes are spent in counting up bars for a fresh starting-place—'the bar before the sf in the third line'; 'But I haven't got a sf'; 'Go back six bars before the change of key'; 'I'm in the middle of several bars' rest there.' And so on, with the result that you may be reduced to counting back twenty bars from the end of the page (for it is an almost incredible fact that many duets are published with no sectional letters or figures).

Since writing the above, I have seen an article somewhere in which the writer, after saying that the pianoforte duet is on its last legs, gives the reason that such a method of making music is far more interesting to the players than to the hearers. Bless his innocent heart! Doesn't that objection apply to all kinds of music—above all (I speak with long experience of both) to organ playing and madrigal singing? Apparently he is misled by the rarity of such performances in public. Probably the reason for this is the fact that there is something a little ridiculous in a pair of players at one keyboard. In a work for two pianofortes one may cut a good—even dashing—figure on the concert platform, but hardly as a duettist. This may be mere fancy on my part; but I never see two grown-ups engaged in this way without being reminded of the two hen-like little old ladies whom I saw pecking their way through the 'Caliph' Overture. So, although I shall continue my secondo activities with vigour, it will always be in private where I can be heard and not seen.

CONDUCTORS AND CONDUCTING

By WILLIAM WALLACE

(Continued from November number, page 987.)

VI.—THE MUSICAL ASPECT OF THE BEAT

Apart from muscular control, yet intimately associated with it, the musical aspect of the beat has to be considered.

As for the conductor, his musical intelligence should be so sensitive, and of balance so subtle, that unconsciously he should respond to the minutest gradations of light and shade and give them their due. To feel the progress of a movement, even though there may be none of the conventional indications, is to re-vive and throw light upon passages whose stringent rendering would produce a steady but pedestrian result. This is not to extenuate the over-use of tempo rubato, but to suggest the almost imperceptible impulses which the conductor feels with the rhythm of his mind, and is able to obtain without over-emphasis.

Rhythm is essentially a human endowment, present in all in varying intensity. It may be simple, as in movements which have become automatic, such as walking, but even the word 'simple' needs qualification. In the musician, however, rhythm is highly organized and complex, involving the perception of time, pitch, movement; inducing imagination, emotion. In his case there comes into play that which, for lack of a better term, we call instinct, about which there are endless controversies. Without dogmatizing, we may offer the suggestion that musical instinct is the emotional response to the effect of an auditory stimulus upon a mind that is inherently disposed towards music.

Objectively the beat concerns the orchestra: subjectively it is personal to the conductor; by it he conveys visibly and with authority his sense of the impression which the music has made upon him. It is, in fact, a projection of his own personality: it should never become an intrusion.

There are, of course, works which demand a treatment which suggests detachment, almost, it might be said, sub- or under-conducting, following after careful preparation at rehearsal. These works are architectural in construction, like a 'Brandenburg' Suite, in which the play of contrapuntal devices does not afford an opportunity for intolerable interruptions in rhythm. The flow must be steady and serene. A fugue or fugal movement no more can be 'sentimentalized' than can the Parthenon. Each has its module, its law, sacrosanct beyond a peradventure. Each has its lines of precision, the one, with the amazing concession to the eye; the other, formal in structure yet yielding gratefully to the ear. In such music, then, it is well to remember that Bach is Bach, and is not to be conducted à la corybantic Bakst.

We are now confronted by the prickly question of interpretation, and the equally complicated question of personality and leadership. It would be idle to attempt to define the second, except under the word 'discipline,' which does not mean blind obedience, but instruction in its widest sense. To discipline others a man must discipline himself, and here we find one of the paradoxes in music. The greater the personality the less in evidence should it be. The conductor has to express himself under cover of the composer.

No two works in a programme can be conducted in the same way, unless they are by the same composer and even then there are divergencies. Therefore, while suppression of personality cannot at all times be absolute, for it is bound to break away from control, the conductor resolves himself, as it were, into an air with variations, in which the theme is concealed by the variety of treatment. Then it is that his conception illuminates the score, not in attempting what no one else has done in seeking high lights that throw the rest out of value, but in preserving an even balance with tempered brightness and shadow.

In much modern music it is at times impossible to say what part of the orchestral fabric is meant to predominate. It might even be that it is difficult to say where the composer left off and the conductor begins. So it may happen that without definite instructions from the composer, two renderings of the same work may be so utterly unlike each other that it is only in patches that any comparison can be made. Even then we are left in doubt as to which is the true one. This applies to those first performances of unpublished and complicated works of which no one but the composer can say whether the rendering adequately conveys his ideas; quite likely he may have a feeling, not of satisfaction, but of surprise on hearing things that he did not altogether expect or intend. Considered reflection and comparison with other performances are therefore impossible. The business is too serious for flash-in-the-pan affairs, when adroitness and nerve can pull through to its close a work which never was heard before, and of which consequently nobody can tell if the composition is superb or the performance deplorable.

But in music there are other efforts of the mind upon which Time in his wisdom has bestowed his benediction. With much of the older music the conductor is faced with tradition. It is not as in earlier times when only at rare intervals one conductor threw down the glove to another, and when men were few who could remember and compare methods and interpretation of this or that conductor. To-day there is a procession of conductors; of standards there are many—but can the impression of a reading heard twenty years ago be so crystallised in the memory that it cannot be eradicated or replaced by a reading of yesterday? The opportunities for listening to orchestral music are many, even for hearing the same work twice in the same week under different conductors. The listener's mood is no more constant than the conductor's: it can be decidedly more capricious, and while one reading may dazzle him to bewilderment, another may rouse him to fury. He is not possessed of some infallible means of testing and recording his impressions, to be called up later in vastly different circumstances. In this respect he is at a disadvantage. On the other hand, just as the 'Duo-Art' pianoforte enables the pianist to study at leisure and compare the methods of great performers, so in the future conductors, thanks to phonography, will have at their disposal—approximately—the various readings of their predecessors. But no verbal description can convey with any degree of precision the insight, the disciplined and matured experience, of conductors who were great two generations ago. The tradition of conductors in the past must fade: for the future the 'records' will speak.

It will scarcely be questioned, when we listen to a work written before or during Beethoven's lifetime, that we are hearing something very different from what he or Haydn or Mozart heard. The orchestra has changed; mechanical improvements have not only affected the tone of the wind instruments, but also have enlarged their scope. In order to observe to the letter the traditions of one of these composers we should have to provide wind instruments of the pre-Gordon-Boehm period, and fiddles whose short, thick necks were still without the tilt that they now have.

These remarks obviously do not apply to instruments of the keyboard type, specimens of which, still in playing condition, reproduce as far as we can know the sounds that Bach heard. With the organ we cannot be so sure, for there are accounts of instruments unaltered since the 17th century and inclined to be fractious, with little idiosyncrasies much in need of coaxing.

Obviously orchestral music of an earlier period must be handled in a fashion appropriate to, and in the idiom and style of, that period. The handling therefore must be discreet, for music that looks simple and lightly scored, is just the music in which flaws of exaggeration or points missed call for censure.

Up to the death of Beethoven, and later, whatever orchestral music was as to the written notes it was not, as to sound, what these written notes convey to us now. The scoring tells us something about this. Passages for wood-wind, horns, and trumpets were written according to the capacity of these instruments, but we do not know what their dynamic power was. Was the flute weak, the oboe coarse? Had the clarinet a rough trumpet-tone, was the bassoon always grotesque? Before valves gave the horns and trumpets a widened sphere of activity, they were condemned to a passive and monotonous existence, except when some player complained that he had nothing particular to do, and then Beethoven gave him something to think about. Were Mozart to enter our concert-room to-day, would he recognise his 'Jupiter' Symphony, played with a finish which he could rarely have enjoyed? Would Beethoven, with hearing miraculously restored, be pleased with a modern account of his C minor, or would he demand from the oboe in the little cadenza the coarse tone of the contemporary instrument?

No composer that ever lived heard in sound exactly what he had written in silence. This may be an extreme statement, but it is true. The composer has in his mind an orchestra technically perfect in sound and expression. He writes for a superhuman body of men, no two of whom are so accurately balanced as to be counterparts of one another. He has his mental conception apart from what he hears, and may be so absorbed by it that he overlooks or disregards the literal meaning.

It is common enough to listen to discussions about the interpretation by this conductor or that of, let us say, a Beethoven Symphony. Who shall assert which is right? Or take Bach. We are told that though he condemned one early pianoforte and approved of another, he never owned an instrument of the kind. But suppose that he had heard his first Prelude on a modern grand, with the Gounod perversions and the extra bar, what would his criticism have been? We are too much disposed to regard the works of the Old Masters according to a modern standard, without considering the conditions that have varied and progressed since their period.

We must rid ourselves of the obsession that written or printed music, with all our present amplitude of artistic and mechanical technique, sounds just what it sounded a century ago. We have the score as Beethoven wrote it, with his indications, but it was at the mercy of the artistic ability of his performers and was determined also by the mechanical limitations of his instruments.

This brings us to the question how far the conductor is justified in modifying—by which is meant strengthening—a score so as to obtain balance of tone in a large orchestra. With the means at their disposal it is just this balance of tone of which the earlier masters were so acutely conscious, and of which our present-day would-be masters are not, for it is quite possible to write fff for every instrument at once, and never obtain more than a half-hearted mezzo-forte. If, as we have good reason to know, a composer had abruptly to pull up his horns and trumpets because they had no notes, or only one when a modulation was outside their range, is the conductor within his province in rounding-off the sharp edge that was left? Is he to be condemned by those who have not viewed the work in the light of his experience, but have taken him to task for doubling wind passages, adding octaves, and completing horn cadences?*

But the purist will exclaim, 'This is modernising!' It is nothing of the sort. It is merely supplying a crutch to a lame leg. If we let the wind blow where it listeth, we must consistently reduce in stature the section of strings in our large orchestras. Still we should be far from obtaining an exact reconstruction. We should need to reproduce also the dimensions of the room.

When metronome marks are not indicated, the conductor is free to put his own interpretation upon adagios and prestos, and the intervening varieties of tempo. In works in the repertoire he may have to run the gauntlet of criticism for any departure from the fluctuating currency of tradition, and we may yet meet with a conductor who, with the courage of his convictions, boldly states his procedure—and his metronome marks—in the concert-book, as Weingartner did in his comprehensive work.

Personality, it cannot be repeated too often, is a determining element in interpretation—indeed, it may be said to be interpretation itself. It will be allowed that when a composer asks for allegro molto and marks the minim at 84, he means 84; but when he omits the mark, the conductor must interpret the movement according to his own idea of allegro molto, which may be below or above that beat, and at variance with the ideas of others, who fortunately are not in a position to express their views during the performance. Besides, account must be taken of the effect of the beat upon instrumental passages, phrasings, points for breathing, so as not to distress the orchestra by too rapid a tempo, or to hurry to such an extent that the sound becomes a confused scramble.

Recently, when a conductor was taken to task for altering some of Beethoven's metronome marks, the question was asked if Beethoven's metronome was synchronized. The inquiry was well-timed, and was amazingly justified by a quotation from a letter of Beethoven himself in which he said that his instrument was 'sick and must first have its regular and steady pulse restored by the clock-maker.' Moreover, there is Beethoven's well-known outburst against metronome marks, and his declaration that the character of the music indicated the tempo. This need not be taken too literally, for, apart from metronome marks, there are infinite gradations of expression too minute and delicate in themselves to come within the designation of tempo rubato.

To speak then of tradition is to mean something suspiciously akin to superstition. Much has been built upon Habeneck's performances of Beethoven's Symphonies, but he did not hesitate to suppress or simplify the double-bass parts when they were too difficult for such players as he had at hand. Was this 'tradition' recognised by Lamoureux? I fancy not. Account must always be taken of human fallibility in the description of a sound-impression which, till recent years, could not be recorded and reproduced. Without phonography we cannot eliminate the 'personal equation'—that equation which had its origin in the minute calculations of astronomy. It is not necessary to go to Greenwich: the Law Courts provide examples of its existence every day.

In older music the evidence of tradition, entitled as it is to our respect, is not to be disallowed without close scrutiny. But is it to be rigidly adhered to because it has filtered through the brains of men who are no longer with us to bear witness? We cannot tell how much was shed or added in the process.

Let us consider one material point. This is not the place to inquire whether music is a universal language; but there are works which we regard, and after due study have the right to regard, as part of our musical heritage. They belong to us as much as, let us say, a great piece of sculpture, a great poem, a great picture. They have so permeated our musical intelligence that we know 'instinctively' (here the word used at the beginning asserts itself) that the character of the music determines its treatment. This is not any far-fetched theory, but commonsense. Furthermore, the character of the music determines the beat.

Nowadays we have young people at our music schools conducting with a freedom and technical resource which seventy years ago would have been looked upon with misgivings. Their performances would have seemed to be a form of musical outrage.

To cope with the anarchistic tendencies of youth, anarchistic conductors and interpreters are called for, and whether these tendencies are the outcome of the basic nature of music as hewn by Bach, or a throw forward, a projection well ahead of accepted views, anticipating a newer and apparently unrelated type, we cannot close ear and mind to a phase which has come among us. The lessons of all art-movements in the past are before us to put us on our guard against a hasty opinion, for we do not know, and cannot tell, how far our appreciation of the music that we like is due to the education which we have received when listening to works somewhat beyond our grasp.

* Two illuminating works may be mentioned: the chapter on Crooks and Valves in Cecil Forsyth's 'Orchestration,' and Weingartner's 'On the performance of Beethoven's Symphonies.'

This is not the occasion to weigh in the balance one school against another. We may imagine that we have outgrown the clear-cut rhythm and attitude of mind of Mozart and Beethoven—styles which were not without their disconcerting results to their contemporary audiences. Even Wagner with his excursions, inevitable as they seemed to him, and inevitable, almost commonplace, as they seem in places to us, was musically speaking a renegade. To-day any audience will accept a performance of 'Lohengrin,' and 'Tannhäuser,' and 'Tristan,' for in the depth of their musical experience they have found the ideal. This idealism, too, may produce in the mind of a conductor during the performance of a familiar work a feeling of sufficiency and completeness, no matter how far the performance may fall short of results that he has obtained at other times. He has so schooled himself that he is hearing mentally that which is for the moment physically unobtainable. This would account for performances of a character so bewildering that the impression is not one of indignation but of surprise.

The heaviest burden laid upon the conductor is the preservation of unity. Music is difficult to 'see' whole. In the concert-room the page cannot be turned back. The conductor must wait for the next performance (if ever he obtains it) to bring out that after-thought which struck him just a second too late as the music was being unfolded. He may have a flash of insight into a passage which baffled him, blazing across his mind just at the right moment. It was said above that it is often impossible to discover at a glance what effect, if any, a composer was aiming at in the midst of an orchestral fracas. The deciphering, the dissecting, of a modern score, with apparently contradictory dynamic marks, require of the conductor a musical endowment which could not have been gained by a study of works written two generations ago. But there is a cumulative energy in music, gradually and unconsciously stored up till the opportunity arrives for its release.

Unquestionably the conducting of music of the ultra-modern school involves a strain which the conductor is called upon to undergo without, perhaps (for the present at least), any definite compensation beyond what can be derived from the accomplishment of a tour de force. It is no small task to reduce to just proportion ponderous loquacity or irresponsible garrulity. In earlier music, when all was serene and not at cross-purposes, there was an intuitive responsiveness to the mood of the music. It is this responsiveness that consolidates and sustains the fabric of sound at places where others would leave all frayed and ragged.

There may be a dozen different ways of rendering a passage: a symphony does not 'run' for so many consecutive nights, so we are not in a position to say whether the conductor, or we, were in the same frame of mind on each occasion that the symphony was given, possibly at considerable intervals of time.

Apart from the technical side of music, there are aspects which the conductor will view in the true perspective. The days of the band-sergeant, as Costa appears to have been, are over. Modern music has demobilised him. A plastic and sensitive mind, as anxious to learn as it is ready to forget: adjusted to tolerate on the one hand, to welcome on the other: a mind sincere in recognising and encouraging the genuine though often ill-expressed effort—these finer, less mundane qualities would the conductor cultivate in his progress.

Lastly we come to that which is most difficult to define—namely, mental poise, which is not to be mistaken for 'pose,' in spite of its 'proud letter I.'*

While in the study the balance of the conductor's mind is swaying, with technique now preponderating, to be in turn outweighed by expression, the moment arrives when equilibrium is established. It is clear that this desirable condition is not always within reach, especially in the case of works which have to be performed in far from ideal circumstances. Still, it is not impossible to attain it in some measure.

There is no need for cold austerity: there can be warmth without embroidery and the tinsel of the mountebank: let the conductor's mind choose for habitation a goodly mansion rather than the clamouring market-place.

NEW LIGHT ON LATE TUDOR COMPOSERS

BY W. H. GRATTAN FLOOD

V.—ROBERT PARSONS

In my notice of William Parsons, I pointed out that there was previously much confusion between him and Robert Parsons, but that the former, apart from the difference in Christian name, was of a slightly earlier period, and was the contributor of eighty-one tunes to Day's four-part setting of the Psalms, in 1563.

Morley, in his 'Introduction' (1597), includes Robert Parsons in his list of eminent English musicians, styling him 'Mr. Parsons.' Yet, as in the case of many others, very scant particulars have come down to us of his biography. It is, however, fairly certain that he was born at Exeter, c. 1535, and we find a rather pretty 'In Nomine' of his, dating from before the year 1560. He joined the Chapel Royal in 1563, being sworn a Gentleman of that body on October 17, 1563, and from this period may be dated an organ solo, 'In Nomine,' now among the Add. MSS. of the British Museum, 29,996.

* 'Thy proud letter I
Drops prone and void as any thoughtless dash.'
—George Meredith, in the Sonnet, 'The State of Age.'

As evidence of the powers of Parsons as a composer, a contemporary writer has written the following couplet in MS. 987 of the Christ Church part-books, evidently pointing to the fact that he died young:

Qui tantus primo Parsone in flore fuisti,
Quantus in autumnno in morerere fores!

No doubt Parsons was intimate with Edwards, Farrant, and Hunnis, and he took a part in writing incidental music for some of the Court plays between the years 1567 and 1570. Among the pieces still preserved is a six-part setting for one voice and five accompanying instruments, in the play of 'Pandolpho.' This incidental music is to be found in the MS. part-books at Christ Church, and there is another copy in the Library of the Royal College of Music. Mr. G. E. P. Arkwright tells us that Parsons displayed much ingenuity in working out the emotional feeling in 'Pandolpho.' He adds:

Parsons was probably the best of the writers of this kind of music, and his 'Pandolpho' is not without pathetic effect.

The interested reader will find the score modernized by Mr. Arkwright, and printed in  $\frac{3}{8}$  rhythm, in his article on 'Early Elizabethan Stage Music,' in the 'Musical Antiquary' (October, 1909).

Much of Parsons's dramatic music is, unfortunately, lost, but it is almost certain that the song, 'Enforced by love and fear,' for treble solo and instrumental accompaniment, is from a Court play. The MS. parts are in Christ Church Library, but Burney has printed the score in his 'History' (vol. ii., p. 596). Another song in the Christ Church Library, 'Alas, alack, my heart is woe,' would seem to be from the pen of Parsons.

In 1570, Parsons composed an interesting anthem, which is now in an organ book at Christ Church, Oxford. It is entitled, 'Anthem of ye Prodigall Childe,' commencing 'How many hired servants.' Other anthems are in Barnard's Collection. Among his early compositions are ten Latin Motets, including a charming 'Ave Maria' for five voices, and a 'Magnificat.' Barnard includes a Morning, Communion, and Evening Service of his, while a Burial Service is in Low's 'Directions' (1684). His organ setting of 'Gloria Tibi Trinitas' is in the Fitzwilliam Virginal Book. There is a treble viol arrangement of his five-part 'In Nomine' and 'Delacurt,' in the British Museum (Add. MSS. 32,377). His Fancies include an arrangement for five instruments in parts of 'De la courte' and 'Abradad!'; and there is a 'Songe' of his for six viols in parts in the British Museum (Add. MSS. 31,390), as well as two pieces for seven instruments (Add. 32,377).

Parsons was cut off at an early age, for he was drowned in the Trent, at Newark, on January 25, 1570, when in his thirty-fifth year. W. H. Husk, in Grove's 'Dictionary,' well sums up his reputation, as follows:

His scientific skill and feeling for curious effects of harmony make him an important figure in English music.

The Saturday Night Popular Concerts at Kingsway Hall are providing excellent music at a low rate of admission. Among those lately taking part have been Miss Phyllis Lett, Miss Margaret Balfour, Mr. Peter Dawson, Mr. Topliss Green, Mr. Harry Dearth, the Coldstream Guards Band, &c.

BORODIN REVISED

By M.-D. CALVOCORESSI

When I wrote my article, 'Boris Godounov, genuine and otherwise,' I hardly expected to have to revert so soon to the topic of how masterpieces by Russian composers are altered after their authors' death, and the genuine texts allowed to disappear. Circumstances compel me to utter fresh protests on the matter.

This time the victim is Borodin. Recently Mr. Constant Lambert, a student at the R.C.M., who is keenly interested in Russian music, and took part of late as conductor in a performance of Borodin's first Symphony at that institution, made a startling discovery. Comparing the score of this work newly published in a 'revision' by Rimsky-Korsakov and Glazounov with the arrangement for pianoforte duet of the same work as originally written (and in Borodin's own transcription—why this arrangement, and not the score, will presently appear), he encountered a number of unaccountable alterations of which I shall quote two instances:

[Original.]

[Revision.]

[Original.]

[Revision.]

The 'Original' musical score consists of ten systems. Each system contains a piano part (left hand) and a violin part (right hand). The piano part is written in a grand staff (treble and bass clefs), and the violin part is in a single staff (treble clef). The key signature is one flat (B-flat), and the time signature is 2/4. The notation includes various musical symbols such as notes, rests, accidentals, and dynamic markings.

The 'Revision' musical score consists of ten systems, corresponding to the 'Original' score. It shows the same piano and violin parts as the original, but with several revisions indicated by different note values, accidentals, and phrasing. The key signature and time signature remain the same (one flat, 2/4).

Mr. Lambert noted about twenty similar instances of tampering, apart from alterations in scoring (these were determined by indications which the edition for pianoforte duet afforded), in the spacing of chords, and from suppressions of repeated bars.

Such are the bald facts. The questions that arise with regard to them are two: one of principle, and one of actual expediency. As regards the first, I cannot conceive how two opinions can be entertained. A composer's works should certainly be left to stand as he wrote them. We may think that the famous re-entry of the horn in Beethoven's 'Eroica,' or the 'superfluous' repeated bars in the Scherzo of the C minor Symphony, or the seven-note chord in the Finale of the Ninth are 'misprints' or errors of judgment (some people did, and it is surely possible to find some who do so still), but we rightly insist upon such passages being played exactly as transmitted to us. I fail to see why Borodin's or Moussorgsky's works should not be treated with equal respect.

Notices of the American edition of Rimsky-Korsakov's 'Memoirs of my Musical Life' have included a certain amount of discussion on the rights and wrongs of his version of 'Boris Godounov.' I do not see that any of the arguments adduced by the reviewers who are in favour of Rimsky-Korsakov's emendations (how many of these reviewers, by the way, have ever seen the genuine vocal score of 'Boris Godounov?') could apply to the emendations now carried out on Borodin's first Symphony. But Rimsky-Korsakov's own arguments are of a kind that might apply to both. So let us review them afresh.

One is, that the original version remains for everybody to examine and to prefer if they be so minded. This is true in theory, but hardly so in practice. Very few copies of the genuine 'Boris Godounov' (vocal score) remain in France (I used to know about a dozen people who possessed copies), and I doubt whether more than one would be found in England just now. As for the orchestral score, the one copy in existence is not easily accessible—in point of fact, the firm which for some time has been announcing a reprint of the genuine 'Boris Godounov' has entrusted the scoring to a British composer.

So much for 'Boris Godounov.' As regards the Borodin Symphony, I mentioned that Mr. Lambert's discoveries resulted from a comparison between the revised score and the pianoforte arrangement of the original. He, myself, and a couple of other critics interested in Russian music to whom he communicated the facts, were quite unable to find in England a copy of the original score, although many libraries, public and private, were searched, and not a few letters written.

Things, it is true, are not beyond remedy. Some day we may have a reprint of the genuine Borodin text, exactly as we may have a reprint of the genuine 'Boris.' But meanwhile what would be the position of a conductor desirous of performing Borodin's Symphony exactly as written? Or of the theatrical manager intent on giving us Moussorgsky's 'Boris' pure and simple?

These plain facts dispose of one of Rimsky-Korsakov's main arguments. His other plea, viz., that the emendations were indispensable for æsthetic reasons, has been dealt with so often that I had rather leave it alone until the time when all people whose opinions might count will be able to judge from actual comparison.

Among the arguments adduced by reviewers of the 'Memoirs,' one—published in the August Musical Times under the signature of my esteemed colleague C.—is that 'Certain attacks on Rimsky-Korsakov's editing of Moussorgsky leave the historical considerations out of court.' This rather puzzles me. I am aware, of course, that for many years after Moussorgsky's death, most Russians were heartily ashamed of him when they did not ignore or utterly despise him. But Rimsky-Korsakov's second and final revision of 'Boris Godounov' appeared in 1908—that is, at a time when 'liberties' far greater than any ever taken by Moussorgsky had become current among composers of many nations, and proved acceptable to countless music-lovers. At that time, the Russian musical public was already displaying a keen interest in Debussy, Ravel, and others whose music a magisterial blue pencil might have distorted far more than Moussorgsky's or Borodin's has been by their revisers. So that it appears to me, on the whole, that there are historical reasons why Rimsky-Korsakov might have reconsidered his emendations instead of resting satisfied with them.

Moussorgsky's music, like that of many other composers, may have called here and there for certain purely practical emendations to be carried out with the sole object of obviating unreasonable difficulties of performance. But more often, when the reviser or revisers altered passages in 'Boris' and in the Borodin Symphony, they did it simply because they considered that these passages would thus sound or look 'nicer'—a matter of opinion.

They may have been right in certain cases, wrong in others. There are probably few works in which a reviser would not find some passage which might sound or look 'nicer' if it was written otherwise. Berlioz might have suggested many improvements to the 'Tristan' Prelude, whose chromatism exasperated him; and Weber, judging by what he wrote of Beethoven's seventh Symphony, might have found that this work called for a good deal of alteration. I once received from a Russian composer a letter (which I shall never publish) in which it was pointed out that a certain piece by Ravel would be quite lovely if only the harmonies were changed throughout. And I am sure that wonderful results might be achieved by asking Mr. X. or Mr. Y., to edit, according to their own lights and æsthetic creeds, the music of Schönberg or Bartók.

In other words, the door must be closed on arbitrariness; it is a matter of principle, not of degree.

This remark brings me to my last point. It has been adduced that, after all, it is in Rimsky-Korsakov's revision that 'Boris Godounov' conquered Western Europe. This is not altogether accurate, because the first small group of believers in Moussorgsky's genius, who prepared the ground and in various ways co-operated in the triumph of 'Boris Godounov' at Paris, in 1908, had all studied the work in its original text, from which Pierre d'Alheim and his gifted wife introduced excerpts at Paris as early as 1896. But for the sake of argument let us take the assertion as it stands. Of course, 'Boris Godounov' was, and still is, performed in its revised form (at times with cuts more senseless than anything ever perpetrated in Russia), since no other course is possible. And, of course, the revised 'Boris Godounov,' though it loses, remains a thing of surpassing beauty. None of those who protested, and keep protesting, against the revision, would ever dream of alleging that Rimsky-Korsakov's alterations have done away with the significance of 'Boris Godounov,' any more than I am now trying to suggest that his and Glazounov's alterations to Borodin's Symphony have changed it beyond recognition. But it is the wantonness and pedantry of it all that true lovers of Borodin and Moussorgsky should deplore; likewise, from the ethical point of view, the intolerable wrong done to the memory of two men of genius. Thanks to the revisers, it has become possible for the veriest dabbles in musical topics to rush in with the assertion that 'Moussorgsky's music could never have endured as he wrote it'; and we may soon find the same thing said of Borodin's. Meanwhile, the line taken by the original publisher of the works to which I refer tends to obliterate all memory of the genuine texts.

The unfairness is even more patent in Borodin's case than in Moussorgsky's, for it cannot be alleged that it is in its revised form that Borodin's music first made headway, nor that historical reasons may be found to justify the revisers. Indeed, this first Symphony of his had stood the test of well-nigh half a century's wear before the revisers stepped in. As early as 1877, Liszt—certainly the shrewdest judge of other people's music that the world has ever seen—told Borodin:

Listen to no one, and follow your own path. Your music is always clear, ingenious, and original. Remember that Beethoven would never have become what he is had he followed other people's advice.

Since then, glowing tributes have been paid to Borodin's music by many writers and in many countries, and never has anything cropped up to suggest the need for a revision.

I wish to add, by way of conclusion, that I did not enjoy having to write this article any more than I enjoyed having to write those in which I protested against the revision of 'Boris Godounov.' I never ceased to love and respect Rimsky-Korsakov and Glazounov for many reasons, not the least of which were their utter simplicity, kindness, and sincerity of purpose. I well remember how the former, in the course of the few conversations which I had the good fortune to have with him, not only tolerated, but invited discussion on the subject of his attitude towards Moussorgsky and towards certain later innovators of whose music he disapproved. He never resented other people expressing their convictions as whole-heartedly as he expressed his own. And I am sure that Glazounov will take a similar view.

All lovers of Borodin will surely feel indebted to Mr. Lambert for his discovery. It will be necessary, of course, to apply the same process of comparison to revised editions of any works of Borodin put on the market of late years. And every effort should be made to ensure the survival and dissemination of Borodin's music as written by himself.

DEBUSSY AND OTHERS ON SULLIVAN

BY ANDREW DE TERNANT

Debussy said there were three Sullivans in the person of the popular English musician, viz., Sir Arthur Sullivan the society gentleman, Sullivan the imitator of Mendelssohn, and subsequently of Auber and Gounod, and Sullivan the pioneer of modern English comedy-opera. In the first period of his career as a composer there was very little to distinguish him from the crowd of well-known imitators of Mendelssohn, both British and foreign, excepting that he was far superior to the German, Carl Reinecke, and decidedly inferior to the Dane, Niels Gade. 'The Tempest' music is Mendelssohn all over, but the music to another Shakespearean play, 'Henry VIII.' (originally composed for Calvert's Manchester revival) reflects more the influence of Auber. The oratorio, 'The Light of the World,' is a combination of the styles of Mendelssohn and Gounod—the French master in the solos and the German in the choruses. The great weakness of the oratorio lies in its lack of cohesion, for the two styles do not always blend satisfactorily. Sullivan's 'Ivanhoe' is equal in merit to the majority of Massenet's operas produced at the Paris Grand Opéra, as it is also more vigorous and manly. Sullivan told Debussy in the course of a conversation in Paris that there was a question of the production of a French version at Brussels and Monte Carlo. As, however, 'Ivanhoe' was not given in either place during Sullivan's lifetime, the idea was evidently abandoned. Debussy considered 'The Golden Legend' to be Sullivan's best effort in the dramatic cantata form; it was, he said, pleasing and melodious, the opening scene, the belfry of Strasburg Cathedral, being a hundred times more satisfactory than Liszt's noisy setting of Longfellow's poem.

There was no phase in the history of music, said Debussy, to compare with the enormous success of the Savoy series of Gilbert-Sullivan operas. Offenbach had a brilliant period during the Second Empire with his opéra-bouffe, but his popularity waned with the eclipse of Napoleon III. He saved himself for posterity by 'The Tales of Hoffmann,' which properly belongs to the domain of real opera. Sullivan's works, which are in reality 'comedy-operas,' and not 'comic operas,' had not suffered by any political changes. Some of the characteristics of the Sullivanian style no doubt may be found in older composers, but, as a whole, it must be regarded as the invention of Sullivan. Its main prop was not a clap-trap waltz, as in Austro-German light opera, or a vulgar march, as in the American productions of the same sort.

Debussy had an opportunity of attending the performance of only one work—'H.M.S. Pinafore'—in London, when he was a boy, but he made up the deficiency by being an assiduous reader of the vocal scores. He realised that little was lost to the musician, even without a knowledge of the full scores. Sullivan was too much a master of his craft to write elaborate orchestration for a popular audience and for players of moderate ability. The Sullivan Savoy scores were easily obtainable at Paris, and Debussy knew a Parisian lady professor who used them for teaching pupils to read music at sight. Any well-trained choir-boy could read them at sight without the aid of a musical instrument. Debussy said he had been authoritatively informed that the Duc d'Aumale had presented an eleven-year-old chorister at St. Sulpice with a well-bound complete set of the Savoy operas as a reward for his facility in reading music at sight. Leoncavallo, who attended London performances of three of the Gilbert-Sullivan operas—viz., 'The Yeomen of the Guard,' 'Patience,' and 'The Gondoliers'—was loud in praise of the combined efforts of the composer and librettist. He found Gilbert's 'books' infinitely more brilliant than those of Carlo Goldoni, and the Englishman a more polished writer than the celebrated Venetian dramatist and opera librettist. Saint-Saëns, who never failed to attend performances at the Savoy Theatre during his visits to London, held that Sullivan was as much a satirist in musical notes as was Gilbert in the verbal text. Their repartees in collaboration often reminded him of the sarcasms of Voltaire.

Sullivan was a frequent visitor to Paris and the South of France. His intimate friends were practically the same as those of the English royalty and the bulk of the British aristocracy. This was the section which was more interested in yachting in the Mediterranean, horse-racing at Chantilly, and fox-hunting, than in music, art, and literature. Sir Arthur never approached the subject of music in this section of French society, and probably perceived that it was more appreciated as an accompaniment to dancing and as an amusement than as a fine art. Among servants and hotel proprietors he was generally known as Sir Sullivan or le Chevalier Sullivan, and sometimes as Lord Sullivan. It was once gravely announced in a Monte Carlo newspaper that 'le Chevalier Sullivan' was engaged to be married to a Princess of the House of Murat, which, of course, would have allied the English composer to the Bonaparte family. The late Princess Marie-Amélie of Orleans, who married Prince Waldemar of Denmark (brother of Queen Alexandra), said that Sir Arthur Sullivan was the greatest English wit in Parisian salons since Horace Walpole, and held that the brilliancy of his conversation recalled the 'maxims' of La Rochefoucauld.

Sullivan had few friends among the French musical profession. The only French composer of distinction for whom he seems to have had any cordial regard was Gounod. Their friendship dated from the years 1870-71, the period of the Franco-German War, when the composer of 'Faust' was a resident in London; and Sullivan never failed to call on him on every occasion he visited Paris. But the English composer was more often seen in the ateliers of the French painters than in Parisian musical circles. He was considered by several artists a connoisseur, and his recommendation was the means of disposing of many pictures to wealthy American collectors.

Debussy first met Sullivan at a soirée musicale given by Augusta Holmès (in reality, Holmes), the daughter of Irish parents, who became a naturalised Frenchwoman, and enjoyed in her day a great vogue as a woman composer. Debussy afterwards frequently saw Sullivan at the Café Tortoni, on the Boulevard des Italiens. When the acquaintance ripened into cordiality, Sullivan expressed his astonishment that a young French musician should have any interest in an English composer's work. He had always thought the French people considered England an unmusical nation. Sullivan once asked Debussy plainly if he had any intention of settling in England. On Debussy assuring him that such an idea had not entered into his calculations, Sullivan said that at last he had come across that rare bird, a foreign musician who was anxious to learn something about musical art on the other side of the Channel without any pecuniary motives. Sullivan deprecated flattery in any form. He had no objection to musical criticism, no matter its severity, provided there was no personal bias. Some of his compatriots were more unfair to him than foreign critics, who had not the same opportunities for becoming acquainted with his work. The head of the English musical profession (Sir George Macfarren) had contributed to an encyclopædia the facile phrase that he was 'the English Offenbach'—a remark which had been frequently quoted against him, and, greatly to Sullivan's annoyance, had been reproduced in French and German publications. It was not intended as a compliment, but as a sneer. A little judicious reflection will, however, prove it to have been entirely erroneous. First of all, there was not the slightest analogy between the 'books' of Offenbach's librettists, Meilhac and Halévy, and those of W. S. Gilbert. Any student of dramatic literature can find this out for himself. The Frenchmen covered a longer period of universal social history; the Englishman's plots did not cover much more than eighty years of the 19th century. With the exception of 'The Gondoliers' and 'The Mikado,' they were thoroughly English and local in character. What annoyed the English musical profession, and also the critics of the leading London newspapers, was that Sullivan was the first to proclaim in England the genius of Offenbach. During the 'sixties and 'seventies of the 19th century, Offenbach was generally considered to be a charlatan rather than a musician. Lord Beaconsfield once said to Sullivan, 'Offenbach is a merry clown in the service of Napoleon III.'

Another grudge against Sullivan was that he composed music for money. He was not ashamed to own that he did so. But when a novelist makes a fortune with one or two novels the only remark that is uttered about him in literary circles is that he is a lucky man. The same is said in the sister arts of painting and sculpture. But music in England in the last decades of the 19th century was still a Cinderella; there even were a number of musicians living in hope of a revival of the system of patronage. Sullivan had little faith in that sort of thing. There will be state and municipal opera in London and the English provincial towns when there is a public demand for it, but certainly not before. In the meanwhile it is useless to attempt the taxation of the unmusical in favour of the musical. It would probably cause the outbreak of a minor revolution or provoke a general election, and would be more harmful than helpful to musical art.

Sullivan said that though he completed his musical education in Germany, according to the English custom of the period, he was always partial to French and Italian music. In his early manhood he burnt much midnight oil in studying the scores of Monsigny, Grétry, and Dalayrac; and he spent sleepless nights in analysing the wonderful little score of 'Le Roi et le Fermier,' of Monsigny, the libretto of which is based on the comedy known in England as 'The Miller of Mansfield,' and the same composer's 'Le Déserteur,' which had been adapted (or rather disfigured) for the English stage by Charles Dibdin. Grétry's 'Richard Cœur de Lion' excited him to frenzy. Blondel's song, 'Richard, O mon Roi,' had played a prominent part in the opening of the French Revolution. It was the favourite song of the unfortunate Queen Marie Antoinette, and also of the wife of Sullivan's royal friend, the Duke of Edinburgh. During the composition of his 'Patience' he had the greatest difficulty in tearing himself away from the score of Dalayrac's 'Nina.' The curious music-lover who will take the trouble to make a comparison will understand what this means. In those simple, unpretending, and nearly forgotten scores, will be found the germ of Offenbach and Lecocq in France, Johann Strauss and Millöcker in Austria and Germany, and Sullivan in England.

INDIVIDUALITY IN MUSIC

BY THOMAS ARMSTRONG

Individuality in art, as in life, can exist to the onlooker only by means of his own perceptions, and if it could exist apart from its expression it might be said to be valueless. A personality in life is expressed by manners, habits, speech, clothes; any action, indeed, is an outcome and a part of personality; and in so far as personality cannot exist without expression of itself, perceived by others, it must be considered as inseparable from the manner of its expression. This is not, however, equivalent to a statement that personality is expression, or is nothing more than conterminous with it; for although the two are inseparable, and one cannot fully exist without the other, the one may truly be said to be of more importance to the union than the other. An electric current and a bulb are necessary for the lighting of a room; the current may be said to have no real existence for the man left in the dark, until it has been connected with a bulb. But it does not follow from this that when the room is adequately lighted, bulb and current are of equal importance.

In art this truth is expressed by the statement that style and matter are inseparable. For purposes of criticism they have often been divorced; but to force them apart in this way cannot be sound, even if it is actually possible, since a style can be fully appreciated only in connection with its matter, and matter perceived only through style. A composer's style, then, is part of his individuality. But not all of his individuality is contained in the tricks of style that so often help to mark an individuality: a personality is expressed not merely in the turn of a cadence, in the cast of a phrase, in the symmetry of a movement, but in the quality of emotion that lies behind the work as a whole. This background of experience, this moment of vision, remembered more or less vividly, as it were, in the colder hours of work, makes by its quality the quality of the whole composition.

There are, of course, in every composer's work, passages of pure temporization, written as coldly as an exercise in counterpoint, in which the composer falls back upon little devices that are easily recognisable and easily copied. It is upon these little tricks of style that the eager copyist pounces—tricks acquired in carelessness and used in idleness, in no way expressing true individuality, except perhaps the carelessness and idleness that are part of the composer's personality. But such flimsy plagiarism as this, the mere copying of an affected gesture, will deceive nobody.

Again, it is possible for a dominating character, as teacher, or friend, or even as the unseen ideal of a younger man, so to impress itself upon a weaker character, that this character will unconsciously become like the stronger. The pupil will acquire his master's way of thinking, of visualising, of moulding his material. In extreme cases, such as that of Chopin and the young Scriabin, the super-imposition of the stronger personality is so marked that when the pupil opens his mouth it is the voice of the master that speaks, speaks his own message in his own manner through other lips. A certain modern English Quartet testifies to the strength of Ravel's personality. A casual listener, hearing certain phrases, might say, 'That is clearly Ravel.' And it is Ravel—Ravel impressed, absorbed, and given out again, not in plagiarism, but willy-nilly. On hearing the whole work, however, the listener could never be deceived in this way. He would feel at once, in the work as a whole, the lack of some quality essential to Ravel's individuality. His harmony, perhaps, is there, some of his little tricks are performed, his tune appears; but his clear, cool, detached, delicate outlook is not there. Behind the work there is another personality trying to express itself. In its lack of the essential delicacy, it partly succeeds. It blunders, and is hampered. It has too much to say for this highly polished way of speech. It is certainly not Ravel, although it has some of his characteristics. What is it, then, that makes the difference, and that gives one individuality or another to the work? Surely it is the main conception, the first emotional experience, which the composer is trying to express, that is the vital spark. And it is in so far as the work expresses an emotional experience of quality—individual, as it were, to this one man and composer—that it is a work of individuality and of value.

There is, however, one case in which this view seems to break down. In the case of a great national school, such as the English polyphonic school, it is often extremely difficult to find any marked individuality at all except among the very greatest artists. Among madrigal writers, for instance, anyone can tell the work of Gibbons from that of Weelkes; but most of us would find it hard to pick out from a pile of nameless MSS. a madrigal by Benet and a madrigal by Bateson. To many they would seem interchangeable. But even then there is no real collapse. The great impulse, be it patriotic or what it may, that produces a national school is strong enough to impress its individuality on artists, to the detriment, it may be, of their own. In this case, not the mere style, but the very individuality itself is impressed upon the composer, and the original impulse dictated to him. The individuality, however, is still in the impulse, and not by any means in the peculiarities of technique. In literature a parallel may be found in the case of the Elizabethan or even the Caroline poets. The sonnet 'Since there's no help, come, let us kiss and part' is attributed by some to Drayton, by others to Shakespeare; not because it merely copies Shakespeare's mannerisms, but because it strongly expresses a peculiarly strong and almost national individuality. Who could confidently contradict me if, in the absence of external evidence, I maintained that the sonnet was by Henry Constable or Philip Sidney?

It appears then that individuality in music, though inseparable from style, really begins before questions of style are apparent, in the emotional experience that is at the root of the impulse to compose, and whose quality and intensity govern the ultimate value of the work. Mannerisms and tricks which may be inseparably connected with the personality of a composer, are of importance only so long as that composer's whole personality is connected with them. Detached from it, and assumed by copyists, they no longer express any individuality at all, except perhaps a leaning in the direction of petty larceny. Musically speaking, that slight expression of individuality can be regarded as of no importance.

---

The Musician's Bookshelf

---

'Variations on the Theme of Music.' By W. J. Turner.

[Heinemann, 8s. 6d.]

'The extraordinary confusion of mind of our musical editor, and, with him, of most musicians (for I stand almost alone in my position) . . .'

We have opened the book at p. 214. This author must be a very important young man!

P. 220: 'Now I do not pretend to expect many people to understand me.'

Mr. Turner demolishes Croce in a page and a quarter. Well, well!

Mr. Turner insists somewhere that the 'robust artist' benefits by abuse, so he will not mind our saying that in his Variations there is extremely little music—the Variations are really on the theme of himself, a self that is inclined all the time to be somewhat irritable, unreasonable, and unhappy. And, on the subject of music, the reader would like him to be a little better informed.

Music is only one source of his peevishness. The misfortune of being domiciled in England is another. 'My country [England]' is 'the land of shams.' So Mr. Turner has discovered the Utopia which isn't? Yes—but you would never guess where it is. Munich—that arch-sham Italian town!

At Munich he does not mind them singing Mozart in German (though he is very scornful of opera in English at home), and he is enormously impressed on hearing of the 'ninth rehearsal—just think of it!'—of a forthcoming choral work. Has he never heard of the Festivals of Leeds, Norwich, and the Three Choirs? They say the Norwich choir rehearsed for eighteen months for the recent Festival. No one is proud of the under-rehearsing of so many musical performances in England, but after all Nikisch gave the palm for choral singing to Leeds, and he knew rather more about Germany than Mr. Turner.

'The self-complacency of Englishmen surpasses that of any other race on the globe.' Strange! For our part, in intercourse with musical Germans, Frenchmen, Italians, and Americans, we have come across self-complacency—and even in a degree sometimes that would be accounted intolerable bad manners in this land of shams.

Elsewhere, if Mr. Turner can recognise the doughtiness of the North Country choirs, it is only to find a stick with which to beat the South, and in particular the London suburbs. Mr. Turner never tires of his jibes at the suburbs. In the long run there is a very offensive snobbishness about his talk of 'the self-satisfied bourgeois masses' of 'Clapham, Balham, Muswell Hill, Highgate, Wimbledon, and Putney' (p. 229). 'As for the Cockneys, the Londoners, the five or six million inhabitants of Suburbia—well, God help them, for they certainly are incapable of helping themselves' (p. 8).

'The average suburban Londoner who considers himself or herself to be "musical," has never even heard of the "Promenades"' (p. 205).

This would be called sheer silliness on the lips of any but a young man of known cleverness.

The Royal Choral Society is 'trebly damned,' but the Philharmonic Choir is ignored.

Mr. Turner went all the way to Brighton to hear Mr. Adrian Beecham's 'Merchant of Venice.' He revels in its inanity. But he falsely gives the impression that this sort of thing is representative of 'the land of shams.' The thing was not worth mentioning, but it serves our author's purpose, leading him to the moral—the decadence of England. 'Another century, perhaps, and there will be no more of them [Englishmen of true genius]. God will have given us up.'

It is interesting then to see how Mr. Turner treats Englishmen of genius. On p. 221 he is dividing the sheep from the goats of his artistic preferences. He brackets Sir Edward Elgar with Miss Ethel Dell. Then there is a chapter on 'The Perfect Fool.' Mr. Turner tells the plot in five pages. He dismisses Holst's music, in which he finds reminiscences of Saint-Saëns—yes, Saint-Saëns—in nine contemptuous lines.

The book abounds in slips and disputable statements, possibly excusable in ephemeral journalism (the original form of most of it). Sir Charles Stanford was never head of the Royal College of Music (p. 106). There are direct contradictions. Londoners (like people in every other city in the world) will flock to 'Madame Butterfly,' yet 'the house is probably never more than half-full for "The Valkyrie"' (p. 301). But in order to censure an opera company for frequent changes of bill, we read: 'For more than a week before the second performance of "The Valkyrie" it was impossible to book seats, and there must have been thousands of people who were anxious to hear the Wagner and Mozart operas who were given no opportunity to do so' (p. 179).

It is a sheer misrepresentation of Ruskin to say (p. 283): 'To Ruskin Gothic architecture was morally virtuous, and that was why it was good architecture. It was designed and built by honest workmen, workmen who lived virtuous lives, did not know the meaning of divorce, and who consequently never botched or scamped a job.' Either Mr. Turner has never really read Ruskin, or he is rather shabbily cheating by putting 'morally' for 'spiritually.'

Bach's '53 Cantatas are a monument of misapplied energy.' Why '53,' and which? 'I maintain that Bach's religious music is, from the religious point of view, shallow, because it is a mere perfunctory adornment of a religion, not the expression of a fresh religious activity.'

Our bright youth again—he always must say something no one thought of saying before!

This Mr. Turner who finds the Passions, the Cantatas, and the Mass so shallow religiously, is able to come out with: 'The hymn is an Anglo-Teutonic contrivance for getting exercise in Church before the Sunday dinner' (p. 202). This is an untruth, and not funny.

'Concert selections from "The Ring" are merely a meaningless noise' (p. 194). A silly overstatement.

'The majority of artists in this country view the accession of a Labour Government to office with a mingling of joy and misgiving. . . . The Labour Party will support art and artists with deeds where the other parties have damned them with faint and suspicious praise.' Ah! Coming to think of it, we do remember the B.N.O.C. party at 11, Downing Street, last June. How long ago it seems!

'The daily Press has been largely responsible for this high altitude of the prima donna.' Not a bit of it. Her 'altitude' was much higher in the days of Handel, of Mozart, and of Rossini.

'Londoners do not often have the opportunity to hear real singing' (p. 196). 'Very little of Mozart's music is heard in London' (p. 159). And we ask, Where in the world does our bright young man live? These are simple questions of fact. What would Mr. Turner say if he lived in Italy, where Mozart's operas are unknown? As for the singers, he would find it hard to name a good singer who does not come to London.

Mr. Turner has his ideas about singing, and again we can correct him on points of fact. Madame Gerhardt is his ideal, and for once he forgets to 'grouse.' But he praises her for the wrong virtues. Madame Gerhardt is an eminent artist, and she devotes herself to music of more earnestness and sentiment than does the Italian singer Mr. Turner disparages. But is Madame Gerhardt's legato 'immensely more difficult to achieve' than the florid singing of Madame Tetrazzini? The answer is that Madame Gerhardt's legato is not by any means always well assured, and under stress of excitement she frequently loses control of her breath. In fact she achieves her moving effects in spite of notoriously imperfect technics.

She breathes in gasps, her high notes are very frequently 'open' and ugly. Extol her musical feeling, by all means. But avoid, if you are discreet, praising the lady for merely overcoming difficulties (which she doesn't), in comparing her with a consummate technician! But 'Madame Tetrassini—I frankly confess I did not go to hear her, having heard her in opera at Covent Garden without being moved.'

When Mr. Turner goes on to say that 'there are hardly any good singers in England,' we suspect that on other occasions, too, he frankly did not go to hear. Let us name a few who have managed to be tolerated lately by less supercilious persons: John Coates, Horace Stevens, and Norman Allin, Dorothy Silk and Florence Austral, Anne Thursfield, Megan Foster, and Margaret Balfour, Walter Hyde, Robert Radford, and Walter Widdop. What are we to say of their airy dismissal? Surely that, if England is the land of shams, a sham musical critic completes the picture.

Does all this amount to our urging the young man to go back to his play-writing and leave the musicians alone?

No. For the book is redeemed by some good pages on Mozart, and some readable remarks on Strauss and Saint-Saëns. These are an earnest of what Mr. Turner may one day do when he has cured himself—robust artists profit by abuse, so here goes!—of his dyspeptic sneers and overweening self-conceit.

C.

'The Reminiscences of a Fiddle Dealer.' By David Laurie.

[T. Werner Laurie, 7s. 6d.]

Mr. Laurie's reminiscences extend over a considerable period of busy years in which the author, a Glasgow violin-dealer, initiated the famous Tarisio, and bought and sold fiddles in England, in France, in Belgium, in Italy, and in Germany. The experience thus gained was, of course, exceedingly valuable. But the interest of this volume goes much further for, in a simple, artless way, it tells of a life's devotion as well as of a life's work; of a passionate love of the subject which went so far beyond material gain as to refuse profit when it meant giving a good violin to one who could not appreciate its value; it tells of a healthy curiosity which sent the author inquiring wherever the opportunity offered about the habits, virtues, and peculiarities of the famous musicians of his time. Thus he has something to say of Paganini as well as of Paganini's fiddle, of Baillot and Lady Hallé, as well as of Stradivari and Guarnerius. There is another point in his favour: Mr. Laurie tells his story briefly. And this is what few writers of reminiscences appear able to do. The past has for them a glamour they would convey somehow to their readers, but they rarely perceive the difficulties of the task they have undertaken. Mr. Laurie's record, wholly innocent of sentiment and sentimentality, is infinitely more human than any prima donna's account of her triumphs and tears.

Incidentally we are told something about one of the most puzzling personalities of the last century, and although this is only a sidelight it is of considerable importance, for indeed we have only sidelights now to help us to seek the secrets of Paganini's art. Mr. Laurie never heard Paganini play, but he lived on terms of intimacy with Paganini's contemporaries and neglected no opportunity to gather information. He applied to Vuillaume, whose son-in-law, Alard, often played duets with Paganini; he applied to Sivori, the only known pupil of Paganini. The mystery remains, but Mr. Laurie's testimony confirms something that seemed too fantastic to be true. A Scotsman heard Paganini play, and such was his emotion that he had to leave the hall before the concert was half-way through, 'crying like a child.' Mr. Laurie being himself a Scot, we may presumably acquit him of any intention to jest on the well-known and wholly praiseworthy parsimony of the race. At any rate, such was the sway Paganini exercised over the public that the wildest stories were believed by shrewd people like Vuillaume. The famous French maker had ridiculed in public the absurd tales that were being repeated at Paris. But when Paganini called at his shop to have his bow mended, he was not above suggesting certain alterations which would enable him to find out whether, as was reported, the bow was really 'hollow and filled with small leaden bullets which ran up and down as required'—to which trick, according to the Parisian audiences, Paganini owed his wonderful staccato.

Many another story adds something to what we know of the great players of the last generation. Incidentally we are told that De Beriot had a strong predilection for Maggini violins of the large model, because of their greater tone qualities. This we take as a much-needed reminder of the fact that De Beriot's speciality was a big tone—a fact which Herr Paul David and other contributors to recent dictionaries and encyclopædias appear to have entirely forgotten. Of Lady Hallé we hear of the anxious care she had for her fiddle, and how she came to buy the famous 'Ernst' Strad from the author. Apparently fiddles are like dogs, in that once they are given a bad name nothing can prevent their bad end. The 'Ernst' Stradivari had a bad reputation. Ernst himself, failing in health, attributed perhaps to his violin weaknesses which were probably the result of his own impaired powers. When Mr. Laurie offered the violin to Lady Hallé (then Madame Neruda) she requested him 'not to trouble about it, as it would not be worth while' to see and examine it. But Mr. Laurie was himself something of a violinist. He had faith in his own judgment. He showed the violin to Lady Hallé, and as soon as she and Sir Charles Hallé heard its tone both fell in love with it, and the purchase was made. In defence of Ernst, however, it should be added that violins get tired of being played by one man, no matter how eminent, and that these fickle things will give to a new wooer what they deny to the old and faithful one. A deal of nonsense has been written by imaginative romancers about the souls of violins. But certain facts are known to all who have had the good fortune to play at some time or other on fiddles of famous makers. For instance, a violin often must warm to its work, and there is no greater delight than to feel it grow responsive under one's hand. Violins are sensitive to atmosphere and weather. Mr. Laurie asserts that they actually suffer from sea sickness, and that they take a couple of weeks to recover from a rough Channel crossing. We do not pretend to be able to diagnose and name the disease, but there is nothing to strain commonsense in the assertion that a violin must feel the effects of a rough tossing on the sea. A readable and instructive volume. F. B.

'The New Music.' By George Dyson.

[Oxford University Press, 8s. 6d.]

'A Survey of Contemporary Music.' By Cecil Gray.

[Oxford University Press, 7s. 6d.]

A year or so ago Dr. George Dyson gave a lecture on 'The Texture of Modern Music.' It was widely discussed, not only because of its content, but also because of the skill with which the lecturer illustrated his remarks at the pianoforte. Published a little later in Music and Letters, the lecture did more than stand the ordeal of cold print; it placed the author at once among the handful of men who are both fine musicians and admirable writers. But the subject was too big for a lecture or magazine article, even of the longest, and it is all to the good that Dr. Dyson has found time to expand his argument.

To review adequately a book so full of meat one would need almost to write another; certainly in the limited space here available one can do no more than discuss a few of its points, or, alternatively, whet the reader's appetite by some extracts. On the whole, the latter plan is to be preferred, mainly because it gives a better idea of the scope of the work. Discussion of its parts can be indulged in at any time.

Dr. Dyson is so reasonable in his views on programme music that he can even find a good word for the 'Moonlight' label of the C sharp minor Sonata:

For some folk the 'Moonlight' Sonata is definitely enriched by the suggestions that its posthumous title conveys.

But he points out the danger to music in the increasing tendency of the public to demand 'meanings' and 'programmes,' and in the too-ready compliance of some composers:

That music can be related to many other forms of experience, to poetry, to landscape, to drama, and so forth, is one of its glories, and it would be a deadening philosophy that should proscribe a faculty because it is capable of abuse. What must be insisted on is that the artist himself shall know what is proper to his art and what is not. Moonshine in music is the prerogative of the listener, not of the creator.

A point that is often overlooked in the discussion and performance of old music is well made in the following passage:

Without variations of quality and quantity in the sounds produced, music is for us comparatively lifeless. What is now commonly understood as expression would hardly exist under such limitations. Yet there has been a music which thrived on a very crude apparatus of this nature. The early organs, for instance, paid little attention to detailed variations of quantity or quality of sound, and classical organ music is still best interpreted in comparatively broad masses of flat tone. The characteristic repose and grandeur of it are ruined if the attention is too much usurped by artifices of expression of the modern sort.

The beauty of music can be enshrined in factors far more simple than we of this complicated age are apt to assume.

And he goes on to show that in certain types of vocal music a similar principle holds good. In Church music, for example, the more violent dynamic contrasts are æsthetically out of place. He might have added to 'the purest forms of religious music' a large proportion of the madrigal school, wherein moods not only of the contemplative sort are expressed by other and more subtle means than contrasts of power and colour.

Moreover, an increasing number of musicians are wearying of the modern composer's insistence on colour at the expense of line, and are turning more and more to chamber music. Probably a good deal of the astonishing popularity of Bach is due to the normal musician's desire for thematic and rhythmic vitality—a desire which is only partly satisfied by most modern music, wherein the interest is almost entirely confined to the rhythm and harmony.

On the modern composers' exploitation of rhythm for its own sake, Dr. Dyson says pertinent things:

When standards of appreciation are shifted on to a rhythmic or quantitative base, there is at least a risk that the purity of music in the melodic sense will progressively degenerate. That we are already in the toils of such a movement is shown by the part which the exploitation of rhythm, as such, now plays in the appraisal of music. Education itself has embraced it. There are not a few systems of musical training, of high repute, which appear to affirm that the modern view of rhythm is a kind of royal road in the art. To Bach such an idea would have seemed too childish for discussion. To Palestrina it would have been literally meaningless. Are we quite so sure of our ground?

He discusses with acuteness Bach's attitude towards rhythm, showing the gulf between Bach's day and ours by a good example of rhythm as an end in itself:

Holst [he says] begins his 'Fugal Overture' thus:

Ex. 1.

Bach did not announce the C minor Fugue thus:

Ex. 2.

Dr. Dyson has no use for over-realistic dynamism. Speaking of the opening of the battle section of 'Ein Heldenleben,' and that maddening drum rhythm at the start of Holst's 'Mars,' he asks, 'To what end'?

That this is war is not even a half truth. We smile at Purcell's little realisms of this kind. So will posterity smile at us. In any event, what has music to do with such simplicities? War is a state of the soul, and only in some form of psychic translation can it come into music at all. It is not to be represented by vicarious marching. It is drill which is rhythmic, not fighting. The vicarious march, and its near relative, the vicarious dance, find a ready response in the public pulse, and they can be exploited to the verge of hysteria. None the less, however, they are the temporary tricks of the trade. The intuition of the cultivated music-lover has indeed always told him that rhythmic violence must in the end defeat itself. The 20th century can indeed make more actual noise than the 19th, and it can therefore offer what for a moment seems to be a more imposing climax. But it is only the big drum's superiority over the little one, and the more noise it makes the more tiresome it is.

(None the less, lots of us will continue to enjoy 'Mars'.)

Another modern development that is already wearing thin is the studied avoidance of concords and the perfect cadence. Composers are yet a long way from realising that incessant dissonance soon becomes far more monotonous than the diatonic simplicity on which it is supposed to be an 'advance.' Of course, it is not necessarily a sign of 'progress'; much of it is even a retrograde movement Spohrwards. It is merely Spohr up-to-date.

As for those fashionable 'escaped chords,' 'ellipses,' and other self-conscious efforts to dodge the plain musical facts of speech, they may easily be carried so far that, like the insistence on rhythm for its own sake, they end in defeating the composer's object. Dr. Dyson points out, apropos of Debussy's ending a movement with an unresolved dissonance left in the air, increasing familiarity with a close of this kind makes us accept such a dissonance as a point of rest, and so . . . this chord may then become, as it actually has become in certain contemporary schools, invested with a finality, and incidentally with the monotony, that adheres to any conventional formula.

Similarly, a composer may, in the jargon of the elect, 'eliminate the unessential' until he ceases to be coherent. It matters little to his hearers that the logic of a passage is clear to him; they have no concern with anything but their end of the transaction:

It is not that the composer himself may not be able to think in comparatively cryptic terms. There is no doubt that he can and does. But the habit becomes dangerous when an impression is given, however unintentionally, that to be profound it is necessary to be abstruse. Then the imitators may flock together, and begin to say nothing with impressive obscurity.

Dr. Dyson does not discuss composers save incidentally, but he contrives to give us a pretty conclusive verdict on Stravinsky. Like most of us, he sees little in the Stravinsky of the String Quartet pieces, 'Histoire du Soldat,' and other post-Petrouchka efforts. Stravinsky may come back, like a forgotten or discredited boxer, but the signs are not propitious.

Dr. Dyson tries to get at the reasons for the limited popularity of the admittedly beautiful music of Delius. There is a good deal in his theory that Delius suffers from not having written short, easy works, especially for pianoforte. (But neither did Wagner, and when all allowance is made for the popularity his music has gained through the easy pianoforte arrangements of some of his early works, it must be remembered that the bulk of the popularity came before the arrangements had been made.) A concert given a few days ago, with a programme made up entirely of Delius's chamber music and songs, appears to have supplied the real reason. On all sides the impression seems to have been one of monotony. That ceaselessly-shifting harmony of Delius's soon cloyes. Wagner's often shifts as much, but at the back of it is a contrapuntal interest which saves the situation. There is the additional factor that Delius is almost continuously contemplative, and, as Dr. Dyson says, 'an art of pure contemplation is not easy to practise in this 20th century of ours.'

Here, with a rich store of marked passages yet untouched, this review must end. We have all been taking stock, more or less, during the past few years, some by writing articles, others by talking, the majority by listening only. A comprehensive summing-up was due, and one cannot see how the job could have been better done than by Dr. Dyson. If his findings, on the whole, are unfavourable to contemporary composers, it cannot be denied that he reaches them by a method that is as dispassionate as it is scholarly.

(One small grumble: the numerous musical illustrations are trying to the eye, being reproduced very minutely from MS.)

Mr. Cecil Gray goes over some of the same ground as Dr. Dyson, and it may be said at once that he starts out with a big stick. He is, presumably, a younger man than the Doctor, and evidently a less good musician—two conditions that naturally inspire him with confidence. Hence his general attitude of 'I'm tellin' yer.' Never, surely, have so many composers been put up only to be knocked down. Strauss, Elgar, Debussy, Stravinsky, Scriabin—there is short shrift for all. As for de Falla, d'Indy, Dukas, Holst, Vaughan Williams, Bax, Goossens, and a dozen others, they are lumped together in a chapter headed 'Minor Composers,' a few receiving an encouraging pat, the rest being handed an unmistakable clout. See, for example, how Mr. Gray disposes of a not inconsiderable group of Frenchmen:

Florent Schmitt, Roger-Ducasse, Roussel, de Séverac, and many others have written a vast quantity of music, mostly in the manner of Debussy and Ravel, of no significance whatever.

There! That'll learn 'em!

The reader begins to wonder if any living composers have the luck to hit Mr. Gray's taste. Well, there appear to be four: Delius, Sibelius, Béla Bartók, and Bernard van Dieren. The last of these is no more than a mere name to the general musical public, scarcely any of his music having been published. I myself would be prepared to think there might be something in the 'neglected genius' picture drawn by Mr. Gray had I not heard an entire van Dieren programme some years ago, and the Gargantua Introit at Queen's Hall last season. I may yet be converted, but so far van Dieren strikes me as being one of the drier of composers—a view which I believe is shared by most of those who have heard any considerable amount of his music. But this lack of appreciation on our part is not surprising, seeing that van Dieren, according to Mr. Gray, . . . stands almost alone, a figure apart, remote and inaccessible in his tour d'ivoire.

As soon as Mr. van Dieren can bring himself to descend from that tower, mix with the rest of us, and deliver a message that we can take in—as Bach, Handel, and every other composer worth his salt has done—he will find us ready to listen. At present, on Mr. Gray's admission, the inaccessibility is not on our part.

The fact is, Mr. Gray himself shows some of this same aloofness. It is no bad thing that his likes and dislikes are powerful; the weakness of his position is that his preferences seem to be due largely to a kind of cussedness (there is no other word for it). The fact of a modern composer being popular appears to be a good and sufficient reason for Mr. Gray's looking round for a half-brick. This may be a mistaken assumption, but it is the honest impression one gets from the book. His violent and reckless attitude makes one distrust his judgment. In his Preface he lays down a critical principle that won't stand looking at closely. After disclaiming infallibility—quite unnecessarily—and saying that he is prepared to stand or fall by his æsthetic judgments—also unnecessarily, for every critic has to be ready to do so without preliminary flourish—he goes on :

Why should one be afraid of being wrong? Only fools are always right. All positive and constructive criticism is of value, even when it is wholly wrong-headed.

No one should let the fear of being wrong stop him from fearlessly expressing his views; but he is a poor critic who doesn't let this same fear make him think twice before committing himself. If rightness is the prerogative of fools, then only the wise are always wrong. And one can no more base a valuable constructive criticism on thoroughgoing wrong-headedness than he can build a house on a foundation that is askew. Again :

No doubt it is good to be always right.

In other words, it is good to be always a fool! No; this sort of thing won't wash. Mr. Gray has us with him when he attacks 'colourless, non-committal timidities of ordinary art critics,' but he joins Mr. van Dieren in splendid isolation when he asks us to see any virtue in mere wrong judgment for its own sake. But of course he doesn't really mean this; it is merely his little way—a youthful desire to make us sit up and regard him as a devil of a fellow.

An even more serious defect in his critical method is revealed here :

If anything, I must confess to an uneasy suspicion that in the following pages I have tended rather to overpraise the objects of my sympathy and admiration than to underestimate those of my dislike and antipathy.

Nobody is likely to object to a critic's seeing in his favourites more virtues than are apparent to the rest of us. An enthusiastic bias of the sort is likely to set his readers investigating for themselves, often with favourable results. But what critical judgment worth a rap was ever based on 'dislike and antipathy'? This ominous sentence in the Preface is only too well fulfilled in the book itself, as could be shown by more quotations than can be given here. Of course it makes lively reading, and there is no denying that Mr. Gray touches off plenty of successful verbal fireworks. But he must not be surprised if we refuse to see in these pyrotechnics many signs of 'positive and constructive criticism,' even though we cannot escape the 'wrongheadedness' that in Mr. Gray's opinion may sometimes be the foundation of such criticism. And after his dictum about fools being always right, the awkward fact remains that in one or two cases Mr. Gray has certainly managed to qualify for inclusion in that large army. His chapter on Scriabin, for example, is so right that (no doubt to his intense annoyance) he has the majority with him. Mr. Gray 'sees through' Scriabin without a doubt, just as a good many of the critics who take some thought and care to be right saw through him years ago. The trouble with Mr. Gray is that having showily belaboured a composer who is down, he proceeds to apply the same treatment to one who happens to be very much up. A critic may easily point out weaknesses in Elgar, but one who pooh-poohs all but a handful of his works will find that in the long run it is not the composer who has been 'shown up.'

The book will be read, as was implied above, with enjoyment—even with amusement, though the latter will not be limited to the places where Mr. Gray meant to be funny. But only the very youthful and uninitiated will be serious over a writer whose criticism is reckless and passionate rather than balanced and dispassionate. However, such methods end in nobody's being a penny the worse. The book will probably do Mr. Gray no good (a fact that will no doubt delight him), and it will certainly do the objects of his aversion no harm. (This will please him less.)

H. G.

Occasional Notes

In the Yorkshire Post recently Mr. Herbert Thompson spoke his mind on the 'star' system, with special reference to the Galli-Curci boom. He did this journal the honour of quoting from the article in our November issue entitled 'Galli-Curci-itis,' whereupon a Galli-Curci-ite wrote pointing out that on another page of that same Musical Times was a notice of the singer's Albert Hall concert containing such eulogistic remarks as 'Madame Galli-Curci sang very beautifully . . . She is a lovely singer of classical Italian music,' and so on.

The writer appeared to see some inconsistency in this, but, as Mr. Thompson replied, the Musical Times article dealt with Galli-Curci's publicity methods, not with her singing. A performance is judged on its merits, and a singer's activities outside the concert-hall do not affect a critic's judgment. A parallel case is that of Madame Frieda Hempel. The fact that on page 1124 of the present number her delightful singing receives justice does not prevent us from dealing frankly in this part of the journal with what we believe to be a weak and tasteless side of her publicity methods—the use of Jenny Lind's name, costume, and repertory.

Like others in the journalistic world, we received an invitation to the tea-party given by Madame Hempel to a gathering of old folk who heard Jenny Lind sing. There was a good deal of preliminary chatter in the daily papers a day or two beforehand as to Madame's having interrupted a concert tour in order to dash to London for the party. We do not grudge the assembled octogenarians their cheering cup, nor the pleasure of meeting their hostess. But we have our doubts as to whether the party would have taken place had there been no chance of Press publicity beforehand. Surely a singer so well able to stand on her own merits as Madame Hempel needs no stunts of this kind. The singing of a portion of her programme attired as Jenny Lind is an even worse decline. We do not find equally eminent violinists and pianists coming on in fancy dress as Paganini or Liszt. Having gone so far, why doesn't Madame Hempel carry the idea farther, and discard the concert grand for an old upright with a silk front? Her accompanist, we believe, has been put into the quaint garb that men wore seventy years ago, but here again there was a lack of courage: he should have worn also the whiskers of the period. Presumably, the Jenny Lind stunt is successful in America, but there has been enough frank, adverse comment in the English Press to lead to its being dropped. Apparently, however, only two factors can save a performer from such lapses—good taste and a sense of humour. There is irony in the fact that the great artist whose name and fame are thus misused was herself the most modest of all the famous singers. Now, if Madame Hempel really wishes to copy Jenny Lind, here is a rare and precious characteristic that she might well think about.

We are sorry to hear that the Gervase Elwes Fund for Musicians is badly in need of funds. Since its inception it has spent wisely and well about £4,000, and there are at present some deserving cases waiting. As our readers know, the Fund was started with the object of helping young students to defray the cost of their musical education. In future, however, the major portion of the Fund will be devoted to Samaritan work among professional musicians, and already a good deal has been done in this way. The committee points out that the Fund can be firmly established, and its beneficent work extended, if the rank and file of the profession give it proper support. As an obvious and easy way of helping, it is suggested that choral societies, small and large, should set aside for the Fund the proceeds, or a proportion of the proceeds, of one concert per year. We hope the appeal will meet with a hearty response.

More than once our columns have contained reference to the unscrupulous misuse of press criticisms. We have given examples in which, by means of the elimination of a word here and there, an unfavourable notice has been made to say the exact reverse of what the writer meant. That the evil is not confined to musical circles is shown in a recent issue of the Times Literary Supplement, wherein appeared a letter from Mr. Arnold Bennett drawing attention to a bad case. Mr. Bennett wrote of a section—about forty pages—of James Joyce's 'Ulysses' that he had 'never read anything to surpass it,' which pronouncement was promptly quoted by Mr. Joyce's publisher as a tribute to an entirely different book by Mr. Joyce—'A Portrait of the Artist as a Young Man.' Mr. Bennett described the publisher's proceeding as 'an outrageous example of deliberate misuse of a text for commercial ends,' and goes on to say that the publisher also 'omitted important passages without any indication that he had done so, with the clear intention of misleading.' Mr. Bennett adds:

This is a strong indictment, but, if necessary, I can maintain it to the satisfaction of anybody by quotation. And he concludes by saying that 'The notorious misleading character of many quotations by publishers from reviews' is an 'abuse that ought to be stopped.'

If all the misquoted critics and reviewers took Mr. Bennett's uncompromising line, the practice would soon be killed, for publishers would not relish exposure, especially when (as in this case) it leads to the suppression of a leaflet-advertisement.

Under Mr. Bennett's letter appears another, from one of The Times Literary Supplement's reviewers, drawing attention to a similar case. The reviewer had written, 'Only a very great novelist, a Tolstoy or a Hardy, could create a character like Awdrey without forcing the other characters in the book into fitting in with him.' The publisher's quotation changed this into eulogy by stopping at the word 'Awdrey'! The reviewer complains:

What I said was that Mr. Maxwell's book is not up to the level of Tolstoy or Hardy; the quotation makes me say that it is.

Such flagrant manipulation makes us wonder at the apparent inaction of the Institute of Journalists. A systematic exposure and pillory would speedily cure the most inveterate 'wangler.'

There is no more welcome sign in present musical activities than the readiness with which our educational institutions embark on projects calculated to widen the outlook of the students under their care. The bad old days when a musician was a musician and nothing more are almost gone. It is now realised that he is likely to be a better musician for being several other things as well—so long as they are the right things and there are not too many of them. The Royal Academy of Music shows its awareness of this principle in a new feature with which it will henceforth close each term—a 'Review Week.' In default of a better title may stand, but it has the defect of not quite covering the ground. It is perhaps too suggestive of a mere résumé of the term's work, whereas the most important fact about the Week is that it brings into the Academy certain non-musical subjects that can hardly fail to improve the musicianship of the students. On December 1 and 2, at 10 o'clock, Mr. Leonard E. Hill, F.R.S., Director of the National Institute for Medical Research, will lecture on 'Sunshine, Open Air, and Health'; on December 3 two lectures will be given, by Mr. Frank Roscoe on 'The Musician as Teacher' (10.0), and by Sir Johnston Forbes-Robertson on 'An Actor's View of Shakespeare' (8.0); on December 4 & 5, Prof. T. P. Nunn, Professor of Education, London University, will deal with 'Psychology and Mental Growth' (10.0); in the evening of December 1 & 2, at 8.0, there will be dramatic performances; and the evenings of December 4, 5, & 6 will be filled respectively by the Principal's 'At Home to Students,' a Choral Concert and a Students' Dance. The rest of the week will be busy with recitals (Mr. Lionel Tertis and Miss Katharine Goodson), Lecture-Lessons, Orchestral and other rehearsals and concerts—the list is far too long to tabulate here. At the events that take place in Duke's Hall (such as the lectures specified above, the dramatic performances, &c.) there will be accommodation for a limited number of the public, by tickets which may be had on application to the Secretary. The scheme is a capital blend of the practical, the artistic, and the social, and promises to be an ideal way of winding up a term.

The London County Council Handbook of Lectures and Classes for Teachers shows a wide range. Music is, as usual, well represented. A course that deserves special mention is that to be given by Mr. H. V. Spanner at St. Marylebone Grammar School on Thursdays, at 8. His subject is 'Music and the Emotions,' and the synopsis is very comprehensive and attractive. The lectures will be illustrated by copious examples played by the lecturer himself. Mr. Spanner is one of the foremost of the large company of talented blind musicians, and is a fluent speaker and excellent player. The course begins on January 8. Other series are on 'Musical Training in Schools' (Dr. John E. Borland);

'Appreciation of Music' (Mr. Stewart Macpherson); 'Children's Voice Culture' (Mr. James Bates); 'Songs Suitable for Schools' (Miss Mabel Chamberlain); 'Dance, Gesture, Speech, and Song for Young Children' (Miss Susie Lee); 'Ear-Training and Rhythmic Movements' (Miss Mabel Chamberlain); and 'The Musical Training of Infants' (Miss H. Willis). Application forms for tickets may be had from the Education Officer (H.4), County Hall, Westminster Bridge, S.E.1, from whom a copy of the Handbook may also be had (stamped addressed foolscap envelope). We understand that so far as accommodation permits the lectures are open to non-teachers on payment of the Out-County fee (12s.). That is why we singled out Mr. Spanner's course for special mention: the subject and treatment are likely to appeal to the public no less than to the teacher—perhaps even more, for teachers, having only a limited number of evenings available, naturally choose lectures that bear more directly on their particular branch of work.

In collecting news from provincial centres a journal is very much at the mercy of its contributors, and inaccuracies are bound to creep in. We have received complaints as to a couple in our November issue. In a paragraph about Newcastle it was stated that the 'membership of the local branch of the British Music Society was sixty-five.' The local secretary writes to say that the statement is ambiguous, and that the sixty-five are 'full members.' There are, he tells us, 'other grades at lower rates, and the aggregate is three hundred and nine.' He adds that 'most of the audience were aware of the distinction,' but he can hardly expect reporters to know it. We gladly make the correction; the ambiguity is, however, not ours.

The other complaint comes from Tetbury. In our provincial notes it was stated on what seemed to be good authority that 'hitherto Tetbury has had no musical organization.' Now we learn from several correspondents that, on the contrary, Tetbury has shown considerable musical activity since 1856, when it had a flourishing choral society, which, with a few breaks, including the war period, has gone on pretty well ever since, Mr. F. N. Baxter being conductor from 1880 on during many years. Our paragraph, in speaking of the formation of a choral society, should therefore have described it rather as a revival. We hope present and future Tetburians will be as keen and successful choralists as, judging from the list of works performed, their forbears clearly were.

We have already given several fanciful programme notes on Rachmaninov's C sharp minor Prelude. The most popular is that which describes the three fateful notes as representing a prematurely buried man knocking at his coffin-lid. Here is another interpretation from a recent organ recital programme:

This popular composition is intended as a tone-picture. It has for its subject a passage of three notes which are supposed to represent the regular wail of the peasants as they pull the barges along the river Volga, in Russia.

Apparently the writer has confused the piece with that other Russian favourite which an unconscious humorist in the printing line recently described as the 'Vulgar Boatman's Song.'

Young singers and players have always been up against the difficulty of getting a footing in the concert world. Neither concert-givers nor public care to buy a pig in a poke. How is the beginner to leave them in no doubt as to his capabilities? The recital at a West-end hall to an audience of friends and deadheads, with a thin crop of press notices as the only apparent result, has long since been found wanting. The problem has recently been discussed at length in the Musical News, by Mr. H. S. Gordon—a useful bit of work—and various suggestions were made. Our concern here is with the only one that, so far as we know, is being tried—the distribution among concert promoters of gramophone records of the young performer's work. The suggestion was at once taken up by the Imperial Concert Agency, which arranged for a record to be made of the singing of one of its clients—Mr. Kenneth Ellis. (The fact that Mr. Ellis is already by way of being well known can hardly be said to invalidate the test, because there will be no difficulty in ascertaining to what extent the records increase his engagements.) Mr. Ellis has been recorded on a small double-sided disc, singing a recitative from 'The Creation' and a portion of 'Why do the nations?' We have been favoured with a specimen, and although we believe it does the singer somewhat less than justice, we have no hesitation in saying that were we about to give a concert and casting round for a young singer, we should have no hesitation in accepting the record as ample evidence that Mr. Ellis was good enough for us. Now, one is not left in that frame of mind by sheaves of press cuttings, partly because one is usually in the dark as to the actual writer, and also because one knows how misleading such things may become after judicious manipulation. (An example is given elsewhere in these notes.) Moreover a concert-giver wants more than a guarantee that an artist can sing. Can he sing the particular kind of music that will be wanted at the concert? He may be a heaven-sent singer of Lieder or folk-song, but what will he do with 'O ruddier than the cherry,' or as Narrator in the 'St. Matthew' Passion? The time may come when every concert-giver on a considerable scale will have his library of sample records, which he will consult as naturally as he now casts a sceptical eye over Press notices. In provincial centres, where small choral and concert-giving societies need guidance, there may be a store of such records kept at the local music sellers, where they may be consulted on payment of a trifling fee. The scheme is capable of very considerable development, and we shall watch it with a view to reporting progress, if the Imperial Concert Agency will keep us posted. Meanwhile (we hear a reader say), both the Agency and Mr. Ellis are obtaining in this paragraph and in similar press comments free advertisement. Let nobody grudge them a line of it. Publicity of this kind is fairly earned by the enterprise they have shown, and we hope the experiment they are making will prove successful. If it does, there will be one problem less in the musical world.

We find that several journals, including this one, have given the impression that, outside Newcastle, Byrd's 'Great Service' has been sung only at St. Michael's College, Tenbury, whereas the evening setting was heard at a good many cathedrals and churches last July during the Byrd Tercentenary celebrations. The credit for performing the Service in its entirety belongs to Newcastle alone, and we gladly make this clear. St. Michael's, however, was the first to sing any portion of the service (May, 1923), and has kept the Evening part in its repertory and sung it about a dozen times since, an achievement of which Dr. Statham and his handful of singers may well be proud. We add that the above correction is made, not as a result of grumbles from Newcastle or elsewhere, but merely in the interests of accuracy and fair play.

One point about the new Ministry, which may be of great importance to the musical life of the country—and will be, if proper use is made of the opportunity which fate has offered—seems so far to have escaped the notice of musicians generally. The Duchess of Atholl, who has been appointed Under-Secretary to the Board of Education was—when Miss Katherine Ramsay—one of the most distinguished pianoforte students of her day at the Royal College of Music; she published some interesting and promising compositions, and has not lost touch with the art. Musicians who have to deal with Government departments will find it a new and welcome experience to come across a highly-placed personage who not only knows more than one tune, but has some practical acquaintance with music and musicians, and the problems of their work.

Berlin, it seems, has its concert crisis, like London. A recent discussion in one of the Berlin dailies on the subject might have been a literal translation of something in an English journal. The causes of complaint are the same—the expense of concert-giving, the exactions of the agents, the sins of the Press, the apathy of the public, and—worst sinner of all—the deadhead. A sprightly correspondent—a concert agent, curiously enough—sums up the argument in a short letter (which also might have been written in London) worthy of reproduction. He asks:

What painter always gives his pictures away? What sculptor his statues? What publisher his books? What hotel takes in visitors for nothing? What concert agent does NOT give tickets away? If a hundred dairymen were always to give away their butter, where is the man who would buy half a pound of butter? Here is the key of the concert problem, the way out of the crisis—Stop all concerts which are not self-supporting.

Excellent: now the way out has been shown, we wait to see who will make a start.

From the report of a musical service in a Dockyard Church:

The choir gave a fine rendering of Mendelssohn's 'O come, let us worship' . . . much enjoyed by the large congregation, which included many Naval and civil officers of the dockyard.

The title alone is enough to make so Naval a gathering feel quite at home.

In one of his customary 'pooh-poohings' of English composers, in the Western Mail, Mr. Leigh Henry says:

Elgar (as I think, rightly) bores Paris. But why should Mr. Henry think it right of Elgar to bore anybody, even Paris?

Music in the Foreign Press

VINCENT D'INDY'S CHILDHOOD

The Echo de Paris (October 19) publishes interesting particulars of d'Indy's childhood:

His mother died on the day he was born. His grandmother took charge of his education, which she carried out on very strict lines, and with the utmost devotion. She herself taught him the three R's and gave him his first pianoforte lessons, rapping his fingers with a ruler whenever he made a mistake. At the age of nine he was taken to a recital given by a famous pianist (not named) who played Beethoven's last three Sonatas. He was deeply affected. A little later he heard Patti in 'L'Elisir d'Amore,' and felt 'bored to tears.' He was never sent to school, but was given private tutors. In 1870 he joined the French Army as a volunteer, leaving his beloved grandmother for the first time.

ANATOLE FRANCE AND MUSIC

In Le Ménestrel (October 24), Henri Büsser—who set to music France's 'Les Noces Corinthiennes'—gives a few particulars of the French master's attitude towards music:

Anatole France was no musician, but he loved music, and used to speak of it in terms of great admiration. . . . He could not understand why so many composers sought inspiration in his works; and one day he said to one of his friends: 'I believe all those people are mad.' He did not like music of very definite character. At one of the rehearsals of 'Les Noces Corinthiennes,' he took me by the arm and said: 'All this is very good, but I do not much like the military piece.' Astounded, I asked him: 'But where did you hear one?' 'But yes, indeed, at the moment when Kallista, after having adjoined Daphne to devote herself to the Lord's service, exclaims, "King of the Orient, who sittest on the right of God," you have trumpets and other brass instruments whose tone is very martial.' What I had done was to use as accompaniment to Kallista's declamation the theme of the Pange Lingua, played by the trumpets, horns, and trombones. This was what France objected to. I promised him to make the scoring less strident.

QUARTER-TONES

In the Revue Musicale (October), Ivan Wischnegradsky gives the early history of the quarter-tone idea in modern music:

The Russian futurists, Kulbin and Matinshin, had discussed the idea long before the war. Arthur Loulié wrote many pieces in which quarter-tones were used; only one appeared, in 1913. He tried to have a quarter-tone pianoforte built. In Germany, a certain Behrens Senegalden published, in 1892, a pamphlet suggesting a quarter-tone pianoforte. In 1906, Richard H. Stein used quarter-tones in two 'cello pieces. He built a quarter-tone clarinet. In 1912 a quarter-tone harmonium was built at Aschaffenburg by Mager, an organist, who is now trying to devise an instrument upon which it will be possible to divide the octave into any desired number of parts. Towards the end of the 19th century a quarter-tone trumpet was built at Odessa.

HERMANN AMBROSIOUS

In the Neue Musik Zeitung (October 15), Dr. Eric Muller devotes an article to this composer, whose name appears neither in the last edition of Riemann nor in the new Dent 'Dictionary of Modern Music':

Ambrosius was born at Hamburg in 1897. He studied under Griesch and Szendrei at the Leipsic Conservatorium, and afterwards under Pfitzner at Berlin. His Op. 1, a set of Intermezzi, appeared in 1915. He has written four Symphonies, numerous chamber music works, and 'Faust-Szenen.' His music is described as non-cacophonous, simple, entirely tonal, easy in its melodic flow.

NEW AUSTRIAN CHURCH MUSIC

In the Musikblätter des Anbruch (October), Franz Moissl calls attention to the younger Austrian composers of Church music. Among the names he mentions are those of Vincenz Goller (author of several Masses, which are described as original and fine), Dr. Josef Lechthaler, Alfons Schlögel, Josef Messner (the organist of Salzburg Cathedral), Franz Neuhofer, Franz Müller, and Hans Daubrawa.

COMPOSERS' ACTIVITIES

Le Monde Musical (October-November) publishes its yearly survey of French composers' activities during the summer months:

Louis Aubert has finished a Violin Sonata and a Ballet, 'Folle Jeunesse,' which is to be given at the Opéra. André Caplet has written a 'Sonata da Chiesa' for violin and organ, songs, and pieces for harp; Pierre de Bréville, a Sonata for oboe and pianoforte, and a 'Dramatic Poem' for 'cello and pianoforte; Vincent d'Indy a Pianoforte Quintet; Paul Dukas, a symphonic work 'whose form is entirely novel'; Albert Roussel, short pieces for pianoforte and flute; Ravel has been hard at work scoring his new Ballet which is to be performed at Monte-Carlo. Two Russian composers living in France are included: Liapounov, who has written songs and a Pianoforte Suite, and Prokofiev, who announces a Quartet for wind and bow instruments.

M.-D. CALVOCRESSI.

New Music

SONGS

Now that the solos from Bach's Cantatas and other choral works are making their way into competition festival syllabuses (and even the concert repertory) singers are finding that they are not, after all, 'impossible.' They are more difficult than the songs of Handel, mainly because they call for more musicianship—a demand that extends to the accompanist hardly less than to the singer. The collections of solos issued by Novello have evidently met a need, for here is a third set of albums for soprano, alto, tenor, and bass. The soprano album contains recitatives and airs from the Cantatas 'Lord, rebuke me not' and 'There is nought of soundness,' and airs from 'O praise the Lord' and 'Watch ye, pray ye'; four numbers are in the alto set, among them the pathetic 'Ah! tarry yet' and the swinging 'God is ever Sun and Shield.' The tenor is given a hard task in the dramatic and florid 'In billows the rivers of Belial,' with pleasant relief in 'O blest are all that fear Him.' Perhaps the pick of the bass album is 'God, Whose power never faileth,' a splendid, ringing song, that ought to rival 'Mighty Lord' from the 'Christmas' Oratorio, which it recalls somewhat. There is also the deeply-felt 'Fare ye well,' from 'O teach me, Lord.' The issue of such solos as these in handy, inexpensive sets, is a boon. What a difference it would have made to the standard of taste and technique of singers if such fine material had been available fifty years ago, instead of being lost to sight in Cantatas the very titles of which were scarcely known!

Another welcome revival that goes steadily on is that of our old song-writers. From Chester's come two songs from Dowland's 'A Pilgrim's Solace,' transcribed by Peter Warlock and Philip Wilson (under one cover). These are in the melancholy vein that we find so often in Dowland. There is an obbligato part for violin; the compass is medium. The same firm send a set of three songs by Thomas Greaves, Thomas Bateson, and Richard Nicholson. These make the first number of 'Series B' of the 'Tudor Edition of Old Music,' transcribed and edited by Gerald Cooper. The songs have an accompaniment for string quartet, a pianoforte reduction being added for practice. Like the Dowland songs mentioned above, they would be excellent fare for gatherings of musicians, music clubs, lectures, and suchlike occasions where the historic interest and the intimate style of this charming old music would have a fair chance.

Just as Dowland was inclined to seriousness Robert Jones seems to have been a cheery soul. 'Love's god is a boy' shows him in irresponsible mood. A high soprano with a sense of humour would make much of it. Good, too, is his 'Now what is love?' (By the way, I cannot be persuaded that the hideous dissonance at the words 'sancing bell' is anything more subtle than a slip of the pen.) Philip Rosseter's 'When Laura smiles' is a delightfully tuneful thing. These three songs have been transcribed by Peter Warlock and Philip Heseltine (Enoch).

Further revivals of a very different type are some solos extracted from various anthems by Maurice Greene, and published by the Oxford University Press. Mr. Stanley Roper is the editor. These airs would be welcome items at organ recitals, or for boys' ensemble singing. The music is straightforward and very singable, with more than a touch of Handel. They have excellent accompaniments. The best appears to be the recit. and air, 'Thou openest Thine hand.'

A few years ago appeared a little collection called 'Sing-Song' settings, by John Ireland, of Nursery Rhymes by Christina Rossetti. Simple as they were, they showed the composer at his best, and it is good to see that a couple of them are now published separately—'Your Brother has a Falcon' and 'Skylark and Nightingale' (Winthrop Rogers).

From the same publishers come two songs by Rebecca Clarke—'Down by the Sally Gardens' and 'Infant Joy.' The former is in folk-song style, and its simplicity seems rather too studied; the second is a beautiful setting of Blake's little poem. The numerous key-changes look violent, but sound perfectly natural, and the treatment of the words from the rhythmic point of view is charming.

Another delicious trifle is Herbert Hughes's 'Open the door softly'—eight lines of verse from Dion Boucicault's 'Arrah-na-Pogue,' perfectly fitted. Singers not endowed with a telling pp and a sense of humour should keep their heavy hands off it (Enoch).

The Oxford University Press issues Edgar L. Bainton's 'Ring out, wild bells'; C. Armstrong Gibbs's 'Slow, horses, slow'; Peter Warlock's 'Sleep' (Fletcher's beautiful 'Come, sleep, and with thy sweet deceiving'), 'Rest, sweet nymphs,' and 'Balulalow.' All are good, with, I think, the three Warlocks as the pick. 'Balulalow,' it may be remembered, appeared in choral form some time ago, and was sung by the Bach Choir. It is a setting of a mediæval Nativity cradle song. 'Sleep' has an accompaniment of beautiful texture calling for string quartet rather than the pianoforte. Not often is a song accompaniment so good in itself that it gives delight when played minus the voice-part, as this does.

Stanford's fine song 'The Pibroch' now appears in a high key (Enoch).

In 'Songs from the Poets' Alec Rowley provides eight well-known little poems with music, admirably adapted for singing to (and in some cases by) children (Saville).

Among the smaller of the works produced at the Hereford Festival was a set of songs by A. Herbert Brewer, under the title 'Miller's Green.' There are five of them, and all show a combination of musicianship and popular appeal not usually associated with a Cathedral organ-loft (Joseph Williams).

Arthur Bliss's 'The Women of Yueh,' a set of five songs to words of Li Po, have an accompaniment for flute, oboe, clarinet, bassoon, string quartet, bass, glockenspiel, triangle, and side-drum. A reviewer can do little more than direct the reader's attention to a work of this kind; without hearing it in its original form he is reluctant to commit himself to an opinion on the music. The most the present writer can do is to say that in the pianoforte version the constant dissonance irritates and bores him, though he is prepared to believe that, played by the orchestra, it justifies itself. Even so, however, he prefers music to be in one key at a time, not almost continuously in two or even three, as is the case in these songs (Chester).

There are touches of the same thing in E. J. Moeran's 'The Bean Flower' and 'Impromptu in March' (Chester), mixed with a good deal that is immediately attractive. Mr. Moeran, being a folk-song enthusiast, knows the value of a tune, and has on previous occasions shown that he is able to write one; I hope he won't despise this rare accomplishment, and drop it in favour of the over-pungent and eccentric style of our English Stravinsky.

Granville Bantock's 'The Parting' is a simple, folk-song-like, and expressive setting of some verses in Scots dialect, only spoilt (it seems to me) by four bars of postlude which are not in keeping. In 'The Two Roses' he writes an average, slowish vocal waltz, and does not save the situation by adding dolente, espress., rubato, and other unwaltzlike directions (Elkin).

'Salve Regina' is a piece of plainsong noted down by Prof. Bantock at a Trappist Abbey in Canada, and arranged for low voice with accompaniment for pianoforte (or organ, or strings). The harmony is simple enough to satisfy the purists in such matters, but they may well object to the melody being too consistently doubled in the accompaniment (Chester).

Attractive and well-written examples, and in other ways just what we expect from the composers, are Graham Peel's 'In City streets' (Forsyth); Roger Quilter's 'I will go with my father a-ploughing' (Elkin); J. Backer-Lunde's 'Were I a drop of dew'; Easthope Martin's 'When you come to me'; and Alma Goatley's 'Second Thoughts' (the last three published by Enoch).

Eleven songs by Reginald Robbins come from Maurice Senart, Paris, bringing his total up to forty-eight. All these are for bass or baritone, and, so far as I have seen, almost all are in a style that is largely declamatory. The composer is to be praised for his choice of words; invariably he draws on the poets. But there is a monotony in his methods, and I suggest that he should now try his hand at writing for (say) soprano, and in a more lyrical vein. His present somewhat angular style is well suited to some of his texts, but one has a feeling that it is adopted not for that reason, but because he cannot write in any other. H. G.

CHAMBER MUSIC

Two works have lately been issued by the Society for the Publication of American Music—a Sonata for violin and pianoforte, by David S. Smith, and a 'Suite Antique' for two violins and pianoforte, by Albert Stoessel. The former is in the orthodox four movements, the last of which bears the unorthodox title of 'Epilogue.' But there is no mistaking the inflexible resolution of David S. Smith to be classed amongst the moderns. Harmonically, like most moderns, the law he obeys is the law of the lawless. Technically, he directs the violinist to play sul ponticello, with a harmonic or two and a consecutive fifth or two—all tricks which are the breath of life to the modern. Of course there is some good in most things. If there are sermons in stones there is likely to be sense in stony sermons. Unfortunately, our wits are not always sharp enough to see it. A dull sermon, a dull piece of music, a dull drama, have a way of finding out our own weakness and turning our thoughts towards the dream that, according to the poet, surrounds us all. Now modern musicians are often apt to misjudge these feelings. They believe that another note added to a chord gives it piquancy. That is true up to a point. Beyond that, instead of originality and zest, it gives to the harmony only obscurity and abstrusity. Moderation is necessary if we are not to surfeit the appetite. Sir William Temple once wrote that, in taking wine, the first glass may pass for health, the second for good humour, the third for our friends; but the fourth is for our enemies. I should like to give a friendly warning to the modern composer. Let him be careful lest in over-indulgence he overstep the boundaries and play into the hands of his enemies. An additional part which makes confusion is not an asset, and David S. Smith indulges occasionally in dissonance more than him becometh.

Stoessel's 'Suite,' as its title implies, is a much more scholastic affair, but also more tasteful and finished—the sort of thing Sinding did some years ago with conspicuous success. Its five movements (Bourrée, Sarabande, Rigaudon, Aria, Gigue) have the formal air and grace that such pieces should have, and amateurs will surely find them to their liking.

More interesting than these, however, are a number of French compositions issued by Durand, of Paris. Between the Berceuse of Louis Aubert (pianoforte and violin) and the 'Epiphanie' ('Fresque' for 'cello and orchestra) of André Caplet, there is a world of difference. The first (and the same may be said of the same composer's 'Nocturne' for violin and pianoforte) takes us back to the age of innocence. The second is characteristic of the present straining after the unusual, the new, and the strange. The very description baffles us. What is a 'fresco' in music? It is not, as might be thought, music written on walls, for like all Durand's publications, it is printed on the best of paper. Although we can imagine an exasperated 'cellist, after studying the various points of each bar (hardly a bar there is without some special mark or accidental) coming to the conclusion that such music would look better as a mural painting. It has a programme, and represents Caspar setting out for Bethlehem (Cortège); his ecstasy (Cadenza); and his glorification of the Lord ('Danse des petits nègres'). This is more or less in accordance with our own story. Yet this 'Epiphanie' has the sub-title 'd'après une légende éthiopienne,' and our difficulties do not end here, for on opening the score we read in the very first bar, chords which prove beyond question that Ethiopian local colour is not at all unlike the local colour of Parisian schools. The Cadenza is perhaps the most attractive movement of the three. I do not know whether there lives a 'cellist who could play it adequately. The notes are of the kind which may be best described as possible, yet hardly probable. Of all stringed instruments, the 'cello is the one which most easily sounds ludicrous. And I am much afraid that this Cadenza, except in the hands of Casals or one or two others, might easily become intensely humorous. It is accompanied throughout by a low F♯ drummed on the pianoforte. This is decidedly not a work to be commended to young players. It demands experience, ability, and nerve.

Florent Schmitt's 'Légende' gives us the choice of saxophone, viola or violin, and orchestra. I very much suspect that the 'viola or violin' suggestion conceals a gracious homage to Madame Elise Hall, President of the Boston Orchestral Club, to whom the work is dedicated. The sentimental bellowsings of the saxophone are far more likely to do justice to Schmitt's music than either the violin or the viola.

After the amateur and the petit-maitre we get the master in Maurice Ravel's 'Tzigane' for violin and pianoforte. It may be often whimsical, and even precious, but Ravel's music, at its best or at its worst, is always that of a master. Some passages appear unnecessarily difficult. Possibly the composer's intention was to intimate his wish that no player but the best should attempt his work. On a different plane, but no less interesting, is the 'Rhapsodie Géorgienne,' for 'cello and pianoforte, by Alexandre Tcherepnine. Here, again, it is felt that novelty of idiom has not been an end in itself, but the necessary medium for a new idea.

The English publications this month amount to three arrangements: Maurice Jacobson's arrangement for pianoforte and violin of Vaughan Williams's ballet 'Old King Cole'; Vally Lasker's arrangement of the 'Intermezzo' from Gustav Holst's 'St. Paul's Suite' (both published by Curwen); and Cedric Sharpe's arrangement of E. Barrett's Highland Lament, 'Coronach,' for violoncello and pianoforte (Elkin). The last is a conscientious piece of work, and the carefully annotated 'cello part should leave no loophole for the frailty of unwary amateurs. What was said last month about Vally Lasker's arrangement of the Jig from the same Suite applies equally well to the new arrangement of the Intermezzo, and there is no need to discuss the method again. There remains the arrangement of Vaughan Williams's Ballet—a more casual affair, in which violin cadenzas are doubled by the pianoforte and pianoforte cadenzas doubled by the violin. Indeed the violin part appears more of an afterthought than an individual element, even when the voices give a clear chance for independent working. B. V.

PIANOFORTE MUSIC

Paxton's 'Eleventh Folio of Pianoforte Music' consists of transcriptions of seven Symphonies—Beethoven's first and fifth, Haydn's seventh, Mendelssohn's 'Scotch' and 'Italian,' and Mozart's C major (No. 36) and 'Jupiter.' The arranging has been well done. The result, of course, is far from being easy to play, as the rapid string work calls for nimble fingers. Hence the advisability of using with the volume the violin and violoncello parts which Paxton's issue for the purpose. In any case, workable versions of these Symphonies for home use are a boon. The large, clear print is a good feature.

Where are our pianoforte composers? Out of a large stack of new music nearly one-half is appallingly difficult, with no adequate return for the player's labour, and the bulk of the remainder is fairly easy, but commonplace. No wonder the average amateur pianist sticks to the classics, where he can find material that can be negotiated within the limited time at his disposal, and that will yield a hundred per cent. in effect.

P. O. Ferroud's 'Prelude and Forlane' (Durand) is a typical example of the unnecessarily difficult and discordant type. The resources of the instrument, like those of the player, are strained to the utmost, and there is far too liberal use of two keys at once, for no apparent reason beyond a desire to be in the ultra-modern swim. Gabriel Grovlez's 'Sarabande' (Durand) is more reasonable, but there are lots too many notes, and the constant succession of eight- and ten-note chords in quavers becomes wearisome.

Kaikhosru Sorabji's second Sonata is as formidable as the rest of his works. It is about sixty pages in length. As has been said before in this column, such music is better suited to the pianola. It is hard to conceive of any pair of hands being able to manage it (Curwen).

Harold E. Scott's 'From the Southland' are a couple of pieces (issued separately) entitled 'The Tinkling Sheep-bells' and 'The Bells of St. Nicholas, Brighton.' Here, as may be imagined, the interest lies almost entirely in the representation of bell-sounds, and, frankly, it soon begins to wear thin (Elkin).

In W. H. Speer's 'Caprice' the showy laying-out fails to disguise the somewhat commonplace nature of the material (Ascherberg). Ernest Austin's 'The Laughter of Youth' is his twenty-fourth Tone Stanza, and is an attractive piece of fair difficulty, but with too liberal a use of the opening figure. The second book of his 'Borrowed Melodies' is concerned with Swedish folk-tunes, and the treatment is quite happy. If the net result is a little less arresting than the first book, the reason lies in the fact that the tunes are less good than the Scotch melodies used in Book 1 (Larway).

Cyril Scott has brought together five movements from his music to 'Charlot's Revue,' and issued them as a Suite under the title 'Karma' (Elkin).

Frank words are called for by two works marked Opp. 1 and 2. Robin Milford's 'Three Sea Pieces' and 'A Fairy Revel in the Forest' bristle with processions of fifths and other clichés, unrelieved by originality or inventive power. He could spend his time to advantage in learning the old-fashioned, but still indispensable, art of part-writing. It will come into vogue again before long, and it really wears better than the sort of thing that is now being turned out by our young Hucbalds. Mr. Milford will be well advised not to be in a hurry with his Op. 3. These hard words are kind, as the composer may see ten years hence.

Another Op. 1 is Herbert Dennison's 'Papillons' (Joseph Williams). This is not ugly or eccentric, but it soon exhausts its slight thematic interest. The composer has no resource, and merely repeats himself, spreading two-pages' worth of material over five pages—thinly, of course.

Frederick Bontoft's 'Cortège' (Forsyth) gives us more bells—a curfew this time—with plenty of fifths and other familiar ingredients. However, he uses this conventional material with some good effect, and he is wise enough to pull up on the right side of boredom.

Felix Swinstead's 'Good Morning' is quite refreshing after some of the above examples of how not to write for the pianoforte. It is an attractive, moderately difficult piece, excellent for study in light playing.

Enoch's send a pianoforte version of Elgar's 'Empire March,' written for the pageant at Wembley—a good march, though a grade below the composer's previous essays in this form.

Apropos of marches, here is a collection of a dozen, under the title 'School Marches,' easily arranged, for use during drill, entrance, &c., the composers drawn on being Beethoven, Tchaikovsky, Mozart, Wagner, Verdi, Kullak, &c. (Novello).

Two pieces of elegiac character come from Paxton's—Cyril Jenkins's 'Lament (After a Roll-Call in Flanders, 1915)' and Harry Farjeon's 'Élégie Héroïque.' The former seems to achieve its aim the better of the two, perhaps because of its simplicity. Mr. Farjeon's work looks better on paper, with its key of E flat minor, big chords, and numerous accidentals, but it strikes one as being heavy rather than weighty, and the difference is vital.

The best modern pianoforte examples I have left till last. E. J. Moeran's 'Toccata' is a brilliant affair, very difficult, but well worth the labour involved. It has thematic interest, too, in the shape of themes that clearly owe a good deal to folk-song. The composer shows a fine mastery of keyboard effect, both in the brittle brilliance suitable to the toccata type, and in the matter of rich sonority. The harmony is full of interest, but never far-fetched. 'Stalham River' is no less successful in a different way. Both pieces are for first-rate players, and both recall John Ireland, especially the Toccata. Mr. Moeran is a composer who will be worth watching, if we may judge from these pieces (Chester).

PIANOFORTE DUETS

Two examples by Chaminade are unequal. 'Second Gavotte' is lively and effective, with some excellent, straightforward polyphonic writing; but 'Valse Romantique' falls from its title by being based on material too commonplace to suggest romance (Enoch).

E. Markham Lee's Suite of three pieces—Prelude, Romance, and Irish Tune—is first-rate, especially the first and last movements. The Prelude is bold, and the Irish tune—a Jig—would bring down the house played at the right pace. The Suite is fairly difficult. A couple of these movements would be the very thing for a competition test-piece, because of the enjoyment they would give the audience.

H. G.

CHORAL MUSIC

MIXED VOICES

There are few, if any, finer madrigals than Weelkes's 'O Care, thou wilt despatch me,' for S.S.A.T.B., so choralists should welcome the excellent edition just made by H. Elliot Button (Novello). The work is in two parts, the second bearing the title, 'Hence, Care, thou art too cruel.' In his book, 'English Madrigal Composers,' Dr. Fellowes devotes several pages to an analysis of this madrigal, drawing attention to many harmonic and structural features that must have astonished Weelkes's contemporaries, and that are arresting even to-day. So far as the actual notes are concerned, the work is not of great difficulty, and the fact that the fifth voice is obtained by dividing the part most easily divided—the sopranos—makes it a capital choice for choirs who wish to try their hands at five-part madrigal singing. The chief demands are on the expressive side. Specially notable points are the freedom of modulation—the second part begins in G minor, and six bars later is in B minor—and the use of the slow theme set to 'Come Music, sick man's jewel,' a few bars later in double diminution for a section of the 'fa la.' Very striking, too, are the clashes at 'So deadly dost thou sting me.'

Novello's have also just issued Wilbye's 'The Lady Oriana' and 'Adieu, sweet Amaryllys,' and Edwards's 'In going to my lonely bed,' with Welsh words by T. Gwynn Jones—a step which points to a welcome development in Welsh choralism. With Bach and the madrigalists getting a footing in the Principality, we may expect reactions of various kinds, not least among her composers.

Short, unaccompanied works of the descriptive kind are generally among the less desirable type of choral music, and one therefore takes up with some misgivings Percy E. Fletcher's setting for S.A.T.B. of Mrs. Hemans's 'The Pilgrim Fathers' (Novello). But the composer has steered clear of the usual pitfalls, and wisely avoids the point-to-point method that makes so many works of the kind scrappy; there is plenty of pictorial writing, but it is never overdone, and the music hangs together well. There is practically no division of the parts; the writing is grateful and not very difficult, and gives ample scope for expressive and dramatic treatment. The final cadence is, perhaps, an anti-climax. Many conductors will wish that the actual ending had been made with the ff phrase.

Alec Rowley's 'Coming through the craigs o' Kyle' is a setting of a Scots song by J. Glover, and the main theme is either a folk-tune or a good imitation. The work won the Premium Prize in the recent competition held by the Glasgow Orpheus Choir. It is of moderate difficulty, and a good example of straightforward treatment of a folk-song (Novello).

Two striking examples of modern choral-writing come from the Oxford Press—Peter Warlock's 'The Full Heart' and E. J. Moeran's 'Robin Hood borne on his bier.' Mr. Warlock evidently shares Mr. Philip Heseltine's enthusiastic admiration for Gesualdo, for 'The Full Heart' is dedicated 'To the immortal memory of the Prince of Venosa.' It is for soprano solo and chorus, and the writing is mostly in six, and sometimes in eight, parts. The dissonances will defeat any but the most skilful of choirs, but these could make an extremely effective thing of it. Mr. Moeran's part-song, though difficult, is a good deal less exacting. The parts are divided occasionally.

Three further numbers of the Enoch series of English Madrigals and Part-songs, transcribed by Peter Warlock and Philip Wilson, have been received—Giles Farnaby's 'Consture [construe] my meaning' (S.A.T.B.), Dowland's 'Stay, Time, awhile thy flying' (S.A.T.B.), and Cavendish's 'Faustina hath the fairer face' (S.S.A.T.B.). All are on the short side, and not difficult so far as notes are concerned. The five-part example is mainly chordal.

Kenneth G. Finlay's 'Inishail' ('Green Inishail, where the graves are, in Loch Awe') has a folk-song-like tune for basis, and a texture that reminds one of Stanford. A good choir is called for, and the tenors and basses must be able to manage a passage in four parts on their own. Mr. Finlay writes well for the voices, and keeps the interest alive without having recourse to anything startling (Bayley & Ferguson).

'The Canadian Boat Song' has been set many a time and oft; here is yet one more version, this time for baritone solo, chorus, and small orchestra, by E. T. Sweeting (Stainer & Bell). The music is vigorous, and, above all, singable. The choral work is for four parts (save in one or two brief passages where the sopranos divide), and presents little difficulty to an average choir. The pianoforte reduction of the score is also straightforward, so that the work could be managed effectively without orchestra. There is too little choral music of this type written to-day; the tendency is to overdo the difficulties in voice-parts or accompaniment, or both—usually with no proportionate result in effect.

MALE-VOICE CHOIR

A smaller output than usual, but the quality is above the average. Really good humorous part-songs are not common; as a rule the humour is elementary and the music poor. Here is a capital example in E. T. Sweeting's setting for T.T.B.B. of Calverley's 'Ode to Tobacco' (Stainer & Bell). (Does the rising generation read Calverley?) Dr. Sweeting's music is genuinely funny, yet it remains music. Particularly good is his treatment of the famous verse that repeats the doctors' warning that 'They who use fuseses [does anybody now, by the way?] All grow by slow degrees, Brainless as chimpanzees, Meagre as lizards; Go mad and beat their wives; Plunge (after shocking lives) Razors and carving knives Into their gizzards.' This jolly little work would make a capital test-piece for competitions. It calls for good phrasing and straight singing as well as humour.

The good qualities spoken of above in connection with Kenneth G. Finlay's mixed-voice part-song are shown in his T.T.B.B. arrangements of Scots songs. 'Corn Rigs' (Bayley & Ferguson) and 'Lassie of the witchin' e'ee' and 'My faithful fond one' (Joseph Williams). All give scope for expressive use of the effect of solo with vocal accompaniment, though it should be added that the subsidiary parts are not mere filling-in. 'Corn Rigs' at the right pace calls for neat work in all the voices; 'Lassie wi' the witchin' e'ee' is perhaps the pick—certainly from an expressive point of view. 'My faithful fond one' may suffer in performance from the air being given throughout to the first basses. A verse in the dominant, with the tune in a higher part, would have afforded relief.

FEMALE-VOICE CHOIR AND UNISON SONGS

Here the wealth is so great that a reviewer can do no more than mention a few numbers representative of different styles and degrees of difficulty. From a batch recently published by Novello a couple of three-part songs (S.S.A.), by Percy E. Fletcher, are worthy of note for their effectiveness and vocal quality, and for the skill with which the pianoforte part adds colour and point without being obtrusive or difficult. The 'Valley of Dreams' is an expressive setting of words by Fiona Macleod, in which a good choir would find abundant chances of elasticity in rhythm and subtlety of nuance. In 'Who lives so merry' the composer has gone to a 16th-century source for tune and words—a kind of miniature fantasia on street cries. It gives capital practice in light, rhythmical singing. Ethel Boyce has a practised hand in work of this sort, and two songs for S.S.A. are well up to her standard. Spenser provides the words of each—'The Maybush' and 'Ye dainty nymphs.' They are fairly difficult. Edward German has arranged 'My bonnie lass she smileth' for S.S.A.; another arrangement is that of Silas's 'Song for Spring,' for S.S.A. (unaccompanied). It is rather old-fashioned, but—perhaps I should say 'therefore'—very singable. It calls for pace; the notes are easy. Yet another transcription—'At dawn of day,' a chorus from Cowen's 'Sleeping Beauty,' arranged by the composer for S.A. There are still plenty of choirs who enjoy a vocal waltz—here is an attractive specimen. A pleasantly flowing two-part song is George Rathbone's setting of Walter de la Mare's 'Dream Song.'

It is good to see that the pleasant device of descant, now so popular in hymn-singing, is being applied in school-songs. Here are 'The Ash Grove' and 'The British Grenadiers' with descants. There could be no better way of starting part-singing than thus selecting a few voices to provide a counter-theme to a familiar air sung by the bulk of the class. The name of the musician responsible for these descants does not appear. He has written attractive examples. A word of praise is due to the pianoforte accompaniments, which are of the right simplicity, yet interesting.

Unison songs that may be commended are Robert T. White's 'Fisher Maiden's Lullaby,' and three by Alec Rowley—'Star Time,' 'A Fairy Wing,' and 'Gossamer Threads.' In the three Rowley numbers the music is better than the words. We are rightly critical nowadays as to the literary quality of the texts we give even the youngest of singers, so I am moved to complain that the last-named opens with the line, 'Dreams are spun on goss'mer threads,' and closes with 'Goss'mer threads of fairyland.' This destroys the beauty of the word. I hope choirs will add an extra quaver to the music and restore the missing syllable. (All the above are from Novello's.)

Many new songs come from the Oxford Press. For S.S.A. there is a bold and original example by W. G. Whittaker—'The Song and the Bird,' which calls for a good pianist and a choir that will not blench at asperities. Fine, bracing stuff. A selection of 'Twelve Sacred and Secular Rounds, chosen from the work of his pupils by Gustav Holst,' will provide capital practice. The composers are J. M. Joseph, M. M. Harrison, A. W. Cox, Walter Gandy, Joan Spink, &c. Among the best of the two-part songs from this house are Gerrard Williams's arrangements of traditional words and tunes—'A shepherd kept sheep,' 'Arise, fair maid,' and

(Continued on page 1111.)

FOUR-PART SONG

ARRANGED FOR MIXED VOICES

Words by CHARLES DICKENS

Music by C. HUBERT H. PARRY

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED; NEW YORK: THE H. W. GRAY CO., SOLE AGENTS FOR THE U.S.A.

Vivace mf f p

SOPRANO
That ve-ry wise man old Æ - sop said— . . . "The bow should be sometimes

ALTO
That ve-ry wise man old Æ - sop said— . . . "The bow should be sometimes

TENOR
That ve-ry wise man old Æ - sop said— . . . "The bow should be sometimes

BASS
That ve-ry wise man old Æ - sop said— . . . "The bow should be sometimes

Vivace.  $\text{♩} = 100$  mf f p

(For practice only)

mf f p

loose; Keep it tight for ev - er, The string you'll sev - er." Let's loose; Keep it tight for ev - er, The string you'll sev - er." Let's loose; Keep it tight for ev - er, The string you'll sev - er." Let's loose; The string you'll sev - er." Let's

mf p

Copyright, 1924, by Novello and Company, Limited

Originally published for Men's Voices (A.T.B.B.) in THE ORPHEUS, No. 488

turn his old mor - - - al to use. The world for-get, And turn . . . his old mor - al to use. The world for-get, And turn his old mor - al to use. The world for-get, And turn his old mor - - - al to use. . . The world for-get, And let us yet, The glass our spi - rits buoy-ing, Rev-el to-night In those moments bright, Which

let us yet, The glass our spi - rits buoy-ing, Rev-el to-night In those moments bright, Which

let us yet, The glass our spi - rits buoy-ing, Rev-el to-night In those moments bright, Which

let us yet, The glass our spi - rits buoy-ing, Rev-el to-night In those moments bright, Which make life worth en - joy - - ing. The cares of to-day, Old mor-al-ists say, Are make life worth en - joy - - ing. The cares of to-day, Old mor-al-ists say, Are make life worth en - joy - - ing. The cares of to-day, Old mor-al-ists say, Are make life worth en - joy - - ing. The cares of to-day, Old mor-al-ists say, Are quite e-nough to per-plex one; Then drive to-day's sor-row A-way till to-mor-row, And quite e-nough to per-plex one; Then drive to-day's sor-row A-way till to-mor-row, And quite e-nough to per-plex one; Then drive to-day's sor-row A-way till to-mor-row, And quite e-nough to per-plex one; Then drive to-day's sor-row A-way till to-mor-row, And then put it off till the next one.

then put it off till the next one.

then put it off till the next one.

then put it off . . . till the next one.

Vivace

Some plod-ding old crones, The heart-less drones, Ap - peal to my cool re - flec-tion, And

Some plod-ding old crones, The heart-less drones, Ap - peal to my cool re - flec-tion, And

Some plod-ding old crones, The heart-less drones, Ap - peal to my cool re - flec-tion, And

Some plod-ding old crones, The heart-less drones, Ap - peal to my cool re - flec-tion, And ask me whether Such nights can ev - er Charm so - ber re - col - lec - tion. Yes, ask me whether Such nights can ev - er Charm so - ber re - col - lec - tion. Yes, ask me whether Such nights can ev - er Charm so - ber re - col - lec - tion. Yes, ask me whether Such nights can ev - er Charm so - ber re - col - lec - tion. Yes,

p Poco meno mosso*a tempomf - cres.*

yes, I cry, I'll grieve and die When those I love for - sake me, But while friends so dear Sur -

yes, I cry, I'll grieve and die When those I love for - sake me, But while friends so dear Sur -

yes, I cry, I'll grieve and die When those I love for - sake me, But while friends so dear Sur -

yes, I cry, I'll grieve and die When those I love for - sake me, But while friends so dear Sur -

Poco meno mossoa tempomf - cres.

- round me here, Let care, if he can, if he can, if he can, if he

- round me here, Let care, care, let care, if he

- round me here, Let care, if he can, if he can, if he

- round me here, Let care, if he can, if he can, if he

p leggiero

can, if he can, o'er - take me. The cares of to - day, Old mor - al - ists say, Are can, if he can, o'er - take me. The cares of to - day, Old mor - al - ists say, Are can, if he can, o'er - take me. The cares of to - day, Old mor - al - ists say, Are can, if he can, o'er - take me. The cares of to - day, Old mor - al - ists say, Are

p

quite e-nough to per - plex one; Then drive to-day's sor - row A - way till to mor-row, And

quite e-nough to per - plex one; Then drive to-day's sor - row A - way till to-mor-row, And quite e-nough to per - plex one; Then drive to-day's sor - row A - way till to-mor-row, And quite e-nough to per - plex one; Then drive to-day's sor - row A - way till to-mor-row, And

cres. molto

then put it off . . . . . till . . . the next one.

then put it off . . . . . till . . . the next one.

then put it off . . . . . till . . . the next one.

then put it off . . . . . till . . . the next one.

p f p

(Continued from page 1104)

'All in a garden green.' These show the taste and fancy we expect from the composer. Herbert Howells is responsible for three—'Sing Ivy,' 'Swedish May Song,' and 'First in the Garden.' William H. Harris has provided a spirited setting of 'The Huntsman's Song' ('Up, up, ye dames').

Thomas Wood writes bold music with a modal flavour for Drayton's 'To the Virginian Voyage' ('You brave heroic minds') and the old ditty, 'The Lowlands of Holland.' Herbert Howells's 'Holly Song' is spoilt for me by some apparently gratuitous dissonances. I may be old-fashioned, but I have yet to be converted to such progressions as these in a children's song:

Mr. Howells is seen to better advantage in three songs issued by Augener—'Mother, mother,' an old rhyme set for unison-singing; 'Sing lully by, lully,' for S.S.; and 'Bells' (S.S.), a captivating setting of the old jingle about London bells, with cunning sonorities in the pianoforte part. Two other good songs for S.S.A. are Edgar L. Bainton's 'Summer' (unaccompanied) (Joseph Williams) and E. T. Sweeting's 'The Wind' (Year-Book Press). All the above songs have an accompaniment unless otherwise stated.

Alfred Mistowski's 'Ode to Loreto,' specially written for the Loreto Convents, is for mezzo-soprano solo, S.S.A. chorus, and pianoforte (and strings ad lib.). The same composer has set for S.S.A. (unaccompanied) Tennyson's 'Who would be a merman bold?' (Chester). H. G.

ORGAN MUSIC

Felix Borowski achieved such success with a couple of Sonatas some years ago, that one takes up his third with high expectations—expectations which are far from being realised, unfortunately. The work opens in an arresting manner with a strong diatonic theme, but invention seems to give out very soon, and we meet with a good deal of weak padding, most of it reminiscent of similar and better passages in the two previous Sonatas. The Intermezzo is better—a pleasant movement with a good deal of rhythmic interest in its main theme. The Andante is unequal, and the Finale, which has a promising Allegro brillante theme, soon becomes loose in structure and commonplace in material, the second subject, with its repeated chord accompaniment being banal. Long before the end is reached we tire of the strings of big chords. Something far better than this is expected of M. Borowski. The publishers are the Arthur P. Schmidt Co., who send also 'Twenty-five Melodic Studies,' by Edwin Hardy—based on pedal-scales and trio-playing of no particular freshness, but well graded and useful.

Otto Olsson is another composer of whom we expect much. His Sonata in E (Augener) shows serious purpose, but is unequal. The long, first movement is too disjointed, chiefly owing to the large number of full closes. Moreover the thematic material is hardly strong enough to stand the ordeal of sonata form. The middle movement is a 'Meditation-Fugue'—an original conception well carried out. This thoughtful and expressive movement would make an excellent quiet voluntary. The Finale, Allegro con brio, has a capital main theme delivered by the pedals, and is altogether above the average of this type of toccata finale. Given the right, clean, vigorous playing it would come off well.

C. H. Kitson's 'Passacaglia and Fugue' (Augener) is written with the neatness and skill that are to be expected from such a source. The Fugue belongs to the not very common triple brand, one of its subjects being the Passacaglia theme. Some people will call the work dry, but there is a lot to be said for essays in this strict form, so far as organ music is concerned, because the instrument is above all suited for the delivery of material in which the effect is logical rather than emotional. Moreover, so much modern organ music is thrown together so casually that one is glad to meet with a work in which every note contributes something to the structure. Dr. Kitson's work is quite short—the two movements fill only seven pages—and would make an admirable study. (In the Fugue the first and second subjects are indicated, but not the third. It makes its first appearance in the R.H. at the end of line 3, page 5.)

It is good to have the organ music of some of our 18th-century Church composers revived, but I am not quite convinced that Jonathan Battishill's Voluntary in A (Augener) is as good a specimen as could have been found. Certainly it shows him below the level of the best of his fine anthems. There is good stuff in it, but one has had rather too much of the key of A by the time the end of the eight pages is reached. Mr. Heathcote Statham is its editor.

J. Stuart Archer has made an easy and effective arrangement of the familiar 'Hindoo Song' from Rimsky-Korsakov's 'Sadko' (Paxton).

There is such a wealth of fine three-part writing in Bach's organ music that it seems scarcely necessary to take a couple of his Two-Part Inventions and turn them into Trios, as A. Livingstone Hirst has done (Collard Moutrie). H. G.

FULL SCORES

High praise has already been given to the pocket full scores in the Vienna Philharmonic Edition. Two further examples have been received—Haydn's Mass in B flat (known as the 'Theresa') and Mozart's 'The Impresario.' Each contains a preface in English, French, and German; and by way of frontispiece, the Haydn Mass has a photograph of the Church at Eisenstadt, for which the work was written; the Mozart contains a portrait of the librettist, Stephanie. As in the previous examples of these scores, binding, print, and paper are first-rate. The edition is stocked at Novello's.

Messrs. Durand send a miniature score of Roger-Ducasse's 'Poème Symphonique' for orchestra on the name FAURÉ; and from Augener's comes in a similar form Frank Bridge's arrangement for string quartet of 'The Londonderry Air.'

The two books of the '48' in the Harold Brooke edition are now obtainable in one volume, bound in cloth (Novello). Here is an obvious choice for those in search of a handsome gift for a musician.

THE NORWICH FESTIVAL

BY HERBERT THOMPSON

After a lapse of thirteen years the Norfolk and Norwich Musical Festival was resumed during the last week in October, with such crowded and enthusiastic audiences that there could be no doubt that local feeling was strongly in favour of its continuance. This event had a peculiar interest in that it marked the centenary of the institution becoming a triennial Festival.

The programme was varied and generally interesting. It began in rather stereotyped fashion with 'Elijah,' but this oratorio, which suffers so much from over-familiarity, met with a performance that illustrated how Sir Henry Wood leaves nothing to chance. (On the previous evening he had all the principals together at the full rehearsal, and the concerted pieces, which so often suffer from lack of preparation, were all tried over.) An outstanding feature of the occasion was the very distinguished performance of the part of the Prophet by Mr. Horace Stevens, who put great intensity into his reading. For me, however, the one unforgettable episode was the scene with the Widow, in which Miss Maggie Teyte—who is said to have had no previous experience in oratorio—gave us a genuine thrill by her moving interpretation of the part. Without a shade of exaggeration, she put a note of anguish into her appeal, and of joy when it met with success, that moved even the most hardened critic. Of the other choral works the most important and exacting was Beethoven's Mass in D. One remembers the time when this would have been entirely beyond the powers of the Norwich choir, but, though the material necessarily remains very much the same, its efficiency has been advanced beyond recognition under Sir Henry Wood's influence, and, after careful and thorough rehearsal, the singing of even this exhausting work was informed with an intelligence that never flagged. The quality of the singing may be less beautiful than that which may be found in the West of England, less forceful than that of Yorkshire, but if the choruses in the Mass were not devoid of a certain sense of effort, yet they were always musicianly and expressive, and did credit to the thorough drill to which the painstaking choirmaster, Dr. Haydon Hare, had subjected the singers. Another test was in Bach's unaccompanied Motet, 'Jesu, Priceless Treasure,' which from a technical point of view was a very meritorious performance, although Dr. Hare, who conducted, made but little effort to develop the expressive side of the music. Sir Henry Wood, on the other hand, exerted himself to realise the dramatic qualities of Bach's 'St. John' Passion, on the whole with great success. I am still not reconciled to his treatment of the Chorales when he allots some to solo voices, which seems to me to obscure their fundamental character as representing the voice of the congregation; but here, as always, one could not but give him credit for having carefully thought out his reading, and for securing the effect he intended. His use of the organ to accompany the Saviour's words, and of the strings in the other recitatives, was quite appropriate, and I imagine he could quote the usage of Bach's time for employing trombones to sustain the voices in Church music. At the opposite pole in character was Verdi's 'Requiem,' of which Sir Henry gave a reading that was completely in accord with the highly emotional nature of the music. Native composers were strongly represented by three of the most remarkable works of recent times—Elgar's 'Dream of Gerontius' (with Mr. John Coates at his best in a part which he has made his own); Vaughan Williams's 'Sea' Symphony; and Holst's 'Hymn of Jesus.' Dr. Vaughan Williams conducted one of the best performances of his strikingly poetic and picturesque work that I have yet heard, but the 'Hymn of Jesus' failed to carry conviction. The choir was not at home in it, and the place was unfitted to produce the right atmosphere. Of the composer's absolute sincerity I have no doubt, and this reconciles one to what might otherwise seem mere eccentricity; but the work, with its primitive, mystical quality, demands a suitable environment, and this is not the concert-room—even though, as in this case, it may be a converted (or perverted?) Church. In a spacious, dimly-lighted Norman Cathedral it would seem quite in accord with its surroundings, and in the two performances it has received at Hereford Festivals this ideal has been approximated, with a success not attained elsewhere.

The outstanding success of the Norwich Festival was, to me, the admirable work done by the New Queen's Hall Orchestra. Sir Henry Wood had it in the hollow of his hand. The finish of the playing, and especially of the accompanying, was delightful. Madame Suggia gave Elgar's Violoncello Concerto, Madame Fachiri and Miss d'Aranyi Bach's Concerto in D minor for two violins, and M. Cortôt Saint-Saëns's C minor Pianoforte Concerto, and these fine artists were heard to all the greater advantage because of the nicety of the orchestral playing. César Franck's Symphony and Berlioz's 'Symphonie Fantastique' were among the orchestral pieces, and there was a particularly well selected and arranged concert of Wagner pieces. Brahms's C minor Symphony was also in the programme, and a well-deserved compliment was paid to Dr. Bates—the organist of Norwich Cathedral, who has done much to sustain the reputation of Norwich as a musical centre—by inviting him to conduct it. Unfortunately, however, he seemed hardly to appreciate the vitality of this noble work, and in his evident desire to realise its gravity did less than justice to the colour and grace that belong to it. Berlioz, on the other hand, had a most brilliant interpretation. If his Symphony still failed to impress me as an inspired work, it was not the fault of the performance. Mr. Frank Bridge conducted a very exhilarating performance of his picturesque orchestral suite, 'The Sea,' and another very effective performance was that of Strauss's 'Don Juan.' Dame Ethel Smyth conducted her 'Boatswain's Mate' Overture, coupled with the Prelude to Act 2 of 'The Wreckers,' and Mr. E. J. Moeran the first performance of a new Orchestral Rhapsody in E. Mr. Moeran has a close connection with Norfolk, and has made a first-hand study of its folk-lore, the influence of which is felt in some of his themes, which have a pleasant flavour of rusticity and are handled with ability. There is charm and colour in the music, although a certain lack of coherence, which is perhaps more apparent than real, may be set down as a fault. The second 'Brandenburg' Concerto in F, in which the solo parts were artistically played by Messrs. Sons (violin), Murchie (flute), Goossens (oboe), and Gyp (trumpet), was another orchestral piece the finished performance of which left a very pleasant impression.

There was a generous list of principal vocalists. In addition to those already named were Mesdames Austral, Bilsland, Silk, and Carrie Tubb (sopranos), and Balfour, Brunskill, Desmond, Furmedge, and Lett (contraltos); and Messrs. Tudor Davies, Hyde, Mullings, and Winter (tenors), and Norman Allin, Heyner, McEachern, Radford, and Harold Williams (basses). The result was that there were very few square pegs in round holes, each vocalist being well chosen for his or her respective task. An interesting innovation was that each part of the morning concert was heralded, after the Bayreuth fashion, by fanfares for eight brass instruments and side-drum, arranged by Sir Henry Wood from themes in the works about to be heard. Some were more effective than others, one from the opening bars of the 'Sea' Symphony particularly so, and they added to the festal character of the occasion. The presence of H.M. The Queen at one concert emphasised the local connection of our Royal house with the county, and the fact—more, I imagine, than a mere coincidence—that the office of Lord Mayor was for the first time held by a woman, Miss Ethel M. Colman (who has, with her sister, Miss Helen Colman, always taken a warm interest in the Festivals), is one which deserves recording.

Church and Organ Music

ROYAL COLLEGE OF ORGANISTS

Members and friends are cordially invited to attend the distribution of Diplomas to successful candidates at the Fellowship, Associateship, and Certificate Choir-Training examinations, on Saturday, January 24, 1925, at 11 a.m. The President, Dr. H. W. Richards, Warden of the R.A.M., will deliver an address on 'The Organist—Artist and Citizen,' after which Mr. H. F. Ellingford, organist to the City of Liverpool, at St. George's Hall, will play upon the College organ the following pieces selected for the July Examination, 1925:

FELLOWSHIP

- Prelude and Fugue in G minor ... J. S. Bach.
(Novello, Book 8, p. 112.)
Minuet from Sonata No. 1, in F major... Stanford.
(Augener.)
Overture to 'Otho' (arr. by W. G. Alcock) Handel.
(Novello.)

ASSOCIATESHIP

- Variations I and 2, 'Vom Himmel Hoch' J. S. Bach.
(Novello, Book 19, p. 73.)
Adagio in E major ... Frank Bridge
(Novello.)

No tickets are required.

Choir-Training Certificate examination held on November 3: passed, W. R. Davey.

H. A. HARDING, Hon. Secretary.

We have received from the Wesley Guild Headquarters, Oxford Chambers, Leeds, a booklet entitled 'Suggestions for Musical Evenings,' by the Rev. J. E. and Mrs. Crawshaw. It contains some excellent general hints, and a number of schemes, such as 'Christmas in Literature and Song,' 'The tunes John Wesley sang,' 'Handel known and unknown' (a particularly good one), 'Bells in Music and legend' (here the suggested programme would be much improved by the addition of a few of the many excellent organ pieces based on chimes), 'Evenings' with Schubert, Schumann, &c. The hymn-tunes recommended are not all of the best quality. All who are responsible for the arranging of music in connection with clubs, guilds, &c., will find this pamphlet useful and practical. No price is mentioned, so presumably it may be had free.

We are glad to hear that a movement is on foot to present Mr. Ralph Morgan with a testimonial in recognition of his work for music at Bristol. During the past twelve years fortnightly recitals have been given on the splendid organ at St. Mary Redcliffe. Mr. Morgan himself was usually the player, but occasionally visiting organists of distinction were heard. The audiences at these recitals are among the largest of any recitals of the kind, and it is worth noting that this remarkable public following has been brought about without 'playing to the gallery.' Mr. Morgan has for years done this and other extra work without remuneration. A large and influential committee has the testimonial in hand. Donations may be sent to the treasurer, Mr. A. S. Ray, 18, St. Augustine's Parade.

At the United Methodist Church, Sandyford, Newcastle-on-Tyne, on October 22, a new organ, memorial screens, and choir-stalls were dedicated. The organ is in memory of the late John George Benson, organist of the Church for forty-six years; the screens are the gift of members of the family of the late J. G. Watson and Mrs. Watson. Mr. James M. Preston gave the opening recital, playing Sullivan's 'In Memoriam' Overture, Arensky's Variations on a Theme of Tchaikovsky's, Karg-Elert's 'Pastorale, Recitative, and Chorale,' Ferrari's Fantasy on French Folk-Songs, and the Pastorale and Finale from Guilman's first Sonata. The organ was built by Messrs. Blackett & Howden, of Newcastle, and is a three-manual of thirty-three stops.

The St. Michael's Singers and their conductor, Dr. Harold Darke, gave a four-days' Bach Festival, at St. Michael's, Cornhill, on November 4-7. Nothing in the music of London during the present season has more worthily succeeded than this. The music, culminating in the B minor Mass on the last day (this took place at St. Martin-in-the-Fields) was invariably well performed, and the Church was always crowded with listeners. The solo singers for the Mass were Miss Elsie Suddaby, Miss Margaret Balfour, Mr. John Adams, and Mr. Stuart Robertson.

The organ at Christ Church, Ealing, was re-opened on October 9 after cleaning, &c., by Messrs. Henry Willis & Sons and Lewis & Co. The console has been moved, a new pedal-board added, and the reeds re-voiced. Mr. Harold E. West gave a recital, his programme including Hollins's Concert Rondo, two Preludes by Vaughan Williams, Wolstenholme's 'Fantaisie Rustique,' &c. Boys from the London Choir School sang 'Let the bright seraphim,' Nares's 'The souls of the righteous,' and Parry's 'Jerusalem.'

Mendelssohn's 'Athalie' was performed at Albion Congregational Church, Ashton-under-Lyne, on October 26, the occasion being the Choir anniversary. The soloists were Miss Edith Garside, Madame Elsie Harrop, and Miss Leonora Hague; the Rev. W. J. Farrow acted as Reader, and Dr. T. Keighley was at the organ.

The combined choirs of Alnwick and district, numbering about three hundred voices, held a Festival Service at Alnwick Parish Church on November 5. The music included Walmisley's Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis in D minor and Bairstow's 'Save us, O Lord.' Mr. G. C. Gray conducted, and Mr. Jack Burn was at the organ.

Mr. H. V. Spanner will include the test-pieces for the January R.C.O. Fellowship examination in the programme of his recital at the National Institute for the Blind, Great Portland Street, on December 3, at 3 o'clock. It will be remembered that the organ at the Institute is a replica of that at the College—a fact that makes Mr. Spanner's performance especially instructive.

Parts I and 2 of the 'Christmas' Oratorio will be sung at St. Alban's Abbey by the local Bach Choir on December 16, at 8 o'clock. There will be a full orchestra; the soloists will be Miss Janet Powell, Mr. Edward Gooding, and Mr. Stuart Robertson; Dr. Harold Darke will be at the organ; and Mr. W. L. Luttman will conduct.

In the November issue of the Beacon (a journal devoted to the interests of the blind) appears an excellent biographical article on William Wolstenholme, with a portrait. We are glad to hear that the London Society of Organists has made Mr. Wolstenholme its president for 1925.

In our report last month of the opening of the new organ at Eton College we said the opening recital was given by Mr. Bernard Johnson. This was a slip, which we regret; the player was of course Mr. Basil Johnson, the Precentor of the College.

A Festival Service of choirs in the Chigwell Rural Deanery took place at Loughton St. Mary's Church on November 1. About two hundred singers were present. Mr. Henry Riding conducted.

The organ at St. Mark's, Portsmouth, has been reconstructed by Messrs. Rushworth & Dreaper. It is now a three-manual with thirty-seven stops and over twenty pistons.

Mr. Herbert Hodge will play all the R.C.O. January test-pieces at his recitals at St. Nicholas Cole Abbey during December (Tuesdays, at 1).

'The Hymn of Praise' will be sung at St. Matthias, Richmond, by the Oratorio Choir, at Evensong, on December 14.

Parts 1 and 2 of the 'Christmas' Oratorio will be sung at St. Stephen's, Bow, on December 28, at 6.30 p.m.

ORGAN RECITALS

Mr. Lionel Ladbrooke, All Saints', Southampton—Fantasia with Chorale, Henry Smart; Fantasia and Toccata in D minor, Stanford; Postlude, W. G. Alcock.

Mr. W. O. Minay, St. Margaret's, Westminster—A Bach programme: Prelude and Fugue in E minor ('The Wedge'), Trio-Sonata No. 1; Toccata and Fugue in D minor ('Dorian'); and four Chorale Preludes.

Mr. A. E. Jones, Town Hall, Bolton—Toccata and Fugue in D minor, Bach; Carillon, William Faulkes; Finale in D, Lemmens.

Dr. H. C. L. Stocks, St. John's, Old Colwyn—Prelude on Croft's 136th, Parry; Toccata in F, Chorale Prelude, 'My inmost heart doth yearn,' and Fugue in G minor, Bach.

Miss Lilian Coombes, St. Lawrence Jewry—Concerto in G minor, Handel; 'St. Anne' Fugue, Bach; Allegro (Symphony No. 8), Widor.

Mr. Arthur G. Gibbey, All Hallows', Bromley—'Suite Gothique,' Boëllmann; Grand Chœur in D, Guilmant; Fantasia in F, Best.

Mr. John E. Byron, St. Michael and All Angels', Sutton-in-Ashfield—Prelude on 'St. Michael,' John E. West; Prelude and Fugue in D minor ('Fiddle' Fugue), Bach; 'Sursum Corda' and 'Alla Marcia,' Ireland.

Mr. F. Dalrymple, Tredegarville Baptist Church, Cardiff—Choral No. 3, Franck; Allegro (Sonata No. 5), Bach; Sonata No. 9 (omitting 'Phantasie'), Rheinberger; Concerto in D minor, Handel.

Mr. Cyril Pearce, St. Mary's Baptist Church, Norwich—Maestoso and Allegro, Handel; Prelude in E minor, Bach; Sonata No. 12, Rheinberger; Finale (Organ Sonata in G), Elgar.

Mr. Paul Rochard, Kendal Parish Church—Sonata No. 2, Guilmant; Sonatina (from 'God's time is the best'), Bach; 'Fantaisie Dialoguée,' Boëllmann; Passacaglia, Reger.

Mr. Herbert Westerby, St. Stephen's, Walbrook—Choral Melody in A, C. F. Waters; Prelude in C minor, Bach; Concerto Rondo, Hollins.

Mr. Wilfred Arlom, Christ Church, St. Laurence, Australia—Sonata No. 6, Rheinberger; Passacaglia and Fugue in C minor, Bach; 'Chant de Mai' and Menuet Scherzo, Jongen; Grande Pièce Symphonique, Franck.

Miss Marjorie T. Renton, St. Stephen's, Walbrook—Pastorale, Franck; Chorale-Prelude on 'Ein Feste Burg,' Karg-Elert; Rhapsody No. 3, Saint-Saëns; Toccata in F, Bach.

Mr. W. Hyslop Mundell, Kilmacolm Parish Church—Pastoral Sonata, Rheinberger; Toccata, Adagio, and Fugue in C, Bach; Five Variations on a Scots Air ('Gala Water'), Archer; Finale in B flat, Wolstenholme.
Mr. G. W. Harris Sellick, St. Mary Magdalene, Ashton-upon-Mersey—Festival Prelude on 'Der Hölle Pforten sind zerstört,' Karg-Elert; Allegro (Symphony No. 6), Widor; Legend, Harvey Grace; Symphonie Gothique, Godard.

Mr. Herbert Hodge, St. Stephen's, Walbrook—A Bach programme: Prelude and Fugue in C; Trio in C minor; Chorale-Prelude, 'In Thee is bliss'; Fugue in F; Sonata in E flat; Prelude and Fugue in B minor.

Dr. E. C. Bairstow, Harrogate College for Girls—Overture to 'Athaliah,' Handel; Chorale-Preludes on 'Old 136th,' Charles Wood; 'Veni, Emmanuel,' Bairstow; 'Lord Jesu Christ, turn to us,' Bach; 'Lift high ye gates,' Karg-Elert; Fantasia and Fugue in G minor, Bach; Prelude and Toccata in D minor, Stanford.

Mr. G. F. Brockless, Parish Church, Hornsey—Elegy, Bairstow; Pastel No. 3, Karg-Elert; Overture, Faulkes.

Mr. W. J. Lancaster, Bolton Parish Church—Organ Concerto in F, Handel; Fantasy-Prelude, Macpherson; Andantino, Frank Bridge; Toccata-Prelude on 'Pange Lingua,' Bairstow; Fugue in B minor, Bach.

Mr. E. A. Moore, St. Luke's, Manningham—Prelude and Fugue in G minor, Bach; Rêverie in A flat, E. A. Moore; Gavotte Moderne, Lemare; Prayer and Cradle Song, Guilmant.

Mr. Denis J. Reed, Emmanuel Parish Church, Exeter—Toccata (Sonata No. 14), Rheinberger; Fugue in E flat, Bach; March for a Church Festival, Best.

Mr. W. Brennand Smith, St. Austell Parish Church—Introduction and Fugue in F sharp minor, Handel; Prelude on 'Martyrdom,' Parry; 'Pièce Héroïque,' Franck; Three Sea Pieces, MacDowell.

Mr. Henry Riding, St. Mary Abchurch, E.C.—Pilgrims' March ('Italian' Symphony), Mendelssohn; 'Ode to the Air,' E. C. Ford; Fugue in D, Thomas Adams; Fantasia, F. E. Gladstone.

Mr. Allan Brown, City Temple—Overture to the 'Mastersingers,' Wagner; Adagio (Symphony No. 6), Widor; Fugue in G minor, Bach; Intermezzo (Sonata No. 8), Rheinberger; Finale in B flat, Wolstenholme.

Mr. T. Newbould, St. Paul's, King Cross, Halifax—Choral Song and Fugue, S. S. Wesley; Légende, Berceuse, and Carillon, Vierne; Concert Overture in C minor, H. A. Fricker.

Dr. Chastey Hector, Brighton Parish Church—Festal Prelude, Dunhill; Prelude and Fugue in D minor ('Fiddle' Fugue), Bach; Rêverie and 'Allegro Marcattissimo,' Strauss.

Dr. Gordon A. Slater, Boston Parish Church—Toccata and Fugue in D minor, Bach; Elegy, Bairstow; 'Il Sposalizio,' Liszt.

Mr. H. Cyril Robinson, St. John's, Barmouth—Phantasie (Sonata No. 12), Rheinberger; Prelude, Fugue, and Variation, Franck; Psalm-Prelude No. 3, Howells; Pilgrim's Progress (Part 1), Ernest Austin; 'Pièce Héroïque,' Franck. Mrs. Wade Roberts and Dr. J. R. Heath played Largo, from Concerto for two violins, Bach; Largo and Allegro (Sonata for two violins), Handel.

Mr. Herbert Hodge at St. Nicholas Cole Abbey—'Song of Triumph,' John E. West; Sonata, Elgar; Air with Variations, Faulkes; and a Handel programme.

Mr. Noel Ponsonby, St. Mary-le-Bow, Cheapside—Preludes and Fugues in C major and B minor, two Chorale-Preludes, and Fantasia on Kyrie 'God the Holy Ghost,' Bach; and three Chorale-Preludes in C, Alan Gray.

APPOINTMENTS

Mr. Richard H. Kay, Director of Music at Tonbridge School.
Mr. Percy West Taylor, Borough Organist of West Ham.

In our November number we announced the appointment of Mr. C. H. U. Embery to All Saints', North Peckham. The information was sent to us in the usual way, and we accepted it. Now Mr. Ernest H. Cullum writes to say that he is organist at All Saints', and that Mr. Embery has not been connected with that Church since last March.

Letters to the Editor

THE ALTO DIFFICULTY

SIR,—According to my experience there is no reason why 'alto'—sung by boys with breaking voices—need be either aggressive, feeble, or unreliable. Boys whose voices have definitely broken are, of course, best employed, if employed at all, in singing either tenor or bass, unless, indeed, they prove to be that rara avis, a natural alto; though I have heard that great authority, Sir Walford Davies, advocate the use of one or two self-sacrificing basses singing falsetto to fill in the otherwise missing alto part. In using boys whose voices are breaking, there comes a time when a part of the register passes out of control. This factor is usually the cause of the aggressive tone referred to by 'Choirmaster.' Failure to produce a note in the head-voice leads to an attempt to sing it 'off the chest,' but this can be avoided by correct training in the 'treble' stage. In many cases the 'break' in a boy's voice manifests itself at about F or G, which, though in the lower part of the treble register, is about the middle of the alto register. I train boys to use their head-voice below this point, with the result that the first evidence of a boy's voice 'going' is often a loss of a note at the top. In cases like this the boy's range gradually drops, the lower part remaining as good and usable as ever. At the present moment I have my two leading boys of last year singing alto most pleasantly and efficiently, though their upper range has dropped from A to D. It is just at the 'breaking' age that the boy's musical perception is usually greatest. He is becoming keenly aware of the abstract beauty and significance of music, and it is best that there should be no gap in his choir 'life' if injury to his voice in after years can be avoided. Boys who in spite of correct training develop a 'hole' in the voice when the breaking-point begins to show, need careful watching, and if necessary should be rested; but one will be very unlucky if among the many boys who pass through his hands as trebles half-a-dozen do not go in the way I have described. 'Feeble' tone in the alto, due to the use of boys for the part, is best met by using half-a-dozen instead of 'a couple' of boys, and insisting on a quiet, small share from each. If the boys are given practice in elementary sight-singing as trebles, they will put it to good use as altos. The boys I have before mentioned quite recently made a most excellent shot at the alto part of Bach's Christmas Oratorio at sight, and I think this may be taken to be as stiff a test as is likely to be needed. A part being missing through the absence of all its representatives, raises the general issue of discipline and esprit de corps, which deserves a letter to itself.

Lastly, the fact remains that the great mass of fine Church music available, including the wonderful Elizabethan school, has been written in four-part harmony. If we would do it at its best, alto is vitally necessary. Generally speaking, the finer the music the more essential is the alto part. Apart from the suggestions I have thrown out, I rather fancy that 'Choirmaster' will find, as in my own case, the mere regular performance of good music will attract to his choir real, natural altos. Two years ago I took over a choir with none. With the sympathy and support of a musical vicar I have gradually introduced a really good musical service, including an anthem every Sunday, with the result that I have now three natural altos and three boy altos, the latter being quite as efficient and pleasant to listen to as the former. I can assure 'Choirmaster' that no part in the choir gives me less trouble or is more efficient than my 'alto.'—Yours, &c.,

November, 1924.

'EAST END.'

'THE ENGLISHNESS OF PARRY'

SIR,—Has not the writer of the article on 'The Englishness of Parry' made a strange omission in his reference to the influence of Nature upon the composer? Is it quite true that 'in such a country [i.e., the Cotswold Hills] Parry spent the greater portion of his days'? Parry had a house at Rustington, Sussex, for some time, and though he lived much of his life among the Cotswold Hills, he also spent many days by the sea, and a great many hours in the sea, on the Sussex coast. I remember (about the late 'seventies) often seeing him half-a-mile or more from the shore, swimming about by himself, with all an Englishman's enjoyment of the water, and an evident appreciation of it not from a 'holidayite's' point of view, but from that of a dweller by the sea. He was, indeed, so much a lover of the sea and so proficient a swimmer that my brothers and I, with boylike hero-worship, always called him 'Captain' Parry, imagining that he must have been a sailor!

Mr. Brent-Smith's article begins with the quotation: 'We are what suns and winds and waters make us.' I suppose the word waters refers to the sea, which has had a greater power in moulding English character than all our hills and rural scenery together, and after such a quotation to leave out all reference to the sea in connection with Parry's life is a strange omission indeed.

If Nature in the form of hills and country scenery had an influence upon this English composer, surely Nature in her very different garb of the sea had equally strong sway? It might be worth while examining Parry's music to discover wherein the country and wherein the sea had the predominating influence.

I do not know how long Parry lived at Rustington, nor how many months of the year he lived there, but I believe he owned the house (his home by the sea) down to the late years of his life.—Yours, &c.,

Selsey Rectory, Chichester. K. H. MACDERMOTT.
November, 1924.

P.S.—Since writing the above I have discovered that Parry was born at Bournemouth, so that from a child the sea seems to have had a claim on him.

'A COMMENTARY UPON MENDELSSOHN'

SIR,—May I conclude what I have to say in this discussion by assuring Mr. Foss that my letters have contained no insinuations whatever, and nowhere did I hint that the accompaniment to the song referred to was written by him.

Mr. Foss's explanation of his 'inexplicable activities' does not deny that the Daily Mail report is fair. But in any case the title of such a song is sufficient to repel those who believe that it is not in the best interests of Art to use music as an adjunct to the sordid or frivolous, however 'cute' it may be from the 'human, artistic, or antiquarian' points of view, or however profitable from a commercial aspect.

I do not want Mr. Foss to regard my criticism as a personal affair at all, because, had I been writing an article and not a letter, I should have omitted names, and referred to principles only. Mr. Foss is by no means alone among musicians of to-day who seem to possess dual personalities, and I want him to take a sporting view that if he sends a 'big lizzie' into the Mendelssohnian camp he must look forward to one coming over in return.

In conclusion, it is fair for me to say that, in spite of all I have written, I agree with 'Peter Piper' as to the analytical skill and thought involved in Mr. Foss's series of interesting articles.—Yours, &c.,

J. WEARHAM.

28, Mount Ephraim Lane, S.W. 16.

November, 1924.

A 'GALLIARDE BY MR. CUTTINGE'

SIR,—In the Euing musical library, now in the possession of the Royal Technical College, Glasgow, there is a bound volume of manuscript music which has some points of interest. A bookseller's note inside the cover describes it thus: 'An old musical manuscript, containing Lute music, oblong folio, in a very prettily tooled and stamped binding of the period of James I.' The book remains still in good condition, although it has evidently had several owners.

It begins with sixty-eight pages of lute music, neatly and carefully written in tablature. Across one of the pages there is written in a vigorous hand: 'Bought of Ferdinando Gunter, May 17, 1699.' Then about the middle of the book, in another handwriting, there are several pages of exercises in figured bass. The bass with the figures is noted in the usual F clef, but the chords are worked out in lute tablature. This naturally shows the tuning of the lute that the writer employed.

On the first blank leaf are the initials 'W. H. Jan. 27 1753.' May this be Dr. William Hayes, who was born in 1706, and died in 1777? Most of the pieces bear no indication of their purpose or of their composers, but one is marked a 'Pauen by Mr. Bulman.' Is this the Baruch Bullman who is mentioned by Mr. Davey? ('History of English Music,' p. 135). Another is marked 'Robin Hood by Mr. Ascue.' But perhaps the most interesting is a 'Galliarde by Mr. Cutting,' of which I quote the opening, and one variation :

TUNING OF THE LUTE.

This is no doubt the Thos. Cutting who is referred to by Hawkins (p. 566, Novello Edition). He speaks of him as an excellent player, who in the year 1607 was in the service of the Lady Arabella Stuart. As compositions by Cutting do not seem to have been published, it may interest some of your readers to see the Galliard and its first variation arranged for the pianoforte.—Yours, &c.,

26, University Avenue, HARRY COLIN MILLER.
Glasgow.

SOME PERSIAN FOLK-SONGS

SIR,—The following may be of some interest. They are three folk-tunes common amongst the natives here, the Suri tribe of Persians. Their voices are high-pitched, almost without exception, but very few have any idea of music, and a large number cannot even sing anywhere near a given note.

It was difficult to get a definite tune, as, owing presumably to the fact that there is no written music, even the same singer will vary the notes slightly each time he sings. This was especially the case with Ex. 1. I think this has some strength in it. Of course, with all their songs the natives repeat ad infinitum.

I do not know whether these tunes are really old or not. The natives are apparently the relics of the time of Cyrus.

Ex. 1.

Andante.

Ex. 2. About Allegretto or dance.

Ex. 3.

Rather slow march time.

—Yours, &amp;c.,

W. JOYCE.

Maidan-i-Naftum, Persian Gulf.
August, 1924.

SPREADING THE NEWS

SIR,—The fitting of words to Bach's Fugues seems to me such an admirable idea—especially from the point of view of enhancing the beauty of the music, and (above all) of preserving its pristine bloom—that I feel the matter should not be allowed to rest there.

Think how the sister art of poetry would benefit from an adaptation of this scheme!

I submit that something on the following lines :

Vivace.

sleep of night, When the winds are breathing low, would be much prized, and I should be greatly obliged if you could put me in touch with the proper authorities that would be most likely to welcome such an illuminating method of spreading abroad an appreciation and fuller understanding of all that is finest in poetry.—Yours, &c.,

29, Hildrop Crescent, N.7.
November, 1924.

FELIX WHITE.

CHANTING: A SUGGESTION

SIR,—As I understand it, Mr. Wyatt does not like the Prayer Book psalm-wise 'pointing' of the Te Deum, and recalls certain now proved historical facts connected with that venerable hymn in justification of his dislike. For myself, I accept things as I find them; this is the measure of our disagreement. The Church is not a museum, but a workshop.

Authority, when it gave us the Te Deum in English for use 'daily throughout the year' (this frequency was in itself an innovation), did not say, 'You shall continue to sing it to the Ambrosian chant.' It may have hoped that such would be the case, but in the hurly-burly of the first Reformation century a good many matters of detail were left to settle themselves, Church music conspicuously among them. At a later period Authority does appear definitely to have said: 'If you are going to sing the Te Deum psalm-wise, this is how you are to sing it'—probably standardizing what was already customary; for Lowe (1661) makes it clear that before the Great Rebellion no other settings 'in variety' but 'tunes in four parts' (i.e., psalm chants) were used by Cathedral choirs for this Canticle. Consequently when looking for an example of 'apparently perverse division' in Prayer Book 'pointing' there seemed no reason to refuse an instance from a specially familiar text merely because it happened to be a late arrival—an example which, to me, loses its perversity in use, while to Mr. Wyatt it appears to remain grotesque; this is but a matter of individual taste.

That the Te Deum had for centuries its own single traditional melody surely does not make the psalm-wise treatment of it to other melodies a solecism. For what is the Ambrosian melody at base but a pair of chant-forms in Modes 3 and 4 (the latter of them actually in regular psalter use) decorated with occasional neumes at significant points?—Yours, &c.,

DONALD MACARTHUR.

Goathurst.

November, 1924.

OF WHAT USE ARE CRITICS?

SIR,—'Feste' has no doubt dealt faithfully with Mr. Massi-Hardman on a number of points, but I venture to think that the principal justification of musical criticism is not stated in this amusing little discussion. Surely the use of musical criticism is not to attempt impossibly to set up authoritative standards, or even to guide or help readers in the appreciation of music. To my mind, musical criticism is a little art in itself—of course, a very minor one—and it stands on its own feet by being interesting in itself. Musical criticism is practised because there are people who find it interesting—just in the same way as symphonies are composed and epics written. If there are enough folk interested in musical criticism to make it worth being done, then it is justified like any of the other arts, big or little. The interest lies in seeing the reactions caused in the mind of the fellow human-being by works of music. Of course, there are bad musical criticisms, just as there may be bad compositions adopted by the Universities for curriculum purposes. That does not invalidate all attempts at the art. And what nonsense is this talk about a 'gang.' No two men will have the same impressions from a given work of art—hence the desirability of a whole array of critics. And why not admit that this variety gives at least as much interest to our lives as many little compositions issued by the world's foremost publishing firms (or others). Very often the commentaries of a group of men like Fox-Strangways, Dent, Langford, and Bonavia are far more entertaining—more intelligent, and artistic products of superior human minds—than the works they set out to criticise.—Yours, &c.,

H. JULIAN KIMBELL.

'A NEW SYSTEM OF MUSICAL NOTATION'

SIR,—I have read carefully your explanation and illustration of the 'Parsons Music Notation.' I have been a teacher of music for some thirty-five years, and am the original user of the title 'Music without Tears.'

The system referred to in your October issue does not appeal to me at all, nor do I think the musical world—teaching and performing—will adopt it, clever as it is. The established 'Old Notation'—called sometimes the 'Pictorial notation' and also the 'Up-and-down notation'—is, to my mind, a perfectly simple, fully comprehensive, and easily-learned notation.

The fault is not in the notation itself, but in the way it is presented by teachers to beginners. The primary fault lies in the way the names of the notes of the staves are taught; and I have not yet seen any published Tutor which appears to me to introduce the beginner to the notation in the easiest and best manner. Owing to this I have for many years used a method of teaching the names of the notes which has never failed. No confusion exists in remembering the difference between the bass and treble staves; sharps and flats are no trouble when properly presented; the clef signs are emphasised as being what they really are—'signs of pitch'; and ledger lines are also easy to learn and remember. My pupils have ranged from five to fifty years of age, of average mental ability, and have turned out uniformly good sight-readers and executants.

The musical public does not want, nor will it tolerate, any 'new notation.' The clever one in question is no improvement on the old; but any method of explaining and simplifying the existing notation will be welcomed and tried.

The particular method used by me has nothing cranky or eccentric about it, and is most simple for beginners of any age. It has been used for years, and has been proved educationally sound. I shall welcome and use any method better than existing ones, and am willing to submit for criticism my own particular method to any publisher who will give it an impartial examination.—Yours, &c.,

396, Strone Road,
Manor Park, E.12.
November, 1924.

C. H. CLARKE.

THE POTENTIALITIES OF JAZZ MUSIC

SIR,—I notice in the 'Ad Libitum' column of the September Musical Times, that 'Feste' points out the real weakness of jazz music lies in 'its almost entire absence of musical interest.' Therefore, presumably, jazz music is not composed by musicians as such.

Is it not possible to write jazz music which combines the qualities of good dance music from the point of view of the dancer, with that of good music from the point of view of the musician? The answer must surely be in the affirmative.

Why do not our recognised composers interest themselves in this form of music, and write and publish the ideal jazz? To them it would be a light task—and also, I imagine, a remunerative one.

I remember reading in the Musical Times some time ago, when this question was being discussed, that a serious musician would not be willing to stoop to compose this kind of music, as he would consider it slightly beneath his dignity. This is easy to understand, and every one will sympathise. But a composer does not think it beneath his dignity to publish a good hymn-tune or song, just because there are hundreds of other hymns and songs which for sheer futility are far worse than the average jazz. Composers, in most branches of music, are trying to raise the standard—for example, in church and school music—and it seems wrong that dance music should be the one branch left to look after itself. Cannot musicians be persuaded to come to the rescue of this, the most popular form of music, and do for it what they are already doing for the rest of music?—Yours, &c.,

Lamuria, Kenya.

October, 1924.

ST. J. H. SHAW.

MUSIC IN THE CINEMA

SIR,—So much has been said recently regarding the deplorable condition of music in the cinema, that I feel it may be of interest to you to know something of the work of the British Screen Music Society, particulars of which I enclose.

Many eminent musicians, including Mr. Josef Holbrooke, are enthusiastic in the new work, and the leading publishers and producers have extended their approval to the scheme.

The main object of the Society is to frame a definite standard art form for use in the cinema, and the following brief outline will, I trust, be of interest to yourself and perhaps to your many readers.

The new Film Music is divided into three distinct forms:

(1.) Loose leaf theme sets in which the theme (motif) is developed in different styles to meet the various situations in which the principal character in a film may find himself. These themes will be used indiscriminately with any film, together with the ordinary numbers from the theatre library, and, being in loose leaf form, several copies of each variation being printed, can be placed here and there in the programme set up for a picture as necessary.

(2.) Symphonic Film Music.—This is an orchestral accompaniment in modified Sonata form, the general outline being: Exposition—the first subject, typical of the general atmosphere of a story, and a group of second subjects typical of the principal characters. A Development section, taking up the major portion of the film, in which there is the necessary amount of reference to the first (atmospheric) subject, and working out of the group of second subjects according to the development and working out of their activities of the characters they represent upon the screen. A Recapitulation section is of shorter duration than is usual in classic Sonata form, and, whilst making reference to the atmospheric first subject, is more concerned with the working up of a grand climax of the two principal second subjects—i.e., hero and heroine.

(3.) Kine-Opera.—This form is based upon Grand Opera principles, and is a trinity of picture, music, and the new art effects which are carried over the auditorium, thus bringing the audience in the complete scheme of things and affecting other senses than those usually appealed to in public entertainments.—Yours, &c.,

Babbacombe, Torquay.

EMILE J. BENNET.

September, 1924.

E. G. D. writes asking whether Prout's words to the subjects of the '48' are published. We learn they were issued by Vincent's (now Winthrop Rogers), but are now out of print. A similar set of words by C. Egerton Lowe has just been published by Weekes & Co.

Sharps and Flats

Hardly anyone now is writing good music, and certainly no one is writing great music.—Sir Thomas Beecham.

As a composer myself, I most emphatically contradict this sweeping assertion. But I know Sir Thomas Beecham of old. He is one of the most hopeless pessimists of the age.—Algernon Ashton.

Your article on 'Handel and the Blacksmith' interested me because my grandfather, the late J. N. Maskelyne, bought some fifteen years ago an anvil which, he was told, at one time belonged to Powell, the Edgeware blacksmith mentioned by your contributor. He discovered that, if struck in the correct manner, the anvil gave out clearly the notes of the familiar theme in Handel's composition.—J. N. Maskelyne, jun., in a letter to the 'Evening News.'

Soprano Solo: 'With verger clad' ('Creation'). Miss —.——Programme of a Musical Service.

Not even Worth or Paquin has thought of a creation like this!—Daily News.

... two contributions by the Léner String Quartet—Quartet in D major, by Adagio Cantabile.—Gramophone Notes in the 'Sphere.'

Mr. Arthur Bliss's gifts seem more suited to the Salvation Army and to circuses than to Queen's Hall—but in saying this I hope I am not exaggerating his merits.—W. J. Turner.

I remember as a youth joining a society for the consumption of hotpots and the audition of Old English music. From those evenings I learned that whereas there is infinite variety in hotpots there is a certain passionless sameness about glees.—James Agate.

I agree that music made for the pianoforte ought to be played on the pianoforte, but I do not like the music and I do not like the pianoforte.—Arnold Dolmetsch.

... that poor old domestic typewriter, the pianoforte.—Sir Walford Davies.

Yes, my favourite sport is flying. I love almost every popular sport that exists to-day, and I pride myself on my golf handicap, my prowess at lawn tennis, and my mountaineering feats; but my passion for flying excels them all in enthusiasm. I am so very, very happy when I am in an aeroplane.—Frieda Hempel.

Air der Bijoux (Jewel Song) Quartet—Seigneur Dieu! (Saints Above, what Lovely Germs!).—Chinese Opera Programme.

We may accept complete annihilation of tonal logic, or a return to Monteverde, Mozart, or the old Netherlanders. But we will never again set up altars to the empty colossus of Strauss.—Lazare Saminsky.

It is well known that the 'mystery' of which Scriabin dreamed all his life, and for which he considered his work a mere preparation, was a sort of liturgical act which had for its aim the annihilation of humanity in a beatitude of cosmic ecstasy.—Boris de Schloezer.

A periodical has reached us, addressed to the 'Brightish Music Society,' at a number in Lerner's Street. ... 'Lerner's Street' may pass. It is the 'Brightish Music Society' that sticks in our gullet.—The Music Bulletin, organ of the British Music Society.

When is this French invasion due to stop? One would think that all good organ music was made in France; for my part I am rather sick of this modern discordant bunk.—Joseph C. Beebe, organist, New Britain, Conn.

The Amateurs' Exchange

Under this heading we insert, free of charge, announcements by amateur musicians who wish to co-operate with others.

Young lady pianist (L.R.A.M.) wishes to meet violinist and 'cellist for sonata and trio practice.—F. B., 8, Dacres Road, Forest Hill, S.E.23.

Bass-baritone wishes to meet accompanist for mutual practice. Harrow district.—J. W. G., c/o Musical Times.
Baritone wishes to meet accompanist for mutual practice. Bach, Strauss, Bridge, Ireland, Parry, &c.—F. G., c/o Musical Times.

Good pianist required to complete trio for classical music.—C. ANDREWS, 35, Belitha Villas, Barnsbury, N.1.

Banjoist wants practice with dance band. N.W. district.—93, Chichele Road, Cricklewood, N.W.2.

South Norwood Philharmonic Society (conductor, Mr. E. A. Preston) extends a cordial invitation to singers in all parts. Rehearsals, Mondays, 8.15 p.m., at South Norwood Mission Hall, Portland Road, S.E.25.—Hon. secretary, Mr. E. WILLIAMS, 67, Dalmally Road, Addiscombe, Croydon.

Lady timpanist, with wide experience, wishes to join amateur orchestra possessing its own instruments, in London or suburbs.—Mrs. GWYN ROBERTS, The Croft, Pollards Hill, South Norbury, S.W.16.

'Cellist wanted to complete string quartet, classical and modern works.—Miss OXMAN, 33, Culverden Road, Balham, S.W.12.

Young lady singer wishes to meet pianist weekly, for mutual practice.—M., 29, Egerton Gardens, W. Ealing.

Accomplished pianist (gentleman) wishes to join small amateur orchestra. London or N.W. suburbs.—G. A. P., c/o Musical Times.

Highgate (Amateur) Philharmonic Orchestra. Good, enthusiastic, amateur players urgently invited to join this orchestra—violins, violas, 'cellos, double-basses, flutes, oboes, bassoon, brass, and pianist. Rehearsals, Thursdays, near Highgate Tube Station.—CONDUCTOR, 27, Anson Road, Tufnell Park, N.7.

Lady pianist, experienced in quartet playing, wishes to join quartet or trio. Good sight-reader. S.W. district.—N. E. E., c/o Musical Times.

Wind instrumentalists (principally cornets, horns, and clarinets) are invited to join Church Orchestra at Manor Park. Good library of music. (Conductor, Mr. Bertram Beale.)—Hon. secretary, Miss STREET, 20, Clavering Road, Wanstead Park Estate.

Viola player (or first violin) and second violin (gentlemen) required to complete string quartet. Haydn, Mozart, Beethoven, &c. Paddington district.—D. K. F., c/o Musical Times.

The City Temple Choral Society, Holborn Viaduct, E.C., practises every Wednesday evening at 8. Vacancies for all voices, especially tenors and contraltos. 'The Messiah,' 'Christmas' Oratorio 'God's time is the best,' 'The Creation,' and Rossini's 'Stabat Mater.'—Applications to the conductor, Mr. ALLAN BROWN, City Temple, E.C.4.

Wanted alto, tenor, and bass to complete small party of madrigal singers. Meetings, Saturday evenings, at Queen's Park, N.W. Regularity and good reading essential.—T., 10, Colville Gardens, Talbot Road, W.11.

The South London Philharmonic Society has vacancies for a few good singers—sopranos, contraltos, tenors, and basses. Rehearsals Wednesday evenings, at Lewisham. Conductor, William H. Kerridge.—Write for prospectus to the hon. secretary, J. W. WATERER, 50c, Crooms Hill, S.E.10.

Pianist wishes to meet violinist for mutual practice.—Miss C. JAMES, 61, Cazenove Road, N.16.

Violinist wishes to meet good accompanist for mutual practice of light orchestral works, occasionally with other instruments. Westminster.—SYDNEY BOWER, 8, Ponsonby Terrace, Millbank, S.W.1.

Soprano wishes to meet accompanist for mutual practice.—S.M., c/o Musical Times.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC

A students' chamber concert was given at Duke's Hall on November 3, when several interesting compositions by students were included in the programme. These comprised a Chorale in B minor for organ, by Owen Franklin, the Variations and Finale from a Pianoforte Sonata in F sharp minor by Reginald King—both of which received admirable interpretations by their respective composers—and three vocal duets by Jessie Furze. Some excellent pianoforte playing was heard in two movements from Beethoven's Sonata in A, Op. 101 (Mr. Gerard Moorat), Schumann's Fantasia in C (Miss Muriel Wayne), and two of Chopin's Studies (Miss May Chipperfield). Chamber music was represented by the first movement of Mozart's String Quartet in G, led by Miss Enid Bailey, Handel's Sonata in D for violin and pianoforte, and part of an Eccles Sonata for violoncello and pianoforte. A number of songs by A. Thomas, Meyerbeer, and Debussy, and a vocal duet by Délibes, completed a well-arranged and attractive programme.

A social and musical meeting of the R.A.M. Club took place on Saturday evening, November 1, when, in spite of the inclement weather, a very large gathering of members and friends assembled to hear a selection of chamber music by Mr. J. B. McEwen, performed by the Spencer Dyke Quartet. The programme opened with a beautiful reading of Quartet No. 9, 'Threnody,' and a Suite of Old National Dances and the well-known 'Biscay' Quartet came later in the programme. A delightful selection of French and English songs was contributed by Mr. Roy Henderson (accompanied by Miss Elsie Johnson). At very short notice, Mr. Henderson took the place of Mr. John Booth, who was prevented from singing owing to a severe cold.

The Sainton-Dolby Prize (contraltos) has been awarded to Elsie Black, a native of Glasgow, Leonore Weepie being highly commended and Lilian Ottman commended. The adjudicators were Miss Katie Moss, Miss Gwladys Roberts, and Madame Bertha Moore (in the chair).

The following elections have recently taken place: Fellows—Madame Edith Hands, Misses Harriet Cohen, Caroline Hatchard, Ethel Bilsland, Messrs. Thorpe Bates Bertram O'Donnell, and Vivian Langrish; Associates—Misses Vera Scrivener, Dorothy Freshwater, Margaret Francis, Dulcie Bowie, Lillian Southgate, Messrs. A. Wesley Roberts, W. Howard Fry, and Michael Head. Sir Alexander Mackenzie has been elected a member of the Board of Directors.

ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC

Shortly before his last illness, the late Cecil Sharp had arranged to give a lecture and a demonstration of Folk-Dancing to the students of the College, at the invitation of the Director, Sir Hugh Allen. The devoted enthusiasts of the English Folk-Dance Society are fulfilling the trust laid upon them by their late founder, and are working with fine energy and industry to prosecute his revival of old dances and re-construction of the quaint choreography of the treatises. On November 5, in the College Theatre, the Society, under the guidance of Dr. Vaughan Williams, gave an interesting and illuminating demonstration of about twenty dances of outstanding variety and significance, and it was hard to know which to admire the more, Dr. Vaughan Williams's advocacy of the life and reality of Folk-Dance or the dancers' skill in vindicating his claim. Of the dances performed it is not surprising that the Sword Dance and the Morris Dances seemed the most attractive, partly due no doubt to the little histrionic thread running through them and making them to tell a story, so to speak, instead of being mere delight of ear and eye. Miss Avril and Miss de Jersey, who were responsible for the accompaniments, played the whole programme from memory with admirable musical taste.

The chief features of the two orchestral concerts of the past month were the first performance of a Fugue in B flat minor, by Patrick Hadley (a student of the College, and Arthur Sullivan prize-winner), Tchaikovsky's fourth Symphony, in F minor, and Butterworth's Rhapsody for Orchestra, 'A Shropshire Lad,' which were played by the Friday Orchestra, under Mr. Adrian C. Boulton. Mr. Hadley's contribution proved a short work, and more subdued, perhaps, than one might expect of a fugue, but undoubtedly it is full of meaning and fine intention. The programme of the Tuesday Orchestra contained the late Sir Charles Stanford's 'Heraclitus,' sung by the Choral Class, and his 'Songs of the Fleet,' for solo, chorus, and orchestra. These were conducted by College students, members of the Conducting Class, who were also responsible for the 'Siegfried Idyll,' Chabrier's Rhapsody, 'España,' and Grieg's 'Symphonic Dance,' the other items being conducted by the Director and Dr. Malcolm Sargent. It is interesting to note that no less than five students conducted at this concert.

In the competition for the Hopkinson Medals for Pianoforte Playing, on November 12, the awards were: Gold Medal, C. Irene Sweetland; Silver Medal, Edgar Kendal Taylor. The examiner was Dr. Ernest Walker.

The Ashton-Jonson Exhibition for Pianoforte Playing has been awarded to Walter F. S. Bontoft.

ROYAL COLLEGE OF ORGANISTS

FREE LECTURES ON CHOIR-TRAINING

A well-attended lecture on 'The General Principles of Choir-Training' was given by Dr. H. W. Richards, at the College, on Monday, November 3.

The lecturer first dwelt upon the many qualities required by every choirmaster, in addition to knowledge of his subject. Conducting rehearsals, and the wisest and most tactful ways of dealing with men and boys were discussed, after which the lecturer spoke on 'Method in Teaching.' He insisted that without method valuable time would be wasted, the result being listlessness on the part of the choir, and loss of interest in the work in hand. Dr. Richards showed how easy it was, with a little ingenuity, to combine various difficulties in the music, which the choirmaster was anxious to concentrate upon, with the preliminary 'tuning up' exercises; also how these could be varied and the time profitably spent. Then followed the teaching of hymn-singing. This was an important part of every organist's duty, for he was responsible for the interpretation of a good many hymns each week. The Chorale in the time of Luther was referred to, and the effect of hymn-singing during John Wesley's ministry; also the wonderful power of hymns in a religious revival. Various points were criticised: pace—sentimental drawl—processional hymns—the playing-over—attack—how to deal with Rall. and pauses—congregational singing. The importance of clear enunciation and phrasing of words was spoken of at some length. Hymn 272 ('A. & M.') was instanced as to the absurdity of taking breath only at the end of each line. 'O Saviour, may we never rest' made no sense without the context. An illustration was given of the bad attack in 'Amen,' and of the counter-tenor leading off, which was more amusing than reverent. There was time for only a few remarks upon the singing of the Canticles, after which the lecturer invited questions. The audience responded, and several points were discussed to mutual advantage. Many members of the audience expressed their thanks to the R.C.O. for instituting the lectures, and also the examinations in choir-training.

On Tuesday, November 4, lectures were given on 'Mixed Choirs' by Dr. Keighley, and on 'Boys' Voices' by Dr. Stanley Marchant.

THE COMING SEASON

SUPPLEMENTARY LIST

BARCLAY'S BANK MUSICAL SOCIETY.—The particulars given in our last issue were incorrect. Concerts are to be given at Queen's Hall on December 10 and March 25. The list of orchestral works proposed for rehearsal during the season includes Stanford's 'Shamus O'Brien' Overture, Glazounov's 'Scènes de Ballet,' Coleridge-Taylor's Ballade in A minor, and a Symphony by Tchaikovsky.

SOUTH LONDON PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY (Mr. W. H. Kerridge).—February 7, Grieg's Pianoforte Concerto (with M. de Greef), Beethoven's fifth Symphony, 'Finlandia,' 'Hebrides' Overture; May 23, Tchaikovsky's B flat minor Pianoforte Concerto (with Mr. Rummel), a Handel Organ Concerto, Grainger's 'Shepherds' Hey,' and the 'Oberon' Overture.

NATIONAL PROVINCIAL AND UNION BANK MUSICAL SOCIETY (Mr. H. J. Baggs).—Max Bruch's G minor Violin Concerto; 'Oberon' and 'Rienzi' Overtures; 'Liebeslieder Walzer'; 'The Revenge.'

CHORAL SOCIETIES IN LONDON AND SUBURBS

CIVIL SERVICE CHOIR (Mr. Rutland Boughton).—The second concert takes place on February 11 (not on February 4), and will include besides Elizabethan music, 'Six Celtic Choruses,' by Rutland Boughton (performed for the first time), and Walford Davies's 'Three Jovial Huntsmen.'

DULWICH PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY (Mr. Arthur Fagge).—'The Golden Legend.'

HITHER GREEN CHORAL AND ORCHESTRAL SOCIETY (Mr. Ernest Dumayne).—'The Flag of England' (Bridge); 'Towards the Unknown Region' (Vaughan Williams); 'Songs of the Sea' (Stanford); 'The Dream of Gerontius.'

PROVINCIAL CHORAL SOCIETIES

AUDLEM CHORAL SOCIETY (Mr. R. A. Tayler).—'Merrie England.'

BANFF CHORAL AND ORCHESTRAL SOCIETY (Mr. Harold George).—Concert version of 'Bethlehem' (Rutland Boughton), conducted by the composer; 'Merrie England'; 'Tom Jones.'

ARUNDEL CHORAL SOCIETY (Mr. Norman F. Demuth).—'The Banner of St. George'; 'Ode to Death' (Holst); Three Carols for soprano, chorus, and orchestra (Peter Warlock).

CARDIFF MUSICAL SOCIETY (Mr. T. E. Aylward).—'Go, song of mine' (Elgar); 'At the round earth's imagined corners' (Parry); 'O Life Everlasting' and 'Bide with us' (Bach); 'The Surrender of the Soul' (Cornelius); &c.

CREWE PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY (Mr. R. A. Tayler).—Fantasia on 'Lohengrin' and 'The Mastersingers'; 'The Spectre's Bride.'

GUILLE-ALLÈS CHORAL ASSOCIATION, GUERNSEY (Mr. John David).—'The Creation'; 'Blest Pair of Sirens'; 'The Wake of O'Connor' (Hubert Bath).

NANTWICH CHORAL AND ORCHESTRAL SOCIETY (Mr. R. A. Tayler).—'Acis and Galatea.'

PORTSMOUTH NORTH END (Mr. Ernest Birch).—'King Olaf'; 'Tom Jones.'

THE RENASCENCE OF DUTCH MUSIC

On November 4, at the University of London, Mr. Herbert Antcliffe read a paper on the above subject before the members of the Musical Association. It was illustrated by a short programme of modern Netherlands music, contributed by Mr. Gordon Bryan (pianoforte), Miss Dorothy Robson (vocalist), and M. Pierre V. Tas (violin).

The lecturer began by saying that the kingdom of Holland to-day was only a part of the original Netherlands whence emanated the glorious legacy of music which came to us from the 16th century. It comprised, however, the major part of it geographically, and the stronger and purer part racially, and in it there had been a more continuous artistic feeling than in the other Flemish parts of the Netherlands. The language, which really played an important part in the formation of national musical idiom, was, further, in more direct descent from that of Obrecht, des Pres, Lassus, &c. The great School of music associated with their names did really die out, and Reinken was one of the fathers, not of a distinctively Dutch school, but of the great German school which began with Bach and extended to Brahms. When at the beginning of the last century the Dutch nation as we know it to-day was coming into existence, there came a renewal of the feeling which must ultimately, though certainly not for many years, express itself in the character of the music. Always a musical nation, Holland had had its composers, and still more its interpreters, throughout the centuries. These had, however, paid allegiance to the musicians of Germany. Dutch musicians had with few exceptions been German musicians, and those few exceptions had been French musicians.

The leaders of the present renaissance, the beginning of which dated back some forty years, were de Lange, Diepenbrock, Zweers, Wagenaar, and Röntgen. Of these, de Lange as a conductor and organizer, Diepenbrock as a composer and essayist, Zweers and Wagenaar as composers and teachers, put the movement more or less into order, and sent out pupils and followers to carry it further; but it was Röntgen who brought the music of the people—the folk-music—into wider knowledge and use. In a recently-published book, Sem Dresden, the head of the Amsterdam Conservatoire, ascribed the beginnings of the renaissance to two main causes: first, the increasing influence of Catholic learning, which had known how to hold its own against materialistic tendencies; and second, the vague suspicion, which later became certainty, that the German classics did not represent the Alpha and Omega of music. Whether or not these causes were stated in the order of their importance, there could be little doubt that they brought about the development in the work of the most strikingly original composer Holland had had for centuries, Alphons Diepenbrock. Born a few months before Debussy, with whom he had some personal characteristics in common, he was the first to break away from the long-continued German tradition. Despite some affinity with Debussy, it was not correct, however, to regard him as a Gallicised Dutchman, the truth being that he was of the nature which was strongly influenced by the circumstances in which he found himself. It need only be said that, whatever his diversities, he was a thorough Dutchman when dealing with his native land.

The Dutchman, like the Englishman, though a sturdily independent person in many matters, was very subject to leading in art, and particularly in musical art, so when these leaders before-mentioned were young enthusiasts just beginning to realise the possibilities latent in themselves and their nation, it may be noted that there was also considerable musical activity of a general nature. Up to the early 'eighties the only Conservatoire in existence was the Royal Music School at the Hague, but the success which attended the foundation of the Amsterdam Conservatoire led to similar Schools at Rotterdam, Utrecht, and Haarlem. The literary revival was also growing, and had both a direct and an indirect influence, while a more or less corresponding revival of pictorial art had taken place scarcely a generation before. Dutch composers, instead of relying almost entirely upon German words as the basis of their vocal compositions, now began to use not only French, English, and Latin, but, to a greater extent than any other, the fine poetry of their own land. What might be called a semi-national influence showed itself in the number of works inspired by Indian and Eastern subjects generally. To the average Dutchman, the Colonies meant more than to the average Englishman. They meant something which belonged to the nation, of a wider interest than could naturally be found in the Netherlands themselves. This was especially to be noted in the works of Sigtenhorst Meyer, one of the most definitely national of contemporary composers. There was no other whose work was so distinctively pictorial. Besides representing very strongly the Colonial School, he also drew in music pictures of characteristic Dutch, as well as of characteristic Indian, scenes. Even in the works of the most conservative and abstract writers we got something of this, though we got more of the direct influence of the land and its climate. To those who sought there was ample variety, as might be seen by comparing the music of Meyer with that of Sem Dresden or Dirk Schäfer.

Dresden represented the Hebraic influence. He was not noticeably Jewish in his types of music, and had evidently put himself under the artistic guidance of various nationalities. This influence, however, worked more for a lightening and enlivening of the music than for the direct impression of characteristics. The literary influence was strong, because of the influence of the language which was inseparable from it. This was evident in all classes and schools, whether progressive or conservative, and gave a richness of expression which was found generally in the best Teutonic languages and dialects. The influence of the old Catholic music and of plainsong was more restricted, and acted chiefly upon the vast amount of choral music to be heard in Church and concert-hall. The influence of distinctively Protestant Church music, except that of Bach, was not great. In a country that was two-thirds Protestant, and where the singing of chorals was almost as common as in Germany, this was rather striking. There were a considerable number of feminine composers, who had produced much delightful music of a light, attractive type, as well as some excellent examples of chamber music.

In the course of three generations there had been a vast amount of activity, talent, and resource. There had been only a small quantity of Dutch opera, shown chiefly in the light and semi-serious works of Wagenaar, though many other composers, as in England, had operas in their portfolios, which present-day circumstances caused to remain there. Symphonic music was a little more advanced, but in this, as in opera, there was small opening for the performance of works by the younger composers. There was an increase in it, however, and with it was coming a certain reversion from the symphonic poem, of which a number had been written, chiefly by the older composers, to the classical symphony form, or some modification of it. Choral music did somewhat better, while song and chamber music were growing with comparative rapidity. There were many good, and some magnificent, performances of works of the greatest standing. The least satisfactory feature was the music of the people. The choice of ballads—using the word in its modern trade term—was a degree higher than ours, but the music in the public parks and gardens, and in the picture-houses, was decidedly on a lower plane.

With all this quantity of music it was inevitable that there must be some throw-backs to the styles of a generation or more ago, as well as some ill-measured and premature advances. In spite of this, however, there was a sufficient residuum of thoroughly good inspired music that came from the emotions as well as from the ideas, and that had an almost universal appeal. One drawback to the advance of Dutch music, not only in its becoming known among other nations, but in its actual progress, was that the language, which had so great an influence on its character, was not a world language. The more one understood both the people and their language, the better was he able to see and understand the characteristics of Dutch music.

There was great hope for the future of Dutch music, partly because Dutch composers were beginning to be conscious of their nationality, and were gradually finding others among their own countrymen who recognised it—partly because of the growing realisation of the beauty of the language; partly because of the growing interest in good music of a more modern and experimental type—in other words, because Dutchmen were overcoming the mental and musical laziness which had made them depend entirely upon what was already well established. Most of all was the outlook hopeful because of the variety of work that was being done both by composers and executants.

Gramophone Notes

By 'Discus'

Warned that space this month is at a premium, I confine my notes to a few outstanding records. One of the best instrumental records of the month is that of Gershwin's 'Rhapsody in Blue,' played by Paul Whiteman's orchestra, with the composer taking charge of the important piano-forte part (H.M.V. 12-in. d.s.). This is a very brilliant and interesting work, though I do not see that this type of music is likely to lead anywhere, still less to the formation of a genuinely American school of composition, as is claimed for it. So much of its success depends on the element of surprise and originality in tone-colour, that, these once exhausted, there is too little remaining on which to build. Put it this way: Mr. Gershwin has written a very successful 'Rhapsody in Blue'; could he write a half-dozen without a loss of interest? I think not. On the other hand a man may write six symphonies (or any other work wherein the main factor is thematic development), and the chances are that No. 6 will be better than No. 1. But never mind the future. Mr. Gershwin has given us a capital work, and we needn't worry about that 'American school.'

The Virtuoso String Quartet is heard in first-rate form playing Frank Bridge's 'Three Idylls' (H.M.V. two 12-in. d.s.). No chamber music 'comes off' better than Bridge's. These records are very enjoyable.

Jacques Thibaud is recorded playing what the label says is a Prelude and 'En Bateau' from Debussy's 'Petite Suite.' But the label lies. The Prelude is that to Saint-Saëns's 'Le Déluge' (and, by the way, surely Thibaud plays it much too fast!). The slip has led to a couple of rather amusing pronouncements. The writer of the notes in the H.M.V. Bulletin says of the Prelude that it '... starts rather sternly, but the mood changes at once, and the rest of the piece seems to suggest what a wonderful writer of melody Debussy might have become had he not chosen to follow other paths' (!).

A reviewer in The Gramophone follows suit thus:

'The Prelude is a pleasing echo of his [Debussy's] master, Massenet; it contains no hint of the direction in which his genius was to develop.'

As is, indeed, natural enough! The 'Déluge' piece is played so frequently in orchestral form, and as an organ arrangement, that one would have taken its familiarity for granted. Thibaud's playing is delightful, and well reproduced.

The Coldstream Guards Band has been recorded by H.M.V. in Holst's second Suite for military band. More duplication! Records of the work came out some months ago from another source. The H.M.V. is on two 12-in. d.s., the fourth side being filled by Wagner's 'Homage' March. The playing is better in the Suite than in the March; the latter has too little of the right breadth and pomp.

A good pianoforte record is the H.M.V. 12-in. d.s. of Una Bourne playing Sgambati's 'Etude Mélodique' and a brilliant Rondo of Weber.

Nothing better in the way of Chaliapin records has been issued than the H.M.V. 12-in. d.s. of the mighty Russian in 'Down the Petersky' and 'Dubinushka.'

Frieda Hempel sings Mendelssohn's 'Auf Flügeln der Gesanges' and Schubert's 'Hark! hark! the lark.' But the second is spoiled for me by her electing to sing it in German. Shakespeare's fellow-countrymen have no use for 'Horch, horch! die Lerch.' Besides, Madame Hempel forgets that Jenny Lind never sang it in German (H.M.V. 10-in. d.s.).

One of the best of recent vocal records is an Æ.-Voc. 12-in. d.s. of Elena Gerhardt's cool, broad singing of Brahms's 'Sapphische Ode' and Schubert's 'An die Musik.' None the less, I fancy that her singing would be even more beautiful with an added touch of colour and 'edge.' Harold Craxton is her accompanist.

Horace Stevens shows his brilliant quality in the Prologue to 'Pagliacci' and 'I'm a Roamer,' but apparently he was too close to the receiver. Anyway, the result with a loud needle is almost painfully ringing. His clearness and alertness in the Mendelssohn song are first-rate (Æ.-Voc. 12-in. d.s.).

The National Gramophonic Society (58, Frith Street, W.1) has sent its first issue—Beethoven's Quartet in E flat, Op. 74 ('The Harp'), and Debussy's Quartet. The players are the Spencer Dyke Quartet. In both the results are excellent. The Beethoven is a little lacking in power, but is always clear. The Debussy is the better of the two, mainly because it is more telling. In both the string quality comes out extraordinarily well. The Debussy is one of the best chamber music records I have met. Both works, I need hardly say, are without 'cuts.' (I note that the writer of the notes on the Beethoven speaks of the resemblance of the Scherzo to that of the ninth Symphony. Doesn't he mean the fifth?)

For the benefit of readers who do not yet know of the Society, I add that its object is the quarterly issue (complete) of certain important works that the regular recording Companies may (for awhile at all events) be shy of bringing out save in snippets. The subscription is five shillings per year, and members are able to obtain the Society records at the low price of five shillings for a 12-in. d.s. I understand that the works to be issued next quarter are Schönberg's Sextet and Schubert's Clarinet Trio. Gramophonists who want their instrument to be the medium of first-rate music cannot spend five shillings better than by joining the National Gramophonic Society.

[We regret being obliged to hold over 'Wireless Notes.'—Ed.]

'THE DUENNA'

The revival by Mr. Nigel Playfair at the Lyric Theatre, Hammersmith, of Sheridan's 'The Duenna,' with Linley's original music, is very interesting.

The libretto (spoken dialogue with 'lyrics,' like ballad opera and Gilbert and Sullivan) is bright and amusing. The music, arranged by Mr. Alfred Reynolds, who conducts the performance, is pleasant, if a little mild, and is very 18th-century English in its turns of melody.

Linley was Sheridan's father-in-law, and the pair were in partnership as proprietors of Drury Lane Theatre, where 'The Duenna' was produced in 1775. It received much praise at the time, Byron and others expressing admiration for the libretto, which will, by the way, be found in any edition of Sheridan's plays. I think I am right in saying that Birmingham has been before London in reviving this once-popular opera.

The performance at the Lyric is excellent as to acting, and adequate as to singing. The policy seems to have been to look for actors who can sing rather than to put up with singers who cannot act. Mr. Nigel Playfair, as the heavy father, is very much in place, and so is Mr. Frank Cochrane as the stage Jew who tries to outwit others and gets outwitted himself. Miss Elsie French, as the Duenna, plays a similar part to that in which she became famous in 'The Beggar's Opera,' and plays it equally cleverly. The other performers are Michael Cole, Denys Erlam, Guy Lefevre, Scott Russell, Alfred Harris, Elsa Macfarlane, Isobel McLaren, Angela Baddeley, Elsa Lanchester, Joan Pitt Chatham, and Marjorie Dixon. This list leaves out of account the dancers, who ought not to be left out of account, as they contribute very materially to the evening's entertainment. They are Rupert Doone, Jeanne Hewitt, Joyce Berry, Doris Sonn, Aubrey Hichens, and Keith Lester.

There is an intimation in the programme to the effect that 'The play is given as Sheridan wrote it, except that the words of one song from a contemporary opera and one from Sheridan's own pen have been introduced, and one scene, containing what appeared to be a rather offensive attack upon Roman Catholicism and the monastic system, omitted.' The scene in question is that of the jovial drinking monks, and as it has little connection with the plot it could well be spared. But the comic wedding service, with the red-nosed parson, remains, and, in any case, if the feelings of the Roman Catholics are to be considered, what about those of the Jews, who have surely much greater cause for offence? Then, if we once begin these concessions to sectional sensibilities, there are the Wesleyans to remember—the King in 'The Gondoliers' who became a 'Wesleyan Methodist of the most bigoted and persecuting type.' The fact is, we should all be prepared to take a little fun at our own expense from time to time; but the introduction of humour into an actual religious ceremony is another matter, and that wedding scene might, with propriety, be slightly 'cut.'

The scenery and dresses, designed by George Sheringham, are amongst the attractions of the show. They are of the clear outline and bold contrast type, and in 'The Beggar's Opera' and Lovat Fraser, Hammersmith tradition.

P. A. S.

London Concerts

THE HALLÉ ORCHESTRA

The reappearance of the Hallé Orchestra in London is very welcome. It is now almost seventy years old. The present writer's recollections of it go back only to the Richter period, and though to compare at such a distance of time is dangerous, he has the feeling that (save perhaps for one slight defect) he never heard it do better than on October 28, when, at Queen's Hall, Mr. Harty conducted a programme including the 'Meistersinger' Overture, Strauss's 'Don Juan,' and the fourth Symphony of Brahms.

The outstanding quality of the evening was living, pulsing rhythm. Every note led to some next note, every phrase to some next phrase, and thus the current flowed until the end of the section or movement or piece was reached. Pieces were looked upon as a whole, and details not so much subordinated to the main effect as made to contribute to it. The climaxes were in place, and were led up to with foresight, not discounted in advance by an anticipatory over-lavishness of intensity. This, then, was very good (even excellent) conducting and playing, and, at a bound, conductor and players established themselves in the estimation of London concert-goers as comparable with any of the great orchestral organizations that reside in or occasionally visit the capital.

A solitary defect must be mentioned. It is that of tone. The string tone was a little lacking in 'body,' the wind a little rough. Surely this can be remedied! The instruments may, it is true, be at fault, but the more likely explanation is that the attention of the members has been so much concentrated upon the securing of other qualities that this one has been a little neglected.

P. A. S.

LONDON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

The London Symphony Orchestra one and all earned the thorough enjoyment of a long drink after the opening concert of the season, October 20. Their exertions were such, at any rate, as to leave the listener positively dizzy. Was there ever a more boisterous concert? The programme began with Elgar's 'Cockaigne.' Someone remarked that Mr. Albert Coates was not content to let Elgar's brass band march down the street, but—like hospitable people in the country when the Christmas carollers come round—invited it to come indoors to play.

The whirlwind of Tchaikovsky's 'Francesca da Rimini' set the mood for the whole concert. Dante saw Francesca's dishevelled shade being buffeted round Inferno in a sempiternal gale. Well, the L.S.O. gale lasted only two hours, but at the end off one felt even sorer for Francesca than after reading the Sixth Canto. Things became indistinguishable in that hurricane of sound. What can be remembered to say about Pick-Mangiagalli's 'Sortilegi'? The Italian element in this composer became confused with that which is Czecho-Slovakian. The pianist, however, stood out. He was Solito de Solis. Franck's Symphony, nowadays the toy of the virtuoso-conductor, likewise put in a wildly dishevelled appearance.

We can the more frankly say how extravagant Mr. Coates seemed to us that night since in the Wagner programme of the next L.S.O. concert (November 3) he was very good indeed. There were very large extracts from 'Tristan' and 'Siegfried,' with Miss Florence Austral and Mr. Tudor Davies singing.

Miss Ethel Leginska conducted the same orchestra on November 5 (Beethoven's seventh Symphony, 'Die Meistersinger' Overture). This vivacious young person will soon have boxed the compass. She composes, and gave us some of her pieces on this occasion. And she also played in a Pianoforte Concerto (Bach, F minor), conducting as she played. Her conducting was by no means ineffective, and whether one fell in with her views or not, it assuredly was she who was calling the tune. A versatile woman, indeed! If she still has leisure amid these different calls, she should develop those choreographic gifts of hers which, to judge from the lithe grace of her conducting, would entitle her to figure in a Russian Ballet. C.

CHORAL CONCERTS

An afternoon was passed in the Royal Albert Hall on November 15 by a large audience, and probably by the Royal Choral Society, in regretting that Berlioz was so inhumanly averse to the writing of good tunes. In 'Faust' this perversity of his was continually loosening the strings of our attention. There are whole-time admirers of Berlioz, and Mr. Hamilton Harty, who conducted this performance, is believed to be one of them. The rest of us, perfectly willing to be convinced, could only wait for the thrills, and hope that they would not be long in coming. Yet this odd, arid music had a strange attraction. Whatever one thought of the ideas one could always enjoy the character-drawing. Every person, mood, and situation is done to life, and where in a concert drama will you find such opportunities as in this Drury Lane cast of devil, lover, betrayed one, merry-makers, students, cavalry, infantry, sylphs, and demons? It is interesting to see how an old, familiar work weathers through the storm of modern music. This 'Faust' of Berlioz seems to creep into harbour Ulysses-like amid all the foundering. The performance was satisfactory, although the choir had not made a full study of all the details. Mr. Joseph Farrington as Mephistopheles was excellent.

The Philharmonic Choir has not yet given the perfect performance of Bach's Mass in B minor, but the annual improvement in the Choir seems to foreshadow it. In any case we are glad that somebody gives us the Mass in Queen's Hall every season. On November 13 Mr. Kennedy Scott gave us what was, taking it all round and looking at essentials, the best performance we have had from a London organization. The little things that went wrong in the non-choral numbers were plainly caused by the scattered positions of singer, conductor, wood-wind soloist, and Mr. Gerald Cooper at his harpsichord. This last instrument came in very gratefully. M.

GIRLS' CLUB CHOIRS

It is not always the most important musical events in London that attract the biggest audiences, and there was room for another three or four thousand people in the Albert Hall on Thursday, November 13, when the National Organization of Girls' Clubs held its fifth St. Cecilia Festival.

Why 'fifth'? I do not know, since these great gatherings date back for twelve years or so. Perhaps war interruptions account for the unexpectedly modest numeration. [The Festivals were designed to be biennial. They stopped during the war.—Ed.]

It is worth remembering that, acting on a suggestion of the late W. G. McNaught, a choir of fifty London club girls took part in the Paris International Competition in 1912, when their singing and sight-reading were a complete novelty, and attracted much attention—also, incidentally, a couple of prizes. Dr. McNaught was, I believe, the first conductor of these great London gatherings, being later assisted by Mr. Harvey Grace, who, since his senior colleague's death, has assumed complete control.

It must not be imagined that there is anything of the mere rough and ready 'massed singing' effect about these performances. The programme is an artistic one, and the preparation of it by many sectional and full rehearsals is thorough. Phrasing and blend are very good, and the articulation of these thousand girls would afford a lesson to many professional singers of reputation. Entering the hall a little late, whilst the choir was engaged upon a piece unknown to me, I was able to distinguish every word. This was in a unison song; in the part-songs, where the voices were not all necessarily taking the same words at the same moment, there was a little less clarity, but nevertheless it remains remarkable that the collective enunciation of so big a choral body could prove so distinct.

The choirs taking part numbered forty-three. They came from all parts of London and district, with a few from the country (one from so distant a place as Sheffield).

The accompaniments must have a word. They had been arranged for strings, pianoforte, and organ, by Mr. Cecil Dudley, and the combination proved to be an effective one. Dr. Harold Darke was at the organ, Mrs. Harvey Grace at the pianoforte, and the strings were those of the orchestra of the Golder's Green and Hendon Branch of the British Music Society.

The violin playing of Miss Mary Harrison, and the singing of Mr. Plunket Greene with the accompaniment of Mr. Berkeley Mason, contributed to the variety of an excellent evening's musical entertainment, and incidentally offered an object-lesson to any solo performers numbered amongst the thousand choralists. P. A. S.

CHAMBER CONCERTS

It was stated on the programme that this was the first occasion on which a chamber concert had been devoted to the works of Frederick Delius. That is not surprising. Few, if any, composers emerge successfully from such an ordeal, and Delius is not of their number. It is difficult to speak one's mind about his music for several reasons, one of which is that the fanaticism of his declared admirers makes one, according to temperament, either reticent, or inclined too explain too fully. Nobody seriously contests to-day his exceptional feeling for beauty and colour. But his confessed disregard of many factors indispensable to complete craftsmanship create an effect which, tolerable in one work because of the compensating qualities, becomes a progressively accentuated weakness in a long programme. What is luscious at the beginning becomes treacly at the end, not because of any deterioration in the substance, but because its very nature imposes limits upon one's capacity of absorption. Taking these same works severally and individually, the 'Cello Sonata, the two Violin Sonatas—the second of which I thoroughly enjoyed when it was included in a mixed programme of the Music Society—there is beauty in all of them, and they were splendidly played by Miss Beatrice Harrison, Messrs. Albert Sammons and Evelyn Howard-Jones. The last-named was at the pianoforte the whole afternoon. His group of solos included some that were new, but not very significant, though the Dance for harpsichord will always be a favourite. Mr. John Goss was more fortunate with the songs.

E. E.

Though it was the evening of the Election, and an unpleasant evening at that, the admirers of the Léner Quartet did not allow themselves to be deterred from turning up in force on October 24. One could wish that such staunch support were sometimes extended to our own excellent teams. But nobody will begrudge it to Léner and his colleagues, who have brought the finesse of their playing to an exceptionally high stage. I cannot recall, for instance, when I have heard the Scherzo of the César Franck Quartet—which postulates this quality—so perfectly played. The novelty of the evening was a work dedicated to these Hungarian musicians by the Italian composer, Ottorino Respighi. He entitles it a 'Quartetto Dorico,' for which a frequent melodic use of major submediant in the minor key seems nowadays sufficient justification, though the present tendency, to which Respighi is no exception, is to use a kind of neomodern lingua franca to which it is difficult to assign a place in the modal system. However, that is mere hair-splitting. The music is the thing. I found it attractive in a declamatory way, with rather more of accompanied monody than one desires in a string quartet, though towards the end the polyphonic interest quickened to life. It is unashamedly melodic throughout, which is rather a welcome relief nowadays.

E. E.

It is curious to note the difference between the Quartets led by Léner and Waldbauer. The latter, known as the Hungarian String Quartet—though both have an equal claim to the title—has always struck me as being more virile, more impulsive than the Léner, whose tendency is to excel in the graces of quartet-playing. For that reason the Léner played the Brahms in C minor better than Mozart's 'Eine kleine Nachtmusik,' in which there appeared to be some striving towards a romantic interpretation. It was consistent with the players' attitude towards all music. They are obsessed with 'meaning.' Mere delectation does not suffice them. In the great classics, and in their own moderns, this is a virtue among virtues, but Mozart was meant to be delightful rather than eloquent.

E. E.

What a pleasure to have, once in a while, a Schubert programme! As an institution probably it would soon pall, but Gerald Cooper deserves nothing but congratulation for his happy thought in giving us the 'Death and the Maiden' Quartet and the great C major Quintet (two 'cellos), with, sandwiched between them, a liberal selection of songs sung by Mr. John Goss in his most ingratiating manner. The Quartet was the Catterall, and one could have wished for none better. I wish the team visited London more frequently, but I cannot feel surprised that they do not, since it is such up-hill work to attract a steady following. We badly need an active chamber-concert organization.

E. E.

GUILHERMINA SUGGIA AND VIANNA DA MOTTA

Three concerts, principally of violoncello sonatas, were given by Madame Suggia and Senhor Vianna da Motta at Wigmore Hall. Spain was the 'cello, the pianoforte Portugal—which always is put rather in the background by its interesting Iberian neighbour. Madame Suggia at these concerts was the prima ballerina, and the pianist her harmless, necessary cavalier.

The first two concerts began each with a Sonata of Brahms: F first, E minor second. These Sonatas were written (one seems to recall) with big, bushy old Haussmann in mind. Madame Suggia is a flashing sylphide. It was a great treat to hear her coaxing and drawing out Brahms, with all a woman's wiles. Now she would languish, and again she would give him the least little taste of her temper. As for Brahms, sometimes he responded all smiles (the Minuet of Op. 38), but sometimes he couldn't or wouldn't be nice (the fugal Finale of the same), but would insist on being as cross as a bear, Andalusian witchery or no.

At the first concert the worthy pianist played Schumann's Variations, and the 'cellist some unaccompanied Bach—and (wondrous creature) how! The third concert of the series was announced to embrace all the Beethoven 'Cello Sonatas.

C.

SOME SINGERS OF THE MONTH

Frieda Hempel followed Amelita Galli-Curci at the Albert Hall. The friends of the latter had so overdone their fuss that the former benefited by the moderation of her 'preliminary publicity.'

Not that this clever little person is by any means like to the modest violet which prefers to blush unseen. Indeed, in all the Galli-Curci stunt-mongering there has not been any effrontery like Madame Hempel's appropriation of the fame of a deceased singer (Jenny Lind) whom again, at the Albert Hall, on November 16, she 'impersonated' in a manner which on this side of the Atlantic is more usual in the music-hall than in the concert-room. The opinion of Jenny Lind's family on this impersonation would be interesting to have. The only visible excuse for it—that Madame Hempel finds a Victorian costume becoming—is a thought inadequate.

Madame Hempel profited by disappointment—the public's undoubted disappointment, however irrational—in Madame Galli-Curci. There is no need to compare the two singers, for they belong to different types. We do not compare Ruffo with Battistini or McCormack with Martinelli. Galli-Curci is a coloratura, Hempel is a lyric soprano. And not because Hempel sang Verdi's 'Ernani, involami' so admirably do I admit her as truly a coloratura soprano. That song, although demanding exceptional execution, lives by its series of sweeping cantabile phrases, and the ornamental is purely occasional.

Galli-Curci, for that matter, encroached on Hempel's field by singing Rimsky-Korsakov's lyrical 'Hindu Song,' with quite as much beauty of tone as there was in Hempel's 'Sandman' of Brahms. Galli-Curci has been detected singing out of tune, but Hempel, too, was not guiltless. Galli-Curci has been upbraided for singing bad music. Hempel is, in the choice of her encores, far from irreproachable.

Madame Hempel's Schubert singing has, at each of her concerts, been unforgettably lovely. She spoilt Bishop's 'Should he upbraid,' by straining for a personal display. She should guard, in upward runs, against a nasal tendency.

Mr. Eric Marshall sang excellent music at his recital at Wigmore Hall, and one was the more pleased since he had been known to sink pretty low on occasion. His gifts are considerable—a baritone voice of beautiful quality, gaining richness from the solidity of the chest wall. The highest baritone songs (say 'Eri tu') do not show him at his best, for he is not yet adept at mixing his registers, carrying his chest tones too high. The true ring was lacking on brilliant extreme notes. But Mr. Marshall's middle and low tones were far better than those of the average baritone.

Miss Megan Thomas sang at Æolian Hall. She has not yet cultivated a very extended field, but she struck out with a voice which sounded frank and free in Grieg's 'Zickeltanz.' There was an individual quality and beauty in it. But her legato was not good; it brought about throatiness, and the life went out of the singing. The programme was interesting.

Princess Catharine Yourievsky, at Æolian Hall, sang in the manner of an intelligent amateur. Perhaps through nervousness, she ignored rhythm, and sometimes seemed only imperfectly to know her songs. But whole-hearted praise can be given to her French and Italian, and she had some good high notes. She was at her best in a rather trivial lullaby of Rhené-Bâton. Some of the beautiful and famous songs on the programme were quite out of her reach.

Miss Helen Henschel accompanied herself at Wigmore Hall, in the manner of her famous father. It was a demonstration of a very pretty musicianship, but Miss Henschel's singing, purely qua singing, can hardly be helped thereby. Sometimes, as in Brahms's 'Cradle Song' and 'Serenade,' her vocal poise was not affected, but in his 'Eternal Love,' which, after all, does demand something more than a mere croon, one felt she was making a sacrifice. All the same, it was a concert well worth hearing, for Miss Henschel's self-possession and technical sense enabled her to score a succession of points exquisitely. Her phrasing was admirable, her diction clear and animated. There were English and French folk-songs, and negro hymns.

Miss Tatiana Makushina was one of the most agreeable of the singers of the month. Her voice was big and firm, her upper notes had a fine ring. Sometimes in the excitement of rapid passages, as in Debussy's 'Chevaux de Bois,' she forced her tone, but when her voice had the right reserve of breath it was uncommonly pleasant. And though the singer was not in all her things equally at home, there was often a touch of real imagination. Her worst fault was a rocketing over a big interval without regard to vocal colour, so that there seemed no connection between the two notes. This fault could not be ignored in Haydn's 'Mermaid Song.' She sang Debussy's 'Sentimental Colloquy' beautifully, and her Brahms was above the average.

H. J. K.

Competition Festival Record

THE FEDERATION CONFERENCE

A long and interesting day's work opened with an unofficial gathering of adjudicators. This was convened because it was felt that there were points on which some executives—especially of new festivals—needed a few friendly suggestions from judges. The word 'friendly' must be emphasised at the start. The last impression those present wished to give was that they were airing grievances. The fact is, the Festival movement has grown so rapidly, and the important office of adjudicator is so new, that a little crop of problems was bound to arise. It is well that adjudicators should talk them over, rather than attempt to solve some of them single-handed.

MARKING-SHEETS

The question of marking-sheets was discussed with thoroughness. Good as the present sheet is generally admitted to be, experience has revealed weaknesses. Some important headings are missing; others might be more simply expressed. It was felt that the arithmetical details are somewhat of a nuisance to most experienced judges; their view is that the available few minutes can be more usefully spent in writing critical comment than in working out proportions of marks. On the other hand, it was pointed out that new hands at judging find the detailed figures a help. The general opinion seemed to be in favour of trying to suit all judges by continuing the present subdivisions, with an alternative arrangement in which the hundred marks are shown as two fifties, one for the technical side the other for the interpretative. A sub-committee was deputed to work out a new sheet, incorporating this and other suggestions.

OVER-WORKED JUDGES

The question of over-long sessions and days drew some tales of woe. Everybody who has had even a small experience of judging will realise that several twelve-hour days in succession are a sore burden. Yet some of the speakers said they have had to shoulder it. Similarly, sessions of four or more hours without a break are too much. Here, however, the economic factor comes in. The easing of the judges' hours might mean extending a Festival over an extra day or days, and the hire of halls and other running costs would crush some struggling Festivals. Still, seeing that much of the attractiveness of an evening session depends upon the judge, a jaded specimen is a poor investment. An alert, good-tempered adjudicator is always a draw, whereas a few successive years of evening meetings with a fagged one must have an adverse effect on the box-office.

The meeting was well aware of the financial and other difficulties, and was duly sympathetic. It felt that those present could do no more (and no less) than remind committees of the exhausting nature of the work, and suggest that somehow (often by a tightening up of the organization) adjudicators should be enabled to retain that freshness without which they cannot do their job to their own or their clients' satisfaction.

MISTAKEN KINDNESS

Arising out of this question of a reasonable time for rest, was that of hospitality. The adjudicators hoped they would not appear ungrateful if they suggested that sometimes their hosts were a little overpowering in their determination to give the judge a good time. After a long session, a judge would be more than human if he did not desire a brief period of quiet. It was a mistaken kindness to fill up his rest hour with social activities, wherein he had to talk 'shop' or to listen to it. After an interval so spent he was likely to return to the seat of judgment as tired as he left it.

CHOOSING THE SYLLABUS

Another point had to do with the choosing of test-pieces. Committees frequently ask a judge to select an entire syllabus. Even in the case of a very small Festival, this is a task calling for some hours of work. Where a big one is concerned, it might well take a couple of days. It was felt that in such cases a fee should be paid; but those present expressed willingness to help committees by looking over the draft of a syllabus and making such suggestions as seemed necessary.

THE ADOLESCENT SINGER

The question of adolescent singing (referred to this meeting by the sub-committee appointed to deal with it) was fully discussed, and a recommendation was made that a pamphlet embodying certain practical suggestions should be drawn up and circulated.

This adjudicators' meeting is here given more space than the later proceedings, because a report will not appear in the Year-Book. There would be no point in holding such a meeting unless its general findings reach Festival circles.

At the members' meeting and at the public gathering the balance sheet and annual report were submitted. Good progress all round was shown, but finance will continue to be a difficult problem. The recent public appeal had met with a poor response, as was perhaps to be expected in view of the general shortage of money. The way out is by a very large increase of membership. There ought to be thousands of subscribing members at ten shillings. An income from such a source is more dignified, and far safer than one derived from a few wealthy supporters.

The question of holding a National Festival at the Crystal Palace came up. The idea is one that has been in some of the founders' minds from the start. A handsome offer from the Crystal Palace authorities was made through Mr. John Graham. The meeting seemed to have no clear views on the matter, chiefly, no doubt, because it was brought forward at the fag-end of the day's discussions.

On the face of it such a Festival appears to be a good thing to work for. It would strike the imagination of the public, and bring fresh support. A day's competitions between the winners of the chief Festivals would produce such a feast of choral singing as has never yet been heard. The Crystal Palace has unequaled facilities for a National Festival, though such an event might well be held at other well-equipped centres in rotation: Blackpool and Glasgow at once suggest themselves, because of their admirable halls. Despite the sprinkling of cold water thrown on the scheme by some speakers, it is difficult to see why an annual gathering at the Crystal Palace should not develop into an immense popular success on the lines of the Brass Band Festival.

The Conference owed much to the tactful control of Mr. F. H. Bisset, who took the chair, owing to Sir Henry Hadow's absence abroad. The room was not a good choice for a meeting of the kind, being very bad for sound. Moreover, its seating arrangements made the occasion too much like a formal public meeting. A gathering at which discussion is the chief element calls for a hall in which the seating can be oval or semi-circular. Still, it was a good day, and bore witness to the intense vitality of the Festival movement.

H. G.

We have received the syllabus of the Bedfordshire Festival, to be held on March 2-13. The annual report tells of an astonishing growth and a highly satisfactory financial condition. The figures showing the development of the Festival since its start in 1921 are worth quoting :

YEAR.	ENTRIES.
1921	...	...	...	...	694
1922	...	...	...	...	916
1923	...	...	...	...	1,171
1924	...	...	...	...	1,533

These figures are not merely the result of distended solo classes. The choirs at the 1924 Festival numbered two hundred and two—an increase of forty-two. An even more gratifying feature is the large part played by the schools of all kinds. Thus, at the last Festival the singers in junior choirs totalled no less than 3,684, as against 1,700 senior chorists. Bedford is fortunate not only in its energetic executive, but also in the support given by the County Education Authorities. The statement of accounts shows a balance in hand of £166. Splendid! (By the way, we wish the committee would drop the word 'Eisteddfod' from the title. It has no point at an English Festival, especially when the Festival doesn't happen to be an Eisteddfod.)

COMPETITIONS IN LONDON

The LONDON FESTIVAL will be held at Central Hall, Westminster, from Tuesday, March 17, to Saturday, March 28, the intervening Sunday excluded. The 136 classes of the 1924 syllabus will be expanded to 151, the additions being classes for Y.M.C.A. choirs, Girls' Friendly Societies, conductors, junior orchestral violins (unison), and various sub-divisions in the junior classes. The principal choral tests for mixed-voice choirs are 'As Vesta was' (Weelkes) and 'The Lady of May' (Boughton). There are twenty-six adjudicators. The syllabus gives particulars of special reductions in railway fares for competing parties and individuals. All choral classes are open to choirs from any district. The hon. secretary is Mr. T. Lester Jones, 130, Belgrave Road, Wansted, E.11.

The SOUTH-EAST LONDON FESTIVAL will be held at Bermondsey Central Hall on February 21 (junior competitions), February 28 (junior concert), March 7 to 13 (senior competitions), and March 14 (final concert). All the competitions are for concerted performance—choral, orchestral, and chamber music. The music for massed performance on March 14 (under Dr. Malcolm Sargent) is Brahms's 'How lovely are Thy dwellings,' Mendelssohn's 'Be not afraid,' Holst's 'I vow to thee, my country,' and Parry's 'Jerusalem.' The hon. secretary is Miss Helen Ridley, 34, Emperor's Gate, S.W.7.

The NORTH LONDON and the SOUTHERN AREA FESTIVALS are in progress as we go to press. The principal competitions occur too late for reference in this issue.

A new Festival will be inaugurated at WIMBLEDON on February 18-21. It starts with fifty-two classes for various kinds of musical performance, six for elocution, and twelve for solo dancing. The syllabus may be obtained, for the price of postage, from the hon. secretary, Mr. T. Lidstone Found, 79, Worple Road, Wimbledon.

KEIGHLEY.—The 'Summerscales' Musical Competitions were held on November 8 and 15. Choral singing to compare with the best was heard in the two chief classes. Todmorden was the best male-voice choir in Fletcher's 'The Sailor's Return' and Rutland Boughton's 'The Blacksmith,' the competitors including Colne Orpheus and Habergam. Mixed-voice choirs sang two works of Parry—'My delight and thy delight' and 'Tell me, O love'—and Keighley Vocal Union (Mr. W. H. Whitaker) repeated its success of last year.

Music in the Provinces

ABERYSTWYTH.—'Hiawatha's Wedding-Feast' was performed on November 14 at the University College concert. Mr. W. R. Allen conducted, and Mr. T. J. Pickering was the soloist. The orchestral numbers, conducted by Dr. W. J. de Lloyd, included Mozart's 'Schauspiel Director' and Handel's Overture 'Tamerlane.' Another Handel Overture, 'Julius Caesar,' was played, arranged for orchestra by Mr. Kenneth Harding, who conducted.

ALDEBURGH.—On November 5 a folk-song concert was given in Belstead Gymnasium Hall in aid of the Cecil Sharp Memorial Fund. Miss Winifred Holloway sang old English and French folk-songs, including 'The Nightingale' and some by Henry Lawes. Miss Lilian Locke sang German Lieder and modern songs.

ALNWICK.—The local branch of the British Music Society is now a hundred and twenty strong. On October 4 Dr. Whittaker lectured on 'Modern British Music,' Miss Annie Lawton singing illustrations.—On October 27, a string quartet (Miss Avice Sealey, Miss Irene Hambleton, Mrs. Nicholson, and Mr. Louis Speyer) played works by Purcell, Schubert, Glazounov, and Dvorák. Mr. John Wightman sang.

BANGOR.—Rutland Boughton's 'Celtic Prelude' was given at the College concert on October 18. Mr. E. T. Davies lectured on 'Rhythm and Melody.'

BIRMINGHAM.—The second symphony concert, on November 4, was distinguished by a fine performance of Elgar's second Symphony, under Sir Landon Ronald. The other works in a greatly enjoyed programme were a Haydn Violoncello Concerto, played by Miss Beatrice Harrison, Dvorák's 'Carneval' Overture, and Bizet's 'L'Arlésienne' Suite, as arranged by the conductor.—It has been decided to close down the Saturday night popular concerts given by the City Orchestra.—The Birmingham City Police Band, under the direction of Mr. Richard Wassell, gave its annual series of concerts early in November. At one concert, several pieces specially written for military band by Dr. Vaughan Williams were played, with the composer in charge of the performances. The pieces—a Toccata, a Quick March, and a Folk-song Suite—are all effectively scored, showing how much can be done with the military band combination. Mr. Richard Wassell had transcribed Bach's C minor Fugue for military band for the occasion.—The Catterall Quartet gave the first concert of a series on October 29. The playing of Beethoven's Quartet in C sharp minor (Op. 131) was especially beautiful. A set of 'Lancashire Sketches' by Whittaker received their first performance in this city.—A concert by the Wolverhampton Musical Society included performances of Bantock's 'Golden journey to Samarkand' and Bach's 'Blessing, glory, wisdom.'

BRISTOL.—John Ireland's second Sonata for violin and pianoforte was played on October 29 by Mr. Frank Thomas and Miss Désirée MacEwan.—The Clifton Chamber Quintet opened its twenty-second session on November 10 at the Musical Club, St. Paul's Road. The players were Mr. Maurice Alexander, Miss Hilda Barr, Mr. Alfred Best, Mr. Percy Lewis, and Miss Winifred Davey (pianoforte). Beethoven's String Quartet in F, B. J. Dale's Phantasy in D minor for viola and pianoforte, and Dvorák's Pianoforte Quintet in A made up the programme.—Under the auspices of the West of England Education Association Dr. Walter Carroll lectured at Victoria Rooms on November 1, on the choice and teaching of school songs. Miss Gertrude Riall sang illustrative songs.

CAMBORNE.—The Cornwall Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Dr. C. Rivers, opened its season on November 2. The orchestra, which has grown since last season, played the 'New World' Symphony, the Overture, 'Egmont,' Saint-Saëns's 'Danse Macabre,' Smetana's Overture to 'The Bartered Bride,' and a Fantasia, 'Flora day at Helston,' composed by the Rev. C. Daly Atkinson.

CARDIFF.—Under the auspices of the Chamber Music Society the Léner Quartet opened the season on October 21, playing works by Borodin, Haydn, and Beethoven.—The Wieniawsky String Quartet, a group of local players, of whom the leader is a daughter of Wieniawsky, played a Quartet by that composer on October 30.—At Park Hall, on November 2, Mr. Herbert Ware's String Orchestra played a Suite in E, by Fletcher, Cardiff and District Male Choir, conducted by Mr. T. Lewis, sang the National Eisteddfod test-pieces. Mrs. Ware played violin music, and Mr. Bernard Ross was the singer.—Mr. Ware's Orchestra played Beethoven's Symphony and a Weber Piano-forte Concerto, with Miss May Jones as soloist, at Cory Hall, on November 12. Mr. John Jenkins contributed analytical remarks.

COLCHESTER.—At Moot Hall, on November 12, Miss Irene Brettell gave a violin recital, with Mr. Harry Isaacs at the pianoforte. They played Pianelli's early 17th-century Sonata, and that of Elgar.

EDINBURGH.—Sir Hugh Allen lectured before the Scottish School Music Association on October 19 on 'Musical Education.'—On the same date the Max Mossel concerts opened with a pianoforte recital by Moiseiwitsch.—Prof. Tovey's series of Sunday concerts opened on October 20. The Reid Orchestra played Beethoven's second Symphony and Bach's Concerto in D minor for two violins and strings, with Mr. Walter Jupp and Mr. J. M. Begbie as soloists, and Prof. Tovey at the harpsichord. Mr. A. Hemington conducted some of the items.—The first of a series of seven orchestral lecture-concerts for school-children was given on October 31 in Usher Hall, under the auspices of the Education Authority. Mr. Herbert Wiseman was the director, and explained the various groups of the orchestra. Music by Mozart, Tchaikovsky, Handel, Dvorák, Brahms, and Glinka was played in illustration.—The Queen's Hall Orchestra and Sir Henry Wood gave a concert in Usher Hall on November 4. By the use of Duo-Art pianoforte records Miss Myra Hess, Mr. Harold Bauer, and Mr. Percy Grainger were heard in Concertos of Grieg, Saint-Saëns, and Tchaikovsky.—Prof. Tovey played in his own Pianoforte Quartet and Schumann's Pianoforte Quintet at a University Historical concert on November 6, given in memory of Frederick Niecks. The Edinburgh Quartet were the string players.—In Central Hall, at Tolcross, on November 8, an innovation was made in the Popular Concerts by encouraging young local artists of talent.—The Royal Choral Union, with orchestra, performed 'Elijah' on November 12. Mr. Greenhouse Alt conducted, and the principal singers were Miss Doris Vane, Miss Dilys Jones, Mr. Herbert Thorpe, and Mr. Herbert Heyner.—At Usher Hall, on November 13, the Reid Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Prof. Tovey, played Brahms's second Symphony, Haydn's in D, and Glazounov's 'Scène dansante.' Mr. George Parker sang Arias from two Bach Cantatas.—Recitals have been given by Miss Mary Grierson and Mr. Robert Taylor (pianoforte), Mr. P. Snowden and Miss Marie Thompson (vocalists), M. Lidus van Giltaz (violin), and Prof. Tovey, in a programme that illustrated the three periods of Beethoven.

EXETER.—At the opening meeting of the Chamber Music Club, the chief works performed were Martin Shaw's String Quartet in A minor and Brahms's 'Liedeslieder' Walzer, with four voices and two pianists.—On October 29 M. Cortôt played all the Chopin Preludes at his pianoforte recital, under the auspices of Messrs. J. C. Guest.—The String Orchestra, founded by Mr. Edward Petherick, and conducted by Mr. A. J. James, played Mozart's 'Kleine Nachtmusik,' Elgar's 'Serenade,' an 'Air de Ballet' by Percy Pitt, and Grainger's 'Mock Morris,' on November 6.

EXMOUTH.—At Southlands High School for Girls, on November 5, the English Trio gave an excellent programme, including Brahms's Pianoforte Trio in C major.

GLASGOW.—The Saturday concerts of the Choral and Orchestral Union began on November 15 with an orchestral programme. Weingartner conducted Brahms's third Symphony and Dvorák's Symphonic Variations.—John Ireland's Pianoforte Trio in A minor was played at the chamber concert which opened the thirty-fifth season of the Athenæum School of Music.

HUDDERSFIELD.—The fine singing of the Holme Valley Male-Voice Choir at its annual concert at Huddersfield Town Hall, on November 8, made a great impression. Notable items were Holst's 'A Dirge for Two Veterans,' Bax's 'Now is the time of Christinas,' Cyril Scott's 'The Rat-Catcher,' and Elgar's 'Feasting I watch.' Mr. Irving Silverwood conducted.—Dr. T. E. Pearson, who succeeds Dr. C. H. Moody, conducted the Glee and Madrigal Society on October 28 for the first time. The programme of part-songs and the like included Parry's Motet, 'Lord, let me know mine end,' Stanford's 'Sweet love for me,' and Bantock's 'The Leprehaun.'

HULL.—Mr. Walter Porter conducted the Harmonic Society in Gounod's 'Faust' on November 7. There was an excellent trio of principals—Miss Flora Woodman, Mr. Tudor Davies, and Mr. Robert Radford.—Alick Maclean's 'The Annunciation,' conducted by the composer, was the feature of the Vocal Society's concert on November 12. The rest of the programme consisted of 'The Golden Legend,' admirably performed under Dr. Henry Coward.

IPSWICH.—On October 29 the Cecilia Orchestral Society played in the Public Hall Percy Fletcher's 'The Spirit of Pagantry,' Kala Bela's 'Romantic' Overture, two movements of Mozart's thirty-sixth Symphony, and some pieces of Percy Grainger. Mr. W. Osborne conducted.—On November 5 Mr. Albert Sammons and Miss Doreen Kendall, assisted by Miss Margaret Ablethorpe, gave a violin and song recital in the Public Hall.—At a concert of the Chamber Music Club, the English Trio (Miss Marjorie Hayward, Mr. Cedric Sharpe, and Miss Ethel Hobday) played Frank Bridge's Phantasy in F sharp minor, as part of a long programme.

LEAMINGTON.—The Orchestral Society opened its thirty-seventh season on November 15 before a record attendance. Miss Morwenna Felce played Mozart's E flat Pianoforte Concerto, and songs were given by Miss Joan Elwes. Mr. Walter Warren conducted also Dame Ethel Smyth's 'Boatswain's Mate' Overture, Svendsen's first 'Norwegian Rhapsody,' and other works.

LEEDS.—The Symphony, 'Old England,' by Mr. Harding Churton, was given for the third time at the Leeds Orchestral Concert on October 25. Mr. Aylmer Buesst also conducted Strauss's 'Don Juan,' Cherubini's 'Water-carrier' Overture, and the Schumann Pianoforte Concerto, in which Mr. Rummel was soloist.—Mr. Edward Maude and his String Orchestra gave a very attractive concert at the University on October 29. The programme included Holst's Concerto for flute and oboe, Frank Bridge's Suite in E, Bantock's Suite, 'In the Far West,' Julius Harrison's arrangement of a Bach Fugue, and a Suite arranged by Arthur Bliss from Purcell's stage music.—The 'Noontide recitals' at Trinity Church have kept up their interest with organ music, singing (Brahms's 'Four Serious Songs,' given by the Rev. R. H. A. Bullock, Precentor of Leeds Parish Church), violin playing, and chamber music (Mozart's C major Quartet, K. 465).—Quartets of Haydn, Beethoven, and Dvorák were played under the leadership of Mr. Laurence Turner at a Leeds Bohemian chamber concert on November 5.—Mr. Roy Henderson has given a successful recital, and M. Cortôt has visited us with a familiar programme.—An excellent programme was given by the Leeds New Choral Society on November 12, under Dr. C. H. Moody. It included a 'Te Deum' of Purcell, two of Holst's 'Choral Hymns from the Rig Veda,' a 'Choral Elegy' by Dr. Moody, Wesley's 'In exitu Israel,' Handel's 'Ode on St. Cecilia's Day,' and Parry's 'The Chivalry of the Sea.'

LIVERPOOL.—The first of a series of orchestral concerts organized by Messrs. Rushworth & Dreaper took place in Picton Hall on October 19. Beethoven's eighth Symphony and a selection from 'Tristan and Isolde' were the chief items.—An orchestral concert for children was given in the afternoon.—At the Philharmonic Society's opening concert, on October 21, when Sir Landon Ronald was conductor, the first half of the programme was dedicated to the memory of Sir Charles Stanford. His Overture, 'Shamus O'Brien,' Prelude to 'Œdipus Rex,' fifth 'Irish Rhapsody,' 'Sea Songs,' and two part-songs were performed. Schumann's fourth Symphony was also included.—The M'Cullagh String Quartet gave a recital at Crane Hall on October 29, playing two 'Romantic Poems' by Alfred Wall.—By way of developing the critical faculty among its members, the first concert of the B.M.S., in Rushworth Hall, on October 30, took the form of a musical programme and talk. Performances were given of Three Rhapsodies for string quartet (G. Dyson), a Song Cycle for tenor voice, string quartet, and pianoforte (Ivor Gurney), a Poem for oboe, violin, and pianoforte (Felix White), and a Quartet for violin, viola, cello, and pianoforte (W. T. Walton). The performers included the M'Cullagh String Quartet.—At the Popular Orchestral Concert on November 1, Miss Allen lectured on the string section of the orchestra. Among the works played were Holst's 'St. Paul's' Suite and a Fantasia on 'Three Blind Mice' by B. Crawley (one of the viola players in the orchestra).—Weingartner was the guest conductor at the Philharmonic Concert on November 4, when Brahms's second Symphony and Elgar's 'Enigma Variations' were the principal works.—On November 7, the Tudor Singers gave a programme of part-songs, madrigals, and shanties in the Sandon Studios. Stanford's 'Blue Bird,' Peter Warlock's 'Bring us in good ale,' Norman Peterkin's 'Once there was a young sailor,' and Holst's 'I love my love' were items in an excellent programme.—On October 22 the Chester Pianoforte Trio played works by Arensky and Beethoven, and a Trio by Alice Verne-Bredt.—Among the interesting recitals have been that of Mr. John Goss, for the B.M.S. on November 13; and that of Miss Olga Lynn and Mr. Lawrence West, who played Rutland Boughton's Sonata in D for violin and pianoforte, on October 23.—The Liverpool Welsh Choral Union gave a first performance of its conductor's, Mr. T. Hopkin Evans, Eisteddfod cantata, 'Kynon,' on November 15. In this work of an hour's duration, the composer has handled his libretto, by H. Elvet Lewis, Archdruid of Wales, with conspicuous ability. The choral writing is clear, vigorous, and vocal, and in his orchestral scoring Mr. Evans shows no less ready skill. In these directions the work is exceedingly effective. The music makes an undeniable appeal in its dramatic and national note, and conductors on the look out for an effective short choral and orchestral work would find it in 'Kynon.'

MANCHESTER.—The five concerts of the Hallé series heard under Mr. Hamilton Harty's guidance have found both band and conductor accomplishing a succession of tours de force in the Brahms No. 1, César Franck in D minor, Strauss's 'Zarathustra,' the 'Faust' of Berlioz, and Harty's recently-written 'Irish' Symphony. Especially have the readings been full of point and often of surpassing illumination, but the discipline of the band has now attained a refinement where its responsiveness to Harty's interpretative wishes (and even to his occasional caprices!) has apparently reached the point of intuition. The greatest reading of César Franck's Symphony here was in the early years of the war, under Beecham, when our British emotions thrilled responsively to the grandeur of the Belgian resistance—the period of Emile Cammaerts and Elgar's 'Carillon.' One does not touch such emotional heights more than once in a life-time's experience. All future performances of Franck's D minor will inevitably have to measure up against that one, and it is more than enough if to-day's readings come within even reasonable distance of that supreme experience. Over eleven years have passed since my last hearing of 'Zarathustra' (under either Richter or Balling), and instantly one fell under its spell, the mighty uplift of that evocation of sunrise making you, like the Gaels of old, standing on cliff or mountain-top, instinctively bare the head in the presence of such overwhelming grandeur. The Abermenschian quality of the Nature-theme in its dance form, bounding along from height to height—all the old fascination of the work, gripped one again as in a vice. The performance of Berlioz's 'Faust' was spoiled for many of us on its vocal and choral side by the use of an unfamiliar text. Many in the audience had the old Chappell score, almost consecrated here by its use (since Hallé's early days) at twenty-sever performances, and many strains fell on the ear in such unfamiliar fashion as seriously to disturb enjoyment. In Miriam Licette, Tudor Davies, and Robert Parker we heard a trio of singers born to an adequate interpretation of the three character-parts. Harty's besetting sin of excessive speed was once again in evidence; possibly he had not rid himself of the exhilaration of his trip on Honegger's 'Pacific 231' express a few days before! This locomotive sketch of Honegger's has no melodic value in the lyrical sense which one feels in Kipling's 'MacAndrew's Hymn,' or the same author's other locomotive story in the 'Day's Work' volume, but for anyone who has had experience on the foot-plate itself, the 'Pacific 231' is simply a marvellous translation into tone—ugly in some ways, it is granted, but having beauty in veracity for any who have ears to hear. Harty's 'Irish' Symphony had its first performance since its composition during the past summer. He bases the work on native melodies, and some of his themes, he tells us, have been worked up again from an early symphony for an Irish 'Feis' a score of years ago. It is purely objective music, the four movements being headed: 'On the Shores of Lough Neagh'; 'The Fair Day'; 'In the Antrim Hills'; and 'The 12th of July.' The Irish melodies have been selected with an uncommonly deft appropriateness for the job of symphonic-music-fabrication, only matched by the almost uncanny certainty with which all the orchestral devices are manipulated. Apart from the thematic material published in the programme, the composer added an extremely graphic account of some early biographic experiences, which deserve a wider public than that of the Free Trade Hall on November 13. The distinguishing features of chamber music during this period were the visits of the Léner players and Mr. Ernst Dohnányi's co-operation with the Catterall Quartet in his 'Cello Sonata and the E flat minor String Quartet, in which the playing was as distinguished as his composition. He left on Manchester indelible impressions of his powers as an executant-musician, and only a further appearance at our major orchestral concerts will satisfy Manchester's longings.

NEWCASTLE.—The Bach Choir opened its season on November 1 with a fine programme of choral and pianoforte music. The Magnificat from Byrd's 'Great Service,' and two part-songs by Herbert Howells, 'The Shadows' and 'Creep afore ye gang,' were given by the choir under Dr. Whittaker. Miss Harriet Cohen played old English pianoforte pieces and Bax's second Sonata.—The Glee and Madrigal Society had two hundred and fifty school-children in its audience on November 5, and sang part-songs to them, under Mr. R. W. Clarke's direction.

OXFORD.—At the Playhouse, on October 19, the Elizabethan Singers (sextet) sang madrigals and part-songs by Weelkes, Dowland, Byrd, Morley, Wesley, Elgar, Harold Rhodes, and Orlando Gibbons's 'Cryes of London.'—On October 21 Miss Fiona McCleary and Miss Miette Hardy gave a pianoforte and song recital at St. Hugh's College, under the auspices of the College Musical Society. The pianist played a Study by Szymanowski, Moeran's 'The Lake Isle,' and Ireland's 'Amberley wild brooks' and 'Equinox.' Miss Hardy sang songs by Duparc, Purcell, and Quilter.—At the second Subscription Concert, on October 23, the English String Quartet played in Ravel's Septet (for harp, flute, clarinet, and strings) and Schubert's Octet.—At the Masonic Hall, on November 7, Mr. Eric Hurst, Mr. Ernest Pitcher, and Miss Bertha Steventon gave a violin, pianoforte, and vocal recital. Dvorák's Sonatina in G was one of the items.—The chief visiting recitalists have been Hofmann and Dohnányi.

PENISTONE.—The new Penistone and District Musical Society made its first appearance on November 5, and performed Sterndale Bennett's 'The May Queen,' under Mr. A. Harley's direction.

PLYMOUTH.—On October 29, the Samuel Coleridge-Taylor Choral Society performed the 'Hiawatha' Trilogy in collaboration with the string band of H.M. Royal Marines. The conductors were Mr. Douglas M. Durston (of the Society) and Lieut. P. S. G. O'Donnell, and the principal singers were Miss Hilda Blake, Mr. Walter Glynne, and Mr. Howard Fry.—On Armistice Day the Madrigal Society and the string band of H.M. Royal Marines performed Holst's 'Hymn of Jesus' and Elgar's 'For the Fallen.' Dr. Harold Lake was the Society's conductor, and Lieut. P. S. G. O'Donnell conducted orchestral works.

PORTSMOUTH.—The Quartet Players opened their fifth season, on October 23, with an audience that overflowed on to the platform. Mr. Arthur Cranmer sang. Chamber music has now a big public at Portsmouth, thanks chiefly to the pioneer work of Major R. Bullin, the viola player of the party. His colleagues are Mrs. Bullin, Miss Ursula Luker, and Mr. Stanley Blagrove. Their programmes are of first-rate quality, and the audience averages about a thousand.

SCARBOROUGH.—The Musical Society and the Leeds Symphony Orchestra joined forces on November 4 to perform Holst's 'The Cloud Messenger' and Stanford's 'Phaëdra' under Mr. H. C. Keeton. The orchestra was heard alone in Holst's 'St. Paul's' Suite and Rimsky-Korsakov's 'Scheherazade.'

SHEFFIELD.—For the Subscription Concert of November 7 Sir Henry Wood and the Queen's Hall Orchestra came from London, and they and Madame Suggia gave Dvorák's Violoncello Concerto. The Symphony was Mozart's 'Jupiter,' and there was a 'Brandenburg' Concerto.—Some unfamiliar music was heard at the University mid-day recital on November 14. It included a Viola Sonata by Grazioli (1735-1820) and flute solos by Ropartz and Ravel.

SHIPHAM (SOMERSET).—At the October meeting held here by the Mendip Musical Society, the works performed were Fauré's Pianoforte Quartet in C minor and Brahms's Violin Sonata in D minor.

SIDMOUTH.—Opening the season of chamber concerts organized by Miss M. Allen and a committee of ladies, on November 6, the English Trio played Frank Bridge's Phantasy Trio in F sharp minor and Trios by Beethoven and Rachmaninov.

SOUTHAMPTON.—Portland Baptist Church Choir, conducted by Mr. Fred C. Gange, sang 'Just as the tide was flowing' (Vaughan Williams), Eaton Fanning's 'Song of the Vikings,' and some numbers from Sterndale Bennett's 'May Queen' on November 5, and Miss D. K. Cook played violin music.—A programme of the Charles Williams Octet included the Overture to 'Rienzi,' Ponchielli's 'The Dance of the Hours,' and Eric Coates's Overture, 'The Merry-makers.' Mr. Clement Harvey, the pianist, played a set of variations written by him on Moszkowski's Valse in A flat.—Mr. Rummel gave a pianoforte recital at the Coliseum on November 10, under the auspices of the Chamber Music Association.

STOWMARKET.—The East Anglian Association of Musical Societies met on November 8, fourteen delegates being present, and it was decided to extend the Association to Cambridgeshire, Mr. Noel Ponsoby, organist of Ely Cathedral, having asked the Association for assistance for the performance of Byrd's 'Great' Service in the Cathedral next year. It was resolved to take immediate action in collecting and preserving Suffolk folk-tunes. A chamber concert followed the business. The Lorient Trio—Miss Margaret Lorient (violin), Miss Kathleen Hill (cello), and Miss Bertha Roberts (pianoforte)—played Arensky's Trio in D minor and Mendelssohn's second Trio, and Miss Elsie Fisher sang.

TORQUAY.—In the course of an Armistice Day programme the Winter Orchestra, conducted by Mr. E. W. Goss, played Foulds's 'Keltic Suite' and some Elgar pieces. On the following date the 'Ruy Blas' Overture was given, and a string party performed Beethoven's Quartet, Op. 16. Other works played during the week were Schubert's Overture in B flat, a Suite by Cowen, 'Cupid's Conspiracy,' a 'Suite Archaique' by Gabriel Marie, a selection from Tchaikovsky's 'Eugen Onegin,' and the 'Hebrides' Overture.

TRURO.—On November 3 the Cornwall Symphony Orchestra repeated the programme it had performed the day before at Camborne.

YORK.—The Symphony Orchestra, which consists of amateurs, was joined by members of the Leeds Symphony Orchestra on November 5 for the performance of Beethoven's second Symphony, three English Pastorals by Ernest Farrar, and other pieces. An excellent selection of songs was given by Miss Etty Ferguson. Mr. H. A. Bennett conducted.—The English Singers gave a characteristic programme on October 25.

IRELAND

BELFAST.—The Philharmonic Society fitly celebrated its jubilee by performing 'Elijah' at its concert on October 17—this oratorio having been the piece given at the initial concert of the Society in October, 1874. Not many Irish musical societies can boast a continuous existence of fifty years, and therefore it is a matter for congratulation that Belfast has nobly kept the flag flying for half-a-century. Certainly the admirable performance of 'Elijah' was a triumph for choir and orchestra, under the baton of Mr. Godfrey Brown, with Mr. J. H. MacBratney at the organ. The soloists were Mr. Herbert Heyner, Miss Helen Anderton, Miss Dorothy Silk, and Mr. Ben Morgan. At its second concert, on November 14, the Society did honour to its senior member and hon. secretary, Sir Charles Brett, who was unfortunately ill and unable to be present. Sir Charles, during the fifty years of his connection with the Philharmonic, has been its best and wisest friend, and it was fitting in this year of its Jubilee that the Lord Mayor of Belfast (Sir William Turner) and some four hundred members of the Society should join to mark their appreciation of the 'master mind' of the organization by the presentation of an address. The first half of the programme, along with the presentation ceremony (Mr. Alfred Brett represented his father), was broadcast. The artists included Mr. John Goss, Miss Megan Foster, Miss Beatrice Harrison (cello), Miss Kathleen Monkwell, and Miss Margaret Harrison (accompanists). Choir and orchestra gave excellent performances of Vaughan Williams's 'Toward the Unknown Region' and Holst's 'Turn back, O man.'—Belfast Broadcasting Station was formally opened by the Duke of Abercorn on October 24. The Lord Mayor said that while from January 1 till September 14 about fourteen hundred and twenty-three licenses were issued at Belfast, from September 15 to October 18 fifty-two hundred and eighty-nine were issued.

DUBLIN.—The Free State Army Band gave an enjoyable concert at the Theatre Royal on October 19, under the direction of Col. Fritz Brase. The music included Mendelssohn's 'Hebrides' Overture and Berlioz's 'Carnaval Romain.' Songs were given by Mr. Joseph O'Mara. The Band gave another concert on November 9, with much success.—Quite a delightful choral concert was given by the combined forces of Miss Culwick's and the Pembroke Choral Societies (in aid of the Citizens' Hall Fund) in the Metropolitan Hall, on November 1, under the direction of Miss F. M. Culwick and Mr. Turner Haggard. Bantock's 'Vanity of Vanities' was splendidly sung, the choirs surmounting the difficulties in rare style, and responding magnificently to the beat of Miss Culwick.—An interesting lecture on 'Free State Municipal Music' was given at a meeting of the Dublin Rotary Club on November 6, by Mr. 'Jimmy' Glover, so well-known as conductor at Drury Lane. Mr. Glover said that municipal music could be supported out of the rates, but he preferred that it should be self supporting by an endowment fund.—Miss Frieda Hempel's 'Jenny Lind' concert on November 8 was well attended, and evoked considerable enthusiasm.—At a recent meeting of the R.I.A.M., Commendatore Esposito was elected a vice-president.—The Gervase Elwes Fund reports subscriptions to the amount of £103, and the committee invites further help towards such a worthy object. Applications had been received from many deserving cases.—The chamber music recitals of the Royal Dublin Society were inaugurated at the Theatre Royal on November 10, with M. Jacques Thibaud, followed, on November 17, by the Léner Quartet.

Musical Notes from Abroad

GERMANY

A NEW MUSICAL GENIUS

It is always reassuring to see modern over-intellectualism in music refuted by the appearance of a true genius creating with simple spontaneity. This rare phenomenon revealed itself when Sonja Fridmann-Grammaté was introduced to a circle of musicians and music-lovers by Steinway & Sons. This young woman is indeed the best proof of the persistence of natural gifts hostile to any influence of speculative methods. She plays both violin and pianoforte, but this is not all she has to tell us. In availing herself of these instruments, which she masters with nearly equal skill in a way which may strike us as strange, she displays a kind of improvisatory art more characteristic of past musical periods than of the present. Madame Sonja Fridmann, of Polish origin, but married to a young German painter, has written several Violin and Pianoforte Sonatas of very different styles. Her Sonatas for violin solo are essentially inspired by the melodious nature of the instrument, and contain a mixture of Bachian seriousness and Slavic melancholy, while never losing continuity of invention. The Pianoforte Sonata which we heard springs, however, from the harmonic character of the keyboard. Thus the compositions show a contrast of simplicity on one side and modernity on the other, but the impression remains of a nature which cannot be spoiled by learning. Though her productions reveal some traces of autodidactic development, yet there is evidence of an inborn faculty for giving all musical ideas definite form, and of inexhaustible imaginative power.

RICHARD STRAUSS'S 'INTERMEZZO' AT THE DRESDEN STAATSOOPER

For some time Strauss's new 'Intermezzo' has been attracting attention, but rumours concerning it have done much to lessen our interest. Thus it came to be known that the composer, as he has been wont to do since 'Heldenleben,' had made himself and his wife heroes of the 'Intermezzo,' and that he had gone so far in the setting of mere trifles as no composer had dared to do before. The public probably was not wrong in concluding that the music accompanying intimate events could not be very important. So the preface, which I mentioned last month, was considered rather as an excuse for the work than an explanation of it. Under these circumstances the 'Intermezzo' caused some surprise to all who had expected something disappointing. The music is often put to ridiculous purposes, yet it cannot be denied that no other composer could have done this with equal virtuosity. Besides the most prosaic things of every-day life there are in the work some pages worth considering, such as peasants' dances, harmless love-affairs, and reconciliation between man and wife. A mixture of the 'Rosenkavalier' and the 'Ariadne' styles is apparent. The flowing dialogue comes to a stand-still only in orchestral episodes which bridge one scene to another. Richard Strauss was, indeed, not mistaken in making musical dialogue the most interesting part of this 'Intermezzo.' Throughout the work the spoken word—as simple prose, as recitative in all possible forms—is never overwhelmed by the orchestra, however rich the tone may be. Singers and conductor, Herr Fritz Busch, rose to the occasion and did all in their power to satisfy the composer. I do not remember having come across a singer like Madame Lotte Lehmann, of the Vienna Staatsoper, who could so well express all the nuances of the woman's character and sing at the same time with the most beautiful voice.

Though all this is true, and the success of the work very great, the 'Intermezzo' goes no further than its name suggests. It never exceeds the bounds of harmless comedy, and ever remains true to the individuality of its creator, who displays the highest degree of musical loquacity. The stage management was simply wonderful.

A YOUNG COMPOSER

A new Pianoforte Sonata, Op. 1, was heard twice in one week. Its composer, Hanns Eisler, a very young pupil of Schönberg, shows extraordinary skill both in the polyphonic and harmonic texture of his work, with at the same time, however, a monotony of procedure damaging to its excellent impression. To Franz Osborn and Elsa C. Kraus belongs the credit of playing this Sonata and making it known.

The 'November Group,' that association of painters, poets, and musicians devoted to modern art, invited the Amar Quartet for a performance of some 'Bagatelles' for string quartet by Anton Webern, the most ascetic of all composers. He emphasises the immaterial side of music to such an extent that we hear nothing but sotto voce exclamations.

ADOLF WEISSMANN.

NEW YORK

The orchestral season was opened by three organizations appearing in one week. First the Philharmonic Orchestra, under Willem van Hoogstraten, presented as a novelty Respighi's 'Sinfonia Drammatica.' His 'Fountains of Rome' has been repeatedly performed here, and has been favourably received. Anticipation ran high concerning the Symphony, but it proved a disappointment. It is claimed in Italy that Respighi is a 'master of symphonic style,' while the plain truth is that he has no symphonic style at all, but, like all other Italians, writes purely in operatic style when attempting any composition of length. It is a formless work, beginning nowhere, proceeding nowhere, and ending nowhere, and full as any opera of melodies and incidents that are in no way related each to the other. Moreover, no originality was apparent. The pleasing 'bits' here and there brought to mind extracts from the great German and Russian composers, and even the ideas and manner of other Italians. In spite of these faults there was, however, enough of interest to impress one with the idea that Respighi might write an opera if he chose, and we wish he would so choose, for another Italian name in operatic composition would be welcome. The more classic and scientific forms of music are far better interpreted by their colder-blooded brethren of the North.

For our second orchestral concert, Mr. Stokowski brought over his splendid band from Philadelphia. There was no novelty, only superb interpretations of Brahms's C minor Symphony and three short works of Stravinsky. It really seldom matters what the Philadelphia Orchestra plays so long as it plays, and we are not at all surprised at Mr. Ernest Newman's utterance that 'there is no orchestra in England to compare with this in material or discipline.' Occasionally this wonderful band may play something we might call 'tiresome,' but for the work of the Orchestra itself we have (as for Mr. Harold Samuel's playing of Bach) only superlatives to use.

The State Symphony Orchestra (organized for Josef Stransky when he retired from the Philharmonic) celebrated the hundredth anniversary of Bruckner's birth by a performance of his third Symphony, in D minor. Of Bruckner's nine Symphonies the third cannot claim to be the best, but it shows many of the composer's enduring characteristics—the alternating of strong and weak passages, &c.—and it is written in a more popular vein than some of his later symphonic productions. It is a composition calculated to please an ordinary audience, and all Mr. Stransky's audiences want is something that pleases until he comes to Tchaikovsky and Wagner, his two battle-horses, for a concert under his baton without one of these names in the programme is rare.

The New York Symphony Orchestra was the fourth to make its first appearance for the season. Mr. Damrosch induced a calm mentality in his audience by playing Beethoven's fifth Symphony and Vaughan Williams's lovely Fantasia for double string orchestra on a theme by Thomas Tallis (16th century), and then awoke them suddenly with Arthur Honegger's 'Pacific 231,' which carried them to a tremendous pitch of excitement. In these days of programme music, Honegger seems to have been the first to use a locomotive engine for a subject. Beginning with a suggestion of the preparation for a start, we next hear the start itself, the gathering speed, the great monster roaring and tearing through the night, and finally the journey's end. All this could have been done by many composers by appealing to us only as a wonderful piece of mechanism, but Honegger's locomotive is alive, and its vitality impresses us as much as its power. The orchestration is superb. Mr. Damrosch and his men entered fully into the spirit of the composition, and aroused our emotions to the highest pitch of enthusiasm over this extraordinary work. Honegger's name has long been best known by his affiliation with the 'Paris Six,' but none of the others have ever distinguished themselves as he has done in this portrayal of the potentialities of a colossal structure of man's labour, and in the tremendous effect produced on our emotions in the achievement of it.

The novelty at the second Philharmonic comprised three episodes from the two suites of Florent Schmitt written to accompany a French adaptation of 'Antony and Cleopatra.' As programme music the 'episodes' were failures, as even with the assistance of the annotator they conveyed nothing to our minds, and as music . . . But why are we called upon to listen to such emptiness?

Mr. Stokowski's second concert came on the evening of a Presidential Election Day, when only the most dilettante American is interested in anything but the returns, so we were not called upon to analyse any more modern orchestral efforts than those of Beethoven and Mozart.

The Metropolitan Opera House opened on the eve of Election Day, but the first night of the opera season is always primarily a social event, and the music must take second place. Everybody comes to see and be seen, and an old opera is always chosen. 'Aïda' is often given, and 'Aïda' it was this year, produced in all its scenic sumptuousness and the re-appearance of many old favourites among the singers. And yet there was a novelty—the conductor, Tullio Serafin, who made his American début after years of success at Milan, Buenos Aires, and Madrid. He leads with great authority, has an expressive left hand, and pays close attention to the singers as well as to the orchestra. His great vitality and interest in his score are always apparent. He promises to be an acquisition.

The Friends of Music devoted their first afternoon to Bach, their second to Mahler. Their best work is always done in Bach, and no other composer interests their audiences so much as the great John Sebastian, but Mahler is a favourite of Mr. Bodanzky's, so we must sometimes listen to him too—or stay away. M. H. FLINT.

PARIS

The outstanding event in our musical world these last days has been the death of Gabriel Fauré. The passing of the great master evoked the deep regret of musicians of all schools and tendencies. He was, indeed, a composer who enslaved his art to no transient craze, but ever renewed it by smooth evolution. Keeping to tradition and yet alive to the exigency of modern sensibility, he spread his melodic lines amidst harmonies pregnant with poetry and intimate emotion. Powerful orchestral effects tempted him but rarely, and it is in the domain of chamber music that he unveiled the best of his gift. Special mention must be made of his 'Requiem,' the discreet mysticism of which is framed on classic lines, thus attaining a degree of serenity often lacking in modern music.

Amidst the ever-swelling stream of musical events the critic cannot but choose a few and apologise for the exclusion of the rest.

The Grand Opéra produced a new work, 'Nerto,' a collaboration of Maurice Léna for the text and Ch. M. Widor for the music. The plot is drawn from a poem composed by Frederic Mistral in the Provençal dialect. Satan figures in it as a purchaser of souls, and Love triumphs over him in the end. He wins neither hero nor heroine. M. Widor's music voices the French lyrical tradition as developed by Gounod and Massenet, but preserves its distance from all recent contributions in this art. The melody is conventionally sweet, and the thematic development explains with conviction the inner sense of the subject. The dramatic apparitions of Satan are underlined by fairly realistic touches, but the ear is nowhere molested by any unexpected shock either in the music or in the score. A few charming popular songs and dance tunes have a refreshing effect.

Friends of symphonic music will learn with pleasure that the Padeloup concerts seem to have come through their tribulations. This heroic group presents its artistic efforts in the Mogador Theatre, where there was a vacancy after the disappearance of the Concerts Modernes. Always alive to modern musical activity, M. Rhéné-Baton, the able conductor of the Padeloup Orchestra, gave his auditors an interesting novelty, the composer of which is Jean Wiener, the remarkable pianist. In his Concerto No. 1 'Franco-Américain' this composer aims at nothing less than re-animating the concerto form by the introduction of jazz music. This is a praiseworthy attempt towards artistic utilisation of what is good in jazz. Happily enough, M. Wiener keeps fast to frank and well-established tonality, and rarely seems to be short of good rhythm.

Musical circles and the public at large are giving due attention to the noteworthy activity of an Italian conductor, Piero Coppola, seconded by Madame Marguerite Nielka and the Padeloup Orchestra. Signor Coppola has been visiting us for some years past, and each time the programmes of his concerts have inspired much interest on account of their quality and variety. The first included Ravel's 'Rhapsodie Espagnole,' and had as closing item Strauss's 'La Vie d'un Héros.' Madame Nielka sang with much conviction and musical intelligence melodies by Aubert, Roussel, Bachelet, and Casella. Two first performances were reserved for the second concert, viz., a symphonic poem entitled 'Crepusculo sul Mare,' by Santoliquido, and 'Pour Orchestre,' by Rudi Stephan. The first-named, in spite of its title, is not purely descriptive music. It conveys the sensation felt by the author at the sight of a sunset on the sea. Santoliquido, as a genuine Italian, commands a flowing melody of a conventional and slightly Wagnerian type. There is warmth and poetry in his music, but the inspiration seems too even and the realisation does not always escape monotony. 'Pour Orchestre,' by Rudi Stephan, is a powerful piece of symphonic music wherein all artifices of scholastic counterpoint and fugue are laid under contribution for the thematic development. Excess of polyphony imparts to this work a severe and almost rugged character, while depriving it overmuch of generous orchestral sonority.

Piero Coppola is rapidly becoming an outstanding figure of our musical world, and his work promises to give us compensation for Kussewitzky's departure to America.

The group 'Pro Musica,' which is the French section of the Franco-American Music Society, gave the first concert of its season to French music. Three noted composers, Kœchlin, Roussel, and Grovlez accompanied their own works, and Madame Jane Bathori, the admirable singer and matchless interpreter of modern music, sang the 'Chanson de Bilitis,' by Kœchlin, 'Invocation,' 'Sarabande,' 'Amoureux séparés,' by Roussel, 'Ronsard à son âme,' 'Noël des Jouets,' 'Sur l'Herbe,' by Ravel, 'Le don silencieux,' 'Sérénade,' by Grovlez, and 'Poèmes de Catulle,' by Darius Milhaud, the latter accompanied only on the violin played by M. Robert Krettly. Madame Madeleine Grovlez, the talented pianist, played with mastery and sincere emotion pianoforte works such as 'Le Glas,' by Florent Schmitt, 'Baigneuses au Soleil,' by Dédot de Séverac, and the third Impromptu by Gabriel Fauré. The concert ended with Ravel's 'Sonatine' for violin and 'cello, played respectively by MM. R. Krettly and P. Fournier.

PETRO J. PETRIDIS.

TORONTO

Schumann-Heink opened the Massey Hall season this month with a programme of medium interest. She was followed closely by Geraldine Farrar in her wisely conceived 'Carmen' Fantasia, a tabloid version of the opera, in which the famous Metropolitan has retained only the cream of the melodies, dispensed entirely with the chorus, and re-dressed her company of nine along vivid, impressionistic lines. As grand opera has, as yet, always been a failure in Canada, the innovation came as a welcome relief.

Two début recitals have created unusual enthusiasm. Maria Jeritz, so well known through her recordings that she drew a capacity house, proved that the Metropolitan work does not always ruin for concert-singing every artist it embraces. Her selections ranged from the pure dramatic to the English folk-song, showing, above everything, an extraordinary wealth of tonal-colouring. Roland Hayes, the coloured tenor, after an evening of the purest lyric singing ever heard at Toronto, has now only two rivals here—Chaliapin and Rosing. It is strange that a native of Africa can teach the Anglo-Saxon how to sing his own language. We know of no living vocalist whose diction is so perfect.

The New Symphony Orchestra has already given two concerts. The first contained the Weber 'Jubilee' Overture and Schubert's ninth Symphony, in C major, the other presented the Haydn 'Surprise' Symphony, Liszt's Rhapsody No. 2, and the Schumann Pianoforte Concerto, with Signor Guerrero at the keyboard.

The first of the Hart House String Quartet concerts was entirely successful, both artistically and in point of attendance. The members, who have been practising daily all the summer, gave promise of unlimited ability in Quartets of Beethoven, Haydn, and Debussy.

Paul Whiteman drew his customary thousands, but the enterprise which he so soundly started, viz., musically educating the lower tastes through the power of rhythm and ingenious harmony, seems destined to prove sterile.

Local recitals have been given by T. J. Crawford (presenting a splendid programme of original compositions for soprano, baritone, and violin), Claud Biggs (pianoforte), Ethel Peake (vocalist), Luigi von Kunitz (sonata recital), and Albert David (vocalist). H. C. F.

VIENNA

GUSTAV MAHLER'S POSTHUMOUS SYMPHONY

The four weeks' Municipal Music Festival brought so much that was new and interesting that only the more important novelties can be referred to here. Not the least interesting of these was the first production of Gustav Mahler's tenth Symphony—a posthumous work which gains in significance from the reproduction which has just been published, in a beautiful and dignified form, by the Viennese firm of Paul Zsolnay. Inspection of this facsimile score affords a fascinating and gripping insight into the mentality and spirit of this most misunderstood of contemporary composers. No more faithful portrait could be imagined of Gustav Mahler's soul, which was at once that of a wistful child and of a deeply suffering man. The score is replete with hastily penned exclamations of despair, of fear of approaching death (or madness), and with tender and loving words for his wife, Alma. But, above all, we are afforded an insight into the ceaseless pains and sorrows from which sprung the tenderly childlike naïveté of Mahler's melodies which so many have denounced as manifestations of 'banal sentimentalism.'

Only two movements of the Symphony were heard—the Adagio which Mahler, after some wavering, had designed as the first movement, and a Scherzo, inscribed 'Purgatorio, or Inferno,' which was to have become the third movement. This Scherzo is incomplete to such an extent as to lack even the traditional Trio. But it is safe to assume that the Adagio, which is apparently finished, had by no means assumed its ultimate shape at the time of the composer's death. Mahler's restless spirit was bent on perfection, and none of his Symphonies was by him considered 'complete' before the moment of its first production. It seems extremely doubtful therefore that, had he lived to see it, he would have approved of the performance of so fragmentary a Symphony as this tenth. Plainly it is 'unfinished' in every sense of the word, but allowing all that this term implies, it is a genuinely Mahlerian work, akin in style and idiom to the 'Song of the Earth,' the 'song symphony' which ranges chronologically between his eighth and ninth Symphonies. The tenth is a typical kaleidoscope of continually shifting moods, abruptly changing from exultant passion to deep depression. It has, in short, that element which has induced many to describe Mahler's music as 'erratic,' incoherent, and 'un-organic,' but which, in fact, is merely a manifestation of the composer's nature so strangely compounded of sentiment, sorrow, and childlike fancy. Withal, the tenth Symphony shows more repose and inner balance of mind than its predecessors, especially in the beautiful singing passages of the violas with which it opens, and which repeatedly occur in the first movement. Franz Schalk's performance of the Symphony, at a special concert of the Philharmonic Orchestra, given at the Staatsoper, was direct but not inspired to a great degree.

SCHÖNBERG'S 'DIE GLÜCKLICHE HAND'

The Volksoper, which is still—and more than ever—battling against the spectre of complete economic breakdown, achieved one of the most memorable deeds of the entire Festival with its production—the first anywhere—of Schönberg's mimodrame, 'Die glückliche Hand.' This work, composed between 1909-13, was the composer's first effort in music and drama combined, he himself writing the book for what represents a new and singular type of operatic form. It is not opera, or ballet, or indeed music-drama—but a species embodying all three forms. It may be regarded as the last and most logical type of Wagner's 'Gesamtkunstwerk,' a form of drama which unites the elements of music and drama with the possibilities of dance and mimic expression. But Schönberg adds a third element which was still unknown to Wagner's technically less advanced stage, i.e., lighting, which he employs in all its most elaborate and detailed applications. Of the three acting persons—The Man, The Woman, and The Gentleman—only the first is a singing part, the two other characters being restricted to pantomimic gesture. The three figures represent fixed types: the Man, in quest of glory and conquest; the Woman who inspires his deeds, but who, in the end, annihilates him by forsaking him for the Gentleman, a mere well-dressed puppet. The frame for the scant and short action of the drama is provided by a chorus which opens and closes the work—the voices from within the Man's own self which warn him not to lose himself and his purpose in worldly and superficial pleasures.

It is this chorus which discloses Schönberg's real mastery, and it is the one feature which establishes the connecting link between this eleven years' old work and the composer's recent creations. For the rest, the music of 'Die glückliche Hand' is a product of its time—the time of Strauss's 'Salome.' It is to such music that Schönberg's orchestral idiom comes nearest in this work; yet Schönberg reared his own edifice on the ground prepared by Strauss. Nowhere is there any relationship to Strauss's theatricalism, nowhere is Schönberg's music merely the colourful background and pretext for a brilliant scenic picture. Every bar of the work is charged with a message, and music is the servant of drama throughout. Thematic development there is none; nor are there large melodic complexes; nor, indeed, even traces of 'leading motives.' The acting persons are characterised not by individual themes but by orchestral colours. The Woman's grace and fatal charms are embodied largely in the solo violin part, and the rigid brasses paint the virility of the Man. The chorus is employed with that supreme freedom and imaginative mastery which trace a direct line from the last movement of Schönberg's 'Gurrelieder' to his 'Pierrot lunaire.' It is, perhaps, the most ingenious employment of the human voice ever experienced in the history of music. Schönberg's chorus is a symphony of murmuring, muttering, hissing voices; a few sustained tones now and then arise from this wailing, only to submerge again in the ghostly and ghastly ensemble. The polyphonic treatment of the voices is masterly, and its effect overwhelming. The performance, under Dr. Stiedry, was the outcome of infinitely painstaking rehearsals, and proved a thing of admirable perfection. Its effect was weakened, unfortunately, for Schubert's roseate and all-too harmless little opera, 'Der häusliche Krieg' should not have followed it.

SCHÖNBERG'S NEWEST WORK

It was highly instructive and fascinating to draw comparisons between the Schönberg of 1913, as exemplified by his 'Die glückliche Hand,' and the Schönberg of 1924 who spoke to us from his very latest work, a Quintet for wind instruments. In the first-named, it was still possible to trace his ancestry to certain composers of his day; but the Schönberg of our time follows his own path, which separates him from all who have gone before. The Schönberg of old, building upon the foundations of tradition, was a revolutionary of the means and possibilities of his age. In the Quintet he has widened the boundaries of the ground which had sufficed for others. It is the first work in which Schönberg's theory of the twelve-tone scale is convincingly worked out. What makes the twelve-tone scale a complete departure from accepted harmonic fundamentals is the fact that the twelve notes of the scale are reached not by augmentation or diminution of the familiar eight-tone scale, or by alterations of the existing chord combinations; each semitone is an independent entity by itself, and leads its own life, irrespective of its relation to chromatic neighbours. The full significance of the new twelve-tone scale is shortly to be explained by Schönberg in a book which he proposes to devote to this subject. The Quintet, it is understood, merely outlines the possibilities of the new scale, without exhausting them. In its ultimate and most logical application, the new harmonic fundament will, according to Schönberg, demand a twelve-part polyphony, whereas the present work, being scored for five instruments, permits merely a five-part polyphonic texture.

The new work is replete with ingenious inspirations derived from the resources of the twelve-tone scale. There is, for instance, no melody in it which would not embody in itself—or in its accompaniment—all of the twelve tones of the scale. There occur no mere repetitions of any given theme, but each motive is subjected to an elaborate and ingenious process of reversion and transformation. Notwithstanding such complicated and strenuous demands placed upon the hearer, a skilled ear may yet perceive, even at first hearing, certain 'melodies' alternately pronounced by the five instruments. The question which still remains is, whether the human power of musical perception will some day become perfected to such a degree as to permit full understanding of the immensely artful texture of such a work at a first hearing, or to derive pleasure from such music without the aid of extended and advanced study. Formally, the Quintet reverts to the traditional scheme; the first movement is in strict sonata form; the second a Scherzo, with the customary Trio followed by a literal recapitulation of the first section; and the Trio falls back on the themes of the preceding movements.

PAUL BECHERT.

PETER CORNELIUS

BY EDITH A. H. CRAWSHAW

On December 24, a hundred years ago, there was born at Mayence Peter Cornelius (a nephew of the painter of the same name), who is now remembered principally by his songs and other vocal works. Destined originally for the stage, after one appearance (which seems to have been unsuccessful) he abandoned this career and decided to adopt music as his profession. In preparation for the stage he had become acquainted with dramatic literature, and these studies helped to develop his poetic gifts. On the death of his father—in 1844—music with him became a serious study. He spent five years at Berlin under Dehn, who numbered among his pupils Glinka, Kullak, and A. Rubinstein. Cornelius's tendencies were rather towards the modern school of music than to that which enforced the keeping of the strict rules of counterpoint. When twenty-eight years of age he joined a group of young musicians at Weimar who were imbued with the ideas of Richard Wagner, and, under the guidance of Liszt, sought to carry them out. This group eventually founded a separate school, to which the name 'New-German' was given. Cornelius here formed ties of strong friendship with Liszt, who in his turn had a high opinion of Cornelius, speaking of him as 'a most charming, fine-feeling, and distinguished nature.' Cornelius thus describes the life at Weimar:

'What lessons we learnt at the rehearsals for the grand music-performances; what wonders we experienced at Liszt's ear, his controlling hand, the mode in which he explained, inspired, electrified. . . . How merry were our evenings, blithe our nights! The motive of the 'Flying Dutchman' was our pass-word in the starless dark, the royal fanfare from 'Lohengrin' our good-night call to Liszt, and the jubilant trombone melody before the third Act of 'Lohengrin,' we sang as first greeting to the longed-for Meister Wagner when we sought out the exile in Switzerland.'

The principles of the New-German school were ably set forth by Cornelius in the Neue Zeitschrift für Musik, both by original articles and the translation of a series of French lectures given by Liszt. Cornelius's literary work also included the translation of Berlioz's 'L'Enfance du Christ,' of which the composer wrote to Liszt:

'On me dit que la traduction allemande est très bien faite et je te prie de remercier très particulièrement mon exact et spirituel traducteur.'

After translating from the French some of Liszt's articles on Schumann, Cornelius wrote to his mother:

'Everybody who does not know they are translations takes them for German originals. Moreover, it will do me no harm for my name to go hand-in-hand through the world with Liszt's.'

Mr. Ashton Ellis makes this comment apropos the translations:

'Cornelius has left quite enough of his own to sustain him on his own feet through the world.'

The comic opera, 'The Barber of Bagdad,' in which Cornelius embodied his new views, had only one performance (1858), and its failure was one cause of Liszt's retirement from his post at Weimar. This opera was revived at Munich in 1885, and given in English by the pupils of the Royal College of Music at the Savoy Theatre, in 1891.

Leaving Weimar in 1858 Cornelius went to Vienna, where Tausig introduced him to Wagner, who soon formed a favourable opinion of him, expressing himself thus in a letter to his wife, Minna:

'He really is the only one among the younger generation to whom I can attribute actual genius, whilst his temperance, modesty, contented mind, and great moral worth place him on a pedestal apart.'

When Wagner left Vienna for Munich at the invitation of King Ludwig II., Cornelius followed, becoming first reader to the King, and later Professor of harmony and rhetoric at the Conservatorium. The opera, 'Le Cid,' produced at Weimar in 1865, may be considered as the outcome of Cornelius's friendship with Wagner.

After one of his trips to Venice, Wagner announced his return to Cornelius by sending him a small Venetian gondola, to which he had attached a canzona written to nonsensical Italian words. At the same time Wagner communicated to Cornelius his plan for the composition of 'Die Meistersinger.' So desirous was Wagner of having his friend's opinion regarding this libretto that he arranged for Cornelius to read it in February, 1862. Cornelius travelled from Vienna through floods and floating ice, which impeded the railway traffic, in order to be present at Mayence for the occasion, arriving, after all sorts of adventures and the loss of his overcoat, in a half-frozen condition at his sister's house, and returning direct to Vienna the next day!

A misunderstanding of Cornelius's caused the breach in the intercourse between Brahms and Wagner. The original autograph of the 'new Venusberg music' from 'Tannhäuser' had been committed by Wagner to Cornelius, who was to make a copy of it. Cornelius, thinking the original score was a gift to himself, passed it on to Brahms, who valued it highly, whilst Wagner was expecting its return.

For a third opera, following Wagner's example, Cornelius turned to the legends of the Edda, and was busy composing 'Gnölöd' when he died at his birthplace, Mayence, on October 26, 1874.

It will be as a song-writer that Cornelius is remembered rather than as a composer of operas. His six 'Christmas Songs' deserve mention, also the 'Songs of a Bride' and 'Songs of Grief and Consolation,' in which cycle the wonderful 'Ein Ton' is found. Cornelius deserves to be remembered in this, his centenary year, for that one song of which Plunket Greene writes in his 'Interpretation in Song':

'The voice-part consists of five sentences, all sung on one and the same note. Here a man is thinking of a woman who is dead. Each sentence tells a different thought and a different emotion; without differentiated tone-colour every thought, no matter what the words, would sound alike. It is in reality a study of five emotions in five colours, a masterpiece of unmonotonous monotony.'

Obituary

GABRIEL FAURÉ

Although for the past four years Fauré's health had been frail enough to constitute a constant source of anxiety to his friends and admirers, the news of his death (which occurred on October 31) came as a painful surprise to all. He was well over seventy-nine years of age (the date of his birth is May 13, 1845), and yet it was impossible to think of old age in connection with his music or with himself. The youthful charm and tranquil brightness that always characterised him remained unimpaired, and as a composer he never ceased to display an amazing vitality and alertness. Indeed, some of his latest works, such as the song-sets, 'Mirages' and 'L'Horizon Chimérique,' and the second Pianoforte Quintet, are among the finest, freshest, and most original things he ever wrote.

No country except his own has realised so far his greatness to the full. By a remarkable coincidence, just before his death, in the New York Musical Quarterly, appeared an article on him, by Mr. Aaron Copland. It is entitled 'Gabriel Fauré, a Neglected Master,' and this title expresses the position quite accurately.

One vainly wonders why Fauré's music, with its perfect atticism and far-reaching originality, should have remained neglected or under-rated outside France. It is precisely the kind of music that would be expected to attract and retain the attention of all cultured and sensitive music-lovers. It is fraught with inner significance, graced with beauty of the most arresting kind, and always delightful in proportion and workmanship. You may revert to it time after time, and ever be finding fresh reasons for admiring and loving it: and you will wonder how it can come to pass that a work such as the lovely second Quintet or the song 'Diane, Séléné,' can be heard for the first time in any country without the event being noticed otherwise than by a couple of casual sentences in a few concert-notices (this, alas! is what happened in London). Other works of his—such as the beautiful 'Requiem' (Op. 48)—remain practically ignored. Let us hope that very soon the truth of Mr. Copland's statement, that 'it is time to give Fauré his rightful place in contemporary music,' will be universally acknowledged and acted upon.

This place is great from the historian's point of view as well as from the music-lover's. Fauré ranks with Lalo, Chabrier, Saint-Saëns, and Franck as a pioneer of the modern musical renaissance in France. Moreover, his activities continued long after the renaissance was an accomplished fact; and the same youthful vitality which informed his music characterised his teaching and his relations with the musical world around him. This outlook remained fresh and sympathetic to the last. It is no mere coincidence surely, that so great a number of the best French composers of to-day—Louis Aubert, Roger-Ducasse, Kœchlin, Ladmirault, Ravel, and Schmitt, among others—should have been his pupils.

France was fully aware of her debt to Fauré, and long is the list of honours—culminating in 1922 in a 'Hommage National,' the like of which had never before taken place except for Pasteur—bestowed upon him.

Shortly before his death, Fauré was engaged in completing a String Quartet which is, I understand, ready for publication.

M.-D. CALVO-COESSI.

Answers to Correspondents

Questions must be of general musical interest. They must be stated simply and briefly, and if several are sent, each must be written on a separate slip. We cannot undertake to reply by post.

KENSINGTON.—So far as we know, no book gives an account of the meaning of Chopin's Preludes. You mention, as the type of explanation you require, the following 'programme note' on the A flat Prelude (? D flat):

'... its muffled A flat bell booming its solemn death message over the waters, and the little tear-laden boat of melody cradling its grief to silence on the ripples below.'

('Tear-laden boat of melody' is good!) A volume of such 'explanations' of all the twenty-five Preludes would be enough to make poor Chopin turn. Don't give your mind to such things. Doesn't the music itself say enough already? And isn't it better that this Prelude should mean half-a-dozen different things on as many days, or in accordance with the listener's frame of mind, than that it should be limited to the expression of one idea? Scuttle that tear-laden boat!

A. H. W. writes quoting this passage from Stanford's book, 'Musical Composition' (author's capitals):

'It is an absolute necessity for the composer that he should STUDY THE PURE SCALE AND WRITE IN IT.'

Our correspondent asks 'Why'? So do we. We remember hearing Stanford say pretty much the same thing at a Musical Association meeting. He led into it by condemning the whole-tone scale on the ground that it was possible only on instruments of equal temperament (pianoforte, organ, harp). No string player could manage the whole-tone scale because of the impossibility of getting the octave dead true. (We hope we have this right!) All great composers from Palestrina to Wagner (said Stanford) accepted the tempered scale, but when they composed they always had the true scale (unequal temperament) in mind. Stanford may have been right about the older composers, but we doubt if many composers of to-day give a thought to the difference between the true and tempered scales.

H.2.—You have made a good start with your folk-song library. You ask for still more treatises and collections. Here are some: Cecil Sharp's 'Folk-song: Some Conclusions' (Barnicote & Pearce, Taunton; and Novello); 'English Folk-songs from the Southern Appalachians,' by Olive Dame Campbell and Cecil Sharp (G. P. Putnam's Sons); 'English County Songs,' Lucy Broadwood and J. A. Fuller-Maitland (Leadenhall Press); 'Folk-songs from Somerset,' Cecil J. Sharp and the Rev. Charles L. Marson (Schott); 'School Songs,' Cecil J. Sharp, five sets (Novello); 'English Folk-Carols,' Cecil J. Sharp (Wessex Press, Taunton, and Novello); and the various collections by Sharp, Butterworth, Vaughan Williams, and Hammond, issued by Novello. The above are only a small proportion of the available material, but it should keep you happily busy for a time.

FRANK.—(1.) A grand pianoforte is, of course, better than an upright, all things being equal. We prefer not to recommend any particular make. There are now so many good ones that, to be fair, we should have to give a catalogue. In so large a town as yours there must be reliable dealers galore. Go to them, and if you can obtain the advice of a professional musician of good standing (paying a small fee, of course), so much the better. (2.) The Novello Edition of Bach's organ music can hardly be bettered. It is particularly valuable so far as the Chorale Preludes are concerned. Begin with Book 1, the Eight Short Preludes and Fugues, and at the same time work at some of the easier Chorale Preludes (for manuals only) in Books 18 and 19.

F. S.—(1.) To give such a list as you ask for would take up far too much space (and, incidentally, a lot of our time as well). Moreover, the question of taste comes in; the songs that we like might leave you frigid. As you are within a short run of the West End, you can easily make your own choice at the publishers. (2.) As you are able on occasion to use your head register, you should note carefully the sensations that go with it. Reproduce the sensation, and you reproduce the right tone. This seems a rough and ready way of going to work, but we have known it to succeed when subtler and grander-sounding methods have failed. Jordan is occasionally still to be preferred to Abana and Pharpas!

EARNEST INQUIRER asks for information 'about those guilds or societies which undertake to finance the concert or recital that an aspiring student may wish to hold in London, on payment of a regular yearly sum for a fixed period.' We know of no such open-handed societies. The only title that occurs to us is that of the Guild of Singers and Players (74, Grosvenor Street, W.1), which is an organization for the qualified professional, not the 'aspiring student.'

MON.—By 'Triple rhythm' you probably mean 'triple time'—3-2, 3-4, 9-8, &c. You ask how you are to 'determine the existence' of three-bar rhythm. Only by examining the passage, and so discovering which are the strong bars, just as you would look for the strong beats in a bar. Turn up the well-known passage in the Scherzo of the Ninth Symphony, and practise beating the passages where Beethoven directs 'rhythm of three bars' and 'rhythm of four bars.'

AN INQUIRER.—Question not clear. Do you mean pianoforte duets, and pianoforte quartets—that is, works for three stringed instruments and pianoforte? In any case, we can hardly advise you in choosing works of the kind for players 'in the intermediate stage.' Ideas vary as to such stages. You are so near London that you can easily go to a good music shop, explain your wants, and make a far better choice than we could proffer.

L. L. H.—The 'Christmas' Oratorio will be performed at St. Anne's, Soho, on December 13 and 20, and January 3, at 3.30; at St. Alban's Abbey (Parts 1 and 2) on December 16, at 8; and at St. Stephen's, Bow (Parts 1 and 2), on December 28, at 6.30. There will no doubt be other performances in or near London, announcements of which will probably be made in the press.

N. C.—We know of no book dealing with the use of the organ with orchestra, the filling-in of wind parts, &c. The matter is one for taste, commonsense, and a good knowledge of the particular organ. A book could be of little use here. There is an abundance of literature on organ construction. You appear to have missed our reply to you on this point in the November issue. Look it up!

WALDSTEIN.—Why bother about a 'full list of modern books embracing pianoforte teaching from the beginning'? If we understand your needs aright, your best plan is to start work under a first-rate teacher and go all out for the L.R.A.M. or A.R.C.M. Teachers' Diplomas. We do not know if the player you mention gives lessons. We should think not, as he is so much on tour.

F. M. M.—There is no 'method' for discovering the different keys of a work apart from key-signature. Modulations are sometimes so transitory that the question of a new key does not arise. If a new key is established, your sense of tonality should tell you which. The study of Tonic Sol-fa will help your feeling for key and key relationship.

A. M.—For your pupil 'with small hands,' able to play d'Arquin's 'Cuckoo,' you cannot do better than follow on with the 'Inventions' of Bach, proceeding to the easier of the '48.' Try also some movements from Handel's Suites and from Bach's 'French' Suites.

C. R. C.—The best Beethoven book we know on the scale you desire is by Chantavoine, in the series 'Maîtres de Musique,' published by Alkan, Paris. It may be had from Novello. We do not think an English version has appeared.

H. H. B.—You can hardly prepare for the A.R.C.O. without taking lessons. Ask your teacher for advice as to the most useful books for study.

R. F. W.—Bach's 'Let us but rest awhile,' used as a test-piece at Blackpool, is published by Augener in a set of Bach solos edited by Prout. It may be had separately.

L. J. W.—Parry's 'Jerusalem' is simply a unison song. It belongs to no special category. We should certainly not call it an idyll, as you suggest.

C. H. S.—For your lectures on the growth of pianoforte music consult Herbert Westerby's recent book, 'The History of Pianoforte Music' (Kegan Paul, 12s. 6d.).

W. W.—Chester's publish a large number of songs for all voices by later Russian composers. Write for a list.

GAS FIRES AND THE PIANOFORTE

Apropos of the inquiry on this subject by 'H. K. W.' in our last issue, we have received from the British Commercial Gas Association a letter and pamphlet containing the best of evidence that a properly constructed gas-fire has no ill effects on the pianoforte. The fact of such fires being extensively used in studios by pianoforte manufacturers and others is sufficient testimony.

THAT COPYRIGHT QUESTION!

We thought we had done with it, but several letters lie before us asking, 'How do I copyright?' &c. Full information was given in this column in our issue of August, and references were also made to the subject in June and July. We shall never return to it.

TWO-MANUAL AND PEDAL PIANOFORTES

Several readers write wishing to get in touch with 'L. C.,' whose inquiry on the above appeared last month. We did not keep 'L. C.'s' address; if he will send it we will bring the parties together.

Miscellaneous

Proof of the excellence of the musical work done at the Godolphin School for Girls, at Salisbury, is shown by programmes just received. On November 7 a miscellaneous concert was given, at which the junior orchestra played pieces by Dyson and Taylor, the seniors taking part in the Andante and Presto of Mendelssohn's G minor Pianoforte Concerto (soloist, Sally Marks). Songs and instrumental solos by Elgar, Dunhill, Ireland, Reger, &c. were also given. On the following day Purcell's 'Dido and Æneas,' arranged for female voices, was performed. The conductor on both occasions was Miss Nellie Harding.

The prospectus of the Glasgow Bach Society shows capital enterprise. An orchestral section has been formed; two chamber concerts will be given; and among the plans for the season are stage performances at the Lyric Theatre of the 'Peasant' and 'Coffee' Cantatas, with incidental dances to music taken from the Suites. Mr. A. M. Henderson, owing to pressure of work, having resigned the conductorship, Mr. J. Michael Diack, the founder of the Choir and its former conductor, will return to the rostrum and share the office with Mr. F. H. Bisset.

The excellent concerts given by the League of Arts at the Victoria and Albert Museum have re-commenced. They will take place on Saturday afternoons at 3. Admission is free, but you are expected to support the scheme by buying a sixpenny programme. The performers include Miss Sybil Cropper, Mr. Harold Craxton, Mr. John Goss, Mr. George Parker, the London Male-Voice Octet, Mr. Murray Lambert, Mr. Reginald Paul, the Ladies' String Quartet, the League of Arts Choir, &c.

The Hobart Orchestral Society, a body of fifty-three players, gave the following programme on September 9, under the direction of Mr. J. Glanville Bishop: the 'Hebrides' Overture, 'Carmen' Suite, Schubert's 'Unfinished' Symphony, and Massenet's 'Scènes Pittoresques.'

The People's Palace Choral and Orchestral Societies, conducted by Mr. Frank Idle, opened their season on November 15 with 'Elijah,' the soloists being Miss Stiles Allen, Miss Edith Furmedge, Mr. Spencer Thomas, and Mr. Topliss Green.

'The Revenge,' and a selection from Gounod's 'Faust,' with some orchestral works, will be performed at the Town Hall, Ealing, on December 17, at 8, by the West Middlesex Musical Society.

CONTENTS.

	PAGE
The Art of Accompanying Songs. By Hubert J. Foss	1073
Ad Libitum. By 'Feste' ... ..	1078
Conductors and Conducting.—VI. The Musical Aspect of the Beat. By William Wallace	1082
New Light on Late Tudor Composers.—V. Robert Parsons. By W. H. Grattan Flood	1085
Borodin Revised. By M.-D. Calvocoressi	1086
Debussy and Others on Sullivan. By Andrew de Ternant	1089
Individuality in Music. By Thomas Armstrong	1090
The Musician's Bookshelf	1091
Occasional Notes	1096
Music in the Foreign Press. By M.-D. Calvocoressi	1099
New Music	1100
The Norwich Festival. By Herbert Thompson	1112
Church and Organ Music	1113
Royal College of Organists	1113
Letters to the Editor	1115
Sharps and Flats	1118
Amateurs' Exchange	1118
Royal Academy of Music	1119
Royal College of Music	1119
Royal College of Organists—Free Lectures on Choir Training	1119
The Coming Season	1120
The Renaissance of Dutch Music	1120
Gramophone Notes. By 'Discus'	1121
'The Duenna' ... ..	1122
London Concerts	1122
Competition Festival Record	1125
Music in the Provinces	1126
Music in Ireland	1129
Musical Notes from Abroad	1130
Peter Cornelius. By Edith A. H. Crawshaw	1133
Obituary	1134
Answers to Correspondents	1134
Miscellaneous	1135

MUSIC.

'That very wise Man.' Four-Part Song. Arranged for Mixed Voices. By C. HUBERT H. PARRY ... 1105

FIVE Christmas Carols are given as EXTRA SUPPLEMENTS with this Number:

1. 'A Cradle Song.' By A. Herbert Brewer.
2. 'Gather the Holly-bough.' By Harold E. Watts.
3. 'The three Wise Men.' By Alfred Hollins.
4. 'The Holly and the Ivy.' By Geoffrey Shaw.
5. 'The Christ Child.' By George Rathbone.

DURING THE LAST MONTH.

Published by NOVELLO &amp; CO., LIMITED.

ALLEN, A. H.—Communion Service in F.	1s. 6d.
HARRISS, A.—Three Chants.	2d.
JARMAN, C. A.—"De Profundis" (Psalm 130). Un-accompanied Anthem.	6d.
— "Super Flumina" (Psalm 137). Anthem.	6d.
— Two Songs. 1. "Serenata"; 2. "Ave Maria."	2s.
NOVELLO'S CHRISTMAS CAROLS:
No. 419. "A Cradle Song." A. H. BREWER.	1½d.
No. 420. "Gather the Holly-bough."
H. E. WATTS.	1½d.
No. 421. "The three Wise Men."
ALFRED HOLLINS.	1½d.
No. 422. "The Holly and the Ivy." Traditional Gloucestershire Carol. Arranged by GEOFFREY SHAW.	1½d.
No. 423. "There is no rose."
GERRARD WILLIAMS.	1½d.
No. 424. "The Christ-Child."
GEORGE RATHBONE.	2d.
PARRY, C. H. H.—"That very wise Man." Four-part Song. Arranged for Mixed Voices. (No. 982. The Musical Times .)	2d.
— "The Pied Piper of Hamelin." Full Score.	£2 2s.

DURING THE LAST MONTH—continued.

PEARSALL, R. L.—"In dulci jubilo." Arranged for T.T.B.B. by John E. West. (No. 595, "The Orpheus"). 4d.

SCHOOL MUSIC REVIEW, No. 390, contains the following music in both notations. — Two Carols with Descants: "Good King Wenceslas," and "The First Nowell." 2d.

SCHOOL SONGS. Published in two forms. A. Voice Parts in Staff and Tonic Sol-fa Notations, with Piano-forte Accompaniment (8vo). B. Voice Parts only, in Tonic Sol-fa Notation. A. B.

No. 945. "Alexander." Arranged as a Two-part Song. A. H. BREWER — 2d.

No. 946. "The meeting of the waters." Irish Air. Arranged for two voices — 1½d.

No. 947. "Night, lovely night." Arranged for S.S.A. FRANCESCO BERGER — 2d.

No. 948. "Let's imitate her notes above." Recit. and Two-part Song from "Alexander's Feast." HANDEL — 2d.

No. 980. "Awake, my soul." Morning Anthem for Boys' Voices. CHARLES MACPHERSON — 2d.

No. 1101. "Prepare thyself, Zion." Air from the "Christmas" Oratorio. J. S. BACH — 2d.

No. 1382. "The Secret Gift." Unison Song. ALEC ROWLEY 1½d. —

No. 1383. "Wondering." Unison Song. ALEC ROWLEY 1½d. —

SHAW, GEOFFREY.—"How far is it to Bethlehem?" Arranged for S.S.A. (No. 499, Novello's Trios, &c., for Female Voices.) 3d.

TONIC SOL-FA SERIES:

No. 2465. "Daughters of Zion." Chorus from "Christus." MENDELSSOHN 2d.

No. 2466. "Now once again." Carol-Anthem for Christmas. PERCY E. FLETCHER 3d.

No. 2468. "Song of the wind." Four-part Song with Solo. GERTRUDE HINE 3d.

PUBLISHED FOR

THE H. W. GRAY CO., NEW YORK.

CANDLYN, T. F. H.—"A Christmas Pæan." Anthem for Chorus and Semi-Chorus. 15 cents (6d.).

— "The Great God Pan." Cantata for Women's Voices. 50 cents (2s.).

COOMBS, C. W.—"Light Eternal." Cantata for Tenor and Contralto Soli, Chorus, and Organ. $1.00 (4s.).

DICKINSON, C.—"Great and glorious is the Name of the Lord of Hosts." Festival Anthem. 25 cents (1s.).

KOUNTZ, R.—"Maud Muller." Cantata for Soli and Chorus. $1.00 (4s.).

LANSING, A. W.—"O Saviour of the World." Anthem. 10 cents (3d.).

VOYNICH, E. L.—"Lully, Lullay." Carol for Treble and Alto Voices. 12 cents (4d.).

WEBBE, W. Y.—"Benedictus es, Domine." Anthem. 15 cents (6d.).

— "They lie at rest." Short Anthem. 10 cents (3d.).

A.R.C.O. EXAMINATION AIDS.

A series of practical papers outlining courses of study and giving helpful hints and expert advice on the following Tests:

SOLO-PLAYING. ACCOMPANIMENT.
TRANSPPOSITION. (With list of 75 Solos.)
SCORE READING. ESSAY.

3s. each. 10s. 6d. the set.
These papers will help to secure for you the few extra marks often necessary to turn failure into success.

"A.R.C.O. EXAMN. AIDS," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

FOR SALE.—POWERFUL HARMONIUM, oak frame. 13 Stops, 8 Sets Reeds, splendid condition. £10 or nearest. Scowcroft, 25, Crosby Road, Bolton, Lanes.

CAROLS BY JOSEPH C. BRIDGE.

M.A., D. Mus. Oxon. et Dunelm.; F.S.A.; Organist of Chester Cathedral; Professor of Music in the University of Durham.

1. ON CHRISTMAS NIGHT ... .. 3d.
2. AWAY WITH GRIEF ... .. 3d.
3. THE MERRY CHRISTMAS MORN ... .. 3d.
4. HOLY NIGHT ... .. 2d.
5. AWAKE THE VOICE (s.s.a. only) ... .. 4d.
6. CHRISTMAS IN THE FIELDS (Béarnais Melody) ... 2d.
7. WHEN CHRIST WAS BORN (Chester Mystery Play)... 3d.
8. REJOICE WITH HEART AND VOICE (Old French Melody) ... .. 2d.
9. THE SHEPHERDS' CAROL (Coventry Mystery Play)... 2d.
10. LULLABY (Coventry Mystery Play) ... .. 2d.
11. ACROSS THE SNOW ... .. 2d.
12. THE SHEPHERDS HAD AN ANGEL (s.s. only) ... 2d.
13. ON BETHLEHEM'S HILL ... .. 3d.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

TO PIANISTS, ORGANISTS, VIOLINISTS, ETC.

"SIMPLEXA" Pocket Finger Trainer
(Registered).

A MOST EFFICIENT APPLIANCE FOR INCREASING STRETCH, INDEPENDENCE, FLEXIBILITY, AND STRENGTH OF FINGERS.
Improved Model, 2s. 6d. post free.

"SIMPLEXA," 7, YEW VILLAS, THAMES ST., WEYBRIDGE, SURREY.

FRANK POULTON (L.R.A.M.),

BASSO-CANTANTE,

of Queen's Hall, Kingsway Hall, &c.

AVAILABLE FOR CONCERTS, OR ORATORIO.
LONDON OR PROVINCES.

For vacant dates, apply,

33, Hounslow Avenue, Hounslow, Middx.

'Phone: Hounslow 1536.

JOHN HENDERSON (BARITONE).

Masonic Banquets (and Lodges), Concerts, Oratorio, &c.
For Press Notices, &c., address,
"Hazeldene," Sudbury Avenue, Wembley.

ESSAY.—A.R.C.O. (Jan., 1925) on "ENGLISH FOLK-SONG AND DANCE." Excellent Series of Six Model Essays. Valuable hints on writing. Success assured. Send 4s. 6d. to "Essays," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour St., W.1.

L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., AURAL TESTS. Special important paper. Success assured. This paper gives details how to work. Send 4s. 6d. to "Aural Tests," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

URGENT.—VOLUNTEERS WANTED, for Choir: treble (Women), bass and tenor (Men). Two Services, one practice. Rector, 27, John Street, Bedford Row, W.C.1.

ALTO (and Deputy Organist preferred), TENOR, and BASS required for St. Augustine's, Highgate. From £10 to £20. Write, P. J. Denchfield, The Neuk, Kingsbury Garden Village, N.W.10.

ASSIST.-ORGANIST (Voluntary) REQUIRED, Brixton, Friday practices, Services. Two-manual 21 Stops. Please write, "Baptist," 19, Ruskin Walk, Herne Hill, S.E.24.

BASS REQUIRED.—ST. JOHN'S, Notting Hill. Salary, £20. Dorglas Easton, 91, Holland Road, W.14.

ST. LUKE'S CHURCH, West Norwood, S.E.27. TEMPORARY ORGANIST WANTED till the 30th June, 1925. Salary at the rate of £100 per annum. Apply, Vicar, 10, Barston Road, West Norwood, S.E.27.

LADY would like to Purchase Good-Class Teaching Connection—Singing or Pianoforte. "L.R.A.M.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

LADY (Soprano) DESIRES POST in Concert Part. Chiefly in Midlands. Write, "C. R. O.," c/o G.P.O., Upton-on-Severn, Worcestershire.

LYRICS, SONGS, and PIANOFORTE COMPOSITIONS WANTED. Lyrics set to Music if desired. Address MSS. to "C. M. A.," 8, Lloyd Square, London, W.C.1.

PIANOS PEDALS and SEAT. £8. "Spain," 17, Marler Road, S.E.23.

JOHN SEBASTIAN BACH

48 PRELUDES AND FUGUES

(THE WELL-TEMPERED CLAVICHORD)

A NEW EDITION, EDITED BY

HAROLD BROOKE.

IN TWO PARTS.

Price Four Shillings each.

Or, Complete, Cloth, Price Twelve Shillings and Sixpence.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

CANTATAS FOR CHRISTMAS.

THE HOLY CHILD

FOR SOPRANO, TENOR, AND BASS SOLI,
CHORUS, AND ORGAN

THE MUSIC BY

T. ADAMS.

Price One Shilling and Sixpence ;

Tonic Sol-fa, Eightpence.

Words only, 9s. 6d. per 100.

THE NATIVITY

FOR SOPRANO, TENOR, AND BASS SOLI AND CHORUS

With Hymns to be sung by the Congregation

(THE WORDS AND HYMNS SELECTED)

THE MUSIC BY

T. ADAMS.

Price One Shilling and Sixpence ;

Tonic Sol-fa, One Shilling.

Words only, 9s. 6d. per 100.

†CHRISTMAS ORATORIO

THE MUSIC BY

J. S. BACH.

Divided into six sections, intended originally for separate performance on the three days of Christmas, New Year's Day, New Year's Sunday,
and the Festival of the Epiphany.

Price, Paper Cover, Three Shillings.

Boards, 4s. ; Cloth, 6s.

Vocal Parts, One Shilling and Sixpence each.

Parts 1 and 2, 1s. 6d. ; Parts 3 and 4, 1s. 6d. ;

Parts 5 and 6, 1s. 6d.

Tonic Sol-fa (Parts 1 and 2), 8d.

Book of Words, complete (per 100), 12s. 6d.

Books of Words, Parts 1 and 2 (per 100), 6s. 6d.

†CHRISTIANS, GRAVE YE THIS GLAD DAY

(CHRISTEN ÄTZET DIESEN TAG !)

A Christmas-Day Cantata (S.A.T.B. Soli)

Edited by J. E. WEST. English Words by C. AVELING.

THE MUSIC BY

J. S. BACH.

Price One Shilling and Sixpence.

†BEFORE THE PALING OF THE STARS

A CHRISTMAS HYMN

(FOR VOICES AND ORCHESTRA)

THE WORDS BY

C. ROSSETTI.

THE MUSIC BY

B. J. DALE.

Price One Shilling and Sixpence ;

Tonic Sol-fa, One Shilling.

+ Full Score and Orchestral Parts may be had.

THE COMING OF THE KING

CANTATA FOR FEMALE VOICES

THE WORDS BY

H. M. BURNSIDE.

THE MUSIC BY

M. B. FOSTER

Price Two Shillings and Sixpence ;

Tonic Sol-fa, One Shilling.

Words only, 6s. 6d. per 100.

†CHRISTMAS EVE

FOR CONTRALTO SOLO, CHORUS, AND ORCHESTRA

THE MUSIC BY

N. W. GADE.

Price, Paper Cover, One Shilling and Sixpence ;

Boards, Two Shillings and Sixpence ;

Tonic Sol-fa, Sixpence.

CHRISTMAS CANTATA

FOR SOLI AND CHORUS

THE WORDS BY

R. D. BETJEMANN.

THE MUSIC BY

J. HARRISON.

Price One Shilling and Sixpence.

Words only, 6s. 6d. per 100.

†FIRST CHRISTMAS MORN

THE WORDS BY

S. J. STONE.

THE MUSIC BY

H. LESLIE.

Price, Vocal Score, Four Shillings.

Vocal Parts, Eightpence each.

Words only, 9s. 6d. per 100.

BETHLEHEM

FOR FOUR SOLO VOICES AND CHORUS

Interspersed with Hymns to be sung by the Congregation

THE WORDS WRITTEN AND ARRANGED BY

E. C. NUNN.

THE MUSIC BY

J. H. MAUNDER.

Price Three Shillings ;

Tonic Sol-fa, One Shilling and Sixpence.

Words only, 9s. 6d. per 100.

†THE STORY OF BETHLEHEM

FOR SOPRANO, TENOR, AND BASS SOLI, CHORUS,
AND ORGAN.

THE WORDS BY

S. WENSLEY.

THE MUSIC BY

J. E. WEST.

Price Two Shillings and Sixpence ;

Tonic Sol-fa, One Shilling.

Words only, 9s. 6d. per 100.

ANTHEMS, &c., FOR CHRISTMAS.

JUST PUBLISHED.

PERCY E. FLETCHER.

NOW ONCE AGAIN

Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Threepence.

RECENTLY PUBLISHED.

G. RATHBONE.

AND WE BEHELD HIS GLORY

Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Threepence.

C. V. STANFORD.

WHILE SHEPHERDS WATCHED

Price Fourpence.

SELECTED LIST.

A. ADAM.

O HOLY NIGHT

ARRANGED AS ANTHEM FOR SOPRANO (OR TENOR)
SOLO AND CHORUS.

Price Threepence; Tonic Sol-fa, Three-Halfpence.

T. ADAMS.

ARISE, SHINE, O JERUSALEM

Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

T. ADAMS.

THOU ART MY SON

Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

W. G. ALCOCK.

BREAK FORTH INTO JOY

Price Fourpence.

E. C. BAIRSTOW.

OF THE FATHER'S LOVE BEGOTTEN

Price Fourpence.

C. BAYLEY.

GLORY TO GOD IN THE HIGHEST

Price Twopence; Tonic Sol-fa, Three-Halfpence.

J. F. BRIDGE.

IN THAT DAY

Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

E. BUNNETT.

ARISE, SHINE, FOR THY LIGHT
IS COME

Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

E. BUNNETT.

BEHOLD, I BRING GOOD TIDINGS

Price Threepence.

E. BUNNETT.

IN THE BEGINNING WAS THE
WORD

Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

H. A. CHAMBERS.

ARISE, SHINE, FOR THY LIGHT
IS COME

Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Threepence.

P. E. FLETCHER.

RING OUT, WILD BELLS
FESTIVAL CAROL

Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Fourpence.

Ditto, T.T.B.B., Fourpence.

M. B. FOSTER.

CHRIST'S INCARNATION

Price Twopence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

CH. GOUNOD.

NAZARETH

ARRANGED FOR BARITONE SOLO AND CHORUS.

Price Threepence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

E. V. HALL.

WHILE SHEPHERDS WATCHED

Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

A. HOLLINS.

SING, O HEAVENS

Price Twopence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

C. H. LLOYD.

REJOICE GREATLY, O DAUGHTER
OF ZION

Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

A. W. MARCHANT.

O COME, REDEEMER OF MANKIND

Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

J. H. MAUNDER.

SING, O HEAVENS

Price Twopence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

B. L. SELBY.

IN THE BEGINNING WAS THE WORD

Price Twopence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

G. SHAW.

HOW FAR IS IT TO BETHLEHEM

Price Threepence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

Ditto, Unison Setting, Twopence.

B. STEANE.

LET US NOW GO EVEN UNTO
BETHLEHEM

Price Twopence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

B. STEANE.

SING, O HEAVENS

Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

A. S. SULLIVAN.

SING, O HEAVENS

Price Threepence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

J. E. WEST.

A SONG OF JOY

Price Fourpence Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

A. W. WILSON.

WITH ALL THY HOSTS

Price Twopence.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

MUSIC FOR CHRISTMAS.

SECULAR CANTATAS.

† YULE-TIDE

THE MUSIC BY

T. ANDERTON.

Price Two Shillings and Sixpence.
Paper boards, 3s. 6d.; cloth, gilt, 4s. 6d.

CHRISTMAS SCENES

FOR FEMALE VOICES

THE MUSIC BY

F. H. COWEN.

Price Three Shillings; Tonic Sol-fa, One Shilling.
Words only, 3d. each.

AROUND THE WINTER FIRE

FOR FEMALE VOICES

THE MUSIC BY

A. R. GAUL.

Price One Shilling and Sixpence;
Tonic Sol-fa, One Shilling.
Words only, 12s. 6d. per 100.

† SANTA CLAUS AND HIS COMRADES

FOR CHILDREN (WITH ACTION)

THE MUSIC BY

E. O. GILBERT.

Price, Vocal Score (in both Notations), Three Shillings;
Tonic Sol-fa, One Shilling.
Words only, 3d.

A CHRISTMAS DREAM

FOR CHILDREN (WITH ACTION)

THE MUSIC BY

A. MOFFAT.

Price, Vocal Score (in both Notations),
One Shilling and Sixpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Sixpence.
Words only, 3d.

CHRISTMAS HOLIDAYS

SHORT MUSICAL SKETCH

(Suitable for the breaking-up of Schools)

THE MUSIC BY

H. W. SCHARTAU.

Price, Vocal Score (in both Notations), Eightpence.

† Full Score and Orchestral Parts may be had.

ORGAN MUSIC.

ALBUMS FOR THE ORGAN, No. 8.

CONTENTS.

1. CHORALE PRELUDE, "In dulci Jubilo" ... J. S. Bach
2. PASTORAL SYMPHONY ("Christmas Oratorio") J. S. Bach
3. QUEM VIDISTIS, PASTORES ... W. T. Best
4. VENITE IN BETHLEHEM ... W. T. Best
5. DECEMBER—Christmas Morn ... F. H. Cowen
6. FANTASIA ON OLD CHRISTMAS CAROLS W. Faulkes
7. FOR UNTO US A CHILD IS BORN ("Messiah") Handel
8. PASTORALE ... T. Kullak
9. CHORUS OF SHEPHERDS ... J. Lemmens
10. CHRISTMAS PASTORALE ... G. Merkel
11. A CHRISTMAS PASTORAL ... B. L. Selby
12. FANTASY ON TWO CHRISTMAS CAROLS ... J. E. West

Price 5s. 6d.; Cloth, 7s. 6d.

THE VILLAGE ORGANIST.

Book 48.

CONTENTS.

1. FANTASY on Old Christmas Carols... H. Blair
2. PASTORAL SYMPHONY ("The Messiah") Handel
3. "IN DULCI JUBILO"—Ancient Carol ... Pearsall
4. PASTORALE (8th Concerto) ... Corelli
5. CHRISTMAS (Op. 205, No. 1) ... M. Oesten
6. CHORAL ("Christmas Oratorio") ... J. S. Bach

PRICE ONE SHILLING AND SIXPENCE.

SEPARATE PIECES.

- |  |       |
|--|-------|
| CARAVAN OF THE MAGI, THE (Approach and Departure).March from the Cantata "Bethlehem" (J. H. Maunder)                 | s. d. |
| Arranged by E. C. Nunn   | 2 3   |
| CHORAL IMPROVISATION on "In dulci Jubilo"  |       |
| S. Karg-Elert  | 3 0   |
| CHORAL PRELUDES, TWO: 1. In dulci Jubilo; 2. PuerNatus est in Bethlehem  | 1 6   |
| D. Buxtehude   | 1 6   |
| CHRISTMAS BELLS  |       |
| G. J. Elvey  | 1 0   |
| CHRISTMAS CAROL (In dulci Jubilo). (Young Organist,No. 5)  | 1 6   |
| Pearsall   | 1 6   |
| CHRISTMAS PASTORALE, A, on the Introit "HodieChristus Natus est" and the Hymns "Corde Natus" and"Adeste Fideles" | 2 3   |
| B. L. Selby  | 2 3   |
| CHRISTMAS PASTORALE (Op. 56)   | 1 6   |
| G. Merkel  | 1 6   |
| CHRISTMAS SONATA, No. 4, in D (Op. 32)   | 5 0   |
| O. Dienel  | 5 0   |
| FANTASIA on "In dulci Jubilo"  | 3 6   |
| J. Matthews  | 3 6   |
| FANTASIA on Old English Carols   | 2 3   |
| W. Faulkes   | 2 3   |
| FANTASY (on two well-known Christmas Carols) J. E. West  | 3 0   |
| OFFERTOIRE for Christmas Day (Church Organist,Book 8)  | 3 6   |
| C. Collin  | 3 6   |
| OFFERTOIRE (Modern Organist, No. 9)  | 3 6   |
| Wély   | 3 6   |
| OFFERTORIUM (Four Pieces, No. 2)   | 2 3   |
| J. Lemmens   | 2 3   |
| PHANTASIE on "Adeste Fideles" (Violin, Bells, and Organ)   |       |
| T. L. Southgate  | 2 3   |
| PIECES, SIX (Book 5 of Collection of Pieces) W. T. Best  | 3 0   |
| "Sit laus plena, sit sonora." Allegro con brio.  |       |
| "Quem vidistis, Pastores?" Andante con moto.   |       |
| "Psallite, omnes Angeli." Allegro vivace.  |       |
| "Venite in Bethlehem." Andantino.  |       |
| Pastorale, Allegretto.   |       |
| "O magnum Mysterium, Andante."   |       |
| POSTLUDE ("Good King Wenceslas")   | 2 3   |
| G. M. Garrett  | 2 3   |
| POSTLUDIUM FESTIVUM  | 1 6   |
| C. W. Pearce   | 1 6   |
| RHAPSODIE on an Ancient Christmas Carol  | 3 0   |
| W. Faulkes   | 3 0   |
| VOLUNTARY for Christmas-tide   | 1 6   |
| F. Ouseley   | 1 6   |

"Such settings as these cannot do otherwise than tend to popularise the Church Service."—Musical Standard, June 6th, 1891.
 "Good, effective, easy, and dignified."—Musical Times, April 1, 1891.
 "Admirably adapted to meet the requirements of the majority of choirs and congregations." "Deserve extensive recognition and use."—Musical News, September 4 and 25, 1891.
 Also recommended by the Guardian, Church Times, &c., &c.

POPULAR CHURCH MUSIC

BY

J. H. MAUNDER

CHRISTMAS ANTHEMS.

	Staff Notation.	Tonic Sol-fa.
Anthem—Christians, Awake ... ..	4d.	3d.
Carol—Once in Bethlehem ... ..	3d.	2d.
Two Christmas Carols ... ..	4d.	3d.

SERVICES.

SERVICE IN G ... ..	2s.	1s. 4d.
Or, separately:—

Te Deum ... ..	4d.	3d.
Benedicite, omnia Opera ... ..	3d.	3d.
Benedictus ... ..	3d.	3d.
Jubilate ... ..	4d.	3d.
Office for the Holy Communion ... ..	10d.	8d.
Pater Noster from the above ... ..	3d.	3d.
Amen ditto ... ..	10d.	10d.
Magnificat and Nunc dimittis ... ..	4d.	3d.

SERVICE IN CHANT FORM (No. 1) ... ..	1s. 4d.	10d.
Or, separately:—

Te Deum, &c., with Kyrie ... ..	4d.	3d.
Office for the Holy Communion ... ..	8d.	6d.
Magnificat and Nunc dimittis ... ..	4d.	3d.

Te Deum in B flat ... ..	4d.	3d.
--------------------------	-----	-----

Magnificat and Nunc dimittis in C (partly Unison) ... ..	4d.	2d.
--	-----	-----

Magnificat and Nunc dimittis in D ... ..	4d.	3d.
--	-----	-----

ORGAN.

Voix Seraphique (for Recitals) ... ..	2s. 6d.	—
---------------------------------------	---------	---

CHURCH CANTATA.

Penitence, Pardon, and Peace (for general use) ... ..	2s.	1s. 4d.
---	-----	---------

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

CHRISTMAS CAROLS

BY

EDWIN A. CRUSHA, F.R.C.O., F.T.C.L.

BELLS ACROSS THE SNOW ... ..	} 2d.
O KING OF GLORY ... ..
THE RISING OF THE STAR ... ..	} 2d.
SONG OF PEACE ... ..

W. PAXTON & CO., 22, High Street, W.C. 2 ;
 or Composer, 19, Church Street, Edmonton.

THREE ORIGINAL CAROLS.

WORDS AND MUSIC BY

KATE LLOYD.

1. IN BETHLEHEM'S FAIRE CITIE.
2. THE WHOLE WIDE WORLD IN CONCERT SINGS.
3. GENTLE SHEPHERD.

STAINER &amp; BELL, LTD., 58, Berners Street, W.1.

FAMOUS HYMN TUNES

With Descants, Varied Accompaniments, &amp;c.

THREE GREAT CHRISTMAS HYMNS

1. "CORDE NATUS" (Divinum Mysterium).
Suitable also for Eucharistic use and for Festivals of B.V.M.
2. "ADESTE FIDELES." The complete eight verses.
3. "WHILE SHEPHERDS WATCHED."

Also SIX FAVOURITE EVENING HYMNS similarly treated.

Also "HANOVER," "OLD 104TH," and "YORK" ("The Stilt").

WILLIAM CLOWES &amp; SONS, LTD., 94, Jermyn Street, S.W.1.

T. MEE PATTISON'S POPULAR CANTATA

THE ANCIENT MARINER

33rd 1,000.

Vocal Score, 2s. 6d. Choruses only, 1s. 3d.

Band Parts may be hired.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

PETER WARLOCK

Prince of English Song-Writers.

TYRLEY TYRLOW

BALULALOW

CONSIDER

SWEET AND TWENTY

SLEEP

REST, SWEET NYMPHS

AUTUMN TWILIGHT

TWELVE OXEN

Two Shillings each.

THE SECOND BOOK OF PETERISMS

Three Shillings.

Oxford University Press.

NEW PUBLICATIONS

By T. TERTIUS NOBLE.

816. NIGHT. S.A.T.B.
 817. TO MY LOVE. T.T.B.B.
 818. WHEN I AM DEAD, MY DEAREST. S.A.T.B.
 819. SAVE, LORD, OR WE PERISH. S.A.T.B.
 820. SAVE, LORD, OR WE PERISH. T.T.B.B.
 821. BUT NOW, THUS SAITH THE LORD. S.A.T.B.

Price Fourpence each.

822. MAGNIFICAT AND NUNC DIMITTIS IN B FLAT.
 Price Sixpence.

BANKS &amp; SON, MUSIC PUBLISHERS, YORK.

JUST PUBLISHED.

SCHOOL MARCHES

FOR PIANOFORTE SOLO

BOOK III.

Price One Shilling and Sixpence.

CONTENTS.

Arrival of the Visitors ... ..	... H. Hofmann
Bright and Buxom Lasses, from "Martha" ... ..	... Flotow
Instrumental Band, The ... ..	Percy E. Fletcher
Little March, A .. ..	J. D. Davis
March from "Egmont" ... ..	Beethoven
March from "St. Polycarp" ... ..	F. A. G. Onseley
March ... ..	Th. Kullak
March from "Tannhäuser" ... ..	Wagner
Marching off to Bed ... ..	Myles B. Foster
March of Priests, from "The Magic Flute" ... ..	Mozart
Soldiers' Chorus, from "Il Trovatore" ... ..	Verdi
Toy Soldiers' March ... ..	Tschaikowsky

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

CAROLS

FORTY-ONE CAROLS AND HYMNS, EDITED AND ARRANGED FOR MIXED VOICES,

By HENRY TOLHURST.

CONTENTS.

BOOK I.—No. 85239.

The First Nowell; Let heaven and earth: Christians, awake; While Shepherds watched; O come, all ye faithful; It came upon the midnight clear; Hark! the Herald Angels sing; Brightest and Best; God rest you merry, gentlemen; The Babe in Bethlehem's manger laid; Good King Wenceslas; The moon shines bright; Hail! the ever-blessed Morn; I saw three ships come sailing in.

BOOK III.—No. 85241.

A Carol of Christmas Eve; Hark! how all the welkin rings; Hark! the music of the Cherubs; Dives and Lazarus; The Boar's head carol; O, lovely voices of the sky; Bethlehem; Hail! smiling morn.

BOOK II.—No. 85240.

A Virgin unspotted; Angels from the realms of glory; As Joseph was a-walking; Let Christians all; The holly and the ivy; Silent Night; God's Dear Son; The Cherry tree Carol; The Seven joys of Mary; Immortal Babe; Here we come a-wassailing; A Child this day is born; Lullay, my child, and weep no more; Hark! what mean those Holy Voices?

BOOK IV.—No. 85242.

'Tis the Birthday of our Saviour (C. Vincent); There came a Little Child (E. D. Palmer); Christmas Song (N. W. Gade); Holy was that night so fair (H. Hollins); Gloria in Excelsis (W. Cooke).

EACH BOOK, O.N. or S.F., PRICE 3d.

WORDS ONLY, 1d.

COMPLETE EDITION, O.N. or S.F., PRICE 1s. WORDS ONLY, 3d. 9s. per 100.

ISSUED SEPARATELY.

			O.N.	S.F.				O.N.	S.F.
Bethlehem ... ..	Gounod	85256	2d.	1d.	Earth has grown old, The	E. C. Bairstow	85176	3d.	—
Carol for Christmas ( Unison )	J. Stuart Archer	85267	2d.	—	Gloria in Excelsis ... ..	W. Cooke	85218	3d.	1d.
Christmas Call ("Musical Mirror" Prize Carol)	G. N. Meachen	85266	1d.	—	Hallelujah Chorus ( Messiah )	... Handel	85249	3d.	—
Christmas Carol ... ..	Alfred Hollins	85148	2d.	1d.	Lullay, my Child ( Traditional )	A. M. Fox	85212	2d.	—
Christmas Song ... ..	N. W. Gade	85260	2d.	1d.	There came a Little Child ...	E. D. Palmer	85209	3d.	1d.
					'Tis the Birthday of our Saviour	Dr. Vincent	85040	3d.	2d.

OF ALL MUSIC DEALERS.

Issued by W. PAXTON & CO., LTD., 22, HIGH ST., NEW OXFORD ST., LONDON, W.C.1.

Sample Copies will be sent, post free, at half-price, to bona-fide Choirmasters or Conductors sending card.

Send for Complete Choral and Vocal Catalogue, (C. 201), post free.

PART-SONGS OF POPULAR APPEAL

S.A.T.B.

In these works the publishers have hit upon the unique idea of arranging famous compositions as part-songs for mixed voices. The adaptations of the familiar melodies for part-song purposes are remarkably successful, and will undoubtedly find favour with choristers on the look out for popular material.

			O.N.	S.F.				O.N.	S.F.
AT EVENTIDE ... ..	80029	4d.	2d.	DREAMING ... ..	80035	3d.	2d.
Adapted from Raff's "Cavatina."				Adapted from Schumann's "Traumerei."
BIRTH OF SPRING ... ..	80027	3d.	2d.	SOLDIERS' CHORUS ... ..	80038	3d.	2d.
Adapted from Engelmann's "Mélodie d'Amour."				For Male Voices. From Gounod's "Faust."
DREAM OF HOME ... ..	80030	4d.	2d.	SOLEMN NIGHT ... ..	80039	3d.	2d.
Waltz Song, adapted from Arditi's "Il Bacio."				Adapted from Beethoven's "Moonlight Sonata."
LONDONDERRY AIR ... ..	80028	3d.	2d.	SONG OF THE VOLGA BOATMEN	80033	3d.	2d.
Adapted from the Traditional Irish Melody.				Adapted from the Traditional Russian Folk-Song.
MARCHING SONG ... ..	80034	4d.	2d.	WEEP NO MORE ... ..	80023	4d.	2d.
Adapted from "Marche aux Flambeaux," by Scotson Clark.				Adapted from Rachmaninoff's "Prelude."
MAY-DAY SONG ... ..	80031	4d.	2d.	WAKE, MORN OF SPLENDOUR	80040	3d.	2d.
Adapted from Gavotte, "Mignon," by Ambroise Thomas.				Adapted from Batiste's "Adante in G."
WELCOME TO MAY ... ..	80032	O.N., 4d.	S.F., 2d.
Adapted from Mendelssohn's "The Bees' Wedding."

OF ALL MUSIC DEALERS.

Issued by W. PAXTON & CO., LTD., 22, HIGH ST., NEW OXFORD ST., LONDON, W.C.1.

Send for complete Vocal and Choral Catalogue, C 201, post free.

THE BARLESS PSALTER

POINTED FOR USE WITH ANGLICAN CHANTS

AN EASY BOOK FOR CHOIR AND CONGREGATION

CONTAINING

THE PSALMS OF DAVID,
THE CANTICLES AND PROPER PSALMS,
THE ATHANASIAN CREED,
Together with Short Notes on the Text and a full Explanatory Preface

EDITED BY

WALTER MARSHALL, M.A.

AND

SEYMOUR PILE, M.A., F.R.C.O.

Imperial 32mo, Price 1s. 6d. net.

Demy 8vo, Large Type, Price 4s. net.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

THE TIMES.

Congregational singing of the Psalms is difficult to accomplish; the rhythm is neither that of bars nor of musical phrase, but of the literary accent of the verse. The Barless Psalter has been framed with this in view, rejecting as false the idea that an Anglican chant sets the Psalms partly to free recitation and partly to a strict musical measure. Practically it revises Anglican chanting upon the basis of plainsong chanting, holding that the value of the notes must be considered as relative to the value of the syllables. Very few markings, therefore, are required to show the relation between the words and the music, and anyone may quickly master its principles without technical knowledge. From that point of view it should help congregations to join intelligently in Psalms and Canticles.

THE MORNING POST.

In the matter of Church Music there is a notable issue in the form of a "Barless Psalter." The system is simple and the marking clear.

THE DAILY TELEGRAPH.

The Barless Psalter is likely to prove a boon to those interested in congregational singing of the Psalms in church, and anxious to improve it. The congregational singing in our Anglican churches is not a feature to be proud of, and a careful study of this capital little book may lead to a better state of affairs. The detailed instructions are comprehensive and simple.

THE GUARDIAN.

The Anglican Church has had to pay heavily during some two centuries or more for the hard and mechanical treatment of Psalms and Canticles brought about by the introduction of the barred music of Anglican Chants . . . in place of the older and more flexible rhythm of unbarred plainsong. The result was . . . to destroy congregational singing . . . and to murder the magnificent prose rhythms of the Psalter. . . . It has been demonstrated that the Anglican Chant can be adequately handled by subordinating the musical accent strictly to the words, and by the selection of appropriate chants. . . . Mr. Marshall . . . makes a more practical suggestion in eliminating the bars from the Anglican Chant, and setting free the rhythm to keep pace with the words. This has certainly much to be said for it,—it is indeed a step forward, if not the last word. He admits stresses on words to mark meaning, but not to harden the time. His book, which has been prepared with the assistance of his capable organist, Mr. Seymour Pile, may be commended to all who are interested in this important feature of our worship.

THE CHURCH TIMES.

A little book has just been published which demands, and deserves, more than passing notice. Published in much the same format as The Cathedral Psalter, it proclaims itself to be The Barless Psalter, pointed for use with Anglican Chants: an Easy Book for Choir and Congregation. Note the last word. . . . The Barless Psalter (in spite of, or because of, its lack of bars) is simplicity itself, and could be rendered with ease by any average village choir and congregation.

If I were in the position of a choir-master and had a free hand, I should scrap my existing stock of Psalms—by this time probably fairly worn-out and meet for destruction—and I should, without doubt, experiment upon this extremely sensible book.

THE ORGANIST AND CHOIRMASTER.

This is quite the best Psalter for Anglican Chants we ever remember to have seen. . . . With the suppression of accents during the chant inflexion, it has become possible to avoid to a very large extent the usual objectionable "clatter" on such final words as "righteousness," "testimonies," &c. This fact alone ought to commend the book to the notice of choir-masters who desire to secure smoothness and fluency in their Psalmody. . . . The Barless Psalter seems to us to be the ne plus ultra of the Anglican chanting system.

MUSICAL OPINION.

In the work now under notice, we see nothing of editorial peculiarities; the whole book is the exposition of a principle,—a sound, reasonable, and intelligible principle such as has been enunciated time after time in theory and almost always missed in practice. The editors certainly are justified when they say in conclusion that they have no apology to offer for this book. It certainly needs none, nor will its use need any justification. It really does seem to succeed where so many other books have failed.

MUSICAL NEWS.

The Barless Psalter is a thoughtful contribution towards the solution of the problem of chanting. It is simple in principle, the pointing is dignified, and as the editors have favoured trochaic endings, the "chattering finals" have been eliminated.

THE CHOIR.

If a suitable system can be devised, there is no reason why the chanting of a psalm should not be almost as easy to the ordinary congregation as the singing of a metrical hymn; and the nearest approach to the required simplicity will, we think, be found in the Barless Psalter. . . . The Barless Psalter clearly foreshadows a better state of things, and with its help the day should not be far distant when the chanting of the psalms is as easy an exercise as the singing of a hymn.

THE BARLESS PSALTER CHANTS

Price, Paper, 1s. 6d. net; Cloth, 2s. 6d. net.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

SOLOS FROM THE SACRED CANTATAS

OF

JOHN SEBASTIAN BACH.

In Twelve Books—each Book, One Shilling and Sixpence.

FIRST SET.

SOPRANO.

Air WITHIN MY HEART OF HEARTS ("A Stronghold Sure").
 Air OUR JESUS HATH FOR AYE ("God goeth up").
 Air MY HEART EVER TRUSTING ("God so loved the world").
 Air O GRANT US, MIGHTY LORD ("Jesus, now will we praise Thee").
 Air SIGHING, WEEPING ("My spirit was in heaviness").

TENOR.

Air LORD, TO US THYSELF BE SHOWING ("Bide with us").
 Recit. WHY HAST THOU THEN ("My Spirit was in heaviness").
 Air FAST MY BITTER TEARS " " "
 Air REJOICE, O MY SPIRIT " " "
 Recit. THE MIGHTY GUARDIAN ("Thou Guide of Israel").
 Air HIS FACE MY SHEPHERD " " "
 Air AND WHY ART THOU, MY SOUL ("When will God recall").

ALTO.

Air THOU, WHOSE PRAISES NEVER END ("Bide with us").
 Recit. THE FATHER HATH APPOINTED HIM ("God goeth up").
 Air MY SPIRIT HIM DESCRIBES ("God goeth up").
 Air INTO THY HANDS ("God's time is best").
 Air REJOICE, YE SOULS, ELECT AND HOLY ("O Light Everlasting").

BASS.

Recit. HE COMES, THE LORD OF LORDS ("God goeth up").
 Air 'TIS HE, WHO ALL ALONE ("God goeth up").
 Recit. IT IS NOT MINE ("God so loved the world").
 Air ON MY BEHALF " " "
 Recit. YEA, THIS THY WORD ("Thou Guide of Israel").
 Air WHOM JESUS DEIGNS " " "
 Air YET SILENCE ("When will God recall").

SECOND SET.

SOPRANO.

Air OPEN WIDE, MY HEART ("Come, Redeemer").
 Air FATHER, WHAT I PROFFER ("Give the hungry man thy bread").
 Air COME, VISIT, YE GLOWING ("How brightly shines").
 Air I HAVE WAITED FOR THE LORD ("If thou but sufferest").

TENOR.

Recit. THE SAVIOUR NOW APPEARETH ("Come, Redeemer").
 Air COME, JESU, COME ("Come, Redeemer").
 Air WHAT VOICE IS WITH THE TEMPEST ("From depths of woe").
 Air TUNEFUL HARPS AND VOICES ("How brightly shines").
 Air THOU ART MY GOD ("Lord, rebuke me not").

ALTO.

Air GOD'S ENSAMPLE THUS TO FOLLOW ("Give the hungry man thy bread").
 Air JESUS SLEEPS ("Jesus sleeps, what hope remaineth").
 Recit. INCLINE THINE EAR ("Lord, rebuke me not").
 Air THE LORD HATH HEARD ("Lord, rebuke me not").
 Air ALL EARTHLY POWERS FROM GOD INHERIT ("Praise thou the Lord").

BASS.

Air THE PASCHAL VICTIM HERE WE SEE ("Christ lay in death's dark prison").
 Air DO THINE ALMS ("Give the hungry man thy bread").
 Air WITH JESUS WILL I GO ("Wailing, crying").
 Recit. AH, WHEN ON THAT GREAT DAY ("Watch ye, pray ye").
 Air BLESSED RESURRECTION DAY " "

THIRD SET.

JUST PUBLISHED.

SOPRANO.

Recit. O LORD, HEAR ME WHEN I CALL ("Lord, rebuke me not").
 Air HOW LONG, O LORD " " "
 Air O PRAISE THE LORD ("O praise the Lord").
 Recit. O JESU, OUR REDEEMER ("There is nought of soundness").
 Air HEarken WHEN WITH TREMBLING ACCENTS " " "
 Air THOUGH REVILING TONGUES ASSAIL ME ("Watch ye, pray ye").

TENOR.

Recit. LORD, WHY SO FAR AWAY ("Jesus sleeps").
 Air IN BILLOWS THE RIVERS OF BELIAL ("Jesus sleeps").
 Recit. O HAPPY TOWN, O FAVOURED LAND ("Praise thou the Lord").
 Air O BLEST ARE ALL THAT FEAR HIM " " "
 Recit. REJECT IT NOT ("Sages of Sheba").
 Air SAVIOUR, TAKE ME FOR THINE NOW ("Sages of Sheba").
 Air UPLIFT YOUR HEADS ON HIGH ("Watch ye, pray ye").

ALTO.

Air BE WELCOME, THOU GREAT ANGEL ("O teach me, Lord").
 Air AH, TARRY YET ("Praise our God").
 Air GOD IS EVER SUN AND SHIELD ("The Lord is a sun and shield").
 Recit. BE STEADFAST IN AFFLICTION ("Wailing, crying").
 Air PAIN AND SORROW WORK SALVATION " "

BASS.

Air GOD, WHOSE POWER ("Let songs of rejoicing").
 Recit. ALTHOUGH AN HOST ENCAMP ("Lord, rebuke me not").
 Air O LORD, THY MERCY " " "
 Air FARE YE WELL ("O teach me, Lord").
 Recit. THESE THINGS THAT ISAIAH OF OLD ("The Sages of Sheba").
 Air GOLD OF OPHIR IS BUT VAIN " " "
 Air AH, WHERE SHALL I SUCCOUR ("There is nought of soundness").

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

REEVES' MUSICAL WORKS

SUITABLE FOR PRESENTATION.

All Bound in Cloth, unless otherwise stated.

Published at net prices.

WITH THE GREAT COMPOSERS.—A Series of Pen Pictures exhibiting in the form of Interviews the Personal Characteristics as Artists of the World's great Tone Poets. By Gerald Cumberland. Illustrated with Portraits of each. 7s. 6d. Chopin, Haydn, Mendelssohn, Paganini, Beethoven, Handel, Rossini, Schubert, Liszt, Berlioz, Mozart, Wagner, Tchaikovsky, Cherubini, Wolf, Borodin, Schumann, and Sullivan.

ABOUT ELIZABETHAN VIRGINAL MUSIC AND ITS COMPOSERS.—With Facsimiles of Musical MSS. of William Byrd, John Bull, Orlando Gibbons, and Giles Farnaby. By M. H. Glyn. Cloth, 7s. 6d.

THE BYRD ORGAN BOOK, for Piano or Organ.—A collection of 21 Pieces (Pavans, Galliards, &c.) by William Byrd, edited from the Virginal MSS. and now first published in Modern Notation. By M. H. Glyn. in two books, 3s. each, or complete, 5s. Paper covers.

"THE IMMORTAL NINE."

BEETHOVEN'S NINE SYMPHONIES fully Described and Analysed. A complete account of Thematic Material and auxiliary motives: an Analytical Chart of each Movement: full Technical Descriptions of Developments: Particulars of Formal and Rhythmic features: Epitomical Tables, &c. 637 Musical Examples. By Edwin Evans, Senior, Author of "Handbook to the Works of Brahms." &c. Cloth, Vol. I. (Nos. 1 to 5), 10s. 6d.; Vol. II., 10s. 6d., now ready.

MAKERS OF MUSIC.—Biographical Sketches of the Great Composers. With Chronological Summaries of their Works and Facsimiles from Musical MSS. of Bach, Handel, Purcell, Arne, Gluck, Haydn, Mozart, Beethoven, Weber, Schubert, Berlioz, Mendelssohn, Chopin, Schumann, Wagner, Verdi, Gounod, Tchaikovsky, Brahms, and Grieg. By R. F. Sharp. Portraits. Cloth, 6s. 6d.

OLD VIOLINS AND VIOLIN LORE.—Famous Makers of Cremona and Brescia, and of England, France, and Germany (with Biographical Dictionary): Famous Players, and Chapters on Varnish, Strings, and Bows. By the Rev. H. R. Haweis. With 13 Plates. 7s. 6d.

HOW TO STUDY THE PIANOFORTE WORKS OF THE GREAT COMPOSERS.—By Herbert Westerby, Mus. Bac. Handel, Bach, Haydn, Scarlatti, Mozart, Clementi, C. Ph. E. Bach. With Portraits and Musical Examples throughout. Cloth, 6s. 6d.

HOW TO PLAY 110 FAVOURITE PIANO SOLOS.—Being the 4 Series complete in 1 vol. of "Well-Known Piano Solos; How to Play them with Understanding, Expression, and Effect." By C. W. Wilkinson. Dealing with the works of Sinding, Scarlatti, Paderewski, Handel, Rubinstein, Scharwenka, Schumann, Godard, Déléibes, and other Composers. Cloth, 6s. 6d.

HANDBOOK TO CHOPIN'S WORKS.—Detailed Account of all the Compositions of Chopin. Short Analyses for the Piano Student and Critical Quotations from the writings of well-known Musical Authors. By G. C. Ashton Jonson. A Guide for Concert-Goers, Pianists, and Pianola-Players, a Short Biography and Critical Bibliography. Cloth, 8s. 6d.

HISTORY OF RUSSIAN MUSIC.—By M. Montagu-Nathan. Account of the Rise and Progress of the Russian School of Composers. Survey of their Lives and Description of their Works. Cloth, 7s. 6d.

BOW INSTRUMENTS—Their Form and Construction. Practical and Detailed Investigation and Experiments regarding Vibration, Sound Results, and Construction. By J. W. Giltay. Issued into English by the Author in co-operation with E. van der Straeten. Numerous diagrams. Cloth, 8s. 6d.; paper, 6s. 6d. "A valuable treatise."—The Strad.

VOCAL SUCCESS, or Thinking and Feeling in Speech and Song. By the Rev. Charles Gib (author of "The Art of Vocal Expression" and "Vocal Science and Art"), with a unique series of X-ray Plates specially taken for this work. Cloth, 5s.; paper, 3s. 6d.

THE SONATA: its Form and Meaning, as exemplified in the Pianoforte Sonatas by Mozart. A Descriptive Analysis with Musical Examples. By F. H. Marks. Handsome volume, cloth, 10s. 6d.; paper, 8s. 6d.

THE SPIRIT OF MUSIC FROM EAST TO WEST IN NATURE, ART, AND LEGEND.—Penned in 16 articles for General Reading, with Drawings of Eastern Musical Instruments. By G. P. Green (Author of "Some Aspects of Chinese Music"). Cloth, 4s. 6d.

OPERA STORIES OF TO-DAY AND YESTERDAY, Retold Act by Act (including Wagner's "The Ring" Operas). By Edmondstone Duncan. Cloth, 4s. 6d., or in 2 vols., paper, 1s. 6d. each.

MODERN ORGAN BUILDING.—A Practical Explanation and Description of Organ Construction. With especial regard to Pneumatic Action and Chapters on Tuning, Voicing, &c. 76 Illustrations drawn to scale and reproduced from Actual Working Drawings, together with diagrams, tables, &c. By W. & T. Lewis. Second Edition, corrected and added to in text and illustrations. 4to, extra gilt, cloth, 17s. 6d.; or cloth, 15s. 6d. Postage 1s.

MUSIC AND MUSICIANS.—Essays and Criticisms, by Robert Schumann. Translated, Edited, and Annotated by F. R. Ritter. Portrait. First Series, Seventh Edition. Cloth, 8s. 6d. Second Series. Cloth, 10s. 6d.

HOW TO LISTEN TO GOOD MUSIC and Encourage the Taste in Instrumental and Vocal Music. With many useful Notes for Listener and Executant. By K. Broadley Greene. Cloth, 4s. 6d.; or in 2 Books, paper, 1s. 6d. each.

IRISH MUSICAL HISTORY.—Introductory Sketch. Record of Progress of Music in Ireland for over 1,000 Years. By W. H. Grattan Flood, Mus. Doc. Portraits. Cloth, 3s. 6d.; paper, 2s.

THE RISE AND DEVELOPMENT OF MILITARY MUSIC.—By H. G. Farmer. With illustrations of Early Instruments and Musical Examples, and Short Biographical Notices of the Staff Bandmasters. Preface by Lieut. A. Williams, M.V.O., Mus. Doc., Bandmaster of Grenadier Guards. Cloth, 5s.

ORCHESTRAL WIND INSTRUMENTS.—Ancient and Modern. Account of the Origin and Evolution of Wind Instruments from the Earliest to the most Recent Times. Illustrated with Plates specially prepared for this work, giving 61 Examples of Instruments (or parts) described. By Ulric Daubeny. Important original work, fully illustrated with beautiful reproductions taken from fine photographs of the actual instruments. Cloth, 12s. 6d.

MEZZOTINTS IN MODERN MUSIC.—Critical Essays on Brahms, Tchaikovsky, Chopin, Strauss, Liszt, and Wagner. By Jas. Huneker. Third Edition. Cloth, 8s. 6d.

CHOPIN: THE MAN AND HIS MUSIC.—By James Huneker. Musical Examples. Cloth, 12s.

LIFE OF CHOPIN.—By Franz Liszt. Translated in full now for the first time by John Broadhouse. Cloth, 6s. 6d.

THE STUDENT'S HISTORY OF MUSIC, from the Christian Era to the Present. By Dr. F. L. Ritter. Third Edition. Letterpress and Music. Cloth, 8s. 6d.

MOZART AND THE SONATA FORM: A Companion Book to any Volume of the Sonatas for Piano, including an Analysis of the Form of each Movement, with Notes upon Treatment and Tonality, by J. R. Tobin, Mus. B. Cloth, 5s.

THE STUDENT'S HELMHOLTZ.—Musical Acoustics, or the Phenomena of Sound as Connected with Music. By John Broadhouse. With more than 100 Illustrations. Fourth Edition. 8s. 6d.

CHATS WITH VIOLINISTS.—By Wallace Ritchie. Illustrations. 4s.

ADVICE TO VIOLIN STUDENTS.—Containing Information of the Utmost Value to every Violinist. By Wallace Ritchie. Cloth, 4s.; paper, 2s. 6d.

THE TEMPLE EDITION OF ORGAN OVERTURES AND ARRANGEMENTS, all with Ped. Obb. In coloured covers, 3s. net each. List on application of about 60 works in this series, including works by Wagner, Tchaikovsky, Beethoven, Mozart, Handel, Berlioz, Schubert, Gounod, Mendelssohn, Meyerbeer, Balfe, Auber, Rossini, Weber, Wallace, Suppé, Thomas, Nicolai, Sterndale Bennett, and Flotow, chiefly arranged by Edwin Evans.

A few are appended:

Athalie (Mendelssohn)	L'Africaine (Meyerbeer)
Bohemian Girl (Balfe)	Masaniello (Archer)
Carnaval Romain (Berlioz)	Mignon (Thomas)
Egmont (Beethoven)	Oberon (Weber)
Faust (Wagner)	Otho (Handel)
Faust (Gounod)	1812 Overture (Tchaikovsky)

WILLIAM REEVES, Bookseller, Limited, 83, Charing Cross Road, W.C.2.

COMPOSITIONS BY EDWARD ELGAR.

INSTRUMENTAL.

ORCHESTRA.

CONCERTO (for Violin and Orchestra) (Op. 61).

Full Score, 42s.; Miniature Score, Paper, 7s. 6d., Cloth, 11s. 6d.;
String Parts, 21s. 6d.; Wind Parts, 57s. 6d.

CONCERTO in E minor (for Violoncello and Orchestra) (Op. 85).

Full Score, 42s. Orchestral Parts on hire only.

CORONATION MARCH (1911) (Op. 65).

Full Score, 11s. 6d.; String Parts, 6s. 8d.; Wind Parts, 21s. 6d.

FALSTAFF ("King Henry IV." and "King Henry V.," Shakespeare). Symphonic Study in C minor, with two Interludes in A minor (Op. 68).

Full Score, 52s. 6d.; Miniature Full Score, 11s. 6d.; Cloth, 16s.
Orchestral Parts on hire only.

FALSTAFF. Two Interludes (from) (Op. 68): 1. Jack Falstaff, Page to the Duke of Norfolk. 2. Gloucestershire: Shallow's Orchard.

Full Score, 7s.; String Parts, 3s.; Wind Parts, 4s. 4d.

FROISSART, Concert-Overture (Op. 19).

Full Score, 11s. 6d.; String Parts, 6s. 8d.; Wind Parts, &c., 13s. 1d.

FUNERAL MARCH WITH INCIDENTAL MUSIC ("Grania and Diarmid") (Op. 42).

Full Score, 9s. String Parts, 3s. 4d.; Wind Parts, &c., 8s. 8d.

IMPERIAL MARCH (Op. 32).

Full Score, 5s. 6d.; String Parts, 2s. 8d.; Wind Parts, &c., 9s. 4d.

IN THE SOUTH ("Alassio"). Concert - Overture (Op. 50).

Full Score, 31s. 6d.; String Parts, 13s. 6d.; Wind Parts, &c., 45s. 7d.

MEDITATION ("The Light of Life") (Op. 29).

Full Score, 7s. 6d.; String Parts, 2s. 8d.; Wind Parts, &c., 7s. 4d.

PRELUDE AND ANGEL'S FAREWELL ("Gerontius") (Op. 38).

Full Score, 9s.; String Parts, 5s.; Wind Parts, &c., 18s.

ROMANCE (for Bassoon and Orchestra) (Op. 62).

Full Score, 7s. 6d.; String Parts, 3s. 4d.; Wind Parts, 6s.

SYMPHONY in A flat, No. 1 (for full Orchestra) (Op. 55).

Full Score, 63s.; Miniature Score, 11s. 6d.; Cloth, 16s.
Orchestral Parts on hire only.

SYMPHONY in E flat, No. 2 (for full Orchestra) (Op. 63).

Full Score, 63s.; Miniature Score, 11s. 6d.; Cloth, 16s.
Orchestral Parts on hire only.

TRIUMPHAL MARCH ("Caractacus") (Op. 35).

Full Score, 9s.; String Parts, 3s. 6d.; Wind Parts, &c., 14s. 8d.

VARIATIONS ON AN ORIGINAL THEME (Op. 36).

Full Score, 25s.; Miniature Score, 7s. 6d.; String Parts, 14s. 9d.;
Wind Parts, &c., 32s. 3d.

WAND OF YOUTH, THE, First Suite (Op. 1A).

Full Score, 26s. 6d.; String Parts, 7s. 6d.; Wind Parts, 17s. 8d.

DITTO, Second Suite (Op. 1B).

Full Score, 26s. 6d.; String Parts, 10s. 6d.; Wind Parts, 23s. 4d.

FANTASIA AND FUGUE in C minor, by J. S. Bach. Transcribed for Full Orchestra by Edward Elgar.

FANTASIA. Full Score, 6s. Orchestral Parts on hire only.
FUGUE. Full Score, 8s. 6d. Orchestral Parts on hire only.

OVERTURE in D minor, by G. F. Handel. Arranged for Full Orchestra by Edward Elgar.

Full Score, 7s. 6d. Orchestral Parts on hire only.

SMALL ORCHESTRA.

STRING ORCHESTRA, AND CHAMBER MUSIC.

CANTO POPOLARE (In Moonlight), arranged from the Concert-Overture "In the South" (Op. 50).

Score, 4s. 6d.; String Parts, 2s. 4d.; Wind Parts, &c., 4s.

CHANSON DE NUIT (Op. 15, No. 1).

Score, 4s.; String Parts, 1s. 8d.; Wind Parts, &c., 2s.;
Pianoforte Conductor Part, 8d.

CHANSON DE MATIN (Op. 15, No. 2).

Score, 4s.; String Parts, 2s.; Wind Parts, &c., 2s.;
Pianoforte Conductor Part, 8d.

ELEGY (for String Orchestra) (Op. 58).

Score, 2s. 6d.; String Parts, 1s. 8d.

INTERMEZZO ("Dorabella" from the Variations) (Op. 36), for Strings, Wood-wind, and Drums.

Score, 4s. 6d.; String Parts, 3s. 2d.; Wood-wind and Drum Parts, 2s.

INTRODUCTION AND ALLEGRO for Strings (Quartet and Orchestra) (Op. 47).

Full Score, 16s.; Quartet Parts, 6s.; Orchestral Parts, 10s. 6d.

PLEADING (Op. 48, No. 1). Song, arranged for small orchestra with Harp or Pianoforte.

Solo Violin, Flute, or Oboe, 4d.; Solo Cornet or Clarinet, 4d.;
String Parts, 1s. 4d.; Wind Parts, 1s. 4d.; Harp or Pianoforte, 8d.

QUARTET in E minor, for Strings (Op. 83).

Score, 7s. 6d.; Parts, 12s.

QUINTET in A minor, for Pianoforte and Strings (Op. 84).

20s.

SERENADE (Wand of Youth, First Suite) (Op. 1A).

String Parts, 1s. 8d.; Flute and Clarinet, 4d. each;
Short Score, Harp or Pianoforte Conductor, 1s. 6d.

DITTO. For Pianoforte and Stringed Instruments, 4s.

Separate String Parts, 4d. each.

THREE PIECES (Op. 10) :—

1. MAZURKA.

Full Score, 7s. 6d.; String Parts, 3s. 4d.; Wind Parts, &c., 6s. 8d.

2. SÉRÉNADE MAURESQUE.

Full Score, 7s. 6d.; String Parts, 3s. 4d.; Wind Parts, &c., 5s. 8d.

3. CONTRASTS (THE GAVOTTE, A.D. 1700 AND 1900).

Full Score, 7s. 6d.; String Parts, 3s. 4d.; Wind Parts, &c., 7s.

NOTE.—These Pieces may be effectively performed by an orchestra consisting of 1 Flute, 1 Oboe, 1 Clarinet, 1 Bassoon, 2 Horns, 1 Trumpet (Cornet), Drums, and Strings. Any other instrument in the Score may be added with corresponding gain in effect.

MILITARY BAND.

	s.	d.
CHANSON DE MATIN (Op. 15, No. 2) ...	5	0
CHANSON DE NUIT (Op. 15, No. 1) ...	5	0
FOLLOW THE COLOURS ...	5	0
IMPERIAL MARCH (Op. 32) ...	13	6
MEDITATION, from "The Light of Life" (Op. 29) ...	7	6
PLEADING (Op. 48, No. 1) ...	5	0
THREE PIECES (Op. 10) ...	each	7 6

1. Mazurka. 2. Sérénade Mauresque.

3. Contrasts (The Gavotte, A.D. 1700 & 1900).

WAND OF YOUTH, THE, Second Suite (Op. 1B) 19 0

WITH PROUD THANKSGIVING (Military Band

Accompaniment to the Vocal Score only) ... 9 0

Brass Band Ditto ... 6 0

NOVELLO'S CLASSICAL SONGS.

Voice Parts in Staff and Tonic Sol-fa Notations, with Pianoforte Accompaniment.

VOLUME I.

THIRTY-FIVE CLASSICAL SONGS.

Alone ... ..	Mendelssohn	May-dew ... ..	W. Sterndale Bennett
Autumn Song ... ..	Mendelssohn	May Song ... ..	Mendelssohn
Come, ever-smiling Liberty ... ..	Handel	Mermaid's Song, The ... ..	Haydn
Come, gladsome Spring ... ..	Handel	My mother bids me bind my hair ... ..	Haydn
Come, happy Spring ... ..	Giordani	O for the wings of a dove ... ..	Mendelssohn
Contentment ... ..	Mozart	O sunny beam ... ..	Schumann
Cottage, The ... ..	Schumann	Rose, softly blooming ... ..	Spohr
Creation's Hymn ... ..	Beethoven	Say, ye who borrow ... ..	Mozart
Crusaders ... ..	Schubert	Slumber Song ... ..	Mendelssohn
Evening Song ... ..	Mendelssohn	Song of May, A ... ..	Beethoven
Fairest Isle ... ..	Purcell	Sun of the sleepless ... ..	Mendelssohn
First violet, The ... ..	Mendelssohn	To Chloe (in sickness) ... ..	W. Sterndale Bennett
Fisherman, The ... ..	Schubert	Verdant Meadows ... ..	Handel
Forget me not ... ..	W. Sterndale Bennett	Wandering Miller, The ... ..	Schubert
Greeting ... ..	Mendelssohn	Welcome to Spring ... ..	Mendelssohn
Hark! hark! the lark ... ..	Schubert	Whither ... ..	Schubert
Hear thou my weeping ... ..	Handel	Who is Sylvia? ... ..	Schubert
Hey, Baloo! ... ..	Schumann

VOLUME II.

THIRTY-SIX CLASSICAL SONGS.

Angels, ever bright and fair ... ..	Handel	Lord, at all times I will bless Thee... ..	Mendelssohn
Ave Maria ... ..	Schubert	Lotos Flower, The ... ..	Schumann
Bird is softly calling, A ... ..	Mendelssohn	O star of Eve ... ..	Wagner
Blow, blow, thou winter wind ... ..	Arne	Old German Spring Song (Frühlingslied)... ..	Mendelssohn
By Celia's Arbour (The Garland) ... ..	Mendelssohn	On Wings of Song ... ..	Mendelssohn
Coming of Spring, The ... ..	Schumann	Rose among the heather ... ..	Schubert
Cradle Song ... ..	Schubert	Sailor's Song, The ... ..	Haydn
Evening Star, The ... ..	Schumann	Slumber, beloved ... ..	Bach
Fisher's Song ... ..	Schubert	Smiling dawn of happy days, The ... ..	Handel
Free mind, The ... ..	Schumann	Thou art repose ... ..	Schubert
Garland, The (By Celia's Arbour) ... ..	Mendelssohn	Though far away ... ..	Mendelssohn
Gentle zephyr ... ..	W. Sterndale Bennett	Thou'rt like unto a flower ... ..	Schumann
Holiday on the Rhine, A ... ..	Schumann	To Music ... ..	Schubert
Huntsman, rest ... ..	Schubert	Trust in Spring ... ..	Schubert
I love thee... ..	Beethoven	Two Grenadiers, The ... ..	Schumann
Joy of Spring, The ... ..	Mendelssohn	Wanderer's Night-Song ... ..	Schubert
Know'st thou the land? ... ..	Beethoven	Where'er you walk ... ..	Handel
Lay of the imprisoned huntsman ... ..	Schubert	Where the Bee sucks ... ..	Arne
Litany ... ..	Schubert

VOLUME III.

THIRTY-EIGHT CLASSICAL SONGS.

Art thou troubled (Dove sei) ... ..	Handel	Memory, A ... ..	Brahms
But the Lord is mindful of His own ... ..	Mendelssohn	Morning Song ... ..	Mendelssohn
Butterfly, The ... ..	Cornelius	Nazareth ... ..	Gounod
Courage ... ..	Schubert	Nymphs and Shepherds ... ..	Purcell
Dawn, gentle flower ... ..	W. Sterndale Bennett	O my love's like the red, red rose ... ..	Schumann
Deep treasur'd in my heart ... ..	Schumann	O rest in the Lord ... ..	Mendelssohn
Erlaf-lake ... ..	Schubert	O think of me ... ..	Cornelius
Fishermaiden, The ... ..	Schubert	Ode to joy... ..	Schubert
Full-orbed moon, The ... ..	Schubert	Off in my dreams ... ..	Cornelius
Good-night, my dearest child... ..	Brahms	Oh! had I Jubal's lyre... ..	Handel
Greeting to Spring, A ... ..	Schumann	Out over the North ... ..	Schumann
How beautiful are the feet ... ..	Handel	Peace ... ..	Schubert
I will sing of Thy great mercies ... ..	Mendelssohn	Sandman, The ... ..	Schumann
In May ... ..	Schumann	Secrets ... ..	Schubert
Know'st thou the land? ... ..	Schubert	Sing, Maiden, sing ... ..	W. Sterndale Bennett
Lark, The... ..	Rubinstein	Spring advancing (Frühlingsglaube) ... ..	Mendelssohn
Let the bright Seraphim ... ..	Handel	Swallow's flying west, The ... ..	Brahms
Little Sandman, The ... ..	Brahms	Trout, The ... ..	Schubert
Lord of our being (Sorge nel petto)... ..	Handel	Violets ... ..	Cornelius

VOLUME IV.

THIRTY CLASSICAL SONGS.

Cherry Ripe ... ..	Horn	Lullaby ... ..	Brahms
Children at play ... ..	Mozart	My heart ever faithful ... ..	Bach
Come let us all this day ... ..	Bach	Now fades the sun's last lingering ray ... ..	Franz
Flower thou resemblest, A ... ..	Rubinstein	O come, do not delay ("The Marriage of Figaro") ... ..	Mozart
Gentle flowers ("Faust") ... ..	Gounod	Organ-grinder, The ... ..	Schubert
Gentle touch, The ... ..	Goetz	Orpheus with his lute ... ..	Sullivan
Greenwood calls, The ... ..	Schubert	Prepare thyself, Zion ... ..	Bach
Harper's Song, The ... ..	Schubert	Serenade ... ..	Gounod
I attempt from love's sickness ... ..	Purcell	Shepherds, The ... ..	Cornelius
It was a lover ... ..	Morley	Tender wood-dove ... ..	Gounod
Jerusalem ... ..	Mendelssohn	Under the greenwood tree ... ..	Arne
Lass with the delicate air, The ... ..	Arne	Violet, The ... ..	Mozart
Legend ... ..	Tchaikovsky	Walnut-tree, The ... ..	Schumann
Like to a linden tree ... ..	Dvorák	When all was young ("Faust") ... ..	Gounod
Longing ... ..	Schubert	When daisies pied ... ..	Arne

PRICE TWO SHILLINGS AND SIXPENCE EACH VOLUME.

Separate Numbers from 1s. 6d. to 3s. In Books, containing six or eight songs, from 8d. to 1s.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

NEW ORGAN COMPOSITIONS

BY SIGFRID KARG-ELERT.

CHORAL IMPROVISATION

(FESTIVAL PRELUDE)

ON

DER HÖLLE PFORTEN SIND ZERSTÖRT

Price ... Two Shillings.

CHORAL IMPROVISATION

(FESTIVAL PRELUDE)

ON

GELOBT SEI GOTT IM HÖCHSTEN THRON.

Price ... Two Shillings.

SEVEN PASTELS

FROM THE

LAKE OF CONSTANCE.

- |                                |                          |
|--------------------------------|--------------------------|
| 1. The Soul of the Lake.       | 4. The Reed-grown Waters |
| 2. Landscape in Mist.          | 5. The Sun's Evensong.   |
| 3. The Legend of the Mountain. | 6. The Mirrored Moon.    |
|                                | 7. Hymn to the Stars.    |

Price ... Five Shillings and Sixpence.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

ORIGINAL COMPOSITIONS

FOR THE

ORGAN

BY

BASIL HARWOOD.

No.		s	d.
1.	DITHYRAMB ... ..	2	6
2.	COMMUNION IN F MAJOR ... ..	1	0
3.	INTERLUDE IN D MAJOR ... ..	1	6
4.	PÆAN ... ..	3	6
5.	SHORT POSTLUDE FOR ASCENSIONTIDE ... ..	1	0
6.	REQUIEM ÆTERNAM ... ..	2	3
7.	ANDANTE TRANQUILLO IN E FLAT ... ..	1	6
8.	CAPRICCIO ... ..	2	6
9.	TWO SKETCHES ... ..	1	6
10.	CONCERTO IN D MAJOR ... ..	3	0
11.	THREE CATHEDRAL PRELUDES ... ..	3	0
12.	SONATA No. 2, IN F SHARP MINOR ... ..	3	0
13.	FANTASIA, "CHRISTMASTIDE" ... ..	3	6
14.	RHAPSODY ... ..	3	0
15.	IN AN OLD ABBEY ... ..	2	0

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

SACRED SONG

SOPRANO VOICE.

HUSH'D WAS THE EVENING HYMN.

By WILLIAM E. JACQUEST.

Two Shillings.

From PAXTON &amp; CO.,

or the Composer, 68, High Street, Finedon, Northants.

Robert Herrick's "TO DAFFODILS."

SET TO MUSIC BY

WILLIAM E. JACQUEST.

SOPRANO VOICE.

Two Shillings.

68, High Street, Finedon, Northants.

Music Bargains

WELL-KNOWN ORATORIOS. We hold a wide selection of the best Oratorios, second-hand copies in good condition. These we offer at greatly reduced prices. Quantities supplied. State requirements.

PARCELS OF ORGAN MUSIC by the best composers, including Bach and Mendelssohn. We offer to send parcels of assorted music (our own selection), second-hand copies in good condition: 12 items for 3s. 9d., post free; 24 items for 6s., post free. Sent on approval. Quote offer 122. Lists cannot be supplied

FOYLE'S MUSIC DEPT.,

121-125, CHARING CROSS ROAD, LONDON, W.C.2.

NOVELLO'S EDITIONS

OF THE

FAVOURITE OPERAS

ADAPTED FOR

CONCERT USE

BALFE. *THE BOHEMIAN GIRL.
Price 2s. 6d.

DONIZETTI. *THE DAUGHTER OF THE REGIMENT.
Price 2s. 6d.

FLOTOW. *MARTHA.
Price 2s. 6d.

GOUNOD. *FAUST.
Price 1s. 6d. Tonic Sol-fa, 1s.

VERDI. *IL TROVATORE.
Price 2s. 6d. Tonic Sol-fa, 1s. 6d.

WAGNER. TANNHÄUSER.
Price 2s. 6d.

WALLACE. *MARITANA.
Price 2s. 6d.

* Orchestral Parts for reduced Orchestra may be obtained from the Publishers.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

NOW READY.

FINAL BOOK

OF THE

BREARE VOCAL SERIES,

No. 5.

ENTITLED:

"VOCAL ANALYSES:

SENSITISING BREATH,
EMOTIONAL EVOLUTION."

Price Five Shillings.

PUBLISHERS:

London: SIMPKIN, MARSHALL, HAMILTON,
KENT & CO.

Harrogate: R. ACKRILL.

NURSERY SONGS

FROM THE

APPALACHIAN MOUNTAINS

ARRANGED WITH PIANOFORTE ACCOMPANIMENT

BY

CECIL J. SHARP.

ILLUSTRATED IN SILHOUETTE

BY

ESTHER B. MACKINNON.

FIRST AND SECOND SERIES.

Price, Paper Boards, Six Shillings each Series.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

FOUR CHARACTERISTIC WALTZES

- |                      |                       |
|----------------------|-----------------------|
| 1. VALSE BOHEMIENNE. | 3. VALSE DE LA REINE. |
| 2. VALSE RUSTIQUE.   | 4. VALSE MAURESQUE.   |

COMPOSED BY

S. COLERIDGE-TAYLOR.

(Op. 22).

PIANOFORTE SOLO.

PRICE, COMPLETE, FOUR SHILLINGS; SEPARATELY, 2s. 3d. EACH.

		s.	d.			s.	d.
Violin and Pianoforte	... .. complete	4	6	Full Score (Full Orchestra)...	... ..	11	6
Violin and Pianoforte	... .. separately, each	2	3	Full Score (Small Orchestra), MS.
String Parts for Full or Small Orchestra	... ..	9	0	Arrangements, as Quintets, for Pianoforte and
Wind Parts for Small Orchestra	... ..	10	5	Strings, each Number	... ..	3	0
Ditto, for Full Orchestra	... ..	17	5	Separate String Parts, 8d. each.
				Military Band Arrangement	... ..	19	0

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

THE SHAFTS OF CUPID

SONG.

THE WORDS BY

FRED G. BOWLES.

THE MUSIC BY

PERCY E. FLETCHER.

IN THREE KEYS.

PRICE TWO SHILLINGS EACH.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

MUSIC

FOR

STRING ORCHESTRA.

JUST PUBLISHED.

J. S. BACH. PRELUDE AND FUGUE IN G MINOR.

Part II., No. 16, of the "Forty-Eight."
Arranged for String Orchestra (or Quartet) by
JULIUS HARRISON.

Score, 2s. 6d. Parts, 3s. 4d.

ERNEST AUSTIN. THE VICAR OF BRAY. Variations.
Score, 9s. Parts, 9s.ADAM CARSE. BARBARA ALLEN. Variations.
Piano Conductor, 2s. 3d. String Parts, 6s.J. D. DAVIS. SONG OF EVENING.
Score, 4s. Parts, 3s. 4d.T. F. DUNHILL. THE CHIDDINGFOLD SUITE.
Score, 7s. 6d. Parts, 9s. 9d.EDWARD ELGAR. ELEGY.
Score, 2s. 6d. Parts, 1s. 8d.INTRODUCTION AND ALLEGRO (Op. 47). Quartet and Orchestra.

Score, 16s.; Quartet Parts, 6s.; Orchestral Parts, 10s. 6d.

PERCY FLETCHER. TWO BAGATELLES.
Parts, 3s. 6d.C. H. H. PARRY. SUITE IN F (Lady Radnor's Suite).
Score, 7s. Parts, 7s. 6d.PERCY PITT. AIR DE BALLET.
Score, 3s. Parts, 3s. 4d.HENRY PURCELL. SUITE FROM DRAMATIC MUSIC.
Edited by ALBERT COATES.
Score, 1s. 6d. Parts, 2s. 8d.TWO SUITES FROM "THE GORDIAN KNOT UNTIED."

Edited by GUSTAV HOLST.

(With additional wind and drum parts ad lib.
MS. on hire.)

No. 1. Score, 4s. Parts, 2s. 8d.

No. 2. Score, 4s. Parts, 2s. 8d.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

OLD ENGLISH

VIOLIN MUSIC

EDITED BY

ALFRED MOFFAT.

PREFATORY NOTE.

Although considerable attention has been given to the resuscitation of Church Music, Gleees and Madrigals, Organ and even Harpsichord Music by the older English composers, very little has been done to make known the large mass of music for the Violin written by English musicians from the time of Purcell to the close of the 18th century. These works for the most part consist of Suites or Sonatas written for a solo violin with a figured bass, or for two violins and violoncello with a figured bass for the harpsichord or organ; another favourite form was the Concerto grosso.

It is with the object of making known to the public a selection of the best of these compositions that the present series has been undertaken.

ALFRED MOFFAT.

			s.	d.
No. 1.	SONATA in G major	... .. JAMES LATES	3	0
" 2.	SONATA in D minor	... .. HENRY ECCLES	3	0
" 3.	SONATA in B flat major	... .. WILLIAM BABELL	3	0
" 4.	SONATA in G minor	... .. JOHN STANLEY	3	0
" 5.	SONATA in A major	... .. JOHN COLLETT	3	0
" 6.	TRIO-SONATA in E minor	THOMAS AUGUSTINE ARNE	4	6
" 7.	SONATA in D major	... .. RICHARD JONES	3	0
" 8.	TRIO-SONATA in D minor	... WILLIAM BOYCE	4	6
" 9.	THREE PIECES	... WILLIAM BOYCE	3	0
" 10.	SONATA in E major	... CHARLES MACKLEAN	3	0
" 11.	SONATA in G minor	... WILLIAM CROFT	3	0
" 12.	SONATA in D minor	... JOSEPH GIBBS	3	0
" 13.	SONATA in D minor	... JOHN HUMPHRIES	3	0
" 14.	SONATA in A minor	... THOMAS VINCENT	3	0

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

ORIGINAL COMPOSITIONS

FOR THE ORGAN.

(NEW SERIES.)

No.	RECENT NUMBERS	s.	d.
76.	TOCCATA AND FUGUE ("The Wanderer") C. Hubert H. Parry	3	6
77.	ANDANTE RELIGIOSO ... .. Alec Rowley	1	6
78.	SCHERZO ... .. G. J. Bennett	2	3
79.	THREE PRELUDES ... .. G. J. Bennett	2	3
80.	DÉSÉSPOIR ... .. Ch. Quef	1	6
81.	CAPRICE IN D FLAT ... .. J. A. Sowerbutts	2	3
82.	THREE PSALM-PRELUDES, No. 1 ... .. H. Howells	1	6
83.	" " " No. 2 ... .. H. Howells	1	6
84.	" " " No. 3 ... .. H. Howells	1	6
85.	THEMA OSTINATA ... .. C. C. Palmer	1	6
86.	COVENANTERS' MARCH... .. R. G. Hailing	1	6
87.	CHORAL MELODY ... .. C. F. Waters	1	6
88.	CONCERT OVERTURE IN F MINOR ... .. Alfred Hollins	3	0
89.	HOMAGE TO HANDEL ... .. S. Karg-Elert	3	6
90.	THREE SHORT AND EASY POSTLUDES (2nd Set) F. W. Wadely	2	3
91.	INTERMEZZI (No. 1, Pastorale) ... .. C. V. Stanford	2	0
92.	" (No. 2, Marcia Eroica) ... .. C. V. Stanford	2	0
93.	" (No. 3, Hush Song) ... .. C. V. Stanford	2	0
94.	" (No. 4, Intermezzo Founded upon an Irish air ... .. C. V. Stanford	2	0
95.	CHORAL IMPROVISATION ON "DER HÖLLE Pforten sind ZERSTÖRT" ... .. S. Karg-Elert	2	0
96.	CHORAL IMPROVISATION ON "GELOBT SEI GOTT IM HÖCHSTEN THRON" ... .. S. Karg-Elert	2	0
97.	SEVEN PASTELS FROM THE LAKE OF CONSTANCE S. Karg-Elert	5	6
98.	PRELUDE AND FUGUE IN C ... .. C. V. Stanford	2	0
99.	PRELUDE AND FUGUE IN C MINOR ... .. C. V. Stanford	2	0
100.	PRELUDE AND FUGUE IN B MINOR ... .. C. V. Stanford	2	0
101.	VARIATIONS ON AN OLD ENGLISH MELODY ("Heartsease") Geoffrey Shaw	2	0

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

SONGS FOR CHILDREN, FOR CHRISTMAS PRESENTS

HOLIDAY SONGS

THE WORDS BY
MRS. ALEXANDER

THE MUSIC BY
LADY ARTHUR HILL.

Price Four Shillings.

- |                                     |                      |
|-------------------------------------|----------------------|
| 1. All things bright and beautiful. | 6. At Sunset.        |
| 2. An Early Cowslip.                | 7. Two ways.         |
| 3. A Winter Breakfast.              | 8. Waking.           |
| 4. Dreams.                          | 9. Longings.         |
| 5. Primroses.                       | 10. In the distance. |
11. Holidays over.

SONG LETS

FOR CHILDREN.

THE WORDS BY
FRED E. WEATHERLY

THE MUSIC BY
LADY ARTHUR HILL

- |                      |                      |
|----------------------|----------------------|
| 1. My Garden.        | 4. Points of View.   |
| 2. Cuckoo's calling. | 5. Little Moon-Lady. |
| 3. Rock-a-bye low.   | 6. Marching.         |

Price Three Shillings.

TWILIGHT SONGS

FOR LITTLE CHILDREN.

THE WORDS BY
FRED E. WEATHERLY

THE MUSIC BY
LADY ARTHUR HILL

Price Three Shillings.

- |                                       |                            |
|---------------------------------------|----------------------------|
| 1. Over the Water.                    | 4. A Mother's Song.        |
| 2. Birdies' Answer.                   | 5. Gipsying.               |
| 3. A Little Child's Christmas Prayer. | 6. I want to be a Soldier. |

NONSENSE SONGS

MUSIC BY STANLEY MARCHANT

WORDS AND ILLUSTRATIONS BY HUGH CHESTERMAN

- |                         |                         |
|-------------------------|-------------------------|
| 1. Hundreds of Things.  | 3. Yesterday.           |
| 2. The Four Journeymen. | 4. The Traction Engine. |
| 5. Sir Nicketty Nox.    |                         |

Price ... Four Shillings.

The Vocal Part only (Staff and Tonic Sol-fa), price 4d.

NATIONAL
NURSERY RHYMES

WITH SIXTY-FIVE ILLUSTRATIONS

ENGRAVED BY THE BROTHERS DALZIEL

THE MUSIC BY
J. W. ELLIOTT

Complete, Price, Cloth, 7s. 6d. net.

Paper Boards, 5s. 6d. net.

Vocal Parts, Staff and Tonic Sol-fa Notations, 8d. each Book.

BOOK I

Mistress Mary, Quite Contrary.
Jack and Jill.
Twinkle, twinkle, little Star.
Baa, Baa, Black Sheep.
Dickory, Dickory, Dock.
Ding, Dong Bell.
Pussy-Cat, where have you been?
Nineteen Birds.
The Child and the Star.
I had a little Doggy.
Little Bo-peep.
Dolly and her Mamma.
Ride a Cock-Horse to Banbury Cross.
Little Maid, pretty maid.
Whittington for ever!
Little Jack Horner.
Tom, the Piper's Son.
See-Saw, Margery Daw.
A, B, C, tumble down D.
Goosey, Goosey Gander.
Little Jumping Joan.
There was a Crooked Man.
Poor Dog Bright.
Humpty Dumpty.
Simple Simon.
Sing a Song of Sixpence.
The Nurse's Song.
Six little Snails.

BOOK II.

The King of France.
My Lady Wind.
The Feast of Lanterns.
Is John Smith within?
When the Snow is on the Ground.
Three little Mice.
Little Tommy Tucker.
The North Wind doth blow.
The Man in the Moon.
Taffy was a Welshman.
Hey diddle diddle.
I love little Pussy.
The Old Man clothed in Leather.
Curly Locks.
The Lazy Cat.
Three Children sliding.
The Jolly Tester.
Georgie Porgie.
The Three Crows.
A little Cock Sparrow.
Maggie's Pet.

BOOK III.

The Death and Burial of Cock Robin.
Lullaby.
Mother Tabbyskins.
The Spider and the Fly.
The Thievish Mouse.

TWENTY-FOUR SONGS
FOR LITTLE PEOPLE

THE WORDS BY NORMAN GALE

THE MUSIC BY
GERARD F. COBB

(Op. 35).

In Two Books. Price Four Shillings each.

BOOK I.

A Change Wanted.
Bedfordshire.
Bessie.
Carrying Angels.
Late for Tea.
Off to the Sea.
Out Early.
Silver Sammy.
The Bad Boy.
The Violin.
Tim's Grace.
Tubbing.

BOOK II.

A Protest.
A Thief.
Auntie Nell.
Aunt Jan.
Cradle Song.
Fairies in Faces.
Lost Labour.
Mustard and Cress.
Off to Africa.
The 'Logical Gardens.
The Swans.
The Walls of Jericho.

CHAPPELL & CO.'S LATEST SONG SUCCESSES

GUY D'HARDELLOT.

- "Take all thy Sorrows"
- "The Curtain Falls"
- "Sometimes in My Dreams"

MONTAGUE F. PHILLIPS.

- "The Fairy Laundry"
- "The Dance on the Lawn"
- "Among the Willows"

R. CONINGSBY CLARKE.

- "The Barque of Dreams"
- "The Lazy Seas of Devon"
- "Over the Waters Blue"

ROGER QUILTER.

- "Go, Lovely Rose"
- "Fairy Lullaby"

MICHAEL MULLINAR.

- "Cider"

GEORGE H. GARTLAN.

- "The Lilac Tree"

HAYDN WOOD.

- "I Look into Your Garden"
- "Devotion"
- "A Brown Bird Singing"

HERMANN LOHR.

- "The Drums of Life."
- "Immortality."
- "What a wonderful world it would be."

ERIC COATES.

- "Summer Afternoon"
- "I Heard You Singing"
- "Sea Rapture"

MOLLY CAREW.

- "Fairy Cradles"
- "The Market"
- "The Piper of Love"

H. LYALL PHILLIPS.

- "Over the Dreamland Sea"
- "Motley"
- "May Dream"

CHAPPELL & CO., LTD., 50, NEW BOND STREET, LONDON, W.1.

NEW YORK AND SYDNEY.

THE TUDOR EDITION OF OLD MUSIC

TRANSCRIBED AND EDITED BY

GERALD M. COOPER.

SERIES B.—No. 1.
THREE SONGS.

1. "MAN FIRST CREATED WAS"
(1604) Thomas Greaves
With accompaniment of String Quartet.
2. "IF FLOODS OF TEARS" Thomas Bateson
(1618)
With accompaniment of Violin, Viola, and Violoncello.
3. "CUCKOO" ... .. Richard Nicholson
(Early 17th Century)
With accompaniment of String Quartet.
Price 4s. net.

B

SERIES B.—No. 3. FOUR DUETS.

(From "A Musical Dream," 1609).

By ROBERT JONES.

1. "THOUGH YOUR STRANGENESS FRETS MY HEART."
2. "SWEET KATE."
3. "ONCE DID I SERVE A CRUEL HEART."
4. "MY COMPLAINING IS BUT FEIGNING."

With accompaniment of Piano and Violoncello.

Price 4s. net.

SERIES B.—No. 2.
TWO SONGS.

(From Robert Dowland's "Musical Banquet," 1610.)

BY

CACCINI.

1. "DOVRO DUNQUE MORIRE?"
2. "AMARILLI MIA BELLA."

With accompaniment of Piano and Violoncello.

Price 2s. 6d. net.

The Tudor Edition will contain a miscellaneous collection of instrumental music by English and Continental composers of the 16th, 17th, and 18th centuries. This will be issued in two series, A and B. Series A will consist of complete works, such as Dowland's "Lachrimae" and Purcell's Fantasias; Series B of short selections from the works contained in Series A and from other sources. In both cases the edition will adhere strictly to the original text, but Series B will be more in the nature of a "popular" edition with additional marks of expression, bowing-marks, &c., which are however to be looked on only as suggestions for the guidance of those who are unfamiliar with the music of this period, and may be altered at will. Series A will contain nothing but the original text transcribed into modern notation.

J. & W. CHESTER, Ltd., 11, Gt. Marlborough Street, London, W.1.

London: Printed by NOVELLO & COMPANY, Limited, at Novello Works, Soho, and published at 160, Wardour Street, Soho, W.1.
Monday, December 1, 1924.

THE
ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC

YORK GATE, MARYLEBONE ROAD, N.W.1.

INSTITUTED 1822.

INCORPORATED BY ROYAL CHARTER. 1830.

Patron: HIS MAJESTY THE KING.

President: H.R.H. THE DUKE OF CONNAUGHT AND STRATHEARN, K.G.

PRINCIPAL—
JOHN B. McEWEN, M.A., F.R.A.M.

THE ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC offers to students of both sexes (whether amateur or professional) a thorough training in all branches of music under the most able and distinguished Professors. In addition to receiving individual lessons in the various branches of the Curriculum, students have the advantage of attending the Orchestral, Choral, and Chamber Music Classes, and the weekly Lectures on music and musicians. Evidence of their progress is given at the Fortnightly and Public Concerts and by periodical Operatic and Dramatic Performances.

There are three Terms in the Academic year—viz., the Michaelmas Term, from Michaelmas to Christmas; the Lent Term, from early in January to Easter; and the Midsummer Term, from early in May until the end of July.

A large number of Scholarships and Prizes are founded and are competed for periodically.

Students who show special merit and ability receive the distinction of being elected by the Directors, Associates of the Institution, and are thereby entitled to the use after their names of the letters A.R.A.M. Students who distinguish themselves in the musical profession after quitting the Institution may be elected by the Directors, Fellows of the Royal Academy of Music, and are thereupon entitled to the use after their names of the letters F.R.A.M.

Subscribers have the privilege of attending the Lectures and Public Concerts and of introducing friends in proportion to the amount of their subscriptions.

An examination of persons trained independently of the Academy is held during the Summer, Christmas, and Easter vacations, successful candidates at which are elected Licentiates of the Academy, and are thereupon entitled to the use after their names of the letters L.R.A.M. The syllabus is issued annually at Easter.

A Special Teachers' Training Course has been arranged, to meet the requirements of the Teachers' Registration Council.

A Special Course for the Teaching of Conductors has been instituted.

A JUNIOR DEPARTMENT is now open.

Prospectus, entry form, and all further information may be obtained on application.

J. A. CREIGHTON,
Secretary.

BOSTON PUBLIC LIBRARY

3 9999 08819 014 3

MAR 27 1985

